These two methods used by Hanuman to arrive and leave Lanka, silently and with a roar respectively, lead us to make another interesting observation: At the time of launching himself from the northern shores of the ocean he had the benefit of using a chain of tall hills upon which he jumped swiftly and ran rapidly across to gain the required momentum and lift to become air borne. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 1.} So therefore, he could rise high up in the sky and silently glide over the water to land quietly at the designated place in the dark of the night.

But this facility was not available to him on the shores of Lanka, and neither was he very particular about keeping himself unknown like he had done while entering Lanka by being silent. So therefore, he launched himself proudly much like an air plane using its jet engines—i.e. with a lot of thunderous noise!

Even if his launch from the northern shore of the ocean from where he took off on his journey for Lanka did make a roaring sound like that of a jet plane taking off, as it surely must have been the case, it didn’t matter much to Hanuman as it was on this side of the ocean which was a long distance of approximately 800 miles off the coast of Lanka. What was crucial for the success of his plan was to enter the demon island of Lanka silently, without making a fuss and alerting anyone, so that the secrecy of the mission can be maintained. This he achieved by setting foot on Lanka’s soil quietly, without making any noise, just like a drone or a glider would do, or like a kite, a hawk or a vulture would also do.

²Ever since Hanuman had gone on his mission to Lanka, all the monkeys and bears sat on the shore of the ocean silently in a very somber mood; some spent time alone and others huddled together in small groups contemplating about the future and praying to God to help them. The overall mood was that of anxiety, worry, uncertainty and gloom. Every now and then they would look up into the sky for any sign of Hanuman returning; they would gaze endlessly into the horizon in the direction they had seen

Hanuman go; any sound from that direction would make them prick their ears to hear it and guess what it meant. Each passing hour seemed an era; time virtually stopped; the sun seemed to burn them and the moon aroused ghosts and phantoms.

In the midst of such distressful time of gloom and uncertainty when these poor monkeys and bears were holding on to dear life by a thin thread of hope and faith, they saw a streak of light in the blue sky coming towards them, and heard a thunderous roar. Woken up from their numbed existence rudely by this sight and sound, they were initially shocked and worried for the worst. But soon as Hanuman's form became clearer as he drew near, and upon hearing his jubilant cry that comes naturally from someone who has achieved exemplary success in a difficult mission and is returning home with some great good news to convey to his dear companions, these monkeys and bears sprang upon their feet with a loud cry of joy even as they stretched their hands upwards to welcome Hanuman. From the cheerful countenance of Hanuman and his excited bodily gestures as he waved at them joyfully from the sky they could easily perceive that he has been mighty successful in his mission, and has some excellent news to convey.]

हरषे सब बिलोकि हनुमाना । नूतन जन्म कपिन्ह तब जाना ॥ ३ ॥

मुख प्रसन्न तन तेज बिराजा । कीन्हेसि रामचंद्र कर काजा ॥ ४ ॥

मिले सकल अति भए सुखारी । तलफत मीन पाव जिमि बारी ॥ ५ ॥

haraṣē saba bilōki hanumānā. nūtana janma kapinha taba jānā. 3.
mukha prasanna tana tēja birājā. kīnhēsi rāmacandra kara kājā. 4.
milē sakala ati bha'ē sukhārī. talaphata mīna pāva jimi bārī. 5.

All of them (i.e. all the messengers who were eagerly awaiting his arrival on this side of the ocean) were tremendously exhilarated on seeing Hanuman back; they felt so relieved as if they have got a new lease of life, as if they have been born again¹. (3)

He (Hanuman) had a very cheerful face, and his body was thrilled with pulsating energy; this signaled to his companions that he has indeed accomplished success in doing Lord Ram's work (i.e. in finding out the whereabouts of Sita). (4)

All the members of the expecting group met him cordially and most enthusiastically, for all of them were overcome with great emotional excitement. The whole group felt extremely exuberant and exhilarated just like a fish that is made to intensely suffer from want of water, suddenly finds it². (5)

[Note—¹This is because if Hanuman had failed in his mission they would all have to suffer the wrath of their king Sugriv who, as we must remember, had threatened to kill them if they returned empty-handed, without any information of Sita. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 22.}

And this fear of death was explicitly expressed by Angad and silently by others when the group had reached the shore of the ocean but saw no sign of success till then. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 26; and Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 27.}

Therefore, when it was clear that Hanuman had met Sita and has brought back positive news about her, all the messengers felt that they have got a new life.

²The comparison is highly apt here. The fish will surely die if water is not made available to it; and when it does find water it gets a fresh lease of life. Similarly, these monkeys and bears felt rejuvenated and energized as soon as they saw and heard that Hanuman has come back successfully from the mission, that he has indeed met Sita and is now equipped with all the necessary information about her. This news would be most welcome by Sugriv as well as by Lord Ram.]

चले हरषि रघुनायक पासा । पूँछत कहत नवल इतिहासा ॥ ६ ॥
तब मधुबन भीतर सब आए । अंगद संमत मधु फल खाए ॥ ७ ॥
रखवारे जब बरजन लागे । मुष्टि प्रहार हनत सब भागे ॥ ८ ॥ calē haraṣi raghunāyaka pāsā. pūṁchata kahata navala itihāsā. 6.

taba madhubana bhītara saba ā'ē. aṅgada sammata madhu phala khā'ē. 7.
rakhavārē jaba barajana lāgē. muṣṭi prahāra hanata saba bhāgē. 8.

Now presently this jubilant group set off on its way back to where Lord Ram was. On the way back the monkeys and the bears chatted merrily amongst themselves, asking Hanuman more details about his journey and the experiences that he has had in that alien land, which he shared with them gleefully. (6)

By-and-by they reached the forest that had a large number of fruit trees laden with honeycombs, hence called the 'Madhuvan'. There, upon being granted permission by Angad, the whole group enjoyed eating sweet fruits and drinking honey to their heart's content. (7)

When the forest guards tried to prevent them (from rampaging in the well-tended forest), they (the monkeys and bears) hit the guards with their fists, as a result of which the latter fled from the sight.¹ (8)

[Note—¹This 'Madhuvan' was the royal forest of the king of Kishkindha, i.e. of Sugriv, hence it was out of bounds for ordinary subjects of the kingdom. Our group of messengers of Lord Ram and Sugriv, led by Hanuman, the hero, Angad, the leader of the team and the crown prince, and Jamvant, the elderly bear who was their emotional support and advisor, was very excited and exceptionally happy at this point of time as they had done a marvelous job assigned to them, having achieved a singular success which was likely to please their king Sugriv as well as their Lord Sri Ram immensely.

They were so happy and confident rendered by their success that they were convinced that Sugriv would never get angry at them or punish them for this little mischief of eating and drinking in the royal garden; they would explain to him that they were very hungry and thirsty, and being their king's favourite subjects they thought that they had the right to eat and drink in the royal forest to refresh themselves after the arduous and tiring journey that they had undertaken, and the difficulties that they had encountered while searching for Sita. They were sure that Sugriv would excuse them. This view is endorsed in Doha no. 28 that follows herein below.

Besides that confidence, they had the permission of Angad, who was the crown prince and their leader, and therefore he had the right to enter and seek pleasure in the royal forest much like the king, Sugriv, had himself. So there was no problem.

Of course these monkeys and bears could have been more disciplined, but they were so excited and happy that they threw all caution to the wind, and behaving like jubilant children let loose in a garden full of fruit trees and honeycombs, they ran amok through the forest. And like these excited children, they hit back at the guards when they objected.]

दो०. जाइ पुकारे ते सब बन उजार जुबराज ।
सुनि सुग्रीव हरष कपि करि आए प्रभु काज ॥ २८ ॥

dōhā.

jā'i pukārē tē saba bana ujāra jubarāja.
sunī sugrīva haraṣa kapi kari ā'ē prabhu kāja. 28.

The guards ran to the capital to report the developments to their king Sugriv. They were almost out of their breath as they burst out, 'Oh Lord, the crown prince (Angad) has led the group that has ruined the forest.'

Hearing this good tidings, Sugriv felt very happy as he deduced that this development clearly, and without a trace of doubt, meant that the Kapis have indeed been successfully in doing Lord Ram's work (for otherwise they would not have had the temerity to destroy his favourite forest). (Doha no. 28)

चौ०. जौं न होति सीता सुधि पाई । मधुबन के फल सकहिं कि खाई ॥ १ ॥
एहि बिधि मन बिचार कर राजा । आइ गए कपि सहित समाजा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jauri na hōti sītā sudhi pā'ī. madhubana kē phala sakahī ki khā'ī. 1.
ēhi bidhi mana bicāra kara rājā. ā'i ga'ē kapi sahita samājā. 2.

Sugriv said to himself, 'Had they not known about the whereabouts of Sita, would they have dared to eat the fruits of the Madhuvan?

[To wit, it is sure that they have found Sita, for otherwise it is not at all reasonable to think that they would ever dare to eat fruits and drink honey by raiding my forest. Quite the contrary, for in case they had failed to locate her they would either not have come here at all, or would have been far too scared for fear of their lives to have the mind to enjoy eating fruits. So therefore, certainly they have attained success in their mission. Excellent; I will definitely forgive them for ruining the forest at least, if I can't reward them with anything else.]' (1)

In this way, while the king (Sugriv) was thus contemplating, the Kapis (i.e. Hanuman as well as Angad) arrived there; they were accompanied by all the other members of the group¹. (2)

[Note—¹Surely a large number of other monkeys and bears, the citizens of Kishkindha, must have joined this jubilant group as it headed towards the royal court of Sugriv to report. The news of their arrival must have spread like wildfire when the forest guards came in shouting and exclaiming about the affair of the ruining of the forest by Angad-led troops. Every single individual who was left in the capital was expecting news about this team, and when this news came it came with such a bang that it created quite a flutter in the city.]

By-and-by when the exuberant team headed by Hanuman, the ‘hero’, with Angad and Jamvant behind him and followed by other members of the group, reached the place where Sugriv waited for them, a huge milling crowd had gathered. There was a cry of congratulation and a spontaneous outburst of applause that reverberated everywhere in and around the capital.]

आइ सबन्हि नावा पद सीसा । मिलेउ सबन्हि अति प्रेम कपीसा ॥ ३ ॥

पूँछी कुसल कुसल पद देखी । राम कृपाँ भा काजु बिसेषी ॥ ४ ॥

नाथ काजु कीन्हेउ हनुमाना । राखे सकल कपिन्ह के प्राना ॥ ५ ॥

सुनि सुग्रीव बहुरि तेहि मिलेऊ । कपिन्ह सहित रघुपति पहिं चलेऊ ॥ ६ ॥ ā'i sabanhi nāvā pada sīsā. milē'u sabanhi ati prēma kapīsā. 3.

pūm̐chī kusala kusala pada dēkhī. rāma krpāṁ bhā kāju bisēṣī. 4.

nātha kāju kīnhē'u hanumānā. rākhē sakala kapinha kē prānā. 5.

sunī sugrīva bahuri tēhi milē'ū. kapinha sahita raghupati pahim̐ calē'ū. 6.

All of them (i.e. all the members of the team) came and bowed their heads before Sugriv, and the king of the monkey race (kapīsā; Sugriv) welcomed them most cordially, meeting them all affectionately. (3)

Then Sugriv asked about their welfare, at which they replied, ‘We are indeed fortunate to have come back to see you and pay our respects at your feet. By the grace of Lord Ram, the special work (kāju bisēṣī) that had been assigned to us has been done successfully¹. (4)

Oh Lord, Hanuman has done this work remarkably well, and by doing so he has been able to save the life of all us Kapis².’ (5)

When Sugriv heard of this news, he met Hanuman once again affectionately to congratulate him. Then all of them proceeded to the place where Lord Ram dwelt³. (6)

[Note—¹When a large number of monkey and bear troops had assembled at Mt. Prabarshan, a general order was given to them—to form teams or groups and go in every direction to search for Sita. One such group consisted of Angad, Jamvant and Hanuman amongst others. This was the privileged team who was ordered to proceed in the south direction. Out of its members, Hanuman was singled out by Lord Ram, who called him aside and gave him his finger-ring as well as the confidential message that he was to convey to Sita.]

Hence, this particular team had been given a special status, and one of its members, i.e. Hanuman, was given a special mandate by Lord Ram himself. That is why they call success in this mission as something ‘very special’.

²Though it is not specifically mentioned here who spoke on behalf of the group, but in all probability it was Angad, as he was the leader of this team. This fact, that he was the leader of this team, is clearly mentioned by Jamvant in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 30.

He was alluding to Sugriv’s threat that he would kill them if they failed to find Sita—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 22.

³Lord Ram was living on Mt. Pravarshan all the while—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 12 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-10 that precede it. So the merry team, led by Sugriv, went to meet the Lord atop Mt. Pravarshan.]

राम कपिन्ह जब आवत देखा । किँ काजु मन हरष बिसेषा ॥ ७ ॥
फटिक सिला बैठे द्वौ भाई । परे सकल कपि चरनन्ह जाई ॥ ८ ॥

rāma kapinha jaba āvata dēkhā. ki'ēñ kāju mana haraṣa bisēṣā. 7.
phaṭika silā baiṭhē dvau bhā'ī. parē sakala kapi carananhī jā'ī. 8.

When Lord Ram observed that all the Kapis were coming to meet him, and perceived that they were joyous and effused confidence, he concluded that they had successfully done the assigned work. This made the Lord feel happy in his heart. (7)

The two brothers (Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman) were sitting on a rock of crystal. All the Kapis came and fell down at their feet to pay their respect to them. (8)

दो०. प्रीति सहित सब भेटे रघुपति करुना पुंज । पूँछी कुसल नाथ अब कुसल देखि पद कंज ॥ २९ ॥
dōhā.

prīti sahita saba bhēṭē raghupati karunā puñja.
pūñchī kusala nātha aba kusala dēkhi pada kañja. 29.

Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram), who is a fount of compassion, mercy and grace (raghupati karunā puñja), met all of them very affectionately.

He asked them about their well-being, to which they all replied, ‘Oh Lord, everything is good and fortunate for us now that we have come back to see your lotus-like (holy) feet.’ (Doha no. 29)

चौ०. जामवंत कह सुनु रघुराया । जा पर नाथ करहु तुम्ह दाया ॥ १ ॥

ताहि सदा सुभ कुसल निरंतर । सुर नर मुनि प्रसन्न ता ऊपर ॥ २ ॥
 सोइ बिजई बिनई गुन सागर । तासु सुजसु त्रैलोक उजागर ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

jāmavanta kaha sunu raghurāyā. jā para nātha karahu tumha dāyā. 1.
 tāhi sadā subha kusala nirantara. sura nara muni prasanna tā ūpara. 2.
 sō'i bijaī binaī guna sāgara. tāsu sujasu trailōka ujāgara. 3.

Jamvant (the eldest and the wisest member of this fortunate team and the king of the bear community) came forward to report to Lord Ram. He said, 'Listen oh Lord of the Raghus ("raghurāyā"; Lord Ram, the illustrious descendant of great king Raghu of Ayodhya). Oh Lord, he upon whom you show your grace and benevolence [1] ---

--- Such a fortunate person as he is constantly and always, without exception, assured of good fortunes and well-being at all times; there is no doubt about it. Verily indeed, in all sooth and without any gainsay, all the gods and all the human beings, whether they are ordinary men or exalted sages, are favourably inclined towards him, and are happy with such a person [2]. (1-2)

Indeed, such a fortunate person is truly blessed with victory and success; he is deemed to be well mannered and cultured, as well as a treasure of all the excellent virtues one ought to possess. Verily, the fame and glory of this fortunate person shines throughout the world, in all its three divisions (such as the heaven, the earth and the nether world).¹ (3)

[Note—¹Wise and erudite, and acquainted with court etiquette as well as good manners as he was, Jamvant knew well how to address great kings and be courteous in their presence. So here he shows his finesse of manners and good behaviour by conducting this discourse in an excellent way by first honouring Lord Ram himself before proceeding to narrate the developments and give the news of Sita. If, instead, he had gone straight away to describe the stellar achievement of Hanuman in finding Sita, and the miraculous way he had burnt Lanka to avenge for Sita's abduction, then to some extent it would have seemed a bit un-courteous and a sort of bragging on behalf of Lord Ram's hosts, king Sugriv and his monkey-and-bear race in general.

Good culture and good manners entail that the guest himself is shown honour first before anything is said of the host; the host always says that he feels honoured to have the concerned person as his guest; it's his privilege to be able to serve his guest.]

प्रभु कीं कृपा भयउ सबु काजू । जन्म हमार सुफल भा आजू ॥ ४ ॥
 नाथ पवनसुत कीन्हि जो करनी । सहसहुँ मुख न जाइ सो बरनी ॥ ५ ॥ prabhu kīṁ kṛpā bhaya'u sabu kājū. janma hamāra suphala bhā ājū. 4.

 nātha pavanasuta kīnhi jō karani. sahasahuṁ mukha na jā'i sō barani. 5.

By the grace of the Lord, all the work has been successfully done, and in having done it we all feel that our lives have been fruitful and duly rewarded. (4)

Oh Lord, it is the son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) who deserves all the credit, for what he has done is so gallant, so astounding, so stupendous, so marvelous and so magnificent that it cannot be described in its totality even if one were to attempt to do so with a thousand mouths¹.

[To wit, Hanuman has brought immense laurels to the entire Kapi community; he has shown exceptional skill, strength, valour and courage in fulfillment of this mission, which I am glad to say, has made us all proud and happy. We are here because of him, for otherwise we would have been so ashamed of ourselves at our failure that we would have rather died than come here to show our faces to you. Whatever amount of praise is given to Hanuman would be little in the view of what he has achieved. Indeed, we are all very grateful to him.]’ (5)

[Note—¹This is a figure of speech to stress the importance and the magnitude of the achievement of Hanuman. Surely it was not a joke to cross the mighty ocean and land on an island 800 miles away from the shore. It was not an ordinary island, but one that was firmly secured and teeming with ferocious demons; its king was Ravana who was so mighty and powerful that even the gods trembled by his mere name. Going to this invincible fort alone, entering it and successfully finding Sita against all odds and overcoming all sorts of dangers, battering the demon army and virtually decimating it, killing Ravana’s son Akshayakumar, fearlessly facing Ravana himself and humiliating him in front of his full court crowded with armed demon soldiers, and then burning the city of Lanka and returning unscathed—was definitely not a child’s play by any stretch of imagination. It was indeed a stupendous deed and an astounding achievement that deserved all the praise that one can assign to it, for no one had ever imagined that it can actually be done even in one’s wildest of dreams. In one single sortie, and that too alone, Hanuman had brought the mighty enemy to heel.]

पवनतनय के चरित सुहाए । जामवंत रघुपतिहि सुनाए ॥ ६ ॥
 सुनत कृपानिधि मन अति भाए । पुनि हनुमान हरषि हियँ लाए ॥ ७ ॥ कहहु तात केहि भाँति जानकी । रहति करति रच्छा स्वप्न की ॥ ८ ॥ pavanatanaya kē carita suhā'ē. jāmavanta raghupatihi sunā'ē. 6.

 sunata kṛpānidhi mana ati bhā'ē. puni hanumāna haraṣi hiyaṁ lā'ē. 7.
 kahahu tāta kēhi bhāṁti jānakī. rahati karati racchā svaprāna kī. 8.

After this courteous introduction, Jamvant narrated to Lord Ram all the wonderful things that Hanuman had done. (6)

When Lord Ram, who is an ocean of mercy, grace and compassion (kṛpānidhi), heard the details, he was very pleased in his heart. Then he called Hanuman near and embraced him most affectionately. (7)

The Lord said, ‘Tell me my dear (tāta), how is Janki (Sita), and how she manages to sustain her life in hostile conditions.’¹ (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram well knew that Sita lived at a place teeming with blood-thirsty ferocious demons, and these demons derived sadistic pleasure in torture and cruelty. So the environment in which she lived was certainly ‘hostile’. The Lord wondered how she managed to survive in this situation. In the next set of verses we shall read how Hanuman answers this question.]

दो०. नाम पाहरू दिवस निसि ध्यान तुम्हार कपाट ।
लोचन निज पद जंत्रित जाहिं प्रान केहिं बाट ॥ ३० ॥

dōhā.

nāma pāharū divasa nisi dhyāna tumhāra kapāṭa.
lōcana nija pada jantrita jāhiṁ prāna kēhiṁ bāṭa. 30.

[Hanuman replied poignantly—] ‘Oh Lord, your name is like the guard who keeps vigil day and night, and your thought is the door at which this guard stands on duty.

Her eyes are downcast and looking fixedly at her feet. Say then, by which path her Pran (life forces) can leave her body?

[To wit, Sita sits like a hermitress immersed in deep meditation and engrossed in profound contemplation. She has enshrined the image of her beloved Lord Ram in her heart, which image she uses as a deity to whom an ascetic offers all his worship and efforts of spiritual practices; she employs the holy name of the Lord, the word “Ram”, as a Mantra, a divine formula, which the ascetic employs for his meditation; she thinks of the Lord like the way the ascetic does contemplation; and like the ascetic who sits for long hours with half-open eyes with his sight and mind focused on something very subtle and sublime and ethereal, something that is far removed from this gross, mundane and physical world, living in this world dispassionately and detached from all its affairs but appearing to do its routine affairs like a puppet, Sita too remains focused in the thoughts of Lord Ram to keep herself sane and retain life inside her emaciated body, while her half-opened and tired eyes are fixed on her feet because the fairy of sleep evades her.] (Doha no. 30)

[Note—Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 29 (b), and Sundar Kand, Doha no. 7 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it. In these verses we have read that Sita spent her days remembering the image of Lord Ram that she had last observed, of the Lord running behind the golden deer, an image that she had sacredly enshrined in her heart, and was muttering the Lord’s holy name “Ram” constantly; she was emaciated, forlorn and despondent; and she remained seated with her eyes fixed on her feet, almost like a statue.

In this Doha, Hanuman describes succinctly how Sita spends her time in captivity in Lanka—she sits sitting quietly, full of despair and despondency; she looks fixedly at her feet; her mind is always fixed in the thoughts of Lord Ram as she remembers him at all the moments of her existence; and she continuously repeats the Lord’s name “Ram, Ram” as no other thought enters her mind.

Hanuman paints this sad, poignant and pitiful portrait of Sita for Lord Ram to impress upon him how she constantly remembers him during the days of her captivity. He wished to convey to the Lord that she was in a very sorry state; she brooded and was lost in thoughts as she sat motionless like a statue—this is how she passed her days and nights. How is a ‘statue’ expected to lose its life, for it shows no sign of life in the first place? Sita's breathing has become very short and shallow; her eyes don't seem to blink as they are fixed on her feet or the ground before her; her body shows no signs of activity as her mind is lost in deep meditation. So is she not virtually like a 'statue'? But she is not actually an ordinary 'statue' made of stone, for she is a 'living statue' in as much as she does have life in her body; she actually breathes, thinks and sees. She, in fact, is a 'consecrated statue'—as Lord Ram is enshrined inside her heart and mind; her whole being is shrouded by the Holy Spirit of Lord Ram.]

चौ०. चलत मोहि चूड़ामनि दीन्ही । रघुपति हृदयँ लाइ सोइ लीन्ही ॥ १ ॥

नाथ जुगल लोचन भरि बारी । बचन कहे कछु जनककुमारी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

calata mōhi cūrāmani dīnhī. raghupati hṛdayaṁ lā'i sō'i līnhī. 1.
nātha jugala lōcana bhari bārī. bacana kahē kachu janakakumārī. 2.

At the time of my departure she gave me the jewel she wore on her head, the jewel called 'Chudamani'.

[Then Hanuman showed Lord Ram this token which he had brought with him. The Lord immediately recognized it as the one that belonged to Sita, and this made him profoundly nostalgic even as he was overcome with grief accentuated by sweet memories of her.]

Lord Ram instantly took the Chudamani from Hanuman most affectionately, and held it close to his heart. (1)

Hanuman continued with his report of Sita as follows: 'Lord, the daughter of Janak ("janakakumārī"; Sita)¹ filled her eyes with tears when she said a few words by way of a message for you. (2)

[Note—¹When Lord Ram met Hanuman on his return from Lanka, he had also asked about Sita using this same alias for her; the Lord had asked how "Janki" was. The word 'Janki' also means 'the daughter of king Janak'. Refer—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 30.

So therefore, Hanuman thought it wise to use a similar term for Sita because the Lord preferred to hear about her in that way.]

अनुज समेत गहेहु प्रभु चरना । दीन बंधु प्रनतारति हरना ॥ ३ ॥

मन क्रम बचन चरन अनुरागी । केहिं अपराध नाथ हौं त्यागी ॥ ४ ॥

अवगुन एक मोर मैं माना । बिछुरत प्रान न कीन्ह पयाना ॥ ५ ॥

नाथ सो नयनन्हि को अपराधा । निसरत प्रान करहिं हठि बाधा ॥ ६ ॥

बिरह अगिनि तनु तूल समीरा । स्वास जरइ छन माहिं सरीरा ॥ ७ ॥

नयन स्रवहिं जलु निज हित लागी । जैँ न पाव देह बिरहागी ॥ ८ ॥ anuja samēta gahēhu prabhu caranā. dīna bandhu pranatārati haranā. 3.

mana krama bacana carana anurāgī. kēhiṁ aparādha nātha hauṁ tyāgī. 4.

avaguna ēka mōra mairṁ mānā. bichurata prāna na kīnha payānā. 5.
 nātha sō nayanānhi kō aparādhā. nisarata prāna karahimṁ haṭhi bādhā. 6.
 biraha agini tanu tūla samīrā. svāsa jara'i chana māhimṁ sarīrā. 7.
 nayana sravahimṁ jalu nija hita lāgī. jarahimṁ na pāva dēha birahāgī. 8.

[After describing her pitiful condition, Hanuman now conveys Sita's sorrowful message in these poignant words—] She said to me, 'Hold the feet of the Lord as well as his younger brother (Laxman)¹ on my behalf, and plead, "Oh Lord, you are a friend of those who are distressed and ill-fortuned (dīna bandhu); you are the one who removes fear and sorrows of those who surrender themselves before you and take shelter at your feet (pranatārati haranā). (3)

{Then, turning to Lord Ram, say this to him on my behalf—} Oh Lord, I am your faithful maid by my Mana (mind and heart), by my deeds, and by my words, so why then have you abandoned me, for what crime or error have you forsaken me? Why is it that you have been so indifferent towards my sufferings, even though you are renowned as being a Lord who extends instant protection to those who are devoted to you, who love you, and who are totally dependent upon you for everything? (4)

Of course I agree that there has been one fault on my part—and that single fault is that my Pran (life forces) did not leave me as soon as I was separated from you. [To wit, I agree that I did commit a mistake by not dying the instant I was separated from you. But I have an explanation for it.] (5)

Lord, it is the fault of my eyes that they stubbornly resist whenever my Pran (life) wishes to leave my body. (6)

{Now she explains how her eyes prevent her from dying in the following two verses.}

The grief of separation is like a raging fire, the body is like the cotton, and the breath is like the air that can fan the fire and help it to erupt and consume my body by burning it to ash. (7)

But the eyes constantly shower water (in the form of my tears) on this fire, out of its own wants, thereby dousing it every time the flame leaps up. This is why, and how, my body is not able to burn itself in the raging fire of separation (from you).

[And what does the eye 'want'? It hopes that one day it will be able to see your divine form once again! This wish, this longing, this hope and desire, keeps the eye wide awake even as it stubbornly prevents my life from leaving my body by constantly dripping tears to cool the fire of grief and agony. To wit my Lord, I weep day and night, and my tears cool my body; as for my breath it is so shallow and lacking in sufficient force that my life can't leave my body via that route too. What can I do if my mind keeps hoping to meet you again, and it instructs my eyes to pour tear on the fire of grief and agony to keep it under control to prevent it from ruining the prospects of my meeting you again?]" ' (8)

[Note—¹Why did Sita wished Hanuman to hold Laxman's feet also to plead on her behalf? It is because she asked Laxman to forgive her for not obeying his advice not to force him to leave her alone at the time Lord Ram had gone behind the deer and a loud cry was heard mimicking Lord Ram's voice calling out Laxman's name. At that time Sita had forced Laxman to go and help the Lord inspite of his telling her that it was a trick as no harm can ever befall the Lord, and inspite of the Lord himself instructing Laxman not to leave Sita alone as the forest is teeming with demons. Yet when Sita persisted, Laxman was forced to go away, and this resulted in her being abducted by Ravana. These incidents are narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (a) Chaupai line nos. 8-9 that precede Doha no. 27; (b) Chaupai Doha no. 28 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-16 that precede it.

So therefore, by asking Hanuman to hold Laxman's and Lord Ram's feet on her behalf, Sita wishes to ask for forgiveness from them both.]

सीता कै अति बिपति बिसाला । बिनहिं कहें भलि दीनदयाला ॥ ९ ॥

sītā kai ati bipati bisālā. binahim kahēm bhali dīnadayālā. 9.

[After telling Lord Ram what Sita had conveyed, Hanuman summarizes her trauma and pitiful condition by making this poignant observation—] ‘Oh merciful and compassionate Lord (dīnadayālā)! Sita's troubles are so immense, so intense and so uncountable that it is well they are not told in detail. (9)

दो०. निमिष निमिष करुनानिधि जाहिं कलप सम बीति ।

बेगि चलिअ प्रभु आनिअ भुज बल खल दल जीति ॥ ३१ ॥

dōhā.

nimiṣa nimiṣa karunānidhi jāhim kalapa sama bīti.

bēgi cali'a prabhu āni'a bhuja bala khala dala jīti. 31.

Oh graceful Lord who is like an ocean of compassion and mercy (karunānidhi)! Each moment that passes is equivalent to a Kalpa for her. [The Kalpa is a very long period of time, and it covers one cycle of creation and destruction.]

So therefore, make haste and start quickly to go and bring her back by vanquishing the wicked hordes of enemy by the formidable might of your arms.’ (Doha no. 31)

[Note—In this concluding statement, Hanuman earnestly pleads on behalf of Sita by giving this advice to Lord Ram: No time ought to be lost by Lord Ram in launching a campaign to free Sita from the captivity of the demons by conquering them using force. By addressing Lord Ram as the one “who is an ocean of mercy and compassion”, Hanuman intends to tell him that he should be mindful of his own reputation on this count and show grace upon Sita even if she had made some mistakes, for he ought to forgive her as she has pleaded for forgiveness herself. Besides this, the Lord is a friend of the distressed and of those who surrender themselves at his feet, asking for his protection. So there is no reason why the Lord should delay in starting the rescue operation forthwith.]

चौ०. सुनि सीता दुख प्रभु सुख अयना । भरि आए जल राजिव नयना ॥ १ ॥

बचन कायँ मन मम गति जाही । सपनेहुँ बूझिअ बिपति कि ताही ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunī sītā dukha prabhu sukha ayanā. bhari ā'ē jala rājiva nayanā. 1.
bacana kāyaṁ mana mama gati jāhī. sapanēhuṁ būjhi'a bipati ki tāhī. 2.

When the Lord who is ever blissful himself and a granter of bliss to others (prabhu sukha ayanā) heard of the miseries and grief of Sita, tears welled up in his eyes. (1)

He exclaimed, 'How can troubles, adversities and miseries ever come to someone who has surrendered oneself to me by one's Vachan (words), Karma (deeds) and Mana (mind and heart; thoughts and emotions)?¹' (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram was responding to Hanuman's narrative about Sita's miserable state of affairs. Hanuman had given a very pitiful portrait of Sita to Lord Ram and made it clear to the Lord how Sita is completely loyal and devoted to him; how she constantly remembers him, how she mutters the Lord's name every moment of her life and sheds tears in his remembrance, how she expressed her emotions and paid her obeisance to the Lord at the time of his departure, and also explained to the Lord why she does not die in grief of separation—apropos of Doha no. 30—to Doha no. 31 herein above.

This brief narration was so touching that it overwhelmed Lord Ram. It was obvious that Sita was suffering immensely inspite of her surrender to the Lord as well as her unquestioned loyalty and devotion for him. This was too much for the Lord to bear, for this goes against his own glorious reputation—which says that anyone who has surrendered himself to Lord Ram and is completely devoted to him by his words, deeds, mind and heart can be sure of the Lord's protection under all conditions.

So, Lord Ram was unable to restrain himself as he felt that his honour and good name was at stake, and he made the remark as quoted in this particular verse. In effect it was a hint to all who were listening that no further time should be wasted, for the Lord is ready for action at that very instant, and hence the mission to free Sita should start forthwith. Hanuman picked up this clue immediately; he understood that the Lord is giving a signal to launch the campaign without the loss of any time. This will be evident in the next set of verses—where he assures the Lord that the real trouble for the creature is when he forgets the Lord and does not have devotion for him, but the situation here is quite the contrary for Sita is totally devoted to the Lord and remembers him every moment of her life. In her case it is a simple matter of going and freeing her by vanquishing her captors; it is no great deal, and neither does it merit such despondency and worry as Lord Ram seems to have.]

कह हनुमंत बिपति प्रभु सोई । जब तव सुमिरन भजन न होई ॥ ३ ॥

केतिक बात प्रभु जातुधान की । रिपुहि जीति आनिबी जानकी ॥ ४ ॥ kaha hanumanta bipati prabhu sō'ī. jaba tava sumirana bhajana na hō'ī. 3.

kētika bāta prabhu jātudhāna kī. ripuhi jīti ānibī jānakī. 4.

Hanuman assuaged Lord Ram's feelings of sorrow at Sita's sufferings by saying these comforting words, 'Oh Lord, the real trouble, the real misfortune, the real source of grief and misery for a creature is when one does not remember you (or when one forgets you), and when one does not worship you, adore you, and have devotion for you. (3)

Oh Lord! What is the great deal with respect to the demons; how do they matter to you? I enjoin you that now it is but a simple matter of vanquishing them and bringing Sita back.

[Oh Lord, there is nothing simpler than this. Till now, of course, there was some cause of worry as we did not know where Sita was, but now that everything is known, the rest is all easy. So why do you worry and express so much dismay?] (4)

सुनु कपि तोहि समान उपकारी । नहिं कोउ सुर नर मुनि तनुधारी ॥ ५ ॥
 प्रति उपकार करौं का तोरा । सनमुख होइ न सकत मन मोरा ॥ ६ ॥
 सुनु सुत तोहि उरिन मैं नाहीं । देखेउँ करि बिचार मन माहीं ॥ ७ ॥ पुनि पुनि कपिहि चितव सुरत्राता । लोचन नीर पुलक अति गाता ॥ ८ ॥ sunu kapi tōhi samāna upakārī. nahim kō'u sura nara muni tanudhārī. 5.

 prati upakāra karaurm kā tōrā. sanamukha hō'i na sakata mana mōrā. 6.
 sunu suta tōhi urina mairm nāhīm. dēkhē'uṁ kari bicāra mana māhīm. 7.
 puni puni kapihi citava suratrātā. lōcana nīra pulaka ati gātā. 8.

[Lord Ram felt very glad at hearing Hanuman's words of reassurance and courage. The Lord felt very obliged to him, and he expressed his deep sense of gratitude and thanks to him in the following words—]

'Listen Kapi (Hanuman)! There is no one amongst the gods, humans, sages, or any other living being to whom I feel so grateful and thankful today; I am indeed obliged of you. (5)

I don't know how I shall be able to recompense you in full for what you have done for me. Truly, my mind and heart (Mana) fail to advice me on this account. (6)

Listen my dear son (sunu suta)! The more I think of it the more I am convinced that I shall never be able to repay your debts, and I shall ever remain indebted to you!' (7)

The Lord, who is the protector of the gods (suratrātā), glanced repeatedly at Hanuman with a lot of affection in his eyes even as tears (of joy and gratefulness) welled up in them, and his body was so thrilled that hairs stood on their ends.*

[*This verse can be read in another way also as follows: "The Lord, who is the protector of the gods, glanced repeatedly at Hanuman with a lot of affection in his eyes, even as tears (of joy and gratefulness) welled up in the eyes of Hanuman and his body was so thrilled that hairs stood on their ends."]¹ (8)

[Note—¹In these verses, Lord Ram has expressed his deep sense of gratitude to Hanuman. Indeed Hanuman was so fortunate that both Lord Ram and Sita have shown great affection for him, called him their ‘son’ (suta), and liberally blessed him. We have read here presently how Lord Ram articulated his great appreciation of Hanuman and showed favour to him, and earlier we have read how Sita had also liberally blessed him—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 17.

We can remark here that there is a special bond between the Lord God and his ardent devotees. Both feel exhilarated in each other’s presence; the sentiment of affection and love is mutual between them. So therefore, it is natural that both Lord Ram and his devotee Hanuman should become highly emotional so much so that tears well up in the eyes of both, and both their bodies become thrilled in each other’s presence.

It is a sort of mutual respect for each other—the Lord God shows his appreciation for his devotee who sacrifices all and everything in this world for his beloved Lord, and the devotee shows his appreciation for the Lord who inspite of being the ‘Almighty Supreme Emperor of this creation’ goes out of his way to show affection for a humble devotee, protect him against all odds, and treats him most favourably inspite of his numerous shortcomings.]

दो०. सुनि प्रभु बचन बिलोकि मुख गात हरषि हनुमंत । चरन परेउ प्रेमाकुल त्राहि त्राहि भगवंत ॥ ३२ ॥

dōhā.

sunī prabhu bacana bilōki mukha gāta haraṣi hanumanta.
carana parē'u prēmākula trāhi trāhi bhagavanta. 32.

Hearing the (affectionate and polite) words of Lord Ram and observing that his countenance revealed that the Lord was favourable to him, Hanuman’s body was thrilled with joy.

Feeling overwhelmed by a surge of love and affection for the Lord, Hanuman fell down at his feet and exclaimed repeatedly, ‘Oh my revered Lord (bhagavanta), give protection to me (from feeling proud and having ego).’ (Doha no. 32)

[Note—There was a huge crowd of monkeys and bears who were watching the proceedings. Earlier it was Jamvant and now it is Lord Ram who has singled out Hanuman for such glorious praise. So he feels humbled by this honour, and in his modesty he fell down at the Lord’s feet to pray that the vice of ego and pride may not touch him.]

चौ०. बार बार प्रभु चहइ उठावा । प्रेम मगन तेहि उठब न भावा ॥ १ ॥
प्रभु कर पंकज कपि केँ सीसा । सुमिरि सो दसा मगन गौरीसा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bāra bāra prabhu caha'i uṭhāvā. prēma magana tēhi uṭhaba na bhāvā. 1.
prabhu kara pañkaja kapi kēṁ sīsā. sumiri sō dasā magana gaurīsā. 2.

The Lord tried repeatedly to lift Hanuman from his prostrate position, but the latter was so emotionally overwhelmed that he resisted all the attempts of the Lord to lift him, as he did not wish to let go of the Lord's holy feet (which he had clasped with his hands). (1)

Remembering this sublime scene of Lord Ram's lotus-like hands resting on the head of the Kapi (Hanuman), Lord Shiva ("gaurīsā"; the Lord of goddess Gauri) became so overwhelmed with emotions that for some moments he was lost in a reverie of ecstasy, losing awareness of everything else.¹ (2)

[Note—¹It ought to be noted that Lord Shiva is the chief and the primary narrator of the story of 'Ram Charit Manas' which we are reading here. He was the one who had first visualized and conceived this divine story of Lord Ram's deeds in his Mana (heart and mind) while meditating, and this is why this story got the name "Ram Charit Manas". He then narrated it to his divine consort who has many names, one of which is "Gauri", and the other more popular ones are Uma and Parvati. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 30.}]

Shiva is known to be a great devotee of Lord Ram. So whenever an episode is being narrated where the close relationship between Lord Ram and his devotee, such as the case of Hanuman here, is the subject matter of the discourse, one which highlights their mutual sense of affection and love for each other as well as the intensity of devotion that the devotee has for the Lord and his adoration of the Lord, Lord Shiva becomes highly emotional and ecstatic himself.]

सावधान मन करि पुनि संकर । लागे कहन कथा अति सुंदर ॥ ३ ॥

कपि उठाइ प्रभु हृदयँ लगावा । कर गहि परम निकट बैठावा ॥ ४ ॥

sāvadhāna mana kari puni saṅkara. lāgē kahana kathā ati sundara. 3.
kapi uṭhā'i prabhu hṛdayaṁ lagāvā. kara gahi parama nikaṭa baiṭhāvā. 4.

Lord Shiva recovered his composure and controlled his mind to resume the narrative which was very beautiful and pleasant (to hear and to narrate, as it gave pleasure to the listener as well as the narrator)¹. (3)

Finally (after great effort), the Lord lifted Kapi (Hanuman) and embraced him, holding him close to his bosom. Then the Lord held his hand and made him sit very close to him (like a true and a dear friend). (4)

[Note—¹Just how glorious, divine, spiritually fulfilling and fascinating this narrative of "Ram Charit Manas" is have been enumerated in its Baal Kand, (i) from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 31—to Doha no. 33; and (ii) from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 35—to Doha no. 39.]

कहु कपि रावन पालित लंका । केहि बिधि दहेउ दुर्ग अति बंका ॥ ५ ॥

प्रभु प्रसन्न जाना हनुमाना । बोला बचन बिगत अभिमाना ॥ ६ ॥

kahu kapi rāvana pālita laṅkā. kēhi bidhi dahē'u durga ati baṅkā. 5.
prabhu prasanna jānā hanumānā. bōlā bacana bigata abhimānā. 6.

[Now, Lord Ram enquired about Lanka and how Hanuman managed to burn its formidable fort.]

Lord Ram asked Hanuman, 'Tell me Kapi about Lanka, which is ruled and protected by its king Ravana. Tell me how you managed to burn its fort which is reputed to be very formidable and extremely impregnable.

[Since Lanka and its fort are so strong and inaccessible, I am really amazed how you achieved this rare feat of not only penetrating it to enter and meet Sita, but also burning it, which is all the more stunning as you have done all this single-handedly, without any help, and without getting hurt. It's astonishing and incredible really. So please tell me more of it.]' (5)

Perceiving that Lord Ram was very pleased by his actions¹, Hanuman replied without even a trace of pride or haughtiness in his voice or manners. (6)

[Note—¹Initially Hanuman was afraid that his action of burning Lanka without the express permission of Lord Ram, Sugriv or Jamvant may not be liked by either of them, but on finding that all had welcomed him enthusiastically and shown great appreciation for his actions, he felt relieved. Especially when he found that Lord Ram has shown so much happiness at his actions, and the way Jamvant had eulogized him, he regained his confidence.

But it goes to Hanuman's credit that this unequivocal and universal praise for him did not go into his head and make him puffed-up; he remained humble and modest. Haughtiness, egoism, pride and arrogance did not touch his mind and heart.]

साखामृग कै बड़ि मनुसाई । साखा तें साखा पर जाई ॥ ७ ॥
नाघि सिंधु हाटकपुर जारा । निसिचर गन बधि बिपिन उजारा ॥ ८ ॥ सो सब तव प्रताप रघुराई । नाथ न कछू मोरि प्रभुताई ॥ ९ ॥ sākhāmṛga kai baḍi manusā'ī. sākhā tēm sākhā para jā'ī. 7.

nāghi sindhu hāṭakapura jārā. nīsicara gana badhi bipina ujārā. 8.
sō saba tava pratāpa raghurā'ī. nātha na kachū mōri prabhutā'ī. 9.

[Showing extreme sense of humbleness and modesty, Hanuman said—] 'It is a common thing for those who dwell on the trees like a monkey does (sākhāmṛga) to jump from one branch of a tree to another; it is their natural habit, even if one prefers to call this simple act of theirs as something great or rare. (7)

It is out of this natural habit that I managed to cross the ocean by leaping across it, burn the golden city of Lanka (by jumping across its buildings), kill the demon warriors and destroy the (Ashok) garden. [To wit, I do not deserve much praise for these deeds, for I did them in a natural way, for such actions are like a sport for Kapis, or tree dwelling monkeys, like me.] (8)

And even if it is said that doing such stupendous deeds as enumerated above are something special, something great and very rare to do, then let it be known that all of them were successfully done due to your grace and blessings, and truly oh Lord, I have no claim to glory and honour for achieving success in doing any of them. All the credit should go to you and your grace, for I have indeed done nothing relying on my own strength and power.¹ (9)

[Note—¹This is an excellent example of modesty, and how a true devotee credits his Lord God for all the success that he gets in any enterprise in his life. This is how true devotion should be—that the devotee feels that all his achievements are the result of his Lord God’s grace and blessings, and that he deserves nothing on his own merit.]

दो०. ता कहूँ प्रभु कछु अगम नहिं जा पर तुम्ह अनुकूल । तव प्रभावं बड़वानलहि जारि सकइ खलु तूल ॥ ३३ ॥

dōhā.

tā kahūṁ prabhu kachu agama nahim jā para tumha anukūla.
tava prabhāvaṁ baṛavānalahi jāri saka'i khalu tūla. 33.

Oh Lord, nothing is impossible or unattainable for him on whom you are gracious and favourable.

To wit, by your grace and blessing even a humble thing as piece of cotton can be sufficiently empowered to overcome the might of the great subterranean fire known as ‘Barwanal’ so much so that the cotton would burn the latter instead of the other way round!¹ (Doha no. 33)

[Note—¹The ‘baṛavānala’ is the great underground fire that keeps the depths of the ocean warm, and often times it reveal itself in underground volcanoes that spew huge columns of hot steam from the surface of the ocean, or keep the water of hot-water springs boiling perpetually. This fire is so strong that the ‘water’ of the spring or the ocean is unable to douse it. But if the almighty Supreme Being so wishes, then the impossible can happen—which is that a humble shred of cotton can remain unscathed if it is thrown into this ferocious fire, or may be this cotton can even cover the fire to extinguish it, or it can also happen that instead of the fire burning the cotton, the cotton would burn the fire!

Hence, Hanuman says that even if it is assumed that it was he who had penetrated the otherwise impenetrable fort of Lanka, then destroyed the Ashok garden and killed so many fierce demon warriors, and then burnt the city of Lanka—there is nothing remarkable in all these deeds that are attributed to him, as he was able to do them by the grace and blessing of Lord Ram.

So we observe that Hanuman is essentially an embodiment of the grand virtues of devotion, modesty and humility; he attributes all his successes and spectacular feats to the grace of the Lord. Hanuman by his example teaches us how we should ourselves relate to our chosen deity; how we should be humble and modest during all our achievements in life, how we should credit everything in life to the grace of the Lord God, how we ought to surrender ourselves completely to our Lord God and have faith in him with respect to our welfare and well-being, for then it becomes the Lord's own responsibility to take care of us.

This attitude helps us to overcome ego, haughtiness and arrogance; it removes a huge burden of worries that we carry on our shoulders because once we have surrendered ourselves to the Lord God, it is henceforth 'he' who now has to worry for us; and it pre-empts jealousy and malice that may arise in the heart of our adversaries who may not like our successes, because now we openly declare that we do not merit any praise nor do we claim any honour or reward for any of our achievements—for it is the Lord who is actually the one who has made it happen the way it happened, and therefore it is 'he' who ought to be honoured and praised!]

चौ०. नाथ भगति अति सुखदायनी । देहु कृपा करि अनपायनी ॥ १ ॥
 सुनि प्रभु परम सरल कपि बानी । एवमस्तु तब कहेउ भवानी ॥ २ ॥
 उमा राम सुभाउ जेहि जाना । ताहि भजनु तजि भाव न आना ॥ ३ ॥
 यह संबाद जासु उर आवा । रघुपति चरन भगति सोइ पावा ॥ ४ ॥
 सुनि प्रभु बचन कहहि कपिबृन्दा । जय जय जय कृपाल सुखकंदा ॥ ५ ॥
 caupāī.

nātha bhagati ati sukhadāyanī. dēhu kṛpā kari anapāyanī. 1.
 suni prabhu parama sarala kapi bānī. ēvamastu taba kahē'u bhavānī. 2.
 umā rāma subhā'u jēhim jānā. tāhi bhajanu taji bhāva na ānā. 3.
 yaha sambāda jāsu ura āvā. raghupati carana bhagati sō'i pāvā. 4.
 suni prabhu bacana kahahim kapibṛndā. jaya jaya jaya kṛpāla sukhakandā. 5.

[Hanuman concluded his submission by saying—] 'Oh Lord! Please be kind and gracious to grant me your eternal devotion, a devotion that does not diminish with time or is affected by circumstances, as it is the one singular blessing that bestows immense joy, happiness and bliss to a creature.'

[Lord Shiva said to Bhavani, his consort to whom he was narrating the wonderful story—] 'Oh Bhavani! When the Lord (Sri Ram) heard the words of prayerful supplication spoken by Hanuman, humble words that were sincere and heart-felt, he obliged Hanuman by saying "So shall it be (ēvamastu)". (2)

Oh Uma (another name of Lord Shiva's consort)! He who knows the inherent nature of Lord Ram and has no doubt about it, he who is well acquainted with the Lord's temperament and habit (of being exceptionally merciful, kind, gracious, loving, benevolent, munificent, forgiving and tolerant towards his devotees and those who have unconditionally surrendered themselves before the Lord, pleading to the Lord for his help, solace and succour)—such a person will not feel inclined to have any other emotion or sentiment except to worship the Lord, to adore him, and to have devotion for him in its purest and undiluted form. (3)

Verily, in all sooth and without gainsay, anyone who remembers this conversation (between Lord Ram and Hanuman) shall surely be inspired to have similar a devotion for Lord Ram and a desire to worship the Lord's holy feet.¹ (4)

When the assembled Kapis (i.e. all the monkeys and bears who had accompanied Hanuman to Lord Ram when he had come to report about his adventures in Lanka and the success in finding Sita) heard the conversation, and especially the words of the Lord (whereby he blessed Hanuman and expressed his indebtedness to him), all of them lauded the Lord and cheered him repeatedly, exclaiming in unison, ‘Glory to Lord Ram; Glory to Lord Ram who is most kind and gracious; Glory to Lord Ram who is a fountainhead of happiness, joy, bliss and beatitude (jaya jaya jaya kṛpāla sukhakandā).²

[Note—¹When one recalls the emotional moments of Hanuman’s meeting with Lord Ram and how they bonded with each other, and at the same time the person remembers the stellar virtues of Lord Ram as the Lord who loves his devotees most dearly, the Lord who is peerless as far as showing mercy, grace, kindness, benevolence and munificence are concerned, the Lord who goes out of his way to accommodate one and all, and to forgive everyone who begs for forgiveness—then surely one will feel inclined to declare one’s total allegiance and full devotion to such a Lord as Lord Ram is. Forsooth, where else would one find such a dear Lord as Lord Ram; in who else would one find a dear and selfless a friend as one would find in Lord Ram?

²The exceptionally warm and cordial manner in which Lord Ram received Hanuman and showered praises upon him send a wave of joy and excitement through the rank and file of the assembled crowd. All the monkeys and bears were exhilarated; all of them felt that they were blessed to have found such a munificent, benevolent, kind, graceful, affectionate Lord who endeared everyone who came into contact with him. This nature, habit and attitude of the Lord touched their hearts so much so that they spontaneously vowed to repose their complete loyalty and full allegiance to him. Loud cheers and enthusiastic applause rendered the air in every direction; all the Kapis celebrated this occasion with cries of jubilation and expression of solidarity with their beloved Lord.]

-----**-----

Section 7.2:

Adhyatma Ramayan

{Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto nos. 1-5}

Now, after having read these wonderful tidings from ‘Ram Charit Manas’ of Tulsidas, let us read how Veda Vyas’ ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’ describes them. When we read about an event from different sources, we get a better, more colourful and varied description of the event, and this helps us to get a closer view of it and understand its nuances from different perspective.

Hence, for the purpose of narrating our Story with a focus on the subject matter of this Chapter—which is Hanuman's meeting with Sita, the burning of Lanka by Hanuman, and his return to give the good news of Sita's discovery to Lord Ram—we shall read from Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto nos. 1-5 as follows:-

7.2.1: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1:

Hanuman crosses the ocean and enters Lanka:-

॥ प्रथमः सर्गः ॥
 श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।
 शतयोजनविस्तीर्णं समुद्रं मकरालयम् ।
 लिलङ्घयिषुरानन्दसन्दोहो मारुतात्मजः ॥ १॥
 ध्यात्वा रामं परात्मानमिदं वचनमब्रवीत् ।
 पश्यन्तु वानराः सर्वे गच्छन्तं मां विहायसा ॥ २॥ अमोघं रामनिर्मुक्तं महाबाणमिवाखिलाः । पश्याम्यद्यैव रामस्य पत्नीं जनकनन्दिनीम् ॥ ३॥

॥ prathamah sargah ॥
 śrīmahādeva uvāca ।
 śatayojanavistīrṇaṃ samudraṃ makarālayam । lilaṅghayiṣurānandasandoho mārutātmajaḥ ॥ 1॥ dhyātvā rāmaṃ parātmānamidaṃ vacanamabravīt । paśyantu vānarāḥ sarve gacchantam māṃ vihāyasā ॥ 2॥ amoghaṃ rāmanirmuktaṃ mahābāṇamivākhlāḥ । paśyāmyadyaiva rāmasya patnīm janakanandinīm ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! The son of the wind-god, who is an embodiment of happiness and bliss, got ready to leap across the 100 Yojan wide ocean which was full of alligators and other fierce marine creatures (1).

He remembered Lord Ram, and invoking his grace he said his companions, 'Oh monkeys! All of you look here. I am going through the path of the sky (2) like the infallible, invincible, irrevocable and formidable arrow shot by Lord Sri Ram. I shall see the Lord's wife, the daughter of Janak (Janak Nandani i.e., Sita), today itself (3).

कृतार्थोऽहं कृतार्थोऽहं पुनः पश्यामि राघवम् ।
 प्राणप्राणसमये यस्य नाम सकृत्स्मरन् ॥ ४॥
 नरस्तीर्त्वा भवाम्भोधिमपारं याति तत्पदम् । किं पुनस्तस्य दूतोऽहं तदङ्गाङ्गुलिमुद्रिकः ॥ ५॥

kr̥tārtho'haṃ kr̥tārtho'haṃ punaḥ paśyāmi rāghavam । prāṇaprayāṇasamaye yasya nāma sakṛtsmaran ॥ 4॥ narastīrtvā bhavāmbhodhimapāraṃ yāti tatpadam । kiṃ punastasya dūto'haṃ tadaṅgāṅgulimudrikaḥ ॥ 5॥

4-5. I am greatly privileged (at being selected to do the great work of Lord Ram), and am certain to accomplish the task successfully before having Darshan (divine viewing and meeting) of Lord Sri Ram again. At the time when the soul leaves this body and departs from this mortal world, the mere auspicious remembrance of his holy and divine name (4) can enable a person to cross the measureless and fathomless ocean-like mundane world and go to the exalted supreme abode of the Lord (i.e. attain heaven. I am a messenger of the same holy Lord, and am carrying his finger-ring on his behalf as a token for Sita.¹ (5)

[Note—¹To wit, just imagine how lucky I am. Further, what worry do I have, for if the Lord's name is so powerful and strong that it can take the creature across an ocean symbolised by this mundane world of transmigration, an ocean which is most formidable and intractable, then what does this simple ocean count? Surely I would easily go and come back across it by remembering the Lord's holy name. There is no doubt in it.]

तमेव हृदये ध्यात्वा लङ्घयाम्यल्पवारिधिम् ।
इत्युक्त्वा हनुमान् बाहू प्रसार्यायतवालाधिः ॥ ६॥ ऋजुग्रीवोर्ध्वदृष्टिः सन्नाकुञ्चितपदद्वयः । दक्षिणाभिमुखस्तूर्णं पुप्लुवेऽनिलविक्रमः ॥ ७॥ tameva hr̥daye dhyātvā laṅghayāmyalpavāridhim । ityuktvā hanumān bāhū prasāryāyatavāladhiḥ ॥ 6॥

r̥jugrīvordhvadr̥ṣṭiḥ sannākuñcitapadadvayaḥ । dakṣiṇābhimukhastūrṇaṃ pupluve'nilavikramaḥ ॥ 7॥

6-7. Say, what is the wonder if I cross this ordinary ocean, which is but miniscule as compared to the huge 'Bhavasagar' which the soul crosses at the time of death, by remembering him (Lord Sri Ram) in my heart.

[To wit, if a creature can cross the endless and most formidable ocean symbolized by the ever-turning cycle of transmigration, an ocean called 'Bhavasagar', by remembering Lord Ram's holy name, then why should I worry for this simple hollow-in-earth that is filled with water, which we like to call an 'ocean', that is nothing more than a small groove made by a cow's hoof on earth and filled with salty water as compared to that huge ocean which is called Bhavasagar? So therefore I am at ease, and truly, crossing this ocean is no matter of concern to me as I shall be empowered and enabled to cross it very easily by the holy name of Lord Ram that will not only see me through across this trough of salty water, but also ensure my success once I land in Lanka, and then ensure my safe return here to meet you all once again. Don't you worry for me; I'll be alright. Adieu for now!]

Saying this, Hanuman spread his arms, lengthened and stiffened his tail (6), straightened his neck and looked upwards, folded both his legs inwards from the knee, and facing south, he launched himself in the air and flew with the speed of wind (7).

[Note—A reading of these two verse nos. 6-7 show that Hanuman resembled a jet plane when he took to the skies—extended arms, lifted tail, head thrust forward, legs drawn in etc.]

आकशात्त्वरितं देवैर्वीक्ष्यमाणो जगाम सः । दृष्ट्वानिलसुतं देवा गच्छन्तं वायुवेगतः ॥ ८॥
परीक्षणार्थं सत्त्वस्य वानरस्येदमब्रुवन् । गच्छत्येष महासत्त्वो वानरो वायुविक्रमः ॥ ९॥ ākaśāttvaritaṁ devairvīkṣyamāṇo jagāma saḥ । dr̥ṣṭvānilasutaṁ devā gacchantaṁ vāyuvegataḥ ॥ 8॥ parīkṣaṇārthaṁ sattvasya vānarasyedamabruvan । gacchatyeṣa mahāsattvo vānaro vāyuvikramaḥ ॥ 9॥

8-9. At that moment he was cruising through the sky with great speed and swiftness, while all the Gods (who had assembled in the sky to watch this amazing spectacle) watched him in awe and wonder as he sailed through the sky like a cruise missile. When they saw the son of the wind-god going with the speed of wind (8), they wanted to test his ability, intelligence, wit and prowess. So they talked amongst themselves, 'Really, this monkey (vānaro), who is extremely strong, powerful and valiant, is going with the great speed of wind (9).

तङ्कां प्रवेष्टुं शक्नो वा न वा जानीमहे बलम् । एवं विचार्य नागानां मातरं सुरसाभिधाम् ॥ १०॥
अब्रवीद्देवतावृन्दः कौतूहलसमन्वितः ।
गच्छ त्वं वानरेन्द्रस्य किञ्चिद्विघ्नं समाचर ॥ ११॥
ज्ञात्वा तस्य बलं बुद्धिं पुनरेहि त्वरान्विता । इत्युक्ता सा ययौ शिघ्रं हनुमद्विघ्नकारणात् ॥ १२॥

laṅkāṁ praveṣṭuṁ śakto vā na vā jānīmahe balaṁ । evaṁ vicārya nāgānāṁ mātaraṁ surasābhidhām ॥ 10॥ abravīddevatāvṛndaḥ kautūhalasamanvitaḥ । gaccha tvaṁ vānarendrasya kiñcidvighnaṁ samācara ॥ 11॥ jñātvā tasya balaṁ buddhiṁ punarehi tvarānvitā । ityuktā sā yayau śighraṁ hanumadvighnakāraṇāt ॥ 12॥

10-12. But we doubt whether he shall be able to enter Lanka successfully. Therefore, let us test his courage, strength and valour (so that in case he needs our help, we shall be ready for it)'.
Having discussed this matter amongst themselves, and to satisfy their curiosity, they requested Sursa, the mother of Serpents, 'Oh Sursa! (10) You should go immediately and create some kind of hurdle in the path of this most excellent monkey who is like a king in his race (11). Test his strength and intelligence, and come back soon'.

When the Gods had said so, she immediately went to create an obstacle in the path of Hanuman (12).

आवृत्य मार्गं पुरतः स्थित्वा वानरमब्रवीत् ।
एहि मे वदनं शीघ्रं प्रविशस्व महामते ॥ १३॥
देवैस्त्वं कल्पितो भक्ष्यः क्षुधासम्पीडितात्मनः ।
तामाह हनुमान् मातरहं रामस्य शासनात् ॥ १४॥
गच्छामि जानकीं द्रष्टुं पुनरागम्य सत्वरः । रामाय कुशलं तस्याः कथयित्वा त्वदाननम् ॥ १५॥ āvṛtya mārgaṃ purataḥ sthitvā vānaramabravīt । ehi me vadanam śīghraṃ praviśasva mahāmate ॥ 13॥ devaistvaṃ kalpito bhakṣyaḥ kṣudhāsampīḍitātmanaḥ । tāmāha hanumān mātaraḥ rāmasya śāsanāt ॥ 14॥ gacchāmi jānakīm draṣṭuṃ punarāgamy satvaraḥ । rāmāya kuśalaṃ tasyāḥ kathayitvā tvadānanam ॥ 15॥

13-15. She stood in front of Hanuman, blocking his path, and said, 'Oh you wise one! Come, enter my body (enter my mouth) immediately (13). I was very agitated and tormented with hunger, and so the benevolent Gods took mercy on me and have sent you as my prey (so that I can satisfy my hunger)'.

Then Hanuman said to her very politely, 'Oh mother! On the orders of Lord Sri Ram (14), I am going to see (meet) Janki (Sita). I shall soon come back from there, tell the Lord about her welfare, and then I shall come and enter your mouth willingly. [Mother, I am on a mission for Lord Ram, which I must complete before I can offer myself to you as a sacrifice to satisfy your ravenous hunger. But excuse me, it is not possible to oblige you before that at all.] (15).

निवेक्ष्ये देहि मे मार्गं सुरसायै नमोऽस्तु ते ।
इत्युक्ता पुनरेवाह सुरसा क्षुधितास्म्यहम् ॥ १६॥
प्रविश्य गच्छ मे वक्त्रं नो चेत्त्वां भक्षयाम्यहम् । इत्युक्तो हनुमानाह मुखं शीघ्रं विदारय ॥ १७॥
प्रविश्य वदनं तेऽद्य गच्छामि त्वरयान्वितः । इत्युक्त्वा योजनायामदेहो भूत्वा पुरः स्थितः ॥ १८॥ nivekṣye dehi me mārgaṃ surasāyai namo'stu te । ityuktā punarevāha surasā kṣudhitāsmyaham ॥ 16॥ praviśya gaccha me vaktraṃ no cettvāṃ bhakṣayāmyaham । ityukto hanumānāha mukhaṃ śīghraṃ vidāraya ॥ 17॥ praviśya vadanam te'dya gacchāmi tvarayānviṭaḥ । ityuktvā yojanāyāmadeho bhūtvā puraḥ sthitaḥ ॥ 18॥

16-18. Oh Sursa! I bow before you and request you to leave my path'.

At this request of Hanuman, Sursa replied, 'I am very hungry (16). So, enter my mouth at least once, and then you can come out to proceed further on your journey. Otherwise, I shall eat you up entirely.

[To wit, let us adopt a middle path. First fulfill my wish by entering my mouth, and then I shall oblige you by letting you fulfill your part of the bargain—by letting you escape for the time being so that you can continue with your journey. If you don't do this, then be sure I shall devour you entirely, and once you are in my stomach, surely you would be dead.]'

Then Hanuman said, 'Alright. If that is the case, then open your mouth quickly (17). I shall enter your body, and then proceed to Lanka once I come out of it'. Saying so, Hanuman spread his body for 1 Yojan (8 miles), and stood before her (18).

[Note—Sursa was sent by the Gods to test Hanuman's intelligence and wit. So he agreed with Sursa's proposal, but then started expanding his body step-by-step in a progressive manner, always one size larger than her open mouth, so that it would become impossible for her to be able to put him inside the it's cavity as will be evident in the verses that follow herein below.

Sursa was not to be easily defeated in this war-of-wits. So she also started enlarging the size of her open mouth, which resembled a wide entrance of a huge cave. The more Sursa enlarged and widened her mouth, the more Hanuman expanded his own body, till a time came when their sizes, the colossal body of Hanuman as he stood like a gigantic statue before the grand and bottomless abyss represented by the wide open mouth of Sursa, surprised even the Gods.

When Sursa's mouth reached its widest and highest point, her forehead touched the sky, her eyes resembled a giant planet observed at fearfully close range, and her lower lips and the cheeks resembled a grand canyon dug deep into the earth with its protruding cliff! Hanuman, on his part, always outwitted her by assuming a size that was consistently larger, wider and higher than her fully open mouth.]

दृष्ट्वा हनूमतो रूपं सुरसा पञ्चयोजनम् ।
मुखं चकार हनुमान् द्विगुणं रूपमादधत् ॥ १९॥
ततश्चकार सुरसा योजनानां च विंशतिम् । वक्त्रं चकार हनुमांस्त्रिंशद्योजनसम्मितम् ॥ २०॥ dr̥ṣṭvā hanūmato rūpaṃ surasā pañcayojanam । mukhaṃ cakāra hanumān dviguṇaṃ rūpamādadhat ॥ 19॥ tataścakāra surasā yojanānāṃ ca viṃśatim । vaktraṃ cakāra hanumāṃstrīṣadyojanasammitam ॥ 20॥

19-20. Seeing this huge form of Hanuman, Sursa expanded her mouth to 5 Yojans (40 miles). Then Hanuman doubled the size of his body (19). Thereafter, Sursa widened her body to 20 Yojans (160 miles), and Hanuman to 30 Yojans (240 miles) (20).

ततश्चकार सुरसा पञ्चाशद्योजनायतम् ।
वक्त्रं तदा हनुमांस्तु बभूवाङ्गुष्ठसन्निभः ॥ २१॥
प्रविश्य वदनं तस्याः पुनरेत्य पुरः स्थितः ।

प्रविष्टो निर्गतोऽहं ते वदनं देवि ते नमः ॥ २२॥ tataścakāra surasā pañcāśadyo janāyatam । vaktraṃ tadā hanūmāṃstu babhūvāṅguṣṭhasannibhaḥ ॥ 21॥ praviśya vadanam tasyāḥ punaretya puraḥ sthitaḥ । praviṣṭo nirgato'haṃ te vadanam devi te namaḥ ॥ 22॥

21-22. Finally when Sursa had spread and widened her mouth for 50 Yojans (approximately 400 miles), Hanuman suddenly reduced his size to become as small as a thumb (21), entered her mouth, and immediately coming out it he stood before her politely. He respectfully said to her, 'Oh goddess (devi)! I have entered your body (i.e. your mouth) and have come out as you had desired. Now I bid farewell to you by bowing respectfully before you (22).

[Note—The yawning gap of 50 Yojans or $50 \times 8 = 400$ miles between the lower and the upper lips of Sursa is not a joke. One can well visualise the proportionate size of Sursa's eyes, tongue, nose, chin etc. with such a colossus mouth. Then suddenly Hanuman reduced himself to the size of a thumb, i.e. a few centimeters. For all practical purposes, it was like trying to see a fly with naked eyes from a distance of roughly 400 miles or so! Hanuman slipped in and came out easily, and un-noticed, from the vast gaping hole of the cavernous mouth of Sursa, who seemed to by yawning, to keep her words. Sursa realised then that Hanuman was far cleverer than what she had expected, as is evident in the next verse.]

एवं वदन्तं दृष्ट्वा सा हनूमन्तमथाब्रवीत् ।
गच्छ साधय रामस्य कार्यं बुद्धिमतां वर ॥ २३॥ देवैः सम्प्रेषिताहं ते बलं जिज्ञासुभिः कपे । दृष्ट्वा सीतां पुनर्गत्वा रामं द्रक्ष्यसि गच्छ भोः ॥ २४॥ evaṃ vadantaṃ drṣṭvā sā hanūmantamathābravīt । gaccha sādahaya rāmasya kāryaṃ buddhimatāṃ vara ॥ 23॥ devaiḥ sampreṣitāhaṃ te balaṃ jijñāsubhiḥ kape । drṣṭvā sītāṃ punargatvā rāmaṃ drakṣyasi gaccha bhoḥ ॥ 24॥

23-24. Hearing Hanuman say so, Sursa replied, 'Oh the best amongst the intelligent and wise ones! Go and successfully complete Lord Sri Ram's work (23). Oh Kapi (literally a monkey; word used for Hanuman as he belonged to this race)! The Gods wished to know about your intelligence, wit, strength, courage, prowess and valour. So it is they who have sent me to you. I am now convinced that you shall see Sita, and come back to meet Lord Sri Ram very soon. You can go now (as you have my permission and blessings)!

[To wit, I am satisfied that you have the skill and the intelligence to be successful in this hazardous enterprise; you will always outwit your opponent, it's sure. Now I shall go and make my report to the Gods.]' (24).

इत्युक्त्वा सा ययौ देवलोकं वायुसुतः पुनः ।
जगाम वायुमार्गेण गरुत्मानिव पक्षिराट् ॥ २५॥
समुद्रोऽप्याह मैनाकं मणिकाञ्चनपर्वतम् ।
गच्छत्येष महासत्त्वो हनूमान्मारुतात्मजः ॥ २६॥
रामस्य कार्यसिद्ध्यर्थं तस्य त्वं सचिवो भव । सगरैर्वर्द्धितो यस्मात्पुराहं सागरोऽभवम् ॥ २७॥ ityuktvā sā yayau devalokaṃ vāyusutaḥ punaḥ । jagāma vāyumārgeṇa garutmāniva pakṣirāṭ ॥ 25॥ samudro'pyāha mainākaṃ maṇikāñcanaparvatam । gacchatyeṣa mahāsattvo hanūmānmārutātmajaḥ ॥ 26॥ rāmasya kāryasiddhyartham tasya tvaṃ sacivo bhava । sagarairvarddhito yasmātpurāhaṃ sāgaro'bhavam ॥ 27॥

25-27. Saying so, Sursa went back to the abode of Gods, and Hanuman resumed his flight across the path of the sky, literally ‘the path taken by the wind’, a path that is also the one by which Garud, the king of the birds (and the legendary mount of Lord Vishnu), flies (25).

At about this time, the ocean said to Mt. Mainak, a mountain that was liberally endowed with precious metals such as gold and priceless stones known as gems, 'Hanuman, who is exceptionally strong and a valiant son of the wind god (26), who is also a messenger of Lord Sri Ram, is on his way to do his work. You must help him. In some previous time, the sons of the great legendary king Sagar had created me¹, and I am called ‘Sagar’ (meaning an ‘ocean’) after him.

[Hence, king ‘Sagar’ is my ancestor, and he is also an ancestor of Lord Ram. So we two are related. Since Hanuman is on a mission of Lord Ram, I am obliged to help him. You, Mt. Mainak, live in my realm; so I request you to stand up and welcome Hanuman; afford him some time to rest and refresh himself before proceeding ahead on his mission.] (27).

[Note—¹The ocean is called “Saagar” in Sanskrit, and this name is derived from the name of a great king of the line to which Lord Ram belongs. This king was named ‘Sagar’, and his sons had dug up the earth in search of the sacrificial horse of their father that was hidden by Indra, the king of gods. The hollow thus created was filled with water, creating what is now known as the ‘ocean’.

Mt. Mainak was a huge volcanic mountain on the bed of the ocean, but its peak remained under the surface of water. It was like the many small islands we see dotting the ocean, some inhabited and others barren. So essentially, the ocean here asks Mainak to rise to the surface of the water so that Hanuman, if he so wishes, could take some rest. Remember: Lanka was about 100 Yojans, or 800 miles roughly, from the shore of the ocean from where Hanuman launched himself; there was nothing but an endless stretch of water everywhere, as far as the eye could see. So, an island would be a welcome sight for Hanuman to take some rest and re-energise before proceeding ahead.

Briefly, the story of how the ocean derived its name from king Sagar is as follows: King Sagar had done a great horse sacrifice known as ‘Ashwamedh Yagya’. This sacrificial horse was stolen by Indra, the king of Gods who was renowned for his mischievous and jealous nature, in the guise of a demon. The reason was that king Sagar had already done 99 such sacrifices, and if he successfully completed this 100th sacrifice, he would have become eligible for the stature of Indra. This Indra could not tolerate.

Now, king Sagar ordered his sixty thousand sons to go and find the horse. They dug up the entire earth in search of the horse, pursuing Indra relentlessly. During the process all the creatures who lived on the earth suffered immensely because their homes were demolished and they were uprooted from their natural habitats. This was what Indra wanted—to instigate Sagar to commit some sort of blunder that would invite the wrath of the creatures and the Brahmins, thereby inviting his own ruin. The Gods rushed to their patriarch Brahma, complaining about the developments. Brahma comforted them that they should not worry because Lord Vishnu who is responsible for the welfare of the creation would certainly do something to rectify the damage and punish the perpetrator.

Meanwhile, even after searching the earth the sons could not find the sacrificial horse. When they reported this to their father, king Sagar, he strongly rebuked them and ordered them to go back and search once again. This time around, they dug up the subterranean world. Ultimately, they reached the hermitage of sage Kapil on the shore of the eastern ocean. The mischievous Indra had hidden the horse there, but sage Kapil had no idea that it was a stolen sacrificial horse. So, when Sagar's sons saw the horse there, they concluded that it was stolen by the sage, and they haughtily challenged him. The sage was very angry, and he cursed them, reducing them to ashes.

When these sixty thousand sons did not return even after a long time, king Sagar ordered his grandson Anshumaan to go and find out what had happened. Anshumaan followed the path taken by his uncles, and finally reached the place where he saw their ashes in a huge mound. Lamenting and grieving, he wanted to perform their last rites. He also found the horse grazing nearby. For doing the last rites he needed water. Just at that time, Lord Garuda (the mount of Lord Vishnu), who was the maternal uncle of his own uncles, came there and told Anshumaan that ordinary water won't liberate his uncles because they were reduced to ashes by the curse of a great sage named Kapil. For this, the water of the holy river Ganges is needed. So he must go and make an effort to bring Ganges to earth so that its water can flow over the ashes and provide your uncles deliverance. Meanwhile, he should take the sacrificial horse and go home to his grandfather.

King Sagar completed his sacrifice and returned to his capital. He did not know how to bring the celestial river of Gods to earth, and he died without accomplishing the task. After his death, Anshumaan ascended the throne. His son was king Dilip. Anshumaan abdicated the throne in favour of his son and went to the Himalayas to do severe Tapa, and died there.

King Dilip had a son named Bhagirath. Dilip did many sacrifices in order to bring river Ganges to earth so that his ancestor's souls could find deliverance, but failed. Worried and frustrated he fell sick and died.

Meanwhile, Bhagirath had no sons, but he still was determined to bring Ganges to earth and fulfill the long cherished desire of his father, grandfather and great grandfather. So he handed over the reins of the kingdom to his wise ministers and went to do the severest form of Tapa one can imagine of. His determination and noble resolve pleased Brahma, the creator, who revealed himself before him and asked him to request for a boon. Bhagirath replied that if Brahma really wants to grant him something then he should bless him that he be able to bring Ganges to earth and wash his ancestors with its holy water so that they can find deliverance. Brahma advised him that he must please Lord Shiva and request him to accept the river on his head prior to its reaching the surface of the earth—because if the river fell directly upon the earth it would split the latter into two with its tremendous force.

So, Bhagirath prayed to Shiva who was more than willing to accept Ganges on his head because the Lord knew that the river had its origin in the foot of Lord Vishnu. As soon as Shiva gave his consent to bear the river on his head, Brahma let his Kamandalu tilt and thus the mighty river Ganges came cascading down with a thunderous force to land upon the matted hairs of Lord Shiva. Ganges was very proud of its own origin and powers, so it thought that it will push Shiva to the under-world by its sheer force. Shiva wanted to teach Ganges a lesson not to be haughty, so the Lord contained the might of the swirling waters of the haughty Ganges in the lock of hairs on his head so much so that the river almost got lost amidst its huge crevices.

Bhagirath was confounded: after all the efforts made by him, the river still failed to reach the ground. So he did Tapa again to please Lord Shiva and ask him to allow Ganges to fall down to earth. Pleased with his sincerity and devotion, Lord Shiva allowed a thin stream of Ganges to escape from his head and fall in the 'Bindu-sarovar (lake)'. Immediately upon reaching this lake, Ganges branched off into seven streams. The seventh stream followed king Bhagirath who lead its path on a chariot to the spot where the ashes of his ancestors lay. As soon as the holy water of the Ganges touched the ashes, the souls of the sixty thousand sons of king Sagar found liberation and deliverance.

At that time, Brahma appeared and blessed Bhagirath that henceforth Ganges would be deemed to be his daughter and bear his name. It would be known by three names—viz. 'Tripatha-gaa', 'Dibya' and 'Bhagirathi'. Hence, the holy river Ganges also came to be known as 'Bhagirathi', the daughter of Bhagirath. Since it flows in the whole of the three worlds, the heaven, the earth and the subterranean world, it is known as 'Tripatha-gaa'—that which flows on three paths. And since it is a holy and divine river, it is known as 'Dibya'—the divine and holy one.]

तस्यान्वये बभूवासौ रामो दाशरथिः प्रभुः ।
तस्य कार्यार्थसिद्ध्यर्थं गच्छत्येष महाकपिः ॥ २८॥
त्वमुत्तिष्ठ जलात्तूर्णं त्वयि विश्रम्य गच्छतु । स तथेति प्रादुरभूज्जलमध्यान्महोन्नतः ॥ २९॥ tasyānvaye babhūvāsau rāmo dāśarathiḥ prabhuḥ । tasya kāryārthasiddhyartham gacchatyeṣa mahākapiḥ ॥ 28॥ tvamuttiṣṭha jalāttūrṇam tvayi viśramya gacchatu । sa tatheti prādurabhūjjalamadhyānmahonnataḥ ॥ 29॥

28-29. Lord Ram, the son of Dasrath, has been born in that illustrious family to which king Sagar belonged, and this great monkey (Hanuman) is going with the purpose of accomplishing his task (28).

So I request you (Mt. Mainak) to rise above the water so that he can have some rest upon you before proceeding further'.

Saying 'alright', the mountain raised itself high above the surface of water in the centre of the ocean (29).

नानामणिमयैः शृङ्गैस्तस्योपरि नराकृतिः । पूह यान्तं हनूमन्तं मैनाकोऽहं महाकपे ॥ ३०॥
 समुद्रेण समादिष्टस्त्वद्विश्रमाय मारुते । आगच्छामृतकल्पानि जग्ध्वा पक्वफलानि मे ॥ ३१॥ nānāmaṇimayaiḥ śṛṅgaistasyopari narākṛtiḥ । prāha yāntaṁ hanūmantaṁ maināko'haṁ mahākape ॥ 30॥ samudreṇa samādiṣṭastvadviśrāmāya mārute । āgacchāmṛtakalpāni jagdhvā pakvaphalāni me ॥ 31॥

30-31. It was a fantastic mountain that was fabulously endowed with numerous gem-studded peaks. It assumed a human form (narākṛtiḥ), and stood atop one of the peaks.

He said to Hanuman, 'Oh the great monkey; oh Hanuman (mahākape; hanūmantaṁ)! I am Mainak (maināko'haṁ). The ocean has ordered me to give you some rest. Come; please partake of some of my offerings; come and taste some of my fruits that are ripe, sweet and succulent (31).

विश्रम्यात् क्षणं पश्चादमिष्यसि यथासुखम् । एवमुक्तोऽथ तं पूह हनूमान्मारुतात्मजः ॥ ३२॥
 गच्छतो रामकार्यार्थं भक्षणं मे कथं भवेत् । विश्रामो वा कथं मे स्याद्वन्तव्यं त्वरितं मया ॥ ३३॥ viśramyātra kṣaṇaṁ paścādgamiṣyasi yathāsukham । evamukto'tha taṁ prāha hanūmānmārutātmajaḥ ॥ 32॥ gacchato rāmakāryārthaṁ bhakṣaṇaṁ me kathaṁ bhavet । viśrāmo vā kathaṁ me syādgantavyaṁ tvaritaṁ mayā ॥ 33॥

32-33. Rest here for a while, and then you can cheerfully proceed ahead'.

When Mainak had said so, the son of the wind-god, Hanuman, replied, 'How can I rest or eat anything while on my way to do Lord Ram's work. (I don't want to waste even a single moment.) I have to go in haste, so where is the time for leisure and taking rest?' (33)

इत्युक्त्वा स्पृष्टशिखरः कराग्रेण ययौ कपिः ।
 किञ्चिद्दूरं गतस्यास्य छायां छायाग्रहोऽग्रहीत् ॥ ३४॥
 सिंहिका नाम सा घोरा जलमध्ये स्थिता सदा । आकाशगामिनां छायामाकूच्याकृष्य भक्षयेत् ॥ ३५॥ ityuktvā sprṣṭaśikharaḥ karāgreṇa yayau kapiḥ । kiñciddūraṁ gatasyaśya chāyāṁ chāyāgraho'grahīt ॥ 34॥ siṁhikā nāma sā ghorā jalamadhye sthitā sadā । ākāśagāmināṃ chāyāmākramyākṛṣya bhakṣayet ॥ 35॥

34-35. Saying this, and in order to honour Mainak's request, Hanuman simply touched its peak with his fingers and proceeded ahead.

He had gone but a little distance only when a 'Chhaya Grahi' caught hold of his shadow falling on the water. [The "Chhaya Grahi" is a creature who possesses a magical power that enables it to catch hold of a shadow of those flying overhead. The flier cannot move ahead, and is pulled down.]¹ (34).

She was a very formidable and ferocious female demon by the name of "Singhika", who stayed in the water and caught hold of the shadow of all creatures flying in the sky above the ocean; then she pulled them down and devoured them (35).

[Note—¹It could have been some sort of a 'radar' or some other powerful instrument that was installed by Ravana in the ocean to protect Lanka against intrusion by any flying object coming in from the mainland lying to the north of Lanka. We can say that this 'radar' was called "Singhika" as it was manned by a demoness of the same name. We will see a similar example a little later, when Hanuman faces another obstacle known as "Lankini". She was the chief female demon gate-keeper of the fort of Lanka, and hence got her name "Lankini" from the city of Lanka that she protected.

So, it is quite probable that this demoness Singhika was actually a high-powered military device like a radar that was installed in the ocean by Ravana to help guard the frontiers of Lanka from as far afield as the middle of the ocean.

Singhika constantly scanned the skies for flying objects, and prevented all spies and other intruders from entering Lanka. If the flying object was friendly, she would let it pass; if she suspected foul play, she simply held its shadow by some means and pulled it down. This phenomenon of 'holding the shadow of a flying object' could be a technically advanced instrument that could hold objects in the sky by interfering in their flying path by shooting some kind of strong electromagnetic rays, or by some other means of using magnetic field and electronic waves for interference.]

तया गृहीतो हनुमांश्चिन्तयामास वीर्यवान् ।
केनेदं मे कृतं वेगरोधनं विघ्नकारिणा ॥ ३६॥
दृश्यते नैव कोऽप्यत्र विस्मयो मे प्रजायते । एवं विचिन्त्य हनुमानधो दृष्टिं प्रसारयत् ॥ ३७॥
तत्र दृष्ट्वा महाकायां सिंहिकां घोररूपिणीम् । पपात सलिले तूर्णं पद्भ्यामेवाहनद्रुषा ॥ ३८॥ tayā grhīto hanumāṃścintayāmāsa vīryavān । kenedaṃ me kṛtaṃ vegarodhanaṃ vighnakāriṇā ॥ 36॥ drśyate naiva ko'pyatra vismayo me prajāyate । evaṃ vicintya hanumānadho drṣṭiṃ prasārayat ॥ 37॥ tatra drṣṭvā mahākāyāṃ siṃhikāṃ ghorarūpiṇīm । papāta salile tūrṇaṃ padbhyāmevāhanadruṣā ॥ 38॥

36-38. On being caught by her, the brave and courageous Hanuman thought, 'What is this mysterious obstacle that is dragging me down during my flight, as it has put a break on my speed?' (36). There is nothing visible here on the surface. This is a great mystery for me.'

While wondering thus he looked downwards (37). When he saw Singhika, who had a most frightful countenance, ferocious manners, and a huge body, he immediately jumped in the water and killed her with his kicks (38).

पुनरुत्प्लुत्य हनूमान् दक्षिणाभिमुखो ययौ ।
ततो दक्षिणमासाद्य कूलं नानाफलद्रुमम् ॥ ३९॥
नानापक्षिमृगाकीर्णं नानापुष्पलतावृतम् ।
ततो ददर्श नगरं त्रिकूटाचलमूर्धनि ॥ ४०॥
प्राकारैर्बहुभिर्युक्तं परिखाभिश्च सर्वतः । प्रवेक्ष्यामि कथं लङ्कामिति चिन्तापरोऽभवत् ॥ ४१॥ punarutplutya hanūmān dakṣiṇābhimukho yayau । tato dakṣiṇamāsādyā kūlaṃ nānāphaladrūmaṃ ॥ 39॥ nānāpakṣimṛgākīrṇaṃ nānāpuṣpalatāvṛtaṃ । tato dadarśa nagaraṃ trikūṭācalamūrdhani ॥ 40॥ prākārairbahubhīryuktaṃ parikhābhiśca sarvataḥ । pravekṣyāmi kathaṃ laṅkāmiti cintāparo'bhavat ॥ 41॥

39-41. After that, Hanuman leapt up and rapidly moved southwards to finally reach the southern shore of the ocean¹. [To wit, Hanuman had finally reached Lanka and landed on its soil.]

After setting foot on this alien land, he observed that it was a verdant green land. There were various types of fruit trees (39); the land was full of different types of birds and animals, and it was covered by numerous flowering creepers.

From a vantage point, Hanuman observed the city of Lanka which was established atop a magnificent mountain called 'Trikoote' (i.e. a mountain with three wonderful summits) (40).

It (Lanka) was surrounded on all the sides by many rings of walls and moats. Beholding this awe-inspiring sight, Hanuman started wondering about the plan he ought to adopt to find an entrance inside the city² (41).

[Note—¹The “south shore” of the ocean is so-named as it lay on the southern edge of the ocean. Lanka was a big island, not a small isle or islet. So from the perspective of the viewer who flew in from the northern direction across the ocean to land on the shores of Lanka, it was like “landing on the southern shore of the ocean”.

This being the case, from the perspective of the same flier who has already landed in Lanka, the shore of the ocean on the other side from where he started on his journey for Lanka would be the “northern shore of the ocean”. By this same token, the shore which lied at the southern tip of the mainland, and from where the ocean stretched down, would be the “southern shore” for him when he wishes to name it after travelling down to it from up north across the mainland.

²Lanka was a very strong fort, well planned and well protected with many concentric rings of walls and ramparts that were encircled by moats. Hanuman began to plan how to penetrate this virtually impregnable citadel of the demon race.]

रात्रौ वेक्ष्यामि सूक्ष्मोऽहं लङ्कां रावणपालिताम् ।
 एवं विचिन्त्य तत्रैव स्थित्वा लङ्कां जगाम सः ॥ ४२॥
 धृत्वा सूक्ष्मं वपुर्द्वारं प्रविवेश प्रतापवान् । तत्र लङ्कापुरी साक्षाद्राक्षसीवेषधारिणी ॥ ४३॥

rātrau vekṣyāmi sūkṣmo'haṃ laṅkāṃ rāvaṇapālītām । evaṃ vicintya tatraiva sthitvā laṅkāṃ jagāma saḥ ॥ 42॥ dhṛtvā sūkṣmaṃ vapurdvāraṃ praviveśa pratāpavān । tatra laṅkāpurī sākṣādrākṣasīveṣadhāriṇī ॥ 43॥

42-43. Then he finally decided that he shall enter the city, which was looked after (i.e. ruled; administered) by Ravana, the king of the demon race, during the night by assuming a very small body (so that he can quietly sneak in without being noticed and unnecessarily creating a fuss).

So he waited there near the sea shore, and at nightfall he started for the city (42). At the time, when the valiant and strong Hanuman entered the city in a miniature form, the patron deity of the city of Lanka had personified itself in the form of a demoness (called Lankini), and stood at the entrance to guard it¹ (43).

[Note—¹All the walls of the great fort of Lanka were impregnable; they were high, well guarded, and had no holes through which an entry could be managed. To enter Lanka therefore, there was only one entrance, and this entry point was guarded by a ferocious female demon named Lankini. She was believed to be the patron deity of Lanka; and hence very powerful and able. It was her duty to guard the city from intruders. Hanuman's first encounter after landing was with her.]

प्रविशन्तं हनूमन्तं दृष्ट्वा लङ्का व्यतर्जयत् । कस्त्वं वानररूपेण मामनादृत्य लङ्किकीम् ॥ ४४॥
 प्रविश्य चोखद्रात्रौ किं भवान् कर्तुमिच्छति । इत्युक्त्वा रोषताम्राक्षी पादेनाभिजघान तम् ॥ ४५॥ praviśantaṃ hanūmantaṃ dr̥ṣṭvā laṅkā vyatarjayat । kastvaṃ vānararūpeṇa māmanādr̥tya laṅkinīm ॥ 44॥ praviśya coravadrātrau kiṃ bhavān kartumicchati । ityuktvā roṣatāmrākṣī pādenābhijaghāna tam ॥ 45॥

44-45. When she saw Hanuman entering the city, she challenged him and asked, 'Who are you in the form of a monkey who has the temerity to insult (or undermine) my authority, who am called the Lankini? (44). Why are you entering the city like a thief? What do you want to do here?'

Saying this, she made her eyes red with anger and indignation, and kicked him fiercely in contempt (45).

हनुमानपि तां वाममुष्टिनावज्ञयाहन्त् ।
तदैव पतिता भूमौ रक्तमुद्रमती भृशम् ॥ ४६॥
उत्थाय प्राह सा लङ्का हनूमन्तं महाबलम् । हनूमन् गच्छ भद्रं ते जिता लङ्का त्वयानघ ॥ ४७॥ hanumānapi tāṃ vāmamuṣṭināvajñāyāhanat । tadaiva patitā bhūmau raktamudvamatiḥ bhṛśam ॥ 46॥ utthāya prāha sā laṅkā hanūmantam mahābalaṃ । hanūman gaccha bhadraṃ te jitā laṅkā tvayānagha ॥ 47॥

46-47. Ignoring her questions, Hanuman punched her hard with his left hand, at which she spitted (vomited) a lot of blood and fell down on the ground, swooning and completely vexed (46).

After sometime she recovered herself and got up. She said to him, 'Oh Hanuman! Go, you be blessed! Oh Anagh (one who is pure, sinless and faultless; one who is honourable and respectable), you have already won over the city of Lanka in a symbolic way¹ (47).

[Note—¹You have defeated me, the one who is the patron deity of this place. This means that you have symbolically won Lanka, as I am supposed to protect it. My defeat is a symbolic defeat of Lanka; in the same vein, your victory over me is your symbolic victory of Lanka. So go in now, I bless you.]

पुराहं ब्रह्मणा प्रोक्ता ह्यष्टाविंशतिपर्यये ।
त्रैतायुगे दाशरथी रामो नारायणोऽव्ययः ॥ ४८॥
जनिष्यते योगमाया सीता जनकवेश्मनि । भूभारहरणार्थाय प्रार्थितोऽयं मया क्वचित् ॥ ४९॥ purāhaṃ brahmaṇā proktā hyaṣṭāvīṃśatiparyaye । tretāyuge dāśarathī rāmo nārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ ॥ 48॥ janiṣyate yogamāyā sītā janakaveśmani । bhūbhāraharaṇārthāya prārthito'yaṃ mayā kvacit ॥ 49॥

48-49. In an ancient time, Lord Brahma (the Creator) had told me that during the Treta Yuga of the 28th four-Yuga cycle, the imperishable and eternal Lord Narayan shall manifest himself in the form of Lord Ram, as the son of king Dasrath (of Ayodhya). His Yogmaya (literally, the infinite cosmic energy and dynamism that drives everything in this creation, and which has its origin in the meditative and contemplative state of the Supreme Being who is also known as Brahm) shall manifest its self in the household of king Janak as Sita, his daughter. The Creator had told me all this because in some earlier time I had prayed to him to somehow devise a mean to remove the burden of the earth (in the form of the horrors and torments unleashed on earth by the demons who were evil and cruel to the extreme)¹ (48-49).

[Note—¹It must be noted here that Ravana's own defenses, which he thought were impregnable, were actually very fragile and infested by traitors and selfish elements who had no real loyalty to him, who were dissatisfied by his rule, and wished quietly for his downfall even though they may have not been vocal on this emotion for fear of death and torture.

As we can clearly see in the case of Lankini, those who were supposed to guard and protect the city of Lanka and their ruler Ravana with their lives, and till the last breath in their bodies, were internally inclined towards his destruction.

Notwithstanding the spiritual outlook of these individuals, and that they were concerned and offended by the singular evil nature of their king Ravana, such disloyal elements in his kingdom as represented by Lankini in the present case, proved to be his undoing; they were the ones who hammered the last nail in the coffin of Ravana's destiny; they were the fatal chinks in his so-called invincible and impregnable armour, and the betrayals by such individuals on whom he had reposed full faith and trust led to the downfall of this otherwise invincible demon ruler. See also verse nos. 54-56 below in this context.

By-and-by we shall come across other instances when Ravana's own kin went against him, and one outstanding example is his own brother Vibhishan who was instrumental in his death; and another example is that of Ravana's wife Mandodari who had no compunctions in praising her husband's enemy, Lord Ram, in lavish terms, while making it look as if her husband Ravana was an utter fool and arrogant creature because he did not agree to her entreaty to capitulate before Lord Ram.

To be frank and to do justice to Ravana, which self-respecting king would agree to surrender before his enemy without an honourable fight, even though that king may principally be at fault as Ravana indeed was in this case as he was the one who had taken the first wrong step by kidnapping Lord Ram's wife Sita, an act that can never be justified and can never be called right and honourable by any account whatsoever.]

सभार्यो राघवो भ्रात्रा गमिष्यति महावनम् ।
तत्र सीतां महामायां रावणोऽपहरिष्यति ॥ ५०॥ पश्चादरामेण साचिव्यं सुग्रीवस्य भविष्यति ।
सुग्रीवो जानकीं द्रष्टुं वानरान् प्रेषयिष्यति ॥ ५१॥ sabhāryo rāghavo bhrātrā gamiṣyati mahāvanam । tatra sītāṃ mahāmāyāṃ rāvaṇo'pahariṣyati ॥ 50॥ paścādarāmeṇa sācivyam sugrīvasya bhaviṣyati । sugrīvo jānakīṃ draṣṭuṃ vānarān preṣayiṣyati ॥ 51॥

50-51. [Brahma told me that—] Raghav (Lord Sri Ram), accompanied by his wife (Sita) and brother (Laxman), would go to the great forest. There, Ravana would abduct Sita who represents the Lord's great delusion creating powers known as 'Maha-maya' (50).

After that, he (Lord Ram) will have Sugriv as his chief advisor and minister (sācivyaṃ sugrīvasya), and the latter would dispatch monkeys in search of Janki (Sita) (51).

तत्रैको वानरो रात्रावागमिष्यति तेऽन्तिकम् ।
त्वया च भर्त्सितः सोऽपि त्वां हनिष्यति मुष्टिना ॥ ५२॥
तेनाहता त्वं व्यथिता भविष्यसि यदानग्रे । तदैव रावणस्यान्तो भविष्यति न संशयः ॥ ५३॥ tatraiko vānaro rātrāvāgamiṣyati te'ntikam । tvayā ca bhartsitaḥ so'pi tvāṃ haniṣyati muṣṭinā ॥ 52॥ tenāhatā tvam vyathitā bhaviṣyasi yadānaghe । tadaiva rāvaṇasyānto bhaviṣyati na saṃśayaḥ ॥ 53॥

52-53. Out of them, one monkey will come to you during the night. When you would challenge and reproach him, he will punch you with his clenched fists (52).

Oh Anagh¹! At the time when you get injured when he hits you hard, making you stunned and perplexed, you can then be sure that Ravana's end is near at hand. There is no doubt about it' (53).

[Note—¹The word “Anagh” means one who is honourable and respectable; one who is sinless, faultless and immaculate. Use of this epithet for Lankini by Brahma was meant to imply that though she would serve the sinful Ravana and live amongst evil demons yet she would be internally pure and not touched by the vices that dominate the character of the demon race in general.]

तस्मात् त्वया जिता लङ्का जितं सर्वं त्वयानग ।
रावणान्तःपुरवरे क्रीडाकाननमुत्तमम् ॥ ५४॥
तन्मध्येऽशोकवनिका दिव्यपादपसङ्कुला । अस्ति तस्यां महावृक्षः शिंशपा नाम मध्यगः ॥ ५५॥
तत्रास्ते जानकी घोरराक्षसीभिः सुरक्षिता । दृष्ट्वैव गच्छ त्वरितं राघवाय निवेदय ॥ ५६॥ tasmāt tvayā jitā laṅkā jitaṃ sarvaṃ tvayānagha । rāvaṇāntaḥpuravare krīḍākānanamuttamam ॥ 54॥ tanmadhye'sokavanikā divyapādapasaṅkulā । asti tasyāṃ mahāvṛkṣaḥ śiṃśapā nāma madhyagaḥ ॥ 55॥ tatrāste jānakī ghorarākṣasībhiḥ surakṣitā । dr̥ṣṭvaiva gaccha tvaritaṃ rāghavāya nivedaya ॥ 56॥

54-56. [Lankini told Hanuman—] Hence, oh the sinless one (tvayānagha), since you have vanquished me who represents Lanka, you have deemed to vanquish all, both the city of Lanka as well as those who live in it! [To wit, if you can conquer me, the Lankini who is the personification of the patron goddess of Lanka with the mandate to protect the city, you have literally won everything and everyone associated with Lanka. This is Brahma's prophesy, and hence it is the truth.]

So now, listen to me carefully. Within the precincts of the royal palace of Ravana, there is a beautiful and most excellent garden for the purpose of enjoyment, amusement and pleasure (54). In it is a grove of trees called 'Ashok Van' which has beautiful trees that are magnificent in all respects. In the centre of this superb garden there is large tree called 'Shinshupa' ("mahāvṛkṣaḥ śiṃśapā nāma"; the Indian rose wood tree—Delbergia Sisu)¹ (55). Janki (Sita) stays there (i.e. sits there) under the constant vigil and care of ferocious demoness (who are deputed to guard her every moment of the day).

So now go, have her Darshan (sacred sight), and inform Lord Ram about her as soon as possible² (56).

[Note—¹According to Ram Charit Manas and other texts of Tulsidas, the tree under which Sita sat was called the Ashok tree, instead of the Shinshupa tree as said here.

²What a betrayal, what a disloyalty and treason! Had it not been for the likes of Lankini, Vibhishan and Mandodari etc. in Ravana's camp, he would have been truly unconquerable. They openly betrayed him and sided with Lord Ram. Taking into account how certain individuals in Ravana's camp acted, if one were to take a neutral view, would their behaviour and attitude against their own king, and in favour of his enemy, not amount to disloyalty, betrayal and treason?]

धन्याहमप्यद्य चिराय राघवस्मृतिर्ममासीद्भवपाशमोचिनी ।

तद्भक्तसङ्गोऽप्यतिदुर्लभो मम प्रसीदतां दाशरथिः सदा हृदि ॥ ५७॥

dhanyāhamapyadya cirāya rāghavasmr̥tirmamāsīdbhavapāśamocinī ।

tadbhaktasaṅgo'pyatidurlabho mama prasīdatāṃ dāśarathiḥ sadā hr̥di ॥ 57॥

57. Today, after a long time, I have been able to remember Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) who can destroy all the fetters that shackle a living being to this gross, mundane world marked by delusions and artificiality, a world that traps the creature in an endless cycle of transmigration.

I have also had the privilege of having contact and communion with the Lord's devotee (here, referring to Hanuman), which is very rare.

Hence, I can say with certainty that I feel very blessed; I am indeed lucky and most privileged. I pray that the son of Dasrath (i.e. Lord Ram), who always resides in my heart, be also pleased with me¹ (57).

[Note—¹Lankini has expressed her total allegiance to Lord Ram and loyalty to his interests. She has told Hanuman where Sita was, and then clearly hinted that she will not hinder his journey back home when she told him to go and inform Lord Ram about Sita as soon as he can—refer: verse nos. 55-56.

The assurance of Lankini, that since Hanuman has overcome her he can take it for granted that he has symbolically subdued everyone in Lanka (verse no. 54), helped to build Hanuman's confidence. So when he finally entered the city he was doubly sure of success.]

उत्ताङ्घ्रितेऽब्धौ पवनात्मजेन धरासुतायाश्च दशाननस्य । पुष्फोर वामाक्षि भुजश्च तीव्रं रामस्य दक्षाङ्गमतीन्द्रियस्य ॥ ५८॥

ullaṅghite'bdhau pavanātmajena dharāsutāyāśca daśānanasya । pusphora vāmākṣi bhujaśca tīvraṃ rāmasya dakṣāṅgamatīndriyasya ॥ 58॥

58. As soon as the son of the wind-god (Hanuman) had crossed the ocean, omens began to occur—the left arms of the daughter of the earth (i.e. Sita)¹ and Ravana, the 10-headed one (i.e. the demon king of Lanka), began to flutter violently, while the same sort of fluttering occurred in the right arm of Lord Sri Ram² (58).

[Note—¹Sita has been called the “daughter of the earth” (dharāsutā) because, as per legend, she was found in a pitcher while king Janak was ploughing the land to clear it for the purpose of doing some fire sacrifice. See Baal Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 59-60 of Adhyatma Ramayan.

²The palpitation, fluttering or quivering of muscles on the left side of the body of a female is considered an auspicious omen; it's a good sign for her. But in the case of males, just the opposite is true—i.e. if the muscles of the left side of his body flutter it is regarded as an evil omen that does not portend good for him, but if the muscles of the right side flutter then it is a good omen for him.

Hence, the omen for Sita and Lord Ram was good as their left and right sides fluttered. But for Ravana the omen was bad as his left side fluttered.]

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे सुन्दरकाण्डे प्रथमः सर्गः ॥ १॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde sundarakāṇḍe
prathamah sargaḥ ॥ 1॥

Thus ends Canto 1 of Sundar Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and his divine consort Uma.

7.2.2: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 2:

Hanuman goes to the Ashok garden where Sita was held captive; Ravana threatens Sita:-

॥ द्वितीयः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

ततो जगाम हनुमान् लङ्कां परमशोभनाम् ।

रात्रौ सूक्ष्मतनुर्भूत्वा बभ्राम परितः पुरीम् ॥ १॥
 सीतान्वेषणकार्यार्थी प्रविवेश नृपालयम् । तत्र सर्वप्रदेशेषु विविच्य हनुमान् कपिः ॥ २॥
 नापश्यज्जानकीं स्मृत्वा ततो लङ्काभिभाषितम् ।
 जगाम हनुमान् शीघ्रमशोकवनिकां शुभाम् ॥ ३॥

॥ dvitīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥
 śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

tato jagāma hanumān laṅkāṃ paramaśobhanām । rātrau sūkṣmatanurbhūtvā babhrāma paritaḥ purīm ॥ 1॥ sītānveṣaṇakāryārthī praviveśa nṛpālayam । tatra sarvapradeśeṣu vivicya hanumān kapiḥ ॥ 2॥ nāpaśyajjānakīm smṛtvā tato laṅkābhibhāṣitam । jagāma hanumān śīghramaśokavanikāṃ śubhām ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! After that, Hanuman assumed a very miniature form, and entered the most majestic and magnificent city of Lanka during the night. He spent the night roaming around (in order to get an idea of the layout of the city as well as to reconnoiter) (1).

To find out about Sita, he entered the chief palace of Ravana. After a futile search, when he could not find Sita anywhere, he remembered the words of Lankini (see Canto 1, verse no. 55), and immediately went to the 'Ashok Van', a most charming and auspicious royal garden¹ within the precincts of Ravana's palace (2-3).

[Note—¹Ashok Van is described as being auspicious because Sita was sitting in it.]

सुरपादपसम्बाधां रत्नसोपानवापिकाम् ।
 नानापक्षिमृगाकीर्णां स्वर्णप्रासादशोभिताम् ॥ ४॥
 फलैरानमूशाखाग्रपादपैः परिवारिताम् ।
 विचिन्वन् जानकीं तत्र प्रतिवृक्षं मरुत्सुतः ॥ ५॥ ददर्शाभ्रंलिहं तत्र चैत्यप्रासादमुत्तमम् । दृष्ट्वा विस्मयमापन्नो मणिस्तम्भशतान्वितम् ॥ ६॥ surapādapasambādhāṃ ratnasopānavāpikām । nānāpakṣimṛgākīrṇāṃ svarṇaprāsādaśobhitām ॥ 4॥ phalairānamraśākhāgrapādapaiḥ parivāritām । vicinva jānakīm tatra prativr̥kṣaṃ marutsutaḥ ॥ 5॥ dadarśābhraṃlihaṃ tatra caityaprāsādamuttamam । dr̥ṣṭvā vismayamāpanno maṇistambhaśatānvitam ॥ 6॥

4-6. That magnificent 'forest' ("van"; a grove or garden) was full of (i.e. richly endowed with) wonderful evergreen trees like the 'Kalpa Tree'¹. The steps leading to its ponds were studded with priceless gems; numerous varieties of birds and animals were roaming in it with merriment; while its golden pavilions and cottages had such magnificent beauty that they had no parallel (4).

That fantastically charming grove or garden was surrounded by trees which were so heavily laden with fruits that their branches were bent under their weight.

Hanuman, the son of the wind god, searched for Sita under each tree (5), and finally saw a beautiful shrine-like structure. It was so high (i.e. its steeple was so high) that it touched the clouds, and even seemed to touch the sky itself!

Hanuman was in thrall of this wonderful sight; he was amazed and began to ponder—in wonderment at the sight of that magnificent building just described, and which had hundreds of pillars studded with gems—if there was something special to it as it attracted his attention² (6).

[Note—¹The ‘Kalpa Tree’ is an evergreen tree of heaven. In poetry and classical compositions, whenever an idea of a tree that is exceptionally magnificent and grand is to be conveyed, it is compared to the Kalpa Tree.

²Verse nos. 4-6 describe the beauty of the ‘Ashok Van’ in brief. It was the royal garden of Ravana, the king of Lanka, and thus was well tended and protected; it was used for his personal pleasure and entertainment.]

समतीत्य पुनर्गत्वा किञ्चिद्दूरं स मारुतिः । ददर्श शिंशपावृक्षमत्यन्तनिबिडच्छदम् ॥ ७॥
अदृष्टातपमाकीर्णं स्वर्णवर्णविहङ्गमम् ।
तन्मूले राक्षसीमध्ये स्थितां जनकनन्दिनीम् ॥ ८॥
ददर्श हनुमान् वीरो देवतामिव भूतले ।
एकवेणीं कृशां दीनां मलिनाम्बरधारिणीम् ॥ ९॥ samatītya punargatvā kiñciddūraṃ sa mārutiḥ । dadarśa śiṃśapāvṛkṣamatyantanibidacchadam ॥ 7॥ adrṣṭātapamākīrṇaṃ svarṇavarṇavihaṅgamam । tanmūle rākṣasīmadhye sthitāṃ janakanandinīm ॥ 8॥ dadarśa hanumān vīro devatāmiva bhūtale । ekaveṇīm kṛśāṃ dīnāṃ malināambaradhāriṇīm ॥ 9॥

7-9 When he moved a little ahead inside it, he saw a Shinshupa (Indian red wood) tree with a thick cover of foliage (7).

The sun’s light never penetrated this thick cover of leaves, and so it never reached the ground; the tree was full of birds that looked like being moulded from gold. At the bottom of this wondrous tree, there was the daughter of Janak (Sita), sitting there, surrounded by demonesses (8).

The brave and courageous Hanuman saw that even while sitting on the ground in a despondent and forlorn mood, Sita resembled none but a goddess. Her hairs had stuck together in a thick plait; she was very emaciated, weak and miserable; and she wore clothes that had become dirty and worn-out (9).

[Note—According to Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, Hanuman had not met Vibhishan prior to his meeting with Sita, as is the case narrated in Ram Charit Manas of Goswami Tulsidas, and about which we have already read in section 7.1.

Here, it was not Vibhishan who guided Hanuman to where Sita was to be found, but it was Lankini—refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 54-56.

This one instance proves why we have decided to read this classical “Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka” from different ancient classical texts, as there are many variations in the details of the way the main Story has been described by ancient authors, and by citing different texts and reading the relevant topics at one place we do certainly gain a better and more comprehensive understanding of the Story as a whole, as told from different angles and with different perspectives.]

भूमौ शयानां शोचन्तीं रामरामेति भाषिणीम् ।
 त्रातारं नाधिगच्छन्तीमुपवासकृशां शुभाम् ॥ १०॥
 शाखान्तच्छदमध्यस्थो ददर्श कपिकुञ्जरः ।
 कृतार्थोऽहं कृतार्थोऽहं दृष्ट्वा जनकनन्दिनीम् ॥ ११॥
 मयैव साधितं कार्यं रामस्य परमात्मनः । ततः किलकिलाशब्दो बभूवान्तःपुराद्बहिः ॥ १२॥ bhumau śayānāṃ śocantīm rāmarāmeti bhāṣiṇīm । trātāraṃ nādhigacchantīmupavāsakṛśāṃ śubhām ॥ 10॥ śākhāntacchadamadhyastho dadarśa kapikuñjaraḥ । kṛtārtho'haṃ kṛtārtho'haṃ dr̥ṣṭvā janakanandinīm ॥ 11॥ mayaiva sādhitam kāryam rāmasya paramātmanah । tataḥ kilakilāśabdo babhūvāntaḥpurādbahiḥ ॥ 12॥

10-12. Sita was lying on the ground in this miserable condition; she was most distressed, anguished, worried and remorseful; she constantly repeated the name of her beloved Lord, muttering silently “Ram, Ram”. She was very despondent and utterly hopeless, as she did not see any chance of help, succour and redemption from her torments coming her way. She had become very emaciated and weak due to fasting (as she had willingly abstained from taking food) (10).

Meanwhile, Hanuman, who was the best amongst his race of Kapis (or monkeys; “kapikuñjaraḥ”), hid himself in the leaves on the branches of the tree, and quietly observed her. He said to himself that he was most fortunate, lucky and privileged to have had the opportunity to see the divine form of goddess Janak-Nandani (Sita) today (11).

He felt blessed and thought to himself thus: 'I am so fortunate and the chosen one (or the lucky one) that the work of Lord Sri Ram, who is the Parmatma (the supreme Soul, the Lord God) himself personified, has been entrusted to me, and I have been able to do it successfully'.

Just about this time, a loud sound of boisterous women, chuckling and giggling in abundant merriment, came from inside the royal palace (of Ravana) (12).

किमेतदिति सँल्लीनो वृक्षपतेषु मारुतिः । आयातं रावणं तत्र स्त्रीजनैः परिवारितम् ॥ १३॥
 दशास्यं विंशतिभुजं नीलाञ्जनचयोपमम् । दृष्ट्वा विस्मयमापन्नः पत्रखण्डेष्वलीयत ॥ १४॥ kimetaditi saṁllīno vṛkṣapatreṣu mārutiḥ । āyāntaṁ rāvaṇaṁ tatra strījanaiḥ parivāritam ॥ 13॥ daśāśyaṁ viṁśatibhujam nīlāñjanacayopamam । dr̥ṣṭvā vismayamāpannaḥ patrakhaṇḍeṣvalīyata ॥ 14॥

13-14. Maruti (“māruti”; Hanuman)¹ wondered what that sound meant, and saw through the thick foliage that Ravana was coming there, accompanied by many women (13).

Seeing Ravana’s 10 heads (daśāśyaṁ), 20 arms (viṁśatibhujam), and an enormously huge black body which was like a gigantic mountain of ‘Kajjal’ (“nīlāñjanacayopamam”; literally, ‘black as soot’; thick soot that is mixed with oil and applied to the eyelids as an ointment), Hanuman was extremely amazed. He was astonished and full of wonder at Ravana’s awe-inspiring and most unconventional form that was colossal in size and fearsome in appearance². So he immediately retracted himself, and took care to properly conceal himself among the leaves (14).

[Note—¹Hanuman is called ‘Māruti’ because he is the son of the wind god, the “Marut”.

²Hanuman had never before seen such a creature—colossus, ugly, horrifying, an ogre-like fiend who was repulsive by all accounts. So the first sight of Ravana not only filled him with awe and amazement, but it also created a sort of fearful wonder in his heart—as it was this fiendish creature, by-the-bye, with whom he would have to deal by-and-by. This was, by and large, not too welcome a proposition!]

रावणो राघवेणाशु मरणं मे कथं भवेत् ।
 सितार्थमपि नायाति रामः किं कारणं भवेत् ॥ १५॥
 इत्येवं चिन्तयन्नित्यं राममेव सदा हृदि । तस्मिन् दिनेऽपररात्रौ रावणो राक्षसाधिपः ॥ १६॥
 स्वप्ने रामेण सन्दिष्टः कश्चिदागत्य वानरः । कामरूपधरः सूक्ष्मो वृक्षग्रस्थोऽनुपश्यति ॥ १७॥ rāvaṇo rāghaveṇāśu maraṇaṁ me kathaṁ bhavet । sītārthamapi nāyāti rāmaḥ kiṁ kāraṇaṁ bhavet ॥ 15॥ ityevaṁ cintayannityaṁ rāmameva sadā hṛdi । tasmin dine'pararātrau rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ ॥ 16॥ svapne rāmeṇa sandiṣṭaḥ kaścidaḡatya vānaraḥ । kāmarūpadharaḥ sūkṣmo vṛkṣagrastho'nupaśyati ॥ 17॥

15-17. Ravana was constantly wondering, internally, in his heart, as to when he would die at the hands of Raghav (Lord Sri Ram), and wondered why he (Lord Ram) has not yet come even for the sake of Sita!¹ (15).

In this manner, since he was constantly thinking of Lord Sri Ram in his heart, the king of demons, Ravana, had a dream late that night—that some monkey, who could assume any form that he wished, had brought a message from Lord Ram, and having assumed a miniature form, he was sitting on the branch of a tree and observing all the things that were going on around him (16-17).

[Note—¹Ravana had all along known, or had guessed rather very accurately, that Lord Sri Ram and Sita were no ordinary humans. His inner voice, the true voice of his consciousness, the voice of his 'Atma', kept telling him that his only chance of ever finding liberation from the evil body of a demon, and of finding deliverance, emancipation and salvation for himself, was now at hand; for if he missed this chance he would lose the golden opportunity forever—refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61.

This was the primary driving force that motivated Ravana to bring Sita, who was a personified form of the Mother Goddess, to Lanka, to ensure that Lord Ram, who himself was a personified form of the Supreme Being, would be constrained to come and kill him to free Sita. This 'killing' would free the soul, the 'spirit', of Ravana that was unfortunately trapped in the gross and evil body of a demon.

Ravana, privately and in the deep recesses of his heart, prayed earnestly and actually yearned for this liberation—because of late he was feeling that his soul was trapped and extremely tormented; he felt internally suffocated by the stranglehold that the sins and misdeeds that he had committed over the course of his eventful life had cast on his soul. His Atma, his 'true self', was virtually ensnared and tied in fetters from which it seems difficult for it to break free. This shackle could be broken and his Atma could be liberated only if Ravana's evil body could be ruptured so as to create a means that would allow his soul to escape from its prison.

But this meant, in practical terms, that his gross body had to be 'punctured' somehow by arrows shot by Lord Ram, as the Lord was the only one who was empowered to achieve this singularly difficult feat because Ravana had acquired so many powerful boons that had shielded his body to such an extent that a powerful force strong enough to rupture this virtually impregnable shield would alone be able to create a 'split' through which his Atma could escape to freedom, almost like 'air escaping from a punctured tyre or a punctured balloon'.

That is why, as we see here, Ravana was so eager to face Lord Sri Ram as soon as possible, to precipitate a stand-off with him in connection with his stealing Sita and refusing to give her back to the Lord, which was sure to lead a confrontation and his killing at the hands of the Lord.

So we observe that this verse, as many others, clearly show that Ravana had kidnapped Sita not with the intention to satisfy his lust or passion, or that he had any amorous designs on her, but because he saw in this plan a medium, an excuse, by which he would be able to get rid of his evil body and free himself from the fetters that tied his soul to it.

In this context, the reader can also refer to Adhyatma Ramayan's (i) Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61; Canto 6, verse 30-35; Canto 7, verse 65; (ii) Lanka Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 44-47; Canto 10, verse 55-61 and (iii) Uttar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 31-42.

To wit, though universally condemned and decried as a devilish creature, a ‘demon’, Ravana’s ‘true self’—which was his Atma, his pure consciousness, his soul—was actually very pure and holy. Ravana, in reality, was an unfortunate creature whose soul became trapped inside an evil body.

So, it was Ravana’s gross physical body that was ‘devilish or demonic’, but not his ‘true self’. Unfortunately, since the world recognizes an individual only by his physical body rather than by his ‘real self’ in the form of his Atma, which is pure, holy and untainted ‘consciousness’—simply because the physical body of a creature is visible, whilst his ‘true self’, that is pure consciousness and known as the Atma, is invisible—Ravana was always derided and treated with contempt by one and all as a vile and sinful being.]

इति दृष्ट्वाद्भुतं स्वप्नं स्वात्मन्येवानुचिन्त्य सः ।

स्वप्नः कदाचित्सत्यः स्यादेवं तत्र करोम्यहम् ॥ १८॥

जानकीं वाक्शरैर्विद्ध्वा दुःखितां नितरामहम् ।

करोमि दृष्ट्वा रामाय निवेदयतु वानरः ॥ १९॥

iti dr̥ṣṭvādbhutam svapnam svātmanyevānucintya saḥ ।

svapnaḥ kadācitsatyah syādevaṁ tatra karomyaham ॥ 18॥

jānakīm vākśarairviddhvā duḥkhitāṁ nitarāmaham ।

karomi dr̥ṣṭvā rāmāya nivedayatu vānarah ॥ 19॥

18-19. When he (Ravana) saw this strange and mysterious dream, he thought to himself, 'May be this dream is true. So, if that is the case, I must do one thing (18). I must reproach and verbally torment Sita in harsh words so that she becomes extremely distressed, agitated and miserable. As a result, that monkey (who must be hiding somewhere nearby, as per the dream, in the tree) would hear all that, and he would go back and tell Lord Sri Ram all about it¹ (19).

[Note—¹These verses explain, in certain terms, why Ravana became so threatening towards Sita. He wished to bring this episode to an end as quickly as possible. He thought that when the messenger of Lord Ram would see him bullying Sita fiercely, he is sure to go and report it to the Lord, most probably by adding something on his own to make the report more dramatic, and this would force Lord Ram to hurry to her rescue, which in turn would mean that his own soul would be freed at the earliest, as definitely Lord Ram’s coming to Lanka would lead to a war, and in this war the Lord would kill him.

So we see that Ravana’s aggressive attitude towards Sita was only for show; his angry behaviour towards her was meant for Hanuman’s eyes and ears only, for when the latter observes this and makes his report to Lord Ram upon his return, it would fit in perfectly with Ravana’s plan for seeking liberation and deliverance of his soul by being killed by Lord Ram!

To wit, the harsh words that he used to threaten Sita with were not actually what he meant to do, nor were they intended to torment her in any way, but they were part of his well thought out strategy for the redemption of his own tormented soul.]

इत्येवं चिन्तयन् सीतासमीपमगमद्भुतम् ।
 नूपुराणां किङ्किणीनां श्रुत्वा शिञ्जितमङ्गना ॥ २०॥
 सीता भीता लीयमाना स्वात्मन्येव सुमध्यमा । अधोमुख्यशूनयना स्थिता रामार्पितान्तरा ॥ २१॥ ityevaṃ cintayan sītāsamīpamagamaddrutam । nūpurāṇāṃ kiṅkiṇīnāṃ śrutvā śiñjitamaṅganā ॥ 20॥ sītā bhītā liyamānā svātmanyeva sumadhyamā । adhomukhyaśrunayanā sthitā rāmārpitāntarā ॥ 21॥

20-21. Deciding thus, he immediately hastened to where Sita was. Hearing the sound of the anklets and bracelets (worn by Ravana's women), the auspicious Sita (20) became scared. She shrunk herself as much as she physically and practically could, and with legs drawn in, she sat there with a lowered face (and her sight fixed on the ground before her). Her eyes were filled with tears even as she focused her heart on the thoughts of Lord Sri Ram (21).

रावणोऽपि तदा सीतामालोक्याह सुमध्यमे ।
 मां दृष्ट्वा किं वृथा सुभ्रु स्वात्मन्येव विलीयसे ॥ २२॥
 रामो वनचराणां हि मध्ये तिष्ठति सानुजः ।
 कदाचिद्दृश्यते कैश्चित्कदाचिन्नैव दृश्यते ॥ २३॥
 मया तु बहुधा लोकाः प्रेषितास्तस्य दर्शने । न पश्यन्ति प्रयत्नेन वीक्षमाणाः समन्ततः ॥ २४॥ rāvaṇo'pi tadā sītāmālokyāha sumadhyame । māṃ dr̥ṣtvā kiṃ vṛthā subhru svātmanyeva viliyase ॥ 22॥ rāmo vanacarāṇāṃ hi madhye tiṣṭhati sānujaḥ । kadācidr̥śyate kaiścitkadācinnaiva dr̥śyate ॥ 23॥ mayā tu bahudhā lokāḥ preṣitāstasya darśane । na paśyanti prayatnena vīkṣamāṇāḥ samantataḥ ॥ 24॥

22-24. Seeing Sita, Ravana said, 'Oh the one with an attractive waist (sumadhyame) and beautiful eye brows (subhru)¹! Why do you unnecessarily shrivel (shrink, shirk) so much on seeing me? (22).

Lord Ram stays with his brother among the forest dwellers. He is visible to some and invisible to others². (23)*

I had sent so many messengers to see where he is (and bring information about him) but inspite of looking around carefully everywhere, they could not see (find) him³. (24)

[Note—¹Sita was already in a very miserable and emaciated condition. See verse nos. 8-10. So, by no means can she appear attractive and handsome as this verse implies. Hence, these lascivious words used by Ravana to describe her in verse no. 22 are just to tease her.

*Further, verse nos. 23-28 which we shall read now have a double meaning. On the face of it, Ravana appears to criticize, deride, pour scorn at and ridicule Lord Ram so as to tease and mentally torment Sita further, but read in the context of verse nos. 15-19 herein above, all these verses assume a completely different connotation.

So we shall read these verses, nos. 23-28, from two perspectives: one would be a literal meaning, a more mundane interpretation of what Ravana wishes to tell Sita, and the other would be an interpretation of his words from a spiritual angle to convey what he actually meant, and what his real intent was.

²Verse no. 23 = “Lord Ram lives among hermits, sages and ascetics. Some can see him in his true, supreme form as the cosmic Consciousness known as the Parmatma while meditating upon him, while others can't see this sublime form, and are therefore contented by seeing the Lord's physical form known as ‘Ram’, the prince of Ayodhya and the husband of Sita.”

³Verse no. 24 = “I had tried to fix or divert my sense organs as well as my mind, intellect and heart towards him whom I know to be the Parmatma, the Supreme Being, but was never even once successful. I couldn't fix myself on his true form; I could not meditate and concentrate my mind and intellect on the Lord. So unfortunately, I could not attain enlightenment, emancipation and salvation.”]

किं करिष्यसि रामेण निःस्पृहेण सदा त्वयि ।
त्वया सदातिङ्गितोऽपि समीपस्थोऽपि सर्वदा ॥ २५॥
हृदयेऽस्य न च स्नेहस्त्वयि रामस्य जायते । त्वत्कृतान् सर्वभोगांश्च त्वद्गुणानपि राघवः ॥ २६॥ kiṃ kariṣyasi rāmeṇa niḥsprheṇa sadā tvayi । tvayā sadāliṅgito'pi samīpastho'pi sarvadā ॥ 25॥ hr̥daye'sya na ca snehastvayi rāmasya jāyate । tvatkṛtān sarvabhogāṃśca tvadguṇānapi rāghavaḥ ॥ 26॥

25-26. What have you got to do with Sri Ram now? He always remains indifferent and apathetic towards you, inspite of the fact that he always lived with you, and was embraced by you. (25)

So it is obvious that he cannot (or does not) have affection for you because he hasn't bothered about you till now, and seems to have forgotten you completely, though he had had a lot of comfort when he was in your company, and surely he must have enjoyed it, especially when you are endowed with so many excellent qualities (that should have been enough for a man to go mad once he lost a wife like you). (26)

[Note—As we have observed in the note of verse nos. 23-24 herein above, Ravana's words can be interpreted in two ways. One is the ordinary literal way, and the other is from a spiritual perspective.

The first interpretation of verse nos. 25-26 is that Ravana tries to convince Sita that Lord Ram, for whom she longs so much and to whom she is so devoted, seems not to reciprocate a similar emotion for her, because so many days have passed and he seems indifferent for her loss. Lord Ram remains hidden somewhere out of fear from her abductors, lest they should find him and get rid of him; so he has not ventured out to make efforts to find her. Therefore, why is she wasting her time on her husband who is not bothered about her in the least? It makes no sense.

To wit, in this way, Ravana was trying to distract Sita's attention and sway her away from Lord Ram.

The other interpretation of Ravana's words has a metaphysical import. He wonders that though the 'Maha-Maya', i.e. the great cosmic powers of the Lord that magically creates delusions, and which is represented by Sita, always stays in close proximity of the Supreme Being known as 'Brahm', how has it now become possible that they are separated? No, it's not possible, and the true reason is something else. What then is it? True meaning of this separation of Lord Ram and Sita is that though the Supreme Being represented by Lord Ram had lived in close proximity with Maya or delusions of worldly relations and attachments represented by Sita, his wife, yet he remained immune to all gross worldly influences, attachments to material comforts, and attractions of the sense objects in this world. The Lord remained detached and dispassionate even though he seemed to show great affection to his wife; he is a true ascetic who has renounced everything related to this mundane world. But as he is the supreme Lord of the world, he is surely aware of his responsibilities, which means that sooner or later he will come to free Sita who is his great devotee, as she constantly remembers the Lord inspite of the greatest difficulties she faces and the greatest adversities she finds herself in.]

भुञ्जानोऽपि न जानाति कृताघ्नो निर्गुणोऽधमः ।
त्वमानीता मया साध्वी दुःखशोकसमाकुला ॥ २७॥
इदानीमपि नायाति भक्तिहीनः कथं व्रजेत् । निःसत्त्वो निर्ममो मानी मूढः पण्डितमानवान् ॥ २८॥ bhuñjāno'pi na jānāti kṛtaghno nirguṇo'dhamah । tvamānītā mayā sādhvī duḥkhaśokasamākulā ॥ 27॥ idānīmapi nāyāti bhaktihīnaḥ katham vrajet । niḥsattvo nirmamo mānī mūḍhaḥ paṇḍitamānavān ॥ 28॥

27-28. Though he (Lord Ram) had enjoyed everything, he is so thankless and ungrateful (kṛtaghno), so dumb and lacking in good manners (nirguṇo), as well as so lowly and mean ('dhamah) that he never bothers to remember them and those who were instrumental in providing him those pleasures and enjoyments.

Look, I have kidnapped you (tvamānītā mayā), you are his chaste, loyal and honourable wife (sādhvī), and there is no doubt that you feel greatly tormented and feel confounded by sorrows, distresses and troubles (duḥkhaśokasamākulā)¹ (27).

Inspite of all this, he has still not come to provide you any relief from your miseries, and he has not made any effort yet to take you back (idānīmapi nāyāti). How can he come when he has no affection for you, when he is not devoted to you (bhaktihīnaḥ katham vrajet)?

He is absolutely inept and incapable of doing anything (niḥsattvo); he is devoid of all compassion for he seems to be heartless, cruel and merciless (nirmamo). He surely seems to be very proud, arrogant and haughty (mānī). And though truly he is an utterly foolish person and a dud-head (mūḍhaḥ), yet he thinks himself to be very sagacious, wise and intelligent (pañḍitamānavān)²’ (28)

[Note—¹The other way this verse can be interpreted from metaphysical angle is this: “The supreme Lord does not regard himself as the one who does anything, or involves himself in enjoying anything. Similarly, he is the destroyer of deeds done together with their fruits, is without any of the three qualities of Sata, Raja and Tama, and is most humble inspite of being the Supreme Being and only Lord of the world.”

²The other way this verse too can be interpreted is this: “He, Lord Ram, is not attached to or infatuated with Maya (delusions of having enduring relations in a world that is known to be mortal and transient; delusions that lead to worldly attachments, infatuations and involvements) which you (Sita) represent as a personified form of ‘Maha-Maya’, the ‘great delusion’. The proof of this is that he has paid no attention to ‘you’. To wit, since Lord Ram is a true renunciate, since he is an enlightened and self-realised Being, he is not at all attached to the material world for he knows that this world is mortal and transient, and therefore he is not concerned about the many artificial relationships that exist in this world.

He has not here to me, he has not come to Lanka as he believes that I am attracted to Maya (worldly delusions and attachments to sensual things of this world of sense objects) that is represented by you (Sita). Truly, Lord Ram has neglected me too because of you, and I could not be entirely devoted to him nor could I worship him with all my heart because I am attracted to you, because I worship and adore you, and you are Maya personified! These two opposite situations—one of being attracted to Maya, and the other being devoted to the Supreme Being—do not tally with each other. That is why Lord Ram cannot enter my heart till the time you, the Maya, has sway over it.

He, being a personified form of Brahm, the Supreme Being, is without any attributes and worldly emotions, and he remains neutral towards all worldly things. But since he is neutral and dispassionate, since he shows no emotions and involvement in worldly affairs, he appears to be arrogant and proud to those who are fools and have no deep knowledge of who Lord Ram actually is, nor have they any knowledge of the eclectic principles of metaphysics and theology as enunciated in the Upanishads which would enlighten them about the reality of Lord Ram. Hence, to such dumb persons Lord Ram too appears to be dumb, but in actual fact, the Lord is most sagacious, erudite, wise, intelligent and enlightened.”

Verse nos. 23-28 are fine examples of statements in ancient scriptures that have a dual meaning—they appear to say one thing but mean another thing that is altogether different from it; they have a meaning that is quite the opposite of the literal meaning of the words used.

In the present context, what Ravana says in these verses puts him in a very bad spotlight; he seems to be an evil and lascivious creature who is teasing Sita by trying his best to denounce and demean Lord Ram in front of her, trying to convince her that the Lord is unfaithful to her, that he is an incompetent husband who has no love or compassion for her, and that he neither has manliness nor the wish to come and free her. It appears to be a clear attempt on his part to sway Sita’s loyalties away from Lord Ram, and at the same time to test her mettle, her internal strength, her character, and her loyalty towards the Lord. This view will be all the more evident when we read the next verse nos. 29-30 herein below.

But a deeper insight into the hidden meaning of what Ravana says, and a better understanding of him, would elevate him to a high pedestal of a person who is philosophically inclined and well versed in the knowledge of metaphysics as enunciated in the Upanishads. We must remember in the first instance that he had brought Sita with a clear mind that he wished to attain liberation and deliverance by getting killed at the hands of Lord Ram, and that he had regarded her as his mother. This fact is clearly mentioned in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61, and Canto 7, verse no. 65 respectively.

Indeed, if one understands, in the right context, about what Ravana wishes to convey, one would realize that he was an intellectually enlightened being who had a high level of spiritual understanding—for he knew that Lord Ram is not a human being and neither is Sita his worldly wife, but they are the personified forms of great cosmic powers that are described in the Upanishads dedicated to them—viz. the Ram Tapini Upanishad, Ram Rahasya Upanishad, and Sita Upanishad. Incidentally, and just to mention in the passing, a detailed English rendering of these Upanishads, with explanations, have been done by the author of this present Book.]

नराधमं त्वद्विमुखं किं करिष्यसि भामिनि ।
त्वय्यतीव समासक्तं मां भजस्वासुरोत्तमम् ॥ २९॥
देवगन्धर्वनागानां यक्षकिन्नरयोषिताम् । भविष्यसि नियोक्त्री त्वं यदि मां प्रतिपद्यसे ॥ ३०॥ narādhamaṃ tvadvimukhaṃ kiṃ kariṣyasi bhāmini । tvayyatīva samāsaktaṃ māṃ bhajasvāsurottamam ॥ 29॥ devagandharvanāgānāṃ yakṣakinnarayoṣitām । bhaviṣyasi niyoktrī tvam yadi māṃ pratipadyase ॥ 30॥

29-30. Oh noble woman (bhāmini)! What have you got to do with that lowly man (narādhamaṃ) who is indifferent to you? Look! I, who, is the best among the demons, have great affection for you. So you must accept me (29).

If you remain under me, you shall rule over the women of the Gods, the Gandharvas (celestial musicians), Naags (subterranean creatures; literally, legendary serpents), Yakshas (mythological demi-Gods), and Kinnars (celestials dancers and singers in heaven).

[To wit, if you accept to be one of my women, to become my companion, I can assure you that you shall have a special status. Don't you know that the greatest powers in creation, even the so-called mighty Gods who live in the heaven, and their junior brethrens such as the many Gandharvas, Naagas, Yakshas and Kinnars—all of them pay their homage to me, all of them are under my influence. So therefore, by accepting me and getting the honour of being called my woman, my companion, you will be entitled to great and unparalleled privileges which you can never expect to have by being Sri Ram's partner. Make your choice; decide which is best for you.]¹ (30).

[Note—¹We see here that Ravana is trying to seduce Sita and tempt her to abandon Lord Ram, and join him as his partner instead. But as we have noted earlier, this was a method employed by Ravana to test Sita's character and loyalty. It was an outwardly show though, for internally he had great respect for her, and he saw in her a means of deliverance from his evil and sinful existence as a demon, for he knew that sooner or later Lord Ram is sure to come to free her, and that would definitely lead to a war as he would refuse to give her back, and in that war it was sure that Lord Ram would kill him. This in turn would ensure his liberation and deliverance. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61; and Canto 7, verse no. 65.]

रावणस्य वचः श्रुत्वा सीताऽमर्षसमन्विता । उवाचाधोमुखी भूत्वा निधाय तृणमन्तरे ॥ ३१॥
राघवाद्भिभ्यता नूनं भिक्षुरूपं त्वया धृतम् । रहिते राघवाभ्यां त्वं शुनीव हविरध्वरे ॥ ३२॥ rāvaṇasya vacaḥ śrutvā sītā'marṣasamanvitā । uvācādhomukhī bhūtvā nidhāya tṛṇamantare ॥ 31॥ rāghavādbibhyatā nūnaṁ bhikṣurūpaṁ tvayā dhṛtam । rahite rāghavābhyāṁ tvam śunīva haviradhvare ॥ 32॥

31-32. Hearing these most reprehensible, outrageously contemptuous and sarcastic words of Ravana that insulted Lord Ram, Sita felt very indignant, vexed, angry and appalled. She bent her head in disgust and great dismay, and keeping a blade of grass in between her and Ravana, she said indignantly (31),

'Oh you wretch; you are indeed a vile and lowly fellow (tvayā dhṛtam) who has no shame worth the while! There is no doubt in it that you became a mendicant (at the time of abducting me) because you were extremely frightened of Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) and dared not come in his presence, and when he and his brother were absent from the hermitage, you took me away stealthily like a dog would steal the offering made to a fire sacrifice when it finds the place unattended¹ (32).

[Note—¹A hungry dog greedily eyes the food and other offerings that are placed near the fire lit for a religious sacrifice. The dog hides somewhere, looking at the offerings greedily, and as soon as it finds that the priest and other attendants are absent, it quietly sneaks in, extremely nervous, crouching, tail drawn in between its hind legs which are bent at the knees, neck bending down so that the mouth almost grazes the ground, and so terrified at the prospect of being discovered and caught, which would mean certain trashing, that it quickly grabs whatever it can manage to do and scampers out in the greatest of haste.

Sita says that the way Ravana had abducted her was very similar to it. He did not dare to come near the hermitage of Lord Ram while he and his brother Laxman were there, but as soon as he saw that they had gone out to pursue the deer, which was actually a demon named Marich in this form, and whom Ravana himself had planted to lure the two brothers away from the hermitage, he disguised himself as a mendicant to come and kidnap Sita. Once he managed to get hold of her, he scampered away nervously like a terrified dog, for he was frightened that if Lord Ram and Laxman came back to the hermitage before he managed to escape from there, then all hell would break loose for him, and it was sure that he would be slayed instantly.

Sita sternly rebukes Ravana; her comparing him to a dog and reminding him of the way he abducted her disguised as a mendicant for he was too frightened to reveal his true identity before her, was in answer to Ravana calling Lord Ram a virtual coward and an incompetent man.

Said she: “Oh you rascal and a coward! If you are as brave, courageous and powerful as you claim to be so much so that you have subdued even the mighty gods of heaven and other powerful forces in creation, say then why did you not boldly come and ask my beloved Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman that you wish to give them a fight because you wish to bring me to Lanka and keep me here? Well, you could then have defeated them in battle and proudly bring me as a trophy of victory, and then surely you had the right to claim that I am your slave or property. But you acted like that wretched dog which steals the offerings of a fire sacrifice surreptitiously, and then flees, as fast as it can, for its life with a morsel that it can grab in its mouth lest it would be caught in the act and thrashed fiercely, and even be killed. Is this your manliness; is this your valour and courage? Shame to you a million times! Forsooth, you have proved to me that you aren’t worthy of even looking at, and truly you are a ‘diabolical demon’ by all counts.”

In this context, this author recollects what Athos, one of the three musketeer friends whose real name was Count de la Fere, had said to Lady de Winter, whose true name was Anne de Breuil, a fiendish, devilish, selfish woman lacking any of the softness characteristic of women, whose eyes could “dart lightening” and who could “growl like a savage beast”, and with her “hairs disheveled she was like the very appalling image of Terror”, a criminal who was “branded on her shoulder by the executioner”, in Alexandre Dumas’ “The Three Musketeers”, Chapter 45, when he encounters her. Athos had exclaimed: “You are a demon let loose upon the earth. Your power is great, I know; but you know, also, that, with God’s assistance, men have overcome the most terrible demon.”

Sita tells Ravana that he might be a most powerful being as he claims himself to be, but after all he is a fiendish ‘demon’, and even if Lord Ram is an ‘ordinary human being’ with so many faults that Ravana dares to insinuate against him, then let him be ware that this very ‘ordinary human being’ would soon be the one who will be his nemesis, who will kill him.]

हतवानसि मां नीच तत्फलं प्राप्स्यसेऽविरात् ।
यदा रामशराघातविदारितवपुर्भवान् ॥ ३३॥
ज्ञास्यसेऽमानुषं रामं गमिष्यसि यमान्तिकम् ।
समुद्रं शोषयित्वा वा शरैर्बद्ध्वाथ वारिधिम् ॥ ३४॥
हन्तुं त्वां समरे रामो लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितः । आगमिष्यत्यसन्देहो द्रक्ष्यसे राक्षसाधम ॥ ३५॥ hṛtavānasi māṃ nīca tatphalaṃ prāpsyase'cirāt । yadā rāmaśarāghātavidāritavapurbhavān ॥ 33॥ jñāsyase'mānuṣaṃ rāmaṃ gamiṣyasi yamāntikam । samudraṃ śoṣayitvā vā śarairbaddhvātha vāridhim ॥ 34॥ hantum tvāṃ samare rāmo lakṣmaṇena samanvitaḥ । āgamiṣyatyasandeho drakṣyase rākṣasādhama ॥ 35॥

33-35. You shall very soon get reward (or rather punishment) for your deeds. You shall be pierced by the rain symbolizing Lord Ram's arrows that would fall on you (33), and this would lead you to hell. [To wit, when you die by being struck by a hail of Lord Ram's sharp arrows, there is no other place but hell where you shall go.]

It will be then that you would realize that he (Lord Ram) is not an ordinary human. [You are so confident of your invincibility and you feel that you are free from death because of the many boons which you extracted from Brahma by the virtue of doing severe penances, that when you will die at the hands of Lord Ram it is only then that you will realize that he is no ordinary man as you make him out to be. For, can a human being kill such a mighty and powerful person as you claim to be, a person who claims to have subdued even the mighty gods of heaven, and lord over them with impunity?]

The ocean would either be dried up or a bridge would be built over it by the arrows (of Lord Sri Ram and Laxman). [You think that the ocean would protect you. You think that your fort is well protected and secured by a moat symbolized by the ocean which makes all access to Lanka impossible. So wait and behold; the same ocean would be bridged by Lord Ram, a feat no human can achieve. And you will sit here biting your nails in frustration, for you will not be able to stop Lord Ram crossing the ocean on this bridge. Come, let me see how mighty and able you are, and how imbecile, incapable and incompetent Lord Ram is, when that happens.] (34).

Oh wretch; oh you most lowly and vile demon (rākṣasādhama)! There is no doubt that you will soon see (discover) that Lord Sri Ram, accompanied by Laxman, will come to kill you in the battle (that will follow after Lord Ram's arrival here) (35).

त्वां सपुत्रं सहबलं हत्वा नेष्यति मां पुरम् ॥
 श्रुत्वा रक्षःपतिः क्रुद्धो जानक्याः परुषाक्षरम् ॥ ३६॥
 वाक्यं क्रोधसमाविष्टः खड्गमुद्यम्य सत्वरः । हन्तुं जनकराजस्य तनयां ताम्रलोचनः ॥ ३७॥

tvām saputram sahabalam hatvā neṣyati mām puram ॥ śrutvā rakṣaḥpatiḥ kruddho jānakyaḥ paruṣākṣaram ॥ 36॥ vākyaṁ krodhasamāviṣṭaḥ khaḍgamudyamya satvaraḥ । hantum janakarājasya tanayām tāmralocanaḥ ॥ 37॥

36-37. He will kill you, along with your sons and your army (of whom you are so proud), and then take me back to his city (Ayodhya).¹

Hearing these stern words of rebuke and chastisement from Janki (Sita), the demon king Ravana became furious with anger (36).

His eyes became red with rage, and he pulled out his sword to kill the daughter of Janak (Sita) (37).

[Note—¹A very interesting question arises here: Why could Sita not see through Ravana's words and understand their hidden meaning like we have tried to interpret them previously. Why did she saw only the worldly side of his utterances instead of viewing them from a spiritual and metaphysical perspective? Had this been the case, she would have realized that Ravana did not actually mean to harm her, that whatever he was doing was only for external show for he had great respect for Lord Ram internally, and that, therefore, she need not fear from him. Why then would she curse him as vehemently as she did; she wouldn't have called him a 'dog' (verse no. 32); she would not have behaved as a terrified prisoner who is on the edge of death, not eating anything and becoming emaciated and hopeless; she would not have spent her days weeping and brooding in a most despondent manner.

Well, the answer is this: We have read that before Ravana kidnapped Sita, Lord Ram had kept her in the safe custody of the Fire God; what was left to represent Sita was merely her shadow, called 'Maya Sita', or a form that was so surreal that it gave the impression that it was the real Sita, but which was actually a delusion—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 1-4.

But this secret was not even known to Laxman, and hence no one else can be expected to be aware of it. So, when Ravana brought Sita to Lanka he had thought that he was taking away the real Sita, but it was a delusion that befuddled him. Since 'this Sita' was a creation of Maya, a delusory form of the 'real Sita', it follows that this artificial form cannot have the same level of understanding, intelligence, erudition and wisdom that the original Sita had. This is the primary and the obvious reason why the Sita to whom Ravana made his overtures and threatening gestures could not see behind the external façade, and was misled by what was said at its face value.]

मन्दोदरी निवार्याह पतिं पतिहिते रता ।

त्यजैनां मानुषीं दीनां दुःखितां कृपणां कृशाम् ॥ ३८॥

देवगन्धर्वनागानां बह्व्यः सन्ति वराङ्गनाः ।

त्वामेव वरयन्त्युत्त्वैर्मदमतविलोचनाः ॥ ३९॥ mandodari nivāryāha patiṃ patihite ratā । tyajaināṃ mānuṣīṃ dīnāṃ duḥkhitāṃ kṛpaṇāṃ kṛśām ॥ 38॥

devagandharvanāgānāṃ bahvyaḥ santi varāṅganāḥ ।

tvāmeva varayantyuccairmadamattavilocanāḥ ॥ 39॥

38-39. Then Mandodari (the wife of Ravana and the chief queen of Lanka)—who was always eager to protect the interest of her husband (nivāryāha patiṃ patihite ratā)—intervened.

She stopped her husband (from taking any rash step in anger), and said, 'Oh my dear husband! Leave aside this woman who is already so distressed and in an extremely miserable condition. See, she is so emaciated and weak, full of sorrows, overcome with anguish, and feels highly tormented (38).

There are so many attractive, passionate and youthful women who are proud of their beauty, who have great charm and lustful eyes, belonging to the Gods, Gandharvas and Naags who are only too eager and anxious to accept you. [So why do you insist on this poor and miserable woman who is not a suitable match for you at all?]¹ (39).

[Note—¹We see here that Mandodari has come to the rescue of Sita. One reason for this is that Mandodari being a woman herself, and one who had noble thoughts, may have been driven by pity at Sita's miserable condition; and the other reason, also most probable, is that she felt that her husband Ravana was exceptionally enamoured of Sita, and should he be allowed to have his ways then his attention would be more focused on Sita, and this would mean that he would start neglecting Mandodari. Of course, then, Mandodari would not like this situation to prevail.

Another important point to note here is this, and it shows Ravana is a very positive light indeed: He never approached Sita alone while she was held captive in Lanka; here he was accompanied by his wife and other ladies of his household—apropos: verse no. 20 herein above. Had he wanted so, no one could have prevented him from going to Sita alone, either in the dead of night or in broad daylight, with an order to the guards to go away. This is a clear sign that he actually did not mean any harm to her, and neither did he have any ill intentions towards Sita.

Then, if this is the case, why did he behave like a person driven by lust, threatening Sita if she did not yield to his overtures, and using so many provocative words against Lord Ram? The answer lies in Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 15-19. Ravana did everything with the sole purpose of fulfilling his last wish to get killed by Lord Ram, and thereby attain deliverance, emancipation and salvation. He had a dream that a monkey has been sent as a messenger by Lord Ram, and so he urgently decided to act in such a way that would seem extraordinarily rude and threatening for Sita, with the sole intent that this messenger would observe all the proceedings and go back to report to Lord Ram about the dangers that Sita faces, which in turn would make the Lord take quick actions to come to Lanka to rescue her, and which in its own turn would provide a mean for Ravana to first have a divine glimpse of the Supreme Being from close quarters and feel blessed, and then to die at his hands so that his Atma, his soul, could make its easy exit from his evil body of a demon, to find eternal freedom and beatitude for itself.]

ततोऽब्रवीदशग्रीवो राक्षसीर्विकृताननाः ।
 यथा मे वशगा सीता भविष्यति सकामना ।
 तथा यतध्वं त्वरितं तर्जनादरणादिभिः ॥ ४०॥
 द्विमासाभ्यन्तरे सीता यदि मे वशगा भवेत् । तदा सर्वसुखोपेता राज्यं भोक्ष्यति सा मया ॥ ४१॥
 यदि मासद्वयादूर्ध्वं मच्छय्यां नाभिनन्दति । तदा मे प्रातराशाय हत्वा कुरुत मानुषीम् ॥ ४२॥ tato'bravīddaśagrīvo rākṣasīrvikṛtānanāḥ । yathā me vaśagā sītā bhaviṣyati sakāmanā । tathā yatadhvaṃ tvaritaṃ tarjanādaraṇādibhiḥ ॥ 40॥ dvimāsābhyantare sītā yadi me vaśagā bhavet । tadā sarvasukhopetā rājyaṃ bhokṣyati sā mayā ॥ 41॥ yadi māsadvayādūrdhvaṃ macchayyāṃ nābhinandati । tadā me prātarāśāya hatvā kuruta mānuṣīm ॥ 42॥

40-42. Then the 10-headed Ravana ordered many demonesses who had terrifying appearances, frightening demeanours, and whose bodies created horror in those who beheld them as they were so dreadful and fiendish (rākṣasīrvikṛtānanāḥ), 'Oh demonesses! Do such things (i.e. try all those methods) by which Sita gets attracted towards me, and comes under my control and influence—either out of fear of her life, or due to respect for my greatness, or to protect her honour (40).

If she comes under my control and yields to me within two months (dvimāsābhyantare)¹ then she will not only enjoy the privileges of our great kingdom of Lanka but shall also be granted all sorts of happiness and comfort that would be hers for the asking (41).

On the other hand, if she does not accept to come to my bed (“yadi macchayyām nābhinandati”; to become my wife) within these two months (māsadvayādūrdhvaṃ), then kill this human being (hatvā kuruta mānuṣīm), and serve her for my breakfast (tadā me prātarāśāya)² (42).

[Note—¹In Tulsidas’ “Ram Charit Manas”, Ravana has given a time limit of one month to Sita to accept his proposal of surrender—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 10.

Besides the time frame, there is also a difference in the way Ravana threatens to kill Sita. In Ram Charit Manas he says he would kill her himself by using his sword, but here in Adhyatma Ramayan he orders his female demons, who were his valets, to kill her themselves, and make a breakfast of her for him!

As we have noted earlier while outlining the reasons for citing different scriptural texts to narrate this wonderful Story, there are many variations in the way the main Story is told, such as this example where Sita is given ‘one month’ time in Ram Charit Manas, and ‘two months’ time in Adhyatma Ramayan, and also the way she would be killed if she did not yield.

²The demons were flesh-eating ogres; they relished eating human flesh. So in order to terrify Sita and compel her to surrender to his wishes he threatens her that he would get her killed and cooked for breakfast.

Imagine what effect this ugly statement would have on Hanuman who was listening to all the proceedings from behind the leaves of the tree where he hid himself. He must have trembled by shock at the very words of Ravana that he heard; he must have clenched his teeth and bit his lips in disgust, and somehow restrained himself from jumping down and twisting Ravana’s ten heads right then because he wished to act prudently as yet he had not introduced himself to Sita, and any rash action on his part might spoil the whole plan.

But surely Hanuman had firmly resolved that before he left Lanka he would teach Ravana the bitterest lesson of his life to avenge for the way he behaved with Sita. And surely enough, it was the main motivation that led him to burn Lanka by-and-by.]

इत्युक्त्वा प्रययौ स्त्रीभि रवणोऽन्तःपुरालयम् ।
रक्षस्यो जानकीमेत्य भीषयन्त्यः स्वतर्जनैः ॥ ४३॥
तत्रैका जानकीमाह यौवनं ते वृथा गतम् । रवणेन समासाद्य सफलं तु भविष्यति ॥ ४४॥

ityuktvā prayayau strībhī rāvaṇo'ntaḥpurālayam । rākṣasyo jānakīmetya bhīṣayantyaḥ svatarjanaiḥ ॥ 43॥ tatraikā jānakīmāha yauvanam te vṛthā gatam । rāvaṇena samāsādya saphalam tu bhaviṣyati ॥ 44॥

43-44. Saying this, Ravana went back to his palace along with his women, whilst the demonesses came to Janki (Sita) and started frightening and tormenting her as they thought fit (43).

One among them said lewdly, 'Oh Janki! Your youth has gone to waste. If you establish some relationship with Ravana, if you become his partner and cohabit with him (rāvaṇena samāsādyā), then it can be beneficial for you (saphalam tu bhaviṣyati).

[To wit, if you agree to Ravana, you would have put your youth to some good use by enjoying it instead of frittering it away in sorrows and miseries. Besides that, you will have to die if you do not yield to the demands of Ravana, as you have heard yourself. Sorry to say this, but at the end of the time set by him we will be forced to kill you and serve you at his dining table. Think over this matter seriously and make a wise decision that would be in your own interests. We suggest that you yield to him, because it is the only way all your wishes can be fulfilled.] ' (44).

अपरा चाह कोपेन किं विलम्बेन जानकि ।

इदानीं छेद्यतामङ्गं विभज्य च पृथक् पृथक् ॥ ४५॥

अन्या तु खड्गमुद्यम्य जानकीं हन्तुमुद्यता ।

अन्या करालवदना विदार्यास्यमभीषयत् ॥ ४६॥ aparā cāha kopena kiṃ vilambena jānaki । idānīm chedyatāmaṅgaṃ vibhajya ca pr̥thak pr̥thak ॥ 45॥

anyā tu khaḍgamudyamya jānakīm hantumudyatā ।

anyā karālavadanā vidāryāsyamabhīṣayat ॥ 46॥

45-46. Another demoness showed her anger and exasperation at Sita, saying to her, 'Oh Janki! Why do you not listen to us and delay in taking a decision; why are you procrastinating?'

Some threatened to cut her body into separate pieces (idānīm chedyatāmaṅgaṃ vibhajya ca pr̥thak pr̥thak) (45), while another drew a sword to kill her (anyā tu khaḍgamudyamya jānakīm hantumudyatā). One demoness began to frighten her by opening her terribly frightening mouth as if she would bite her and tear her apart with her sharp teeth (anyā karālavadanā vidāryāsyamabhīṣayat) (46).

एवं तां भीषयन्तीस्ता राक्षसीर्विकृताननाः ।

निवार्य त्रिजटा वृद्धा राक्षसी वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ४७॥

शृणुध्वं दुष्टराक्षस्यो मद्राक्यं वो हितं भवेत् ॥ ४८॥ evaṃ tāṃ bhīṣayantīstā rākṣasīrvikṛtānanāḥ ।

nivārya trijaṭā vṛddhā rākṣasī vākyaṃ abravīt ॥ 47॥

śṛṇudhvaṃ duṣṭarākṣasyo madvākyaṃ vo hitaṃ bhavet ॥ 48॥

47-48. Then, when those horrifying demonesses were trying to terrify Sita into submission, an aged demoness by the name of Trijata stopped them and said (47), 'Oh you wicked demonesses! Listen to what I say—it will be for your own benefit, so you must pay heed to my advice and pay attention to what I have to say (48).

न भीषयध्वं रुदतीं नमस्कुरुत जानकीम् ।
 इदानीमेव मे स्वप्ने रामः कमललोचनः ॥ ४९॥
 आरुह्यैरावतं शुभ्रं लक्ष्मणेन समागतः । दग्ध्वा लङ्कापुरीं सर्वा हत्वा रावणमाहवे ॥ ५०॥ na bhīṣayadhvaṃ rudatīm namaskuruta jānakīm । idānīmeva me svapne rāmaḥ kamalalocanaḥ ॥ 49॥ āruhyairāvataṃ śubhram lakṣmaṇena samāgataḥ । dagdhvā laṅkāpurīm sarvāṃ hatvā rāvaṇamāhave ॥ 50॥

49-50. Do not scare and torment the already harried, weeping and woefully lamenting Janki (Sita) (na bhīṣayadhvaṃ rudatīm -- jānakīm), but instead you must bow before her and pay your obeisance to her (namaskuruta).

[You know why I am warning you? Listen carefully.] I have seen a dream that the lotus-eyed Lord Sri Ram (49), accompanied by Laxman, has arrived astride a wonderful white elephant known as ‘Eravat’ (āruhyairāvataṃ śubhram). He has burnt the whole city of Lanka (dagdhvā laṅkāpurīm sarvāṃ) and has killed Ravana in a great war (hatvā rāvaṇamāhave) (50).

आरोप्य जानकीं स्वाङ्के स्थितो दृष्टोऽगमूर्धनि ।
 रावणो गोमयहृदे तैलाभ्यक्तो दिगम्बरः ॥ ५१॥ अगाहत्पुत्रपौत्रैश्च कृत्वा वदनमालिकाम् । विभीषणस्तु रामस्य सन्निधौ हृष्टमानसः ॥ ५२॥ āropya jānakīm svāṅke sthito dr̥ṣṭo'gamūrdhani । rāvaṇo gomayahrade tailābhyakto digambaraḥ ॥ 51॥ agāhatputrapautraiśca kṛtvā vadanamālikām । vibhīṣaṇastu rāmasya sannidhau hr̥ṣṭamānasah ॥ 52॥

51-52. Then I saw that Lord Ram he is sitting on the summit of a high mountain with Janki (Sita) by his side (jānakīm svāṅke sthito).

Ravana is wearing a garland of human skulls, has oil smeared on his body; he is naked, and he is accompanied by his sons and grand-sons. He repeatedly plunges himself in a pond of slush made of cow dung. Vibhishan is sitting near Lord Sri Ram, and he is very cheerful and delighted in his heart (51-52)¹.

[Note—¹Trijata warns her companion guards that the dream she had seen is very gloomy and discouraging for the demon race. It portends grave calamities that are about to bedevil Ravana and ruin his clan. Lord Ram would be victorious in the war that seems unavoidable, and Ravana would be killed with his kith and kin, except Vibhishan who seems to be happy at the turn of events as he is seen sitting with Lord Ram in a cheerful mood.

Trijata alerts the demonesses about the gloomy future that Ravana faces, and therefore it would be wiser for them not to torment Sita any more on the orders of Ravana who is sure to be defeated and killed in the war. It is not sensible for anyone to follow a king who is destined by destiny to fall and die. On the contrary, they would be wiser to leave Sita alone so that if the situation so demands then all of them can plead for mercy with her, and seek her forgiveness. Surely there is no merit in annoying Sita any further because if the dream comes to be true, and Lord Ram does gain victory over Ravana, then all those who torment Sita now would have to face dire consequences for their imprudence and rashness.]

सेवां करोति रामस्य पादयोर्भक्तिसंयुतः ।
सर्वथा रावणं रामो हत्वा सकुलमञ्जसा ॥ ५३॥
विभीषणायाधिपत्यं दत्त्वा सीतां शुभाननाम् । अङ्के निधाय स्वपुरीं गमिष्यति न संशयः ॥ ५४॥ sevām karoti rāmasya pādayorbhaktisaṃyutaḥ । sarvathā rāvaṇaṃ rāmo hatvā sakulamāñjasā ॥ 53॥ vibhiṣaṇāyādhipatyam dattvā sītāṃ śubhānanām । aṅke nidhāya svapurīm gamiṣyati na saṃśayaḥ ॥ 54॥

53-54. He (Vibhishan) is serving Lord Ram's feet with great devotion.

Now, this dream clearly means that Lord Ram will kill Ravana and destroy his entire clan (except Vibhishan) (53), and then give the kingdom to Vibhishan by anointing him as its new king. Then he will go back to his own city (Ayodhya) with the auspicious Sita by his side' (54).

[Note—This dream of Trijata was a forewarning of what was to come in the following days. This caused the demonesses to be so frightened that they immediately stopped tormenting Sita. In the next verse we shall read that these demonesses fell asleep, but in all probability when they woke up, all of them quietly went away to their homes.]

त्रिजटाया वचः श्रुत्वा भीतास्ता राक्षसस्त्रियः । तूष्णीमासंस्तत्र तत्र निद्रावशमुपागताः ॥ ५५॥ तर्जिता राक्षसीभिः सा सीता भीतातिविह्वला ।
त्रातारं नाधिगच्छन्ती दुःखेन परिमूर्च्छिता ॥ ५६॥ trijatāyā vacaḥ śrutvā bhītāstā rākṣasastriyaḥ । tūṣṇīmāsaṃstatra tatra nidrāvaśamupāgatāḥ ॥ 55॥ tarjitā rākṣasībhiḥ sā sītā bhītātivihvalā । trātāraṃ nādhigacchantī duḥkhena parimūrcchitā ॥ 56॥

55-56. Hearing these words of Trijata, the demonesses became extremely frightened. They sat down quietly to ponder, and after sometime, they all fell asleep (55).

Sita was so terrified at the aggressive and threatening postures and rude behaviour of the demonesses that when they became quiet and fell asleep, leaving her alone, she fainted due to exhaustion and mental anguish, for she was so distraught and hopeless about her situation that she saw no signs of succour coming her way to end her cycle of horrors, torments, sorrows, anguish, troubles and tribulations¹ (56).

[Note—¹When the female demon guards fell asleep, Sita too dozed off as she was already too exhausted to keep awake, and respite from continuous verbal torture gave her some mental relief. She was so despondent and miserable that she saw no ray of hope for succour.]

अश्रुभिः पूर्णनयना चिन्तयन्तीदमब्रवीत् । प्रभाते भक्षयिष्यन्ति राक्षस्यो मां न संशयः । इदानीमेव मरणं केनोपायेन मे भवेत् ॥ ५७॥ aśrubhiḥ pūrṇanayanā cintayantīdamabravīt । prabhāte bhakṣayiṣyanti rākṣasyo māṃ na saṃśayaḥ । idānīmeva maraṇaṃ kenopāyena me bhavet ॥ 57॥

57. When she (Sita) regained her consciousness, she became very worried and perturbed, and said with tearful eyes to Trijata, 'There is no doubt that the demonesses would eat me up as soon as it is dawn. What is the way that I can die now (instead of being killed by them)?' (57).

एवं सुदुःखेन परिप्लुता सा विमुक्तकण्ठं रुदती विराय । आलम्ब्य शाखां कृतनिश्चया मृतौ न जानती कश्चिदुपायमङ्गना ॥ ५८॥ evaṃ suduḥkhena pariplutā sā vimuktakaṇṭhaṃ rudatī cirāya । ālambya śākhāṃ kṛtaniścayā mṛtau na jānatī kaścidupāyamaṅganā ॥ 58॥

58. Having thus decided to end her life, but finding no way to do it, the most auspicious one (Sita) caught hold of the branch of a tree, and leaning against it, she wept very bitterly and profusely for a long time (58).

[Note—We really empathize with Sita. Even the hardened of souls is moved to pity at her pitiful and sorrowful condition. This last verse no. 58 is the climax for her sorrows, miseries and torments, for in the next Canto, Hanuman appears before her and gives the proverbial breath of life to her bemoaning and distressed soul. No wonder then that Sita blessed him with all the possible boons she could think of, and this blessing was made with utmost sincerity at her command. And no wonder also that he was the most favourite of her for the rest of her life.

What more can a mother expect from her son? Indeed, Sita felt so overwhelmingly grateful to Hanuman that she calls him his 'son'—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 3, verse no. 63, which we shall read herein below by-the-bye.]

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे सुन्दरकाण्डे
द्वितीयः सर्गः ॥ २॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmaramāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde sundarakāṇḍe
dvitīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 2॥

Thus ends Canto 2 of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and Uma, his divine consort.

7.2.3: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 3:

Hanuman meets Sita; the Destruction of the Ashok Garden; Hanuman voluntarily allows himself to be captured by Ravana's son Meghnad:-

॥ तृतीयः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

उद्धन्धनेन वा मोक्षये शरीरं राघवं विना ।
जीवितेन फलं किं स्यान्मम रक्षोऽधिमध्यतः ॥ १॥ दीर्घा वेणी ममात्यर्थमुद्धन्धाय भविष्यति ।
एवं निश्चितबुद्धिं तां मरणायाथ जानकीम् ॥ २॥
विलोक्य हनुमान् किञ्चिद्विचार्यैतदभाषत ।
शनैः शनैः सूक्ष्मरूपो जानक्याः श्रोत्राङ्गं वचः ॥ ३॥

॥ trtīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

udbandhanena vā mokṣye śarīraṁ rāghavaṁ vinā । jīvitena phalaṁ kiṁ syānmama rakṣo'dhimadhyataḥ ॥ 1॥ dīrghā veṇī mamātyarthamudbandhāya bhaviṣyati । evaṁ niścītabuddhiṁ tāṁ maraṇāyātha jānakīm ॥ 2॥ vilokya hanumān kiñcidvicāryaitadabhāṣata । śanaiḥ śanaiḥ sūkṣmarūpo jānakyāḥ śrotragaṁ vacaḥ ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! In this way, the lamenting and weeping Sita thought of ending her own life as she saw no succour forthcoming. So, overcome with despair, she said to herself, 'Why not I kill myself by hanging, and thereby get rid of my torments? What is the use of living amongst these wicked demons without Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) (to protect me and afford me some solace)? (1).

[Since I do not have access to a rope or any other means by which I can hang myself from this tree—] My long plait of hairs will suffice to hang myself with'.

Observing that Janki (Sita) has decided to kill herself (by hanging or by any other means that she can think of, and that there is no time to lose before any untoward development happens) (2), Hanuman, who was hiding in the tree in a miniature form, thought of something in his heart, and spoke in a soft voice that was loud enough to reach Sita's ears (but not too loud that it can be heard by any demon sentinel appointed by Ravana to guard Sita) (3).

इक्ष्वाकुवंशसम्भूतो राजा दशरथो महान् ।
अयोध्याधिपतिस्तस्य चत्वारो लोकविश्रुताः ॥ ४॥
पुत्रा देवसमाः सर्वे लक्षणैरुपलक्षिताः । रामश्चलक्ष्मणश्चैव भरतश्चैव शत्रुहा ॥ ५॥ ikṣvākuvaṃśasambhūto rājā daśaratho mahān । ayodhyādhīpatistasya catvāro lokaviśrutāḥ ॥ 4॥ putrā devasamāḥ sarve lakṣaṇairupalakṣitāḥ । rāmaścalakṣmaṇaścaiva bharataścaiva śatruhā ॥ 5॥

4-5. [Hanuman began to recite the glories of Lord Ram, about his family lineage, and about his life and times to indicate to Sita and reassure her that someone very close and devoted to her Lord is present in the vicinity. This would initially surprise her no doubt, but it would also help her to overcome abject despair and a sense of hopelessness that had overcome her, for now she would be eager to meet the person who had said the words that were so pleasant and sweet for her to hear. Sita was enveloped in a shroud of deep gloom and total despair, seeing no hope of freedom and succour, and so the soothing words of Hanuman came to her as a respite from her excessive torments that made her determined to end her life, like a ray of light in a dark tunnel that suddenly gives hope to someone trapped in it and sure of impending death. Forsooth, the very idea, the very notion, the very thought, that someone favourable, some helpful soul, is nearby, was like a streak of sunlight that pierced through the thick cover of dark clouds of doomsday that had covered Sita's emotional firmament, cheering her up and lifting her sinking spirit.]

Hanuman spoke softly and began to speak of the life and times of Lord Ram as follows: 'King Dasrath, who was born in the clan of Ikshwaku, was very renowned and virtuous. To him were born four sons who are famous in all the three worlds (i.e. in the whole world consisting of the celestial, the terrestrial and the subterranean divisions) (4).

These sons are as auspicious and divine as Gods themselves; and they are endowed with all the characters and qualities that are regarded as auspicious, divine, noble and virtuous. Their names are Ram, Laxman, Bharat and Shatrughan (5).

ज्येष्ठो रामः पितुर्वाक्यादण्डकारण्यमागतः । लक्ष्मणेन सह भ्रात्रा सीतया भार्यया सह ॥ ६॥
उवास गौतमीतीरे पञ्चवट्यां महामनाः ।

तत् नीता महाभागा सीता जनकनन्दिनी ॥ ७॥ jyeṣṭho rāmaḥ piturvākyāddaṇḍakāraṇyamāgataḥ । lakṣmaṇena saha bhrātrā sītayā bhāryayā saha ॥ 6॥ uvāsa gautamīre pañcavaṭyāṃ mahāmanāḥ । tatra nītā mahābhāgā sītā janakanandinī ॥ 7॥

6-7. The eldest son, Lord Sri Ram, came to the Dandkaranya forest, along with his wife Sita and younger brother Laxman, on the orders of his father (6).

That exalted Lord (Sri Ram) stayed at Panchvati on the banks of river Gautami with Sita, the most fortunate and auspicious daughter of the great king Janak (7).

रहिते रामचन्द्रेण रावणेन दुरात्मना । ततो रामोऽतिदुःखार्तो मार्गमाणोऽथ जानकीम् ॥ ८॥
जटायुषं पक्षिराजमपश्यत्पतितं भुवि । तस्मै दत्त्वा दिवं शीघ्रमृष्यमूकमुपागमत् ॥ ९॥ rahite rāmacandreṇa rāvaṇena durātmanā । tato rāmo'tiduhkhārto mārgamāṇo'tha jānakīm ॥ 8॥ jaṭāyuṣaṃ pakṣirājamapaśyatpatitaṃ bhuvi । tasmai dattvā divaṃ śīghramṛṣyamūkamupāgamat ॥ 9॥

8-9. One day, when Lord Ram was not there in his hermitage, the evil-hearted and wicked Ravana took away Janki (Sita). Lord Ram was overwhelmed with sorrow and anguish of separation from her, and he started his search for her everywhere in the wild forest. While moving ahead in his search, he saw, on the path (8), the king of the birds, named Jatayu, who was wounded and lying on the ground. The Lord immediately sent Jatayu to the divine abode of Gods (i.e. to, heaven). [To wit, Lord Ram performed Jatayu's last rites, and gave his soul deliverance.]

After that, the Lord proceeded to the Rishyamook mountain (9).

सुग्रीवेण कृता मैत्री रामस्य विदितात्मनः ।
तद्भार्याहारिणं हत्वा वालिनं रघुनन्दनः ॥ १०॥
राज्येऽभिषिच्य सुग्रीवं मित्रकार्यं चकार सः ।
सुग्रीवस्तु समानाय वानरान् वानरप्रभुः ॥ ११॥
प्रेषयामास परितो वानरान् परिमार्गणे । सीतायास्तत् चैकोऽहं सुग्रीवसचिवो हरिः ॥ १२॥ sugrīveṇa kṛtā maitrī rāmasya viditātmanah । tadbhāryāhāriṇaṃ hatvā vāliṇaṃ raghunandanah ॥ 10॥ rājye'bhiṣicya sugrīvaṃ mitrakāryaṃ cakāra saḥ । sugrīvastu samānāyā vānarān vānaraprabhuḥ ॥ 11॥

preṣayāmāsa parito vānarān parimārgaṇe । sītāyāstatra caiko'haṃ sugrīvasacivo hariḥ ॥ 12॥

10-12. Upon arriving at that mountain, Lord Ram, who is a wise, sagacious, enlightened and self-realised soul, made friends with Sugriv (the prince of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha). Then Raghunandan (Lord Ram; the son of the family of the great king Raghu of Ayodhya) killed Baali (the elder brother of Sugriv) who had stolen his younger brother's wife¹ (10).

After that, the Lord installed Sugriv on the throne of Kishkindha. In this manner, the Lord had successfully helped his friend Sugriv, and did his work for him. [To wit, Lord Ram restored Sugriv's wife and honour to him, and after punishing his elder brother Baali by killing him for committing the unpardonable crime of keeping his younger brother's wife as a mistress, the Lord crowned Sugriv as the king of Kishkindha.]

[Sugriv felt very obliged and grateful to the Lord, and he reciprocated the Lord's helpful gesture by promising to search for Sita.] Sugriv then summoned all the monkeys (and bears) to do the Lord's work (11), and sent them in all the directions in search of Sita. I am one of Sugriv's ministers, and one of the countless monkeys who were sent out to find the whereabouts of Sita (12).

[Note—¹Hanuman clearly gives the reason why Lord Ram killed Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv. It is certainly very wrong, illegal, unscrupulous, unrighteous and scandalous for anyone to kick his younger brother out of the house and keep his wife forcibly as a mistress. Baali certainly deserved severest of punishment for this sinful act.]

सम्पातिवचनाच्छीघ्रमुल्लङ्घ्य शतयोजनम् ।
समुद्रं नगरीं लङ्कां विचिन्वन् जानकीं शुभाम् ॥ १३॥
शनैरशोकवनिकां विचिन्वन् शिंशपातरुम् ।
अद्राक्षं जानकीमत्र शोचन्तीं दुःखसम्प्लुताम् ॥ १४॥
रामस्य महिषीं देवीं कृतकृत्योऽहमागतः । इत्युक्तवोपररामाथ मारुतिर्बुद्धिमतरः ॥ १५॥ sampātivacanācchīghramullaṅghya śatayojanam । samudraṃ nagarīm laṅkāṃ vicinvaṃ jānakīm śubhām ॥ 13॥ śanairāśokavanikāṃ vicinvaṃ śiṃśapātarum । adrākṣaṃ jānakīmatra śocantīm duḥkhasamplutām ॥ 14॥ rāmasya mahiṣīm devīm kṛtakṛtyo'hamāgataḥ । ityuktavopararāmātha mārutirbuddhimattaraḥ ॥ 15॥

13-15. I leapt across the ocean, which is 100 Yojans (800 miles) wide, on the advice of Sampati (the elderly vulture who had flown high up the sky and first observed Sita sitting in the garden of Lanka)¹, and have thus come to Lanka. Here, I searched all over the place for Janki (Sita), the auspicious and virtuous one (13).

Gradually, while searching for her in the Ashok grove, I saw this Shinshupa (Indian red wood) tree. Here I saw Janki sitting despondently, full of sorrow and anguish, and surrounded by a pall of gloom (14).

By seeing the goddess who is the consort of Lord Ram, the purpose of my coming here has been successfully accomplished; all my efforts have been amply rewarded as I have found her.'

Having said this, Hanuman, the wise, sagacious, erudite and intelligent son of the wind god, became silent (15).

[Note—¹Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 48-56. The group of monkeys and bears had met Sampati on the shore of the ocean. He had advised them that since Sita is in Lanka, anyone who could go and come back across a distance of 100 Yojans would be able to meet her. At that time, Hanuman was selected for this work.]

सीता क्रमेण तत्सर्वं श्रुत्वा विस्मयमाययौ ।
किमिदं मे श्रुतं व्योम्नि वायुना समुदीरितम् ॥ १६॥
स्वप्नो वा मे मनोभ्रान्तिर्यदि वा सत्यमेव तत् ।
निद्रा मे नास्ति दुःखेन जानाम्येतत्कुतो भ्रमः ॥ १७॥
येन मे कर्णपीयुषं वचनं समुदीरितम् । स दृश्यतां महाभागः प्रियवादी ममाग्रतः ॥ १८॥ sītā krameṇa tatsarvaṃ śrutvā vismayamāyayau । kimidaṃ me śrutaṃ vyomni vāyunā samudīritam ॥ 16॥ svapno vā me manobhrāntiryadi vā satyameva tat । nidrā me nāsti duḥkhena jānāmyetatkuto bhramaḥ ॥ 17॥ yena me karṇapīyusaṃ vacanaṃ samudīritam । sa dr̥śyatāṃ mahābhāgaḥ priyavādī mamāgrataḥ ॥ 18॥

16-18. Hearing this sequence of events, Sita was extremely astonished. She wondered, 'The words which I have heard from above, as if coming from the sky, have they been spoken by the Wind? (16).

Have I heard the words in a dream, or am I hallucinating, or is it merely my imagination? Or, is what I hear really true? Since I cannot sleep due to extremity of sorrow, anguish and mental torments and agitations, therefore it cannot be a dream; on the other hand, I can actually hear those words by my own ears, so it cannot be merely a flight of my imagination (17).

That person who has spoken these sweet and comforting words to me—words which appear like nectar for my ears—I request, I beseech, that great soul to appear before me, and make himself visible to me' (18).

श्रुत्वा तज्जानकीवाक्यं हनुमान् पत्रखण्डतः ।
अवतीर्य शनैः सीतापुरतः समवस्थितः ॥ १९॥
कलविड्कपूमाणाङ्गो रक्ताक्षः पीतवानरः । ननाम शनैः सीतां प्राञ्जलिः पुरतः स्थितः ॥ २०॥ śrutvā tājānakīvākyam hanumān patrakhaṇḍataḥ । avatīrya śanaiḥ sītāpurataḥ samavasthitaḥ ॥ 19॥ kalaviṅkapramāṇāṅgo raktāsyah pītavānarah । nanāma śanakaiḥ sītām prāñjaliḥ purataḥ sthitaḥ ॥ 20॥

19-20. Hearing these words of Janki (Sita), Hanuman emerged from behind the cover of foliage, and coming down slowly from the tree¹, he stood before her (19).

At that moment he had the form of a monkey with the size of the bird 'Kalwink' (sparrow—"kalaviṅkapramāṇāṅgo"); his body had a reddish hue and it glowed like gold (raktāsyah pītavānarah). He came up slowly in front of Sita, and bowed before her reverentially with joined hands (20).

[Note—¹Hanuman approached Sita very cautiously, slowly and courteously, so as not to alarm her. His appearance was that of a monkey, but his size was that of a sparrow. It is very rare to find a monkey resembling a bird. So Hanuman feared that Sita would think that he is some demon sent by Ravana to tease her more if he showed any haste; if any of his manners could wrongly be interpreted by Sita as menacing, as she is already nervous and terrified, she would faint out of shock.

So it would be wise, thought Hanuman, to be very cautious while he went near her, because if Sita felt threatened by him going near her swiftly, if she was alarmed in the least by his approaching her quickly, perhaps she would withdraw herself in a cocoon of silence and become totally incommunicado.

Hanuman did not wish to startle Sita and do anything that would have made her nervous and terrified, because she was already on the edge and had taut nerves that were on the verge of a complete nervous breakdown.

Further, in case she panicked and shrieked, it would be disastrous for his mission, for it would alert the demon guards who surrounded Sita, and all secrecy would be severely compromised.

The next set of verses endorse what Hanuman had apprehended—for Sita did become suspicious of him.]

दृष्ट्वा तं जानकी भीता रावणोऽयमुपागतः ।
 मां मोहयितुमायातो मायया वानराकृतिः ॥ २१॥
 इत्येवं चिन्तयित्वा सा तूष्णिमासीदधोमुखी ।
 पुनरप्याह तां सीतां देवि यत्त्वं विशङ्कसे ॥ २२॥
 नाहं तथाविधो मातस्त्यज शङ्कां मयि स्थिताम् । दासोऽहं कोसलेन्द्रस्य रामस्य परमात्मनः ॥ २३॥
 सचिवोऽहं हरीन्द्रस्य सुग्रीवस्य शुभपूदे । वायोः पुत्रोऽहमखिलप्राणभूतस्य शोभने ॥ २४॥ dr̥ṣṭvā taṁ jānakī bhītā rāvaṇo'yamupāgataḥ । māṁ mohayitumāyāto māyayā vānarākṛtiḥ ॥ 21॥ ityevaṁ cintayitvā sā tūṣṇimāsīdadhomukhī । punarapyāha tāṁ sītām devi yattvaṁ viśaṅkase ॥ 22॥

nāhaṃ tathāvidho mātastyaja śaṅkāṃ mayi sthitām । dāso'haṃ kosalendrasya rāmasya paramātmānaḥ ॥ 23॥ sacivo'haṃ harīndrasya sugrīvasya śubhaprade । vāyoḥ putro'hamakhilaprāṇabhūtasya śobhane ॥ 24॥

21-24. Seeing him, Janki felt afraid that Ravana has come disguised as a monkey to trap her (21).

Thinking thus, she kept sitting stiffly, with a lowered head. Then he (Hanuman) said once again to Sita, 'Oh goddess! I am not the one whom you suspect me to be. Oh mother! Whatever suspicions and doubts you have about me, you must remove them. I am a humble servant of Lord Sri Ram, the Supreme Being himself (paramātmānaḥ) and the king of Kaushal (Ayodhya) (22-23).

Oh the one who bestows auspiciousness and good fortunes ("śubhaprade"; a reference to Sita)! I am a minister of Sugriv, the king of monkeys. Oh the adorable and worthy one (śobhane)! I am the son of the wind god, the god who presides over the forces in creation that give life to all living beings¹ (24).

[Note—¹Hanuman means that just as the air or the wind is the source that give life to the world, and not sniff it out, he too has come to her to give her a new lease of life, and not to be the cause of her death. So she need not be alarmed of him in the least. He is a friend, and not a foe. He is Lord Ram's messenger, and not Ravana's.]

तच्छ्रुत्वा जानकी प्राह हनूमन्तं कृताञ्जलिम् ।
 वानराणां मनुष्याणां सङ्गतिर्घटते कथम् ॥ २५॥
 यथा त्वं रामचन्द्रस्य दासोऽहमिति भाषसे । तामाह मारुतिः प्रीतो जानकीं पुरतः स्थितः ॥ २६॥ tacchrutvā jānakī prāha hanūmantaṃ kṛtāñjalim । vānarāṇāṃ manuṣyāṇāṃ saṅgatirghaṭate katham ॥ 25॥ yathā tvaṃ rāmacandrasya dāso'hamiti bhāṣase । tāmāha mārutiḥ prīto jānakīṃ purataḥ sthitaḥ ॥ 26॥

25-26. Hearing this, Janki said to Hanuman, who was standing in front of her with hands joined in supplication, 'You say that you are a servant (subordinate, follower, devotee) of Sri Ramchandra—say, how is it possible that a monkey and a human can become friends and companions?'

Then Hanuman, who was standing in front of her, felt very happy as he replied to her¹ (25-26)—

[Note—¹Why was Hanuman cheerful and happy? Sita responding to Hanuman was a positive signal. The worse scenario would be her deciding to keep mum, and to retract herself in the cocoon of silence and gloom to which she had by now become accustomed.

So therefore, when Sita answered Hanuman, it was a positive sign that she would at least communicate with him, instead of shutting up tight. When a means of communication and dialogue was opened, Hanuman took a deep breath of relief, for now it would be easy on his part to learn everything about her and her problems, and he would also be able to tell her what Lord Ram had told him to convey to her on the one hand, and on the other hand to learn what she herself wished to be conveyed to Lord Ram in return. An exchange of views was thus possible. Otherwise, not only his task would have become very difficult, it would also have been extremely difficult to convince anyone on his return that he had actually met Sita—for he would have no proof of it, no tangible sign from Sita to take back to Lord Ram, and neither any oral message from her that would convince the Lord that Hanuman had indeed met Sita.]

ऋष्यमूकमगाद्रामः शबर्या नोदितः सुधीः ।
 सुग्रीवो ऋष्यमूकस्थो दृष्टवान् रामलक्ष्मणौ ॥ २७॥
 भीतो मां प्रेषयामास ज्ञातुं रामस्य हृद्गतम् ।
 ब्रह्मचारिवपुर्धृत्वा गतोऽहं रामसन्निधिम् ॥ २८॥

r̥ṣyamūkamagādrāmaḥ śabaryā noditaḥ sudhīḥ । sugrīvo r̥ṣyamūkastho dr̥ṣṭavān rāmalaṣṭmaṇau ॥ 27॥ bhīto māṃ preṣayāmāsa jñātuṃ rāmasya hṛdgatam । brahmacārivapurdhṛtvā gato'haṃ rāmasannidhim ॥ 28॥

27-28. 'At the instance of Sabari, the wise, erudite and sagacious Lord (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) came to the Rishyamook mountain. Sugriv, who was sitting on the summit of this mountain, saw Lord Ram and Laxman approach (27).

Sugriv was scared¹, and therefore he sent me to find out the cause (or the reason) of their arrival. Then I came to Lord Ram, disguising myself as a Brahmachari (a celibate Brahmin; a Brahmin student) (28).

[Note—¹Why was Sugriv scared when he saw strangers roaming at the foot of the Mt. Rishyamook? He was suspicious of the two strangers, Lord Ram and his brother Laxman, when he saw them roaming in the vicinity of the mountain as he feared that his brother Baali, who was his bitter enemy and had chased him out of the kingdom of Kishkindha, had sent some spy with an evil intent to find Sugriv, and then devise some method of killing and getting rid of him.]

ज्ञात्वा रामस्य सद्भावं स्कन्धोपरि निधाय तौ ।
 नीत्वा सुग्रीवसामीप्यं सख्यं चाकरोत् तयोः ॥ २९॥
 सुग्रीवस्य हता भार्या वालिना तं स्मृतम् ।
 जयानैकेन बाणेन ततो राज्येऽभ्यषेचयत् ॥ ३०॥ सुग्रीवं वानराणां स प्रेषयामास वानरान् ।
 दिग्भ्यो महाबलान् वीरान् भवत्याः परिमार्जणे ॥ ३१॥

29-31. When I found out about the good intent of the purpose of their visit (which was to search for Lord Ram's wife who had been abducted by some nasty demon), and specifically that the two brothers had no ill-will or malefic intentions against Sugriv, but rather that they were friendly disposed to anyone who would help them in their noble endeavour of finding you, I took them to Sugriv on my shoulders, and befriended them (29).

Sugriv's wife herself had been snatched by Baali (his elder brother). [So, when told about the reason of Lord Ram's coming that way, Sugriv, who himself was suffering the agony of separation from his wife, could easily empathize with the Lord, and understand his pain and grief.]

The most exalted in Raghu's clan (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) killed Baali with a single arrow¹, and anointed Sugriv on the throne (of Kishkindha) (30).

After that, Sugriv sent monkeys, who were very brave, strong and valiant, in all the directions to search for you (31).

[Note—¹The reason why Lord Ram intervened on behalf of Sugriv and killed his elder brother Baali was that the Lord felt a great injustice had been done to his friend Sugriv by his powerful elder brother. Baali had not only exiled Sugriv from Kishkindha, disinheriting him of all his rights, but had also kept Sugriv's wife as his own mistress, an act that was absolutely unacceptable and most contemptible; he was not contented with this alone, as he was always on the look out to find a way to eliminate Sugriv by getting him assassinated. Sugriv was on the same page as Lord Ram in this matter—both had their wives taken away forcibly by their enemies, and both were subject to danger of attack by their adversaries.

Lord Ram felt that it was his moral duty, as a true friend, to help Sugriv get his honour back; and since Sugriv was not powerful enough to defeat Baali on the strength of his own arms to reclaim his lost rights, self-esteem and dignity, Lord Ram thought to help him by aiding Baali's defeat and death.

Besides the moral aspect of this decision, there was another important factor that weighed heavily in favour of Lord Ram's decision of helping Sugriv against Baali. It was this: The Lord needed help himself, first to find Sita, and then to launch a military campaign to free her from the clutches of ferocious demons. For this objective to be successful, he needed the support of an army as well as logistics. No help would come from his own kingdom of Ayodhya that was far away, and so to succeed the Lord would have to generate help locally by making powerful allies who would firmly stand by him in an alien land. So when the opportunity came his way in the form of helping Sugriv to overcome his misfortunes, the Lord decided to make the best of it.

To make Sugriv his ally and to expect any help from him, it was important for Lord Ram to first do something to oblige him, and in such a way that Sugriv would be eternally indebted to him. Hence, the Lord decided to help him against his brother Baali so that he could regain his right over the crown of the kingdom of Kishkindha, as well as retrieve his wife who was usurped forcibly by his brother. This would make Sugriv morally obliged to help his benefactor in return. And this is exactly how it happened—for it were Sugriv's messengers as well as his army of monkeys and bears that had helped Lord Ram to find out about Sita in the first place, and then to vanquish the demons and retrieve her later on after winning a fierce war.]

गच्छन्तं शयवो दृष्ट्वा मामभाषत सादरम् ॥ ३२॥

त्वयि कार्यमशेषं मे स्थितं मारुतनन्दन ।

बूढि मे कुशलं सर्वं सीतायै लक्ष्मणस्य च ॥ ३३॥

अङ्गुलीयकमेतन्मे परिज्ञानार्थमुत्तमम् ।

सीतायै दीयतां साधु मन्नामाक्षरमुद्रितम् ॥ ३४॥

gacchantam rāghavo dr̥ṣṭvā māmabhāṣata sādaram ॥ 32॥

tvayi kāryamaśeṣam me sthitam mārutanandana ।

brūhi me kuśalam sarvam sītāyai lakṣmaṇasya ca ॥ 33॥

aṅgulīyakametanme parijñānārthamuttamam ।

sītāyai dīyatām sādhu mannāmākṣaramudritam ॥ 34॥

32-34. When I was almost ready to start-off in search of you, Raghav (Lord Ram) saw me, called me near, and said (32), 'Oh Maruti's son! My work, which is very difficult and special, is dependent on you. Tell Sita about my and Laxman's welfare (33).

For your identification, I am giving you this beautiful finger-ring of mine, on which the letters of my name are engraved, so that Sita will recognise you when she sees this ring.' (34).

इत्युक्त्वा प्रददौ मह्यं करग्रादङ्गुलीयकम् ।

प्रयत्नेन मयानीतं देवि पश्याङ्गुलीयकम् ॥ ३५॥

इत्युक्त्वा प्रददौ देव्यै मुद्रिकां मारुतात्मजः ।

नमस्कृत्य स्थितो दूरद्वद्वाज्जलिपुटो हरिः ॥ ३६॥

दृष्ट्वा सीता प्रमुदिता रामनामाङ्कितं तदा ।

मुद्रिकां शिरसा धृत्वा स्रवदानन्दनेत्रजा ॥ ३७॥ ityuktvā pradadau mahyam karāgrādaṅgulīyakam । prayatnena mayānītam devi paśyāṅgulīyakam ॥ 35॥

ityuktvā pradadau devyai mudrikām mārutātmajaḥ । namaskṛtya sthito dūrādbaddhāñjalipuṭo hariḥ ॥ 36॥

dr̥ṣṭvā sītā pramuditā rāmanāmāṅkitam tadā ।

mudrikām śirasā dhṛtvā sraavadānandanetraja ॥ 37॥

35-37. Saying this, Lord Ram took off the ring from his finger and gave it to me. I have brought it very carefully with me. Oh goddess! You see this ring for yourself (for it would not only help to establish my identity and authenticity, but also assure you that Lord Ram is well and remembers you)' (35).

Saying so, the son of the wind god gave that ring to the goddess ("devyai"; Sita). Then he bowed to her and stood aside at a little distance from her (to give her time to examine the ring and reassure herself that Hanuman was indeed Lord Ram's messenger and not an imposter) (36).

When Sita saw that finger-ring with Lord Ram's initials engraved in it, she immediately recognized it and its authenticity. This made her thrilled and exhilarated. She raised the ring to her head and touched it with it even as a stream of tears gushed out of her eyes (37).

कपे मे पूणदाता त्वं बुद्धिमानसि राघवे ।

भक्तोऽसि प्रियकारी त्वं विश्वासोऽस्ति तवैव हि ॥ ३८॥
 नो वेन्मत्सन्निधिं वान्यं पुरुषं प्रेषयेत्कथम् ।
 हनूमन् दृष्टमखिलं मम दुःखादिकं त्वया ॥ ३९॥
 सर्वं कथय रामाय यथा मे जायते दया । मासद्वयावधि प्राणाः स्थास्यन्ति मम सत्तम ॥ ४०॥ kape me prāṇadātā tvam buddhimānasi rāghave । bhakto'si priyakārī tvam viśvāso'sti tavaiva hi ॥ 38॥ no cenmatsannidhiṃ cānyam puruṣam preṣayetkatham । hanūman dr̥ṣṭamakhilam mama duḥkhādikaṃ tvayā ॥ 39॥ sarvaṃ kathaya rāmāya yathā me jāyate dayā । māsadvayāvadhi prāṇāḥ sthāsyanti mama sattama ॥ 40॥

38-40. Then she said, 'Oh Kapi (Hanuman)! You are my saviour (for you have saved me from drowning in an ocean of grief, miseries and sorrows) (me prāṇadātā). You are very wise, clever and intelligent (tvam buddhimānasi), you are a devotee of Raghav (Sri Ram) (rāghave bhakto'si), and most dear to him (priyakārī tvam). I am certain he has full faith and trust in you (38).

Forsooth and without gainsay, if that hadn't been the case, why would he have sent a non-related male to me (as his messenger)?¹

Oh Hanuman! You have seen all my agonies; you have witnessed all my troubles and tribulations; you have seen my suffering and miserable existence (39).

Tell all these things to Lord Sri Ram when you go back to report to him, so that he develops greater mercy and more compassion for me. Oh the most exalted one! My life will survive for only two months more (because this evil demon Ravana has threatened to kill me after that period) (40).

[Note—¹In ancient societies, and even in the conservative societies of today's modern world, only a male relation is expected to meet a female relative while she is alone. So Sita expressed her confidence in Hanuman when she says that had Lord Ram not treated him as being very close to him, as his confidante, and almost as if he were his own son, then the Lord would not have thought of trusting him with either his finger-ring or with the confidential message that he sent for Sita.

This confidence helped Sita to open her heart to Hanuman without reservations. All her apprehensions and doubts about him were removed.]

नागमिष्यति चेद्रामो भक्षयिष्यति मां खलः । अतः शीघ्रं कपीन्द्रेण सुग्रीवेण समन्वितः ॥ ४१॥
 वानरानीकपैः सार्धं हत्वा रावणमाहवे । सपुत्रं सबलं रामो यदि मां मोचयेत्प्रभुः ॥ ४२॥ nāgamiṣyati cedrāmo bhakṣayiṣyati mām khalaḥ । ataḥ śīghraṃ kapīndreṇa sugrīveṇa samanvitaḥ ॥ 41॥ vānarānīkapaiḥ sārddham hatvā rāvaṇamāhave । saputraṃ sabalaṃ rāmo yadi mām mocayetprabhuḥ ॥ 42॥

41-42. If this does not happen (i.e. if Lord Ram does not save me within the stipulated time of two months), then this wicked fellow will eat me up¹. Hence, it is urgent that Lord Ram should come here as soon as it is possible, along with Sugriv and other chief monkeys, to kill Ravana together with his sons and army, and liberate me. [It is urgent because if the Lord delays and I am not liberated within two months, this wretch would definitely kill me.] (41-42).

[Note—¹ Apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 2, verse no. 42.]

ततस्य सदृशं वीर्यं वीर वर्णय वर्णितम् ।
 यथा मां तारयेद्रामो हत्वा शीघ्रं दशाननम् ॥ ४३॥
 तथा यतस्व हनुमन् वाचा धर्ममवाप्नुहि । हनुमानपि तामाह देवि दृष्टो यथा मया ॥ ४४॥
 रामः सलक्ष्मणः शीघ्रमागमिष्यति सायुधः । सुग्रीवेण ससैन्येन हत्वा दशमुखं बलात् ॥ ४५॥ tattasya sadrśaṃ vīryaṃ vīra varṇaya varṇitam । yathā māṃ tārayedrāmo hatvā śīghraṃ daśānanam ॥ 43॥ tathā yatasva hanuman vācā dharmamavāpnuhi । hanumānapi tāmāha devi dr̥ṣṭo yathā mayā ॥ 44॥ rāmaḥ salakṣmaṇaḥ śīghramāgamiṣyati sāyudhaḥ । sugrīveṇa sasainyena hatvā daśamukhaṃ balāt ॥ 45॥

43-45. If it happens the way I have told you then surely all his efforts would be successful. And only then you would be justified to describe the Lord's glory and greatness again in the way you have done just a moment ago.

You should tell the Lord all that you have seen in such a tactful way, with all the deftness you can command, that the Lord gets angry at this 10-headed monster (Ravana) and kills him, so that I am liberated from this horrible existence and find my freedom (43).

And certainly by doing so you shall also feel contented and derive merit for the good deed that you would have done by employing your wisdom and words to help someone who is under immense distress. [To wit, if your clever use of words could sufficiently inspire and impel Lord Ram to act expeditiously and kill Ravana before he kills me, you will certainly be blessed with the reward of doing a righteous deed to save my life].

Then Hanuman said to Sita to reassure her, 'Oh goddess! What I have observed personally makes me feel confident that (44) Lord Ram and Laxman, both armed and well prepared, and accompanied by Sugriv and his army, shall come here very soon. He shall then use his might to kill the 10-headed demon Ravana (45).

समानेष्यति देवि त्वामयोध्यां नातृ संशयः ।
 तमाह जानकी रामः कथं वारिधिमाततम् ॥ ४६॥
 तीर्त्वायास्यत्यमेयात्मा वानरानीकपैः सह ।

हनुमानाह मे स्कन्धावारुह्य पुरुषर्षभौ ॥ ४७॥ samāneṣyati devi tvāmayodhyāṃ nātra saṃśayaḥ । tamāha jānakī rāmaḥ katham vāridhimātataṃ ॥ 46॥ tīrtvāyāsyatyameyātmā vānarānīkapaiḥ saha । hanūmānāha me skandhāvāruhya puruṣarṣabhau ॥ 47॥

46-47. He (Lord Ram) shall (after having killed Ravana) take you to Ayodhya. Oh goddess, there is no doubt about it'.

At this, Janki (Sita) said (expressing her doubts), 'How will Lord Ram cross the mighty ocean (46) along with a huge army of monkeys, though of course the Lord is known to be 'Ameyatma' (tīrtvāyāsyatyameyātmā), i.e. the Supreme Soul that prevails everywhere, the Supreme Being who cannot be measured¹.

Hanuman replied, 'Those two exalted souls (i.e. Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman), who are the most excellent beings amongst men, shall come here astride my shoulders. [To wit, if it is found that crossing the ocean is a problem for Lord Ram and Laxman, then there is no worry on that point, for I shall make both of them sit on my shoulders and bring them here in the same way as I have come. Hence, you ought not to worry on that account.] (47).

[Note—¹Sita was worried as to how Lord Ram would physically cross the ocean because presently he is in a human form, although in his primary form he is none but the Supreme Being for whom the worldly ocean is nothing but a shallow groove, not wider and deeper than a hollow made by a cow's hoof on earth, which even a child can cross easily.

Legend has it that Lord Vishnu had indeed measured the entire universe in merely two steps during his incarnation as Lord Vaaman, the dwarf mendicant who had vanquished the haughtiness of king Bali. Bali had promised Vaaman a piece of land measuring an area that the latter can cover in his three steps, but when Vaaman covered the entire universe in merely two of his steps, and one step was still left to be put down for the purpose of measuring the land which was no more available, king Bali offered his own head for the Lord to put his foot on and complete the measurement. Though the Lord succeeded in vanquishing Bali's ego and haughtiness, but he was also moved by the king's greatness of spirit and steadfastness at keeping his words. So as a reward, Lord Vaaman offered Bali the kingdom of the nether world, and decided to protect Bali by becoming his guard himself so that no one can dethrone Bali from this kingdom.

But the problem in the present case of Lord Ram was that he had to play his role as a human being to perfection, and no human being can cross the width of the ocean measuring 100 Yojans (800 miles) by just walking across it like one would cross a small puddle on the road that comes in his way.

So Sita wondered how Lord Ram would manage to overcome this great hurdle because he would be accompanied by a huge army. Had he been alone, he could have done this miracle secretly without anyone knowing about it, but that's not feasible in the present case.

It ought to be noted here that earlier Sita had shown great courage and confidence when she had said, while sternly rebuking Ravana, that "Lord Ram would come here to kill him by crossing the ocean either by drying it up or making a bridge across it by covering it with his arrows”—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 34-35.

But now she expresses great doubt in this regard. Why was this? It was because she was so extremely mentally disturbed and emotionally upset that she began seeing the negative side of everything. Her earlier outburst against Ravana was to show her indignation and anger to him, but after the storm blew over she had once again sunk into the pit of hopelessness aggravated and exacerbated by gloomy thoughts and a despairing mood.]

आयास्यतः ससैन्यश्च सुग्रीवो वानरेश्वरः ।
 विहायसा क्षणेनैव तीर्त्वा वारिधिमाततम् ॥ ४८॥
 निर्दहिष्यति रक्षौघांस्त्वत्कृते नात्र संशयः ।
 अनुज्ञां देहि मे देवि गच्छामि त्वरयान्वितः ॥ ४९॥
 द्रष्टुं यमं सह भ्रात्रा त्वरयामि तवान्तिकम् । देवि किञ्चिदभिज्ञानं देहि मे येन राघवः ॥ ५०॥ āyāsyataḥ sasainyaśca sugrīvo vānareśvaraḥ । vihāyasā kṣaṇenaiva tīrtvā vāridhimātataḥ ॥ 48॥ nirdahiṣyati rakṣauḡhāṃstvatkr̥te nātra saṃśayaḥ । anujñāṃ dehi me devi gacchāmi tvarayānvitaḥ ॥ 49॥ draṣṭuṃ rāmaṃ saha bhrātrā tvarayāmi tavāntikam । devi kiñcidabhiññānaṃ dehi me yena rāghavaḥ ॥ 50॥

48-50. As for Sugriv, the king of monkeys, he and his army shall cross the vast ocean by the air-route (the path of the sky as I have done myself), and they won't take long to do so. (48).

Then the Lord shall reduce to ashes and crush the entire horde of demons in order to recover you. There is no doubt about it. Oh goddess! Now give me your permission; I shall go back forthwith (49) and meet Lord Ram, and try to bring him, along with his brother, as soon as I can. Oh goddess! Give me some token (so that the Lord is convinced that I have met you) (50).

विश्वसेन्मां प्रयत्नेन ततो गन्ता समुत्सुकः । ततः किञ्चिद्विचार्याथ सीता कमललोचना ॥ ५१॥
 विमुच्य केशपाशान्ते स्थितं चूडामणिं ददौ ।
 अनेन विश्वसेद्रामस्त्वां कपीन्द्र सलक्ष्मणः ॥ ५२॥ viśvasenmāṃ prayatnena tato gantā samutsukaḥ । tataḥ kiñcidvicāryātha sītā kamalalocanā ॥ 51॥ vimucya keśapāśānte sthitaṃ cūḍāmaṇiṃ dadau । anena viśvasedrāmastvāṃ kapīndra salakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 52॥

51-52. That token from you will help Lord Ram believe me. I will take it with me very carefully; I shall approach the Lord with great urgency, and with a sincerity of purpose. [To wit, I shall show due diligence and haste in executing the commission that you would be gracious enough to grant me, and you will not find me wanting in any way in its execution; be assured of it.]

Then the lotus-eyed Sita thought for some time (i.e. she pondered over what to give him as a token to be taken to Lord Ram) (51), and then she took off the 'Chudamani'¹ that was tucked in her hairs and gave it to him.

She then said to Hanuman, 'Oh the king amongst the monkeys (kapīndra)! By this token Lord Sri Ram and Laxman will definitely believe you. [The Lord will immediately recognize this ornament as being mine, and this will leave no doubt in his mind that you have indeed come and met me.] (52).

[Note—¹The "Chudamani" is an ornament worn by ladies in the hair, much like a hair pin. It is a sort of a diadem.]

अभिज्ञानार्थमन्यच्च वदामि तव सुव्रत ।
चित्कूटगिरौ पूर्वमेकदा रहसि स्थितः । मदङ्के शिर आधाय निद्राति रघुनन्दनः ॥ ५३॥
ऐन्द्रः काकस्तदागत्य नखैस्तुण्डेन चासकृत् । मत्पादाङ्गुष्ठमारक्तं विददारामिषाशया ॥ ५४॥ abhijñānārthamanyacca vadāmi tava suvrata । citrakūṭagirau pūrvamekadā rahasi sthitaḥ । madan̄ke śira ādhāya nidrāti raghunandanah ॥ 53॥ aindraḥ kākastadāgatya nakhaistuṇḍena cāsakṛt । matpādāṅguṣṭhamāraktaṁ vidadārāmiṣāśayā ॥ 54॥

53-54. Oh 'Suvrat' (i.e. one who is true to his words and righteous in his actions; it's a word Sita used to praise Hanuman)! I am telling you one more secret to make Lord Ram believe you.

Once it so happened that Raghunandan (Sri Ram) was sleeping with his head on my lap while we were alone during our sojourn on the Chitrakoot mountain (53).

Just at that time, the son of Indra (whose name was Jayant) came down to us disguised as a crow, and mistaking the red great toe of my foot to be a piece of meat, he bit and tore at it with his beaks and claws, thereby lacerating my toe and creating a bleeding wound (54).

[Note—It must be noted that Sita did not move her legs even a fraction of a centimeter nor had raised any alarm while the crow was poking and nibbling at her toe, because that would have disturbed the sleep of Lord Sri Ram. This is a great testimony of her extreme love, devotion, sense of duty and submission towards the comfort and service of her beloved Lord. She silently bore with extreme pain and discomforts herself, but did not want to disturb Lord Ram's sleep.]

ततो रामः प्रबुद्ध्याथ दृष्ट्वा पादं कृतव्रणम् ।
केन भद्रे कृतं चैतद्विप्रियं मे दुरात्मना ॥ ५५॥

इत्युक्त्वा पुरतोऽपश्यद्दायसं मां पुनः पुनः । अभिद्रवन्तं रक्ताक्तनखतुण्डं चुकोप ह ॥ ५६॥ tato rāmaḥ prabuddhyātha dr̥ṣṭvā pādaṃ kṛtavraṇam । kena bhadre kṛtaṃ caitadvipriyaṃ me durātmanā ॥ 55॥ ityuktvā purato'paśyadvāyasaṃ māṃ punaḥ punaḥ । abhidravantaṃ raktāktanakhataṇḍaṃ cukopa ha ॥ 56॥

55-56. When Lord Ram woke up from his sleep and saw the wound in my leg, he enquired, “Oh dear! Tell me, which wicked and evil soul has willingly done this harm to you?” (55).

Even as he was saying so, he watched the crow coming repeatedly near me. Its claws and beak were smeared with blood. Observing this wretch with blood sticking to its claws and beak, the Lord immediately understood what had happened while he was asleep. He felt excessively angry and exasperated at this development (56).

तृणमेकमुपादाय दिव्यास्त्रेणाभियोज्य तत् ।
चिक्षेप लीलया रामो वायसोपरि तज्ज्वलन् ॥ ५७॥
अभ्यद्रवद्दायसश्च भीतो लोकान् भ्रूमन् पुनः ।
इन्द्रब्रह्मादिभिश्चापि न शक्यो रक्षितुं तदा ॥ ५८॥
रामस्य पादयोरग्रेऽपतद्भित्त्या दयानिधेः । शरणागतमालोक्य रामस्तमिदमब्रवीत् ॥ ५९॥

tr̥ṇamekamupādāya divyāstreṇābhiyojya tat । cikṣepa līlayā rāmo vāyasopari tajjvalan ॥ 57॥ abhyadravadvāyasaśca bhīto lokān bhraman punaḥ । indrabrahmādibhiścāpi na śakyo rakṣitum tadā ॥ 58॥ rāmasya pādayoragre'patadbhityā dayānidheḥ । śaraṇāgatamālokya rāmastamidamabravīt ॥ 59॥

57-59. The Lord angrily picked up a blade of grass, activated it by infusing energy and dynamism into it, thereby transforming the otherwise ordinary blade of grass into a powerful weapon (such as an arrow), and then casually threw it at the crow as if he was shooing it away. [But that piece of grass magically transmuted itself into a powerful missile and dashed at the crow to kill it.] (57).

Then the crow became extremely terrified and ran for his life in all the worlds, but in vain. When he could not find any protection or succour anywhere, not even with Indra, his own father, or with Lord Brahma (the creator) or anyone else (58), he came and fell down at the feet of Lord Ram, petrified with fear. The Lord, who is a fountainhead of mercy, grace and compassion, saw the crow lying at his feet, seeking grace and mercy. The Lord said (59)—

अमोघमेतदस्त्रं मे दत्त्वैकाक्षिमितो वृज । सख्यं दत्त्वा गतः काक एवं पौरुषवानपि ॥ ६०॥

उपेक्षते किमर्थं मामिदानीं सोऽपि राघवः ।
 हनूमानपि तामाह श्रुत्वा सीतानुभाषितम् ॥ ६१॥
 देवि त्वां यदि जानाति स्थितामत्र स्यूतमः । करिष्यति क्षणाद्भस्म तङ्कां राक्षसमण्डिताम् ॥ ६२॥ amoghametadastraṃ me datvaikākṣimito vraja । savyaṃ dattvā gataḥ kāka evaṃ pauṛuṣavānapi ॥ 60॥ upeṣate kimarthaṃ māmidānīm so'pi rāghavaḥ । hanūmānapi tāmāha śrutvā sītānubhāṣitam ॥ 61॥ devi tvāṃ yadi jānāti sthitāmatra raghūttamaḥ । kariṣyati kṣaṇādbhasma taṅkāṃ rākṣasamaṇḍitām ॥ 62॥

60-62. 'My weapon is infallible. So sacrifice one of your eyes, and then go away from here'. [To wit, since the Lord's arrow cannot go to waste once it is shot, it must hit at some target. But the Lord spared Jayant's life by taking out one of his eyes.]

Then that crow gave (offered) its left eye to be hit by the arrow, and then went away from there.

This incident shows how powerful, manly, gallant and resourceful the Lord is (60).

This being the case, why is Raghav (Lord Ram) neglecting me now; why does he seem to be indifferent and apathetic towards me and my sufferings now? [To wit, at that time the Lord took immediate action to punish the wicked crow, but why is he delaying to punish this wicked demon Ravana now? I feel confounded.]

Hearing these remorseful words of Sita, Hanuman replied reassuringly (61), 'Oh goddess! As soon as the most exalted of the Raghus (Lord Sri Ram) comes to know of your whereabouts, then he will not waste time to turn to ashes (burn) this Lanka which is infested with demons. [But the problem till now was that the Lord was unaware of where you are. This problem has now been solved. So have some more patience; wait for some more time before the Lord comes here and burns the city of Lanka to avenge the misery caused to you by its demon inhabitants.] (62).

जानकी प्राह तं वत्स कथं त्वं योत्स्यसेऽसुरैः ।
 अतिसूक्ष्मवपुः सर्वे वानराश्च भवादृशाः ॥ ६३॥
 श्रुत्वा तद्वचनं देव्यै पूर्वरूपमदर्शयत् । मेरुमन्दरसङ्काशं रक्षोगणविभीषणम् ॥ ६४॥ jānakī prāha taṃ vatsa kathaṃ tvāṃ yotsyase'suraiḥ । atisūkṣmavapuḥ sarve vānarāśca bhavādrśāḥ ॥ 63॥ śrutvā tadvacanaṃ devyai pūrvarūpamadārśayat । merumandarasaṅkāśaṃ rakṣogaṇavibhīṣaṇam ॥ 64॥

63-64. Janki said, 'Oh son (vatsa)! You have a very diminutive form (i.e. your body is so small and of a miniature size). How will you then fight the colossus demons? All other monkeys must be small like you, aren't they?' (63).

Hearing these words of Sita that manifested her lingering doubts about him and his ability to take on the might of the ferocious demons, Hanuman showed his original form that was of a colossal dimension; a form whose size was as large and expansive as the huge legendary mountains known as Meru and Mandrachal. This form could indeed create great terror and instill fear among the demons¹ (64).

[Note—¹The huge size of his body which Hanuman showed Sita far exceeded that of the greatest of the demon warriors. Sita judged that when any of the mightiest of the demons would stand before Hanuman, the former would be dwarfed by the latter.

To wit, for all practical purposes, it would look as if Hanuman was the Gulliver standing tall, almost touching the sky overhead, in the land of the Lilliputian demons. If the need arose, Hanuman would have to simply expand his body, lift his foot, and put it down on the ground again, crushing and making a pulp of hundreds and thousands of demons underfoot at once.]

दृष्ट्वा सीता हनुमन्तं महापर्वतसन्निभम् । हर्षेण महताविष्टा प्राह तं कपिकुञ्जरम् ॥ ६५॥
समर्थोऽसि महासत्त्व द्रक्ष्यन्ति त्वां महाबलम् ।
राक्षस्यस्ते शुभः पन्था गच्छ रामान्तिकं द्रुतम् ॥ ६६॥ dr̥ṣṭvā sītā hanumantaṁ mahāparvatasannibham । harṣeṇa mahatāviṣṭā prāha taṁ kapikuñjaram ॥ 65॥ samartho'si mahāsattva drakṣyanti tvāṁ mahābalaṁ । rākṣasyaste śubhaḥ panthā gaccha rāmāntikaṁ drutam ॥ 66॥

65-66. Seeing Hanuman as huge as a great mountain, Sita felt extremely reassured, glad and happy. She said to him, who was the best amongst the monkeys (kapikuñjaram) (65), 'Oh truly great and powerful one (mahāsattva)! You are really very potent and able (samartho'si). Alright, now you must immediately go away from here, and proceed to Lord Sri Ram with haste. Otherwise, these great demonesses who are lying asleep all around here shall find out about you and create a great ruckus, throwing the secret plan out of gear. I bless you and wish you a happy journey; make haste your departure from here. Let your path be obstacle-free and happy for you' (66).

बुभुक्षितः कपिः प्राह दर्शनात्पारणं मम ।
भविष्यति फलैः सर्वैस्तव दृष्टौ स्थितौहि मे ॥ ६७॥
तथेत्युक्तः स जानक्या भक्षयित्वा फलं कपिः ।
ततः प्रस्थापितोऽगच्छज्जानकीं पूणिपत्य सः । किञ्चिद्दूरमथो गत्वा स्वात्मन्येवान्वचिन्तयत् ॥ ६८॥ bubhukṣitaḥ kapiḥ prāha darśanātpāraṇaṁ mama । bhaviṣyati phalaiḥ sarvaistava dr̥ṣṭau sthitairhi me ॥ 67॥ tathetyuktaḥ sa jānakyā bhakṣayitvā phalaṁ kapiḥ । tataḥ prasthāpito'gacchajjānakīm praṇipatya saḥ । kiñciddūramatho gatvā svātmānyevānvacintayat ॥ 68॥

67-68. The Kapi (Hanuman) was very hungry. So he said, 'I have already had your Darshan (holy sight). Now I have to break my fast by eating the fruits which I see on the trees all around you' (67).

Then, when the daughter of Janak (Sita) gave her consent, Hanuman ate those fruits, took leave of her after bowing reverentially before her, and departed from there¹.

When he had gone some distance, he thought to himself (68)—

[Note—¹We must note here that this conversation between Sita and Hanuman was held in a very hush-hush tone, virtually in a soft murmur as if some great secret and confidential matter of the greatest importance is being discussed between two individuals in such a low voice that no third person can hear anything about what is being said. The proof of this is that the many female demon guards who lay sleeping around Sita (apropos Canto 2, verse no. 55 herein above) could not have any inkling of what was going on; they were totally ignorant of Hanuman's visit to Sita.]

कार्यार्थमागतो दूतः स्वामिकार्याविरोधतः ।
अन्यत्किञ्चिदसम्पाद्य गच्छत्यधम एव सः ॥ ६९॥
अतोऽहं किञ्चिदन्यत्त्वं कृत्वा दृष्ट्वाथ रावणम् । सम्भाष्य च ततो रामदर्शनार्थं व्रजाम्यहम् ॥ ७०॥ kāryārthamāgato dūtaḥ svāmikāryāvirodhataḥ । anyatkiñcidasampādya gacchatyadhama eva saḥ ॥ 69॥ ato'haṁ kiñcidanyacca kṛtvā dr̥ṣṭvātha rāvaṇam । sambhāṣya ca tato rāmadarśanārthaṁ vrajāmyaham ॥ 70॥

69-70. 'A messenger—who comes to do his Lord's work, and having done the main part of the assigned job, returns without doing some peripheral work that is deemed to part of the mission and crucial for its complete success (because it is understood that without doing this little ancillary or subsidiary work the main mission would not be fully accomplished, although such extra little piece of work was not specifically outlined by the Lord as he thought it best to leave the finer details of the project to the discretion and wisdom of his intelligent messenger)—then such a messenger is not regarded as being fully competent and wise (for he has left something undone, which, if he had done it, would have lend shine to the successful accomplishment of the mission) (69).

Hence, I must also do something extra. I must meet Ravana and have a talk with him (to try to find out if some amicable way can be had out of this log-jam so that bloodshed can be avoided if possible, and Sita can be restored to Lord Ram without further problems).

After that I will go back to see (meet) Lord Sri Ram¹ (70).

[Note—¹Hanuman thought to himself, “Lord Ram has sent me on a mission. And what is the main objective of the mission? From what I understand, it is to free Sita from the clutches of these evil demons on the one hand, and to punish them for this evil deed on the other hand. If Ravana is persuaded to give Sita back without the use of force, so much the better as it would avoid a bloody war and a lot of bloodshed. I am sure that if he surrenders and makes peace with the Lord, the Lord, being merciful, forgiving and compassionate, is sure to spare his life; and even if the Lord decides to punish him, it would be very mild.

In case Ravana decides to refuse to give Sita and surrender himself, but to confront the Lord, and in which case we are sure to launch a fierce no-holds-barred military campaign against the demons, then let me show him a sample of what is in store for the future of Lanka and its inhabitants once the assault comes. Let me do something in Lanka which would showcase the might of Lord Ram's army.

Further, personally I am so excessively angry with Ravana, after what I have witnessed of his treatment of Sita, that I can't resist myself from taking severe revenge upon him. If I go back without humiliating Ravana, I will not be able to rest in peace.

There is another plus point in doing something spectacular in Lanka before I leave; especially something that would shake the very foundation of the confidence of the demon army, which thinks itself to be invincible and mighty, and also to break its morale, as well as instill a general psyche of great fear and horror of the impending calamity in the populace of Lanka, so that, one, they would desist from tormenting Sita any more out of suspicion that I am somewhere around the corner, observing their behaviour, and I would not only protect Sita but also wreak vengeance upon anyone who disturbs her, and second, half of the war would already been won even before our troops actually land on the soil of Lanka, because an army whose morale is broken and confidence shaken, like the demon army would be if I manage to create utter chaos and havoc in Lanka right under the nose of the demons, it is definitely a defeated army!

Then surely I would be in a position to give a complete picture to the Lord. The main objective of the Lord is to free Sita from the clutches of Ravana, so therefore if I can find some way for it by discussing the matter with Ravana beforehand, and judge what his attitude is, then it would be so much the easier for the Lord to decide the next course of his action. If war is inevitable, my actions now would demoralize the demon army completely.

So I think that if I go back with just the news that I had been able to meet Sita and have information about her whereabouts, and doing nothing else, then I think it would be a job half done. So let me complete the mission.”]

इति निश्चित्य मनसा वृक्षखण्डान् महाबलः ।
उत्पाद्याशोकवनिकां निर्वृक्षामकरोत्क्षणात् ॥ ७१॥
सीताऽऽश्रयनं त्यक्त्वा वनं शून्यं चकार सः । उत्पाटयन्तं विपिनं दृष्ट्वा राक्षसयोषितः ॥ ७२॥ अपृच्छन् जानकीं कोऽसौ वानराकृतिरुद्धटः ॥ ७३॥ iti niścitya manasā vṛkṣakhaṇḍān mahābalaḥ । utpāṭyāśokavanikāṃ nirvṛkṣāmakarotkṣaṇāt ॥ 71॥ sītā"śrayanaṃ tyaktvā vanaṃ śūnyaṃ cakāra saḥ । utpāṭayantaṃ vipinaṃ drṣṭvā rākṣasayoṣitaḥ ॥ 72॥ apṛcchan jānakīṃ ko'sau vānarākṛtirudbhaṭaḥ ॥ 73॥

71-73. Having decided so, he who was very valiant, strong, courageous and powerful (i.e. Hanuman) started uprooting all the trees of the Ashok grove, and very quickly he completely ruined the garden (71).

Leaving untouched the tree under which Sita was sitting, he laid to waste the entire garden. Seeing him destroying the magnificent royal grove, the demonesses, who were till now in deep slumber, suddenly woke up due to the commotion, and, dazed as they were, half asleep and half awake, they were totally confounded at the sudden development and the unexpected sight of a stranger, an intruder (i.e. of Hanuman). They asked Sita, 'Who is this formidable warrior in the form of a monkey?' (72-73).

जानक्युवाच ।

भवत्य एव जानन्ति मायां राक्षसनिर्मिताम् ।

नाहमेनं विजानामि दुःखशोकसमाकुला ॥ ७४॥

इत्युक्तास्त्वरितं गत्वा राक्षस्यो भयपीडिताः ।

हनूमता कृतं सर्वं रावणाय न्यवेदयन् ॥ ७५॥ jānakyuvāca ।

bhavatya eva jānanti māyāṃ rākṣasanirmitām ।

nāhamenaṃ vijānāmi duḥkhaśokasamākulā ॥ 74॥

ityuktāstvaritaṃ gatvā rākṣasyo bhayapīḍitāḥ ।

hanūmatā kṛtaṃ sarvaṃ rāvaṇāya nyavedayan ॥ 75॥

74-75. Sita replied, 'Only you can know about this demonic, illusive, deceitful trick (that the demons, especially Ravana has been playing upon me to scare and torment me). What do I know about it because I am already suffering from extreme miseries, tormented with my own sorrows and anguish, and am confounded and overwhelmed with perplexity myself to pay attention to anyone who has entered this garden? '

[To wit, it is your duty to know who enters and leaves this garden. Hasn't Ravana appointed you to guard me and keep a watch out for all intruders? Why do you ask me; take care of your own safety now, for tell me, what answer would you give to Ravana when he asks you this same question: "who is this intruder whom you allowed to enter the garden under your watch". I am too occupied with my own problems to bother about anything else. So don't ask me who this monkey is. I didn't pay attention to him as I think he is some demon in disguise sent by Ravana to tease me.]¹ (74).

When Sita said this, the terrified demonesses hurried to Ravana and told him all about the deeds of Hanuman² (75).

[Note—¹Sita has deftly tried to conceal Hanuman's identity and the fact that they have already met and chalked out a plan for Lord Ram's invasion of Lanka to free her. It should also be noted that, as far as Sita could tell, Hanuman had taken her leave and was on his way to meet Lord Ram as is very clear from verse nos. 67-68.

His return to destroy the Ashok grove was an after-thought, and Sita could not be aware of it. Hanuman had not sought her permission to wreck havoc on Lanka. That was his own decision and a sort of personal agenda; Sita was not a party to it.

Hence, she was not lying when she denied any knowledge of what was happening. She rightly thought that the demons have staged this drama to make her shiver in fear of the potential of a terrible calamity which was about to unfold in the immediate environs of her habitat. This would terrorise her sufficiently to succumb to Ravana's wishes.

²What did the demonesses tell Ravana? The next verse nos. 76-77 answer this question.]

देव कश्चिन्महासत्त्वो वानराकृतिदेहभृत् । सीतया सह सम्भाष्य ह्यशोकवनिकां क्षणात् । उत्पाद्य चैत्यप्रासादं बभञ्जामितविक्रमः ॥ ७६॥
 प्रासादरक्षिणः सर्वान् हत्वा तत्रैव तस्थिवान् ।
 तच्छ्रुत्वा तूर्णमुत्थाय वनभङ्गं महाऽप्रियम् ॥ ७७॥ deva kaścinmahāsattvo vānarākṛtidehabhṛt । sītayā saha sambhāṣya hyaśokavanikāṃ kṣaṇāt । utpāṭya caityaprasādaṃ babhañjāmitavikramaḥ ॥ 76॥ prāsādarakṣiṇaḥ sarvān hatvā tatraiva tasthivān । tacchrutvā tūrṇamutthāya vanabhaṅgaṃ mahā'priyam ॥ 77॥

76-77. 'Oh Lord! A very brave, majestic and powerful creature in the form of a monkey has talked with Sita, and has uprooted the Ashok grove almost as if in an instant¹. This mighty and valiant creature has also broken the building (the main pavilion)² of the garden (76).

He has killed all its sentries and guards, and presently he is still sitting right there, in a defiant mood³.

As soon as Ravana heard the most unpleasant news of the destruction of the garden-forest which was very dear to him (77)—

[Note—¹It is clear from the report of these female demon guards that though they were apparently sleeping, at least some of them only pretended to sleep but were actually awake at the time Hanuman was talking with Sita. But they could not hear what was being said; they could only see them talking with each other.

So why did they not immediately get up when they saw a stranger talking with Sita? There are two plausible answers: one is that those who woke up decided to pretend to keep sleeping so that they can quietly hear the proceedings and then report the entire conversation to Ravana, who would be very glad with them and reward them for this information, and second, they were so terrified on seeing a stranger with an unconventional form with which they were unacquainted, reminding them of the horrifying dream of Trijata which she had told them a little while ago (apropos Canto 2, verse nos. 49-54), that they chose to keep still and lie like someone lost in deep sleep; they feared that this stranger would pounce upon them and strangle them to death if he finds out that they have woken up and discovered him.

When this most unexpected bit of news was conveyed to Ravana, he was so stunned that he was out of his wits altogether for he could not think of even asking these guards a very basic but pertinent question: "What were they doing when this intruder entered the garden, why did they not raise an alarm; why did they allow him to go out of the garden unchallenged; and why did they keep quiet during the time he met Sita, went out, and then returned to unleash havoc in the garden, what were they doing in the meantime? What were the other male demon guards doing; why did they not call out for immediate help?”

²The word used in the text is “caityaprāsādam”, which literally means a building that looks like a ‘shrine’. It was perhaps a shrine of the deity of the demons which Ravana worshipped. Hanuman had destroyed its outer structure of the building, but he did not disturb its inner chambers, the sanctum sanctorum, where the idol of the deity was installed. As to the question if it is proper to destroy any shrine of whatever deity it was dedicated to, the answer is that if some evil Spirit, say a devil or satan, is worshipped by a person who himself is devilish in nature, like Ravana in this case, and who does not believe in the ‘true God’, then no sin befalls on a faithful who believes in this ‘true God’ if he denounces such evil practices.

Besides that, it was a time just preceding a war, and this deity installed in the shrine, if it was indeed a ‘shrine’ in the first place, was the object of worship of demons, the evil and sinful creatures, so, if after taking due precaution not to disturb the main idol and its sanctum chamber, the outer structure of the building, such as its courtyard, hall, rooms etc. were demolished by Hanuman, there was no great sin or unrighteousness done.

Hanuman had no idea what that building was; it had no external signs of a sacred place, like that of a temple. From its appearance it looked like a citadel meant to be a rest house or a pavilion, a place for pleasure and enjoying the garden.

³The reader would note that there is a clear difference in the way this episode of “Hanuman eating fruits of the Ashok garden and ruining it” has been described in the two scriptures we are quoting for the purpose of our own narration, viz. Adhyatma Ramayan and Ram Charit Manas. Whereas in Adhyatma Ramayan, which we are currently reading, Hanuman had eaten fruits quietly and had taken leave of Sita to return back to Lord Ram, but had second thoughts on the way, returned to the garden, and then started destroying it (apropos: verse nos. 68-71), while in Ram Charit Manas he had destroyed the garden directly, in the very first instance, while he was eating fruits (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18).

Secondly, in Adhyatma Ramayan we read that it were the female demon guards who had rushed to inform Ravana about the developments (apropos: verse no. 75), whereas in Ram Charit Manas it were the few male sentries, who had somehow escaped being beaten or killed by Hanuman, who rushed to tell Ravana that the garden has been ruined (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 18).

Thirdly, in Adhyatma Ramayan we read that Hanuman had also destroyed some of the buildings in the garden (apropos: verse no. 76), but in Ram Charit Manas no such thing is mentioned.]

किङ्करान् प्रेषयामास नियुतं राक्षसाधिपः ।

निभग्नचैत्यप्रासादप्रथमान्तरसंस्थितः ॥ ७८॥

हनुमान् पर्वताकारो लोहस्तम्भकृतायुधः ।

किञ्चित्लाङ्गूलचलनो रक्तास्यो भीषणाकृतिः ॥ ७९॥ kiṅkarān preṣayāmāsa niyutaṁ rākṣasādhipaḥ । nibhagnacaityaaprāsādaprathamāntarasamsthitaḥ ॥ 78॥ hanumān parvatākāro lohastambhakṛtāyudhaḥ । kiñcillāṅgūlacalano raktāsyo bhīṣaṇākṛtiḥ ॥ 79॥

78-79. The king of the demons (Ravana) immediately dispatched a large number of attendants (soldiers). Here in the garden in the meantime, Hanuman was sitting in the forecourt of the broken pavilion (78).

He had assumed a huge mountain-like colossus form by that time. He used the broken iron pillar of the pavilion as his club or baton (and waited in ambush for the soldiers to arrive). His tail was slowly waving to and fro menacingly, while his face was reddened with anger, and his countenance was formidably terrifying¹ (79).

[Note—¹Hanuman waited in anticipation for the arrival of troops. He picked up a huge iron pillar of the citadel which he would use as a mace, a sort of a battering ram, if he is attacked by the demons. His anger and eagerness to give a fight is evident from his erect tail that was swaying menacingly, the red colour of his face, and his general appearance of someone seething with anger and ready to strike back at his adversary at the first opportunity.]

आपतन्तं महासङ्घं राक्षसानां ददर्श सः ।
चकार सिंहनादं च श्रुत्वा ते मुमुहूर्भृशम् ॥ ८०॥
हनुमन्तमथो दृष्ट्वा राक्षसा भीषणाकृतिम् ।
निर्जघ्नुर्विविधास्तूयैः सर्वराक्षसघातिनम् ॥ ८१॥
तत उत्थाय हनुमान् मुद्गरेण समन्ततः । निष्पिपेष क्षणादेव मशकानिव यूथपः ॥ ८२॥ āpatantaṁ mahāsaṅghaṁ rākṣasānāṁ dadarśa saḥ । cakāra siṃhanādaṁ ca śrutvā te mumuhurbhṛśam ॥ 80॥ hanumantamatho drṣṭvā rākṣasā bhīṣaṇākṛtim । nirjaghnurvividhāstraughaiḥ sarvarākṣasaghātinam ॥ 81॥

tata utthāya hanumān mudgareṇa samantataḥ । niṣpipeṣa kṣaṇādeva maśakāniva yūthapaḥ ॥ 82॥

80-82. Seeing that a huge army of demons has arrived, Hanuman made a loud roar like that of an angry lion which made all the entire demon warriors stunned and stupefied with fear (80).

Then seeing Hanuman—who was the slayer of all demons, and who had a colossus body—the demons shot various types of weapons at him (81).

Then, just as a great king of the elephants would easily crush or grind underfoot countless mosquitoes to pulp, Hanuman immediately pressed and crushed them all by his baton, which in this case was the iron pillar of the demolished pavilion (apropos: verse no. 79) (82).

निहतान् किङ्करान् श्रुत्वा रावणः क्रोधमूर्च्छितः । पञ्च सेनापतींस्तत्र प्रेषयामास दुर्मदान् ॥ ८३॥
 हनूमानपि तान् सर्वाल्लोहस्तम्भेन चाहनत् । ततः क्रुद्धो मन्त्रिसुतान् प्रेषयामास सप्त सः ॥ ८४॥

nihatān kiṅkarān śrutvā rāvaṇaḥ krodhamūrcchitaḥ । pañca senāpatīṁstatra preṣayāmāsa durmadān ॥ 83॥ hanūmānapī tān sarvāṁllohistambhena cāhanat । tataḥ kruddho mantrisutān preṣayāmāsa sapta saḥ ॥ 84॥

83-84. Hearing the death of his servants (soldiers), Ravana became mad with anger; he literally he fainted out of shock and anger (“rāvaṇaḥ krodhamūrcchitaḥ”). He sent five of his most talented and virtually invincible commanders (83).

Hanuman killed all of them in a moment with his iron rod. After that, he (Ravana) sent seven of his ministers’ sons (84).

आगतानपि तान् सर्वान् पूर्ववद्वानरेश्वरः ।
 क्षणाग्निःशेषतो हत्वा लोहस्तम्भेन मारुतिः ॥ ८५॥
 पूर्वास्थानमुपाश्रित्य प्रतीक्षन् राक्षसान् स्थितः । ततो जगाम बलवान् कुमारोऽक्षः प्रतापवान् ॥ ८६॥ āgatānapī tān sarvān pūrvavadvānareśvaraḥ । kṣaṇāgnihśeṣato hatvā lohastambhena mārutiḥ ॥ 85॥ pūrvasthānamupāśritya pratīkṣan rākṣasān sthitaḥ । tato jagāma balavān kumāro'kṣaḥ pratāpavān ॥ 86॥

85-86. The king of monkeys, the son of the wind god (Hanuman) killed all of them in an instant with the iron pillar, as soon as they arrived there (85).

Then he sat at his earlier perch, waiting in ambush for others to come.

Then Akshaya Kumar, the strong, valiant and famed prince (who was a son of Ravana), himself came to the site of action (86).

तमुत्पपात हनुमान् दृष्ट्वाकाशे समुद्ररः ।
 गगनात्त्वरितो मूर्ध्नि मुद्गरेण व्यताडयत् ॥ ८७॥ हत्वा तमक्षं निःशेषं बलं सर्वं चकार सः ॥ ८८॥ tamutpapāta hanumān dr̥ṣṭvākāśe samudgarah । gaganāttvarito mūrdhni mudgareṇa vyatāḍayat ॥ 87॥

 hatvā tamakṣaṁ nihśeṣaṁ balaṁ sarvaṁ cakāra saḥ ॥ 88॥

87-88. Seeing him, Hanuman took his baton and immediately flew high up in the sky. From there, he threw that iron pillar with a great force on his (Akshaya Kumar's) head (87).

In this way he killed Akshaya Kumar and also removed all traces of his forces (by crushing them all simultaneously with the same iron pillar) (88).

ततः श्रुत्वा कुमारस्य वधं राक्षसपुङ्गवः ।
क्रोधेन महताविष्ट इन्द्रजेतारमब्रवीत् ॥ ८९॥
पुत्रं गच्छाम्यहं तत्र यत्रास्ते पुत्रहा रिपुः । हत्वा तमथवा बद्ध्वा आनयिष्यामि तेऽन्तिकम् ॥ ९०॥

tataḥ śrutvā kumārasya vadhaṁ rākṣasapuṅgavaḥ । krodhena mahatāviṣṭa indrajētāramabravīt ॥ 89॥ putraṁ gacchāmyaham tatra yatrāste putrahā ripuḥ । hatvā tamathavā baddhvā ānayaṣyāmi te'ntikam ॥90॥

89-90. Hearing of the death of the prince (Akshaya Kumar), the lord of the demons (Ravana) became very angry, and he said to Indrajeet (who was also known as Meghnad, Ravana's other son) (89), 'Oh son! I am going to where my enemy is, the one who has killed my son, and I shall either kill him or tie him and bring him to you' (90).

इन्द्रजित्पितरं प्राह त्यज शोकं महामते ।
मयि स्थिते किमर्थं त्वं भाषसे दुःखितं वचः ॥ ९१॥
बद्ध्वाऽऽनेष्ये द्रुतं तात वानरं ब्रह्मपाशतः । इत्युक्त्वा रथमारुह्य राक्षसैर्बहुभिर्वृतः ॥ ९२॥ indrajitpitaram prāha tyaja śokaṁ mahāmate । mayi sthite kimarthaṁ tvam bhāṣase duḥkhiṭaṁ vacaḥ ॥ 91॥ baddhvā"neṣye drutaṁ tāta vānaram brahmapāśataḥ । ityuktvā rathamāruhya rākṣasairbahubhirvṛtaḥ ॥ 92॥

91-92. Indrajeet said to his father, 'Oh my wise, intelligent and great father (mahāmate)! Stop lamenting and feeling remorseful in this way. Why do you say such sorrowful words, full of anguish and grief, when I am here to serve your majesty? (91).

I shall soon bring that monkey to you, tied in the 'Brahmapash'¹. [You need not go there for this simple thing.]'

Saying this he boarded a chariot, and accompanied (and surrounded) by countless demons, he went to face Hanuman (92).

[Note—¹The Brahma-pash is a powerful weapon that, when shot, ties its victim in a snare from which it is virtually impossible to escape. It was granted to Meghnad by the creator Brahma, and hence it gets its name from the latter. It is a magical weapon, activated by use of Mantras that are special formulas employed to deploy certain weapons that only a handful gods are entitled to use. This weapon previously belonged to Brahma, and hence it was exclusive to him; but now it was in the hands of Meghnad. When activated, this weapon could tie its victim without killing him; it was regarded as being infallible, and could not be countered.]

जगाम वायुपुत्रस्य समीपं वीरविक्रमः ।
ततोऽतिगर्जितं श्रुत्वा स्तम्भमुद्यस्य वीर्यवान् ॥ ९३॥
उत्पपात नभोदेशं गरुत्मानिव मारुतिः । ततो भ्रमन्तं नभसि हनूमन्तं शिलीमुखैः ॥ ९४॥
विद्ध्वा तस्य शिरोभागमिषुभिश्चाष्टभिः पुनः ।
हृदयं पादयुगलं षड्भिरेकेन वालधिम् ॥ ९५॥
भेदयित्वा ततो घोरं सिंहनादमथाकरोत् ।
ततोऽतिहर्षाद्धनुमान् स्तम्भमुद्यस्य वीर्यवान् ॥ ९६॥ jagāma vāyuputrasya samīpaṃ vīravikramaḥ । tato'tigarjitaṃ śrutvā stambhamudyasya vīryavān ॥ 93॥ utpapāta nabhodeśaṃ garutmāniva mārutiḥ । tato bhramantaṃ nabhasi hanūmantaṃ śīlīmukhaiḥ ॥ 94॥ viddhvā tasya śirobhāgamiṣubhiścāṣṭabhiḥ punaḥ । hr̥dayaṃ pādayugalaṃ ṣaḍbhirekena vāladhim ॥ 95॥ bhedayitvā tato ghoraṃ siṃhanādamathākarot । tato'tiharṣāddhanumān stambhamudyasya vīryavān ॥ 96॥

93-96. That most valiant and brave one (i.e. Meghnad) went near the son of the wind god (Hanuman). Then the brave and courageous one (Hanuman)—who had the iron pillar in his hands—heard him (Meghnad) roar very loudly (93).

The son of the wind god flew into the sky like the bird ‘Garud’ (the legendary bird that is the mount of Lord Vishnu; here meaning “Hanuman flew up in the sky very swiftly”). Seeing Hanuman moving in the sky, Meghnad (94) shot eight arrows aimed to strike at his head. Then he aimed six more arrows at Hanuman—one at his heart, two at both his feet, and one at his tail (95).

Then he (Meghnad) roared thunderously like a lion. The manly, brave and valorous Hanuman lifted his iron pillar delightfully (to strike once again at Meghnad) (96).

जघान सारथिं साश्वं रथं चाचूर्णयत्क्षणात् । ततोऽन्यं रथमादाय मेघनादो महाबलः ॥ ९७॥
शीघ्रं ब्रह्मास्त्रमादाय बद्ध्वा वानरपुङ्गवम् । निनाय निकटं राज्ञो रावणस्य महाबलः ॥ ९८॥ jaghāna sārathiṃ sāśvaṃ rathaṃ cācūrṇayatkṣaṇāt । tato'nyaṃ rathamādāya meghanādo mahābalaḥ ॥ 97॥ śīghraṃ brahmāstramādāya baddhvā vānarapuṅgavam ।

nināya nikaṭaṃ rājñō rāvaṇasya mahābalaḥ ॥ 98॥

97-98. He quickly (Hanuman) killed Indrajeet's charioteer and crushed his chariot, along with its horses, reducing them to dust. Then Meghnad, who was very brave and strong, immediately mounted a second chariot (97).

Peeved and exasperated as this humiliation, Meghnad tied the most exalted of the monkeys (Hanuman) in the snare of the Brahmpash (apropos of verse no. 92), and then took him as a captive to the king (to Ravana) (98).

यस्य नाम सततं जपन्ति येऽज्ञानकर्मकृतबंधनं क्षणात् । सद्य एव परिमुच्य तत्पदं यान्ति कोटिरविभासुरं शिवम् ॥ ९९॥

yasya nāma satataṃ japanti ye'jñānakarmakṛtabaṃdhanam kṣaṇāt । sadya eva parimucya tatpadaṃ yānti koṭiravibhāsuram śivam ॥ 99॥

99. By constantly repeating Lord Sri Ram's divine and holy Name, which is very potent and powerful, the devotee is able to instantaneously cut through the snare created by the virtue of ignorance, worldly delusions, and the cumulative effect of the various deeds done and actions taken by him in this life (ye'jñānakarmakṛtabaṃdhanam).

Having thus broken free from this shackle that tie him to the world of transmigration, the devotee is able to attain emancipation and salvation for his self; he attains the most exalted state of blessedness, beatitude and felicity. It is an excellent state of existence that is most glorious and pure, and it is as splendidous and radiant as millions of suns shining together (99).

तस्यैव रामस्य पदाम्बुजं सदा हृत्पद्ममध्ये सुनिधाय मारुतिः । सदैव निर्मुक्तसमस्तबन्धनः किं तस्य पार्श्वैरितरैश्च बन्धनैः ॥ १००॥ tasyaiva rāmasya padāmbujam sadā hr̥tpadmamadhye sunidhāya mārutiḥ । sadaiva nirmuktasamastabandhanaḥ kiṃ tasya pāśairitaraiśca bandhanaiḥ ॥ 100॥

100. The lotus-like feet of that same Lord, Sri Ram (the glory of whose name is eulogized in verse no. 99 herein above), is always enshrined by the son of the wind god (Hanuman) in the centre (core) of his lotus-like heart, and he always remembers the Lord. By doing so, he is eternally free from all the shackles/fetters/snares/knots etc. [To wit, Hanuman is eternally free from all sorts of fetters that tie an ordinary creature to this mundane and delusory world consisting of the cycle of transmigration—because he is an ardent devotee of Lord Ram, has the image of the Lord enshrined in the temple symbolized by his lotus-like heart, and he remembers the Lord and keeps on repeating his holy Name every moment of his life.]

This being the case, say then, what can ever happen to him (Hanuman) by this ordinary Brahma-pash, or for that matter, from any other snare?

[To wit, no snare in this world is strong enough to be able to trap Hanuman. If he had wanted, he could have easily overcome the Brahma-pash and remain free. So why was he caught? Verily indeed, he voluntarily allowed himself to be caught by the Brahma-pash because he had other plans in his mind, and to implement these plans it was necessary to get caught so that he would be brought face to face with Ravana, giving him a chance to have a dialogue with him (apropos: verse no. 70 herein above). Besides this, he thought it wise to honour the dignity and majesty of this unique weapon as it primarily belonged to the creator Brahma, and to defy it would be tantamount to showing disrespect to Brahma.] (100)

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे सुन्दरकाण्डे
तृतीयः सर्गः ॥ ३॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde sundarakāṇḍe
tṛtīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 3॥

Thus ends Canto 3 of Sundar Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and his consort Uma.

7.2.4: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 4:

The heated dialogue between Hanuman and Ravana; the Burning of Lanka:-

॥ चतुर्थः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

यान्तं कपीन्द्रं धृतपाशबन्धनं विलोकयन्तं नगरं विभीतवत् ।
अताडयन्मुष्टितलैः सुकोपनाः पौराः समन्तादनुयान्त ईक्षितुम् ॥ १॥

॥ caturthaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

yāntaṁ kapīndraṁ dhṛtapāśabandhanaṁ vilokayantaṁ nagaraṁ vibhītavat । atāḍayanmuṣṭitalaiḥ sukopanaḥ paurāḥ samantādanuyānta īkṣitum ॥ 1॥

1. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! When the lord of the monkeys (Hanuman) was passing through the city, pretending to be terrified and utterly scared after being captured and tied by the Brahmash (by Meghnad, though actually he wasn't at all afraid of the demons), he looked around the city and its inhabitants. The citizens, when they heard of the news, assembled from all over the city, from every corner of it, to have a glimpse of the mysterious captive. The crowd that gathered followed Hanuman, mocking and jeering at him; they scorned at him, and angrily punched him with their clenched fists (1).

ब्रह्मास्त्रमेनं क्षणमात्रसङ्गमं कृत्वा गतं ब्रह्मवरेण सत्वरम् ।
ज्ञात्वा हनूमानपि फल्गुरज्जुभिर्धृतो ययौ कार्यविशेषगौरवात् ॥ २॥ brahmāstramenam kṣaṇamātrasaṅgamaṁ kṛtvā gataṁ brahmavareṇa satvaram ।

jñātvā hanūmānapi phalgurajjubhirdhṛto yayau kāryaviśeṣagauravāt ॥ 2॥

2. The ‘Brahmastra’ (the special weapon of Brahma given to Meghnad by him; both Brahmastra and Brahmpash are the same thing; they are synonyms) had, however, only touched the body of Hanuman for only a fraction of a second, and then it went back to Brahma, the creator, because of the boons the latter had given to Hanuman¹.

In spite of being aware of it (that he is immune to any harm from Brahma’s weapon), Hanuman (voluntarily) remained tied by humble ropes² for the greater cause that he had determined to do, in a most dramatic manner, for Lord Sri Ram (2).

[Note—¹Brahma, the creator, had given a boon to Hanuman that his weapons will not have any effect on him—refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 36, verse no. 21. Brahma had also prophesized that during the war with Ravana and the demon army at Lanka, Hanuman would perform miraculous deeds that would have no parallel in this creation, he would not suffer from any great injury during the war, and his actions to accomplish Lord Ram’s mission successfully would be lauded and eulogized throughout the world for all times to come—refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 36, verse nos. 22-25.

²To wit, Hanuman could have very easily broken free from the ropes, but he preferred to remain ensnared in a humble and frightened way, as if he was out of his wits, for there were bigger things at stake, and he would get ample opportunities a little later on to show that nothing can keep him tied against his will. For sooth, he would soon break free from this snare, and show his dexterity and stupendous muscle power by burning Lanka.

In verse no. 14 herein below, Hanuman clearly tells Ravana that he was fully aware that the Brahmpash had no power to capture him, yet he still preferred to get himself caught by it so that he can have an opportunity to come to his court and have a direct interview with him so that he can advise the latter about what was good for him.]

सभान्तरस्थस्य च शवणस्य तं पुरो निधायाह बलारिजितदा । बद्धो मया ब्रह्मवरेण वानरः समागतोऽनेन हता महासुराः ॥ ३॥ sabhāntarasthasya ca rāvaṇasya taṁ puro nidhāyāha balārijittadā ।

baddho mayā brahmavareṇa vānaraḥ samāgato'nena hatā mahāsuraḥ ॥ 3॥

3. Then Indrajeet (literally one who has forcibly conquered Indra; Meghnad) took him (Hanuman) to the court of Ravana, and said, 'I have brought this monkey tied up by the powers of the boon given to me by Brahma (i.e. by using the 'Brahmpash'). This is the fellow who has killed many of our brave warriors (3).

यदुक्तमत्रार्य विचार्य मन्त्रिभिर्विधीयतामेष न लौकिको हरिः । ततो विलोक्याह स राक्षसेश्वरः पृहस्तमग्रे स्थितमञ्जनाद्रिभम् ॥ ४॥ yaduktamatrārya vicārya mantribhirvidhīyatāmeṣa na laukiko hariḥ । tato vilokyāha sa rākṣaseśvaraḥ prahastamagre sthitamañjanādribham ॥ 4॥

4. Consult with your ministers and decide what to do with him, for he is no ordinary monkey (na laukiko hariḥ).

[Father, decide what punishment should be given to him, and what course of action is to be adopted with respect to him. Remember that he is not an ordinary monkey who has entered Lanka by mistake; for no ordinary monkey would ever have been able to single-handedly kill my brave brother Akshaya Kumar as well as the troop of demons that was sent to capture him. Surely, there is certainly something very serious and sinister concerning this intruder. I have a hunch that he is definitely a spy of our enemy, and one who has great strength. So, once we have managed to lay our hands upon him, let's make the best of it.]

Then the king of the demons (Ravana) looked at Prahasta (one of his senior ministers); he had a dark complexion like that of the Kajjal mountain¹, and he was sitting right in the front.

Ravana said to Prahasta (4)—

[Note—¹The word “Kajjal” means a black paste made of soot and oil that is applied to the eyelids as an ointment. The “mountain of Kajjal” that Prahasta resembled implies that he had a huge dark body.]

पृहस्त पृच्छैनमसौ किमागतः किमत्र कार्यं कुत एव वानरः । वनं किमर्थं सकलं विनाशितं हताः किमर्थं मम राक्षसा बलात् ॥ ५॥ prahasta pṛcchainamasau kimāgataḥ kimatra kāryaṃ kuta eva vānaraḥ ।

vanaṃ kimarthaṃ sakalaṃ vināśitaṃ hatāḥ kimarthaṃ mama rākṣasā balāt ॥
5॥

5. 'Oh Prahasta! Ask this monkey why has he come here? What work or purpose does he have here? Where has he come from? Why has he ruined my whole garden? And why has he killed all my demon warriors so mercilessly and ruthlessly?' (5).

ततः पृहस्तो हनुमन्तमादरात् पपृच्छ केन प्रहितोऽसि वानर ।
भयं च ते मास्तु विमोक्ष्यसे मया सत्यं वदस्वाखिलराजसन्निधौ ॥ ६॥ tataḥ prahasto hanumantamādarāt papraccha kena prahito'si vānara ।

bhayaṃ ca te māstu vimokṣyase mayā satyaṃ vadasvākhilarājasannidhau ॥
6॥

6. Then Prahasta asked Hanuman very respectfully, 'Oh monkey! Who has sent you? Don't be afraid—tell everything truthfully before the emperor (Ravana). Then I shall set you free' (6).

ततोऽतिहर्षात्पवनात्मजो रिपुं निरीक्ष्य लोकत्रयकण्टकासुरम् । वक्तुं प्रचक्रे रघुनाथसत्कथां क्रमेण रामं मनसा स्मरन्मुहुः ॥ ७॥ tato'tiharṣātpavanātmajo ripuṃ nirīkṣya lokatrayakaṇṭakāsuram । vaktuṃ pracakre raghunāthasatkathāṃ krameṇa rāmaṃ manasā smaranmuhuh ॥ 7॥

7. Then seeing his arch enemy, the demon (Ravana)—who was like a thorn for the three worlds¹ (i.e. the whole creation)—the son of the wind god (Hanuman) first invoked the grace of Lord Ram and remembered him in his heart, which made him feel extremely exhilarated and delighted (as he felt honoured to be doing the Lord's work for him, like a chosen one). Then he started to narrate the story of Lord Raghunath (Sri Ram) in a chronological order, in brief¹ (7)—

[Note—¹Ravana had wished to know who Hanuman was, and for what purpose had he come to Lanka. This is why Hanuman narrated the story of Lord Ram so that everything would be clear to Ravana.]

शृणु स्फुटं देवगणाद्यमित्रं हे रामस्य दूतोऽहमशेषहृत्स्थितेः । यस्याखिलेशस्य हताधुना त्वया भार्या स्वनाशाय शुनेव सद्भविः ॥ ८॥ śṛṇu sphuṭaṃ devagaṇādyamitra he rāmasya dūto'hamaśeṣahr̥tsthiteḥ । yasyākhileśasya hr̥tādhunā tvayā bhāryā svanāśāya śuneva saddhaviḥ ॥ 8॥

8. Hanuman said, 'Oh the enemy of Gods (devagaṇādyamitra), listen clearly and attentively. Just as a dog steals the offerings of a fire sacrifice¹, you have stealthily abducted the chaste wife of the 'Lord of the entire universe', Lord Sri Ram.

I am his messenger, and I warn you that you have taken this ill-thought and ill-advised evil step that would prove to be your own ruin (8).

[Note—¹Even Sita had earlier alluded to this simile in Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 2, verse no. 33.

स राघवोऽभ्येत्य मतङ्गपर्वतं सुग्रीवमैत्रीमनलस्य सन्निधौ । कृत्यैकबाणेन निहत्य वालिनं सुग्रीवमेवाधिपतिं चकार तम् ॥ ९॥ sa rāghavo'bhyetya mataṅgaparvatam sugrīvamaitrīmanalasya sannidhau । kṛtvaikabāṇena nihatya vālinam sugrīvamevādhipatiṃ cakāra tam ॥ 9॥

9. That Raghav (i.e. Lord Ram, whom I have referred to just now) came to the Matang Mountain (i.e. to Kishkindha), and there he made friends with Sugriv with the sacred fire as a witness. He killed Baali with a single arrow, and made Sugriv the king of the monkeys (9).

स वानराणामधिपो महाबली महाबलैर्वानरयूथकोटिभिः । रामेण सार्धं सह लक्ष्मणेन भोः प्रवर्षणेऽमर्षयुतोऽवतिष्ठते ॥ १०॥ sa vānarāṇāmadhipo mahābalī mahābalairvānarayūthakoṭibhiḥ । rāmeṇa sārḍham saha lakṣmaṇena bhoḥ pravarṣaṇe'marṣayuto'vatiṣṭhate ॥ 10॥

10. Presently, that great and valiant king of the monkeys (Sugriv), along with millions of other monkey commanders who are as manly, courageous and brave as him, and accompanied by Lord Ram and Laxman, are residing on the Prabarshan mountain¹. They are very angry (at what you have done, and are ready to vent their wrath on you as soon as they possibly can) (10).

[Note—¹Sugriv had come to Prabarshan mountain along with his army commanders when Laxman had gone to fetch him from Kishkindha. Presently he was camping with Lord Ram and Laxman on Mt. Prabarshan, along with his commanders. That is why Hanuman said that they are residing on this mountain instead of Kishkindha. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 59-63—to Canto 6, verse nos. 1-19.]

सञ्चोदितास्तेन महाहरीश्वरा धरासुतां मार्गयितुं दिशो दश ।
तत्राहमेकः पवनात्मजः कपिः सीतां विचिन्वन् शनकैः समागतः ॥ ११॥

sañcoditāstena mahāharīśvarā dharāsutāṃ mārgayitum diśo daśa । tatrāhamekaḥ pavanātmajaḥ kapiḥ sītāṃ vicinvan śanakaiḥ samāgataḥ ॥ 11॥

11. He (Sugriv) has sent very senior and famed lords of the different groups of monkeys (i.e. the many chieftains of the monkey race who ruled over different parts of the extended kingdom of Kishkindha), along with their attendants and troops, in all the ten directions¹ in search of the daughter of the earth (Sita)².

Out of those monkeys, I am one, and I am the son of the wind god. While gradually searching for her, I have happened to come here (11).

[Note—¹The “ten directions” of the world are the following: north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, zenith and nadir. This means that teams had been dispatched in all the directions of earth to search for Sita.

²Sita is called “the daughter of earth” (dharāsutām) because she was found in a pitcher by her father Janak while he was clearing the field for the performance of a fire sacrifice. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 58-60.]

दृष्टा मया पद्मपलाशलोचना सीता कपित्वाद्विपिनं विनाशितम् । दृष्ट्वा ततोऽहं रभसा समागतान् मां हन्तुकामान् धृतचापसायकान् ॥ १२॥

dr̥ṣṭā mayā padmapalāśalocanā sītā kapitvādvipinaṃ vināśitam ।
dr̥ṣṭvā tato'haṃ rabhasā samāgatānmāṃ hantukāmān dhṛtacāpasāyakān ॥ 12॥

12. I have already seen the lotus-eyed Sita. Then I have destroyed the forest due to my inherent nature as a monkey. When I saw that the demons were coming towards me, armed with bows and arrows, and appeared eager to kill me (12)—

मया हतास्ते परिरक्षितं वपुः प्रियो हि देहोऽखिलदेहिनां प्रभो ।
ब्रह्मास्त्रपाशेन निबध्य मां ततः समागमन्मेघनिनादनामकः ॥ १३॥ mayā hatāste parirakṣitaṃ vapuḥ priyo hi deho'khiladehināṃ prabho । brahmāstrapāśena nibadhya māṃ tataḥ samāgamanmeghaninādanāmakah ॥

13॥

13. —Then I killed them to protect myself, because oh lord, a person's body is dear to him, and every living being tries to defend himself if attacked. [To wit, if they hadn't attacked me I wouldn't have retaliated. It's not my fault that they were killed while I was only trying to save myself.]

After that, this demon named Meghnad had tied me with the snare (Brahmpash) given to him by Brahma, and thereafter he brought me here as a prisoner (13).

स्पृष्ट्वैव मां ब्रह्मवरप्रभावतः त्यक्त्वा गतं सर्वमवैमि रावण । तथाप्यहं बद्ध इवागतो हितं प्रवक्तुकामः करुणारसार्द्रधीः ॥ १४॥

spr̥ṣṭvaiva māṃ brahmavaraprabhāvataḥ tyaktvā gataṃ sarvamavaimi rāvaṇa । tathāpyaham baddha ivāgato hitaṃ pravaktukāmaḥ karuṇārasārdhradhīḥ ॥ 14॥

14. Oh Ravana! Though I knew fully well that this Brahma's weapon had gone back as soon as it had touched me (refer verse no. 2 above), I still came here tied in shackles just to tell you something concerning your own welfare and well-being out of my compassion and mercy for you. [I also wished to avoid unnecessary bloodshed if possible.] (14).

विचार्य लोकस्य विवेकतो गतिं न राक्षसीं बुद्धिमुपैहि रावण । दैवीं गतिं संसृतिमोक्षहैतुकीं समाश्रयात्यन्तहिताय देहि नः ॥ १५॥ vicārya lokasya vivekato gatiṃ na rākṣasīm buddhimupaihi rāvaṇa । daivīm gatiṃ saṃsṛtimokṣahaitukīm samāśrayātyantahitāya dehinaḥ ॥ 15॥

15. Oh Ravana! You must contemplate; you must ponder over the matter wisely, and think about the fate of all creatures in this mortal world of transmigration.

Do not embrace demonic tendencies and do not follow evil inclinations of the mind. Instead, you must follow the path of righteousness and auspiciousness which leads all the creatures to the destination that would give them eternal peace and blessedness, the path that helps the creature to attain liberation and deliverance from the cycle of transmigration, a path that helps the creature to find emancipation and salvation for the soul (15).

त्वं ब्रह्मणो ह्युत्तमवंशसम्भवः ।
पौलस्त्यपुत्रोऽसि कुबेरबान्धवः ।
देहात्मबुद्ध्यापि च पश्य राक्षसो नास्यात्मबुद्ध्या किमु राक्षसो नहि ॥ १६॥ tvam brahmaṇo hyuttamavaṃśasambhavaḥ । paulastyaputro'si kuberabāndhavaḥ । dehātmabuddhyāpi ca paśya rākṣaso nāsyātmabuddhyā kimu rākṣaso nahi ॥ 16॥

16. [Look at the great and illustrious family to which you belong.] You have taken birth in the most exalted clan descending directly from Lord Brahma, the creator (i.e. you are a Brahmin by birth). You are a son of Visrava, who is the son of sage Pulastya (i.e. you are the grandson of sage Pulastya). Further, you are a brother of Kuber (the treasurer of Gods).

Hence, you are not a true 'demon' even by the virtue of your birth, genealogy or relationships.

[To wit, since your grandfather and father are great and renowned sages, your birth can never be said to be like an ordinary demon who is born from demon parents. Your brother is the treasurer of the Gods; hence you have a god as a sibling. Then why do you consider yourself a 'demon' and act like one? Change your attitude, for it appears that you are under some great delusion about your own self. Wake up while there is still time, and mend your ways.]

Surely, therefore, you are not a demon by your truthful 'self'. [Your soul, your Atma, your inner being, is as pure and holy as it can be. Then why are you behaving in such an evil way that does not behoove of your noble heritage; why do you forget about your great inheritance? Say, what has happened to you; can't you see for yourself your own mistakes?] (16).

शरीरबुद्धीन्द्रियदुःखसन्ततिः न ते न च त्वं तव निर्विकारतः ।

अज्ञानहेतोश्च तथैव सन्ततेः असत्त्वमस्याः स्वपतो हि दृश्यवत् ॥ १७॥

śarīrabuddhīndriyaduḥkhasantatiḥ na te na ca tvam tava nirvikārataḥ । ajñānahetośca tathaiva santateḥ asattvamasyāḥ svapato hi dṛśyavat ॥ 17॥

17. I shall tell you to the true nature of your ‘truthful self’, your ‘true identity’, which you have forgotten about, or are ignorant of. Listen: The Body, intellect, the pleasures of the sense organs, and all such derivatives of this material existence (śarīrabuddhīndriyaduḥkhasantatiḥ)—none of them belong to you, none of them represent your true self, none of them reflect your true nature, and neither do you represent any such thing that is related to this gross mortal world¹.

Verily, the fact is that you are ignorant of your ‘true self’, because it seems that delusions have had a better hold of you. So it is like you are living in a world of dreams, and you ought to wake up from it (17).

[Note—¹Listen, oh Ravana. All these things are related to the gross physical body, but your ‘true self’ is not this body, but your Atma, and this Atma is pure, holy and free from all delusions and corruptions, as it is an embodiment of pure consciousness. You are under severe delusions in case you identify yourself with your gross physical body and its attendant elements; for remember that this body is not ‘you’ and ‘neither does it belong to you’. Your Atma is merely an inhabitant of this body, and when this body is shed your Atma will be freed from this cage. So why do you commit such sorrowful sins for the sake of pleasure and comfort of your body which is nonetheless perishable like all things in this mortal world. If you were wise and are really intelligent, you will distance yourself from all the demands of your sense organs that impel you towards sins.

Verily, your gross mortal body may be sinful, but this body is impermanent, as one day or the other it is bound to die, as nothing in this creation is permanent because this creation itself is impermanent. Remember: Your body, as I have said, may be sinful, but your soul, which is your true identity, is pure, holy and immaculate. You may have committed a grave sin by abducting Sita, but it was done by your body and not by your soul, and so if you repent and confess now, if you bow before the Lord, asking sincerely for forgiveness, then be assured that all your misdoings will be instantly pardoned. The merciful and compassionate Lord knows that all living beings err, but the problem arises when they refuse to accept that they have erred.

Ravana, I thought that I must enlighten and warn you, as I thought that you are not properly advised. You are misled by the fatal combination of ignorance and delusion, which together are taking a heavy toll on your fate.

Remember: You ought not to do anything that would bring ignominy and shame to your illustrious ancestors, to your father and grandfather, both of whom were sages of repute. Think, ponder and contemplate on what I have said, and then take a final call on it; don’t rush through a trail that would be fatal for you and undermine your destiny.]

इदं तु सत्यं तव नास्ति विक्रिया विकारहेतुर्न च तेऽद्वयत्वतः ।
यथा नभः सर्वगतं न लिप्यते तथा भवान् देहगतोऽपि सूक्ष्मकः ।
देहेन्द्रियपूणशरीरसङ्गतः त्वात्मेति बुद्ध्वाखिलबन्धभाग्भवेत् ॥ १८॥ idaṃ tu satyaṃ tava nāsti vikriyā vikāraheturna ca te'dvayatvataḥ । yathā nabhaḥ sarvagataṃ na lipyate tathā bhavān dehagato'pi sūkṣmakaḥ । dehendriyaprāṇasaṁrasaṅgataḥ tvātmēti buddhvākḥilabandhabhāgbhavet ॥ 18॥

18. This is a truth that there is no fault or blemish in your 'true self' which is pure and holy, for it is a personified form of 'Consciousness', also known as the creature's Atma.

Being matchless and incomparable (in purity, divinity, majesty, enlightenment and wisdom), there is no scope of it being tarnished or tainted by the spot of any kind of fault, shortcoming or blemish that the body is subjected to in this gross mundane world.

Just like 'space', which is one of the five primary elements in creation¹, is present everywhere in this creation, both within and without all entities, yet remaining free from all attachments and unaffected by any of the characters of these entities, maintaining its primary purity and pristine form, your primary form, i.e. your Atma, too remains free from the evil nature of your gross physical body, though the Atma resides in it.

Therefore, since your 'true form' is your Atma and not your body, 'you' are never subjected to the sins and its attendant sorrows that are limited to your external body alone, as they never affect your Atma (18).

[Note—¹The five primary elements are space or sky, air or wind, fire or energy, water and earth, in ascending order of grossness. To wit, the 'space' is the subtlest of the five elements, and the 'earth' is the grossest. The Atma represents the space element, while the body represents the earth element.]

चिन्मात्रमेवाहमजोऽहमक्षरो ह्यानन्दभावोऽहमिति प्रमुच्यते ।
 देहोऽप्यनात्मा पृथिवीविकारजो न प्राण आत्माऽनिल एष एव सः ॥ १९॥ cinmātramevāhamajo'hamakṣaro hyānandabhāvo'hamiti pramucyate । deho'pyanātmā pṛthivīvikārajo na prāṇa ātmā'nila eṣa eva saḥ ॥ 19॥

19. The thought, the awareness or the wisdom that 'I am nothing but pure consciousness which is self-realised and enlightened, that I am without a birth, that I am imperishable and eternal, and that I am an image of pure bliss, peace and happiness'—because these are the characteristics of the Atma—well, this realization makes a creature feel liberated and emancipated.

[This is because only the physical body is subjected to limitations and inhibitions characteristic of the gross world which makes a creature feel trapped and shackled, but the 'spirit', the soul, the Atma, which is sublime and subtle as it is pure Consciousness, and which is the creature's 'true identity', is free from such limitations.]

Since the gross physical body has the faults and shortcomings inherently associated with the 'earth' element (because this element is the grossest and the heaviest of the five elements, and is prone to attract all things that are gross and heavy), it too is not the Atma (which is pure consciousness, and sublime and subtle), while the ‘Pran’ (the vital life-sustaining wind forces present inside the body), which is but another form of the wind element, too cannot be called the Atma as it is also one of the five elements.

[The ‘Atma’ of a living being is pure cosmic super Consciousness personified. It is distinct and separate from all other entities in this creation. Meanwhile, the creature’s body consists of a combination of the five elements. Hence, the difference between the two, i.e. the ‘Atma’ and the ‘Body’, is obvious.] (19).

मनोऽप्यहङ्कारविकार एव नो न चापि बुद्धिः प्रकृतेर्विकारजा । आत्मा चिदानन्दमयोऽविकारवान् देहादिसङ्घादव्यतिरिक्त ईश्वरः ॥ २०॥ mano'pyahaṅkāravikāra eva no na cāpi buddhiḥ prakṛtervikārajā । ātmā cidānandamayo'vikāravāndehādisaṅghādvatirikta īśvaraḥ ॥ 20॥

20. The Mana (a combination of the mind and heart) is the breeding ground for Ahankar (pride, arrogance, ego and haughtiness associated with a creature’s nature). [To wit, Ahankar arises in the mind and the heart of the creature.]

Similarly, the faults associated with Buddhi (intellect) have their origin in a creature’s Prakriti (inherent nature and tendencies; inborn character). [A creature would think in a particular way and interpret things according to his nature and character.]

So therefore, they also can’t be the ‘Atma’. Verily, the Atma is pure consciousness personified; it is enlightened and wise; is it eternally blissful and contented. It is distinct from and independent of the body, and therefore it has no Ahankar or corrupted Buddhi which are limited to the gross body alone.

The fact is, the Atma is the “Lord” of all these entities. [To wit, the Atma is like the landlord of the physical gross body; the Atma is the master of the body, and not vice versa. None of the factors associated with the body can rule over the Atma, but the Atma rules over them.] (20)

निरञ्जनो मुक्त उपाधितः सदा ज्ञात्वैवमात्मानमितो विमुच्यते । अतोऽहमात्यन्तिकमोक्षसाधनं वक्ष्ये शृणुष्ववहितो महामते ॥ २१॥ nirañjano mukta upādhitaḥ sadā jñātvaivamātmānamito vimucyate । ato'hamātyantikamokṣasādhanaṁ vakṣye śṛṇuṣvāvahito mahāmate ॥ 21॥

21. The Atma is always pure, without faults, is dispassionate and divine, and it is without any title, attributes or honour. As soon as a creature realises its true form (i.e. becomes enlightened, aware and wisened about his Atma), he is freed from the shackles of this gross, mundane and deluding world.

Hence, oh the great and wise one (Ravana)! I am telling you the ultimate medium, the true path, which will help you to achieve emancipation and salvation. Listen to it carefully (21).

विष्णोर्हि भक्तिः सुविशोधनं धियः ततो भवेज्ज्ञानमतीव निर्मलम् ।

विशुद्धतत्त्वानुभवो भवेत्ततः सम्यग्विदित्वा परमं पदं वृजेत् ॥ २२॥ viṣṇorhi bhaktiḥ suvīśodhanam dhiyaḥ tato bhavejjñānamatīva nirmalam । viśuddhatattvānubhavo bhavettataḥ samyagviditvā paramam padam vrajet ॥

22॥

22. Dedication, devotion, adoration and worship of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Lord, is a great purifier of the mind-intellect-thought complex, and it helps to generate auspicious thoughts and positive spiritual energy in the heart of a creature.

By this means, one is able to have uncorrupted wisdom, which in turn enables him to become enlightened about his 'true self', i.e. about his Atma.

This enlightenment and self realisation helps the creature to attain the highest state of being, which means that he attains oneness with the Supreme Being. It is because he realises that he is an image of the Supreme Being because his Atma is an image of the Supreme Atma that is known as the 'Parmatma', the Supreme Lord (22).

अतो भजस्वाद्य हरि रमापतिं रामं पुराणं प्रकृतेः परं विभुम् ।
विसृज्य मौर्ख्यं हृदि शत्रुभावनां भजस्व रामं शरणागतप्रियम् ।
सीतां पुरस्कृत्य सपुत्रबान्धवो रामं नमस्कृत्य विमुच्यसे भयात् ॥ २३॥

ato bhajasvādya hariṁ ramāpatiṁ rāmaṁ purāṇam prakṛteḥ param vibhum । visṛjya maurkhyam hr̥di śatrubhāvanāṁ bhajasva rāmaṁ śaraṇāgatapriyam । sītāṁ puraskṛty saputrabāndhavo rāmaṁ namaskṛty vimucyase bhayāt ॥
23॥

23. Therefore, you must worship, adore and have devotion for Lord Sri Ram, who is a personified form of Lord Hari (another name for Lord Vishnu; the Supreme Being), the divine husband of goddess Rama (goddess Laxmi, the patron deity of prosperity and material welfare).

The Lord is the one who is extolled and glorified by the ancient scriptures known as the Purans; he is the Lord who is beyond Prakriti (Nature); he is the Supreme Being who is all pervading, all encompassing and omnipresent.

You must forsake the enmity and end the hostility that you have harboured, out of foolishness, in your heart for the Lord, and instead, you must worship and adore him, you must develop devotion for and dedication for the Lord who is very compassionate, very merciful and very endearing towards those who come to seek refuge with him, who abandon all pretensions and seek shelter with him.

So therefore, putting Sita in the vanguard, and accompanied by your sons as well as all your other kith and kin, you should go and seek refuge at the holy feet of Lord Ram, bow to him to pay your obeisance and homage, and ask protection from all fears. [To wit, once you go and submit yourself to Lord Ram, asking for forgiveness, be rest assured that then all your fears and consternations would be dispelled.] (23).

रामं परात्मानमभावयन् जनो भक्त्या हृदिस्थं सुखरूपमद्वयम् ।
कथं परं तीरमवाप्नुयाज्जनो भवाम्बुधेर्दुःखतरङ्गमालिनः ॥ २४॥

rāmaṃ parātmānamabhāvayan jano bhaktyā hṛdisthaṃ sukharūpamadvayam । kathaṃ paraṃ tīramavāpnuyājjanam bhavāmbudherduḥkhataṅgamālinam ॥ 24॥

24. Those who do not meditate, with due devotion, faith, belief and conviction, upon Lord Sri Ram who resides in their own hearts—the Lord who is none but the Supreme Being himself, and the Lord who is an embodiment of supreme bliss and contentment, the Lord who grants eternal bliss, peace, beatitude and blessedness to one and all—say then, how can such creatures ever hope to cross this symbolic ocean represented by this gross mundane world of transmigration, an ocean that is full of swift currents and huge waves in the form of countless sorrows, miseries, agonies, torments and tribulations that are characteristic of this world, to find peace and happiness that they desire (24).

नो चेत्त्वमज्ञानमयेन वह्निना ज्वलन्तमात्मानमरक्षितारिवत् ।
नयस्यधोऽधः स्वकृतैश्च पातकैः विमोक्षशङ्का न च ते भविष्यति ॥ २५॥

no cettvamajñānamayena vahninā jvalantamātmānamarakṣitārivat । nayasyadho'dhaḥ svakṛtaiśca pātakaiḥ vimokṣaśaṅkā na ca te bhaviṣyati ॥ 25॥

25. If you do not worship and adore Lord Ram, if you have devotion and dedication for him, then you shall keep on burning (i.e. tormented, afflicted, scorched and agonised) in the fire ignited by foolishness and ignorance.

Verily, you cannot keep yourself safe (protected, unharmed) by being an enemy of Lord Ram, by being opposed to the Lord. You would progressively, by gradual degrees, push yourself further down in the dark pit of sins, misdeeds and evil that would certainly, and without fail, lead you to sink in an abyss from where there is no recovery. To wit then, if this situation actually materializes, you will have no hope of getting redemption and finding salvation for yourself in the future.

[Hence, pay heed to my advice, for still there is time for you to mend your ways and seek peace and redemption. Act before you miss the chance.] (25).

[Note—Verse nos. 15-25 can be called the Gospel of Hanuman for Ravana.]

श्रुत्वामृतास्वादसमानभाषितं तद्वायुसूनोर्दशकन्धरोऽसुरः । अमृष्यमाणोऽतिरुषा कपीश्वरं जगाद रक्तान्तविलोचनो ज्वलन् ॥२६॥ śrutvāmṛtāsvādasamānabhāṣitaṃ tadvāyusūnordaśakandharo'suraḥ । amṛṣyamāṇo'tiruṣā kapīśvaraṃ jagāda raktāntavilocano jvalan ॥26॥

26. The 10-headed demon Ravana heard these nectar-like and sweet words spoken by the Lord of monkeys, Hanuman.

[But instead of understanding that they were meant for his own good, Ravana took Hanuman's advice as a lecture by his enemy's messenger to humiliate him in the front of his own ministers and commanders. Obviously this was intolerable for him, so he became excessively annoyed and angry.]

Ravana turned red in the eyes as a fierce fire of anger and vengeance erupted in his heart. He became exceedingly wrathful and disdainful as he contemptuously retorted to Hanuman (26)—

कथं ममाग्रे विलपस्यभीतवत् प्लवङ्गमानामधमोऽसि दुष्टधीः । क एष रामः कतमो वनेचरो निहन्मि सुग्रीवयुतं नराधमम् ॥ २७॥ kathaṃ mamāgre vilapasyabhītavat plavaṅgamānāmadhamo'si duṣṭadhīḥ । ka eṣa rāmaḥ katamo vanecaro nihanmi sugrīvayutaṃ narādhamam ॥ 27॥

27. 'Oh you wretch and wicked fellow (duṣṭadhīḥ)! You are the most lowly amongst the monkeys (plavaṅgamānāmadhamo'si). How dare you squeak (speak or lecture) with a big mouth in front of me without any fear (as if you were a great preacher; “vilapasyabhītavat”)?

Tell me, who are these two fellows—one who is known as ‘Ram’, and the forest-dwelling creature whose name is ‘Sugriv’. [To wit, what value or importance do they have in front of me, and how can they compare themselves with me on any count?]

Verily, I can myself, single handedly, kill that lowly man (Lord Ram) along with Sugriv. [Why do you boast of them so much? Don't you know that I can get rid of them myself, without any help? These two fellows lean on each other's arms to give and take support, whereas I stand on my own two legs. While they need each other's help to confront me, for none of them have the guts to face me alone, I am alone enough for both of them together.] (27).

त्वां चाद्य हत्वा जनकात्मजां ततो निहन्मि रामं सहलक्ष्मणं ततः ।
सुग्रीवमग्रे बलिनं कपीश्वरं सवानरं हन्म्यचिरेण वानर ।
श्रुत्वा दशग्रीववचः स मारुतिः विवृद्धकोपेन दहन्निवासुरम् ॥ २८॥ tvāṃ cādyā hatvā janakātmajāṃ tato nihanmi rāmaṃ sahalakṣmaṇaṃ tataḥ । sugrīvamagre balinaṃ kapīśvaraṃ savānaraṃ hanmyacireṇa vānara । śrutvā daśagrīvavacaḥ sa mārutiḥ vivṛddhakopena dahannivāsuraṃ ॥ 28॥

28. Today I shall slay you first; then I shall kill the daughter of Janak (Sita). After that I shall slay Lord Sri Ram along with Laxman, but before that I shall kill the most brave and strong king of the monkeys, Sugriv, along with his entire army'.

Hearing these boastful words of the 10-headed Ravana, the son of the wind god, Hanuman, felt exasperated. He sternly rebuked Ravana with an enhanced anger in his voice, which apparently burnt Ravana further. [When Hanuman answered back to Ravana, his voice was full of scorn, and this further exacerbated Ravana's anger, making him more wrathful and vehement, as it stoked his ego and arrogance.] (28).

न मे समा रावणकोटयोऽधम रामस्य दासोऽहमपारविक्रमः ।
श्रुत्वातिकोपेन हनूमतो वचो दशाननो राक्षसमेवमब्रवीत् ॥ २९॥ na me samā rāvaṇakoṭayo'dhama rāmasya dāso'hamapāravikramah । śrutvātikopena hanūmato vaco daśānanao rākṣasamevamabravīt ॥ 29॥

29. Hanuman shot back: 'Ravana, you are really a very mean and lowly fellow (rāvaṇakoṭayo'dhama)! Even millions of Ravana's like you cannot compare themselves with me (na me samā rāvaṇakoṭayo).

Don't you know—I am a humble servant (subordinate, follower, devotee, messenger) of Lord Sri Ram (rāmasya dāso'hama), and there is no limit to my strength, valour, powers, abilities, prowess and potentials (pāravikramah)'.
 Unable to bear these angry words of scorn and contempt spoken by Hanuman, Ravana, becoming excessively peeved, vengeful and indignant, ordered a demon (who was standing nearby)— (29).

पार्श्वे स्थितं मास्य खण्डशः कपिं पश्यन्तु सर्वेऽसुरमितृबान्धवाः ।
निवारयामास ततो विभीषणो महासुरं सायुधमुद्यतं वधे ।
राजन् वधाहो न भवेत्कथञ्चन प्रतापयुक्तैः परराजवानरः ॥ ३०॥ pārśve sthitaṁ māraya khaṇḍaśaḥ kapiṁ paśyantu sarve'suramitrabāndhavāḥ । nivārayāmāsa tato vibhīṣaṇo mahāsuram sāyudhamudyataṁ vadhe । rājan vadhārho na bhavetkathañcana pratāpayuktaiḥ pararājavānaraḥ ॥ 30॥

30. 'Thrash this monkey who is standing near me, and hack him into pieces. Let all the demons, their friends and compatriots, enjoy this novel spectacle.'

Then Vibhishan intervened to stop that furious, ferocious and aggressive demon, who was ready with sharp weapons to pounce upon Hanuman with an intent to kill him. Vibhishan said, 'Oh king (Ravana)! It does not seem proper and fit at all for a powerful, gallant, famed and valiant king of your majesty's stature to kill the monkey messenger of another king. [To wit, it would be a very infamous thing for you to do. The world would say that since you could not dare to fight your enemy, Lord Ram and his companion Sugriv, you vented your anger on their humble messenger who wasn't even armed. Oh King! It is never advisable to kill a messenger of another King. So be careful.] (30).

[Note—This is the first time that Vibhishan has made his appearance before Hanuman according to Adhyatma Ramayan. In Tulsidas' Ram Charit Manas, he had met Hanuman prior to his meeting with Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 8.]

हतेऽस्मिन् वानरे दूते वार्ता को वा निवेदयेत्

रामाय त्वं यमुद्दिश्य वधाय समुपस्थितः ॥ ३१॥
 अतो वधसमं किञ्चिदन्यत्त्विन्तय वानरे ।
 सचिह्नो गच्छतु हरिर्यं दृष्ट्वाऽऽयास्यति द्रुतम् ॥ ३२॥
 रामः सुग्रीवसहितस्ततो युद्धं भवेत्तव । विभीषणवचः श्रुत्वा रावणोऽप्येतदब्रवीत् ॥ ३३॥

hate'smin vānare dūte vārtā ko vā nivedayet rāmāya tvaṃ yamuddiśya vadhāya samupasthitaḥ ॥ 31॥ ato vadhasamaṃ kiñcidanyaccintaya vānare । sacihno gacchatu hariryaṃ dṛṣṭvā'yāsyati drutam ॥ 32॥ rāmaḥ sugrīvasahitastato yuddhaṃ bhavettava । vibhīṣaṇavacaḥ śrutvā rāvaṇo'pyetadabravīt ॥ 33॥

31-33. If this monkey messenger is killed, then who will convey the news (that Sita is in your captivity) to Lord Ram with whom you are so eager to fight, and determined to kill (31).

Hence, instead of killing this monkey, decide on some other equivalent punishment for him. He will carry the marks of those injuries back with him, seeing which, and feeling challenged and insulted (32), Lord Ram would be obliged to come here, along with Sugriv, with great haste. Then you can fight with him'.

Hearing this logic of Vibhishan, Ravana agreed, and he observed (33)—

वानराणां हि लाङ्गूले महामानो भवेत्किल ।
 अतो वस्त्रादिभिः पुच्छं वेष्टयित्वा प्रयत्नतः ॥ ३४॥
 वह्निना योजयित्वैनं भ्रामयित्वा पुरेऽभितः । विसर्जयत पश्यन्तु सर्वे वानरयूथपाः ॥ ३५॥ vānarāṇāṃ hi lāṅgūle mahāmāno bhavetkila । ato vastrādibhiḥ pucchaṃ veṣṭayitvā prayatnataḥ ॥ 34॥ vahninā yojayitvainam bhrāmayitvā pure'bhitaḥ । visarjayata paśyantu sarve vānarayūthapāḥ ॥ 35॥

34-35. 'The monkeys are very fond of their tails. So, make efforts to wrap his tail with a lot of cloth etc., and then set fire to it. After that, take him around the city, and then set him free, so that when he goes back, all the monkey chieftains will see his miserable condition and scarred body!' (35).

तथेति शणपटैश्च वस्त्रैरन्यैरनेकशः ।
 तैलाक्तैर्वेष्टयामासुर्लाङ्गूलं मारुतेर्दृढम् ॥ ३६॥
 पुच्छाग्रे किञ्चिदनलं दीपयित्वाथ राक्षसाः ।
 रज्जुभिः सुदृढं बद्ध्वा धृत्वा तं बलिनोऽसुराः ॥ ३७॥
 समन्ताद्भ्रामयामासुश्चोरोऽयमिति वादिनः । तूर्यघोषैर्घोषयन्तस्ताडयन्तो मुहुर्मुहुः ॥ ३८॥ tatheti śaṇapattāisca vastrairanyairanekaśaḥ । tailāktairveṣṭayāmāsurlāṅgūlaṃ māruterdr̥ḍham ॥ 36॥ pucchāgre kiñcidanalaṃ dīpayitvātha rākṣasāḥ । rajjubhiḥ sudr̥ḍham baddhvā dhṛtvā taṃ balino'surāḥ ॥ 37॥ samantādbhrāmayāmāsuścoro'yamiti vādinah । tūryaghoṣairghoṣayantastāḍayanto muhurmuḥuḥ ॥ 38॥

36-38. Saying alright, the demons wrapped and tied the tail of Hanuman, the son of the wind god, very firmly with long strips of hemp and countless bundles of different types of tattered clothes and rags that were dipped in oil (36).

Then they ignited one end of the tail and tied Hanuman firmly with a rope (because Ravana had ordered that Hanuman be taken on a round of the city once his tail was set on fire).

Then some of the more powerful and strong amongst the demons (37) took him round the city, repeatedly kicking him and beating him, and sounding the trumpets and bugles to publicly proclaim that “this is a thief” (yāmāsuścoro'yamiti vādinah) (in order to humiliate Hanuman) (38).

हनूमतापि तत्सर्वं सोढं किञ्चित्चिकीर्षुणा ।
 गत्वा तु पश्चिमद्वारसमीपं तत्र मारुतिः ॥ ३९॥
 सूक्ष्मो बभूव बन्धेभ्यो निःसृतः पुनरप्यसौ । बभूव पर्वताकारस्तत उत्प्लुत्य गोपुरम् ॥ ४०॥ hanūmatāpi tatsarvaṃ soḍham kiñciccikīrṣuṇā । gatvā tu paścimadvārasamīpaṃ tatra mārutiḥ ॥ 39॥ sūkṣmo babhūva bandhebhyo niḥsṛtaḥ punarapyasau । babhūva parvatākārastata utplutya gopuram ॥ 40॥

39-40. Hanuman tolerated all this humiliation in order to display some spectacular fireworks and his desire to show some novel tricks to the demons.

When this procession reached near the western gate of the city, the son of the wind god (39) immediately reduced his size so that he could easily slip out and free himself from the ropes and layers after layers of cloth that were tied tightly around his tail. Then he assumed a colossus mountain-like form, and leapt atop the spire or the tower of the gate (40).

[Note—As is evident from veres nos. 39-40, Ravana and his cohorts had overlooked one very important factor while tying Hanuman with ropes and wrapping his tail with oil-dipped clothes—which was that he had the power to reduce or increase the size of his body. Hanuman used this unique ability of his to great advantage. When he was being tied with bundles of ropes and bales of cloth, he had gradually expanded his body, a little at a time, so that no one could perceive the changes. The stupid demons did not even pause to think for a while as to why such an easy thing as tying a monkey's tail with cloth proved to be so enormous a task that bales after bales of cloth were consumed for this simple enterprise, which ordinarily would require only a few meters of cloth. This in itself proves either that the whole demon race had more muscle power than the power of the mind, or that they were so stiffly scared of Ravana that even if they had thought of this incredulous development they dared not to raise questions about it for fear of punishment.

When Hanuman was near the western gate, where he saw a huge spire or tower, he decided that it was time to free himself. So he simply reduced his size by, say, a few inches, which loosened the grip of the ropes tied around his tail as well as his body. Then he simply had to shake himself out of the trappings and become freed instantly. It was a child's play for him, and a big joke played on the demons!

After having done that, he assumed a huge, gigantic form of a colossus, like the one he had shown to his companions at the time of embarking on the mission from the other shore of the ocean, when they had some lingering doubts about his ability to achieve success in such a daunting and risky job—this is clearly mentioned in Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 9, verse no. 22.

There is an alternative way in which Hanuman could have freed himself. He might as well have expanded his body while remaining tied with ropes and clothes. Then, what would happen? The ropes tied around his body and the clothes that covered his tail would have snapped under increased pressure from the inside as Hanuman enlarged his body.]

तत्रैकं स्तम्भमादाय हत्वा तान् रक्षिणः क्षणात् ।

विचार्य कार्यशेषं स प्रसादाग्रदृढादृढम् ॥ ४१॥

उत्प्लुत्योप्लुत्य सन्दीप्तपुच्छेन महता कपिः ।

ददाह लङ्कामखिलां सादृप्रसादतोरणाम् ॥ ४२॥

tatraikaṃ stambhamādāya hatvā tān rakṣiṇaḥ kṣaṇāt । vicārya kāryaśeṣaṃ sa prāsādāgrādgrḥādgrḥam ॥ 41॥

utplutyoplutya sandīptapucchena mahatā kapiḥ ।

dadāha laṅkāmakhilāṃ sātṭaprāsādatoraṇām ॥ 42॥

41-42. From there, he uprooted a pillar and killed all the demons with it in a short while (using it as a war mace or a battering ram). Then deciding on his next course of action, he jumped from the front of one building of the city to another, and in this way swiftly moved from house to house (41).

He used his burning tail to set fire to palaces, attics and terraces. Verily, the whole city of Lanka, which was very charming as it was tastefully decorated with colourful hangings, banners, buntings, festoons, garlands and other decorative paraphernalia, was soon ablaze (42).

[Note—When Hanuman had slipped out of his bondage as in verse nos. 39-40 by assuming a miniature form, obviously his tail also slipped out with his body. Then he assumed a colossal huge mountain-like form. It's absurd to think that his tail remained slender and small and only his body became mountain-like.

So, the most logical and practical explanation of the burning of Lanka appears to be that, to begin with, Hanuman had lengthened his slender tail like a flexible rubber tube, which the demons went on covering with layers after umpteen numbers of layers of cloth dipped in oil. This tube literally wended its way along the streets of Lanka like a slithering snake, and almost encircled the whole city even as the amused demons went overboard to wrap it with cloth dipped in oil while making merry of the time by poking and pinching the tail.

So when the foolish demons set fire to the tip of this long tube formed by clothes tied around Hanuman's tail, and he suddenly reduced the size of his body and loosened the grip of the ropes to free himself, the effect was that this long tube of cloth that was dripping with inflammable oil lay like a huge flexible hose pipe that went around the major avenues of the city through which Hanuman was paraded by the mad demons.

Since oil had spilled all over the city, Hanuman had to simply hook his tail to the other end of this immensely long tube of cloth, the end from which nearest to his body and from which end he had pulled his tail out, and which was at the opposite end from the tip that was set afire, and then drag this blazing tube through the city streets drenched with oil. The result is obvious—flames leapt up everywhere and spread rapidly in all the directions, following the flow of the oil. It is like setting a lighted match to spilled petrol, and the fire leaps up instantaneously everywhere; and this fire is not easy to extinguish!

Further, as heat was generated, wind began to blow, and this fuelled the blaze and provoked it to spread more rapidly across the city of Lanka, almost like a wild forest fire funneled by hot gusts of wind.

So therefore, after Hanuman freed himself by becoming small in size and thereby loosening himself from the tight ropes, he must have either hooked his tail or used his hands to catch one end of the long tube-like layering of clothes that was just a while ago tied around his tail, and which resembled a thick wick of a candle burning at one end and harmless at the other, to drag it as he ran wild through the city. He might have also swung it round and round viciously in circles, dashed it, jerked it, shaken it, twirled it and twisted it in order to spread the fire as fast as he could.

We must remember that the thick tube formed by layers of cloth was well soaked in inflammable oil, and wherever sparks from the burning cloth or flames from the burning oil touched the ground, which must have already become slushy with spilled oil, as the demons had poured an excess of oil on the wrappings around Hanuman's tail in their enthusiasm, new flames would leap up afresh immediately. Thus, the fire spread rapidly across the length and the width of the city of Lanka.

There is another point to observe. Though we are made to understand that Lanka was made of gold, in practical terms it would imply that it was a 'gilded city' that appeared to be made of gold—i.e. a thick foil of gold was used to cover other basic construction materials such as wood, iron etc. that were employed for the actual structures of its buildings; no solid gold was used as the real construction material.

So as the fire spread, the outer gold melted, exposing the wood and other things present in every household, such as furniture, clothes, cooking oils etc., to the flames. And even if we do take into account that only solid gold was used in the construction of the buildings of Lanka, then as the fire spread and the heat increased, this gold would have melted.

It is seen in our modern times that in spite of all the precautions that are taken, when a building unfortunately catches fire, say from an electric short-circuit, the inferno spreads quickly and takes a heavy toll of the whole building, and often times, if not controlled, would spread to the neighbouring buildings.

The 'Burning of Lanka' has been vividly, and most fascinatingly, described by Goswami Tulsidas in his masterpiece book titled "Kavitawali", in its Sundar Kand.

We shall be reading it soon in the next section no. 7.4 of the present Chapter no. 7 of our Book.]

हा तात पुत्र नाथेति कून्दमानाः समन्ततः ।
 व्याप्ताः प्रसादशिखरेऽप्यारूढा दैत्ययोषितः ॥ ४३॥
 देवता इव दृश्यन्ते पतन्त्यः पावकेऽखिलाः । विभीषणगृहं त्यक्त्वा सर्वं भस्मीकृतं पुरम् ॥ ४४॥ hā tāta putra nātheti krandamānāḥ samantataḥ । vyāptāḥ prāsādaśikhare'pyārūḍhā daityayoṣitaḥ ॥ 43॥ devatā iva drśyante patantyāḥ pāvake'khilāḥ । vibhīṣaṇagrhaṁ tyaktvā sarvaṁ bhaṣmīkṛtaṁ puram ॥ 44॥

43-44. At that time, wildly shouting 'Oh dear, oh son, oh husband, and all others who hear us (hā tāta putra nātheti)' the terrified demonesses were woefully lamenting and wailing gravely everywhere in the city, such as from the terraces and attics of the palaces. Some of them were so horrified at the sight of the spectacle of their homes burning and getting reduced to cinders that, while escaping, they stumbled or fainted and fell in the burning fire.

All these demonesses appeared to be like so many goddesses and gods present everywhere¹. In this manner, except for the residence of Vibhishan, the whole city of Lanka was reduced to ashes² (43-44).

[Note—These female demons were so charming in their physical appearances that they resembled heavenly residents, the goddesses and gods. It might also mean that when they ran out of their homes and made their sudden appearances in every nook and corner of the city, coming out of private existence and revealing themselves in public, they were almost like the goddesses and gods who usually remain invisible but make their presence felt on special occasions. Previously these demonesses were not seen outside their homes as gods are usually not visible, except at the time of invocation during religious sacrifice etc. when they are supposed to reveal themselves and accept offerings. Here, the 'burning of Lanka' is the 'fire sacrifice'; and 'the demonesses' are like the 'gods' who have come to witness the performance of the fire sacrifice.

²Why did Hanuman burn Lanka? We have read earlier that he wished to do something special, something remarkable and spectacular, before returning home. We have also made an observation that he wished to clear the ground and lay the foundation by which the invasion of Lanka and its conquering would be made all the more easy by first breaking the morale of its army, and instilling such terror and fear in the hearts of the demons, both the civilians as well as the soldiers, that when the assault is actually launched the will to fight would be low, and there would be excess of pressure on Ravana to surrender.

So therefore, Hanuman decided that if he burns Lanka single handedly, it would send out a strong and clear signal to the enemy—if an individual member of Lord Ram's army can cause such unhindered havoc, and if the combined might of the demon forces could not prevent him from carrying it out, then one can easily imagine what is in store when a whole army of the Lord descends on Lanka. This emotion is exactly what Ravana's wife Mandodari expressed while pleading with her husband to make amends and surrender—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 36 ; (ii) Lanka Kand, Doha no. 37.

The burning of Lanka would also ensure that the demons would leave Sita alone and stop tormenting her more, as they would now be pre-occupied with this new and most unexpected development that had devastated their city and their homes. They would have little time and inclination for any other thing. They would be especially wary of disturbing Sita out of fear of a backlash from Hanuman in case he comes to learn that any demon had troubled her in his absence.

Moreover, Hanuman had first tried to persuade Ravana to abstain from a confrontation with Lord Ram (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 15-25), but it had no affect on him. Ravana treated Hanuman with contempt and most insultingly; and so he decided to hit back, and hit hard.]

तत उत्प्लुत्य जलधौ हनूमान्मारुतात्मजः ।
लाङ्गूलं मज्जयित्वान्तः स्वस्थचित्तो बभूव सः ॥ ४५॥
वायोः प्रियसखित्वाच्च सीतया प्रार्थितोऽनलः । न ददाह हरेः पुच्छं बभूवात्यन्तशीतलः ॥ ४६॥ tata utplutya jaladhau hanūmānmārutātmajah । lāṅgūlaṁ majjayitvāntaḥ svasthacitto babhūva saḥ ॥ 45॥ vāyoḥ priyasakhitvācca sītayā prārthito'nalaḥ । na dadāha hareḥ pucchaṁ babhūvātyantaśītalah ॥ 46॥

45-46. After that, Hanuman, the son of the wind god, jumped into the ocean to douse his burning tail. [Actually, it was to extinguish the fiery 'tail of cloth' that had by now served its purpose and needed to be dipped in water to douse the flames. The heat and the exertion had also inspired Hanuman to jump in the ocean to cool himself.]

He then felt relaxed and refreshed (45). It was because of Sita's prayers, and because the 'fire god' was a fast friend of the 'wind god'¹ that the flames did not burn the monkey's (Hanuman's) tail.

On the contrary, the 'fire' became Hanuman's friend and cooperated with him to fulfill his desire to teach the demons a bitter lesson and avenge for the rough treatment they had given to Sita as well as to him. [To wit, though the fire scorches everyone who goes near it, but in the case of Hanuman it did not burn him. It is because Hanuman was the son of the 'wind god', and the patron god of fire, the 'fire god', is his friend. So therefore, the 'fire god' ensured that his friend's son Hanuman is not harmed.] (46).

[Note—¹The 'fire' and the 'wind' are called friends because 'air' is essential for the fire to burn. If there is no air, the fire would automatically be extinguished. So when the time came, the 'fire god' decided to oblige his friend, the 'wind god', by ensuring that the latter's son is protected from its wrath.]

यन्नामसंस्मरणधूतसमस्तपापाः तापत्रयानलमपीह तरन्ति सद्यः ।

तस्यैव किं रघुवरस्य विशिष्टदूतः सन्तप्यते कथमसौ प्रकृतानलेन ॥ ४७॥

yannāmasaṁsmaṇadhūtasamastapāpāḥ tāpatrayāṇalamapīha taranti sadyaḥ ।

tasyaiva kiṁ raghuvarasya viśiṣṭadūtaḥ santapyate kathamasau prakṛtānalena ॥ 47॥

47. How can this worldly fire cause any harm to (or can burn, torment or scorch) Lord Raghubar's (Lord Sri Ram's) special messenger because by remembering the Lord's holy and divine name, a person is immediately liberated and granted deliverance from all his sins and their horrifying consequences which are no less than being scorched by a raging fire.

Verily indeed, the Lord Ram's holy and divine name protects a creature from the three types of sufferings associated with this mundane world and its cycle of transmigration, sufferings that are no less than being roasted alive in three types of fires known as Traitap (tāpatrayāṇala)¹ (47).

[Note—¹The 3 Traitaps which torment a creature are the following—(i) Daihik—sufferings pertaining to the body, (ii) Daivik—sufferings pertaining to Gods and malignant stars, and (iii) Bhautik—sufferings pertaining to other creatures of this terrestrial world.]

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे सुन्दरकाण्डे
चतुर्थः सर्गः ॥ ४॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde sundarakāṇḍe
caturthaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 4॥

Thus ends Canto 4 of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and Uma, his divine consort.

7.2.5: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 5:

Hanuman takes leave of Sita to return home; He informs Lord Ram about all the developments:-

॥ पञ्चमः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

ततः सीतां नमस्कृत्य हनूमानब्रवीद्वचः ।
आज्ञापयतु मां देवि भवती रामसन्निधिम् ॥ १॥
गच्छामि रामस्त्वां द्रष्टुमागमिष्यति सानुजः ।

इत्युक्त्वा त्रिःपरिक्रम्य जानकीं मारुतात्मजः ॥ २॥

॥ pañcamah sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

tataḥ sītāṃ namaskṛtya hanūmānabravīdvacaḥ । ājñāpayatu māṃ devi bhavatī rāmasannidhim ॥ 1॥ gacchāmi rāmastvāṃ draṣṭumāgamiṣyati sānujaḥ । ityuktvā triḥparikramya jānakīm mārutātmajaḥ ॥ 2॥

1-2. Continuing his narrative, Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Then (after having jumped into the ocean and refreshing himself), Hanuman went to Sita, bowed before her, and said respectfully, 'Oh goddess (devi)! Give me your permission. I am now going back to Lord Sri Ram (1).

He will come here very soon, accompanied by his younger brother (Laxman), to see you'.

Saying this, the son of the wind god (Hanuman) circumambulated Janki (Sita) three times ("triḥparikramya jānakīm"; to pay her his profound respects) (2).

पूणम्य प्रस्थितो गन्तुमिदं वचनमब्रवीत् ।
देवि गच्छामि भद्रं ते तूर्णं द्रक्ष्यसि राघवम् ॥३॥
लक्ष्मणं च ससुग्रीवं वानरायुतकोटिभिः । ततः प्राह हनूमन्तं जानकी दुःखकर्षिता ॥ ४॥
त्वां दृष्ट्वा विस्मृतं दुःखमिदानीं त्वं गमिष्यसि । इतः परं कथं वर्ते रामवार्ताश्रुतिं विना ॥ ५ ॥ praṇamya prasthito gantumidaṃ vacanamabravīt । devi gacchāmi bhadraṃ te tūrṇaṃ draṣṣyasi rāghavam ॥3॥ lakṣmaṇaṃ ca sasugrīvaṃ vānarāyutakoṭibhiḥ । tataḥ prāha hanūmantaṃ jānakī duḥkhakarśitā ॥ 4॥ tvāṃ drṣṭvā vismrtaṃ duḥkhamidānīm tvam gamiṣyasi । itaḥ paraṃ kathaṃ varte rāma-vārtāśrutim vinā ॥ 5 ॥

3-5. Then he bowed before her once again with clasped hands, went a short distance away from her, looked back, and said his final good-bye to her, 'Oh goddess (devi)! I am going. Oh you blessed one (bhadraṃ te)! Very soon you will see Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) (3) along with Laxman and Sugriv; they will be accompanied by crores (millions) of monkeys. [To wit, very soon Lord Ram would arrive here to free you, and at that time he would be accompanied by a huge army of countless monkey and bear warriors. So bear for some more time, and have courage and hope in the meantime.]'.

Then Janki (Sita), who was weakened and exhausted by extreme sorrows and miseries from which she was suffering, said to Hanuman (4), 'I had forgotten about my sufferings and torments when I saw you. But now even you are going away. How am I going to survive now; how am I going to pass my days alone, hoping to hear some information about Lord Ram¹?

[¹Your company, my dear son, was like a balm for my tormented soul. Now I would be deprived of it also. I will be so alone and sore forlorn once again; my grief and sorrows that had abated for sometime would come to haunt me once again. My days and nights would once again be a sorrowful burden too heavy for me to bear. How unfortunate I am that what little succour came my way is being snatched from me again, so I would be forced to suffer all over again. But there is no way out. I understand the situation; I realize that there is no other alternative but for you to go back so that you can bring Lord Ram here. But please make haste; don't delay the least, for each moment of my life would be spent in expecting to hear the good tidings of the Lord's arrival. This is the only cord that I would cling to in order to survive, and I pray that this cord would hold good, that it would not be too fragile to snap and cast me into an abyss from which there is no delivery.

Son, by my faith, remember this: I rely on you and your word of honour—that you will bring Lord Ram here; remember that my life hangs on this single assurance from you. So my son, adieu till we meet again in happier times. Go, you be blessed!!]
' (5).

मारुतिरुवाच ।

यद्येवं देवि मे स्कन्धमारोह क्षणमातृतः

रमेण योजयिष्यामि मन्यसे यदि जानकि ॥ ६॥ mārutiruvāca ।

yadyevaṃ devi me skandhamāroha kṣaṇamātrataḥ

rāmeṇa yojayiṣyāmi manyase yadi jānaki ॥ 6॥

6. Observing the distressed emotional condition of Sita, Hanuman, the son of the wind god, offered to take her back to Lord Ram immediately. He said, 'Oh goddess! If this is the case, and if you agree and think it proper, then you can ride on my shoulders, and I shall take you to meet Lord Ram immediately, without a second thought' (6).

सीतोवाच ।

रामः सागरमाशोष्य बद्ध्वा वा शरपञ्जरैः ।

आगत्य वानरैः सार्धं हत्वा रावणमाहवे ॥ ७॥

मां नयेद्यदि रामस्य कीर्तिर्भवति शाश्वती ।

अतो गच्छ कथं चापि प्राणान् सन्धारयाम्यहम् ॥ ८॥ sītovāca ।

rāmaḥ sāgaramāśoṣya baddhvā vā śarapañjaraiḥ ।

āgatya vānaraiḥ sārḍhaṃ hatvā rāvaṇamāhave ॥ 7॥

māṃ nayedyadi rāmasya kīrtirbhavati śāśvatī ।

ato gaccha kathaṃ cāpi prāṇān sandhārayāmyaham ॥ 8॥

7-8. Sita replied, 'If Lord Sri Ram could dry up the ocean or tame it with his arrows (by constructing a bridge across it as token of his conquering the mighty ocean), come here along with his army of monkeys, and kill Ravana in the war that follows (7), it will give him eternal fame, renown, honour and glory.

Therefore, you should go back now (for it will not be proper for me to go back with you). I will survive somehow in the meantime' (8).

[Note—If Sita were to accept Hanuman's proposal as described in verse no. 6, that would have ended her torments and miseries forthwith. With what Hanuman had done to Lanka, it would be unimaginable for any demon to gather sufficient courage to pursue and stop him. That would have left Lord Sri Ram's main purpose of spending 14 years in the forest with the object of killing Ravana and other tyrannical, cruel and ferocious demons unfulfilled.

Further, Sita's wish to suffer a little more of the torments and miseries so that her Lord attains great fame and glory shows her in a very good light. She was confident that Lord Ram would win the war against Ravana—otherwise the rejection of Hanuman's offer would have been most impossible for her. She would have accepted to ride on his back and escape from Lanka, as it would have been the easiest way for her to escape her tormentors.]

इति प्रस्थापितो वीरः सीतया प्रणिपत्य ताम् । जगाम पर्वतस्याग्रे गन्तुं पारं महोदधेः ॥ ९॥
तत्र गत्वा महासत्त्वः पादाभ्यां पीडयन् गिरिम् । जगाम वायुवेगेन पर्वतश्च महीतलम् ॥ १०॥
गतो महीसमानत्वं त्रिंशद्योजनमुच्छ्रितः । मारुतिर्गगनान्तःस्थो महाशब्दं चकार सः ॥ ११॥ iti prasthāpito vīraḥ sītayā praṇipatya tām । jagāma parvatasyāgre gantum pāraṁ mahodadheḥ ॥ 9॥ tatra gatvā mahāsattvaḥ pādābhyāṁ pīḍayan girim । jagāma vāyuvegena parvataśca mahītalam ॥ 10॥ gato mahīsamānatvaṁ triṁśadyojanamucchritaḥ । mārutirgaganāntaḥstho mahāśabdaṁ cakāra saḥ ॥ 11॥

9-11. Being finally bid farewell by Sita, Hanuman bowed to her once again, for the last time before his departure.

Then the brave one (i.e. Hanuman; “vīraḥ”) climbed the summit of a mountain in order to launch himself to cross the ocean (9).

There (on the summit of the mountain), the most valorous and strong Hanuman (mahāsattvaḥ), pressed the mountain by his foot and sped-off with the speed of wind. The mountain, which was 30 Yojans (i.e. $30 \times 8 = 240$ miles) in height, was pressed into the earth with such a great force that it became almost flattened (mahīsamānatvaṁ triṁśadyojanamucchritaḥ).

While cruising through the sky, the son of the wind god, Maruti (Hanuman), roared thunderously (10-11).

[Note—In modern terms, it is simple to visualise the event if compared to a rocket launch with a heavy payload. The downward thrust generated by the prodigious leap of Hanuman, with both legs bent at the knees and suddenly straightened to generate an upward and forward motion, was sufficient to flatten the protuberance on the earth (called the hill) which acted more like a spring-board that, once pressed down and then released suddenly, created such an upward force that flung Hanuman into the sky and made him become air-borne. In this way, Hanuman launched himself almost like a rocket or a missile. When the pressure was thus removed after Hanuman became air-borne, the ‘spring’, symbolized by the hill in this case, tried to regain its former shape, but such was the immensity of the weight launched that it could not get back its original shape or height, but remained flattened for ever.

It is quite possible that the soil under this hill was soft and porous, instead of being hard rock, being as it was on the shore of the salty ocean whose corrosive water may have seeped in and gradually scooped out the solid material at the base of the hill over time, rendering it base hollow and fragile. So when an exceptional force was exerted on this hill, it sank into the softened earth as there was nothing solid to support it from below.

However, the pressing of the mountain into the bowls of the earth by 30 Yojans seems highly exaggerated and hyperbolic. Well, in ancient classical literature it was usual to magnify events manifold, even to render them look out of proportion and incredulous, just in order to give them a dramatic effect, to create a magical charm around them, and visualize an imagery of excessive grandeur and magnificence. Such as for example, saying that hundreds of thousands of soldiers were sent to catch hold of a single individual, Hanuman in this case, in the Ashok grove, as is said in Canto 3, verse nos. 78-79, is a clear case of an exaggerated statement.]

तं श्रुत्वा वानराः सर्वे ज्ञात्वा मारुतिमागतम् ।
हर्षेण महताविष्टाः शब्दं चकुर्महास्वनम् ॥ १२॥
शब्देनैव विजानीमः कृतकार्यः समागतः । हनूमानेव पश्यध्वं वानरा वानरार्षभम् ॥ १३॥

taṁ śrutvā vānarāḥ sarve jñātvā mārutimāgatam । harṣeṇa mahatāviṣṭāḥ śabdaṁ cakrurmahāsvanam ॥ 12॥ śabdenaiva vijānīmaḥ kṛtakāryaḥ samāgataḥ । hanūmāneva paśyadhvaṁ vānarā vānararṣabham ॥ 13॥

12-13. Hearing his thunderous roar, the monkeys (who were waiting on the other side of the ocean) realised that Hanuman was returning from Lanka. They were filled with great joy and exhilaration. They cheered and applauded loudly (12).

The monkeys said to each other, 'This terribly thunderous roar itself shows that Hanuman has been successful in his mission and is returning back. [Looking up into the sky, they uttered a cry of joy when they spotted Hanuman.] Oh monkeys! Look, is it not Hanuman?'

This sight of Hanuman returning home triumphantly filled all the monkeys with excess of joy and ecstasy (13).

[Note—The scene of action now shifts to ‘this side of the ocean’ where Hanuman’s companions were waiting for him. When they heard a loud roar in the sky, all of them looked up. And lo and behold—what did they see? They saw an overjoyed Hanuman approaching them! He was successful in his mission, so when he saw his friends on the ground, he was so ecstatic that he roared all the more loudly, saying joyfully: “Here I am, my friends! Behold, here I come, and rejoice, for I am successful!

The roar of Hanuman had spread all over the sky in gigantic ripples of sound waves; even today when a jet engine, a rocket, or even a helicopter passes overhead, its roar can be heard for miles around. If the wind was favourable, as surely it would have been because Hanuman was the dear son of the ‘wind god’, the hint of his arrival by way of a reverberating sound waves that echoed across the firmament, must have reached the ears of his friends on the ground much ahead of their actually seeing him physically in the sky overhead as he circled and made ready to descend.]

एवं ब्रुवत्सु वीरेषु वानरेषु स मारुतिः । अवतीर्य गिरेर्मूर्ध्नि वानरानिदमब्रवीत् ॥ १४॥
 दृष्ट्वा सीता मया लङ्का धर्षिता च सकानना । सम्भाषितो दशग्रीवस्ततोऽहं पुनरागतः ॥ १५॥ evaṃ bruvatsu vīreṣu vānareṣu sa mārutiḥ । avatīrya girermurdhni vānarānidamabravīt ॥ 14॥ drṣṭā sītā mayā laṅkā dharṣitā ca sakānanā । sambhāṣito daśagrīvastato'haṃ punarāgataḥ ॥ 15॥

14-15. While the monkeys were discussing amongst themselves (as in verse nos. 12-13 herein above), the son of the wind god alighted on that mountain summit where they were all huddled together trying to see him come across the sky. He cheerfully told them (14), 'I have seen Sita, I have reduced Lanka and the Ashok grove to rubble, and I have talked with Ravana. After that, and having accomplished my task, I have come here to meet you (15).

इदानीमेव गच्छामो रामसुग्रीवसन्निधिम् ।
 इत्युक्त्वा वानराः सर्वे हर्षेणालिङ्ग्य मारुतिम् ॥ १६॥ केचिच्चुम्बुर्लाङ्गूलं ननृतुः केचिदुत्सुकाः । हनूमता समेतास्ते जग्मुः प्रस्रवणं गिरिम् ॥ १७॥ idānīmeva gacchāmo rāmasugrīvasannidhim । ityuktā vānarāḥ sarve harṣeṇālīṅgya mārutim ॥ 16॥

 keciccucumburlāṅgūlaṃ nanṛtuḥ kecdutsukāḥ । hanūmatā sametāste jagmuḥ prasravaṇaṃ girim ॥ 17॥

16-17. We will go to meet Lord Ram and Sugriv right now'.

All the monkeys were extremely delighted and exhilarated, and they enthusiastically embraced him (16). Some kissed his tail, and some others began dancing ecstatically around him. After that, all of them accompanied Hanuman and went to Mt. Pravarshan (17).

गच्छन्तो ददृशुर्वीरा वनं सुग्रीवरक्षितम् ।
 मधुसंज्ञं तदा प्रादुरङ्गदं वानरर्षभाः ॥ १८॥
 क्षुधिताः स्मो वयं वीर देह्यनुज्ञां महामते ।
 भक्षयामः फलान्यद्य पिबामोऽमृतवन्मधु ॥ १९॥
 सन्तुष्टा राघवं द्रष्टुं गच्छामोऽद्यैव सानुजम् ॥ २०॥ gacchanto dadṛśurvīrā vanaṃ sugrīvarakṣitam । madhusaṃjñam tadā prāhuraṅgadaṃ vānaraṣabhāḥ ॥ 18॥ kṣudhitāḥ smo vayaṃ vīra dehyanuññāṃ mahāmate । bhakṣayāmaḥ phalānyadya pibāmo'mṛtavanmadhu ॥ 19॥ santuṣṭā rāghavaṃ draṣṭuṃ gacchāmo'dyaiva sānujam ॥ 20॥

18-20. While on their way, the jovial company of monkeys chanced to pass by and see the 'Madhuvan' (literally a forest of honey)¹, which was directly under the protection of Sugriv (the king of Kishkindha). They said to Angad (18), 'Oh the brave one (vīra)! We are very hungry. Hence, oh the wise one (mahāmate), give us your permission so that we can eat the sweet fruits of this forest and drink its honey, which is like nectar (19).

After that, once we have satisfied our hunger and quenched our thirst, we shall proceed ahead and go to meet Lord Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) along with his younger brother (Laxman).

[We have had no proper meal for quite a long time. Neither had we access to proper food and drink, nor our mental condition was such that we could have actually enjoyed any food even if was made available. But now the situation has changed for good. We have been successful in our mission, and this has stoked our hunger and thirst. We can't resist the sight of these fruit trees and honey dripping from its honeycombs. Let us all partake of these delicacies and tasty viands before we move ahead. You are with us, and verily, you are also the prince of this kingdom. So therefore, you have equal right over this Madhuvan as Sugriv has, and hence you are deemed to be authorized to allow us to enjoy the fruits of this wonderful royal garden. It's a grand treat for all of us, and you being a prince of the kingdom we have the right to expect this celebratory treat from you. And come, don't be apprehensive of Sugriv, for he can't deny us the right to celebrate this happy occasion by giving ourselves a feast!]' (20).

[Note—¹The "Madhuvan" was a forest where almost all the trees were laden with honeycombs. It was a royal forest of the kingdom of Kishkindha, and hence under the direct supervision of its king Sugriv.]

अङ्गद उवाच ।
 हनूमान् कृतकार्योऽयं पिबतैतत्पूसादतः ।
 जक्षध्वं फलमूलानि त्वरितं हरिसतमाः ॥ २१॥

ततः प्रविश्य ह्रस्यः पातुमारेभिरे मधु । रक्षिणस्ताननाहत्य दधिवक्त्रेण नोदितान् ॥ २२॥ aṅgada uvāca । hanūmān kṛtakāryo'yaṃ pibataitātprasādataḥ । jakṣadhvaṃ phalamūlāni tvaritaṃ harisattamāḥ ॥ 21॥ tataḥ praviśya harayaḥ pātumārebhire madhu । rakṣiṇastānanādṛtya dadhivaktreṇa noditān ॥ 22॥

21-22. Angad agreed most cheerfully, and he gladly gave his permission to the troop of monkeys to feast in the Madhuvan. He said, 'Hanuman has successfully done the great task that was assigned to all of us. Hence, oh the best among the monkeys (harisattamāḥ), don't hesitate and don't delay in eating the fruits and edible roots as well as in drinking honey as a token of the blessing he has brought for you all, and while you do so don't forget to thank him (Hanuman) and express your gratitude to him.

[Go forthwith and enjoy yourselves; celebrate this happy occasion of the successful completion of the mission by drinking honey and eating fruits to your heart's content. Thank Hanuman for all of it, raise a toast to him and thank him a lot because you owe him this expression of gratitude, for it is due to him that all of you have had this chance to celebrate.]' (21).

So the monkeys entered that forest, and not bothering about the guards appointed by the 'white-faced one' (dadhivaktreṇa)¹ to guard and protect the forest, they began drinking honey (and eating fruits to their heart's content) (22).

[Note—¹“Dadhimukh” was Sugriv's maternal uncle—refer verse no. 24 herein below. He was in-charge of this forest. He had a fair complexion, hence called a 'white faced monkey'.

Hanuman's successful completion of the mission is called a blessing for the monkeys in verse no. 21 because now they had no fear of punishment, either from Sugriv or from Lord Ram. Hanuman has given them a new lease of life. So it was indeed a time to celebrate, and on such occasions, eating, drinking, revelry and merry-making are accepted norms of behaviour. So, Angad assured his companions that there was nothing wrong and to worry about at all on this count.]

पिबतस्ताडयामासुर्वानरान् वानरर्षभाः ।
ततस्तान् मुष्टिभिः पादैश्चूर्णयित्वा पपुर्मधु ॥ २३॥
ततो दधिमुखः क्रुद्धः सुग्रीवस्य स मातुलः । जगाम रक्षिभिः सार्धं यत्र राजा कपीश्वरः ॥ २४॥ pibatastāḍayāmāsurvānarān vānararṣabhāḥ । tatastān muṣṭibhiḥ pādaiścūrṇayitvā papurmadhu ॥ 23॥ tato dadhimukhaḥ kruddhaḥ sugrīvasya sa mātulaḥ । jagāma rakṣibhiḥ sārḍhaṃ yatra rājā kapīśvaraḥ ॥ 24॥

23-24. When those monkey guards saw the excited troop of monkeys drinking honey and tried to stop them by using force, the former not only resisted the guards but even retaliated by beating them with their fist-blows and kicks as well as crushing many of the guards underfoot (muṣṭibhiḥ pādaiścūrṇayitvā), while merrily continuing to drink the honey (and eating the fruits) (papurmadhu) (23).

When the news reached Sugriv's maternal uncle Dadhimukh (who was in charge of the forest), he became very annoyed and exasperated, and accompanied by other forest guards, he went to the king of monkeys (Sugriv) to complain (24).

गत्वा तमब्रवीद्देव चिरकालाभिरक्षितम् ।
 नष्टं मधुवनं तेऽद्य कुमारेण हनूमता ॥ २५॥
 श्रुत्वा दधिमुखेनोक्तं सुग्रीवो हृष्टमानसः ।
 दृष्ट्वागतो न सन्देहः सीतां पवननन्दनः ॥ २६॥
 नो चेन्मधुवनं द्रष्टुं समर्थः को भवेन्मम । तत्रापि वायुपुत्रेण कृतं कार्यं न संशयः ॥ २७॥ gatvā tamabraviddeva cirakālābhirakṣitam । naṣṭam madhuvanam te'dya kumāreṇa hanūmatā ॥ 25॥ śrutvā dadhimukhenoktam sugrīvo hr̥ṣṭamānasah । dr̥ṣṭvāgato na sandehaḥ sītāṃ pavananandanaḥ ॥ 26॥ no cenmadhuvanam draṣṭuṃ samarthaḥ ko bhavenmama । tatrāpi vāyuputreṇa kṛtam kāryam na saṃśayaḥ ॥ 27॥

25-27. On reaching the palace, he said to Sugriv, 'The forest of honey, which you had diligently protected and nursed for a long time, has been laid to waste by the prince (Angad) and Hanuman' (25).

Hearing the words of Dadhimukh, Sugriv was happy. He said, 'There is no doubt that the son of the wind god (Hanuman) has come back successfully after seeing Sita (26). Otherwise, who had the guts to even glance at my forest of honey?

Verily indeed, I have no doubt whatever that the mission has been accomplished successfully by no one amongst those messengers except the son of the wind god (Hanuman)! (27).

श्रुत्वा सुग्रीववचनं हृष्टो रामस्तमब्रवीत् । किमुच्यते त्वया राजन् वचः सीताकथान्वितम् ॥ २८॥ सुग्रीवस्त्वब्रवीद्वाक्यं देव दृष्टावनीसुता । हनुमत्प्रमुखाः सर्वे प्रविष्टा मधुकाननम् ॥ २९॥ śrutvā sugrīvavacanam hr̥ṣṭo rāmastamabravit । kimucyate tvayā rājan vacaḥ sītākathānvitam ॥ 28॥ sugrīvastvabravidvākyaṃ deva dr̥ṣṭāvanīsutā । hanumatpramukhāḥ sarve praviṣṭā madhukānanam ॥ 29॥

28-29. Hearing the words of Sugriv, Lord Ram (who was sitting nearby) became delighted in his heart. He asked, 'Oh king (Sugriv)! What are you talking about Sita?' (28).

Sugriv replied, 'Oh Lord! It appears that the daughter of the earth ("avanīsutā"; Sita) has been found, because all of the monkeys, with Hanuman being the chief among them, have entered the forest of honey (and are having a great time there, something that couldn't have been possible for them to do had they not been successful in finding about her) (29).

भक्षयन्ति स्म सकलं ताडयन्ति स्म रक्षिणः । अकृत्वा देवकार्यं ते द्रष्टुं मधुवनं मम ॥ ३०॥
न समर्थास्ततो देवी दृष्टा सीतेति निश्चितम् । रक्षिणो वो भयं मास्तु गत्वा ब्रूत ममाज्ञया ॥ ३१॥

bhakṣayanti sma sakalam tādāyanti sma rakṣiṇaḥ । akṛtvā devakāryam te draṣṭum madhuvanam mama ॥ 30॥ na samarthāstato devī drṣṭā sīteti niścitam । rakṣiṇo vo bhayam māstu gatvā brūta mamājñayā ॥ 31॥

30-31. There inside the forest, they are eating everything and are beating the guards. Without doing your job, they couldn't have dared to look at my forest of honey, what to talk of eating fruits and drinking honey there (30).

Hence, it is certain that they have seen (i.e. successfully found out about) Sita.'

[Then turning to the guards who had rushed to inform Sugriv of the developments in the forest, he said—] 'Oh guards; don't be afraid. Go and give them this command of mine (31)—

वानरानङ्गदमुखानानयध्वं ममान्तिकम् ।
श्रुत्वा सुग्रीववचनं गत्वा ते वायुवेगतः ॥ ३२॥
हनुमत्प्रमुखानूचुर्गच्छतेश्वरशासनात् ।
द्रष्टुमिच्छति सुग्रीवः सरामो लक्ष्मणान्वितः ॥ ३३॥ vānarānaṅgadamukhānānayadhvaṁ mamāntikam । śrutvā sugrīvavacanam gatvā te vāyuvegataḥ ॥ 32॥ hanūmatpramukhānūcūrgacchateśvaraśāsanāt । draṣṭumicchati sugrīvaḥ sarāmo lakṣmaṇānvitaḥ ॥ 33॥

32-33. "Bring Angad and other monkeys here; bring them to me".

Hearing the orders of Sugriv, the guards went (back to the Madhuvan) with great haste (literally, with the speed of wind—"gatvā te vāyuvegataḥ") (32).

They said to Hanuman and others, 'It is the order of the king that all of you must go to him immediately, because Sugriv, along with Lord Ram and Laxman, want to see you without further delay (33).

युष्मानतीव हृष्टास्ते त्वरयन्ति महाबलाः ।
 तथेत्यम्बरमासाद्य ययुस्ते वानरोत्तमाः ॥ ३४॥
 हनूमन्तं पुरस्कृत्य युवराजं तथाङ्गदम् । रामसुग्रीवयोरग्रे निपेतुर्भुवि सत्वरम् ॥ ३५॥ yuṣmānatīva hr̥ṣṭāste tvarayanti mahābalāḥ । tathetyambaramāsādyā yayuste vānarottamāḥ ॥ 34॥ hanūmantam puraskṛtya yuvarājam tathāṅgadam । rāmasugrīvayoragre nipeturbhuvi satvaram ॥ 35॥

34-35. Oh the brave, strong and valiant ones (mahābalāḥ)! He (Sugriv) is very pleased with you all, and is therefore calling you immediately.'

Then saying 'alright', this troop of monkeys, which was superior to and the best amongst all the monkeys (vānarottamāḥ), proceeded to meet Sugriv by the path of the sky¹ ("tathetyambaramāsādyā"; they moved so fast that they appeared to fly from the Madhuvan to reach Sugriv) (34).

They kept Hanuman and Angad in the vanguard (to lead the triumphant group, as Hanuman was their champion, and Angad was their commander-in-chief and the prince of the kingdom), and landed on the ground in front of Lord Ram and Sugriv. [To wit, they literally "flew", or traveled as fast as they could, and stopped only when they reached the place where Sugriv and Lord Ram were eagerly waiting for them.] (35).

[Note—¹The monkeys of today can't fly. But perhaps in the time of Lord Ram, which was hundreds and thousands of years ago, they had the power to fly. We had giant lizards and insects when the earth was still relatively young, and they could fly like the birds of today; but since these creatures do not exist anymore does not mean that they hadn't ever. The world is ever-changing; what was in the past is not now, and what is now will not be in the future.

So, since monkeys and other such creatures, including humans, can't fly now, it does not mean that creatures who were called 'monkeys' at that time in the hoary past also could not fly.

They either had wings, or the science of flying was so evolved that they had some sort of a strap-on propeller or rocket that could lift them from the ground and enable them to fly like drones of today. This shows that the science of flying and rocket technology existed in an advanced stage at that time to which our story belongs.

It could have been a sky-bike that the inhabitants of that time used to travel quickly from one point to another. It could also have been a strap-on rocket or jet-engine, tied around the waist or shoulder, that enabled its wearer to travel in the air like being carried by a hot air balloon or a drone of today's world.]

हनूमान् राघवं प्राह दृष्ट्वा सीता निरामया ।
 साष्टाङ्गं प्रणिपत्याग्रे रामं पश्चाद्दृशीश्वरम् ॥ ३६॥
 कुशलं प्राह राजेन्द्र जानकी त्वां शुचान्विता ।

अशोकवनिकामध्ये शिंशुपामूलमाश्रिता ॥ ३७॥ hanūmān rāghavam prāha dr̥ṣṭā sītā nirāmayā । sāṣṭāṅgam praṇipatyāgre rāmaṃ paścāddharīśvaram ॥ 36॥ kuśalam prāha rājendra jānakī tvām śucānvitā । aśokavanikāmadhye śimśapāmūlamāśritā ॥ 37॥

36-37. Hanuman prostrated himself, to pay his obeisance, first before Lord Ram and then before the king of monkeys, Sugriv. Then he said to Lord Ram, 'I have returned after having seen Sita, and ascertaining about her condition' (36).

Oh the King of kings (rājendra)! Janki, who is submerged in sorrows and miseries, has told me to convey about her welfare¹ to you. She is sitting in the shade of a tree called the Sinshupa (the Indian red wood tree) in the Ashok grove (37).

[Note—¹Obviously, Sita was not in a very happy condition as it might sound on hearing what Hanuman says in verse no. 37. She was suffering immensely, and so definitely she was not happy.

But it is customary to tell a messenger sent by someone we love that he should go back and inform the person who has sent him that we are happy. It is a sort of courteous reply, an introductory to the main message which is then conveyed in detail. It simply means that Sita was found alive, that she has successfully borne all sorts of pains and resisted all temptations, that she is hopeful of early redemption, and that she remembers Lord Ram, loves and adores him, and longs to meet him at the earliest.

Truly, it would sound too rough, uncultured, ill-humoured and ill-mannered if one were to complain straightaway to the messenger to “go and tell your lord that I am feeling miserable, that I am very unhappy, I am neglected, and should I lose all hopes of getting help from him!”

Of course Sita said things of this kind, but Hanuman was renowned to be very wise and prudent, he knew that Lord Ram was very anxious about the welfare of Sita, and it would not sound good to break the bad news about Sita's sufferings at once. So he decided to keep the breaking of the bad news for a little while later, and wait till he had first given the good tidings and saying good things about Sita to Lord Ram, which would act as a buffer for the hard stoke of the bad part of the news that he would be obliged to convey in a short while.

What Hanuman intended was to prevent the use of any shocking words or phrases about Sita at the very outset because of the danger of Lord Ram being unable to bear the shock of any bad news. The fact that the monkeys were highly elated had already hinted to Lord Ram that Hanuman had seen Sita alive and had brought good news. So, it would be improper on the part of Hanuman to spoil the happiness that the Lord felt in the first instance when he saw the monkeys come back in a cheerful mood; for a true and faithful servant and devotee always strives to make his Lord happy and cheerful, and not otherwise.

Once the welcoming formalities and the round of congratulations were over, and the Lord sat Hanuman down to narrate the details of his expedition, Hanuman found ample time and opportunity to brief the Lord about Sita's actual condition that was indeed miserable. But even after giving the bad part of the news—of the difficulties and the problems of freeing her from the clutches of the demons who were very strong and powerful—Hanuman was wise enough to keep Lord Ram's spirits high and motivated by assuring him that bringing Sita back from the clutches of the enemy by defeating the latter was not really a great problem—see verse nos. 51-52 below.]

रक्षसीभिः परिवृता निराहारा कृशा प्रभो ।
 हा राम राम रामेति शोचन्ती मलिनाम्बरा ॥ ३८॥
 एकवेणी मया दृष्टा शनैराश्वसिता शुभा ।
 वृक्षशाखान्तरे स्थित्वा सूक्ष्मरूपेण ते कथाम् ॥ ३९॥ rākṣasībhiḥ parivṛtā nirāhārā kṛśā prabho । hā rāma rāma rāmeti śocantī malināmbarā ॥ 38॥ ekavenī mayā dr̥ṣṭā śanairāśvāsītā śubhā । vṛkṣāśākhāntare sthitvā sūkṣmarūpeṇa te kathām ॥ 39॥

38-39. Oh Lord! She is always surrounded by demonesses. She has become very weak and emaciated because she has stopped taking food and water (i.e. she is fasting). She feels hopeless and hapless, and constantly laments and broods, saying to herself repeatedly 'Oh Ram' in a sorrowful tone. Her clothes have become dirty and unkempt (38).

The hairs have stuck together in a thick plait. I saw Sita in such a distressed and pitiable condition as I have briefly described to you. I tried to comfort her, who is auspicious and holy (śubhā), very politely and in a low voice (so as not to arouse suspicion amongst the demonesses, as well as not to alarm and scare Sita who was already on the verge of a nervous breakdown).

Lord, when I reached there, I had assumed a miniature form and hid myself behind leaves and branches of a tree. From there I narrated your divine and glorious story to her in brief (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 2-15) (39).

जन्मारभ्य तवात्यर्थं दण्डकागमनं तथा ।
 दशाननेन हरणं जानक्या रहिते त्वयि ॥ ४०॥
 सुग्रीवेण यथा मैत्री कृत्वा वालिनिबर्हणम् ।
 मार्गणार्थं च वैदेह्या सुग्रीवेण विसर्जिताः ॥ ४१॥ janmārabhya tavātyartham daṇḍakāgamanam tathā । daśānanena haraṇam jānakyā rahite tvayi ॥ 40॥ sugrīveṇa yathā maitrī kṛtvā vālinibarhaṇam । mārgaṇārtham ca vaidehyā sugrīveṇa visarjitāḥ ॥ 41॥

40-41. I narrated your story to her from the beginning, starting with your birth, how you came to the Dandakaranya forest where the 10-headed Ravana abducted her who is the daughter of Janak (i.e. Sita herself) in your absence (40), how you had befriended Sugriv, how you had slayed Baali, and finally, how Sugriv had dispatched large number of monkeys in order to search the whereabouts of Vaidehi (Sita) (41).

महाबला महासत्त्वा हरयो जितकाशिनः ।
 गताः सर्वत्र सर्वे वै तत्रैकोऽहमिहागतः ॥ ४२॥
 अहं सुग्रीवसचिवो दासोऽहं राघवस्य हि ।
 दृष्टा यज्जानकी भाग्यात्पूयासः फलितोऽद्य मे ॥ ४३॥ mahābalā mahāsattvā harayo jitakāśinaḥ । gatāḥ sarvatra sarve vai tatraiko'hamihāgataḥ ॥ 42॥ ahaṁ sugrīvasacivo dāso'haṁ rāghavasya hi ।

 dr̥ṣṭā yajjānakī bhāgyātpayāsaḥ phalito'dya me ॥ 43॥

42-43. These monkeys were truly strong, brave, courageous, valiant and steadfast; they were famed for the victories they had won in battles (mahābalā mahāsattvā harayo jitakāśinaḥ). Countless troops of such veteran monkeys were sent in all the directions (to search for Sita) (42).

I told her that I was a member of one such group, and that I am a minister of Sugriv (ahaṁ sugrīvasacivo) and a humble servant of Lord Raghav (Lord Ram) (dāso'haṁ rāghavasya hi). I also told her the purpose of my visit to Lanka—which was to search for her there.

Today it is my good luck and a favourable providence (bhāgyātpayāsaḥ) that has rewarded me for my efforts (phalito'dya me) by enabling me to see Jankī (Sita) personally (dr̥ṣṭā yajjānakī). [And here I've come to report the good tidings to you.]' (43).

इत्युदीरितमाकर्ण्य सीता विस्फारितेक्षणा । केन वा कर्णपीयुषं श्रावितं मे शुभाक्षरम् ॥ ४४॥
 यदि सत्यं तदायातु महर्शनपथं तु सः । ततोऽहं वानराकारः सूक्ष्मरूपेण जानकीम् ॥ ४५॥
 पूणम्य पूज्जलिर्भूत्वा दूरादेव स्थितः प्रभो । पृष्टोऽहं सीतया कस्त्वमित्यादि बहुविस्तरम् ॥ ४६॥ ityudīritamākarnya sītā visphāritekṣaṇā । kena vā karṇapīyusaṁ śrāvitam me śubhākṣaram ॥ 44॥ yadi satyaṁ tadāyātu maddarśanapathaṁ tu saḥ । tato'haṁ vānarākāraḥ sūkṣmarūpeṇa jānakīm ॥ 45॥ praṇamya prāñjalirbhūtvā dūrādeva sthitaḥ prabho । pr̥ṣṭo'haṁ sītayā kastvamityādi bahuvistaram ॥ 46॥

44-46. Hearing my words, Sita's eyes lit up immediately with joy. She said, 'Who is he who has made me here this pleasant and auspicious news which is like nectar for my ears? (44).

If all of this is true, then the one who has said such sweet words must come in front of me.'

So then I presented myself before Janki (Sita) in the form of a small monkey (45). I bowed before her with joined hands (to pay my respects to her), and stood quietly at some distance, waiting for further instructions from her. Then oh Lord, Sita asked me, 'who are you?', and many other things in detail to ascertain my identity and authenticity (46).

मया सर्वं क्रमेणैव विज्ञापितमरिन्दम ।
 पश्चान्मयार्पितं देव्यै भवदत्ताङ्गुलीयकम् ॥ ४७॥
 तेन मामतिविश्वस्ता वचनं चेदमब्रवीत् ।
 यथा दृष्टास्मि हनुमन् पीड्यमाना दिवानिशम् ॥ ४८॥
 राक्षसीनां तर्जनैस्तत्सर्वं कथय राघवे ।
 मयोक्तं देवि रामोऽपि त्वत्त्वन्तापरिनिष्ठितः ॥ ४९॥
 परिशोचत्यहोरात्रं त्वद्वार्तां नाधिगम्य सः । इदानीमेव गत्वाहं स्थितिं रामाय ते ब्रुवे ॥ ५०॥ mayā sarvaṃ krameṇaiva vijñāpitamarindama । paścānmayārpitaṃ devyai bhavaddattāṅgulīyakam ॥ 47॥ tena māmatisvastā vacanaṃ cedamabravīt । yathā dr̥ṣṭāsmi hanuman pīḍyamānā divānīśam ॥ 48॥ rākṣasīnāṃ tarjanaistatsarvaṃ kathaya rāghave । mayoktaṃ devi rāmo'pi tvaccintāpariniṣṭhitaḥ ॥ 49॥ pariśocatyahorātraṃ tvadvārtāṃ nādhigamya saḥ । idānīmeva gatvāhaṃ sthitiṃ rāmāya te bruve ॥ 50॥

47-48. Oh Lord (Ram) who is a vanquisher of enemies (marindama)! I enlightened her about everything in a chronological order, in the sequence as they happened (mayā sarvaṃ krameṇaiva vijñāpita). After that I gave her the finger ring you had given me (47).

This token of yours made her believe me completely; she no longer doubted me and my identity in the least. Being fully convinced of me, she confided in me thus: 'Oh Hanuman! You have seen me, and how I am being tormented day and night (48) by these cruel demonesses. Go and tell Lord Raghav (Lord Ram) all of it as you have personally witnessed. [To wit, tell the Lord all the things you have seen yourself, and how much I suffer. Tell him that there is no exaggeration in it, as you have been a witness to all.]'

I replied, 'Oh goddess! Lord Ram is also very worried about you; he remembers you, he constantly broods about you, and is very concerned about your welfare (49).

Since he had no news (or information) about you, he keeps on worrying day and night for you. But that will end soon, for I shall now go back and tell him everything about you and your condition. [This will reassure the Lord; it will ignite a fresh spark of hope in his distraught heart. Be comforted mother, for everything will end soon.] (50).

रामः श्रवणमात्रेण सुग्रीवेण सलक्ष्मणः ।
 वानरानीकपैः सार्धमागमिष्यति तेऽन्तिकम् ॥ ५१॥
 रावणं सकुलं हत्वा नेष्यति त्वां स्वकं पुरम् ।
 अभिज्ञां देहि मे देवि यथा मां विश्वसेद्विभुः ॥ ५२॥ rāmaḥ śravaṇamātreṇa sugrīveṇa salakṣmaṇaḥ । vānarānīkapaiḥ sārddhamāgamiṣyati te'ntikam ॥ 51॥ rāvaṇaṁ sakulaṁ hatvā neṣyati tvāṁ svakaṁ puram । abhijñāṁ dehi me devi yathā māṁ viśvasedvibhuḥ ॥ 52॥

51-52. As soon as Lord Ram hears my report, there is verily no doubt that he will come to you without wasting any time, and with him will come Sugriv, Laxman and other great monkey commanders (51).

He would then slay Ravana along with his kith and kin, and all his relatives and compatriots will meet the same fate. After that, the Lord shall take you back to his capital city (of Ayodhya). Oh goddess (devi)! You should give me some sign, some sort of a token, some kind of memento so that the Lord would believe me.

['Please mother', I requested her, 'give me something which is exclusive to you, and which will identify you without leaving a trace of doubt in the mind of Lord Ram, so that when I go back and tell him I have met and talked with you, and then give him that token from you, the Lord would be fully convinced with what I tell him, and also that I have met no one else but Sita, that I have not been deceived.'] (52).

इत्युक्त्वा सा शिरोरत्नं चूडापाशे स्थितं प्रियम् ।
 दत्त्वा काकेन यद्वृत्तं चित्रकूटगिरौ पुरा ॥ ५३॥
 तदप्याहाश्रुपूर्णाक्षी कुशलं ब्रूहि राघवम् ।
 लक्ष्मणं ब्रूहि मे किञ्चिदुरुक्तं भाषितं पुरा ॥ ५४॥
 तत्क्षमस्वाज्ञभावेन भाषितं कुलनन्दन । तारयेन्मां यथा रामस्तथा कुरु कृपान्वितः ॥ ५५॥ ityuktā sā śiroratnaṁ cūḍāpāśe sthitaṁ priyam । dattvā kākena yadvṛttaṁ citrakūṭagirau purā ॥ 53॥ tadapyāhāśrupūrṇākṣī kuśalaṁ brūhi rāghavam । lakṣmaṇaṁ brūhi me kiñciduruktaṁ bhāṣitaṁ purā ॥ 54॥ tatksamasvājñabhāvena bhāṣitaṁ kulanandana । tārayenmāṁ yathā rāmastathā kuru kṛpānvitaḥ ॥ 55॥

53-55. When I had said so, she gave me the 'Choodamani' (an ornament, kind of a diadem, worn by married women in the hair on her head) which was stuck in her hairs, and which was very dear to her. Then she told me about an incident that occurred in Chitrakoot that pertained to the crow (i.e. the Jayant's episode)¹ (53), and filling her eyes with tears, she said: Tell Raghav (Lord Ram) about my welfare.

Tell Laxman: Oh the great son of the family (kulanandana)! Whatever harsh, accusing and scornful words that I might have used for you earlier due to my stupidity and ignorance², you must excuse me and forgive me for it. Besides this, adopt whatever strategy is necessary so that Lord Ram, being merciful, graceful and kind, liberates me from the torment from which I am suffering horribly.' (54-55).

[Note—¹This event is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 2.

Briefly, Jayant, the son of Indra, the king of the gods, tried to tease Lord Ram and Sita while they lived on a mountain in Chitrakoot. So he disguised himself as a crow and pricked Sita's feet while Lord Ram was asleep. Blood oozed out from the wound, and when the Lord woke up and discovered Jayant's mischief, he picked up a blade of grass and shot it at the crow like a live arrow. This 'arrow' pursued Jayant everywhere he went to hide and escape from it, but he found no relief anywhere. At last, sage Narad advised him to go and surrender himself to Lord Ram and beg for forgiveness if he wants to survive. Jayant went and fell at the feet of the Lord, who spared his life but punished him by taking out one of his eyes, making the 'crow' blind with one of its eyes. This is because the Lord told him that his arrow could not go in vain, and it must strike an object, so Jayant's eyes took the hit as a warning to him not to cast an evil eye on anyone any longer.

This particular incident was a private affair, and not even Laxman, who was a constant companion of the Lord, was aware of it as he had gone out to the forest for some errand at that time. By narrating this incident, which was only known to Lord Ram, and telling Hanuman to remind Lord Ram about it, Sita intended to convince the Lord that Hanuman indeed has met her, for otherwise he could never have known what transpired that day at Chitrakoot concerning Jayant.

This incident would serve as a double check for Lord Ram, in addition to the Choodamani which Sita sent to him. She also took this precaution because in case some accident occurs and Hanuman loses the Choodamani, then at least he would have at least this one proof, of the incident concerning Jayant, that he has indeed met Sita.

²This incident is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 27-37. Sita had used some harsh words and accused Laxman of malefic intentions, forcing him to leave her and go in the direction that Lord Ram had taken in pursuit of the decoy golden deer. Finding Sita alone, Ravana had abducted her. Sita sorely regretted her behaviour, but it was too late by then.

She realized that she had made a grave mistake by using harsh words against Laxman who was totally and completely devoted to her and Lord Ram, and had always treated her as his mother and Lord Ram as his father. So she now asks Hanuman to beg his forgiveness on her behalf.]

इत्युक्त्वा रुदती सीता दुःखेन महतावृता । मयाप्याश्वसिता राम वदता सर्वमेव ते ॥ ५६॥
ततः प्रस्थापितो राम त्वत्समीपमिहागतः । तदागमनवेलायामशोकवनिकां प्रियाम् ॥ ५७॥ ityuktvā rudatī sītā duḥkhena mahatāvṛtā । mayāpyāśvāsītā rāma vadatā sarvameva te ॥ 56॥ tataḥ prasthāpito rāma tvatsamīpamihāgataḥ ।

tadāgamanavelāyāmaśokavanikāṃ priyām ॥ 57॥

56-57. Saying this, Sita became overwhelmed with great emotional distress; sorrow, anguish and pain overcame her as she began to weep bitterly. I tried to console her, I tried to reassure her, by narrating all details about you (about your welfare, about how you remember her, about how much you truly love her and have immense affection for her) (56).

Then I took leave of her and came back to you. At the time of coming here, I had ruined Ravana's Ashok grove which was very dear to him (57).

उत्पाद्य राक्षसांस्तत् बहून् हत्वा क्षणादहम् ।
रावणस्य सुतं हत्वा रावणेनाभिभाष्य च ॥ ५८॥
तत्कामशेषतो दग्ध्वा पुनरप्यागमं क्षणात् । श्रुत्वा हनूमतो वाक्यं रामोऽत्यन्तपूहृष्टधीः ॥ ५९॥

utpāṭya rākṣasāṃstatra bahūn hatvā kṣaṇādaham । rāvaṇasya sutam hatvā rāvaṇenābhibhāṣya ca ॥ 58॥ laṅkāmaśeṣato dagdhvā punarapyāgamam kṣaṇāt । śrutvā hanūmato vākyaṃ rāmo'tyantaprahṛṣṭadhīḥ ॥ 59॥

58-59. While destroying that garden I had first killed many demons within a short time, and then I killed Ravana's son (Akshay Kumar). After that, I got an opportunity to have a talk with Ravana himself (58).

Thereafter I burnt Lanka and came here quickly, as soon as I could, without wasting any time.'

Hearing these words of Hanuman, Lord Ram felt very happy and contented (59).

हनूमंस्ते कृतं कार्यं देवैरपि सुदुष्करम् ।
उपकारं न पश्यामि तव प्रत्युपकारिणः ॥ ६०॥
इदानीं ते प्रयच्छामि सर्वस्वं मम मारुते । इत्यालिङ्ग्य समाकृष्य गाढं वानरपुङ्गवम् ॥ ६१॥ hanūmaṃste kṛtaṃ kāryaṃ devairapi suduṣkaram । upakāraṃ na paśyāmi tava pratyupakāriṇaḥ ॥ 60॥ idānīm te prayacchāmi sarvasvaṃ mama māroute । ityāliṅgya samākṛṣya gāḍhaṃ vānarapuṅgavam ॥ 61॥

60-61. Lord Ram said, 'Oh Hanuman! The work which you have done is very difficult and daunting even for the Gods to do. I do not know what good I can do for you in return (60).

Oh Maruti (the son of the wind god)! Come dear, I will offer to you myself as a whole, for I do not know any other way to recompense you.'

Saying this, Lord Ram pulled Hanuman, who was the most exalted of the monkeys, near him, and most affectionately embraced him, clasped him firmly to his heart. [To wit, it was a rare privilege bestowed to only a few by the Lord. By publicly embracing Hanuman the Lord gave out a signal to all those who were standing around that he will forever treat Hanuman as his dear brother and friend, as someone who is very near and dear to him.] (61).

सार्द्रनेत्रो रघुश्रेष्ठः परां प्रीतिमवाप सः । हनूमन्तमुवाचेदं राघवो भक्तवत्सलः ॥ ६२॥
 परिम्भो हि मे लोके दुर्लभः परमात्मनः । अतस्त्वं मम भक्तोऽसि प्रियोऽसि हरिपुङ्गव ॥ ६३॥ sārdranetro raghuśreṣṭhaḥ parāṃ prītimavāpa saḥ । hanūmantamuvācedaṃ rāghavo bhaktavatsalaḥ ॥ 62॥ parirambho hi me loka durlabhaḥ paramātmanaḥ । atastvaṃ mama bhakto'si priyo'si haripuṅgava ॥ 63॥

62-63. His (Lord Ram's) eyes welled up with tears (of joy and thanks-giving) even as emotions of extreme affection and gratitude began to heave in his heart for Hanuman.

Then Raghav (Lord Ram), who loves his devotees and is most gracious, merciful, kind, compassionate, benevolent and munificent towards them (bhaktavatsalaḥ), said to Hanuman (62), ---

'Oh Hanuman, you are indeed the best amongst the monkeys (haripuṅgava)! It is very rare for a creature to be get the honour of embracing me, who am the Supreme Soul (i.e. the 'Parmatma', the Supreme Being, the Lord God) of this creation. You are therefore exceptionally privileged and most lucky to have got this honour. Forsooth and without gainsay, you are most dear to me; you are my ardent devotee' (63).

यत्पादपद्मयुगलं तुलसीदलाद्यैः सम्पूज्य विष्णुपदवीमतुलां प्रयान्ति । तेनैव किं पुनरसौ परिब्धमूर्ती रामेण वायुतनयः कृतपुण्यपुञ्जः ॥ ६४॥

yatpādapadmayaṅgalaṃ tulasīdalādyaiḥ sampūjya viṣṇupadavīmatulāṃ prayānti । tenaiva kiṃ punarasau parirabdhamūrti rāmeṇa vāyutanayaḥ kṛtapuṇyapuñjaḥ ॥ 64॥

64. [Lord Shiva makes the following observation—] By worshipping his (Lord Sri Ram's) two lotus-like holy feet, using Tulsi leaves (basil plant leaves) etc., one can attain the most exalted and matchless state of existence that entitles the worshipper to attain the holy feet of Lord Vishnu (i.e. to attain heaven).

What can one say, therefore, about the great privilege, the great fortune and the great luck of the son of the wind god (Hanuman), who does deeds that are righteous and auspicious, because he was embraced by Lord Ram himself! (64).

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे सुन्दरकाण्डे

पञ्चमः सर्गः ॥ ५॥

॥ समाप्तमिदम् सुन्दरकाण्डम् ॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde sundarakāṇḍe
pañcamah sargaḥ ॥ 5॥

॥ samāptamidam sundarakāṇḍam ॥

Thus ends Adhyatma Ramayan's Sundar Kand, Canto 5 that describes the conversation between Lord Shiva and his divine consort Uma.

-----**-----

Section 7.3:

Geetawali Ramayan

{Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-21, 47-51}

So far by now in this Chapter no. 7 we have read two classical works, viz. Ram Charit Manas of Goswami Tulsidas (section no. 7.1), and Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas (section no. 7.2), to be acquainted with how Sita, who was held as a captive by the demon king Ravana in his capital city of Lanka, was discovered by Hanuman, how he had burnt the great city to ashes, and how he came back to give the good and happy tidings to Lord Ram, that he has found Sita.

Till now both Lord Ram and Sita were surrounded by a dark cloud of hopelessness and despair, when everything seemed to be lost as there was but little chance that Sita would ever be found by the distraught Lord Ram. But now the situation had suddenly changed, and changed for the better, as if a bright sunlight of hope and expectation of succour gleamed in the horizon, the rays of which pierced through the all-engulfing darkness of gloomy thoughts. The fate that was a few days ago shrouded in grief and dismay now shone in a brilliant light of cheer and happiness.

This is why that part of the fascinating and wondrous Story which narrates the discovery of Sita, especially when the chances of finding her were very remote, and a partial punishment of the demons by way of burning of their city of Lanka by Hanuman, is called the “Sundar Kand”, or the ‘beautiful chapter in the whole Story’—as it marked the positive turn of events from what was previously considered to gloomy, sad and lost, to a situation when there was cheer and happiness all around with the arrival of good tidings about her. From now on things would start looking up, for Lord Ram would launch a determined campaign to free Sita and slay the demons, which would also help the Lord to fulfil his earlier promise made to the gods and the sages that he would rid the earth from the terror and the scourge of the cruel and sinful demons, and his subsequent triumphant return to his own capital city of Ayodhya where he would be crowned the King-Emperor.

But before we move on with this marvellous Story, let us take a brief pause and rewind to have a closer look at some of the major events narrated in ‘Sundar Kand’, events that would look all the more fascinating when we look at them from closer quarters and read about them at a slow pace, by paying a little more attention to certain important mile-stone events which we had till now witnessed unfold in quick succession.

For this purpose, we shall first read the relevant part of the Story from Tulsidas’ classic “Geetawali Ramayan” in the current sub-section no. 7.3, and then from his other classic titled “Kavitawali Ramayan” in the next sub-section no. 7.4.

While ‘Geetawali Ramayan’ excellently narrates the emotional meeting of Hanuman with Sita and his subsequent report to Lord Ram about her pitiful condition in its Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-21, the ‘Kavitawali Ramayan’ presents a very vivid account of the burning of Lanka and the devastation it caused in its Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-32. Meanwhile, The way Trijata, the elderly demoness who had been friendly to Sita, tried to console and comfort her has been soulfully described in Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 47-51.

We will now proceed to read Geetawali Ramayan:-

Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-21, 47-51:-

सुन्दरकाण्ड

अशोकवनमें हनूमान्
राग केदार

(5 / 1)

रजायसु रामको जब पायो ।
गाल मेलि मुद्रिका, मुदित मन पवनपूत सिर नायो ॥ 1 ॥
भालुनाथ नल-नील साथ चले, बली बालिको जायो ।
फरकि सुअँग भए सगुन, कहत मानो मग मुद-मंगल छायो ॥ 2 ॥
देखि बिबर, सुधि पाइ गीधसों सबनि अपनो बलु मायो ।
सुमिरि राम, तकि तरकि तोयनिधि, लंक लूक-सो आयो ॥ 3 ॥
खोजत घर घर, जनु दरिद्र-मनु फिरत लागि धन धायो ।
तुलसी सिय बिलोकि पुलक्यो तनु, भूरिभाग भयो भायो ॥ 4 ॥

Sundarakāṇḍa

aśōkavanamēm hanūmān

rāga kēdāra

(5/1)

rajāyasu rāmakō jaba pāyō.
 gāla mēli mudrikā, mudita mana pavanapūta sira nāyō.. 1.. bhālunātha nala-nīla sātha calē, balī bālikō jāyō.
 pharaki su'aṁga bha'ē saguna, kahata māmō maga muda-maṅgala chāyō.. 2..
 dēkhi bivara, sudhi pā'i gīdhasōm sabani apanō balu māyō.
 sumiri rāma, taki taraki tōyanidhi, laṅka lūka-sō āyō.. 3.. khōjata ghara ghara, janu daridra-manu phirata lāgi dhana dhāyō.
 tulasī siya bilōki pulakyō tanu, bhūribhāga bhayō bhāyō.. 4..

Departure of Hanuman for Lanka

Verse no. 5/1—[When all the monkey groups sent to reconnoiter for Sita had been dispatched, one final group consisting of the chief members of Sugriv's court was awaiting orders from Lord Ram to proceed. It consisted of Hanuman, Angad, Jamvant, Nal and Neel etc.

Lord Ram, who was omniscient and all-knowing, knew who will finally accomplish success in this daunting task: it would be Hanuman. So the Lord called him close and gave him his personal signet ring to be taken to Sita for the purpose of establishing Hanuman's identity as well as a token to remind her that the Lord was on his way. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-13 that precede Doha no. 23.

This group headed southwards, in the direction where the chariot bearing Sita had gone through the sky. Finally, they reached the shores of the mighty "southern ocean", and seeing this formidable barrier, all lost hope.

Here, they met Sampati, the old brother of the vulture Jatau. When he discovered who these monkeys and bears were and their purpose of coming hither, he mounted the top of a mountain summit and gazed in the distant horizon whereat he descried Sita sitting forlorn and broken by distress under a tree in the royal garden of Ravana in the city of Lanka in the middle of the ocean. The question now was how to go there and who would do so.

At this juncture, Jamvant persuaded Hanuman to shed his withdrawn, humble, meek, submissive and docile nature, and instead come out in his true form and mettle. So encouraged, Hanuman assumed a colossal form, and prepared to leap across the ocean in one mighty leap. This part of the story is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Doha no. 23—Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 30.

The present verse no. 5/1 of Geetawali summarises these developments. From the ground Hanuman looked like a comet streaking against the dark firmament of the heavens as he made his way to Lanka.]

When Hanuman got Lord Ram's permission, he bowed his head reverentially at the holy feet of the Lord with an exhilarated mind, and kept (tucked away safely) the signet ring (given to him by Lord Ram as a token of recognition of Hanuman by Sita) in his mouth (gāla mēli mudrikā)¹ (1).

[¹This freed both the hands of Hanuman and also ensured that the ring does not fall on the way. It is common observance that monkeys have a pouch of skin at the back of their mouths where they tuck away eatables quickly when they find some, only to retrieve it later on when they are at ease, and ruminate on it, chewing the food properly before actually swallowing it.

So, Hanuman tucked Lord Ram's signet ring safely here.]

Accompanying him on the mission (to find Sita) were Jamvant (the bear king), Nal, Neel (the engineers of the monkey army), and Angad, the brave son of Baali. At the time of departure, the parts of their bodies began to flutter or quiver to indicate auspicious results (or success in their endeavours), and a happy and comfortable journey (2).

On the way, they came across a cave and examined (or explored) it, found Sampati, the king of vultures (and brother of Jatau) who told them the whereabouts of Sita².

(Realising that they have a vast ocean stretching before them which has to be crossed twice—once while going to Lanka, and the second time to come back from there, besides the task of penetrating the impregnable fort of Lanka and warding off the ferocious demons who will have to be fought and won over—) They (the bears and the monkeys) weighed (judged) their strengths and abilities. [All discovered that they cannot match the task at hand.³]

(At last, on Jamvant's encouragement—) Hanuman remembered the potential powers of the holy name of Lord Sri Ram, glanced at the ocean (in both contempt as well as a challenge), jumped and crossed it (i.e. flew over it) like a bright streak of lightning (i.e. like a bright comet or meteor), and finally landed in Lanka⁴ (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 29.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 30.

⁴Hanuman looked at the ocean with 'contempt' because it was creating a formidable hurdle in fulfilling the Lord's task because of its stubbornness and arrogance. The ocean was haughty that no one can dare to cross it. Hanuman took it as a 'challenge', and wished to tell the ocean 'look, let us see who is stronger—try to stop me if you can. I have great faith in the strength of the Lord's holy name, and I'll invoke it while flying across you, and I dare you to stop me if you have the guts.']

Tulsidas says that even as a pauper (or anyone who is in dire need of money) wistfully wanders everywhere searching for money, Hanuman went from house to house in search of Sita, and when he finally saw her (in the Ashok grove), he was extremely thrilled and euphoric. In this way, having achieved his goal (or, being successful in his endeavour of finding Sita), he considered himself to be profoundly fortunate⁵ (4).

[⁵After landing on the soil of Lanka, Hanuman had to first defeat the city's formidable gate-keeper, a demoness by the name of Lankini. Hanuman overcame her easily. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 4.

Having overcome this first hurdle, Hanuman began his search for Sita, looking into each home and place throughout the night, but could not spy her anywhere. Finally, on the next morning of his arrival, he met Vibhishan, the younger brother of Ravana who happened to be of a pious nature as opposed to the rest of the demon race. Vibhishan guided Hanuman to the garden where Ravana had kept Sita in confinement. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 5—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8.

Thereafter, Hanuman silently sneaked in the garden and hid himself in the thick foliage of the tree under which Sita stayed, contemplating upon his next move. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 5—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 9.]

(5/2)

देखी जानकी जब जाइ। परम धीर समीरसुतके प्रेम उर न समाइ॥ 1॥
 कृस सरीर सुभाय सोभित, लगी उड़ि उड़ि धूलि। मनहु मनसिज मोहनी—मनि गयो भोरे भूलि॥ 2॥
 रटति निसिबासर निरंतर राम राजिवनैन।
 जात निकट न बिरहिनी—अरि अकनि ताते बैन॥ 3॥
 नाथके गुनगाथ कहि कपि दई मुँदरी डारि। कथा सुनि उठि लई कर बर, रुचिर नाम निहारि॥ 4॥
 हृदय हरष—बिषाद अति पति—मुद्रिका पहिचानि।
 दास तुलसी दसा सो केहि भाँति कहै बखानि ?॥ 5॥

(5/2)

dēkhī jānakī jaba jā'i.
 parama dhīra samīrasutakē prēma ura na samā'i.. 1..
 kṛsa sarīra subhāya sōbhita, lagī uḍi uḍi dhūli.
 manahu manasija mōhanī-mani gayō bhōrē bhūli.. 2.. raṭati nisibāsara nirantara rāma rājivanaina.
 jāta nikaṭa na birahinī-ari akani tātē baina.. 3.. nāthakē gunagātha kahi kapi da'ī muṁdarī ḍāri.
 kathā suni uṭhi la'ī kara bara, rucira nāma nihāri.. 4.. hṛdaya haraṣa-biṣāda ati pati-mudrikā pahicāni.
 dāsa tulasī dasā sō kēhi bhāṁti kahai bakhāni?.. 5..

Hanuman in the Ashok Garden where he discovers Sita

Verse no. 5/2—After entering Lanka, when Hanuman saw Sita, his affection knew no limits and it virtually overflowed from his heart (1).

He found that Sita's body was emaciated but effused radiance. It was covered with dust (for she hadn't bathed for a long time), and she looked like Kamdeo (cupid) devoid of his glamour and glory (2).

She chanted Lord Ram's holy name day and night. Hearing her agony-filled words and laments, even the cool breeze did not go near her because it feared of getting heated by the fire of her agonies (3).

Seeing this pitifully doleful condition of Sita, Hanuman began to sing praises of Lord Ram, and dropped the signet ring (of Lord Ram that he had brought).

Sita heard the praises and the life-history of Lord Ram, and noticing the ring, she picked it up (4).

Seeing her beloved's article, she was at once thrilled as well as overcome with grave sorrow¹. Tulsidas says he is unable to describe that moment (5).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 12 along with Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes it, and Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that follow this Doha.

Sita was stunned when she first heard some unseen voice narrating the story of Lord Ram, and then seeing the Lord's ring dropped before her. She had never expected under the circumstances she was in both these things as she knew that the place was tightly secured by ferocious demons, and that it lied in the middle of the ocean which was like a no-man's land in the wilderness of creation. Till this moment she was virtually reconciled to her doomed fate, waiting for that day when her breath would finally leave her emaciated body.

But Hanuman's singing Lord Ram's glories and the signet ring of the Lord seemed like a bolt from the heaven to her. So, on the one hand she was exceptionally thrilled and ecstatic as one can ever be when one sees hope at the end of a dark tunnel, but on the other hand she immediately became suspicious and apprehensive. Is it that these demons have subdued or killed the Lord, and have brought his ring to prove it to her? Is it that they have sent one of their guards to tease her by singing the praises of the Lord before dropping the ring, thereby deriving sadistic and malicious pleasure at her compounded misery and grief?]

राग सोरठ

(5 / 3)

बोलि, बलि, मूँदरी ! सानुज कुसल कोसलपालु।
 अमिय-बचन सुनाइ मेटहि बिरह-ज्वाला-जालु॥ 1॥
 कहत हित अपमान मैं कियो, होत हिय सोइ सालु। रोष छमि सुधि करत कबहू ललित लछिमन लालु ?॥ 2॥
 परसपर पति-देवरहि का होति चरचा चालु। देवि ! कहु केहि हेत बोले बिपुल बानर-भालु॥ 3॥
 सीलनिधि समरथ सुसाहिब दीनबंधु दयालु। दास तुलसी प्रभुहि काहु न कह्यो मेरो हालु॥ 4॥

rāga sōraṭha

(5/3)

bōli, bali, mūṃdarī! sānuja kusala kōsalapālu.
 amiya-bacana sunā'i mēṭahi biraha-jvālā-jālu.. 1.. kahata hita apamāna mairṃ kiyō, hōta hiya sō'i sālu.

rōṣa chami sudhi karata kabahū lalita lachimana lālu?.. 2.. parasapara pati-dēvarahi kā hōti caracā cālu.
 dēvi! kahu kēhi hēta bōlē bipula bānara-bhālu.. 3.. sīlanidhi samaratha susāhiba dīnabandhu dayālu.
 dāsa tulasī prabhuhi kāhu na kahyō mērō hālu.. 4..

Sita's astonishment when she saw the Signet Ring of Lord Ram

Verse no. 5/3—[Sita, stunned at seeing Lord Sri Ram's signet ring coming to her without any apparent bearer in sight, said—] ‘Oh Ring! I offer (literally, surrender) myself to you, and I sincerely ask you: say, tell me, is the king of Kaushal clan (Lord Sri Ram) happy and well along with his younger brother?

Quench (or douse) my fire of torments and agonies of separation by letting me hear your nectar-like (sweet, pleasant, favourable and soothing) words. (In other words, tell me the good news about Lord Ram and Laxman.) (1).

Alas! I had scorned at, reproached and humiliated Laxman by using harsh words for him though he was most sincere and bonafide in his advice to me¹. My heart never ceases to regret it. Does dear Laxman ever remember me; has he overcome his bitterness and anger and frustration at me? (2).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse no. 3/6, stanza no. 2, and verse no. 3/7, stanza no. 2 herein above.]

What is the topic of discussion now-a-days between my husband and my brother-in-law? Goddess! Do tell me, why has he (Sri Ram) called so many bears and monkeys²? (3).

[²The question arises, how did she know that Lord Ram has collected bears and monkeys around him? Well, she had a good companion with her in the person of the demoness Tadka. It was she who used to reassure Sita every time the latter sank in deep despair—this will be clear later on in verse no. 5/47-5/51 of this chapter. The spies of Ravana were constantly bringing news of the developments in Kishkindha, and this leaked to the public and ultimately reached the ears of Sita through Trijata. So, Sita was not totally unaware about Sri Ram though she might not have been aware of the details. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 12 where we read that Trijata has assured Sita that things would be alright if she holds her courage just before Hanuman dropped the ring.]

Oh Ring! The Lord is a treasury of virtues and courage, is potent and able in every respect, is a true Lord and Master (having all the good virtues that is expected of them), is a friend of the distressed, the lowly, the humble, the underdog, the downtrodden and the miserable ones, and is most kind, merciful and compassionate. It appears that no one has conveyed my news (about my whereabouts, my pathetic condition etc.) to the Lord till now (otherwise, he wouldn't have delayed so much) (4).

(5 / 4)

सदल सलषन हैं कुसल कृपालु कोसल राउ !

सील—सदन सनहे—सागर सहज सरल सुभाउ ॥ 1 ॥
 नींद—भूख न देवरहि, परिहरेको पछिताउ ।
 धीरधुर रघुबीरको नहि सपनेहु चित चाउ ॥ 2 ॥
 सोधु बिनु, अनुरोध रितुके, बोध बिहित उपाउ ।
 करत हैं सोइ समय साधन, फलति बनत बनाउ ॥ 3 ॥
 पठए कपि दिसि दसहु, जे प्रभुकाज कुटिल न काउ ।
 बोलि लियो हनुमान करि सनमान, जानि समाउ ॥ 4 ॥
 दर्इ हौं संकेत कहि, कुसलात सियहि सुनाउ ।
 देखि दुर्ग, बिसेषि जानकि, जानि रिपु—गति आउ ॥ 5 ॥
 कियो सीय—प्रबोध मुँदरी, दियो कपिहि लखाउ ।
 पाइ अवसर, नाइ सिर तुलसीस—गुनगन गाउ ॥ 6 ॥

(5/4)

sadala salaṣana hairṁ kusala kṛpālu kōsala rā'u!
 sīla-sadana sanahē-sāgara sahaja sarala subhā'u.. 1..
 nīnda-bhūkha na dēvarahi, pariharēkō pachitā'u.
 dhīradhura raghubīrakō nahi sapanēhu cita cā'u.. 2.. sōdhu binu, anurōdha ritukē, bōdha bihita upā'u.
 karata hairṁ sō'i samaya sādhana, phalati banata banā'u.. 3.. paṭha'ē kapi diṣi dasahu, jē prabhukāja kuṭila na kā'u.
 bōli liyō hanumāna kari sanamāna, jāni samā'u.. 4.. da'ī hauṁ saṅkēta kahi, kusalāta siyahi sunā'u.
 dēkhi durga, bisēṣi jānaki, jāni ripu-gati ā'u.. 5..
 kiyo sīya-prabōdha muṁdarī, diyō kapihi lakhā'u.
 pā'i avasara, nā'i sira tulasīsa-gunagana gā'u.. 6..

The Signet Ring's reply and assurance to Sita

Verse no. 5/4—[The signet ring replied¹] ‘The most merciful, compassionate, kind, benevolent and gracious Lord of the Kaushal clan (Sri Ram) is happy and comfortable with his army, companions and Laxman. He is by nature an abode of virtues and noble characters, is an ocean of affection and endearment and is of a simple, straight forward and humble temperament and bearing (1).

[¹A ring does not speak. But this is the way employed by poets where they personify inanimate things and make them behave and speak like ordinary living beings. We have other examples of this tactic employed by poets: after Sita was abducted, Lord Ram had started his search for her by asking the trees, creepers, birds and animals if they knew where she was. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-16 that precede Doha no. 30.

Some very interesting modern-day interpretations can be made with regards to this signet ring speaking. It could have been, perhaps, a pre-recorded message from Sri Ram himself. Or the ring had a remote controlled transmitter or speaker, operated by Hanuman hiding behind the leaves. Stanza no. 5 is also very amusing—‘and Sri Ram gave Hanuman certain clues or hints...’ which probably can mean ‘gave direction to Hanuman how to operate the device’.

Further, the ring could also have incorporated in it an in-built navigational device which guided Hanuman during his cruise across the ocean.

All these are not mere flight of imagination. If the science of that age was advanced enough to design a plane called Pushpak which was pilot-less and could be steered by mere thought waves, no wonder such devices were in existence. Tulsidas was a poet all right, but he wasn't exaggerating things beyond a certain limit. He couldn't say 'the ring spoke' if it didn't. So, the only possible conclusion and plausible explanation is as proposed above.]

Your brother-in-law has forsaken his sleep and hunger, for he is full of regret and contrition that he had left you alone inspite of your scornful words of reproachment that you spoke to him. As a result he has stopped eating and sleeping properly.

On the other hand, Lord Raghubir (i.e. Lord Ram), who is very courageous, brave and valiant, has no happiness in his mind even in his dreams (2).

It was because of the rainy season that attempts could not be made to begin the search for you. Now, when the appropriate (and favourable) time has come, necessary arrangements are being made and resources put together so that success can be assuredly achieved. [That is, all efforts are being made to find about your whereabouts, and then a campaign would be launched in a well-planned manner so that you can be rescued from here. Have patience meanwhile, and be assured that none of the two brothers have neglected you.] (3).

With this aim or task in view, he (Sri Ram) has sent such monkeys (and bears) in all the 10 directions who will never show carelessness, negligence or apathy towards the Lord's work. However, recognising the fact that only Hanuman was competent enough to accomplish this herculean task, he (Sri Ram) summoned him (Hanuman) (4).

And, the Lord gave Hanuman some clues and indications, including giving me to him, and ordered, 'Tell Sita about our well-being. Have a good look at the enemy's fort, and reconnoitre about his strength, preparedness and armour. Take special care to meet Sita (to reassure her and to see her first hand) before coming back.' (5).

In this way, the signet ring reassured Sita and showed her the hiding place of Hanuman.

Thereafter, Hanuman (came out from behind the foliage where he had concealed himself), seeing that it was the right moment, and then bowed his head before Sita (to pay his obeisance) and began to sing (narrate, describe) the virtues, glories and fame of Tulsidas' Lord (6).

(5 / 5)

सुवन समीरको धीरधुरीन, बीर-बड़ोइ ।
देखि गति सिय-मुद्रिकाकी बाल ज्यों दियो रोइ ॥ 1 ॥
अकनि कटु बानी कुटिलकी क्रोध-बिंध्य बड़ोइ ।
सकुचि सम भयो ईस-आयसु-कलसभव जिय जोइ ॥ 2 ॥
बुद्धि-बल, साहस-पराक्रम अछत राखे गोइ ।

सकल साज—समाज साधक समउ, कहै सब कोइ॥ 3॥
 उतरि तरुतें नमत पद, सकुचात सोचत सोइ।
 चुके अवसर मनहु सुजनहि सुजन सनमुख होइ॥ 4॥
 कहे बचन बिनीत प्रीति—प्रतीति—नीति निचोइ।
 सीय सुनि हनुमान जान्यो भली भौति भलोइ॥ 5॥
 देबि ! बिनु करतूति कहिबो जानिहैं लघु लोइ। कहौंगो मुखकी समरसरि कालि कारिख धोइ॥ 6॥
 करत कछू न बनत, हरिहिय हरष—सोक समोइ। कहत मन तुलसीस लंका करहुँ सघन घमोइ॥ 7॥

(5/5)

suvana samīrakō dhīradhurīna, bīra-baṛō'i.
 dēkhi gati siya-mudrikākī bāla jyōm diyō rō'i.. 1..
 akani kaṭu bānī kuṭilakī krōdha-bindhya baṛhō'i.
 sakuci sama bhayō īnsa-āyasu-kalasabhava jiya jō'i.. 2.. bud'dhi-bala, sāhasa-parākrama achata rākhē gō'i.
 sakala sāja-samāja sādhaaka sama'u, kahai saba kō'i.. 3.. utari tarutēm namata pada, sakucāta sōcata sō'i.
 cukē avasara manahu sujanahi sujana sanamukha hō'i.. 4..
 kahē bacana binīta prīti-pratīti-nīti nicō'i.
 sīya suni hanumāna jān'you bhalī bhāṁti bhalō'i.. 5..
 dēbi! binu karatūti kahibō jānihaiṁ laghu lō'i.
 kahauṅgō mukhakī samarasari kāli kārikha dhō'i.. 6..
 karata kachū na banata, harihiya haraṣa-sōka samō'i.
 kahata mana tulasīsa laṅkā karahuṁ saghana ghamō'i.. 7..

Hanuman's meeting with Sita--I

Verse no. 5/5—The son of the Wind God (suvana samīrakō) was most brave and courageous, but seeing the signet ring and Sita's pitiful condition (and hearing their sorrowful talk), he began weeping like a child (1).

Hearing the bitter, scornful and contemptible talk of the wicked demon Ravana¹, his (Hanuman's) anger and indignation had begun to rise like Mt. Vindhyachal, but on seeing sage Agastya represented by Sri Ram's command (verse no. 5/4, stanza no. 5), it became hesitant, docile and reluctant, and remained under control² (2).

[¹When Hanuman waited in hiding in the thick cover of foliage of the tree under which Sita was confined, Ravana had come to the garden and had threatened Sita with dire consequences if she did not surrender herself to him. Hanuman refers to this here. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 9—to Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 10.

²Once, Mt. Vindhyachal asked the sun to circumambulate it. When the latter refused, the former got annoyed and began to rise to obstruct its path. Seeing a calamity in the offing, the Gods asked sage Agastya—who was the Guru of Vindhyachal—to restrain the mountain. The sage approached the haughty and stubborn mountain, and the latter prostrated before his Guru in reverence. The sage asked him to remain at that position—flat, horizontal—till the time he came back again. It was simply a ruse. The sage never ever came back, and the mountain could not rise.

Here, when Hanuman watched the way Ravana treated Sita, his anger rose to a boiling point, but he had to restrain himself because he was told to just go and bring the news of Sita.]

Though he (Hanuman) possessed immense wisdom, intellect, strength, valour, courage and might etc. he suppressed (and restrained) them because everyone says (i.e. it is common belief or adage) that all resources and efforts give fruits (results) only when the time is opportune³ (3).

[³Hanuman had decided in his mind that before he leaves Lanka he will teach Ravana a good lesson. But it was dangerous to act just now—for there were fair chances that in the melee that is bound to follow Ravana could draw his sword and harm Sita. So it was wiser to wait for some other more opportune time. And sure enough that time would come soon when Hanuman would destroy the royal garden on the pretext of eating fruits, would be caught by Ravana's henchmen, and then after a heated debate with the demon king where Hanuman would get an ample opportunity of insulting Ravana in full court, he would burn the city to ashes.]

Hanuman got down from the tree (where he had been hiding), bowed his head at the feet of Sita and became hesitant and pensive as if a gentleman misses an opportunity to be of some help to another noble person and then has to approach him with a guilty conscience. [To wit, Hanuman felt very sorry he could not punish Ravana right there, and had to bear with his harsh treatment of Sita.] (4).

Thereafter, Hanuman spoke polite words that were full of affection, respect and sincerity, words that were according to established principles of good manners, civility, etiquette and traditional wisdom. [He wished to assure Sita that he is cultured, well-mannered, polite and well-bred, and not some foul-mouthed rascal out to torment her further.]

Hearing these (well regulated, apt, full of decorum, carefully weighed, civilised and courteous) words, Sita was assured (i.e. she realised) that Hanuman was a noble and gentle person (of good rearing and education) (5).

He said, 'Oh Goddess! Without taking any serious action that is compatible with what I wish to tell you, people would regard me as merely boasting with a loud mouth. Forsooth, I shall wash the black stain on my face in the river of battle tomorrow, and then speak to you.'⁴ (6).

[⁴This stanza clearly indicates that Hanuman considered his circumstantial compulsion of tolerating whatever Ravana had said to Sita as a virtual cuff on his face and a stain, because he heard it being said right in his front without doing anything to punish the speaker. Refer also to verse no. 5/6, stanza no. 2 herein below.

During his meeting with Sita, Hanuman will assure her that soon Lord Ram would come with a huge army of monkeys and bears, and launch a fierce offensive to free her from the clutches of the demon. In this process, let he be sure, her tormentors would be sufficiently punished. Now, all this appeared to Sita as mere boast and she was very doubtful of it actually happening, especially when she observed the diminutive form of Hanuman who had sneaked in Lanka with a size not bigger than an average mosquito. So, in order to overcome all her apprehensions, Hanuman had, for an fleeting moment, showed her the colossus form with which he had crossed the ocean, a sight that reassured her. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 15—to Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 17.

The present stanza should be read in this context. Hanuman was getting ready to convey Lord Ram's message and give her the assurance as noted above. But just a few moments ago Sita was tormented by Ravana while Hanuman lay hidden in the foliage and sat there quietly. Immediately after the demon left, Hanuman appeared. So it must have been obvious to Sita, Hanuman rightly guessed, that he was witness to all that Ravana had said a while ago. If what he would soon say his companions are capable of doing, then why did he keep quiet when the opportunity arose and Ravana was just right in his front? Why did he not trounce him then and there and take Sita back? It is to address this question in Sita's mind that he makes the observations in this verse. Stanza nos. 2-3 also explain why Hanuman didn't react then.

So he told Sita that first he would remove this stain by squaring up the account with Ravana by trouncing his army to prove that he indeed is brave and valiant and powerful as he claims to be to assure Sita, and then he goes on to tell her that a huge army of monkeys and bears is poised to launch an offensive to rescue her. He calculated that this would assure her that whatever Hanuman says is not mere boast but a fact as was proved by the developments that he plans to do now.

Now the question arises: how did Hanuman actually prove his strength and his vows to settle accounts with Ravana? As we read on with the story we shall soon see that he first destroyed a substantial part of the demon army, and then finding an excuse he had burnt the city of Lanka to ashes. Refer stanza no. 7 of this present verse, as well as (a) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 26; and (b) more vividly described in Kavitawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 5/3—5/25.]

Hanuman could not in the beginning decide what to do (and how to punish Ravana) because overwhelming sorrows (at the pitiful condition of Sita) and surging indignation and anger (at her treatment at the hands of Ravana) had made him indecisive⁵.

At the end, the Lord of Tulsidas (i.e. Hanuman) decided in his mind that he would pound, plummet, batter and pulverise Lanka to a pulp (i.e. he would reduce the golden city to a mound of rubble) (7).

[⁵It was wise of him, indeed, to hold back at that time. One should always take action when the mind is cool and calculating. An agitated mind leads to bellicose and rash actions which might prove counter productive. The situation at that time was too dangerous for Hanuman to intervene, for there were fair chances that Ravana would draw his scythe and go for Sita's head immediately. Besides this, if he had intervened at that time, Hanuman would not have got a chance to sternly rebuke Ravana and trounce his pride in full public view as would be possible if he somehow confronts the demon in his court. Then, Sita would also be out of harm's way. So Hanuman decided to wait and watch.]

हौं रघुबंसमनि को दूत ।
 मातु मानु प्रतीति जानकि ! जानि मारुतपूत ॥ 1 ॥
 मैं सुनी बातें असैली, जे कही निसिचर नीच । क्यों न मारै गाल, बैठो काल—डाढ़नि बीच ॥ 2 ॥
 निदरि अरि, रघुबीर—बल लै जाउँ जौ हठि आज ।
 डरौं आयसु—भंगतें, अरु बिगरिहै सुरकाज ॥ 3 ॥
 बाँधि बारिधि, साधि रिपु, दिन चारिमैं दोउ बीर ।
 मिलहिंगे कपि—भालु—दल सँग, जननि ! उर धरु धीर ॥ 4 ॥
 चित्रकूट—कथा, कुसल कहि सीस नायो कीस । सुहृद—सेवक नाथको लखि दई अचल असीस ॥ 5 ॥
 भये सीतल स्रवन—तन—मन सुने बचन—पियूष । दास तुलसी रही नयननि दरसहीकी भूख ॥ 6 ॥

rāga kēdārā

(5/6)

hauṁ raghubansamani kō dūta.
 mātu mānu pratīti jānaki! jāni mārutapūta.. 1..
 maiṁ sunī bātair̥ asailī, jē kahī nīsicara nīca.
 kyōm̐ na mārāi gāla, baiṭhō kāla-ḍāṛhani bīca.. 2.. nidari ari, raghubīra-bala lai jā'uṁ jau haṭhi āja.
 ḍaraum̐ āyasu-bhaṅgatēm̐, aru bigarihai surakāja.. 3.. bām̐dhi bāridhi, sādhi ripu, dina cārimēm̐ dō'u bīra.
 milahiṅgē kapi-bhālu-dala saṁga, janani! ura dharu dhīra.. 4.. citrakūṭa-kathā, kusala kahi sīsa nāyō kīsa.
 suhṛda-sēvaka nāthakō lakhi daī acala asīsa.. 5..
 bhayē sītala sravana-tana-mana sunē bacana-piyūṣa.
 dāsa tulasī rahī nayanani darasahīkī bhūkha.. 6..

Hanuman's Assurance to Sita

Verse no. 5/6—[Hanuman introduces himself to Sita and assures her that her freedom would come soon. Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 15—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 16.]

Hanuman said to Sita, ‘Mother Janki, believe me! I am a messenger of him who is the jewel in the family of kings of the Raghu dynasty (i.e. Lord Sri Ram; “hauṁ raghubansamani kō dūta”); I am the son of the Wind-God (mārutapūta) (1).

I have heard all the mischievous things which Ravana had said¹; he is in the jaws of death, so his mind has gone wild and astray (2).

[¹Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 9—to Doha no. 10 describe what Ravana had said even as Hanuman lay hidden in the foliage of the same tree under the shadow of which Sita sat. In essence, Ravana threatened her with death if she did not agree to surrender herself to him within a month's time. At this, Sita had strongly rebuffed him, whereat Ravana got exceedingly peeved and poured vitriol at her, appointing demonesses to torment her.]

I can defeat the enemy and forcefully take you back, today itself. But I'm afraid to break my Lord's order (because Hanuman's brief was to go, search and report back about Sita, and do nothing more), as well as my intervention may hamper the God's work (because Lord Ram was destined to destroy the entire lot of the demons who were tormenting the Gods, and so it would be very improper to interfere with what the Creator has ordained) (3).

So, Mother, have patience—the two brothers (Ram and Laxman) will construct a bridge within the next four days across the ocean, and accompanied by an army of bears and monkeys, they shall come and meet you² (4).'

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 16.]

Then Hanuman reminded her about Jayant's episode at Chitrakoot³ (with the twin purpose in mind viz.—one, to reassure Sita that anyone who hurts her will be punished by Lord Ram, and second, as a proof of his being Lord Ram's confidante and favourite because that episode was so secret that even Laxman did not know about it). Then he bowed his head in reverence. Thereafter, Sita blessed him⁴ (5).

[³This incident is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 2—to Doha no. 3.

Jayant was the wicked son of Indra, the king of Gods. Once he decided to tease Lord Ram and Sita. So, disguised as a crow, he came and pricked Sita with its beak on her feet while Lord Ram lay to rest. Seeing blood oozing out of Sita's feet and the pervert crow crowing merrily nearby, the Lord got angry, and picking up a reed to act as an arrow, he shot it at Jayant. Terrified Jayant went around the whole of the heaven and the rest of the world in his attempt to hide or find someone to protect him. The reed-turned arrow pursued it wheresoever he went, and no one durst to offer him protection. Finally, on the verge of collapse out of fatigue and sorely lamenting, he met Narad, the celestial sage, who advised him to go back and surrender at the feet of Lord Ram if he wishes to survive, for there is no power in the entire creation which can neutralise the Lord's wrath. Hence, Jayant went to Lord Ram and ask for forgiveness. Considering all the facts, and that since Jayant was the spoilt and pervert son of Indra and had assumed the form of a crow which is by nature crooked and meat-eater, and that he has come to surrender unconditionally, the Lord spared his life but took out one of his eyes because the arrow of the Lord, once shot, cannot go in vain.

This episode was unbeknown to Laxman. And it was good for Jayant that Laxman didn't know of it: for it was sure that had Laxman been aware of this mischief he would have certainly killed that wicked fellow then and there.

Lord Ram had told Hanuman to narrate it to Sita because it would help convince her that he was a genuine messenger of the Lord as this particular incident was very confidential, and unless Lord Ram tells it to someone himself, no one would have been aware of it.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-4 that precedes Doha no. 17.]

Hearing the words of Hanuman, Sita's ears, heart and body found peace and solace⁵; now only her eyes were eager to quench their thirst for the sight of Lord Ram⁶ (6).

[⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 17.

⁶Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14.]

(5 / 7)

तात ! तोहूसों कहत होति हिये गलानि ।
 मनको प्रथम पन समुझि अछत तनु, लखि नइ गति भइ मति मलानि ॥ 1 ॥
 पियको बचन परिहर्यो जियके भरोसे, संग चली बन बड़ो लाभ जानि ।
 पीतम—बिरह तौ सनेह सरबसु, सुत !
 औसरको चूकिबो सरिस न हानि ॥ 2 ॥
 आरज—सुवनके तो दया दुवनहुपर, मोहि सोच, मोतें सब बिधि नसानि ।
 आपनी भलाई भलो कियो नाथ सबहीको, मेरे ही दिन सब बिसरी बानि ॥ 3 ॥
 नेम तो पपीहाहीके, प्रेम प्यारो मीनहीके, तुलसी कही है नीके हृदय आनि ।
 इतनी कही सो कही सीय, ज्योंही त्योंही रही, प्रीति परी सही, बिधिसों न बसानि ॥ 4 ॥

(5/7)

tāta! tōhūsōm kahata hōti hiyē galāni.
 manakō prathama pana samujhi achata tanu, lakhi na'i gati bha'i mati malāni.. 1..
 piyakō bacana pariharyō jiyakē bharōsē, saṅga calī bana baṛō lābha jāni.
 pītama-biraha tau sanēha sarabasu, suta!
 ausarakō cūkibō sarisa na hāni.. 2..
 āraja-suvanakē tō dayā duvanahupara, mōhi sōca, mōtēm saba bidhi nasāni.
 āpanī bhalā'ī bhalō kiyō nātha sabahīkō, mērē hī dina saba bisarī bāni.. 3..
 nēma tō papīhāhīkē, prēma pyārō mīnahīkē, tulasī kahī hai nīkē hṛdaya āni.
 itanī kahī sō kahī sīya, jyōnhī tyōnhī rahī, prīti parī sahī, bidhisōm na basāni.. 4..

Sita's reply to Hanuman

Verse no. 5/7—‘Oh dear son (tāta)! I feel grieved and melancholic even while talking to you. Remembering my mind's primary (first) vow (that I shall not live without my beloved husband), and finding that my body is still alive, my mind and intellect are full of gloom, contrition and remorse (1).

I had relied on (the firm conviction of) my mind and intellect, and had violated (or did not pay heed to) the advice of my husband and accompanied him to the forest thinking that (or under the impression that) it was in the best of my interests and well-being¹.

Oh Son! Separation from the husband and its accompanying sorrows, tribulations, agonies, miseries and pains are akin to snatching away everything there is to take away (or, that can be taken away) from the person representing the virtues of ‘love and affection’².

It is true that if one loses a chance to prove the sincerity of oneself, there is no greater calamity (or damage to one's reputation) (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 61—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 68.

²Here, the virtues of love and affection have been personified. Sita simply means that she should have died when she was kidnapped, or forcibly separated from Sri Ram, but she regrets and laments that she did not. This was the argument she had proffered at Ayodhya when Sri Ram had asked her to stay back in the city. At that time, she had argued that it was not possible for her to survive without him. Refer: Geetawali, Ayodhya Kand, verse no. 2/6, stanza no. 3.]

‘Arya Putra’ (literally, a person belonging to the Aryan race, here meaning Sri Ram) has mercy and compassion even on his enemies (and opponents). My only regret is that everything went wrong for me. The Lord has been most benevolent, munificent and gracious on all—but when my turn (day, chance) came, he appeared to forget his natural temperament and habit³. [To wit, it appears to me, at least, that this is the reason why he is neglecting me, to teach me a lesson that I should have obeyed his commands at Ayodhya and stayed back instead of being stubborn and pretending to be too overtly devoted to him so much that I can't live without him! So now here I am: living without him!!] (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 14.]

Forsooth and without gainsay it is true that it is only the ‘Papiha’ (the sparrow hawk) and the ‘fish’ that are true to their vows of love towards their respective objects⁴, and this is why both of them have been rightfully honoured by the people after proper deliberations and scrutiny.’

Tulsidas says that after saying this much, Sita abruptly felt silent; this was enough to endorse her intensity of affection and love for the Lord. [Probably, Sita had fainted, or was so overcome with grief and sorrows that she could not utter a word more.]

No one has control over what the Creator (of destiny) wants (4).

[⁴The ‘Papiha’ drinks only the rain drops falling from the sky during the appearance of a special asterism called the Swati Nakshatra, for this bird would prefer death to drinking any other form of water to survive. Likewise, the ‘fish’ will not survive without water. Their unflinching loyalty towards their lovers—rain and water respectively—are legendary. Sita here means that she would go down in history as an imposter and deceitful person who only pretended to have great love for her husband, for she did not die the instant she was separated from her. If her love would have been true like the sparrow hawk and the fish, she should have not survived so long without Lord Ram.]

(5 / 8)

मातु ! काहेको कहति अति बचन दीन ?
 तबकी तुही जानति, अबकी हौं ही कहत, सबके जियकी जानत प्रभु प्रबीन ॥ 1 ॥
 ऐसे तो सोचहि न्याय निदुर-नायक-रत
 सलभ, खग, कुरंग, कमल, मीन ।
 करुनानिधानको तो ज्यों ज्यों तनु छीन भयो, त्यों त्यों मनु भयो तेरे प्रेम पीन ॥ 2 ॥
 सियको सनेह, रघुबरकी दसा सुमिरि पवनपूत देखि भयो प्रीति-लीन ।
 तुलसी जनको जननी प्रबोध कियो, 'समुझि तात ! जग बिधि-अधीन' ॥ 3 ॥

(5/8)

mātu! kāhēkō kahati ati bacana dīna?
 tabakī tuhī jānati, abakī haum̐ hī kahata, sabakē jiyakī jānata prabhu prabīna.. 1..
 aisē tō sōcahi n'yāya niṭhura-nāyaka-rata salabha, khaga, kuraṅga, kamala, mīna.
 karunānidhānakō tō jyōm̐ jyōm̐ tanu chīna bhayō, tyōm̐ tyōm̐ manu bhayō tērē prēma pīna.. 2.. siyakō sanēha, raghubarakī dasā sumiri pavanapūta dēkhi bhayō prīti-līna.
 tulasī janakō janani prabōdha kiyō,
 'samujhi tāta! jaga bidhi-adhīna'.. 3..

Hanuman's Rejoinder

Verse no. 5/8—[Hanuman replied to Sita—] ‘Mother (mātu)! Why do you speak so sorrowful and gloomy words that are full of despair and anguish? What sort of affection the Lord (Sri Ram) had for you earlier, you are the best person to judge it; but what he has for you now, I too am a witness to it.

The Lord is very expert and proficient in it, for he knows what is inside the heart of all (as he is omniscient, all-knowing, omnipresent and all-pervading). [To wit, why do you feel so depressed and say that Lord Ram has forgotten you or has less love for you. I have personally seen his distressed condition and the way he has been searching for you from forest to forest, wondering barefoot and wailing all the way.

Forsooth I can vouchsafe that he is more concerned about you than you can ever imagine.]¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 15.]

This kind of sorrow, mournful and distressful behaviour can suit those who endear themselves with stone-hearted, stern and cruel lovers, such as the ‘moth’ (which endears itself to the lamp and gets burnt by its flame), the ‘Papiha’ (sparrow hawk yearns for rain drops, but gets battered by hail and scorned by the cloud in the form of thunder), the ‘deer’ (who is attracted to music, and gets trapped and killed by the hunter), the ‘lotus’ (that opens its petals at day break, but gets scorched by the sun) and the ‘fish’ (that cannot survive without water, but the latter isn’t bothered about the fish’s welfare as is evident when shoals of fish die due to a variety of causes inspite of being surrounded by water on all sides). [That is to say, the ‘wick of the lighted lamp’, the ‘rain-bearing cloud’, the ‘music used to lure the deer into the trap’, the ‘daylight of the sun’, and the ‘water’ are not at all bothered about the good or bad fortune of their respective lovers.]

That is alright as far as they are concerned. But the condition of Lord Ram is absolutely different, and there is no comparison. [Hanuman makes this comment because Sita has alluded to the ‘Papiha’ and the ‘fish’ in verse no. 5/7, stanza no. 4 to chide Lord Ram in the guise of admonishing herself over the quality of love she has for the Lord, saying in effect that he has forgotten her and neglected her just like the cloud and the water neglect the Papiha and the fish respectively.]

Look, I have observed that even as the body of Sri Ram—who is an abode of mercy, compassion, kindness, benevolence, munificence, benediction and grace—gets gradually emaciated, his heart gets all the more robust and strengthened by the nourishment that it derives by the virtue of having love, endearment and affection for you.’ (2).

Presently, seeing Sita's affection and recalling Raghubar's (Sri Ram's) condition, the son of the Wind God (Hanuman) was himself drenched and submerged in surging waves of love and affection. [To wit, Hanuman was overwhelmed with the emotions of pure love and affection for Lord Ram, and by the virtues of its purity and intensity, that he witnessed in his meeting with Sita.]

Tulsidas says that then, the mother (Sita) consoled and advised her son (Hanuman), saying, ‘Oh dear son! This world (creation) is under the control of (i.e. is subservient) to the Creator. Understand this (and do not feel despaired or remorseful).’ [Now, when Sita saw the distressed condition of Hanuman, she immediately recovered herself and regained her composure, encouraging him to have courage and fortitude, for she feared that at this crucial juncture if Hanuman lost his wits and courage then everything would crumble and whatever chances there are of redemption would be lost for ever.] (3).

राग जैतश्री

(5/9)

कहु कपि ! कब रघुनाथ कृपा करि, हरिहैं निज बियोग संभव दुख ।

राजिवनयन, मयन—अनेक—छबि, रबिकुल—कुमुद—सुखद, मयंक—मुख ॥ 1 ॥
 बिरह—अनल—स्वासा—समीर निज तनु जरिबे कहँ रही न कछु सक ।
 अति बल जल बरषत दोउ लोचन, दिन अरु रैन रहत एकहि तक ॥ 2 ॥
 सुदृढ़ ग्यान अवलंबि, सुनहु सुत ! राखति प्राण बिचारि दहन मत ।
 सगुन रूप, लीला—बिलास—सुख सुमिरति करति रहति अंतरगत ॥ 3 ॥
 सुनु हनुमंत ! अनंत—बंधु करुनासुभाव सीतल कोमल अति ।
 तुलसिदास यहि त्रास जानि जिय, बरु दुख सहौं, प्रगट कहि न सकति ॥ 4 ॥

rāga jaitaśrī

(5/9)

kahu kapi! kaba raghunātha kṛpā kari, harihaiṁ nija biyōga sambhava dukha.
 rājivanayana, mayana-anēka-chabi, rabikula-kumuda-sukhada, mayaṅkamukha.. 1..
 biraha-anala-svāsā-samīra nija tanu jaribē kahaṁ rahī na kachu saka.
 ati bala jala baraṣata dō'u lōcana, dina aru raina rahata ēkahi taka.. 2.. sudṛṛha gyāna avalambi, sunahu suta! rākhati prāna bicāri dahana mata.
 saguna rūpa, līlā-bilāsa-sukha sumirati karati rahati antaragata.. 3..
 sunu hanumanta! ananta-bandhu karunāsubhāva sītala kōmala ati.
 tulasidāsa yahi trāsa jāni jiya, baru dukha sahaum, pragaṭa kahi na sakati.. 4..

Sita's reply to Hanuman-I

Verse no. 5/9—[Then Sita said—] ‘Say, Oh Monkey (kahu kapi)¹! Tell me, will Lord Sri Ram ever come? Tell me, when will the Lord whose beautiful face is like the full moon’s disc that provides happiness to the lily symbolising the exalted Solar race (in which Lord Ram was born), and say when will the Lord whose radiance is like that of millions of Kamdeos provide solace and succour to me by removing my agonies and pain arising out my separation from him?’² (1).

[¹The use of the word ‘monkey’ is not meant to be derogatory or demeaning in any manner whatsoever for Hanuman. Since the physical appearance of Hanuman resembled that of a monkey, Sita used this word. Remember, she has also addressed him as ‘son’, ‘dear’ etc. How can a monkey be a human's son? These are affectionate and endearing forms of address.

²Lord Ram was born in the Sun Race, or the Solar Race. The lily flower thrives in the light of the moon. So here Sita means that Lord Ram provides happiness to the Solar-race just like the moon provides joy to the lily flower.

Kamdeo/cupid is the patron god of beauty and charm. Hence, Lord Ram is compared to this god here because he is extremely charming and handsome to behold.]

There is no doubt that my body would have been charred by the fierce fire of separation that was stoked by the wind called ‘Pran Vayu’ (a form of wind force which sustains life inside the body of all living beings). But howbeit I managed to survive because my these two eyes continued to douse the flame by constantly raining a torrent of water (tears). [This is why I could not die and my body could not be burnt.] (2).

Listen dear son (sunahu suta)! I have taken recourse to sound and solid wisdom, and with its help, I have been able to protect my life and prevent this body from being burnt (or scorched to death). [Now I shall tell you how I managed to survive.]

Forsooth, I had always, constantly and persistently, thought of (or concentrate my thoughts on) the Lord's divine form (which is called 'Sagun' or visible aspect or manifestation of the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Sri Ram), and I had been focusing my memory in remembering all his divine activities, and have all along been cherishing these sweet memories deep down in my heart. [To wit, this does not leave space for evil thoughts and forebodings to ever enter my heart. They give me sufficient courage, solace and succour, and in all sooth they act as a prop to support my morale from sinking to an abysmal low level.] (3).

Listen Hanuman! Laxman's brother ("ananta-bandhu"; i.e. Sri Ram³) is of a very merciful, compassionate and kind temperament, is extremely calm and poised, and is of an immense soft heart that has tender emotions (karunāsubhāva sītala kōmala ati).

Hence, realising that he will feel extremely distressed and sorrowful on hearing these things (i.e. about my woeful condition, how I managed to keep alive, my miseries, sorrows, troubles and tribulations), I cannot (or do not) say it overtly though I am in extreme distress and anguished, and going through intolerable miseries, agonies and pain⁴ (4).

[³Laxman was a manifestation of Seshnath, the legendary Serpent on whose coiled body Lord Vishnu reclines on the surface of the celestial ocean. This Serpent is also called 'Anant'. Hence the phrase "ananta-bandhu" has been used by Sita for Lord Ram who is the brother of Laxman.

⁴To wit, I wish to keep my miseries secret and confined to myself. I prithee that you would also not tell much of it to Lord Ram when you return, except to give him a hint of my situation, because if he hears of my condition as truly as it stands, he would grieve exceedingly, I am certain of it. And I don't want him to feel sad and depressed and dejected as this is not the time for it. He has to remain strong and resolute at this crucial juncture, and if he feels weak in his heart and drops down on his knees in grief, everything will be lost. So it is wise for me to keep my agonies to myself and put up a brave face!

Refer to Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/15, stanza no. 2 in this context.]

राग केदारा

(5 / 10)

कबहूँ, कपि ! राघव आवहिंगे ?

मेरे नयनचकोर प्रीतिबस राकाससि मुख दिखरावहिंगे ॥ 1 ॥

मधुप, मराल, मोर, चातक है लोचन बहु प्रकार धावहिंगे ।

अंग-अंग छबि भिन्न-भिन्न सुख निरखि-निरखि तहूँ-तहूँ छावहिंगे ॥ 2 ॥

बिरह-अग्नि जरी रही लता ज्यों कृपादृष्टि-जल पलुहावहिंगे ।

निज बियोग-दुख जानि दयानिधि मधुर बचन कहि समुझावहिंगे ॥ 3 ॥

लोकपाल, सुर, नाग, मनुज सब परे बंदि कब मुक्तावहिंगे?

रावनबध घृनाथ-बिमल-जस नारदादि मुनिजन गावहिंगे ॥ 4 ॥

यह अभिलाष रैन—दिन मेरे, राज बिभीषन कब पावहिंगे। तुलसिदास प्रभु मोहजनित भ्रम, भेदबुद्धि कब बिसरावहिंगे ॥ 5 ॥

rāga kēdārā

(5/10)

kabahūṁ, kapi! rāghava āvahiṅgē?
mērē nayanacakōra prītibasa rākāsasi mukha dikharāvahiṅgē.. 1..
madhupa, marāla, mōra, cātaka hvai lōcana bahu prakāra dhāvahiṅgē.
aṅga-aṅga chabi bhinna-bhinna sukha nirakhi-nirakhi tahaṁ-tahaṁ chāvahiṅgē.. 2..
biraha-agini jari rahī latā jyōm kṛpādr̥ṣṭi-jala paluhāvahiṅgē.
nija biyōga-dukha jāni dayānidhi madhura bacana kahi samujhāvahiṅgē.. 3.. lōkapāla, sura, nāga, manuja saba parē bandi kaba mukatāvahiṅgē?
rāvanabadha raghunātha-bimala-jasa nāradādi munijana gāvahiṅgē.. 4..
yaha abhilāṣa raina-dina mērē, rāja bibhīṣana kaba pāvahiṅgē.
tulasidāsa prabhu mōhajanita bhrama, bhēdabud'dhi kaba bisarāvahiṅgē.. 5..

Sita's reply to Hanuman-II

Verse no. 5/10—‘Oh monkey! (See verse no. 5/9, stanza no. 1.) Will Raghav (Sri Ram) ever come? Will he ever show his moon-like face to my Chakor-like eyes which are enamoured by his love and affection¹? (1).

[¹The Chakor is the Indian red-legged partridge. This bird is said to be highly enamoured of the moon so much that it starts gazing at the moon as soon as it rises in the east, and continues to gaze at it till it sets in the west.]

When I see him, my eyes will rush forward in various modes and in different ways to see him and have a glimpse of him in the best possible way they can, transmewing themselves into a bumble or a black-bee, a goose (or a swan), a peacock and a Papiha (the sparrow hawk) to enable me to have the best sight, the best view of Lord Ram's divine form from different perspectives and angles² (2).

[²Like a ‘black or the bumble-bee’, my eyes would rest on his lotus-like face, eyes, palms, and soles of his holy feet. Like a ‘swan’, they will swim in the lake represented by his navels. Like a ‘peacock’, they will dance and spread their plumes on seeing his dark complexioned body that resembles dark rain-bearing clouds, complete with its dazzle of lightening that would come with the shine of the Pitambar the Lord wears. And like a bird ‘Papiha’ my eyes would rush to drink the nectar of beauty that would drop from this dark-as-cloud body of the Lord.]

Like a humble creeper, I am being scorched by the fire of separation. Will he revive me and make me blossom once again with the water of his merciful, compassionate and kind glance?

Will he—who is an abode of kindness and graciousness—console and comfort me with his sweet words, realising that I am tormented by the sorrows, pains and anguish of separation? (3).

The Lokpals (custodians of the various Lokas or worlds), the Gods, the legendary Serpents and Humans—all of them are lying locked up in the prison (of the demon Ravana). [That is, the demons have subdued them all, and no one is free from their tyranny.]

When will he (Sri Ram) liberate them, and when will Narad (the celestial sage) and other sages get an opportunity to hail the slaying of the demon Ravana, as well as the opportunity to sing about the pristine, pure and magnificent glories of Lord Raghunath (Sri Ram), and about the great, marvellous and stupendous great deeds that the Lord would have done? (4).

I am anxious, day and night, to know when Vibhishan shall be crowned as the sovereign (of Lanka)? And, when will the Lord forget and forgive me for first for the delusions I had (with respect to Marich whom I had erroneously thought to be a golden deer, and which error of judgement had led to such horrendous consequences), and then for my doubting the integrity and sincerity of Laxman (when he had tried to convince me that Lord Ram was in no danger, and I had utterly disregarded his advice and forced him to leave me alone in the wild forest and go to where the Lord was pursuing the deceitful deer)³? (5).

[³Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse nos. 3/3—to 3/6.

Sita realized that it was she who is to blame for all the misfortunes and miseries that have befallen upon them all—herself as well as Lord Ram and Laxman. She sorely regrets that she had fallen prey to delusions, not realizing that there cannot be a living deer that has a golden hide. It was she who had insisted that Lord Ram bring it for her. That was not all: for it was she who had forced Laxman to go behind the Lord inspite of the former telling her that the sound she heard of his name being called out was made by Marich and it was not a call by Lord Ram seeking his help.

To wit, all the root of suffering can be traced back to her own foolishness, and therefore she is so worried if Lord Ram and Laxman would ever excuse her for her stupidity and stubborn nature.]

(5 / 11)

सत्य बचन सुनु मातु जानकी !
जनके दुख रघुनाथ दुखित अति, सहज प्रकृति करुनानिधानकी ।। 1 ।।
तुव बियोग—संभव दारुन दुख बिसरि गई महिमा सुबानकी ।
नतु कहूँ, कहूँ रघुपति—सायक—रबि, तम—अनीक कहूँ जातुधानकी ।। 2 ।।
कहूँ हम पशु साखामृग चंचल, बात कहाँ मैं बिद्यमानकी !
कहूँ हरि—सिव—अज—पूज्य—ग्यान—घन, नहि बिसरति वह लगनि कानकी ।। 3 ।।
तुव दरसन—संदेस सुनि हरिको बहुत भई अवलंब प्रानकी ।
तुलसिदास गुन सुमिरि रामके प्रेम—मगन नहि सुधि अपानकी ।। 4 ।।

(5/11)

satya bacana sunu mātu jānakī!

janakē dukha raghunātha dukhita ati, sahaja prakṛti karunānidhānakī.. 1..

tuva biyōga-sambhava dārūna dukha bisari gaī mahimā subānakī.

natu kahu, kahaṁ raghupati-sāyaka-rabi, tama-anīka kahaṁ jātudhānakī.. 2..
 kahaṁ hama paśu sākhāmṛga cañcala, bāta kahaurṁ mairṁ bidyamānakī!
 kahaṁ hari-siva-aja-pūjya-gyāna-ghana, nahi bisarati vaha lagani kānakī..3.. tuva darasana-sandēsa suni harikō bahuta bhaī avalamba prānakī.
 tulasidāsa guna sumiri rāmakē prēma-magana nahi sudhi apānakī.. 4..

Hanuman Assures Sita of Lord Ram's Gracious Nature

Verse no. 5/11—[Hanuman replied—] ‘Mother Janki (“mātu jānakī”; i.e. Mother Sita)! Here my truthful and sincere words. Lord Sri Ram is always sorrowful, distressed, anguished and full of remorse at the miseries, agonies, sorrows and distresses of his devotees—this is the natural temperament and habit of the Lord who is an abode of mercy, compassion and grace (1).

It is because of the intensity of the mental agonies generated by your separation that he has almost forgotten the potential powers of his arrows (and appears to be so dejected and despaired).

Otherwise, say, whereas on the one hand is the sun-like splendour of Sri Ram's arrows, and on the other hand are the demons representing darkness; so how could the latter have survived in the presence of the former? [How can darkness ever survive or prevail in the presence of the sun? It is just that he has forgotten this fact about the powers of his arrows because his intellect has been mired by and submerged in the sorrows of your separation so much that the Lord's intellect has virtually become numb and he has lost his wits.] (2).

I am telling you about ourselves—on the one hand are we, the fickle minded monkeys born as animals, and on the other hand is Lord Sri Ram who is most wise and intelligent as well as revered and worshipped by even the Trinity Gods consisting of (the creator) Brahma, (the sustainer) Vishnu and (the annihilator) Shiva. In spite of this, I cannot forget how the Lord lends his ears to us and listens to our advice closely.

In order to have private discussion, to seek our personal opinion, and to give instructions, I cannot forget how he brings his head close to our ears as if we are equal in stature to him even though we are very humble creatures and no match for the Lord's exalted being. [To wit, the Lord is omniscient and all-knowing as well as so exalted that even the Trinity Gods pay their respects to him, while we are simple living beings and no match for him. Yet, the Lord is so gracious and kind that he listens to us and pays heed to our advice; he consults us on all matters though he need not.] (3).

When he had heard the news about you from the mouth of Sugriv, it was a kind of great prop or support for his life; the news rejuvenated his sagging spirits and injected life in his body.’

Tulsidas observes that by thus narrating the condition of Sri Ram and recalling his great virtues, noble bearing and excellent character, Hanuman was submerged (overwhelmed, imbued or soaked) in the virtues of love and affection for the Lord so much so that for some moments he even forgot who he was and what the prevailing situation was (i.e. he became unaware of his surroundings because of his surging emotions of love and affection for Lord Ram as he remembered the Lord's gracious nature) (4).

हनुमान् और रावणकी भेंट
राग कान्हरा

(5/12)

रावन ! जू पै राम रन रोषे ।
को सहि सकै सुरासुर समरथ, बिसिष काल—दसननितें चोषे ॥ 1 ॥
तपबल, भुजबल, कै सनेह—बल सिव—बिरंचि नीकी बिधि तोषे ।
सो फल राजसमाज—सुवन—जन आपु न नास आपने पोषे ॥ 2 ॥
तुला पिनाक, साहु नृप, त्रिभुवन भट—बटोरि सबके बल जोषे ।
परसुराम—से सूरसिरोमनि पलमें भए खेतके धोषे ॥ 3 ॥
कालिकी बात बालिकी सुधि करि समुझि हिताहित खोलि झरोखे ।
कह्यो कुमन्त्रिनको न मानिये, बड़ी हानि, जिय जानि त्रिदोषे ॥ 4 ॥
जासु प्रसाद जनमि जग पुरषनि सागर सृजे, खने अरु सोखे । तुलसिदास सो स्वामि न सूझ्यो, नयन बीस मंदिर के—से मोखे ॥ 5 ॥ hanūmān aura rāvaṇakī bhēmṭa

rāga kānharā

(5/12)

rāvana! jū pai rāma rana rōṣē.
kō sahi sakai surāsura samaratha, bisīṣa kāla-dasananitēṁ cōṣē.. 1.. tapabala, bhujabala, kai sanēha-bala siva-birañci nīkī bidhi tōṣē.
sō phala rājasamāja-suvana-jana āpu na nāsa āpanē pōṣē.. 2..
tulā pināka, sāhu nṛpa, tribhuvana bhaṭa-baṭōri sabakē bala jōṣē.
parasurāma-sē sūrasirōmani palamēṁ bha'e khētakē dhōṣē.. 3.. kālikī bāta bālikī sudhi kari samujhi hitāhita khōli jharōkhē.
kahyō kumantrinakō na māniyē, baṛī hāni, jiya jāni tridōṣē.. 4..
jāsu prasāda janami jaga puraṣani sāgara sṛjē, khanē aru sōkhē.
tulasidāsa sō svāmi na sūjhyō, nayana bīsa mandira kē-sē mōkhē.. 5..

Hanuman meets Ravana-I

Verse no. 5/12—[As it happened, after Sita and Hanuman had exchanged their respective news and Hanuman had assured her that soon Lord Ram will come with the army of monkeys and bears to free her from the clutches of the demons by defeating and slaying them in the war to free her, he requested her permission to feed himself on the fruits of the trees in the orchard where she was held captive. Sita first expressed her reservations as she did not wish any harm to come to Hanuman, but judging that he was exceptionally powerful and would be able to trounce her tormentors, she gave her consent. Hereat, Hanuman started to eat fruits, and using this as an excuse he commenced to destroy the royal orchard of Ravana by breaking and uprooting its trees and plundering the place in general.

The guards who tried to stop him were beaten black and blue. They rushed to report and complain to Ravana who became very peeved. He sent his son Meghanad to capture the intruder and bring him bound to court. Hanuman saw this as an opportunity to have a face-to-face with Ravana, and so he submitted himself to be bound and taken prisoner to the court of Ravana.

In the full demon court where a large crowd had meanwhile gathered to witness the spectacle, an acerbic verbal dual full of vitriol ensued betwixt Ravana and Hanuman, with each calling the other names, and Hanuman severely rebuffing and rebutting Ravana in a very strong language that amounted to severe censor and insult for the demon king to which he was not accustomed.

When the heated exchange reached its climax and got out of hand, Ravana ordered his ministers and attendants to punish Hanuman by burning his tail. Why the tail? Because the tail is very dear to a monkey and it is equivalent to inflicting severe insult to a person's dignity and self respect by snipping off his ears or nose to deform him and make a clown of him. But this was one error that Ravana made and which led to the burning of his golden city of Lanka: for Hanuman first elongated his tail endlessly so that all the cloth available in Lanka was used to wrap it and soak it in oil, then he suddenly reduced the size of his body to loosen the grip of the ropes with which he was tied, slipped out easily, and then dragging the coiled cloth that burnt behind him and whipping it around him like a whip or a sling string, he jumped from one house to another, and in due course set the whole city afire.

Having accomplished his task of settling accounts with Ravana on the one hand, and on the other hand successfully instilling sore affright in the minds and hearts of the demons as a whole to demoralize them, he jumped in the ocean, doused the flame, went to Sita and took her permission, and flew back boldly across the ocean to the other side of its shore where his companions were eagerly waiting for his arrival with the news of Sita.

This part of the great story is narrated in great detail in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 28.

The 'burning of Lanka' has been vividly described in Tulsidas' book "Kavitawali", Sundar Kand, verse nos. 5/3—5/25.

Presently, we read about these developments in our book Geetawali, Sundar Kand, from verse nos. 5/12—to 5/15.]

Now, in the court of Ravana at Lanka, when Hanuman was presented as a captive, the latter said, 'Oh Ravana! If Lord Ram becomes angry and aggressive during the battle, which God or Demon is there in this world who can withstand his arrows which are like the jaws of death itself? (1).

You have satisfied Lord Shiva and God Brahma with your austerities, strength and devotion. Now, in all wisdom and prudence, I advice you not to destroy your kith and kin who you've got as a blessing and a boon from them (Shiva and Brahma), and have nourished and sustained them yourself. [That is, don't do anything reckless and without thinking that would put you and your kin in great danger. Do not be the cause of destruction of your own family and kith and kin by being inimical to Lord Ram.] (2).

King Janak had weighed the strength of all the princes in this world against the bow of Lord Shiva and found them inept; even the most courageous and brave Parashuram became a dud (like a scare-crow in a farmer's field) in front of the valour and powers of Lord Ram¹ (3).

[¹Hanuman refers to the Bow-breaking ceremony where Lord Ram had broken Lord Shiva's bow which no other warrior could as much as move an inch, and then when sage Parashuram came angrily to vent his ire at the Lord for breaking the bow of Lord Shiva whom Parashuram worshipped, Lord Ram had calmly tackled him and dissipated his anger effortlessly.

Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse nos. 1/89—to 1/90; and Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 249—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.]

Even a little while ago (a few days ago), don't you remember the fate of Baali (the king of Kishkindha who was killed by Lord Ram using a single arrow), and can't you think what is good for you (aren't you aware that the same fate awaits you)?

Look! Do not pay heed to sycophants and flatterers and ill-advised ministers, for you'll come to harm that way because your advisors' wisdom have been eclipsed by the so-called three faults² (4).

[²The three faults are the following—Adhibhautik which refers to the faults of the mind and lack of wisdom related to worldly behaviour and action, Adhyatmic which relates to one's wisdom in the field of spiritual welfare, and Adhidaivic which relates to Gods and stars when they become angry, antagonistic and malevolent. When the three faults occur simultaneously the creature is brought to ruin because his mind and intellect cannot think properly, rationally, righteously, and for the welfare of the creature.]

Oh you dull witted one! Don't you know that Lord Ram's predecessors who were born on this earth had first dug up the earth to create the mighty reservoir of water called the ocean, and then they had subdued the pride of the same ocean which had become haughty that no one can measure it or conquer it because of its vast size and bulk³.

Say, if you can't recognize the Lord (who belongs to this great family of kings who had created the ocean and then conquered it), then forsooth all your twenty eyes are nothing but hollows in the wall of a home! (5).

[³The legend has it that the ocean was 'created' by King Priya Vrat, son of Manu and Satrupa. He circumambulated the earth 7 times, creating the 7 oceans made of milk, curd, Ghee, butter-milk, sugarcane juice, salt and wine. The oceans were 'dug-up' by King Sagar's 60,000 sons in search of the horse hidden by God Indra. The ocean was 'consumed' by sage Agastya in three gulps on the strength of Lord Ram's legendary holy name.]

(5/13)

जो हौं प्रभु-आयसु लै चलतो ।
 तौ यहि रिस तोहि सहित दसानन ! जातुधान दल दलतो ॥ 1 ॥
 रावन सो रसरज सुभट-रस सहित लंक-खल खलतो ।
 करि पुटपाक नाक-नायकहित घने घने घर घलतो ॥ 2 ॥
 बड़े समाज लाज-भाजन भयो, बड़ो काज बिनु छलतो ।
 लंकनाथ ! रघुनाथ-बैरु-तरु आजु फैलि फूलि फलतो ॥ 3 ॥
 काल-करम, दिगपाल, सकल जग-जाल जासु करतल तो ।
 ता रिपुसों पर भूमि रारि रन जीवन-मरन सुफल तो ॥ 4 ॥
 देखी मैं दसकंठ ! सभा सब, मोतें कोउ न सबल तो । तुलसी अरि उर आनि एक अब एती गलानि न गलतो ॥ 5 ॥

rāga mārū

(5/13)

jō hauṁ prabhu-āyasu lai calatō.
 tau yahi risa tōhi sahita dasānana! jātudhāna dala dalatō.. 1.. rāvana sō rasarāja subhaṭa-rasa sahita laṅka-khala khalatō.
 kari puṭapāka nāka-nāyakahita ghanē ghanē ghara ghalatō.. 2..
 baṛē samāja lāja-bhājana bhayō, baṛō kāja binu chalatō.
 laṅkanātha! raghunātha-bairu-taru āju phaili phūli phalatō.. 3..
 kāla-karama, digapāla, sakala jaga-jāla jāsū karatala tō.
 tā ripusōm para bhūmi rāri rana jīvana-marana suphala tō.. 4..
 dēkhī maim dasakaṇṭha! sabhā saba, mōntērṁ kō'u na sabala tō.
 tulasī ari ura āni ēka aba ēti galāni na galatō.. 5..

Hanuman Meets Ravana-II

Verse no. 5/13—Severely reprimanding Ravana, Hanuman admonishes him: ‘Oh you ten-headed one (“dasānana”; Ravana)! If I had come with the Lord's permission, I would have found my capturing by you as an excuse to slay you along with all your demon army in my anger and wrath (1).

I would have used the crucible representing Lanka and stirred the broth consisting of the (metal) mercury representing you, Ravana, along with the juice representing other warrior demons, whom I would have squeezed into a pulp into this crucible, to prepare a medicinal concoction for Indra, the king of gods who is being subjected to a great disease because of you rascals. Then, having readied this potion, I would have destroyed all the houses in Lanka and used them as cups and pots to serve this medicine to Indra¹ (2).

[¹Here, Hanuman cites the practice of ancient medicine-men of preparing remedies to cure serious ailments by mixing different herbs and metals and boiling them in proclaim crucibles to prepare medicinal concoction that is then served to the patient. This is the usual way traditional medicinal potions are prepared.

In this analogy, the city of Lanka is treated as a huge crucible in which a variety of metals and herbs represented by the demons and their king Ravana would be crushed and beaten to pulp, then thoroughly mixed, stirred and heated by Hanuman to produce a concoction that has remedial values by way of redemption and retribution for the gods for the way the demons had been tyrannizing them since long. It will be like preparing an anti-biotic remedy to get rid of infection of germs and viruses symbolizing the demons that need the latter's 'juice', their 'serum', their blood and flesh for its preparation.

In brief, Hanuman says that for the purpose of preparing a remedy for Indra and other gods who are suffering from a disease that needs an unconventional anti-biotic medicine prepared from the blood and flesh of the germs and viruses representing the demons and their king Ravana, he would need to kill them all and squeeze them to pour out their 'juice' on the streets of Lanak. Then, he would upturn the houses and mansions and use them as cups to serve this concoction to the gods to satisfy their thirst and cure them of their desire for retribution upon the demons who had been tormenting these gods since long. But unfortunately, his hands are tied as his Lord, Sri Ram, has not given him the permission to do so.

Hanuman hinted to Ravana not to provoke him beyond a certain tolerable limit. Because if Ravana did not desist and continues with his haughty behaviour, then Hanuman would be forced to take immediate steps to carry out the treatment for the disease of the gods which is the basic mandate of his Lord Sri Ram. And in doing so Hanuman would be well within his brief, and would not be violating the Lord's mandate, because when a war is fought, then a wise commander leaves many decisions to be taken by the foot soldier on the battle field as the situation demands on the spot, with the broad aim of winning the war, rather than being too overtly concerned with procedures and processes like a bureaucrat, that would entail obeying the commander and seeking his permission for each and every move on the battle field, which may not be feasible and practical in the heat of battle. Some discretion and freedom is always given to the messenger or the soldier by a wise and prudent lord and commander.]

Today, I am ashamed to be defamed and become a victim of derision and shame at your hands without any cause (especially when I am fully competent to give a befitting reply to you) in this huge gathering. I would have done this great work (refer stanza 2 herein above) most easily.

Oh king of Lanka! The tree of enmity with Raghunath (Sri Ram) that you have sown would have blossomed and borne large fruits (by way of your death and the slaying of the entire demon race)! (3).

Forsooth, even 'Kaal' (death, time and circumstances), 'Karma' (deeds, their effects, and one's destiny), and 'Dikpals' (the custodians of the four corners of the world; a kind of demi gods), along with the rest of this deluding creation, is subject to the control of Lord Ram, and are under his hands (i.e. all of them obey his commands as he is the Lord of creation).

Say, how lucky and fortunate I would have been if I had had an opportunity to fight his battle for him, right inside the country and the capital city of the Lord's enemy. Verily, then both my life as well as my death would have been proved worthwhile, fruitful and successful (i.e. put to good use) (4).

Oh 10-necked (or 10-headed) Ravana (dasakaṇṭha)! I have seen your whole assembly. There is no one more strong and brave in it than me. If I had got my Lord's permission, I would not have so meekly and so easily submitted myself to you, having judged the strength of the enemy.

[To wit, having recognised that you do not stand a fig of a chance in front of me, I am not that stupid that I would have let you humiliate me with impunity in the way you are doing. I wouldn't have taken it lying down with docility and humbleness. I would have taught you a lesson that you wouldn't have forgotten in your life. But, the only constraint is that Sri Ram has barred me to harm you—refer verse no. 5/4, stanza no. 5.] (5).'

सीताजीसे विदाई

(5 / 14)

तौलौं, मातु ! आपु नीके रहिबो ।
 जौलौं हौं ल्यावौं रघुबीरहि, दिन दस और दुसह दुख सहिबो ॥ 1 ॥
 सोखिकै, खेतकै, बाँधि सेतु करि उतरिबो उदधि, न बोहित चाहिबो ।
 प्रबल दनुज—दल दलि पल आधमें, जीवत दुरित दसानन गहिबो ॥ 2 ॥
 बैरिबुंद—बिधवा—बनितनिको देखिबो बारि—बिलोचन बहिबो ।
 सानुज सेनसमेत स्वामिपद निरखि परम मुद मंगल लहिबो ॥ 3 ॥
 लंक—दाह उर आनि मानिबो साँचु राम सेवकको कहिबो । तुलसी प्रभु सुर सुजस गाइहैं, मिटि जैहै सबको सोचु दव दहिबो ॥ 4 ॥

sītājīsē vidā'ī

(5/14)

taulaum, mātu! āpu nīkē rahibō.
 jaulaum hauṁ lyāvauṁ raghubīrahi, dina dasa aura dusaha dukha sahibō.. 1.. sōkhikai, khētakai, bāṁdhi sētu kari utaribō udadhi, na bōhita cahibō.
 prabala danuja-dala dali pala ādhamēm, jīvata durita dasānana gahibō.. 2.. bairibṛmda-bidhavā-banitanikō dēkhibō bāri-bilōcana bahibō.
 sānuja sēnasamēta svāmipada nirakhi parama muda maṅgala lahibō.. 3.. laṅka-dāha ura āni mānibō sāṁcu rāma sēvakakō kahibō.
 tulasī prabhu sura sujasa gā'ihairṁ, miṭi jaihai sabakō sōcu dava dahibō.. 4..

Hanuman takes leave from Sita to return to Lord Ram-I

Verse no. 5/14—[In Geetawali, the details of the 'burning of Lanka' has been skipped, perhaps because the book's primary author, Goswami Tulsidas, has already narrated it in vivid detail in one of his other books on the story of Lord Ram, i.e. in 'Kavitawali', Sundar Kand. An English version of this book has already been published by me, the present author of these books. A brief glimpse is also provided in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Doha no. 24—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 26.

Having reduced Lanka to ashes, Hanuman jumped in the ocean to douse the flame of his burning tail, and then having cooled himself he came back to Sita to seek her permission to go back to Lord Ram and report to him. This is narrated in verse nos. 5/14—5/15 herein below.]

At the time of departure, Hanuman said to Sita, ‘Oh Mother! Take care of your self till the time I bring Lord Ram here. Tolerate this agony and sorrow for another ten days (dina dasa aura dusaha dukha sahibō) (1).

We have to cross the ocean either by drying it, filling it, or constructing a bridge over it. We do not need a boat or a ship. Then our great army will destroy the enemy's army in half a second (“prabala danuja-dala dali pala ādhamēñ”; literally meaning ‘very soon’), and catch hold of the ten-headed Ravana alive (jīvata durita dasānana gahibō)¹ (2).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/6, stanza no. 4.]

You shall watch the widows of the enemy shed tears, and shall derive immense joy seeing Sri Ram and Laxman with their army (3).

Seeing what I've done to Lanka, you should be now reassured and believe me in what I, the messenger of Lord Ram, say².

Tulsidas says that soon the time would come for the Gods to sing the glory of Lord Ram and for the end of their burning in the fire of sorrows (inflicted upon them by the demons)³ (4).

[²Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/5, stanza nos. 6-7.

³It will be pertinent to note here that Tulsidas has completely excluded the burning of Lanka and its accompanying havoc in Geetawali. For, he had described this feat with great enthusiasm and aplomb in the Sundar Kand of Kavitawali as well as in Ram Charit Manas—where he has painted a very vivid picture of the mayhem and destruction. See authors book on Kavitawali as well as Ram Charit Manas. What Hanuman did to Lanka is just mentioned in the passing in stanza 4 line 1 here. A little better hint is available when Laxman describes to Sri Ram the achievements of Hanuman on the latter's return to Kishkindha in verse no. 5/16, stanza nos. 1-11 which follows shortly.

Well, though not specifically narrated in Geetawali, the burning of Lanka by Hanuman is an incontrovertible fact narrated in all other versions of the story of Ramayan, even those classics penned by Tulsidas himself as indicated above.

Now, after completely burning Lanka to ashes, Hanuman jumped in the ocean to douse the burning cloth that he had been dragging behind him, and also to refresh himself by taking a cool bath in the water of the ocean. Then he met Sita once again before making his exit from Lanka to report back to Lord Ram in Kishkindha.]

(5 / 15)

कपिके चलत सियको मनु गहबरि आयो ।

पुलक सिथिल भयो सरीर, नीर नयनन्हि छायो ॥ 1 ॥
 कहन चह्यो सँदेस, नहि कह्यो, पियके जिय की जानि
 हृदय दुसह दुख दुरायो ।
 देखि दसा ब्याकुल हरीस, ग्रीष्मके पथिक ज्यों धरनि तरनि—तायो ॥ 2 ॥
 मीचतें नीच लगी अमरता, छलको न बलको निरखि थल परुष प्रेम पायो ।
 कै प्रबोध मातु—प्रीतिसों असीस दीन्हीं हैहै तिहारोई मनभायो ॥ 3 ॥
 करुना—कोप—लाज—भय—भरो कियो गौन, मौन ही चरन कमल
 सीस नायो ।
 यह सनेह—सरबस समौ, तुलसी रसना रूखी, ताही तें परत गायो ॥ 4 ॥

(5/15)

kapikē calata siyakō manu gahabari āyō.
 pulaka sithila bhayō sarīra, nīra nayanānhi chāyō.. 1.. kahana cahyō saṁdēsa, nahi kahyō, piyakē jiya kī jāni hṛdaya dusaha dukha durāyō.
 dēkhi dasā byākula harīsa, grīṣmakē pathika jyōm dharani tarani-tāyō.. 2.. mīcatēm nīca lagī amaratā, chalakō na balakō nirakhi thala paruṣa prēma pāyō.
 kai prabōdha mātu-prītisōm asīsa dīnhīm hvaihai tihārō'ī manabhāyō.. 3.. karunā-kōpa-lāja-bhaya-bharō kiyō gauna, mauna hī carana kamala sīsa nāyō.
 yaha sanēha-sarabasa samau, tulasī rasanā rūkhī, tāhī tēm parata gāyō.. 4..

Hanuman takes leave from Sita to return to Lord Ram-II

Verse no. 5/15—As soon as Hanuman left, Sita's heart overflowed and was overwhelmed with emotions. Her body was thrilled and benumbed, while tears welled up in her eyes (1).

She wanted to send a message (for Sri Ram), but considering the mental condition of her husband, she decided to hold back her insurmountable sorrows and profound torments inside her heart (i.e. she did not want to reveal them as it would only add to his miseries)¹.

Seeing her woeful and agitated condition, torn as she was in a dilemma² and grieving beyond measure, the king of monkeys (Hanuman) became emotionally upset, anguished, agitated and extremely tormented³ like a pedestrian gets horrified when he has to walk on the ground which is heated by a scorching sun in the summer month⁴.
 (2).

[¹Refer to Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/9, stanza no. 4 in this context.

²What dilemma did Sita have? Well, on the one hand she wished to die due to the grief of separation from Lord Ram, and on the other hand she wished to live to see the Lord once again. Then, sometimes she wished to tell Hanuman to convey details of her miserable condition to Lord Ram, then she would decide against it as it would cause unnecessary sorrows for the Lord. She was like on a see-saw, thinking one way for a moment, and then deciding on another the other moment.

³Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/5, stanza no. 1, and verse no. 5/8, stanza no. 3.

⁴The ground under the feet becomes so hot that it literally burns one's soles, and walking barefoot is an exercise in torture and horror. Blisters form and one gets immensely agitated and woeful.]

He regretted at his eternal life which he considered worse than death⁵.

Seeing that there was no scope for employing cunning, trickery, and use of force and strength of arms (to destroy the enemy there and there), he felt that his love (devotion for and loyalty to Sri Ram) was too much for him to bear with under the present circumstances (because it is out of his respect for Lord Ram that he had to somehow restrain himself, for otherwise he would have himself killed all the demons and take Sita back to Kishkindha on his back without even once asking the Lord for his permission)⁶.

Thence, Sita consoled him affectionately like a mother, and blessed him saying 'What you have in your mind will be done. (But, wait for the right moment)⁷.' (3).

[⁵Hanuman had a boon of a long, eternal life, and because of it he wouldn't die even if he wanted to. So, he was so remorseful that he would have preferred death to being alive and be a witness to such a woeful spectacle of Sita without being able to do anything about it; for he was unable to avenge Sita's torments inflicted upon her by Ravana inspite of being capable of doing it because the Lord had not instructed him to do so. This frustration—at being tied down because of Sri Ram's constraining orders—added to his despair and woes.

⁶He felt that had it not been for the danger of violating established norms of devotion, which include following the Lord's orders without asking questions and to do as you are told, he would have crushed the demons like nine pins and would have taken Sita back.

⁷This almost sealed the fate of the demons, for Hanuman had wished that he would crush the demon army single handedly and avenge Sita's agonies. This is perhaps the reason why the entire credit for demolishing the enemy was given to Hanuman in the Sundar and Lanka Kands of Kavitawali. There, even Lord Sri Ram was spellbound and astonished at the valour and marvelous deeds of Hanuman in the battle ground, so much so that he expressed this in clear terms to Laxman. Refer: Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/40. In fact, even a cursory reading of the Sundar and Lanka Kands of Kavitawali would make it abundantly clear that the war of Lanka was fought and won by Hanuman single-handedly, and the rest of the warriors of the Lord's army only played a secondary role.]

Thereafter, Hanuman silently bowed his head at the feet of Sita (to pay his obeisance to her), and filled with compassion and pity (for Sita), anger and indignation (at Ravana), shame and regret (at himself, that he could not avenge his insult and pour his wrathful anger on the demons) and fear (that Sri Ram would become annoyed because he had burnt the city of Lanka without his permission), he made his exit from there (from Lanka).

Tulsidas admonishes himself by saying that he is so insensitive and emotionless that is able to describe those touching moments of Hanuman taking his leave from Sita. [To wit, it was a gravely poignant moment, and Sita was left alone to face her fate till the Lord comes to rescue her. The bidding of good-bye by Hanuman was a moment full of emotions and grief, for neither he nor Sita wished to be out of touch with each other. Hanuman was worried about what would happen to her in his absence, and Sita was worried as to what would happen next after Hanuman left the place.]⁸ (4).

[⁸Much is left here on imagination. Sita's last and only channel of communicating with Sri Ram was gone. The future was uncertain, and she found herself once again alone and forlorn in an enemy's land.

The condition can be compared to a person marooned on a desolate island with cannibals all around. Then a ray of hope comes as a spy sent by the king of the realm to locate that person, and the spy also leaves with promise of coming back with reinforcements to rescue him. What if the reinforcements so promised do not materialize? There are hordes of imponderables, a sea of uncertainties. The endless barrier of the ocean has to be crossed; the demons are so fierce that they had subdued and imprisoned even the gods, and were armed to the teeth. The Lord has to fight a war on an alien soil whereas the demons were on their home turf, which is always a dangerous prospect for an invading army.

One can well visualize the state of that person's mind and physical bearing. The tortures at the hands of the enemy are bound to increase—because the spy was revealed and caught red handed, the city was burnt by him, the impotence and incompetence of the demons in the face of Sri Ram's single messenger had come to the fore—and it is sure now that they will wreak vengeance upon her for all they had to endure, finding her without any protection once Hanuman left for Kishkindha. There was the looming danger of a calamitous war. In all sooth, Sita must have been petrified with fear!

This verse highlights Sita's anguish and apprehension on one hand, and her indomitable spirit and confidence on the other hand.]

हनुमान्जीका भगवान् रामके पास पहुँचना
राग बसन्त

(5/16)

रघुपति! देखो आयो हनूमंत। लंकेस-नगर खेल्यो बसंत॥ 1॥
श्रीराम-काजहित सुदिन सोधि। साथी प्रबोधि लाँघ्यो पयोधि॥ 2॥
सिय-पाँय पूजि, आसिषा पाइ। फल अमिय सरिस खायो अघाइ॥ 3॥
कानन दलि, होरी रचि बनाइ। हठि तेल-बसन बालधि बँधाइ॥ 4॥
लिए ढोल चले सँग लोग लागि। बरजोर दर्ई चहुँ ओर आगि॥ 5॥
आखत आहुति किये जातुधन। लखि लपट भभरि भागे बिमान॥ 6॥
नभतल कौतुक, लंका बिलाप। परिनाम पचहिं पातकी पाप॥ 7॥
हनुमान-हाँक सुनि बरषि फूल। सुर बार बार बरनहिं लँगूर॥ 8॥
भरि भुवन सकल कल्यान-धूम। पुर जारि बारिनिधि बोरि लूम॥ 9॥
जानकी तोषि पोषेउ प्रताप। जय पवन-सुवन दलि दुअन-दाप॥ 10॥
नाचहिं-कूदहिं कपि करि बिनोद। पीवत मधु मधुबन मगन मोद॥ 11॥
यों कहत लषन गहे पाँय आइ। मनि सहित मुदित भेंट्यो उठाइ॥ 12॥
लगे सजन सेन, भयो हिय हुलास। जय जय जस गावत तुलसिदास॥ 13॥

hanumānjīkā bhagavān rāmakē pāsa pahuṁcanā

rāga basanta

(5/16)

raghupati! dēkhō āyō hanūmanta. laṅkēsa-nagara khēlyō basanta.. 1..
 śrīrāma-kājahita sudina sōdhi. sāthī prabōdhi lāmghyō payōdhi.. 2..
 siya-pāmya pūji, āsiṣā pā'i.phala amiya sarisa khāyō aghā'i.. 3..
 kānana dali, hōrī raci banā'i. haṭhi tēla-basana bāladhi baṁdhā'i.. 4..
 li'ē ḍhōla calē saṁga lōga lāgi. barajōra da'ī cahum̐ ōra āgi.. 5..
 ākhata āhuti kiyē jātudhana. lakhi lapaṭa bhabhari bhāgē bimāna.. 6.. nabhatala kautuka, laṅkā bilāpa. parināma pacahim̐ pātakī pāpa.. 7.. hanumāna-hāmka suni baraṣi phūla. sura bāra bāra baranahim̐ laṁgūra.. 8..
 bhari bhuvana sakala kalyāna-dhūma. pura jāri bārinidhi bōri lūma.. 9.. jānakī tōṣi pōṣē'u pratāpa. jaya pavana-suvana dali du'ana-dāpa..10..
 nācahim̐-kūdahim̐ kapi kari binōda.pīvata madhu madhubana magana mōda..11..
 yōm kahata laṣana gahē pāmya ā'i.mani sahita mudita bhēṇṭyō uṭhā'i..12..
 lagē sajana sēna, bhayō hiya hulāsa. jaya jaya jasa gāvata tulasidāsa..13..

Hanuman back in Kishkindha to report to Lord Ram

Verse no. 5/16—[Hanuman roared back with a thunder over the ocean with increased enthusiasm than what he had on his way to Lanka, because he was successful in his mission and this injected a sense of extreme joy and excitement in him. His companions were waiting for him on this side of the shore, and as soon as they saw him and espied his cheerful countenance they immediately deduced that he had found Sita. Soon upon landing, Hanuman was thronged by them, all caressing him, showering their love and prise upon him, and applauding him as their saviour and hero. Then the company departed from the shore of the ocean in a procession of victory, and like an army returning to its king after a successful campaign, all the messengers who had accompanied Hanuman to the ocean's shore from Kishkindha regarded themselves as one team which has won. They danced and sang on the way back, and when near the capital they entered the royal orchard of the monkey king Sugriv, eating and jumping around as is the wont of frolicking monkeys who are let loose.

Meanwhile, one of the companions was rushed to Kishkindha with an express order to report about Hanuman's successful mission. He went forthwith and told everyone in the capital about the exploits of Hanuman. The news reached the ears of Laxman who conveyed it to Lord Ram even before the main party arrived.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 30.]

Hearing the news of Hanuman's successful return from Lanka, Laxman said to Ram, 'Lord! See, Hanuman has come back. He has literally played Holi¹ in Lanka (1).

[¹Holi—It is a festival of colours celebrated in the Basant season which falls roughly in February-March. It is related to the story of Prahalad, a child devotee of Lord Vishnu whose father was a demon named Hiranyakashipu. The child was put to great torture by his demon father so that he stops worshipping Lord Vishnu. The demon had attempted to get him burnt alive on a fire but Prahalad survived unscathed. In the night a fire is lit and rituals performed to commemorate that event. On the next day coloured water and powder is used to celebrate. It is also a festival to honour the spirit of universal brotherhood as even strangers are welcome to join and celebrate. The colour removes all distinction of caste and creed, and the entire mass of humanity looks like one big sea of colour. The spring season also heralds flowers and trees of myriad colours, and this is metaphorically depicted by playing with colours on the streets and in the homes.

In the present case, Holi is cited with reference to the burning of Lanka because the city was burnt to ashes while Sita and Vibhishan's residence remained unscathed just like Prahalad escaped from the fire in which his aunt was burnt.]

Fixing an auspicious day for your work, he had assured his companions and leapt across the ocean (2).

There he worshipped Sita's holy feet and ate his full of the sweet fruits in the Ashok grove (3).

Then he lay waste that garden and prepared for playing a symbolic form of Holi, and respectfully urged the demons to wrap his tail with cloth soaked in oil (4).

People mocked him and beat drums before he set fire in all the four directions (corners) of the city (5).

He offered the demons as sacrifice in the fire; seeing its leaping flames, even the chariots of Gods hurriedly escaped from the site (6).

At that moment, there was a lot of wonder and marvel amongst the Gods in the sky and wailing amongst the demons; a sinner is at last burnt in his own sins (7).

Hearing his roar, the God's repeatedly showered flowers and praised his tail (8).

In this way, spreading the good news everywhere (about the Lord's glories and his arrival to eliminate the scourge of the demons as had been promised to the Gods on some previous occasion), then burning to ashes the city of Lanka (as a prelude to the final destruction of its inhabitants, the demons), he had jumped in the ocean to douse his tail. Thereafter, he consoled Sita, and reinforced your glory.

Verily, we all praise the glory of Hanuman who is the destroyer of false pride of all enemies (of the Lord as well as his devotees) (9-10).

At present, he and his companions are enjoying themselves on their success by drinking honey in the Forest of Honey (Madhu Van)² (11).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 28—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 29.]

While Laxman was talking with Lord Ram, Hanuman came and clasped the Lord's feet, and Lord Ram embraced him most affectionately³.

Then, the Lord took the jewel of Sita's hair (a pin; "Chudamani") that Hanuman had brought along with him as a token of his meeting with Sita (just as he had taken Lord Ram's signet ring when he had gone to Lanka to convince Sita of his credentials)⁴ (12).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 30; Doha no. 32 and Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that follows it.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 27; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 31.]

All were very happy on Hanuman's return and started to prepare the army (for the assault on Lanka)⁵.

Tulsidas also joins them in singing the glories of Lord Ram at that auspicious moment (13).

[⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 35.]

राग जैतश्री

(5 / 17)

सुनहु राम बिश्रामधाम हरि ! जनकसुता अति बिपति जैसे सहति ।
 'हे सौमित्रि-बंधु करुनानिधि!' मन महुँ रटति, प्रगट नहिं कहति ॥ 1 ॥
 निजपद-जलज बिलोकि सोकरत नयननि बारि रहत न एक छन ।
 मनहु नील नीरज ससि-संभव रबि-बियोग दोउ स्रवत सुधाकन ॥ 2 ॥
 बहु राच्छसी सहित तरुके तर तुम्हरे बिरह निज जनम बिगोवति ।
 मनहु दुष्ट इन्द्रिय संकट महुँ बुद्धि बिबेक उदय मगु जोवति ॥ 3 ॥
 सुनि कपि बचन बिचारि हृदय हरि अनपायनी सदा सो एक मन ।
 तुलसिदास सुख-सुखातीत हरि सोच करत मानहु प्राकृत जन ॥ 4 ॥

rāga jaitaśrī

(5/17)

sunahu rāma biśrāmadhāma hari! janakasutā ati bipati jaisē sahati.
 'hē saumitri-bandhu karunānidhi!' mana mahaṁ raṭati, pragaṭa nahim kahati..1..
 nijapada-jalaja bilōki sōkarata nayanani bāri rahata na ēka chana.
 manahu nīla nīraja sasi-sambhava rabi-biyōga dō'u sravata sudhākana.. 2..
 bahu rācchasi sahita tarukē tara tumharē biraha nija janama bigōvati.
 manahu duṣṭa indriya saṅkaṭa mahaṁ bud'dhi bibēka udaya magu jōvati.. 3..
 suni kapi bacana bicāri hṛdaya hari anapāyanī sadā sō ēka mana.
 tulasidāsa sukha-sukhātīta hari sōca karata mānahu prākṛta jana.. 4..

Hanuman's Report to Lord Ram-I

Verse no. 5/17— [When the group led by Hanuman reached Lord Ram, he bowed his head in respect to the Lord and narrated the soulful condition of Sita to him. The following verse nos. 5/17—to 5/20 from Geetawali narrate the intensity and poignancy of Sita's emotional sufferings and physical torments.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 30—to Doha no. 31.]

[Hanuman reported—] 'Oh Sri Ram, Oh Hari (another name for Lord Vishnu)! You are an abode or treasury of bliss (rāma biśrāmadhāma hari)! Listen to the way Sita is coping with extreme sorrows and insurmountable torments and anguish.

She does not overtly say anything about her anguish and tribulations, arising out of separation from you. Instead of it, she consistently mutters the words 'Oh brother of Laxman, the son of Sumitra¹! Oh the merciful Lord who is compassionate and kind! (hē saumitri-bandhu karunānidhi)' (1).

[¹In the Hindu tradition, a wife is not supposed to take the first name of her husband. That is why Sita remembered Sri Ram, but pronounced his name indirectly by referring to him as 'Lord' and 'brother of Laxman' even as she freely called Laxman by his name as he was her husband's brother and no such restrictions applied on him.]

She constantly stares intently at her lotus-like feet, while the tears from her sorrowful eyes do not stop even for a moment as if the two blue lotuses, which have emerged from the moon, incessantly drip drops of nectar because of the agony of separation from the sun² (2).

[²Here, the 'moon' is Sita's beautiful face, the 'blue lotus flowers' are her eyes; the 'sun' is Sri Ram and the 'drops of nectar' which are dripping are the flow of tears from her eyes. As is evident, a lotus loves the sun, but since it is trapped inside the moon, it cannot face or see its beloved sun, for the sun and the moon do not rise together but are slotted for the day and night respectively.]

Surrounded by numerous demonesses and submerged in the anguish of your separation, she passes her days most remorsefully under a tree as if the intellect, trapped amongst the wicked sense organs, is awaiting the rising of wisdom (to liberate it from their shackles)³ (3).'

[³The sense organs of a creature's body keep on constantly distracting him as they always yearn to derive the pleasures from their respective sense objects in this material world. This robs the creature of his peace and happiness. As soon as wisdom dawns upon him, he realizes the futility of this pursuit, and consequentially withdraws himself from the material world and its deluding charms. This metaphysical truth is being alluded to here by Hanuman.]

Hearing the words (i.e. narration of Sita's miserable, wretched and woeful condition) from Hanuman, the Lord determined in his heart that Sita has my eternal, stable and pure devotion firmly entrenched (rooted, established) in her heart.

Tulsidas says that thinking thus, Sri Hari (Ram) began lamenting and grieving, though he is beyond the reach of such mundane emotions as happiness and distress, joys and sorrows⁴ (4).

[⁴By using the word "Hari", meaning Lord Vishnu, for Lord Ram, Tulsidas wishes to emphasis that we should not be misled by seeing Sri Ram wailing for a woman like an ordinary man. This is part of the play he has to act—because the Lord has assumed a human form. Would it not look highly incongruous and untenable if he laughs and shows that he cares not a dime about Sita because he is the Lord of all creation, and as such, worldly emotions do not affect him?

A good actor is one who plays the role perfectly, without faltering a whit, as long as he is on the stage. But once off the stage, he regains his composure, becomes his former self. This will answer the skeptics who say that Ram was infatuated by a woman. No; not at all. The Lord was simply playing his role as a human being to perfection. Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 16-17 that precede Doha no. 30; (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 37; and (iii) Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 39.]

राग केदारा

(5 / 18)

रघुकुलतिलक ! बियोग तिहारे ।
 मैं देखी जब जाइ जानकी, मनहु बिरह—मूरति मन मारे ॥ 1 ॥
 चित्र—से नयन अरु गढ़ेसे चरन—कर, मढ़े—से स्रवन, नहि सुनति पुकारे ।
 रसना रटति नाम, कर सिर चिर रहै, नित निजपद—कमल निहारे ॥ 2 ॥
 दरसन—आस—लालसा मन महुँ राखे प्रभु—ध्यान प्रान—रखवारे । तुलसिदास पूजति त्रिजटा नीके रावरे गुन—गन—सुमन सँवारे ॥ 3 ॥

rāga kēdārā

(5/18)

raghukulatilaka! biyōga tihārē.
 mair̥m dēkhī jaba jā'i jānakī, manahu biraha-mūrati mana mārē.. 1.. citra-sē nayana aru garhēsē carana-kara, marhē-sē sravana, nahi sunati pukārē.
 rasanā raṭati nāma, kara sira cira rahai, nita nijapada-kamala nihārē..2..
 darasana-āsa-lālasā mana maham̐ rākhē prabhu-dhyāna prāna-rakhavārē.
 tulasidāsa pūjati trijaṭā nīkē rāvarē guna-gana-sumana saṁvārē.. 3..

Hanuman's Report to Lord Ram-II

Verse no. 5/18—‘Oh the most exalted one in king Raghu's clan (“raghukulatilaka”)! When I first went and saw Sita, she looked so pathetic, tormented and miserable by the agony of your separation that she resembled ‘Separation and Loss’ personified, sitting in the form of an uncared for and neglected statue to me (1).

[Describing her pathetic state, he goes on to tell the Lord—] Her eyes were immobile like that of a portrait; the limbs were cast in a fixed position as if moulded or sculpted from a stone; her ears too appeared to be chiseled out from the same stone. As a result of which, she did not listen (and respond) when someone called out to her. She chants your name incessantly. Her hand pensively support her head, while the eyes are constantly transfixed at her own lotus-like feet (2).

She has a great yearning to have your Darshan (divine and holy viewing).

Hence (in order to prevent the exit of her soul from her body), she has made her 'concentration' as her guard to keep vigil on her soul.¹

Tulsidas says that, further, it is also true that the demoness Trijata worships her with the symbolic flowers that represent Lord Ram's glories, virtues, fame and majesty². (3)

[¹To wit, she concentrates on your name, on your glories, on your divine form, on your activities and the hope of meeting you once again. This acts as a guard against her soul from leaving her body. Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/9 in this context.

²Trijata constantly reminds Sita about the Lord's name and glories. She keeps Sita's hopes alive by reminding her of Lord's great powers and strength. She is the only one who supports Sita in the otherwise desolate, hostile and bleak surroundings at Lanka. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 11; Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 100.]

(5 / 19)

अतिहि अधिक दरसनकी आरति ।

राम-बियोग असोक-बिटपतर सीय निमेष कलपसम टारति ॥ 1 ॥

बार-बार बर बारिजलोचन भरि भरि बरत बारि उर ढारति ।

मनहु बिरहके सद्य घाय हिये लखि तकि-तकि धरि धीरज तारति ॥ 2 ॥

तुलसिदास जद्यपि निसिबासर छिन-छिन प्रभुमूरतिहि निहारति ।

मिटति न दुसह तउ तनकी, यह बिचारि अंतर गति हारति ॥ 3 ॥

(5/19)

atihi adhika darasanakī āratī.

rāma-biyōga asōka-biṭapatara sīya nimēṣa kalapasama tārati.. 1..

bāra-bāra bara bārijalōcana bhari bhari barata bāri ura ḍhārati.

manahu birahakē sadya ghāya hiyē lakhi taki-taki dhari dhīraja tāratī..2..

tulasidāsa jadyapi nisibāsara china-china prabhumūratīhi nihārati.

miṭati na dusaha ta'u tanakī, yaha bicāri antara gati hārati.. 3..

Hanuman's Report to Lord Ram-III

Verse no. 5/19—[Hanuman continued—] 'Sita is greatly eager to have your Darshan (i.e. she is eager to have your divine and sacred sight).

She is spending each moment like it were a 'Kalpa' (i.e. a very long period of time), drowned in the sorrows and anguish of your separation as she sits sad and forlorn under that Ashok Tree (1).

She fills her eyes with warm water (tears) and repeatedly pours it on her heart as if she is trying to wash the blisters representing pains of separation which keep forming repeatedly in her heart with warm water so as to soothe them and prevent them from spreading.¹ (2).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/9.]

Tulsidas says that though she recalls the image of the Lord (on her mental screen) and remembers him day and night, the torments, sorrows and agitations of her body do not seem to abate or end.

Hence, the internal peace (which she gets by remembering the Lord) gets defeated in the face of external signs of agonies and miseries (as is evident from her transfixed stare, immobile body, constant tears pouring down from her eyes, lack of hunger and proper care of the body that has made her very emaciated and weary, and so on.) (3).

(5 / 20)

तुम्हरे बिरह भई गति जौन ।
चित दै सुनहु, राम करुनानिधि! जानौं कछु, पै सकौं कहि हौं न ॥ 1 ॥
लोचन-नीर कृपिनके धन ज्यों रहत निरंतर लोचनन कोन ।
'हा' धुनि-खगी लाज-पिंजरी महुँ राखि हिये बड़े बधिक हठि मौन ॥ 2 ॥
जेहि बाटिका बसति, तहुँ खग-मृग तजि-तजि भजे पुरातन भौन ।
स्वास-समीर भेंट भइ भोरेहु, तेहि मग पगु न धर्यो तिहुँ पौन ॥ 3 ॥
तुलसिदास प्रभु ! दसा सीयकी मुख करि कहत होति अति गौन ।
दीजै दरस, दूरि कीजै दुख, हो तुम्ह आरत-आरति दौन ॥ 4 ॥

(5/20)

tumharē biraha bha'ī gati jauna.
cita dai sunahu, rāma karunānidhi! jānaum kachu, pai sakauṁ kahi hauṁ na..1..
lōcana-nīra kṛpinakē dhana jyōṁ rahata nirantara lōcanana kōna.
'hā' dhuni-khagī lāja-piñjarī mahaṁ rākhi hiyē baṛē badhika haṭhi mauna..2..
jēhi bāṭikā basati, tahaṁ khaga-mṛga taji-taji bhajē purātana bhauna.
svāsa-samīra bhēṇṭa bha'i bhōrēhu, tēhi maga pagu na dharyō tihuṁ pauna..
3.. tulasidāsa prabhu! dasā sīyakī mukha kari kahata hōti ati gauna.
dījai darasa, dūri kijai dukha, hau tumha ārata-ārati dauna.. 4..

Hanuman's Report to Lord Ram-IV

Verse no. 5/20—[A lot of metaphors have been used by Hanuman in this verse to describe the exceedingly sorrowful condition of Sita.]

'Oh Lord Ram, the abode of mercy and compassion (rāma karunānidhi)! Listen carefully at the (physical and mental) state of Sita that she is suffering from as a consequence of your separation. I am aware of it a bit, but I cannot (fully) narrate (or describe) it (because words have their own limitations and they won't be able to do justice to the gravity and intensity of Sita's grief, horrors and torments) (1).

The tears in her eyes always remain at the corner like the wealth of a miser¹.

[¹To wit, a miser is very careful about his wealth; he does not want to show it to others and so hides it somewhere, but keeps a close watch on it from the corners of his eyes. Likewise, the tears are not shed from the eyes of Sita because she does not want others to know about the gravity and intensity of her grief and agonies. She makes her best effort to conceal her tears, but they continue to pop up on the corners of her eyes just like the great riches of a miser that are so huge that they virtually spill over from his coffers though he tries to keep them firmly under lock and key.]

A mighty hunter representing 'silence' has forcibly caught hold of a bird called 'Alas' (i.e. the sound of lamentation, woes, anguish and sorrows), and has trapped it in a 'cage' of shame and hesitation, and 'tucked it away' in the secret chambers of his heart².

[²Hence, that sound of moaning and utter dismay—"Alas, Ah, Alack" etc.—remains muted and cannot come out or be heard openly from the mouth of Sita as she is both ashamed to pronounce them and hesitant too as it may invite taunt and sarcasm from the demonesses who have been assigned by the demon king Ravana to guard her and keep tormenting her. In other words, Sita sighs silently as she has been overcome with hopelessness and haplessness. She is distraught and resigned to her ill-fate. She is counting her days and waiting for death to relieve her of her miseries.] (2).

In the garden where she lives, all the birds and animals have abandoned their traditional homes (i.e. they have left the Ashok grove and fled from there because of the heat generated by the fire of Sita's sorrows and miseries), and the wind—which is usually cool, soft and fragrant—does not step in that direction for fearing to get heated and become foul and unpleasant if it happens to come in contact with her breath even once (3).

Oh Tulsidas' Lord (tulasidāsa prabhu)³! Trying to describe Sita's sorrows and tribulations with this mouth of mine (i.e. Hanuman's mouth) seems to make them negligible or inconsequential because words can't capture the poignancy of the situation; words can never do justice to the actual state of suffering in which Sita is, for they have their limitations.

Hence oh Lord, now you should give her your Darshan (i.e. present yourself of in front of her and give her the chance to have your divine sight), thereby removing all the causes of her miseries and agonies because you are the vanquisher of the sorrows, anguish, miseries and tribulations of the meek, humble, lowly, hapless and helpless ones (tumha ārata-ārati dauna) (4).'

[³The point to note is that Hanuman addresses Lord Ram as the "Lord of Tulsidas". At the time these events had unfolded long-long ago, Tulsidas was not there. This single instance establishes that Tulsidas wishes to convey to all that he is indeed a devotee of Lord Ram, and to endorse his claim he has made Hanuman acknowledge it by addressing Lord Ram as being the "Lord of Tulsidas"! A true devotee has the same relation with his Lord God as a mother has for her son or a friend for his dearest friend. The mother takes pride in calling her son as 'her own', and so does a true friend. And if that 'son' or 'friend' happens to be some great person of renown and stature, the pride of calling him one's own is all the more profound. Now, Lord Ram is not an ordinary prince but the Lord God in a personified form, and he is therefore the Lord of all living beings. So Tulsidas has all the more reasons to feel proud that he is so favourite of the Lord that the latter has chosen him to narrate his divine story for the benefit of the rest of the world, a rare privilege that the Lord has bestowed upon Tulsidas over the heads of other more experienced and able poets and bards. So naturally Tulsidas has an occasion and reason to celebrate his elevation to such a high pedestal as being the scribe chosen by the Lord God himself to write down his history for the sake of posterity.]

(5/21)

कपिके सुनि कल कोमल बैन ।
 प्रेमपुलकि सब गात सिथिल भए, भरे सलिल सरसीरुह—नैन ॥ 1 ॥
 सिय—बियोग—सागर नागर—मनु बूझन लग्यो सहित चित—चैन ।
 लही नाव पवनज—प्रसन्नता, बरबस तहाँ गह्यो गुन—मैन ॥ 2 ॥
 सकत न बूझि कुसल, बूझे बिन गिरा बिपुल ब्याकुल उर—ऐन ।
 ज्यों कुलीन सुचि सुमति बियोगिनि सनमुख सहै बिरह—सर पैन ॥ 3 ॥
 धरि—धरि धीर बीर कोसलपति किए जतन, सके उत्तरु दै न ।
 तुलसिदास प्रभु सखा अनुजसों सैनहिं कह्यो चलहु सजि सैन ॥ 4 ॥

(5/21)

kapikē suni kala kōmala baina.
 prēmapulaki saba gāta sithila bha'e, bharē salila sarasīruha-naina.. 1..
 siya-biyōga-sāgara nāgara-manu būṛana lagyō sahita cita-caina.
 lahī nāva pavanaja-prasannatā, barabasa tahāṁ gahyō guna-maina.. 2.. sakata na būjhi kusala, būjhē bina girā bipula byākula ura-aina.
 jyōm kulīna suci sumati biyōgini sanamukha sahai biraha-sara paina..3..
 dhari-dhari dhīra bīra kōsalapati ki'ē jatana, sakē uttaru dai na.
 tulasidāsa prabhu sakhā anujasōm sainahim kahyō calahu saji saina.. 4..

Condition of Lord Ram and the decision to invade Lanka

Verse no. 5/21—Hearing such sweet and tender words of Hanuman, Lord Sri Ram's body was thrilled and benumbed with an upsurge of affection and emotions even as his lotus-like eyes were filled with tears (1).

The clever/expert swimmer represented by Lord Sri Ram's mind and heart had begun to sink, along with his happy and contented intellectual bearing and temperament that is normally resolute and neutral from emotions and sentiments, in the ocean of anguish and sorrows at Sita's separation.

Just at this moment (when he was about to drown), he found a boat of hope, solace, succour and happiness in the form of her news heard from the mouth of Hanuman. But it appeared that 'Kamdeo' (i.e. his intense desire or eagerness to meet his beloved Sita) seemed to hold that boat forcibly (so that Sri Ram's hope and happiness was short-lived, and he appeared to plunge in gloom and remorseful mood once again)¹ (2).

[¹When Sita was abducted, Lord Ram felt so depressed, distraught and dejected in his heart and mind that he virtually sort of began to sink in an ocean of despair and hopelessness. He had thought that he will never hear of Sita ever again in his life. This thought made him abjectly gloomy and he despaired for life.

In this helpless condition, when Hanuman arrived with the news of Sita, it acted as a buoy for Lord Ram, and his hopes were refreshed. But soon he was once again subdued with agony when he reflected upon Sita's miseries.]

This is why (being overwhelmed by emotions that choked his throat) Lord Ram could not utter a word of enquiry about Sita, and at the same time he felt that his voice was being stifled (strangled, suffocated) in his own heart because he could not express himself openly and let known his agonies to anyone.

It was like the case of some noble, pure and chaste woman, who being separated from her beloved, suffers internally, but has to stoically bear the sharp, caustic, sarcastic, derogatory and insinuating words spoken by others for her, on her face or behind her back, without her being able to answer back or retort sharply to her tormentor (because if she does try, her tormentors would become all the more louder and more verbal in passing taunts at her to tease her even more, and thereat derive sadistic pleasure from her discomfiture) (3).

Kaushalpati ('the Lord of Kaushal, Ayodhya'; i.e. Lord Sri Ram) tried many a times to gather enough strength and courage to speak, but not a word came out of his mouth.

Tulsidas says that, finally, the Lord indicated by signs to his friend Sugriv and brother Laxman that they should immediately collect the army and embark on the mission without delay (to rescue Sita from Lanka)² (4).

[²Refer: (i) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 35; and (ii) Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 16, stanza no.13 also.]

जानकी—त्रिजटा—संवाद
राग जैतश्री

(5 / 47)

कब देखौंगी नयन वह मधुर मूरति ?
राजिवदल—नयन, कोमल, कृपा—अयन, मयननि बहु छबि अंगनि दूरति ॥ 1 ॥
सिरसि जटा—कलाप, पानि सायक, चाप, उरसि रुचिर बनमाल लूरति ।
तुलसिदास रघुबीरकी सोभा सुमिरि, भई है मगन नहि तनकी सूरति ॥ 2 ॥

jānakī-trijaṭā-sanvāda

rāga jaitaśrī

(5/47)

kaba dēkhauṅī nayana vaha madhura mūrati?
 rājivadala-nayana, kōmala, kṛpā-ayana, mayanani bahu chabi aṅgani dūrati.. 1..
 sirasi jaṭā-kalāpa, pāni sāyaka, cāpa, urasi rucira banamāla lūrati.
 tulasidāsa raghubīrakī sōbhā sumiri, bha'ī hai magana nahi tanakī sūrati.. 2..

Conversation between Sita and Trijata-I

Verse no. 5/47—[After Hanuman had left Lanka, Sita felt lonely and dejected. A demoness named Trijata was deputed by Ravana to keep an eye on Sita. Trijata was a noble soul despite of her body being that of a demoness. She felt deeply sympathetic towards Sita and empathized with her case, feeling very pity for her. She was Sita's only constant companion all through her confinement in Lanka. By and by, the two became friends, and Sita used to confide in her all her emotions and sentiments. So Sita told her in a very poignant mood that she is very depressed and distressed, and wonders whether she will ever meet her beloved husband Lord Ram again in life. Trijata, like a true and trusted friend and companion, kept her spirit buoyed and her morale boosted by always assuring her that she should not doubt that she would be rescued by the Lord sooner rather than later. The conversation between the two has been described in Geetawali, Sundar kand, verse no. 5/47 to 5/51.

This conversation is also narrated in Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 12; (b) Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 100.

Refer also to Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/2—6/3.

Now, let us read the conversation betwixt Trijata and Sita.]

[Sita said to the demoness Trijata—] ‘When shall I see that enchanting and lovable (sweet, pleasant) image (of my beloved husband Sri Ram) with these eyes? When shall I see him whose eyes are akin to the lotus flower, who is most tender, who is a mine of mercy and kindness, and whose most enchanting image puts to shame the magnificence and glamour of numerous Kamdeo-cupids put together? (1).

(When shall I meet—) The Lord (who) has matted hairs on the head, a bow and arrow in the hands, and an attractive ‘Van-mala’ (a garland made of marigold flowers) always hanging on his broad chest.’

Tulsidas says that Sita has become immersed in the thoughts of Raghubir (literally the strong and brave warrior of king Raghu's clan; i.e. Lord Ram) whose magnificence, majesty and spectacular beauty is so overwhelming and enrapturing that she appears to have lost awareness of her body (and her surroundings) by the remembrance of the Lord (2).

राग केदारा

(5/48)

कहु, कबहुँ देखिहौं आली ! आरज—सुवन ।
 सानुज सुभग—तनु जबतें बिछुरे बन, तबतें दव—सी लगी तीनिहू भुवन ॥ 1 ॥
 मूरति सूरति किये प्रगट प्रीतम हिये, मनके करन चाहैं चरन छुवन ।
 चित चढ़िगो बियोग—दसा न कहिबे जोग, पुलक गात, लागे लोचन चुवन ॥ 2 ॥
 तुलसी त्रिजटा जानी, सिय अति अकुलानी
 मृदुबानी कह्यौ ऐहैं दवन—दुवन ।
 तमीचर—तम—हारी सुरकंज—सुखकारी रबिकूल—रबि अब चाहत उवन ॥ 3 ॥

rāga kēdārā

(5/48)

kahu, kabahuṁ dēkhihauṁ ālī! āraja-suvana.
 sānuja subhaga-tanu jabatēm bichurē bana, tabatēm dava-sī lagī tīnihū bhuvana.. 1..
 mūrati sūrati kiyē pragaṭa prītama hiyē, manakē karana cāhairṁ carana chuvana.
 cita caḍhigō biyōga-dasā na kahibē jōga, pulaka gāta, lāgē lōcana cuvana.. 2.. tulasī trijaṭā jānī, siya ati akulānī mṛdubānī kahyau aihairṁ davana-duvana.
 tamīcara-tama-hārī surakañja-sukhakārī rabikula-rabi aba cāhata uvana.. 3..

Conversation between Sita and Trijata-II

Verse no. 5/48—[Sita continued—] ‘Friend Trijata! Say, will I be ever able to have a ‘Darshan’ (a reverential viewing) of the ‘Aaryaputra’ (the son born in the Aryan race; here referring to Lord Ram), who is an image (i.e. embodiment, personification) of beauty and magnificence, as well as of his brother (Laxman)?

Ever since I was separated from them in the forest, the three Lokas (subterranean, terrestrial and heavenly worlds; literally meaning the whole world) seem to be engulfed in a wild forest-fire for me¹ (1).

[¹To wit, I don’t find peace and comfort anywhere. Day and night, morning and evening, summer or winter, rainy season or dry days—I feel equally tormented and burn inside by the fire ignited due to the agony and misery caused by separation from Lord Ram. The grief and anguish are roasting me alive.]

My beloved (Ram) reveals himself in my heart as soon as I remember his image (form) which is most adorable and loving. I want to touch his feet by the hands of my mind (imagination), but when I recall his separation from me, then my (physical and mental) condition cannot be described—the body becomes thrilled and tears roll down my eyes (2).’

Tulsidas says that when Trijata saw that Sita was excessively agitated and anguished, she consoled her with these sweet and comforting words, ‘Sri Ram, who is the destroyer of enemies, will come soon. The ‘Sun’ of the Solar Race is the destroyer (eliminator, remover, vanquisher) of darkness representing the demons, and is favoured by the garden of lotuses representing the Gods. This Sun is about to rise²!’

[²Here, the ‘Sun’ is a metaphor for Sri Ram. The phrase ‘the Sun of the Solar-Race’ means that Lord Ram is the brightest, the most glorious and the most renowned amongst all the kings of the Sun-Race.

The ‘demons’ stand for all the wicked, evil and unrighteous creatures. The Gods are compared to the ‘lotus’ because of their good virtues just like the lotus flower, which is deemed to be pure and clean and in spite of it living inside a dirty pond.

The Lord is a favourite with the Gods because he affords them his full support and protection, and like the celestial ‘sun’ he removes the darkness represented by the evil and wicked demons.

In other words, just as the lotus flower blooms and find joy when the sun rises in the sky, the Gods will find joy as soon as Lord Ram and his army is sighted on the horizon of Lanka, because it would mean the end of the tyranny that the demons had spread throughout the world.]

(5 / 49)

अबलौं मैं तोसों न कहे री।
 सुन त्रिजटा! प्रिय प्राननाथ बिनु बासर निसि दुख दुसह सहे री॥ 1॥
 बिरह बिषम बिष-बेलि बढी उर, ते सुख सकल सुभाय दहे री।
 सोइ सींचिबे लागि मनसिजके रहँट नयन नित रहत नहे री॥ 2॥
 सर-सरीर सूखे प्रान-बारिचर जीवन-आस तजि चलनु चहे री।
 तैं प्रभु सुजस-सुधा सीतल करि राखे, तदपि न तृप्ति लहे री॥ 3॥
 रिपु-रिस घोर नदी बिबेक-बल, धीर-सहित हुते जात बहे री।
 दै मुद्रिका-टेक तेहि औसर, सुचि समीरसुत पैरि गहे री॥ 4॥
 तुलसिदास सब सोच पोच मृग मन-कानन भरि पूरि रहे री।
 अब सखि सिय सँदेह परिहरु हिय, आइ गए दोउ बीर अहेरी॥ 5॥

(5/49)

abalaum maim tōsōm na kahē rī.

suna trijaṭā! priya prānanātha binu bāsara nisi dukha dusaha sahē rī..1..

biraha biṣama biṣa-bēli barhī ura, tē sukha sakala subhāya dahē rī.

sō'i sīñcibē lāgi manasijakē rahaṁṭa nayana nita rahata nahē rī.. 2..

sara-sarīra sūkhē prāna-bāricara jīvana-āsa taji calanu cahē rī.
 taim prabhu sujasa-sudhā sītala kari rākhē, tadapi na tṛpti lahē rī.. 3..
 ripu-risa ghōra nadī bibēka-bala, dhīra-sahita hutē jāta bahē rī.
 dai mudrikā-ṭēka tēhi ausara, suci samīrasuta pairi gahē rī.. 4.. tulasidāsa saba sōca pōca mṛga mana-kānana bhari pūri rahē rī.
 aba sakhi siya saṁdēha pariharū hiya, ā'i ga'ē dō'u bīra ahērī.. 5..

Conversation between Sita and Trijata-III

Verse no. 5/49—[Sita replied to Trijata—] ‘Dear, I have not disclosed this to you until now. Listen Trijata, I have suffered intensely day and night without (the company of) my beloved (husband, Sri Ram) (1).

The poisonous creeper representing horrible miseries of separation has grown robust in my heart. It has naturally burnt (sucked out and destroyed) all my joys and happiness.

It appears that my eyes are like the bulls who are always yoked to the water-wheel of Kamdeo to draw water so that somehow this fire of agony caused by separation from the Lord is doused and kept under control¹ (2).

[¹Sita means that tears constantly flow from her eyes to soothe her weary, exhausted, pained and tormented nerves. Her grief is somewhat alleviated when she weeps. She compares the condition of her eyes that continuously shed tears to that of the bulls who are yoked to a water-wheel and go round and round to draw water to irrigate dry land. So similarly, Sita’s eyes continue to shed endless streams of tears to douse her fire of agony and grief that keeps burning inside her heart.]

My body-like lake has dried up (i.e. it has become emaciated and withered). Hence, the water-bird representing my soul (life) residing in it now wants to depart (i.e. I wish to die).

Albeit you have temporarily stopped them from departing by attempting to quench their thirst by providing them with the life-sustaining nectar in the form of reassurance (that the Lord would definitely come to my rescue), alongside narrating the divine glories and the auspicious virtues of the Lord (Sri Ram) to keep my sagging spirits buoyed, they still are not satisfied (quenched and contented)² (3).

[²Sita means that inspite of all the reassurances by Trijata, she is finding it too much of a burden to live any longer without her beloved Lord Ram. She is longing desperately for the Lord, and mere words and assurances do not seem to help substantially unless there is some sort of positive signal or development to prove them. The odds are so heavily stacked against her that inspite of all the assurances of Trijata that the Lord would come soon and kill the demons and release her from captivity, Sita does not seem to rely or believe in them. Of course such sweet and reassuring words give her temporary relief, but sooner than later the feeling of wretchedness and misery returns with a vengeance.]

These birds (representing my soul, my body and life) were just floating or drifting away in the fierce current of the river symbolized by wrath of the enemy (demons) with courage derived from the strength that comes with wisdom and fortitude³.

[³To wit, I would have drowned in the turbulent river with very fierce currents of water representing the torments and horrors that I faced in the hands of my captors.

But I held on to dear life with courage and fortitude, in the hope that I will gain nothing by losing hope and dying, but if I manage somehow to keep my life afloat then haply there may be a chance I may see light at the end of the dark tunnel and meet my Lord once again. Hereat, and aught but this, I managed to survive so long.]

But the son of the Wind-God (Hanuman), who is of a pure heart and intellect, swam across swiftly, caught hold of them and prevented them from getting lost by giving them a life-support (a buoy) in the form of the signet ring (that the Lord had given him to be delivered to me). Thus, these birds⁴ were not only saved from drowning but also from getting lost for ever.

[⁴The birds symbolize the life and body of Sita. Wisdom had prevented her from dying because she knew that if she lost courage and died then whatever chance she had of meeting the Lord again would be lost for ever. So she drew on her reserve of courage and fortitude to somehow linger on with life in a tenacious manner. But life was slowly ebbing away from her body just like the bird which was drifting away in the vicious current of the rapid water of the fast-flowing river. Then Hanuman came and threw the life-buoy in the form of the ring of Lord Ram. Sita clinged to this ring to save her precious life from sinking in the ocean of agony, misery, grief and torment to which she was subjected. Hanuman's arrival had helped to pull her out from the brink of certain death by injecting hope in her. The hope and the expectation that now she will soon meet her beloved Lord provided her the will and the encouragement to live on for some more time till the Lord comes and rescues her.] (4).'

Tulsidas continues his narration and says that Sita told Trijata—'Oh Trijata! In my mind representing a forest, there are hordes of wild animals representing all sorts of sorrows, miseries, grief, distresses and troubles to which I am being subjected to. [And these wild animals continue to harass me and create endless horrors for me.]'

[Trijata replied to Sita, reassuring her once again with her wise words. She said—] 'Oh friend Sita (sakhi siya)! Shrug-off the doubts in your heart now. Both the hunters (Sri Ram and Laxman) have arrived, and they are ready to hunt down the game⁵.' (5).

[⁵In other words, Lord Ram and Laxman would soon kill the demons like hunter-princes pursue their games and kill them. This will be the end of Sita's cause of so much pain.]

राग बिलावल

(5/50)

सो दिन सोनेको, कहू, कब ऐहै !
जा दिन बँध्यो सिंधु त्रिजटा! सुनि तू संभ्रम आनि मोहि सुनैहै ॥ 1 ॥
बिस्व-दवन सुर-साधु-सतावन रावन किया आपनो पैहै ।
कनकपुरी भयो भूप बिभीषन, बिबुध-समाज बिलोकन धैहै ॥ 2 ॥
दिब्य दुंदुभी, प्रसंसिहैं मुनिगन, नभतल बिमल बिमाननि छैहै ।
बरषिहैं कुसुम भानुकुल-मनिपर, तब मोको पवनपूत लै जैहै ॥ 3 ॥
अनुज सहित सोभिहैं कपि महँ, तनु-छबि कोटि मनोजहि तैहै ।
इन नयनन्हि यही भाँति प्रानपति निरखि हृदय आनँद न समैहै ॥ 4 ॥
बहुरो सदल सनाथ सलछिमन कुसल कुसल बिधि अवध देखैहै ।

गुर, पुरलोग, सास, दोउ देवर, मिलत दुसह उर तपनि बुतैहै ॥ 5 ॥
 मंगल—कलस, बधावने घर—घर, पैहैं माँगने जो जेहि भैहै।
 बिजय राम राजाधिराजको, तुलसीदास पावन जस गैहै ॥ 6 ॥

rāga bilāvala

(5/50)

sō dina sōṇēkō, kahu, kaba aihai!
 jā dina baṁdhyō sindhu trijaṭā! suni tū sambhrama āni mōhi sunaihai.. 1.. bisva-davana sura-sādhū-satāvana rāvana kiya āpanō paihai.
 kanakapurī bhayō bhūpa bibhīṣana, bibudha-samāja bilōkana dhaihai.. 2..
 dibya dundubhī, prasansihaiṁ munigana, nabhatala bimala bimānani chaihai.
 baraṣihaiṁ kusuma bhānukula-manipara, taba mōkō pavanapūta lai jaihai..
 3.. anuja sahita sōbhihaiṁ kapi maham, tanu-chabi kōṭi manōjahi taihai.
 ina nayanānhi yahī bhāṁti prānapati nirakhi hṛdaya ānaṁda na samaihai.. 4.. bahurō sadala sanātha salachimana kusala kusala bidhi avadha dēkhaihai.
 gura, puralōga, sāsa, dō'u dēvara, milata dusaha ura tapani butaihai.. 5.. maṅgala-kalasa, badhāvanē ghara-ghara, paihaiṁ māṁganē jō jēhi bhaihai.
 bijaya rāma rājādhirājako, tulasīdāsa pāvana jasa gaihai.. 6..

Conversation between Sita and Trijata-IV

(Sita visualises the Victory Day)

Verse no. 5/50—[Sita said—] ‘Oh Trijata! When will that golden (auspicious, fortunate) day dawn when, hearing that the ocean has been tamed (i.e. bridged), and you will come hurriedly to convey this good news to me? (1).

When will the Gods rush to see (the spectacular marvel) that Ravana, who has crushed the world and tormented the Gods, has got the fruit of (i.e. punishment for) his (evil, sinful and unrighteous) deeds, and Vibhishan has become the king of Lanka instead? (2).

[I’m eagerly waiting for that fine day when—] There would be a loud chorus of kettle-drums (musical instruments) being played in the sky (by the Gods) to celebrate the victory, the sages and hermits shall be singing praises (of Lord Ram and Laxman), the clear sky shall be covered by the vehicles of Gods from which flowers would be showered on the ‘Bhanukul Mani’ (literally, the jewel or the gem of the Solar Race, i.e. Lord Sri Ram), and at the opportune moment the son of the Wind-God (Hanuman) would take me there (to where my beloved Lord Sri Ram is) (3).

When I would see him (Sri Ram), along with his younger brother (Laxman), amongst the monkeys? His divine sight and its spectacular beauty would be so magnificent and bewitching to behold that it would be putting to shame millions of Kamdeo-cupids by its enrapturing charm and profound magnificence.

Indeed my heart will swell with joy and exhilaration on seeing my heart's beloved with mine own eyes at that time (4).

Will the clever Creator let me happily see Ayodhya once again, accompanied by our group (of monkeys, bears etc.), alongside our Lord (Sri Ram) and Laxman?

The fierce and intolerable fire burning in my heart shall be doused when I see the Guru (sage Vasistha), the citizens (of Ayodhya), the mothers-in-law (Kaushalya, Sumitra etc.), and both my brothers-in-law (Bharat and Shatrughan) (5).

On that occasion, auspicious pitchers and pots would be put up as decorations in each and every household, and celebratory, felicitous songs would be sung everywhere. The alms-seekers would get what they want, while Tulsidas¹ will sing the song of glorious victory of the Great King, Lord Sri Ram! (6).'

[¹Once again Tulsidas prophesizes that when the happy days return to Ayodhya, he will be present, in a symbolic manner, at the time of Sri Ram's coronation to participate in the rejoicings and celebrations there. And as true scribe, he will give a first-hand account of the rejoicings, celebrations and festivities accompanying the Lord's ascension to the throne of Ayodhya.]

(5 / 51)

सिय ! धीरज धरिये, राघौ अब ऐहैं ।
 पवनपूतपै पाइ तिहारी सुधि, सहज कृपालु, बिलंब न लैहैं ॥ 1 ॥
 सेन साजि कपि-भालु कालसम कौतुक ही पाथोधि बँधैहैं ।
 घेरोइपै देखिबो लंकगढ़, बिकल जातुधानी पछितैहैं ॥ 2 ॥
 निसिचर-सलभ कृसानु राम सर उड़ि-उड़ि परत जरत जड़ जैहैं ।
 रावन करि परिवार आगमनो, जमपुर जात बहुत सकुचैहैं ॥ 3 ॥
 तिलक सारि, अपनाय बिभीषन, अभय-बाँह दै अमर बसैहैं ।
 जय धुनि मुनि, बरसिहैं सुमन सुर, ब्योम बिमान निसान बजैहैं ॥ 4 ॥
 बंधु समेत प्रानबल्लभ पद परसि सकल परिताप नसैहैं ।
 राम-बामदिसि देखि तुमहि सब नयनवंत लोचन-फल पैहैं ॥ 5 ॥
 तुम अति हित चितइहौ नाथ-तनु, बार-बार प्रभु तुमहि चितैहैं ।
 यह सोभा, सुख-समय बिलोकत काहू तो पलकैं नहिं लैहैं ॥ 6 ॥
 कपिकुल-लखन-सुजस-जय-जानकि सहित कुसल निज नगर सिधैहैं ।
 प्रेम पुलकि आनंद मुदित मन तुलसिदास कल कीरति गैहैं ॥ 7 ॥

(5/51)

siya! dhīraja dhariyē, rāghau aba aihaim.

pavanapūtapai pā'i tihārī sudhi, sahaja kṛpālu, bilamba na laihaim.. 1..

sēna sāji kapi-bhālu kālasama kautuka hī pāthōdhi baṁdhaihim.

ghērō'ipai dēkhibō laṅkagarḥa, bikala jātudhānī pachitaihamai.. 2.. nisicara-salabha kṛsānu rāma sara uḍi-uḍi parata jarata jaṛa jaihaiṁ.
 rāvana kari parivāra āgamanō, jamapura jāta bahuta sakucaihami.. 3.. tilaka sārī, apanāya bibhīṣana, abhaya-bāṁha dai amara basaihaiṁ.
 jaya dhuni muni, barasihaiṁ sumana sura, byōma bimāna nisāna bajaihaiṁ..
 4.. bandhu samēta prānaballabha pada parasi sakala paritāpa nasaihaiṁ.
 rāma-bāmadisi dēkhi tumahi saba nayanavanta lōcana-phala paihaiṁ.. 5..
 tuma ati hita cita'ihau nātha-tanu, bāra-bāra prabhu tumahi citaihaiṁ.
 yaha sōbhā, sukha-samaya bilōkata kāhū tō palakaiṁ nahirṁ laihami.. 6..
 kapikula-lakhana-sujasa-jaya-jānaki sahita kusala nija nagara sidhaihaiṁ.
 prēma pulaki ānanda mudita mana tulasidāsa kala kīrati gaihaiṁ.. 7..

Conversation between Sita and Trijata-V

(Trijata's Reply and Reassurance to Sita)

Verse no. 5/51—[Trijata replied to Sita as she sought to reassure her—] ‘Have courage and patience! Now, having got information about you from the son of the Wind-God (Hanuman), Raghav (Sri Ram) will come soon. He is merciful and kind by nature, and hence he will delay no further¹ (1).

[¹Trijata's guess was correct. When Hanuman returned to Kishkindha and conveyed all the tidings to the Lord, he pleaded with the Lord to start preparations forthwith. The Lord too did not waste any time, and the Lord's army started for Lanka soon thereafter. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 31; and from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 35.]

The Lord would bridge (tie, tame) the ocean playfully (without effort, easily), like Kaal (the God of death) does (with a creature when the time of its death arrives), after assembling an army of monkeys and bears.

Now you would soon see Lanka surrounded on all the sides (i.e. besieged), and the demonesses would become extremely agitated and regret at the turn of events (2).

The foolish moths² representing the demons would fly towards and get burnt by the fire of Sri Ram's arrows (i.e. they will be enticed and lured towards Sri Ram's arrows, and die in multitudes by being shot by these arrows of the Lord), even as Ravana would feel extremely contrite, remorseful and repentant while going to the ‘Yam Lok’ (the abode of Yam, the God of death and hell) upon his death, and he would be accompanied by his family following him in the vanguard³ (3).

[²Like the moths that fly towards the fire only to get burnt to death, the demons would voluntarily go and get killed by the arrows shot by Lord Ram and Laxman. When Ravana would be finally killed, he would go to the abode of the God of death, known as ‘Yam’, and would be regretting at his decision of creating unnecessary enmity with Lord Ram that eventually led to the slaying of the entire demon race, except of course some who did not oppose the Lord, such as Vibhishan and his companions.

³Ravana had died last of all the demons. Hence it is said that all other members of his family and race would precede him to the abode of the God of death.]

The Lord (Sri Ram) would accept Vibhishan's right to the throne and anoint him as the King of Lanka. Simultaneously, the Lord would also make the Gods fearless and establish (reinstate) them in the heavens.

At that auspicious moment, the sages and hermits would applaud, saying aloud in chorus: 'Hail, Hail the Lord and his glories!'

Meanwhile, the Gods would shower flowers from the sky as they watch the events from their aerial vehicles even as they simultaneously play their musical instruments to celebrate the occasion (4).

All the creatures would destroy (overcome, vanquish) all their sorrows, heart-burns and torments by touching the holy feet of Lord Ram and his brother (Laxman).

All the creatures who have eyes would get the reward (fruit) of their eye-sight by seeing you (Sita) sitting on the left-hand side of Lord Ram (5).

You would look (glance) at the Lord with most affectionate glances with enchanted eyes, and the Lord would reciprocate.

Watching those adorable, happy, joyous and magnificent moments, (a view of spectacular and of momentous importance and charm), all would be transfixed, staring at the wonderful image of Lord Ram by your side, without blinking even for a moment (6).

Thereafter, Lord Sri Ram—accompanied by the monkey army and Laxman, with the glory and the good fame that he has acquired by the victory of Lanka as a trophy to his credit, and with Sita by his side—would go back happily to his city (capital, Ayodhya).

Tulsidas says that he will sing the Lord's glories, virtues and famous deeds that are most magnificent and stupendously fascinating, with a thrilled body and a mind that is exhilarated and euphoric beyond description (7).

-----**-----

Section 7.4:

Kavitawali Ramayan

{Kavitawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-32}

We have read in the above section no. 7.3 about Hanuman's meeting with Sita and his report to Lord Ram as narrated in Geetawali Ramayan.

Now in this section no. 7.4 we shall have a fascinating view of how Lanka was actually burnt and devastated by Hanuman. For this purpose we will read Tulsidas' classical book named 'Kavitawali Ramayan', from its Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-32.

Kavitawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-32:-

The Ashok Garden (the royal garden of Rāvanā)

बासव-बरुन बिधि-बनतें सुहावनो, दसाननको काननु बसंतको सिंगारु सो ।
 समय पुराने पात परत, डरत बातु, पालत लालत रति-मारको बिहारु सो ॥
 देखें बर बापिका तड़ाग बागको बनाउ, रागबस भो बिरागी पवनकुमारु सो । सीयकी दसा बिलोकि बिटप असोक तर,
 'तुलसी' बिलोक्यो सो तिलोक-सोक-सारु सो ॥ १ ॥

1. bāsava-baruna bidhi-banatēm suhāvanō, dasānanakō kānanu basantakō siṅgāru sō.
 samaya purānē pāta parata, ḍarata bātu, pālata lālata rati-mārakō bihāru sō..
 dēkhēm bara bāpikā tarāga bāgakō banā'u, rāgabasa bhō birāgī pavanakumāru sō.
 sīyakī dasā bilōki biṭapa asōka tara,
 'tulasī' bilōkyō sō tilōka-sōka-sāru sō..1..

Verse no. 5/1—Tulsidas says that the garden of Ravana (i.e. the Ashok grove) was more pleasant than that of Indra, Varun and Brahma. It appeared to be an ornament for even Basant (the spring season). [Tulsidas means that spring is the time when all the gardens, groves and forests bloom and blossom, but the garden of Ravana was so beautiful and enchanting that it appears that spring season drew its own ability of providing beauty and magnificence to Nature from the garden of Ravana known as the Ashok Grove.]

Old leaves fell when the ripe time came because wind was afraid to enter (intrude) into the garden out of Ravana's fear, and instead, it nourished and looked after it like it were the playing field for Kamdeo and Rati (the God of love and his consort respectively).

Seeing excellent ponds, lakes and the layout of the garden, even a great renouncer like Hanuman became enchanted and enthralled. But when he saw the pitiful condition of Sita under the Ashok tree, the same garden appeared to be the core of all sorrows in the three worlds for him.

[Note—This was the garden within the palace of Ravana where he had kept Sita in captivity.

Hanuman landed on the soil of Lanka in the night, and after overcoming the first obstacle, a fierce demoness known as Lankini who was the chief gate-keeper of the fort and whom Hanuman punched so hard that she swooned and bled in the mouth, he entered the city. Thereafter, he searched for Sita everywhere throughout the night but couldn't locate her. In the morning he met Vibhishan, the brother of the king of demons, Ravana, and a great devotee of Lord Ram. He guided Hanuman to the Ashok garden where Sita was held captive. Hanuman went there and after some time met Sita and exchanged news with her. This part of the story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chuapai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chuapai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 17.

Now, Tulsidas did not describe the Ashok garden nor the burning of Lanka in as fine detail in Ram Charit Manas as was his wont, so he compensates this shortcoming here in Kavitawali. Why he could not do so in Ram Charit Manas is natural to deduce—it is because he had an extensive story to narrate within the limited space of a book, though his heart yearned that he ought to have done so. But he feared that if he did start elaborating and writing as much as his heart dictated the book would become huge and unmanageably long. He wanted it to be readable and compact, and not so voluminous that the mere sight of it would discourage the potential reader and put him off. So he chose to write three other separate books to satisfy the wish of his heart—to focus exclusively on a particular aspect of the story or personality of its hero Lord Ram. So came into being (i) Kavitawali, (ii) Geetawali, and (iii) Barvai Ramayan.

In Kavitawali he has highlighted some of the subtle things and finer aspects to focus the reader's attention on them which they might have missed or failed to interpret correctly in the main narrative of the story of the life and time of Lord Ram in the book Ram Charit Manas. For instance, take the burning of Lanka. It is more extensively, more vividly and more lucidly described in the verses of Kavitawali as compared to the other texts.

Then when we move on to the next chapter, the Lanka Kand, we will observe that the way the war has been described there it is absolutely made clear that the real hero of the battle-field is Hanuman, and no one else. Even Lord Ram has explicitly declared it in verse no. 40 of Lanka Kand. Remember: Hanuman was the incarnation of Lord Shiva's eleventh form known as Rudra, and Tulsidas wished to emphasize the fact that the war was actually fought by Shiva on behalf of Ram and the Gods. This he could not do in his other epic narratives to maintain balance and equilibrium and do justice to the other characters of the story, but nevertheless it was important to highlight this point. So he decided to devote the entire part of the narrative of the war at Lanka to Hanuman in Kavitawali's Lanka Kand.]

माली मेघमाल, बनपाल बिकराल भट, नीकें सब काल सींचैं सुधासार नीरके ।
मेघनाथ तैं दुलारो, प्रान तैं पियारो बागु, अति अनुरागु जियँ जातुधान धीर कैं ।।
'तुलसी' सो जानि-सुनि, सीयको दरसु पाइ, पैठो बाटिकाँ बजाइ बल रघुबीर कैं ।
बिद्यमान देखत दसाननको काननु सो तहस-नहस कियो साहसी समीर कैं ।। 2 ।।

2. mālī mēghamāla, banapāla bikarāla bhaṭa, nīkēm saba kāla sīñcaim̐ sudhāsāra nīrakē.
mēghanātha tēm̐ dulārō, prāna tēm̐ piyārō bāgu, ati anurāgu jiyam̐ jātudhāna dhīra kēm̐..
'tulasi' sō jāni-suni, sīyakō darasu pā'i, paiṭhō bāṭikām̐ bajā'i bala raghubīra kēm̐.
bidyamāna dēkhata dasānanakō kānanu sō tahasa-nahasa kiyō sāhasī samīra kēm..2..

[Here, Tulsidas describes the Ashok grove]

Verse no. 5/2—The clouds are the gardeners (i.e. they water the grove by their rains—this shows it was a big forest-like grove), and the guards are ferocious and huge-bodied. It appeared that the clouds watered the grove with nectar (1).

Ravana loved the garden immensely—more than even his son Meghnad and his own life (2).

Tulsidas says that inspite of knowing everything about this garden (that it is privileged place very much liked by the king of demons, and to enter it and ruin it would be like entering a lion's den to challenge him with bare hands), Hanuman fearlessly entered the grove on the strength of Lord Ram (3). Inspite of the awesome presence of Ravana and his special protection of this particular garden, the courageous son of the Wind-God (Hanuman) laid it to waste (4). [5/2]

{Acting on the ill-thought sycophantic advice of his dumb-witted advisors who said things that pleased their demon king Ravana, instead of being honest and giving an advice that would have been for the good of the kingdom of Lanka, orders were issued to wrap Hanuman's tail in cloth and set it afire. This is what Hanuman was waiting for. As soon as the cloth was lit with fire and oil, he became small in size, thereby easily pulling his tail out of the huge cylindrical tube that the cloth formed when it was wrapped around his thick tail earlier when he had a colossus form. Then he jumped from one place to another in the city, dragging the burning tube of cloth behind him. This started a big fire in Lanka, and the whole city was reduced to cinders.}

[Note—Upon landing in Lanka, Hanuman went all over the place but could not locate Sita. In the morning that followed the night of his landing, he heard Vibhishan reciting the holy name of Lord Ram. Deciding that he must surely be a devotee of the Lord, Hanuman went and introduced himself to him. It was Vibhishan who directed him to the garden where Sita was held. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 8.

Hanuman finally met Sita and gifted to her the signet ring that Lord Ram had given him for identification. After having exchanged news with her, he sought her permission to go and eat fruits in the orchard. Then he laid to waste the private garden of Ravana and beat back the demon guards. Finally he was captured by Meghnad, the son of Ravana, who brought Hanuman to the royal court. Then followed a heated and acrimonious verbal duel between the demon king and Hanuman. Furious at the latter's temerity and fearlessness inspite of being in captivity, Ravana ordered his staff to burn the monkey's tail and let him go back to his Master with a scarred body so that the latter can be shown the insult and rebuke in a symbolic manner because a person's messenger is his representative.

The stupid demons said—‘To hear is to obey’, and wrapped the tail with cloth wetted in oil. Miraculously, the tail kept on elongating till it circled the entire city. Then reduced himself in size to escape from the ropes that tied him and leapt all across the city, burying it to ashes. Then he jumped in the ocean to douse the flame, took permission from Sita and came back to this side of the ocean where his companions were waiting for him most anxiously.

This story is narrated in Ram Charit Mana, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 28. Refer also to Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 1-16.]

The Burning of Laṅkā

बसन बटोरि बोरि-बोरि तेल तमीचर, खोरि-खोरि धाड़ आड़ बाँधत लँगूर हैं ।
 तैसो कपि कौतुकी डेरात ढीले गात कै-कै, लातके अघात सहै, जीमें कहै, क्रूर हैं ॥
 बाल किलकारी कै-कै, तारी दै-दै गारी देत, पाछे लागे, बाजत निसान ढोल तूर हैं ।
 बालधी बढ़न लागी, ठौर-ठौर दीन्ही आगी, बिंधिकी दवारि कैधौ कोटिसत सूर हैं ॥३॥

3. basana baṭōri bōri-bōri tēla tamīcara, khōri-khōri dhā'i ā'i bāṁdhata laṁgūra haim.
 taisō kapi kautukī ḍērāta ḍhīlē gāta kai-kai, lātakē aghāta sahai, jīmēm kahai, krūra haim..
 bāla kilakārī kai-kai, tāri dai-dai gārī dēta, pāchēm lāgē, bājata nisāna ḍhōla tūra haim.
 bāladhī baṛhana lāgi, ṭhaura-ṭhaura dīnhī āgi, bindhikī davāri kaidhaum kōṭisata sūra haim..3..

Verse no. 5/3—The demons rushed along all the lanes and bye-lanes (of the city of Lanka), collected all available cloth, dipped them in oil and wrapped them on Hanuman's tail. Similarly, the playful Hanuman pretends to be afraid and tolerates their kicks and blows with relaxed muscles (i.e. he does not resist), and considers them to be cowards. The children, clapping and laughing in derision, are abusing him and having a merry of a time as they joined the elder demons; and drums, tom-toms and bugles are being sounded (as if a great drama is being staged in the city).

The tail started elongating and the demons ignited it (i.e. they lit the wrapped cloth with fire) randomly at various points which made it appear like the great (forest or wild) fire of the Vindhya mountains, or like one hundred crore (millions of) suns shining simultaneously.

[Note—The story of how and why Lanka was burnt has been described in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 26.

But however, the description of the actual destruction of Lanka as has been described in Ram Charit Manas is very brief, only from Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 25—to Doha no. 26, as compared to the narration here in Kavīṭawālī which is exceptionally fine and vivid. Here it is spread over from verse no. 3—right upto verse no. 25.]

लाड़-लाड़ आगि भागे बालजाल जहाँ तहाँ, लघु है निबुकि गिरि मेरुतें बिसाल भो ।
 कौतुकी कपीसु कूदि कनक-कँगूरौ चढ्यो, रावन-भवन चढ़ि ठाढ़े तेहि काल भो ॥
 'तुलसी' विराज्यो ब्योम बालधी पसारि भारी, देखें हहरात भट, कालु सो कराल भो ।

तेजको निधानु मानो कोटिक कृसानु-भानु, नख बिकराल, मुखु तैसो रिस लाल भो ।। 4 ।।

4. lā'i-lā'i āgi bhāgē bālajāla jahāṁ tahāṁ, laghu hvai nibuki giri mērutēm bisāla bhō.
kautukī kapīsu kūdi kanaka-kaṁgūrāṁ caḍhyō, rāvana-bhavana caḍhi ṭhārḥō tēhi kāla bhō..
'tulasī' virājyō byōma bāladhī pasāri bhārī, dēkhēm haharāta bhaṭa, kālu sō karāla bhō.
tējako nidhānu mānō kōṭika kṛsānu-bhānu, nakha bikarāla, mukhu taisō risa lāla bhō..4..

Verse no. 5/4—The mischievous children of Lanka ignited the tail of Hanuman and ran away jesting and laughing, and when the cloth wrapped around the tail was fully ablaze Hanuman shrank his body to a miniscule size. The tail slipped out of the wrappings, and once free of his bondage, he assumed a colossal body like that of Mt. Sumeru (1).

The playful Hanuman then leapt on the golden pinnacle atop the palace of Ravana (2).

Tulsidas says he looked remarkable there with his long tail, flames leaping from it against the sky. Seeing him, even the courageous demons shivered out of fear. Hanuman became ferocious like the God of death and destruction (3).

He appeared to be the fountain of energy as if he embodied millions of fires and suns at the same time. His nails looked ferocious, and the face was red with anger (4).

बालधी बिसाल बिकराल, ज्वालजाल मानो
लंक लीलिबेको काल रसना पसारी है ।
कैधौ ब्योमबीथिका भरे हैं भूरि धूमकेतु, बीररस बीर तरवारि सो उधारी है ।।
'तुलसी' सुरेस-चापु, कैधौ दामिनि-कलापु, कैधौ चली मेरु तें कृसानु-सरि भारी है ।
देखें जातुधान-जातुधानी अकुलानी कहैं, काननु उजार्यो, अब नगरु प्रजारिहै ।। 5 ।।

5. bāladhī bisāla bikarāla, jvālajāla mānō laṅka līlibēkō kāla rasanā pasārī hai.
kaidhauṁ byōmabīthikā bharē haiṁ bhūri dhūmakētu, bīrarasa bīra taravāri sō ughārī hai..
'tulasī' surēsa-cāpu, kaidhauṁ dāmini-kalāpu, kaidhauṁ calī mēru tēm kṛsānu-sari bhārī hai.
dēkhēm jātudhāna-jātudhānīm akulānī kahaiṁ, kānanu ujāryō, aba nagaru prajārihai..5..

Verse no. 5/5—The huge tail, burning with a terrible ferocity of a fire with leaping flames, resembled the outstretched tongue of Death, eager to gobble up Lanka, or as if a thousand comets have covered the sky, or Bravery, in a personified form, has drawn the sword to kill.

Tulsidas wonders whether it is a rainbow, a fount of lightening or a river of fire flowing down from Mt. Sumeru. Seeing all this, the demons and demonesses (female demons) say—‘He (Hanuman) has already laid the garden (the Ashoka grove) to waste, and now he shall burn the city.’

जहाँ-तहाँ बुबुक बिलोकि बुबुकारी देत, जरत निकेत, धावौ, धावौ लागी आगि रे।
कहाँ तातु-मातु, भ्रात-भगिनी, भामिनी-भाभी, ढोटा छोटे छोहरा अभागे भोंडे भागि रे॥
हाथी छेरौ, घोरा छेरौ, महिष-वृषभ छेरौ, छेरी छेरौ, सोवै सो जगावौ, जागि, जागि रे।
‘तुलसी’ बिलोकि अकुलानि जातुधानी कहै,
बार-बार कहौ, पिय! कपिसों न लागि रे॥६॥

6. jahāṁ-tahāṁ bubuka bilōki bubukārī dēta, jarata nikēta, dhāvau, dhāvau lāgi āgi rē.
kahāṁ tātu-mātu, bhrāta-bhaginī, bhāminī-bhābhī, ḍhōṭā chōṭē chōharā abhāgē bhōṇḍē bhāgi rē..
hāthī chōrau, ghōrā chōrau, mahīśa-bṛśabha chōrau, chērī chōrau, sōvai sō jagāvau, jāgi, jāgi rē.
‘tulasī’ bilōki akulāni jātudhānīm kahaim, bāra-bāra kahyauṁ, piya! kapisōṁ na lāgi rē..6..

Verse no. 5/6—There was a huge tumult in the city as demons and demonesses, seeing the huge blaze and scorching heat (generated by the flames), ran out in panic, yelling—‘Oh run, run for your lives! Houses are burning; everything is on fire (1). Oh you wretched! Where are the parents, brothers and sisters, wives and in-laws, children—where are they? (2) Oh fool! Run, run—hurry, make haste as there is no time left; everything is on fire! Set free the elephants, horses, buffaloes, oxen, goats etc. Those who are asleep, wake them up. Oh wake up, wake up—this is not the time to sleep!’ (3)

Tulsidas says that the wives sternly admonished their demon husbands, saying, ‘We repeatedly told you not to play funny with this monkey, but you all didn't pay heed; now what do we do? (4)’.

देखि ज्वालाजालु, हाहाकारु दसकंध सुनि, कहौ, धरो, धरो, धाए बीर बलवान हैं।
लिउँ सूल-सेल, पास-परिघ, प्रचंड दंड, भाजन सनीर, धीर धरें धनु-बान हैं॥
‘तुलसी’ समिध सौंज, लंक जग्यकुंडु लखि,
जातुधान पुंगीफल जव तिल धान हैं।
सुवा सो लँगूल, बलमूल प्रतिकूल हबि, स्वाहा महा हाँकि हाँकि हुनै हनुमान हैं॥७॥

7. dēkhi jvālājālu, hāhākāru dasakandha suni, kahyau, dharō, dharō, dhā'ē bīra balavāna hairi.
li'ēṁ sūla-sēla, pāsa-parigha, pracaṇḍa daṇḍa, bhājana sanīra, dhīra dharēm dhanu-bāna haim..

 'tulasī' samidha sauñja, laṅka jagyakuṇḍu lakhi, jātudhāna puṁgīphala java tila dhāna haim..
 sruvā sō laṁgūla, balamūla pratikūla habi, svāhā mahā hāmki hāmki hunaim hanumāna haim..7..

Verse no. 5/7—Alarmed at the scorching and leaping flames, and the distressed tumult of the citizens, Ravana shouted, 'Oh! Catch him, catch him!' Hearing his orders, many strong warriors rushed forward, armed with tridents, spears, lances, strong batons (to beat), snares (to trap the monkey Hanuman) and bows and arrows (to shoot and kill him if necessary).

Tulsidas compares the scene to a fire sacrifice (Yagya), saying that Lanka resembled the sacrificial pit, the property was like wood (or fuel), and the demons were nuts, barley, mustard and rice (materials used to offer sacrifice in the fire). Hanuman's tail is a ladle, strong enemy is the 'Havi' (butter, rice, pudding, sweets and sacrificial items offered to the fire as described above), and the high-pitched war-cry of challenge made by Hanuman appears to be the chanting of the Vedic Mantras (scriptural hymns) during the rituals of the fire sacrifice.

गाज्यो कपि गाज ज्यो, बिराज्यो ज्वालजालजुत, भाजे बीर धीर, अकुलाइ उद्यो रावनो ।
 धावौ, धावौ, धरौ, सुनि धाए जातुधान धारि, बारिधारा उलदै जलदु जौन सावनो ॥
 लपट-झपट झहराने, हहराने बात, भहराने भट, पर्यो प्रबल परावनो ।
 ढकनि ढकेलि, पेलि सचिव चले लै ठेलि, नाथ! न चलैगो बलु, अनलु भयावनो ॥८॥

8. gājyō kapi gāja jyōm, birājyō jvālajālajuta, bhājē bira dhīra, akulā'i uṭhyō rāvanō.
 dhāvau, dhāvau, dharau, suni dhā'ē jātudhāna dhāri, bāridhārā uladai jaladu jauna sāvanōm..
 lapaṭa-jhapaṭa jhaharānē, haharānē bāta, bhaharānē bhaṭa, paryō prabala parāvanō.
 ḍhakani ḍhakēli, pēli saciva calē lai ṭhēli, nātha! na calaigō balu, analu bhayāvanō..8..

Verse no. 5/8—Hanuman looked like a furnace and roared like a thunderbolt; the most courageous and brave among the demons were so scared that they took to their heels, and Ravana, being extremely distressed and very agitated, shouted at the top of his voice—'Catch him, catch him!' (1).

At his cajoling and coaxing, the army of demons rushed forward as if the dark rain bearing clouds wished to douse the fire (2), but those warriors were scorched and scalded by the leaping flames and the burning breeze sweeping towards them (3).

They ran helter-skelter. Ravana was pushed, shoved and forcefully removed from the site by his ministers, who warned him, 'Oh Lord! The fire is absolutely ferocious and out of control. We can't stand against it.' (4).

बड़ो बिकराल बेषु देखि, सुनि सिंघनादु, उठ्यौ मेघनादु, सबिषाद कहै रावनो ।
 बेग जित्यो मारुतु, प्रताप मारतंड कोटि, कालऊ करालताँ, बड़ाई जित्यो बावनो ।।
 'तुलसी' सयाने जातुधान पछिताने कहैं,
 जाको ऐसो दूतु, सो तो साहेबु अबै आवनो ।
 काहेको कुसल रोषे राम बामदेवहू की, बिषम बलीसों बादि बैरको बढ़ावनो ।।9।।

9. baṛō bikarāla bēśu dēkhi, suni siṅghanādu, uṭhyau mēghanādu, sabiśāda kahai rāvanō.
 bēga jityō mārutu, pratāpa mārataṇḍa kōṭi, kāla'ū karālatām̐, baṛā'īm jityō bāvanō..
 'tulasi' sayānē jātudhāna pachitānē kahaim̐, jākō aisō dūtu, sō tō sāhēbu abai āvanō.
 kāhēkō kusala rōśēm̐ rāma bāmadēvahū kī, biśama balisōm̐ bādi bairakō baṛhāvanō..9..

Verse no. 5/9—Seeing the ferocious and terribly angry countenance of Hanuman, and hearing his chilling war-cry that resounded in every direction, Meghnad stood up. A worried Ravana said, 'This fellow (Hanuman) has out-smarted wind in speed, millions of suns in splendour, Kaal (death) in ferocity, and Lord Vaaman* in his colossus size.' [*Lord Vaaman had measured the entire creation in his three steps.]

Tulsidas says that those demons that had some wisdom left in them, lamented and said, 'The master, whose servant is so terrible and awesome, is yet to come (say—what will happen then?). One wonders how even Lord Shiva can ever expect to be happy if Lord Ram becomes angry at him? It is futile and unwise to enhance enmity with such a warrior as Hanuman.

[In other words, it would have been wiser if our king Ravana had not ordered Hanuman's tail to be burnt, for then the city would have been spared from being reduced to ashes. It is not wise to make Lord Ram's messenger an enemy.]'

पानी!पानी!पानी! सब रानी अकुलानी कहैं, जाति हैं परानी, गति जानी गजचालि है ।
 बसन बिसारैं, मनिभूषन सँभारत न, आनन सुखाने, कहैं, क्योंहू कोऊ पालिहै ।।
 'तुलसी' मँदोवै मीजि हाथ, धुनि माथ कहै, काहूँ कान कियो न, मैं कह्यौ केतो कालि है ।
 बापुर्ते बिभीषन पुकारि बार-बार कह्यौ, बानरु बड़ी बलाइ घने घर घालिहै ।।10।।

10. pānī!pānī!pānī! saba rānī akulānī kahaim̐, jāti haiṁ parānī, gati jānī gajacāli hai.
 basana bisāraim̐, manibhūśana saṁbhārata na, ānana sukhānē, kahaim̐, kyōnhū kō'ū pālihai..
 'tulasi' maṁdōvai miji hātha, dhuni mātha kahai, kāhūṃ kāna kiyō na, mairṃ kahyau kētō kāli hai.

bāpurēm bibhīśana pukāri bāra-bāra kahyau, bānaru baṛi balā'i ghanē ghara ghālihai..10..

Verse no. 5/10—All the queens of Ravana ran hither-thither agitatedly, shouting, 'Water, water!' They can be recognised by their elephant-like majestic gait. They had forgotten to put on proper clothes (in a hurry), and neither could they take care of gem-studded ornaments (as they ran in panic, seeking water). Their mouths are parched and they lament woefully, 'Can any one protect us in some way?'

Tulsidas says that Mandodari (the chief queen) grieves and laments by wringing her hands and beating her head—'Oh goodness! I tried to reason with my husband Ravana so much yesterday, but no one lent me his ears. Poor Vibhishan had also warned repeatedly that this monkey is a great problem, and he shall ruin many households, but no one paid attention to either of us.'

काननु उजार्यो तो उजार्यो, न बिगार्यो कछु, बानरु बेचारो बाँधि आन्यो हठि हारसों ।
निपट निडर देखि काहू न लख्यो बिसेषि, दीन्हो ना छड़ाइ कहि कुलके कुठारसों ॥
छोटे औ बड़े मेरे पूतऊ अनेरे सब, साँपनि सों खेलैं, मेलैं गरे छुराधार सों ।
'तुलसी' मँदोवै रोड़-रोड़ कै बिगोवै आपु, बार-बार कहौ मैं पुकारि दाढ़ीजारसों ॥११॥

11. kānanu ujāryō tō ujāryō, na bigāryō kachu, bānaru bēcārō bāṃdhi ān'yō haṭhi hārasōṃ.
nipaṭa niḍara dēkhi kāhū na lakhyō bisēśi, dīnhō nā charā'i kahi kulakē kuṭhārasōṃ..
chōṭē au baṛērē mērē pūta'ū anērē saba, sāṃpani sōṃ khēlaim, mēlaim garē churādhāra sōṃ.
'tulasi' maṃdōvai rō'i-rō'i kai bigōvai āpu, bāra-bāra kahyau mairṃ pukāri dāṛhijārasōṃ..11..

Verse no. 5/11—Mandodari continues lamenting, 'There was not much harm done by laying to waste the Ashok garden, but these fellows had unnecessarily tied this humble monkey and brought him here (in the city from the outskirts). Seeing him absolutely fearless, could no one get a hint (that there surely is some hidden strong power behind this monkey on whose strength he could do such things that are beyond imagination of even the strongest of creatures in the creator's creation of even dreaming of, let alone actually doing; say, how stupid these demons are indeed)? And no one had advised Meghnad, who is ruinous for his clan, to release this monkey before he could cause further harm to the city. Oh I lament that all my sons, young or old, are haughty, arrogant, reckless, senseless and evil—out of all the playthings meant for playing they select to play with snakes, and they prefer to put their throat on the sharpened edge of a knife during play (not bothering for the danger they are subjecting themselves to).'

[Mandodari laments at the bellicose, reckless, haughty and defiant nature of her sons that they do not ponder about the consequences of their acts before doing anything. And driven by the same nature Meghnad had played into the hands of

Hanuman by thinking that he had subdued the latter when he managed to ensnare him, little realising that he is playing with fire and falling into a trap. He should have realised that this monkey was not an ordinary animal but surely someone backed by a mighty force, for was it not clear to my son that it wasn't easy to enter Lanka with all the safety measures that his formidable father, the demon king Ravana, has got in place? Why is Meghnad so dumb-witted so as to have overlooked this fact, and the fact that a diminutive monkey could beat the life out of the fiercest of demons who tried to capture him as he plundered the royal garden with impunity?]

Tulsidas says that Mandodari weakens herself by weeping inconsolably, and says that she had warned repeatedly this stupid and cursed 'Dadhijaar' (dārḥijāra)* son Meghnad to be wary of acting in a nonsensical manner, but he didn't listen to her or cared for her warning.

[*The word 'dārḥijāra' is a derisive term often used as an abusive curse by women against men. It literally means "one who has burnt his beard".]

रानी अकुलानी सब डाढ़त परानी जाहिं, सकैं न बिलोकि बेषु केसरीकुमारको ।
 मीजि-मीजि हाथ, धुनै माथ दसमाथ-तिय,
 'तुलसी' तिलौ न भयो बाहेर अगारको ।।
 सबु असबाबु डाढ़ो, मैं न काढ़ो, तैं न काढ़ो, जियकी परी, सँभारै सहन-भँडार को ।
 खीझति मँदोवै सबिषाद देखि मेघनादु, बयो लुनियत सब याही दाढ़ीजारको ।।12 ।।

12. rānī akulānī saba dārḥata parānī jāhim, sakaim na bilōki bēśu kēsarikumārakō.
 mīji-mīji hātha, dhunaim mātha dasamātha-tiya,
 'tulasi' tilau na bhayō bāhēra agārakō..
 sabu asabābu dārḥō, maim na kārḥō, taim na kārḥō, jiyakī parī, saṁbhārai sahana-bhaṁḍāra kō.
 khījhati maṁdōvai sabisāda dēkhi mēghanādu, bayō luniyata saba yāhī dārḥijārakō..12..

Verse no. 5/12—Being scorched by the ferocity of the raging fire, the demon-queens ran out of their inner chambers, extremely agitated and very perturbed. They cannot watch the ferocious shape of 'Kēsarikumāra' (Hanuman, the son of Kesari).

Ravana's wives wring their hands, beat their heads and lament that not a single item could be salvaged from their homes. They cried woefully—'Everything has got burnt. Neither could I remove anything, nor could you. Everyone was concerned about his own safety, so who was bothered about the household.'

Sighting Meghnad, Mandodari became wrathfully angry at him, poignantly admonishing him for the woes that had befallen upon the entire city and the demon race, cursing him in these words: 'Everyone is reaping the harvest of what this accursed and stupidest of all beings had sown. [Had he not brought the monkey inside the city and had let him go away, such a sordid calamity would not have befallen on the city at all. Why, say why did he do what he did, just to boast about his exploit that he had caught a monkey! Well now, where has Meghnad's strength gone now, for a toss or where else, that he ain't able to tame the same monkey he had boasted to have subdued not a long while ago? Having evil sons is indeed a cursed bane for the mother as they cause more grief to her than even the most unfavourable of stars and malignant of fates.]"

रावन की रानी बिलखानी कहै जातुधानी, हाहा! कोऊ कहै बीसबाहु दसमाथसों।
काहे मेघनाद! काहे, काहे रे महोदर ! तूँ धीरजु न देत, लाइ लेत क्यों न हाथसों।।
काहे अतिकाय! काहे, काहे रे अकंपन!
अभागे तीय त्यागे भोंडे भागे जात साथ सों।
'तुलसी' बढ़ाई बादि सालतें बिसाल बाहैं, याही बल बालिसो बिरोधु रघुनाथसों।।13।।

13. rāvana kī rānīm bilakhānī kahai jātudhānīm, hāhā! kō'ū kahai bīsabāhu dasamāthasōm.
kāhē mēghanāda! kāhē, kāhē rē mahōdara! tūm̃ dhīraju na dēta, lā'i lēta kyōm na hāthasōm..
kāhē atikāya! kāhē, kāhē rē akampana!
abhāgē tīya tyāgē bhōṇrē bhāgē jāta sātha sōm.
'tulasī' barhā'īm bādi sālātēm bisāla bāhairm, yāhīm bala bālisō birōdhu raghunāthasōm..13..

Verse no. 5/13—Demonesses, who were queens of Ravana, cried uncontrollably and inconsolably, lamenting woefully as they wailed, 'Oh Gosh! Someone should inform our pitiable condition to the ten-headed and twenty-armed Ravana (their husband, the demon king).

Why, oh you Meghnad! And why, oh you Mahodar! Why don't you now step forward to console us and why don't you give us protection of your arms (something of which you had boasted of ever since you had stepped out of your cradle)? Oh you Atikai, and you Akampan! Oh you luckless idiots. Why do you abandon your women folk and run away en-masse, leaving us in the lurch?

You fellows have uselessly lengthened your arms as long as teak trees. [That is, you pretend to have long and sturdy arms that have a long reach and can encircle your enemies and hold them in a vice-like grip, but actually they are no better than feeble creepers.]

Oh you fools and loggerheads! Is this the cowardly strength relying on which you have created enmity with Sri Raghunath (the Lord of Raghu's kingdom; Lord Sri Ram)? [Now come on; show your valour when the time has come. Instead, you prefer to flee.]

हाट-बाट, कोट-ओट, अटनि, अगार, पौरि, खोरि-खोरि दौरि-दौरि दीन्ही अति आगि है।
आरत पुकारत, सँभारत न कोऊ काहु, ब्याकुल जहाँ सो तहाँ लोक चले भागि हैं।।
बालधी फिरावै, बार-बार झहरावै, झरै
बुँदिया-सी लंक पघिलाइ पाग पागिहै।
'तुलसी' बिलोकि अकुलानी जातुधानी कहैं,
चित्रहू के कपि सों निसाचरु न लागिहै।।14।।

14. hāṭa-bāṭa, kōṭa-ōṭa, aṭani, agāra, pauri, khōri-khōri dauri-dauri dīnhī ati āgi haiai.
 ārata pukārata, saṁbhārata na kō'ū kāhū, byākula jahāṁ sō tahāṁ lōka calē bhāgi haiṁ..
 bālādī phirāvai, bāra-bāra jhaharāvai, jharaiṁ buṁdiyā-sī laṅka paghilā'i pāga pāgihai.
 'tulasī' bilōki akulānī jātudhānīṁ kahaiṁ, citrahū kē kapi sōṁ nisācaru na lāgihai..14..

Verse no. 5/14—In this way, Hanuman set to fire the market places, forts, palaces, ramparts and gates, houses, lanes and by-lanes, every nook and corner of the city (1).

Everyone is crying in agony, and no one bothers about another; all are running helter-skelter (2).

Hanuman shook his tail often, and ambers and sparks of fire flew from it as if he wished to prepare a sweet dish called Bundiya made of small round globules of gram-flour soaked in treacle (molasses) symbolized by the melted-down gold of Lanka (3).

Seeing all this, the demonesses (female demons) said that after witnessing such a horrific scene, the demons would not dare to fight even a dummy monkey in future (4).'

लगी, लागी आगि, भागि-भागि चले जहाँ-तहाँ, धीयको न माय, बाप पूत न सँभारहीं।
 छूटे बार, बसन उघारे, धूम-धुंध अंध, कहैं बारे-बूढ़े 'बारि, बारि' बार बारहीं॥
 हय हिहिनात, भागे जात घहरात गज, भारी भीर ठेलि-पेलि रौंदि-खौंदि डारहीं।
 नाम लै चिलात, बिललात, अकुलात अति,
 'तात तात! तौंसिअत, झौंसिअत, झारहीं'॥15॥

15. lagī, lāgī āgi, bhāgi-bhāgi calē jahāṁ-tahāṁ, dhīyakō na māya, bāpa pūta na saṁbhārahīṁ.
 chūṭē bāra, basana ughārē, dhūma-dhundha andha, kahaiṁ bārē-būṛhē 'bāri, bāri' bāra bārahīṁ..
 haya hihināta, bhāgē jāta ghaharāta gaja, bhārī bhīra ṭhēli-pēli raundi-khaundi ḍārahīṁ.
 nāma lai cilāta, bilalāta, akulāta ati,
 'tāta tāta! taunsi'ata, jhaunsi'ata, jhārahīṁ'..15..

Verse no. 5/15—Everyone is panicky and run hither-thither at random, shouting 'It has caught fire. It's burning!'

Neither does a mother bother about her daughter, nor a father about his son. Their hairs and clothes have become dishevelled, everyone has become (virtually) naked, and having been blinded by the dense smoke (emerging from the fire), all are shouting for water. The horses run away neighing, the elephants trumpet wildly as they trample underfoot the huge crowd which has collected. Everyone is calling others by their names, and all of them are agitated and writhing in agony due to the scorching heat. A raucous cry fills the city with everyone shouting, 'Oh my God! The flames are scorching us; it's intolerably hot! [Where to do we escape from this raging hell of a fire that surrounds us from all quarters?]

लपट कराल ज्वालजालमाल दहूँ दिसि, धूम अकुलाने, पहिचानै कौन काहि रे। पानीको ललात बिललात, जरे गात जात
परे पाइमाल जात 'भात! तूँ निबाहि रे॥
प्रिया तूँ पराहि, नाथ!नाथ! तूँ पराहि, बाप!
बाप तूँ पराहि, पूत!पूत! तूँ पराहि रे'।
'तुलसी' बिलोकि लोग ब्याकुल बेहाल कहैं, लेहि दससीस अब बीस चख चाहि रे॥16॥

16. lapaṭa karāla jvālajālamāla dahūṁ disi, dhūma akulānē, pahicānai kauna kāhi rē.
pānīkō lalāta bilalāta, jarē gāta jāta parē pā'imāla jāta 'bhrāta! tūṁ nibāhi rē.. priyā tūṁ parāhi, nātha!nātha! tūṁ parāhi, bāpa!
bāpa tūṁ parāhi, pūta!pūta! tūṁ parāhi rē'.
'tulasi' bilōki lōga byākula bēhāla kahaim, lēhi dasasīsa aba bīsa cakha cāhi rē..16..

Verse no. 5/16—The terrible, leaping flames of the 'garland' (the girdle) of fire has spread in all the 10 directions (i.e. everywhere)¹. All are extremely distressed due to the choking smoke. Who could recognise anyone in that tumult? All are dying for water; their bodies are getting scorched, they are highly distressed and cry out, 'Oh brother! Save me! Dear! You run away from here to save yourself! Oh Lord, run away! Father, oh father! Run! Oh son, listen son! Escape from here!'

Tulsidas says that everyone is extremely distressed, woeful to the extreme, agitated and tormented, and all of them curse Ravana by the bountiful—'Oh you wretched fellow known as Ravana! Now see what you have done, with all of your 20 eyes².'

[Note—¹The 10 directions are the following—north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, nadir and zenith.

²Ravana had ten heads, each with two eyes. Hence he had 10 heads x 2 eyes in each head = 20 eyes. To say 'look with all your 20 eyes' is a sort of scorn-filled remark implying that Ravana should open all his eyes wide to watch the destruction he has brought forth upon the city, and not turn his face away to behave like an ostrich when it is in distress.]

बीथिका-बजार प्रति, अटनि अगार प्रति, पवरि-पगार प्रति बानरु बिलोकिए।
अध-ऊर्ध बानर, बिदिसि-दिसि बानरु है, मानो रह्यौ है भरि बानरु तिलोकिएँ॥
मूँदै आँखि हियमें, उघारें आँखि आगें ठढो, धाइ जाइ जहाँ-तहाँ, और कोऊ कोकिए।
लेहू, अब लेहु तब कोऊ न सिखाबो मानो, सोई सतराइ जाइ जाहि-जाहि रोकिए॥17॥

17. bīthikā-bajāra prati, aṭani agāra prati, pavari-pagāra prati bānaru bilōki'ē.
 adha-ūrdha bānara, bidisi-disi bānaru hai, mānō rahyau hai bhari bānaru tilōki'ēṃ..
 mūṃdaiṃ āṃkhi hiyamēṃ, ughārēṃ āṃkhi āgēṃ ṭhārḥō, dhā'i jā'i jahāṃ-tahāṃ, aura kō'ū kōki'ē.
 lēhū, aba lēhu taba kō'ū na sikhābō mānō, sō'i satarā'i jā'i jāhi-jāhi rōki'ē..17..

Verse no. 5/17—Hanuman is moving so swiftly that wherever one sees—lanes and by-lanes, markets, house-tops, every house, doorway and its walls etc.—only the monkey is seen, above and below, in all the directions. Wherever one turns, one can see that monkey as if he has filled (spread over) all the 3 worlds (like an evil omen that had descended upon the city of Lanka).

His image is visible while one closes one's eyes, and on opening them he appears to be standing right in front, menacingly. Whenever, wherever they (the citizens of Lanka) call anyone, it appears that Hanuman answers the call and stands in front to frighten the wits out of the caller. When they try to stop anyone, he gets angry, saying, 'Look; look now! No one had paid attention to our advice earlier¹.'

[Note—¹Surely there must have been some wise demons in the city who had been in favour of allowing the monkey to get away from there after they had witnessed how he had laid to waste the royal garden of Ravana and had beaten black and blue the guards who had tried to intervene. It would have made sense not to aggravate the situation any more right then, but instead be alarmed and take warning that this fellow, the monkey, is sure to come back at the behest of his master, whosoever he may be, in full strength alongside his companions once he had seen how to breach the city's defenses. It would have made sense to pull up the sock and learn a lesson from this intrusion to be prepared with full diligence and might for the almost certain ill-tidings that were to come upon the city like the dark clouds of doomsday that loomed over the horizon. Due diligence and proper preparations and girdling one's self with resolve to face the unforeseen eventuality was the demand of the day and advice of the wisdom, and not the stupidity and foolishness of trying to further instigate the monkey who seems to possess some mysterious strength that was far superior to the combined strength of all the demon army.

So the wise demons who were in favour of releasing Hanuman and letting him go away now lamented that their views were neglected and brushed aside by the nature of belligerence, haughtiness and arrogance that dominated the majority of the demon clan. And now the result is for everyone to behold.]

एक करै धौज, एक कहै, काढ़ौ सौज, एक
 औजि, पानी पीकै कहै, बनत न आवनो ।
 एक परे गाढ़े एक डाढ़त ही काढ़े, एक देखत हैं ठाढ़े, कहै, पावकु भयावनो ।।
 'तुलसी' कहत एक 'नीकें हाथ लाए कपि, अजहूँ न छाड़ै बालु गालको बजावनो' ।
 'धाओ रे, बुझाओ रे,' कि 'बावरे हौ रावरे, या
 औरै आगि लागी न बुझावै सिंधु सावनो' ।।18।।

18. ēka karaim̐ dhauñja, ēka kahaim̐, kār̥hau sauñja, ēka auñji, pāñi pīkai kahaim̐, banata na āvanō.
 ēka parē gār̥hē ēka ḍār̥hata hīm̐ kār̥hē, ēka dēkhata haim̐ ṭhār̥hē, kahaim̐, pāvaku bhayāvanō..
 'tulasī' kahata ēka 'nīkēm̐ hātha lā'ē kapi, ajahūṃ na chār̥ai bālu gālakō bajāvanō'.
 'dhā'ō rē, bujhā'ō rē,' ki 'bāvarē hau rāvarē, yā aunrai āgi lāgi na bujhāvai sindhu sāvanō'..18..

Verse no. 5/18—Some are running helter-skelter in panic; some say 'take out the arms (so that we can fight back with this bellicose monkey)'; some become distressed due to intensity of the heat and reply 'it is not possible to come any longer'; some are not able to decide what to do; some are being dragged out of the fire half-burnt; some are standing stunned and cry out, 'the fire is very intolerable and ferocious.'

Tulsidas observes that some of the demons say—'This fellow Hanuman has taught him (i.e. the demon king Ravana) a nice lesson, but the pity is that this idiot still does not understand how things are, and he still does want to refrain himself from being arrogant and haughty'.

Some of the demons exhort others, saying—'Oh run, and put out the fire', and the listener retorts, 'have you become mad? This is a different type of fire which cannot be doused by even the ocean itself, or the rain-clouds of Sawan (the rainy season) if they pour out their entire content upon the city.'

कोपि दसकंध तब प्रलय पयोद बोले, रावन-रजाइ धाए आइ जूथ जोरि कै ।
 कह्यो लंकपति लंक बरत, बुताओ बेगि, बानरु बहाइ मारौ महाबारि बोरि कै ॥
 'भलें नाथ!' नाइ माथ चलें पाथप्रदनाथ, बरछैं मुसलधार बार-बार घोरि कै ।
 जीवनतैं जागी आगी, चपरि चौगुनी लागी, 'तुलसी' भभरि मेघ भागे मुखु मोरि कै ॥19॥

19. kōpi dasakandha taba pralaya payōda bōlē, rāvana-rajā'i dhā'ē ā'i jūtha jōri kai.
 kahyō laṅkapati laṅka barata, butā'ō bēgi, bānaru bahā'i mārau mahābāri bōri kai..
 'bhalēm̐ nātha!' nā'i mātha calēm̐ pāthapradanātha, baraśaim̐ musaladhāra bāra-bāra ghōri kai.
 jīvanatēm̐ jāgī āgī, capari caugunī lāgī,
 'tulasī' bhabhari mēgha bhāgē mukhu mōri kai..19..

Verse no. 5/19—Then Ravana angrily summoned the dooms-day clouds, and they came in hurriedly along with all their companions. The lord of Lanka told them 'Oh clouds! Douse the fire burning Lanka with your water (torrential rains), and kill the monkey by drowning him in deep waters.' Saying, 'all right, Lord!', the clouds bowed their heads and started pouring torrential rain and rumbled repeatedly; but (to every one's astonishment) the fire increased four-fold by the water and became more ferocious and terrible.

Tulsidas says that the clouds became so afraid (at their failure to douse the fire) that they turned on their heels and ran away.

[Note—It is pertinent to make an observation at this juncture. According to metaphysical interpretation of things, Lord Ram's 'Beej Mantra' or 'seed Mantra' (which simply means the basic mystical formula consisting of some esoteric words that relate specifically to a particular Divinity or Divine Being, and which is used in spiritual practices such as doing meditation and repetition of the Divinity's holy name as a tool to invoke the Divinity's blessings and harness the cosmic energy represented by that particular Divinity) is "Raam/Raan(g)" (i.e. it is the Sanskrit alphabet 'Ra' with a dot known as the anuswar on top). This Beej Mantra also happens to be the one for the 'fire element'. And this means that Lord Ram represents the energy of the cosmic 'fire' that is the most powerful force of creation. This fact is clear when we closely observe how Ram was born: he was born out of a pudding emerging from the pit of the fire sacrifice his father Dasrath had done to bet sons. So, Lord Ram harboured the cosmic fire in him, and no worldly water such as the rain will be able to douse it.

Now, when this cosmic spark of the fire assumed a form in the guise of Lord Ram and decided to descend upon the earth to scorch the demons to death (just like lightening from the cloud that falls upon the earth to reduce to charcoal anything upon which it lands), it needed some base to support it. And Sita was that base. Remember: Sita was born out of the earth hidden in a pitcher when her father Janak was ploughing the ground to prepare it for some religious sacrifice. So, Sita was the 'base' which was planted by Lord Ram as a ground-work to prepare for his own landing on the soil of Lanka.

Who was Hanuman and what does he symbolise? He is said to be the son of the Wind God and an incarnation of Rudra, the 11th and the most ferocious form of Shiva, the god overseeing the conclusion of creation as the third of the Trinity Gods. Fire needs 'air' to be ignited and kept alive, and the 'wind' fans its spread. Remember: Lord Ram had given a ring to Hanuman at the time of his departure for Lanka. This ring was to serve two purposes—one was as a identification tool so that Sita could know who he was, and the other was to 'send the fuse to ignite the fire by remote control'!

Say, who or what force on this small earth can put out the fire that has been ignited by the powerful cosmic spark that burns the greatest of suns like a hellish cauldron in the bowls of the universe. Say, can the petty rain coming down from the cloud with its limited stock of water douse it when it can't even water the stretch of the great sand deserts that spread on the surface of this earth at so many places?

This is the reason why the poor clouds could not douse the fire at Lanka. See also verse no. 22 below where Malyawan says essentially the same thing to Ravana.]

इहाँ ज्वाल जरे जात, उहाँ ग्लानि गरे गात, सूखे सकुचात सब कहत पुकार हैं।
 'जुग षट भानु देखे प्रलयकृसानु देखे, सेष-मुख-अनल बिलोके बार-बार हैं ॥
 'तुलसी' सुन्यो न कान सलिलु सर्पी-समान,
 अति अचिरिजु कियो कंसरीकुमार हैं'।
 बारिद-बचन सुनि धुने सीस सचिवन्ह, कहैं दससीस! 'ईस-बामता-बिकार हैं' ॥20॥

20. ihāṃ jvāla jarē jāta, uhāṃ glāni garē gāta, sūkhē sakucāta saba kahata pukāra haiṃ.
 'juga śaṭa bhānu dēkhē pralayakṛsānu dēkhē, sēśa-mukha-anala bilōkē bāra-bāra haiṃ..
 'tulasī' sun'yō na kāna salilu sarpī-samāna, ati aciriju kiyō kēsarikumāra haiṃ'.
 bārīda-bacana suni dhunē sīsa sacivanha, kahaiṃ dasasīsa! 'īsa-bāmatā-bikāra haiṃ'..20..

Verse no. 5/20—The clouds themselves were getting scorched by the leaping flames of the fire that reached as high as the sky, and they felt deeply frustrated and utterly astonished. All the clouds became dry (devoid of rain) and hesitantly called out, 'We had seen all the 12 suns¹ as well as the fire of dooms-day, and had also witnessed the flames leaping out of the mouth of the legendary serpent called Seshnath. But we have never heard water turn into Ghee (oil, clarified butter) that would stoke the raging fire instead of putting it down! This great miracle has been performed by the son of Kesari (Hanuman).'

Ravana's ministers banged their heads on hearing the clouds, and exclaimed, 'All this is due to being opposed to God (i.e. this is the fruit of our own sins).'

[Note—¹According to mythology, there are believed to be 12 cosmic suns called 'Adityas'. All of them are said to rise at the time of dooms-day to scorch the world with their combined heat.

According to Vishnu Puran, the twelve Adityas are the following— Dhaataa, Aryamaa, Mitra, Varun, Anshu, Bhug, Indra, Vivaswaan, Pushaa, Parjanya, Twashtaa and Vishnu.]

‘पावकु, पवनु, पानी, भानु, हिमवानु, जमु, कालु, लोकपाल मेरे डर डावाँडोल हैं।
 साहेबु महेसु सदा संकित रमेसु मोहिं
 महातप साहस बिरंचि लिन्हें मोल हैं।।
 ‘तुलसी’ तिलोक आजु दूजो न बिराजै राजु, बाजे-बाजे राजनिके बेटा-बेटी ओल हैं।
 को है ईस नामको, जो बाम होत मोहूसे को, मालवान! रावरेके बावरे-से बोल हैं’।।21।।

21. 'pāvaku, pavanu, pānī, bhānu, himavānu, jamu, kālu, lōkapāla mērē ḍara ḍāvāṃḍōla haiṃ.
 sāhēbu mahēsu sadā saṅkita ramēsu mōhim mahātapa sāhasa birañci linhēm mōla haiṃ..
 'tulasī' tilōka āju dūjō na birājai rāju, bājē-bājē rājanikē bēṭā-bēṭi ōla haiṃ.
 kō hai īsa nāmakō, jō bāma hōta mōhūsē kō, mālavāna! rāvarēkē bāvarē-sē bōla haiṃ'..21..

Verse no. 5/21—Hearing his ministers' lamentation (verse no. 20), Ravana expressed surprise and said boastfully, 'Fire, Wind, Water, Sun, the Himalayas, Yam (god who controls hell), Kaal (death personified), Indra and other Gods—all of them shiver and tremble out of my fear. My Lord is Sri Shiva (the mightiest of Gods); Vishnu, the husband of Laxmi is always afraid of me. I have even brought Lord Brahma (the Creator) under my control due to hard penances and sacrifices; he also cannot go against me. There is no Emperor above me (and besides me) in all the 3 worlds so much so that I have held captive the sons and daughters of renowned kings. Oh Malyawan (who was one of his senior ministers)! You speak like a mad-man. Who is this fellow called 'Ishwar' (God) who can afford to go against me?'

[Note—Malyawan was an elderly maternal grandfather of Ravana. He had tried to make Ravana see reason and abandon his recklessness before it was too late. His advice to Ravana was sternly rebuked, and so was the advice of all others who had tried to avoid the calamitous war. Refer to Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 40; and (b) Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 48—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 49 for Malyawan's advice.]

भूमि भूमिपाल, ब्यालपालक पताल, नाक-पाल, लोकपाल जेते, सुभट-समाजु है। कहै मालवान, जातुधानपति! रावरे को मनहूँ अकाजु आनै, ऐसो कौन आजु है॥
रामकोहु पावकु, समीरु सीय-स्वासु, कीसु, ईस-बामता बिलोकु, बानरको ब्याजु है।
जारत पचारि फेरि-फेरि सो निसंक लंक, जहाँ बाँको बीरु तोसो सूर-सिरताजु है॥22॥

22. bhūmi bhūmipāla, byālapālaka patāla, nākapāla, lōkapāla jētē, subhaṭa-samāju hai.
kahai mālavāna, jātudhānapati! rāvarē kō manahūṁ akāju ānai, aisō kauna āju hai..
rāmakōhu pāvaku, samīru sīya-svāsu, kīsu, īsa-bāmatā bilōku, bānarakō byāju hai.
jārata pacāri phēri-phēri sō nisaṅka laṅka, jahāṁ bāṁkō bīru tōsō sūra-siratāju hai..22..

Verse no. 5/22—Then Malyawan replied, 'Of all the kings of this earth, the serpents of the subterranean world or Gods in the heaven—oh Lord of demons, who can ever think of doing harm to you? But this fire is totally different—it is Ram's anger and wrath personified, the hot wind which is blowing (to fan the flames) is the breath of Janki (Sita), and this monkey is the personification of opposition to the Lord God, his physical body being only an excuse for the retribution. This is the reason why inspite of the presence of such valiant warriors as yourself, this fellow is roaming fearlessly without any hesitation or obstruction, and burning down Lanka unhindered.'

पान-पकवान बिधि नाना के, सँधानो, सीधो, बिबिध बिधान धान बरत बखारहीं।
कनककिरीट कोटि पलँग, पेटारे, पीठ
काढ़त कहार सब जरे भरे भारहीं॥
प्रबल अनल बाढ़ें जहाँ काढ़े तहाँ डाढ़े, झपट-लपट भरे भवन-भँडारहीं।

‘तुलसी’ अगारु न पगारु न बजारु बच्यो, हाथी हथसार जरे घोरे घोरसारही ।।23 ।।

23. pāna-pakavāna bidhi nānā kē, saṁdhānō, sīdhō, bibidha bidhāna dhāna barata bakhārahīm.
kanakakirīṭa kōṭi palam̐ga, pētārē, pīṭha kāṛhata kahāra saba jarē bharē bhārahīm.. prabala anala bārḥēm jahām̐ kāṛhē tahām̐ ḍārḥē, jhapaṭa-lapaṭa bharē bhavana-bham̐ḍārahīm.
‘tulasī’ agāru na pagāru na bajāru bacyō, hāthī hathasāra jarē ghōrē ghōrasārahīm..23..

Verse no. 5/23—Different types of drinks, eatables, pickles, rice, wheat and other grains and pulses, and various types of crops are burning in their storehouses. Labourers are being burnt alive in trying to remove crores (millions) of golden crowns, beds, boxes and thrones. Because of the ever increasing ferocity of the fire, all the substances and things were burnt outside even after being taken out of the houses and store-houses, and the licking flames have spread in all the houses and stores, sparing no nook or corner of the city.

Tulsidas says that neither any house could survive nor any market place or a wall was left standing. The elephants and horses got burnt (roasted) alive in their respective yards and stables.

हाट-बाट हाटकु पिघिलि चलो घी-सो घनो, कनक-कराही लंक तलफति तायसों ।
नाना पकवान जातुधान बलवान सब
पागि पागि ढेरी कीन्ही भलीभाँति भायसों ।।
पाहुने कृसानु पवमानसों परोसो, हनुमान
सनमानि कै जेवाए चित-चायसों ।
‘तुलसी’ निहारि अरिनारि दै-दै गारि कहैं
‘बावरें सुरारि बैरु कीन्हौ रामरायसों’ ।।24 ।।

24. hāṭa-bāṭa hāṭaku pighili calō ghī-sō ghanō, kanaka-karāhī laṅka talaphati tāyasōm.
nānā pakavāna jātudhāna balavāna saba pāgi pāgi ḍhērī kīnhī bhalībhām̐ti bhāyasōm.. pāhunē kṛsānu pavamānasōm̐ parōsō, hanumāna sanamāni kai jēnvā'e cita-cāyasōm.
‘tulasī’ nihāri arināri dai-dai gāri kahaim̐
‘bāvarēm̐ surāri bairu kīnhau rāmarāyasōm’..24..

Verse no. 5/24—Gold melted and flowed like melted butter (ghee) on the streets in the market places. The city of Lanka appeared to be a huge boiling cauldron of gold (1).

The dead demons appeared to be various sweet dishes being fried in it and arranged in heaps (2), and Hanuman was serving his guest (the Fire God), with the help of wind (the Wind God), the most delicious of sweets and snacks, as it were (3).

Seeing this, the demonesses are cursing, ‘Oh look! This mad Ravana has made Lord Ram an enemy (and wrought this havoc on us) (4).’

रावनु सो राजरोगु बाढ़त बिराट-उर, दिनु-दिनु बिकल, सकल सुख राँक सो ।
 नाना उपचार करि हारे सुर, सिद्ध, मुनि, होत न बिसोक, औत पावै न मनाक सो ।।
 रामकी रजाइतें रसाइनी समीरसूनु
 उतरि पयोधि पार सोधि सरवाक सो ।
 जातुधान-बुट पुटपाक लंक-जातरूप-रतन जतन जारि कियो है मृगांक-सो ।।25 ।।

25. rāvanu sō rājarōgu bār̥hata birāṭa-ura, dinu-dinu bikala, sakala sukha rām̐ka sō.
 nānā upacāra kari hārē sura, sid'dha, muni, hōta na bisōka, auta pāvai na manāka sō.. rāmakī rajā'itēm rasā'inī samīrasūnu utari payōdhi pāra sōdhi saravāka sō.
 jātudhāna-buṭa puṭapāka laṅka-jātarūpa-ratana jatana jāri kiyō hai mṛgāṅka-sō..25..

Verse no. 5/25—Ravana was like tuberculosis that was increasing by each passing day in the chest of Viraat-Purush (the cosmic form of the Supreme God), due to which He was gradually getting emaciated and was being deprived of all peace and happiness (1).

The Gods, saints and mystics had tried all sorts of medicines and had failed to cure or relieve Him the slightest (2).

Then, on the orders of Lord Ram, the Aurvedic Doctor (a doctor who uses herbs as medicines) called Hanuman, crossed the ocean and made a special chemical remedy (a concoction) made up of the prey (Lanka), the herbs (the demons) and ashes and chemicals (of burnt gold and jewels which adorned the city) in order to cure the disease of the Viraat-Purush (3-4).

[Note—The metaphors are obvious. The Supreme Lord was feeling uneasy because of the tyranny that the cruel demon Ravana had unleashed on this world. The pain of the creatures was tormenting the Lord who could not bear it any longer. All methods adopted by the Gods and sages to control Ravana failed, so the Lord decided to call in the help of his trouble-shooter named Hanuman and asked him to do something. Hanuman went off to Lanka and made a final attempt to teach Ravana a lesson by punishing him ruthlessly so that he might relent and stop his reckless behaviour. By burning Lanka Hanuman sought to tell Ravana that he must realise the sort of pain, agony and horror he and his demons are causing to the rest of the helpless population in this world simply because they are strong and powerful and no one has the guts and the strength to oppose them. Now that he has got a first-hand taste of his own medicine, the Lord expected that Ravana would understand the pain of others, and stop his cruel actions forthwith.]

Hanumān's Departure from Lankā

जारि-बारि, कै बिधूम, बारिधि बुताइ लूम,

नाइ माथो पगनि, भो ठाढ़ो कर जोरि कै ।
 मातु! कृपा कीजै, सहिदानि दीजै, सुनि सीय
 दीन्ही है असीस चारु चूड़ामनि छोरि कै ।।
 कहा कहौ तात! देखे जात ज्यो बिहात दिन, बड़ी अवलंब ही, सो चले तुम्ह तोरि कै ।
 'तुलसी' सनीर नैन, नेहसो सिथिल बैन,
 बिकल बिलोकि कपि कहत निहोरि कै ।।26 ।।

26. jāri-bāri, kai bidhūma, bāridhi butā'i lūma, nā'i māthō pagani, bhō ṭhārḥō kara jōri kai.
 mātu! kṛpā kījai, sahidāni dījai, suni sīya dīnhī hai asīsa cāru cūḍāmani chōri kai..
 kahā kahaurṁ tāta! dēkhē jāta jyōm bihāta dina, baṛī avalamba hī, sō calē tumha tōri kai.
 'tulasī' sanīra naina, nēhasō sithila baina, bikala bilōki kapi kahata nihōri kai..26..

Verse no. 5/26—After burning down Lanka and making it luster-less and life-less (blackened like lamp-black and reduced to ash), Hanuman doused his burning tail by jumping into the ocean, and then stood before Sita with folded hands and palms touching each other as a token of great respect (1)—‘Oh Mother! Please be kind to give me a token (which I can take back to Lord Ram).’

Hearing this, Sita blessed him and detaching the jewel worn in her hairs, gave it to him, and said (2)—‘Son, what can I tell you! How I am passing my days, you've seen for yourself. Your presence was a great reassurance and source of courage for me, but you speak of departing (3).’

Tulsidas says tears welled-up in her eyes and the voice choked. Seeing her pitiful condition, Hanuman consoled her in these words (4)

[Note—Refer also to (i) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 26—to Doha no. 27; and (ii) Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 14-15.]

‘दिवस छ-सात जात जानिबे न, मातु! धरु
 धीर, अरि-अंतकी अवधि रहि थोरिकै । वारिधि बँधाइ सेतु ऐहँ भानुकुलकेतु सानुज कुसल कपिकटकु बटोरि कै’ ।।
 बचन बिनीत कहि, सीताको प्रबोधु करि, ‘तुलसी’ त्रिकूट चढ़ि कहत डफोरि कै ।
 ‘जै जै जानकीस दससीस-करि-केसरी’ कपीसु कूद्यो बात-घात उदधि हलोरि कै ।।27 ।।

27. 'divasa cha-sāta jāta jānibē na, mātu! dharu dhīra, ari-antakī avadhi rahi thōrikai.
 vāridhi baṁdhā'i sētu aihaim bhānukulakētu sānuja kusala kapikaṭaku baṭōri kai'.. bacana binīta kahi, sītākō prabōdhu kari,
 'tulasī' trikūṭa caḍhi kahata ḍaphōri kai.
 'jai jai jānakīsa dasasīsa-kari-kēsari' kapīsu kūdyō bāta-ghāta udadhi halōri kai..27..

Verse no. 5/27—‘Mother! Have patience! Bear for another 6-7 days. The end of the enemy is near; very little time is left (1).

Alongwith his brother (Laxman) and army (of monkeys) Lord Ram will construct a bridge across the ocean and come here soon (2).’

Thus consoling Sita, bowing his head to her (and taking her leave), he jumped above Mt. Trikoot and shouted at the top of his voice (3), "Glory to Lord Ram who is like a lion as opposed to Ravana who is like an elephant."

Saying this, Hanuman leapt across the ocean, and the turbulence caused in the air due to this created waves in the ocean below (4).

{Having taken leave from Sita, Hanuman leapt back across the ocean to arrive on this side where his companions had been eagerly waiting for him.}

Hanumān's Arrival Back at Kishkindhā

साहसी समीरसूनु नीरनिधि लंघि लखि लंक सिद्धपीठु निसि जागो है मसानु सो ।
'तुलसी' बिलोकि महासाहसु प्रसन्न भई
देबी सीय-सारिखी, दियो है बरदानु सो ॥
बाटिका उजारि, अछधारि मारि, जारि गढु, भानुकुलभानुको प्रतापभानु-भानु-सो ।
करत बिसोक लोक-कोकनद, कोक कपि, कहै जामवंत, आयो, आयो हनुमानु सो ॥२८॥

28. sāhasī samīrasūnu nīranidhi laṅghi lakhi laṅka sid'dhapīṭhu nisi jāgō hai masānu sō.
'tulasī' bilōki mahāsāhasu prasanna bhaī dēbī siya-sārikhī, diyō hai baradānu sō.. bāṭikā ujāri, achadhāri māri, jāri garhu, bhānukulabhānukō pratāpabhānu-bhānu-sō.
karata bisōka lōka-kōkanada, kōka kapi, khai jāmavanta, āyō, āyō hanumānu sō..28..

Verse no. 5/28—The bear king Jamvant said—‘The brave son of the Wind-God had leapt across the ocean and treated Lanka as a ‘Sidha Peeth’ (a specially blessed place which can endow success in any venture, particularly related to spiritualism). He therefore had done mystical tantrik rituals as done in a cremation ground during the preceding night (i.e. he had burnt the city during the night). [In occult forms of worship of the goddess of death, the worshipper uses the cremation ground for his rituals. Here, the metaphor is employed to imply that Hanuman had burnt Lanka in a ritualistic manner, systematically and formally.]

Seeing his immense courage and valour, the Goddess-like Sita became very pleased and blessed him with a boon. Having ruined the garden (Ashok grove), slaying the army of Akshay Kumar and then burning Lanka, Hanuman has returned to us. He has removed the sorrows of this lotus-like world and Chakravak-like monkeys by assuming the form of the rays of the sun (daylight) that symbolizes the astounding glory and majesty of Lord Ram who himself is like a sun of the Solar race¹. Look, he has come back, he has come back!!' [Chakravaks=ruddy goose]. [5/28]

[Note—¹Lord Ram was born in the Solar race. The lotus flower opens up during the day time and the ruddy goose also wakes up at dawn. In this stanza, Hanuman is compared to the light of the sun in as much as it is he who acted as the flag-bearer of Lord Ram's fame. Had it not been for Hanuman, neither would Sita have been found nor would the war won by Ram. Just like the rays of the sun eliminating darkness from all corners of the earth, arrival of Hanuman removed the pall of gloom and the scepter of disaster that loomed over the monkeys on this side of the ocean as they waited most eagerly looking up into the sky in the south direction as Hanuman flew in.]

गगन निहारि, किलकारी भारी सुनि, हनुमान पहिचानि भए सानँद सचेत हैं।
बूझत जहाज बच्यो पथिकसमाजु, मानो आजु जाए जानि सब अंकमाल देत हैं॥
'जै जै जानकीस, जै जै लखन-कपीस' कहि, कूदैं कपि कौतुकी नटत रेत-रेत हैं।
अंगदु मयंदु नलु नील बलसील महा
बालधी फिरावैं, मुख नाना गति लेत हैं॥29॥

29. gagana nihāri, kilakārī bhārī suni, hanumāna pahicāni bha'e sānaṁda sacēta haiṁ.
būṛata jahāja bacyō pathikasamāju, mānō āju jā'e jāni saba aṅkamāla dēta haiṁ..
'jai jai jānakīsa, jai jai lakhana-kapīsa' kahi, kūdaiṁ kapi kautukī naṭata rēta-rēta haiṁ.
aṅgadu mayandu nalu nīla balasīla mahā bāladhī phirāvaiṁ, mukha nānā gati lēta haiṁ..29..

Verse no. 5/29—Hearing the joyful and shrill cry of Hanuman, all the assembled bears and monkeys (on this side of the ocean) looked skywards, and recognizing that he was Hanuman, they all became exuberant, exceedingly happy and euphoric as if a ship, along with its crew and passengers, has just escaped being sunk. They embraced each other in ecstasy as if they had been re-born.

Shouting 'Glory to the Lord of Janki (i.e. Ram)! Glory to Laxman! Glory to Sugriv!' all those monkeys and bears jumped gleefully and danced merrily on the sand of the ocean shore. Most valiant among them—Angad, Mayand, Neel, Nal—twisted and waved their large tails and happily made funny faces at each other.

[Note—Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 28.]

आयो हनुमानु, प्रानहेतु अंकमाल देत, लेत पगधूरि एक, चूमत लँगूल हैं।
एक बूझैं बार-बार सीय-समाचार, कहैं

पवनकुमारु, भो बिगतश्रम-सूल हैं ॥
 एक भूखे जानि, आगे आनें कंद-मूल-फल, एक पूजै बाहु बलमूल तोरि फूल हैं । एक कहै 'तुलसी' सकल सिधि तारै, जारै कृपा-पाथनाथ सीतानाथु साबुकूल हैं ॥३०॥

30. āyō hanumānu, prānahētu aṅkamāla dēta, lēta pagadhūri ēka, cūmata laṁgūla haiṁ.
 ēka bījhaiṁ bāra-bāra siya-samācāra, kahaiṁ pavanakumāru, bhō bigataśrama-sūla haiṁ..
 ēka bhūkhē jāni, āgēm ānaiṁ kanda-mūla-phala, ēka pūjaiṁ bāhu balamūla tōri phūla haiṁ.
 ēka kahaiṁ 'tulasī' sakala sidhi tākēm, jākēm kṛpā-pāthanātha sītānāthu sānukūla haiṁ..30..

Verse no. 5/30—On his landing on this side of the ocean, the monkeys regarded him as their saviour, and some embraced him, while others took the dust of his feet, or kissed his tail (1).

Some asked the news of Sita, and narrating it, it appeared the tiredness of Hanuman vanished (i.e. he felt exhilarated and joyful on telling the good news to them) (2).

Some of his companion brought bulbs, roots and fruits for him, thinking that he was hungry; still others adorned his arms with flowers and showered adulations on them (3).

Some said that one on whom Lord Ram has become benign and favourable can accomplish all the tasks in this world (4).

{The party of jubilant monkeys and bears came to the Rishyamook Mountain where Lord Ram waited with Laxman and Sugriv for the news.}

सीयको सनेहु, सीलु, कथा तथा लंकाकी
 कहत चले चायसों, सिरानो पथु छनमें ।
 कह्यो जुबराज बोलि बानरसमाजु, आजु
 खाहु फल, सुनि पेलि पैटे मधुबनमें ॥
 मारे बागवान, ते पुकारत देवान गे,
 'उजारे बाग अंगद' देखाए घाय तनमें । कहै कपिराजु, करि काजु आए कीस, तुल-सीसकी सपथ महामोदु मेरे मनमें ॥३१॥

31. sīyakō sanēhu, sīlu, kathā tathā laṅkāki kahata calē cāyasōṁ, sirānō pathu chanamēm.
 kahyō jubarāja bōli bānarasamāju, āju khāhu phala, suni pēli paiṭhē madhubanamēm..
 mārē bāgavāna, tē pukārata dēvāna gē,
 'ujārē bāga aṅgada' dēkhā'ē ghāya tanamēm.
 kahai kapiṛāju, kari kāju ā'ē kīsa, tulasīsakī sapatha mahāmōdu mērē manamēm..31..

Verse no. 5/31—Then they started to move towards Kishkindha from the shore of the ocean, all the while narrating and listening to the stories of Sita's devotion, affections, pure character and pious nature vis-à-vis her sorrowful surroundings and torments she was undergoing. As a result, the distance was covered soon (without them feeling tired). Reaching Kishkindha, Angad summoned all the monkeys and said, 'Today, all of you eat fruits to your heart's content!'

Hearing his orders, all the monkeys forcefully entered Madhuvan (i.e. a garden of sweet fruit trees laden with honey). Those gardeners who were beaten by excited monkeys ran to the court (of Sugriv) and complained. Showing him (Sugriv) their wounds they informed him that Angad had reduced the garden to waste. At this Sugriv exclaimed, 'In the name of the Lord of Tulsi (i.e. Sri Ram), it appears that the monkeys have completed the assigned task. Today my mind is feeling extremely happy (which is a good omen)!'

[Note—Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 28—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 29.]

-----**-----

Part 3

Lord Ram collects an Army of Monkeys and Bears to Launch a Campaign to Recover Sita, Vibhishan Joins Lord Ram, Crossing the Ocean and the Arrival of the Lord's Forces in Lanka, the Prelude to the War and Attempts to avoid it through an Emissary for Peace.

(With Roman Transliteration of Verses, English Exposition and Notes)

This Part no. 3 of our Book has 4 Chapters as follows:-

Chapter 8 narrates how Lord Ram collected a huge army of monkeys and bears under the supervision of Sugriv, the king of Kishkindha and of the monkey race, to launch a military campaign to free Sita from the clutches of the demons; and the arrival of the Lord's army on the shore of the ocean.

Chapter 9 describes why and how Vibhishan, the brother of Ravana, joins Lord Ram camp.

Chapter 10 narrates how the formidable army of Lord Ram crossed the mighty ocean by constructing a bridge across it, and landed on the shores of Lanka.

Chapter 11 deals with the prelude to the sacking of Lanka—The war parleys that were held, and Lord Ram’s sending of Angad as his emissary to Ravana to explore the possibility of avoiding a destructive bloody war.

In accordance with the method adopted by us in reading this wonderful and fascinating classical tale describing the story of Ravana and the epic war of Lanka, we shall be reading, one by one, from all the four classics as we have been doing till now—viz. Ram Charit Manas, Adhyatma Ramayan, Geetawali Ramayan and Kavitaawali Ramayan.

Chapter 8

Lord Ram Collects a Huge Army of Monkeys and Bears and Launches a Military Campaign to Free Sita from the Clutches of the Demons; the Arrival of the Lord’s Army on the Shore of the Ocean.

After Hanuman had briefed Lord Ram about his adventurous journey to Lanka and the discovery of Sita, the Lord asked Sugriv, the king of Kishkindha, to make immediate arrangements for the departure of the army of Kapis (monkeys and bears), that was kept on the stand-by, on the mission to free her from the clutches of her captor, the demon king Ravana, and at the same time to eliminate, once and for all, the scourge of the demons who had been tormenting the creatures of the earth. Orders were given, and a huge motivated and devoted army of countless Kapi warriors, who were all renowned for their matchless gallantry, bravery, courage and valour, was set in motion, marching enthusiastically and swiftly, with great zest and zeal, to accomplish the mission as quickly as possible. The formidable army of Lord Ram moved ahead in the southern direction as fast as the wind blows, swiftly and rapidly across the land, almost gliding through forests, valleys and mountainous terrain, till it finally reached the shore of the mighty ocean, and then their progress was suddenly checked as the ocean stood in the way and blocked further progress. Here Lord Ram pitched camp to discuss how to get over this barrier.

This part of this magnificent Story is covered in Chapter no. 8 of our Book. This Chapter has the following Sections:-

Section 8.1—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Doha no. 35;

Section 8.2—Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 1;

Section 8.3—Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse no. 22;

Section 8.1: Ram Charit Manas

{Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Doha no. 35.}

तब रघुपति कपिपतिहि बोलावा । कहा चलैं कर करहु बनावा ॥ ६ ॥

अब बिलंबु केहि कारन कीजे । तुरत कपिन्ह कहूँ आयसु दीजे ॥ ७ ॥ कौतुक देखि सुमन बहु बरषी । नभ तें भवन चले सुर हरषी ॥ ८ ॥ taba raghupati kapipatihi bōlāvā. kahā calaiṁ kara karahu banāvā. 6.

aba bilambu kē hi kārana kijē. turata kapinha kahuṁ āyasu dījē. 7.
kautuka dēkhi sumana bahu baraṣī. nabha tēm bhavana calē sura haraṣī. 8.

Then Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram)¹ summoned the king of the Kapis (i.e. Sugriv)², and instructed him, ‘Make immediate arrangements for the departure of the army for Lanka. (6)

There is no reason why should there be any delay now. Call all the Kapis (the monkeys as well as their bear companions) and give them suitable instructions in this regard.’ (7)

The gods, who had assembled in the sky to watch the proceedings on the ground, greatly marveled and were amazed at the strange way the Lord acts and carries out his worldly sports; they were positively glad at the developments and the miraculous way the events had turned in their favour³. Then they showered flowers from the sky and cheerfully went to their respective abodes in the heaven⁴. (8)

[Note—¹During the course of reading of the Ramayana, many names of Lord Ram have been used, and one of them is “Raghupati”, literally meaning a Lord of the line of kings descending from the great and illustrious king Raghu of the ancient kingdom of Ayodhya.

²Tulsidas, a learned and skilled poet as he was, uses the term ‘Pati’, meaning a lord and a king, for both Lord Ram and Sugriv to signify that at this moment two great kings of two equally great kingdoms of Ayodhya and Kishkindha are joining hands to carry out a great campaign jointly. But here Lord Ram has no army of his own, whereas Sugriv commands a singularly formidable army. So by addressing them as ‘Raghupati’ and ‘Kapi-pati’ respectively the poet emphasizes that though Lord Ram has no physical army at present to support him in his campaign, but this does not undermine the fact that he belongs to a great empire of Ayodhya ruled by illustrious kings descending from the world famous king Raghu, and so both Lord Ram and Sugriv are on the same footing as far as this campaign—of freeing Sita—is concerned.

³The gods, who were well aware of the reality of Lord Ram, that he was a personified form of Lord Vishnu, were amazed that the supreme Lord of the world would need the help of humble forest-dwelling Kapis to win Lanka, instead of some great army of the city-dwelling human race!

They marveled as to how a single individual (Lord Ram), who has been sent to the forest along with his wife (Sita) and younger brother (Laxman), who had no other support except the strength of his own arms and who had only a little while ago seemed lost and dejected, would, out of the force of his will and enterprise, and of course a little help from a benevolent destiny and providence, would so astonishingly overcome all hurdles and obstacles, that would seem insurmountable for others, to accomplish success in an endeavour that had even baffled the gods themselves—which was to launch a campaign to eliminate the powerful and invincible demon king Ravana and his equally powerful and ruthless army of ferocious demons. This enterprise was a very singular one—as it pitched demons renowned for their ferocity, extraordinary power and formidable strength, demons who had trounced even the gods and terrorized them at will, against humble beings such as the Kapis as well as the two brothers Lord Ram and Laxman—and thus to imagine that the tables would finally turn against the demons was simply out of the question.

The gods also were immensely surprised at the way destiny and providence play their own games, in the way the most unlikely can often times become a reality, and the most unthinkable of situations can transmew themselves into a practical plan of action—for it was indeed remarkable that humans represented by Lord Ram and Laxman would team up with wild forest-dwelling creatures represented by the monkeys and bears to launch a well-planned and skillfully maneuvered military campaign to conquer a formidable army represented by the demons and overrun its citadel at Lanka. To wit, given the will and the determination, all odds can be surmounted, and anything can be made possible in this world.

It was remarkable that Lord Ram would take the help of humble ‘Kapis’, who were forest dwelling creatures, instead of his own army of Ayodhya which was renowned in the whole world for its valour, courage, skill and strength, to launch a campaign to free Sita, which was in fact an excuse to fulfill the promise the Lord had made to the gods and mother earth on an earlier occasion—that he would slay the cruel demons led by their king Ravana who had become invincible by the many boons that he had acquired, and thereby free the earth as well as the gods from their torments and horrors (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.

⁴The gods celebrated the occasion by raining flowers from the sky. Lord Ram was now ready to finally go on a mission to eliminate the demons, and this was what the gods had always wanted. Since all the circumstances were now favourable and the Lord had issued instructions to Sugriv to start the preparations for the great campaign, the gods wished to show their happiness by showering flowers.]

दो०. कपिपति बेगि बोलाए आए जूथप जूथ ।

नाना बरन अतुल बल बानर भालु बरूथ ॥ ३४ ॥

dōhā.

kapipati bēgi bōlā'ē ā'ē jūthapa jūtha.

nānā barana atula bala bānara bhālu barūtha. 34.

The lord of the Kapis (i.e. Sugriv) immediately summoned all the commanders of the countless groups of monkey warriors in his realm.

These multitudes of warriors consisted of monkeys and bears (bānara - bhālu)¹ of myriad forms, belonging to different clans which had their own distinguishing characteristics such as colours of their skins and individual habits, but one thing was common to them all, and that was they were all gallant, and were matchless in strength, bravery, valour and courage. (Doha no. 34)

[Note—¹One thing is very clear from this Doha—that the army of Lord Ram consisted of both the ‘monkeys’ as well as the ‘bears’. Though the word ‘Kapi’ literally means a monkey, and this word is liberally used to refer to the Lord’s army as well as to the inhabitants of the kingdom of Kishkindha, but it is only because the population of the monkeys in this forested kingdom was in the majority, while the community of bears was in a minority, and that was all. The phrase ‘army of Kapis’ therefore does not mean that all its warriors were ‘monkeys’ alone, for there were a large numbers of ‘bears’ too who had participated in the Lord’s campaign of Lanka.

This fact will be clear when we come to the narration of the war where we shall read that both the monkeys and bears were equal partners in the battles, and fought shoulder-to-shoulder alongside each other. In this context it is also to be noted that one of Sugriv’s chief advisors and confidante was a bear named Jamvant. It was Jamvant who had inspired Hanuman to go across the ocean to search Sita in Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 30.

Refer also to Chaupai line nos. 1-3, 8 and 10 herein below.]

चौ०. प्रभु पद पंकज नावहिं सीसा । गर्जहिं भालु महाबल कीसा ॥ १ ॥
देखी राम सकल कपि सेना । चितइ कृपा करि राजिव नैना ॥ २ ॥ राम कृपा बल पाइ कपिंदा । भए पच्छजुत मनहुं गिरिंदा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu pada pañkaja nāvahiṃ sīsā. garjahiṃ bhālu mahābala kīsā. 1.
dēkhī rāma sakala kapi sēnā. cita'i kṛpā kari rājiva nainā. 2.
rāma kṛpā bala pā'i kapindā. bha'ē pacchajuta manahuṃ girindā. 3.

All the assembled monkey and bear warriors came and bowed their heads before the lotus-like feet of Lord Ram. They were all extremely valiant, powerful and strong, and they roared and thundered vigorously (waiting for instructions, and eager for departure on the campaign trail). (1)

Lord Ram surveyed the whole army of Kapis (monkeys and bears) as they paraded before him, and he cast his compassionate glances graciously over the whole assembly of troops. (2)

When the Kapis observed that the Lord is casting his graceful and benevolent glances upon all of them, they were all highly encouraged and motivated, and their enthusiasm was so great that they felt as if they had wings that would enable them to fly like birds just like the mythological mountains that grew wings and could fly at will (bha'ē pacchajuta manahuṃ girindā)¹. (3)

[Note—¹The troops were highly excited and thrilled at the prospect of an adventure that was to their liking. They were roaring and raring to go, and felt so enthusiastic that made them feel they would virtually fly like huge mountains and fall en-masse upon the enemy to crush it to smithereens.

Of course, when Lord Ram observed this committed and motivated army he too felt encouraged and sure of success as the army’s high morale was crucial for attaining success in such a hazardous endeavour as the war against the ferocious demons known for their strength and daring.]

हरषि राम तब कीन्ह पयाना । सगुन भए सुंदर सुभ नाना ॥ ४ ॥ जासु सकल मंगलमय कीती । तासु पयान सगुन यह नीती ॥ ५ ॥ haraṣi rāma taba kīnha payānā. saguna bha'e sundara subha nānā. 4.

jāsu sakala maṅgalamaya kīṭī. tāsu payāna saguna yaha nīṭī. 5.

Then Lord Ram cheerfully made his departure to launch the campaign; at that time all sorts of auspicious omens occurred to indicate that things would turn out favourably. (4)

Forsooth and without gainsay indeed, he (Lord Ram) whose marvelous glory is unquestionably auspicious and beautiful, when he decides to start on a journey (to undertake an enterprise that would fulfill his mission on earth¹) then there is no question of anything other than auspicious and favourable happening! (5)

[Note—¹The mission of Lord Ram was to eliminate the terror of demons, and he had made this promise to the gods and mother earth on a previous occasion. Further, a chaste woman (Sita) had been wrongfully abducted and imprisoned by an evil creature (the demon king Ravana), and this crime had to be punished. Therefore, this mission itself was for the general good of all living beings on earth as it involved the elimination of the cruel demons, as well as for restoring the honour of a faultless woman, Sita, who was kidnapped forcibly by Ravana, so it was undoubtedly for a noble cause, and anything done for the good of others and in pursuit of a noble cause is deemed to be auspicious, holy and beautiful. This was one primary reason why there was all round enthusiasm and cheerfulness in Lord Ram's camp.

It was not going to be a war for the sake of a war such as for the purpose of usurping some great king's prosperous kingdom out of jealousy and avarice by another king of a capricious and expansionist nature, but it was to be a holy war for a righteous cause and with a noble aim. It was to be a war of good against the evil; a war that was thrust upon Lord Ram and not one in which he willingly got involved just for the pleasure of fighting. It was not like a sport of hunting that kings found as a past time that resulted in senseless killing of innocent animals, but it was a necessary war that was required to eliminate 'cruel, blood-thirsty animals' symbolised by the demons who had terrorized innocent creatures in this world, plundering and killing at their free will, so that peace, happiness, freedom, fearlessness and rule of law can once again be restored on earth.]

प्रभु पयान जाना बैदेहीं । फरकि बाम अँग जनु कहि देहीं ॥ ६ ॥
जोड़ जोड़ सगुन जानकिहि होई । असगुन भयउ रावनहि सोई ॥ ७ ॥ prabhu payāna jānā baidēhīm. pharaki bāma aṅga janu kahi dēhīm. 6.

jō'i jō'i saguna jānakihi hō'ī. asaguna bhaya'u rāvanahi sō'ī. 7.

Vaidehi (Sita) got the hint that Lord Ram has made his departure (to start the campaign to free her) because the left side of her body began to flutter¹—as if to tell her that good tidings were soon to come. (6)

Whatever positive omens occurred to Sita, the opposite of those occurred to Ravana (hinting to him that some severe calamity is in the offing)². (7)

[Note—¹It is believed that when the left side of a woman's body flutters it is a good sign for her. So when Sita's muscles on her left began fluttering, she got a hint that something good was about to happen. And the only good that could happen to her was freedom from captivity in Lanka, and if that was to actually happen it meant that Lord Ram is on his way. This is also what Hanuman had promised her when he took leave for going back to Lord Ram.

²What is good for a female as far as signs and omens are concerned, it is bad for a male. So if fluttering of the left side of the body was good for Sita, the same kind of fluttering of muscles was a bad sign for Ravana.

Hence, the omens indicated that what cheered Sita would dismay Ravana. So, if the omens meant Sita would find joy by way of meeting Lord Ram and finding herself delivered, the same omens meant that Ravana would be devastated.]

चला कटकु को बरनै पारा । गर्जहि बानर भालु अपारा ॥ ८ ॥
नख आयुध गिरि पादपधारी । चले गगन महि इच्छाचारी ॥ ९ ॥ केहरिनाद भालु कपि करहीं । ढगमगाहि दिग्गज चिक्करहीं ॥ १० ॥

calā kaṭaku kō baranair̥ pārā. garjahim̥ bānara bhālu apārā. 8.
nakha āyudha giri pādapadhārī. calē gagana mahi icchācārī. 9.
kēharināda bhālu kapi karahīm̥. ḍagamagāhīm̥ diggaja cikkarahīm̥. 10.

The army made its departure and marched towards its destination. Say, who can ever describe it (both the army and the way it marched)? Uncountable numbers of the monkeys and bears were roaring and thundering violently, and there was no measurement of the army's strength and extent. (8)

The warriors had large piercing nails (which they would use as knives, daggers and swords), and all were armed with huge rocks and boulders as well as trees. They moved in the way that suited them—some walked on foot and others took the path of the sky¹. (9)

The monkeys and bears were roaring like lions, and this caused the legendary Diggajas (“diggaja”; the elephants said to support the earth from below in its eight cardinal points or directions²) to shake and trumpet loudly in great alarm.

[To wit, as the army of Lord Ram moved ahead, there was a great tumult on the surface of the earth; the energetic activity of the marching army, the uproarious shouts of the warriors and the angry stamping of their feet made the earth shake and tremble as if an earthquake was taking place.] (10)

[Note—¹So there was no wonder if Hanuman could fly across the ocean to go and come back from Lanka.

²The ‘Diggajas’ support the earth at four corners—north, east, south and west, as well as the four angles of north-east, south-east, south-west and north-west. When the army of Lord Ram moved, the earth shook, giving the impression that these eight strong elephants had begun to tremble and squirm.]

छं०. चिक्करहिं दिग्गज डोल महि गिरि लोल सागर खरभरे । १ ।
 मन हरष सभ गंधर्ब सुर मुनि नाग किंनर दुख टरे ॥ २ ॥
 कटकटहिं मर्कट बिकट भट बहु कोटि कोटिन्ह धावहीं । ३ । जय राम प्रबल प्रताप कोसलनाथ गुन गन गावहीं ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

cikkarahim diggaja ḍōla mahi giri lōla sāgara kharabharē. 1.
 mana haraṣa sabha gandharba sura muni nāga kinnara dukha ṭarē. 2.
 kaṭakaṭahim markāṭa bikāṭa bhaṭa bahu kōṭi kōṭinha dhāvahim. 3.
 jaya rāma prabala pratāpa kōsalanātha guna gana gāvahim. 4.

The Diggajas (the eight elephants supporting the earth at the eight cardinal points) trumpeted wildly; the earth shook violently; the mountains rumbled and rocked; the water of the ocean began churning and heaving massively (producing huge waves). (Chanda line no. 1)

The Sun-God, the Moon-God and all other Gods, the sages, the ascetics and other pious souls, the Naagas (serpents and all other reptiles), and the Kinnars (the dancers in heaven; a sort of demi-god)—all of them felt exhilarated and elated in their minds and hearts (“Mana”) because this event marked the beginning of the end of their sufferings and miseries (caused to them by the ferocious demons)¹. (Chanda line no. 2)

Fierce and redoubtable monkey warriors gnashed and ground their teeth in anger even as they rushed forward in countless multitudes, in a bellicose mood. (Chanda line no. 3)

They were hailing the glory of Lord Ram in a thunderous voice, calling out in a shrill cry, ‘Glory to Lord Ram who is extremely powerful, strong and valiant, and who is the king of Kaushal (the kingdom of Ayodhya)!’ (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹All the gods and the holy men were suffering intensely under the reign of horror and terror unleashed by the demons under their merciless king Ravana. When Lord Ram marched with his formidable army on his mission to take on these cruel demons head on and eliminate them, it was definitely something to celebrate for those who suffered immensely under the demons. How ruthless and cruel the demons were, and the sort of horrors they had spread everywhere has been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 179—to Chaupai line

no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 184. We have already read about it in Chapter no. 3 of our Book.

Fed up by a life full of sorrows, the gods and mother earth, the latter representing all the creatures that dwelt on earth, had made a fervent appeal to the Supreme Being to intervene on their behalf and restore law and order in this world. The Lord had then promised them that he would personally come down in the form of Lord Ram and eliminate the scourge of the demons. We have also read about it in Chapter no. 4 of our Book which narrates this episode as it is described in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.

That moment has arrived, so definitely it was the time to rejoice. The physical tumult caused by the marching of Lord Ram's army as narrated in these verses may have momentarily terrified all living beings as they may have thought that the doomsday has finally arrived, but the gods and the learned sages and ascetics who were privy to the actual cause of this tumult were very happy.]

सहि सक न भार उदार अहिपति बार बारहिं मोहई । ५ ।

गह दसन पुनि पुनि कमठ पृष्ठ कठोर सो किमि सोहई ॥ ६ ॥

रघुबीर रुचिर प्रयान प्रस्थिति जानि परम सुहावनी । ७ ।

जनु कमठ खर्पर सर्पराज सो लिखत अबिचल पावनी ॥ ८ ॥ sahi saka na bhāra udāra ahipati bāra bārahim mōha'ī. 5.

gaha dasana puni puni kamaṭha pṛṣṭa kaṭhōra sō kimi sōha'ī. 6.

raghubīra rucira prayāna prasthiti jāni parama suhāvanī. 7.

janu kamaṭha kharpara sarparāja sō likhata abicala pāvanī. 8.

Lord Seshnath (the legendary serpent-king with a thousand-hoods; the celestial serpent who is said to hold the world aloft on his hoods) could not cope with the excessive heavy weight exerted by the marching army on his head (because the weight of hundreds and thousands of monkey and bear warriors was now concentrated on a limited area of the surface of the earth, thereby exerting excess pressure at some selected points on his hood), and so he began to reel and feel dizzy and uneasy due to the excessive burden put on his head by the belligerent army, inspite of his being very magnanimous and forgiving because he had never complained about the weight of the earth that he carried on his hoods since eternity.

[To wit, perhaps it was the first time in creation when Seshnath felt that he is unable to bear this heavy weight of the army of Lord Ram, so massive and extensive it was.] (Chaupai line no. 5)

Feeling that he would collapse and sink if he did not find a support, Seshnath sought help from the legendary Tortoise (who also supports the earth on the back of his hard shell) by grasping the sharp protuberances on the rough outer surface of the latter's shell by the means of his sharp teeth.

[To wit, when Seshnath felt a sort of vertigo overtaking him, he hooked his teeth around the sharp spike-like extensions on the back of the Tortoise's shell in order to tether himself to them and avoid a disaster.] (Chaupai line no. 6)

It appears that this wonderful development of Lord Ram, the brave warrior of king Raghu's line, making his departure to accomplish the great mission for which he had come down to earth was so momentous, singular and glorious one that Lord Seshnath wished to immortalize it by writing it down for posterity. So he decided to carve this marvelous story by etching it on the hard shell of the Tortoise by scratching with his teeth, and it is for this purpose that he had clung himself on the back of the shell of the Tortoise so that he can write down Lord Ram's feat and leave it for posterity by scratching the shell by his sharp teeth as he moved backward and forward on it, apparently to maintain his balance.

[Seshnath had sharp teeth, and the shell of the Tortoise was hard as rock. So therefore, just as ancient people left edicts and carvings on rocks to make them permanent, Seshnath decided to immortalize this glorious story of Lord Ram by carving it on the back of the shell of the Tortoise by scratching on it with his teeth even as he had to toss and turn by the shifting of weight by the movement of the Lord's army.] (Chaupai line nos. 7-8)

दो०. एहि बिधि जाइ कृपानिधि उतरे सागर तीर ।

जहँ तहँ लागे खान फल भालु बिपुल कपि बीर ॥ ३५ ॥

dōhā.

ēhi bidhi jā'i kṛpānidhi utarē sāgara tīra.

jahaṁ tahaṁ lāgē khāna phala bhālu bipula kapi bīra. 35.

In this fascinating manner Lord Ram, who is an ocean of mercy, compassion, kindness and grace (kṛpānidhi), reached the shore of the ocean and pitched his camp.

Once there, the multitudes of brave monkeys and bears began refreshing themselves by eating fruits¹. (Doha no. 35)

[Note—¹After leaving Kishkindha, the army had not halted even for a brief break; it marched relentlessly ahead, without any stop—apropos: (i) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 1, verse no. 40; and (ii) Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 71-72.

Naturally the soldiers were hungry. So now, when their progress was halted by the ocean, they found some time to refresh themselves, while their commanders and Lord Ram would hold a conference to decide how to overcome this barrier symbolized by the endless stretch of water of the ocean—apropos: Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 102-105.

When the ocean was finally crossed by the means of a bridge built across it, and the army landed on the shores of Lanka, once again some time was needed to plan the future strategy. So once again Lord Ram ordered the monkeys and bears to go and eat fruit to refresh themselves—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 5.]

-----**-----

Section 8.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

{Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 1.}

Now we shall read about this part of the Story—of Lord Ram's departure from Kishkindha together with his formidable army of brave monkeys and bears, till the time he reached the shore of the ocean—from Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 1.

॥ अध्यात्मरामायणे युद्धकाण्डम् ॥

॥ प्रथमः सर्गः ॥

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

यथावद्भाषितं वाक्यं श्रुत्वा रामो हनूमतः ।

उवाचानन्तरं वाक्यं हर्षेण महतावृतः ॥ १॥

कार्यं कृतं हनुमता देवैरपि सुदुष्करम् ।

मनसापि यदन्येन स्मर्तुं शक्यं न भूतले ॥ २॥

॥ adhyātmārāmāyaṇe yuddhakāṇḍam ॥

॥ prathamah sargaḥ ॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

yathāvadbhāṣitaṃ vākyaṃ śrutvā rāmo hanūmataḥ । uvācānantaraṃ vākyaṃ harṣeṇa mahatāvṛtaḥ ॥ 1॥

kāryaṃ kṛtaṃ hanumatā devairapi suduṣkaram ।

manasāpi yadanyena smartuṃ śakyaṃ na bhūtale ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Hearing the words of Hanuman (who had narrated verbatim what Sita had said), Lord Ram was all praise for him. He said most cheerfully (1), 'Whatever work Hanuman has done is difficult and daunting even for the Gods to do. Verily, on the surface of the earth, no one can even dare to imagine or think about (doing) it (2).

शतयोजनविस्तीर्णं लङ्घयेत्कः पयोनिधिम् ।

लङ्कां च रक्षसैर्गुप्तां को वा धर्षयितुं क्षमः ॥ ३॥

भृत्यकार्यं हनुमता कृतं सर्वमशेषतः ।

सुग्रीवस्येदृशो लोके न भूतो न भविष्यति ॥ ४॥ śatayojanavistīrṇaṃ laṅghayetkaḥ payonidhim । laṅkāṃ ca rākṣasairguptāṃ ko vā dharṣayituṃ kṣamaḥ ॥ 3॥ bhr̥tyakāryaṃ hanumatā kṛtaṃ sarvamaśeṣataḥ । sugrīvasyedṛśo loke na bhūto na bhaviṣyati ॥ 4॥

3-4. Say, who is capable of crossing the hundred Yojan (800 miles) wide ocean and demolish Lanka which is protected by the demons? (3).

Hanuman has proficiently lived up to the expectations of a loyal, faithful and diligent servant (and subordinate) of Sugriv. There has been none in the past and shall never be in the future anyone such as him in this world (4).

अहं च सद्युवंशश्च लक्ष्मणश्च कपीश्वरः ।
 जानक्या दर्शनेनाद्य रक्षिताः स्मो हनूमता ॥ ५॥
 सर्वथा सुकृतं कार्यं जानक्याः परिमार्गणम् । समुद्रं मनसा स्मृत्वा सीदतीव मनो मम ॥ ६॥ ahaṃ ca raghuvaṃśaśca lakṣmaṇaśca kapīśvaraḥ । jānakyā darśanenādya rakṣitāḥ smo hanūmatā ॥ 5॥ sarvathā sukṛtaṃ kāryaṃ jānakyāḥ parimārgaṇam । samudraṃ manasā smṛtvā sīdatīva mano mama ॥ 6॥

5-6. By seeing (and bringing the news of) Janki (Sita), Hanuman has saved me and others of the family of the great legendary king by the name of Raghu, such as (my younger brother) Laxman; he has also saved Sugriv and others as well¹ (5).

The job of ascertaining the whereabouts of Sita has been done, but my heart and mind gets a little alarmed and I feel a bit dismayed when I think of the ocean that intervenes, and which acts as a formidable barrier between us and the success of the whole mission² (6)

[Note—¹When Lord Ram says that the whole family of king Raghu has been saved by Hanuman by bringing the news of Sita being alive he means that if there was some bad news, or no news at all, he would have ended his life, and Laxman would have followed suit. When the news reached Ayodhya, or when he did not turn up in the city after the expiry of the 14 year exile period, it was sure that Bharat, his other brother, would have ended his life too, and he will be followed by Shatrughan. With the father already dead and there being no off-spring of any of the brothers yet, the chain would break and there would be no one left to carry forward the family title and legacy.

This is the reason why Lord Ram has expressed great gratitude for Hanuman. In Ram Charit Manas the Lord has even gone further to say that he would forever remain indebted to Hanuman—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no.32.

²Everything was in place—Sita had been traced, and the army was ready. But now the vexed question was: ‘how to overcome the barrier of the mighty ocean; how to cross it to reach Lanka?’]

कथं नक्रजषाकीर्णं समुद्रं शतयोजनम् ।
 लङ्घयित्वा रिपुं हन्यां कथं द्रक्ष्यामि जानकीम् ॥ ७॥
 श्रुत्वा तु रामवचनं सुग्रीवः प्राह राघवम् ।
 समुद्रं लङ्घयिष्यामो महानक्रजषाकुलम् ॥ ८॥
 लङ्कां च विधमिष्यामो हनिष्यामोऽद्य रावणम् ।
 चिन्तां त्यज रघुश्रेष्ठ चिन्ता कार्यविनाशिनी ॥ ९॥ katham nakrajhaṣākīrṇaṁ samudraṁ śatayojanam । laṅghayitvā ripuṁ hanyāṁ katham drakṣyāmi jānakīm ॥ 7॥ śrutvā tu rāmavacanam sugrīvaḥ prāha rāghavam । samudraṁ laṅghayiṣyāmo mahānakrajhaṣākulam ॥ 8॥ laṅkāṁ ca vidhamiṣyāmo haniṣyāmo'dya rāvaṇam । cintāṁ tyaja raghuśreṣṭha cintā kāryavināśinī ॥ 9॥

7-9. How will I eliminate the enemy by crossing the 100 Yojan wide ocean full of countless obstacles, such as alligators and other ferocious marine animals? And how will I see Janki?' (7).

Hearing these seemingly helpless words that gave the impression that Lord Ram was utterly dismayed, distraught and confounded, Sugriv stepped in to reassure him, to encourage him and lift his sagging spirits. So Sugriv said, 'Oh Lord, we shall leap across the ocean which seems so impossible to cross as it consists of insurmountable barriers (such as whirlpools, huge waves, reefs, mountains etc.), and formidable obstacles such as huge fishes (viz. alligators, crocodiles, sharks, whales etc.) (8).

Then we shall quickly destroy Lanka and wrench control of it, killing the lowly and wicked Ravana. Oh the best in king Raghu's race ("raghuśreṣṭha"; Lord Ram)! You must stop worrying, for worry ruins the task at hand (9).

एतान् पश्य महासत्त्वान् शूरान् वानरपुङ्गवान् ।
 त्वत्प्रियार्थं समुद्युक्तान् प्रवेष्टुमपि पावकम् ॥ १०॥
 समुद्रतरणे बुद्धिं कुरुष्व प्रथमं ततः ।
 दृष्ट्वा लङ्कां दशग्रीवो हत इत्येव मन्महे ॥ ११॥ etān paśya mahāsattvān śūrān vānarapuṅgavān । tvatpriyārthaṁ samudyuktān praveṣṭumapi pāvakam ॥ 10॥ samudratarāṇe buddhiṁ kuruṣva prathamam tataḥ । drṣṭvā laṅkāṁ daśagrīvo hata ityeva manmahe ॥ 11॥

10-11. Have a look at those brilliant monkeys; they are ace warriors, the best in their race for their gallantry, skill, valour, invincibility, bravery and courage. They are ready even to enter the fire in order to do what is good and is pleasing to you.

[To wit, why do you feel so disheartened and dismayed. We are all ready to serve you with our lives. What makes me sad is that you feel so helpless inspite of our being by your side. Why, don't you see that these monkeys are raring to sacrifice their lives for you; and do you doubt their ability to successfully accomplish this mission? Oh Lord, abandon such negative thoughts. You will witness our courage and strength as soon as the war begins. Have faith on us, and trust my words that I give you upon my honour.] (10).

Lets first think about crossing the ocean, for that is the main physical problem that faces us. Lanka is no problem, for as soon as we see its shore and land there, we regard Ravana as good as dead.

[To wit, once we are across, the demons are no problem for us, for we can easily overcome them and crush the enemy. So let us concentrate our energy first in finding out a way to cross this ocean. As for the demons, what does it matter that they are strong, powerful, ferocious and wild. You have already heard what a single individual amongst us, I refer to Hanuman, has done to these seemingly invincible demons, so you can well imagine what will be the score when we unleash our combined wrath upon them. Truly, oh Lord, all hell would break upon the demons, and the fate that looms over the horizon of Lanka is worse than the final day of doom that is the destiny of all things in this mortal world.] (11).

नहि पश्याम्यहं कञ्चित्त्रिषु लोकेषु राघव ।
गृहीतधनुषो यस्ते तिष्ठेदभिमुखो रणे ॥ १२॥
सर्वथा नो जयो राम भविष्यति न संशयः । निमित्तानि च पश्यामि तथा भूतानि सर्वशः ॥ १३॥ nahi paśyāmyahaṃ kañcittriṣu lokeṣu rāghava । gr̥hītaḥ dhanuṣo yaste tiṣṭhedabhimukho raṇe ॥ 12॥ sarvathā no jayo rāma bhaviṣyati na saṃśayaḥ । nimittāni ca paśyāmi tathā bhūtāni sarvaśaḥ ॥ 13॥

12-13. Oh Raghav (Sri Ram)! I do not see (or imagine) that any warrior would be able to stand his ground in the battle-field once you face him and raise you brow at him. [To wit, no warrior, no matter who he is, would be a match for you in the battle-field. As soon as you look at your opponent angrily, he would shiver and tremble in fear of death. I don't believe that anyone would stand before you and manage to subdue you in a battle.] (12).

Oh Lord Ram! There is not the slightest of doubts that victory will be ours because I can see relevant omens everywhere that indicate our victory ' (13).

सुग्रीववचनं श्रुत्वा भक्तिवीर्यसमन्वितम् ।
अङ्गीकृत्याब्रवीद्रामो हनूमन्तं पुरःस्थितम् ॥ १४॥
येन केन प्रकारेण लङ्घयामो महार्णवम् । लङ्कास्वरूपं मे ब्रूहि दुःसाध्यं देवदानवैः ॥ १५॥ sugrīvavacanam śrutvā bhaktivīryasamanvitam । aṅgīkṛtyābravīdrāmo hanūmantam puraḥsthitam ॥ 14॥ yena kena prakāreṇa laṅghayāmo mahārṇavam । laṅkāśvarūpaṃ me brūhi duḥśādhyam devadānavaiḥ ॥ 15॥

14-15. Hearing these reassuring words of Sugriv, which were full of devotion, loyalty, encouragement, valour and manliness, Lord Ram accepted his advice. [To wit, after hearing Sugriv's council, Lord Ram determined that he was correct. So, instead of wasting time in brooding and inviting negative thoughts that would serve no purpose, it would be wiser to think positively and constructively. Yes, the Lord agreed with Sugriv, that the priority now was to plan how to cross the ocean. The rest can wait.]

So the Lord said to Hanuman (14), 'We shall first cross the ocean somehow. But do tell us about the general lay-out of Lanka; give us a general description of the place. It is said (and heard) that it is a very difficult and daunting prospect to win (and overcome) this city even for the Gods and other demons (who are not friendly with Ravana and do not have any treaty of allegiance with him, and who may think, to their own peril, of trying to capture Lanka by force).

[To wit, it is well known that it is almost impossible to take Lanka. You have already been there, and you have a personal experience of its security apparatus, as well as of its strength and weaknesses. You have successfully overcome all obstacles. And not only that, for you have successfully fought and defeated its army to a great extent, and have also burnt the city, something that is simply out of the imagination. So you are the proper person to advise us about Lanka, and how to penetrate and overcome it.] (15).

ज्ञात्वा तस्य प्रतीकारं करिष्यामि कपीश्वर ।
श्रुत्वा रामस्य वचनं हनूमान् विनयान्वितः ॥ १६॥
उवाच प्राञ्जलिर्देव यथा दृष्टं ब्रवीमि ते ।
लङ्का दिव्या पुरी देव त्रिकूटशिखरे स्थिता ॥ १७॥ jñātvā tasya pratikāraṃ kariṣyāmi kapīśvara । śrutvā rāmasya vacanaṃ hanūmān vinayānvitaḥ ॥ 16॥ uvāca prāñjalirdeva yathā dr̥ṣṭaṃ bravīmi te । laṅkā divyā purī deva trikūṭaśikhare sthitā ॥ 17॥

16-17. Oh the lord of monkeys (Hanuman)! Once I come to know about its design and layout, I shall think of and devise some way to overcome it'.

Hearing these words of Lord Ram, Hanuman joined his hands together in respect, and said politely (16), 'I shall submit before you whatever I have seen at Lanka. The majestic city is established on the summit of Mt. Trikoot (17).

स्वर्णप्राकारसहिता स्वर्णाट्टालकसंयुता ।
परिखाभिः परिवृता पूर्णाभिर्निर्मलोदकैः ॥ १८॥
नानोपवनशोभाद्या दिव्यवापीभिरावृता ।
गृहैर्विचित्रशोभाद्यैर्मणिस्तम्भमयैः शुभैः ॥ १९॥ svaṇapṛākārasahitā svaṇaṭṭālakasaṃyutā । parikhābhiḥ parivṛtā pūrṇābhirnirmalodakaiḥ ॥ 18॥

nānopavanaśobhāḍhyā divyavāpībhīrāvṛtā । grhairvicitraśobhāḍhyairmaṇistambhamayaiḥ śubhaiḥ ॥ 19॥

18-19. It has golden parapets and boundary walls; its tall buildings are also made of gold. It is surrounded on all the sides by deep moats and trenches full of clean water (18).

It looks very magnificent and grand due to the presence of many gardens, groves and orchards that sprinkle the city. They have numerous ponds and other water bodies located here and there. The buildings are adorned by pillars that are liberally studded with gems, crystals and other sorts of priceless jewels (19).

पश्चिमद्वारमासाद्य गजवाहाः सहस्रशः ।
उत्तरे द्वारि तिष्ठन्ति साश्ववाहाः सप्ततयः ॥ २०॥
तिष्ठन्त्यर्बुदसङ्ख्याकाः प्राच्यामपि तथैव च । रक्षिणो रक्षसा वीरा द्वारं दक्षिणमाश्रिताः ॥ २१॥ paścimadvāramāsādyā gajavāhāḥ sahasraśaḥ । uttare dvāri tiṣṭhanti sāśvavāhāḥ sapattayaḥ ॥ 20॥ tiṣṭhantyarbudasaṅkhyākāḥ prācyāmapī tathaiḥ ca । rakṣiṇo rākṣasā vīrā dvāraṁ dakṣiṇamāśritāḥ ॥ 21॥

20-21. Stationed near its western gate, there are thousands of war elephants; at the northern gate there is infantry as well as cavalry; at the eastern gate there are a thousand-million demon warriors, while the southern gate is protected by equal number of brave and courageous warriors (20-21).

मध्यकक्षेऽप्यसङ्ख्याता गजाश्वरथपत्तयः ।
रक्षयन्ति सदा लङ्कां नानास्तृकुशलाः प्रभो ॥ २२॥
सङ्क्रमैर्विविधैर्लङ्का शतघ्नीभिश्च संयुता । एवं स्थितेऽपि देवेश शृणु मे तत् चेष्टितम् ॥ २३॥ madhyakakṣe'pyasaṅkhyātā gajāśvarathapattayaḥ । rakṣayanti sadā laṅkāṁ nānāstrakuśalāḥ prabho ॥ 22॥ saṅkramairvividhairlaṅkā śataghñibhiśca saṁyutā । evaṁ sthite'pi deveśa śṛṇu me tatra ceṣṭitam ॥ 23॥

22-23. In the centre of the city there is a huge army consisting of countless numbers of elephants, horses, chariots and infantry troops tasked to constantly protect the city. All of them (the troops) are experts in using various types of arms and armaments (22).

The entrance to the city is protected by different types of tunnels and cannons. [These cannons were placed at the mouth of these tunnels so that in case of an attack by an enemy, when the main entrances are closed, the defending demon army can come out from these tunnels quietly to attack from the rear of the enemy, while the cannons are blazing fire and plummeting the enemy lines with mortar shells and fire balls to keep it at bay as well as to afford a covering fire for the troops who pour out of the tunnels.]

But oh Lord! In spite of the presence of all these formidable and insurmountable hurdles, hear what I have done (23).

दशाननबलौघस्य चतुर्थांशो मया हतः ।
 दग्ध्वा लङ्कां पुरीं स्वर्णप्रासादो धर्षितो मया ॥ २४॥
 शतघ्न्यः सङ्क्रमाश्चैव नाशिता मे रघूत्तम ।
 देव त्वद्दर्शनादेव लङ्का भस्मीकृता भवेत् ॥ २५॥
 प्रस्थानं कुरु देवेश गच्छामो लवणाम्बुधेः । तीरं सह महावीरैर्वानरैर्यैः समन्ततः ॥ २६॥ daśānanabalaughasya caturthāṃśo mayā hataḥ । dagdhvā laṅkāṃ purīm svarṇaprāsādo dharṣito mayā ॥ 24॥ śataghnyaḥ saṅkramāścaiva nāśitā me raghūttama । deva tvaddarśanādeva laṅkā bhasmīkṛtā bhavet ॥ 25॥ prasthānaṃ kuru deveśa gacchāmo lavaṇāmbudheḥ । tīraṃ saha mahāvīrairvānaraughaiḥ samantataḥ ॥ 26॥

24-26. I have destroyed (killed) one fourth of Ravana's army, have burnt Lanka, and have ruined (demolished) his golden palace (24).

Oh the most exalted in the family of king Raghu (Lord Ram)! I have destroyed the tunnels and cannons as well. Oh Lord! It is my belief that Lanka would be easily reduced to rubble as soon as your sight falls on it. [To wit, you can very easily conquer it.] (25).

Oh the Lord of Gods (deveśa)! Now you must make preparations to go there forthwith. We must collect our army of brave, courageous and strong monkey warriors from all the sides¹, and approach the shores of the great salty ocean' (26).

[Note—¹This conversation is taking place at Kishkindha, precisely on Mt. Prabarshan, where Lord Ram was waiting for Hanuman to come back. It was here that Hanuman had gone to report to Lord Ram about his successful mission to Lanka.

When the Lord learnt of the ocean, he was a wee whit worried. Sugriv had assured the Lord that it is useless to worry about a problem till we actually came face to face with it. Hanuman too endorses this view, and says that the top priority now should be to summon all the monkeys and bears and move to the shore of the ocean. No worthwhile purpose would be served in procrastination and brooding over matters that are still in the distant future. “We will cross the ocean when the time comes; but first let us go there” was the unanimous advice of Sugriv and Hanuman.]

श्रुत्वा हनूमतो वाक्यमुवाच रघुनन्दनः ।
 सुग्रीव सैनिकान् सर्वान् प्रस्थानायाभिनीदय ॥ २७॥
 इदानीमेव विजयो मुहुर्तः परिवर्तते ।
 अस्मिन्मुहुर्ते गत्वाहं लङ्कां राक्षससङ्कुलाम् ॥ २८॥

संप्रकारं सुदुर्धर्षां नाशयामि सरावणाम् । आनेष्यामि च सीतां मे दक्षिणाक्षि स्फुरत्यधः ॥ २९॥ śrutvā hanūmato vākyamuvāca raghunandanaḥ । sugrīva sainikān sarvān prasthānāyābhinodaya ॥ 27॥ idānīmeva vijayo muhurtaḥ parivartate । asminmuhurte gatvāhaṁ laṅkāṁ rākṣasasaṅkulām ॥ 28॥ saprākārāṁ sudurdharṣāṁ nāśayāmi sarāvaṇām । āneṣyāmi ca sītāṁ me dakṣiṇākṣi sphuratyadhaḥ ॥ 29॥

27-29. Hearing the words of Hanuman, Raghunandan (Lord Sri Ram) said, 'Oh Sugriv! Order all your troops (monkeys and bears) to set out immediately (27), because the auspicious time indicating victory exists at present. I shall go on the mission to Lanka which is full of demons (to liberate Sita and kill Ravana) during the currency of this very auspicious time (and I don't want to delay it) (28).

Lanka is very impregnable and virtually invincible as it is surrounded and well-protected by a huge fort with strong walls. I shall however destroy it along with its king Ravana, and bring Sita back. At this moment, the lower lid of my right eye is fluttering (which is considered a very good omen)¹ (29).

[Note—¹When the right part of a man's body flutters, such as the eyelids of Lord Ram in this case, it is considered as a good omen for him. For a woman the opposite applies—i.e. fluttering of the left side of her body is regarded good for her, as it happened in the case of Sita (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 35).]

प्रयातु वाहिनी सर्वा वानराणां तरस्विनाम् ।
रक्षन्तु यूथपाः सेनामग्रे पृष्ठे च पार्श्वयोः ॥ ३०॥
हनूमन्तमथारुह्य गच्छाम्यग्रेऽङ्गदं ततः । आरुह्य लक्ष्मणो यातु सुग्रीव त्वं मया सह ॥ ३१॥ prayātu vāhinī sarvā vānarāṇāṁ tarasvinām । rakṣantu yūthapāḥ senāmagre prṣṭhe ca pārśvayoḥ ॥ 30॥ hanūmantamathāruhya gacchāmyagre'ṅgadaṁ tataḥ । āruhya lakṣmaṇo yātu sugrīva tvaṁ mayā saha ॥ 31॥

30-31. Let the full army of brave and strong monkeys make its departure from here immediately. Those who are chieftains and commanders of the various army battalions and brigades, they should guard and protect the company under their command and charge from all the directions—from the front and the rear, and from the sides¹ (30).

Meanwhile, I shall ride on the shoulders of Hanuman right in the front (the vanguard) of the army, and Laxman shall follow me on the shoulders of Angad². And you, Sugriv, will accompany me (31).

[Note—¹Lord Ram instructed Sugriv to order his commanders and chieftains to be vigilant, and properly regulate the soldiers under their individual command and charge. They ought to move in the front, at the rear and on the sides of the column of troops to guide them and see that none of the monkey and bear warriors break discipline. The army must march in a formed and disciplined way, and not like a boisterous and haphazard crowd going for a picnic.

This precaution was necessary because Lord Ram had noticed by the behaviour of the monkeys and bears till this time that they were not accustomed to discipline and observing order. It was not their fault however, because they were forest dwellers, and were unregulated tribes not trained in accordance to the laws of conduct that were observed by city dwellers.

²Why did Lord Ram and Laxman ride on the backs of Hanuman and Angad respectively? The answer is that Lord Ram and Laxman were, after all, in the form of human beings, while the rest of the army consisted of monkeys and bears. The speed and agility of movement of humans cannot match with that of monkeys and bears across a wild terrain from Kishkindha to the northern shores of the ocean, which was, for the most part, thickly forested and mountainous. So it became expedient for the two brothers to ride on the shoulders of Hanuman and Angad.

And how did Sugriv march? He marched like all others, on foot.]

गजो गवाक्षो गवयो मैन्दो द्विविद एव च ।
नलो नीलः सुषेणश्च जाम्बवांश्च तथापरे ॥ ३२॥
सर्वे गच्छन्तु सर्वत्र सेनायाः शत्रुघातिनः ।
इत्याज्ञाप्य हरीन् रामः प्रतस्थे सहलक्ष्मणः ॥ ३३॥ gajo gavākṣo gavayo maindo dvivida eva ca । nalo nīlaḥ suṣeṇāśca jāmbavāṃśca tathāpare ॥ 32॥ sarve gacchantu sarvatra senāyāḥ śatrughātināḥ । ityājñāpya harīn rāmaḥ pratasthe sahalakṣmaṇaḥ ॥ 33॥

32-33. Guja, Gawaksha, Gawayo, Mainda, Dwivid, Nal, Neel, Sushen and Jamvant, as well as all other commanders who are skilled and proficient in destroying the enemy, should follow the army from its outer flanks (in order to maintain order as well as to guard the huge army from going off course, and to maintain control and discipline in its ranks).¹

Having thus instructed the monkeys, Lord Ram embarked on his mission, accompanied by Laxman at his side (32-33).

[Note—¹The reader should note from verse nos. 30-33 how Lord Ram and Laxman led the army, and how it was organised.]

सुग्रीवसहितो हर्षात्सेनामध्यगतो विभुः ।
वारणेन्द्रनिभाः सर्वे वानराः कामरूपिणः ॥ ३४॥
क्ष्वेलन्तः परिगर्जन्तो जग्मुस्ते दक्षिणां दिशम् । भक्षयन्तो ययुः सर्वे फलानि च मधूनि च ॥ ३५॥ sugrīvasahito harṣātsenāmadhyagato vibhuḥ । vāraṇendranibhāḥ sarve vānarāḥ kāmārūpiṇaḥ ॥ 34॥ kṣvelantaḥ parigarjanto jagmuste dakṣiṇām diśam । bhakṣayanto yayuḥ sarve phalāni ca madhūni ca ॥ 35॥

34-35. The ‘Vibhu’ (an epithet used for Lord Vishnu, meaning the Lord who is omnipresent, all-pervading, almighty, eternal and majestic; here referring obviously to Lord Ram) was moving ahead very cheerfully in the centre of the army, and Laxman was by his side¹. All the monkeys were huge in form as if they were all ‘king of elephants’ themselves, and all of them knew the magical tricks by which they could assume any form they wished (34).

All of them leapt, pranced, skipped, jumped and bounced aggressively as they moved along; they roared wildly, ate fruits and drank honey while moving swiftly in the south direction (towards the seashore) (35).

[Note—¹In verse no. 31, Lord Ram had said he will go in the front of the army while verse no. 34 now says that he was in the middle of the army. Well, here centre or middle does not mean the actual, physical, geometrical center of the army. It simply indicates that though he was leading the multitudes of soldiers from the front, there were so many excited and cheerful monkeys and bears walking in front of him, behind him and on his sides that he appeared to be in the virtual centre of the army as he was completely surrounded by his soldiers. And the Lord of course did not object as he was, by his very nature, very lovable, kind, gracious and accommodating; he noticed that the monkeys and bears found great satisfaction by being at his side, that they were so attached to him and adored him so much that they loved mobbing him rather than caring for observing the niceties of military discipline.

The Lord thought to himself at length: “How can I be stern enough to tell them to move back and walk in a regular file when they are so enthusiastic and emotionally attached to me, and find excess of joy by being at my side. I must remember that I owe my gratitude to them for helping me, that it is not a regular army of paid soldiers who are bound to serve their king for fear of punishment if they refuse, but that it is pure love and devotion and adoration that binds them to me, and which has motivated them to sacrifice their lives for me. I must reciprocate their sentiments and let them feel that I love them all as much as they love me, that there is no distance between them and me, that I treat them all as my own, and therefore they all have a right to claim closeness with me. If I become too rigid in observing protocol and good manners like one expects between an army and its commander-in-chief, I would emotionally alienate them, and that would be detrimental to my own interests. If these monkeys and bears treat me as one of them, as their close friend and dearest leader, then I too must forge a closer bond with them and let them feel easy with me, as it would make this army more and more committed to me, be faithful and loyal to me, and devoted to the success of my mission.

Verily, a wise king wins over his subjects and gains their loyalty and devotion more by his affectionate attitude and welcoming behaviour towards them than by trying to enforce his orders by stern measures and the fear of punishment. So, since the victory over the demons depends entirely on these monkeys and bears, I must cultivate an excellent rapport with them, I must endear them and motivate them at the personal and emotional level by making them feel that I too enjoy their company as much as they do mine. It is prudent for me to understand that an informal relationship will work better for me in the case with monkeys and bears.”]

ब्रुवन्तो राघवस्याग्रे हनिष्यामोऽद्य रावणम् । एवं ते वानरश्रेष्ठा गच्छन्त्यतुलविक्रमाः ॥ ३६॥
 हरिभ्यामुह्यमानौ तौ शुशुभाते रघूत्तमौ ।
 नक्षत्रैः सेवितौ यद्वच्चन्द्रसूर्याविवाम्बरे ॥ ३७॥ bruvanto rāghavasyāgre haniṣyāmo'dya rāvaṇam । evaṃ te vānaraśreṣṭhā gacchantyatulavikramāḥ ॥ 36॥ haribhyāmuhyamānau tau śuśubhāte raghūttamau । nakṣatraiḥ sevitaṃ yadvaccandrasūryāvivāmbare ॥ 37॥

36-37. In this way, the matchless army of valiant and mighty monkeys (and bears) moved along with Lord Raghav (Lord Ram), crying for vengeance and shouting in a shrill voice that they would kill Ravana the same day that they see him (36).

The two most exalted ones in the clan of Raghu (i.e. Lord Ram and Laxman) looked so glorious, so adorable and so magnificent while moving ahead, riding as they were on the shoulders of Hanuman and Angad respectively, that they resembled the Sun and the Moon which look so majestic in the sky as they move along the firmament surrounded by countless stars and other heavenly bodies that dot the sky¹ (37).

[Note—¹Here Lord Ram and Laxman are compared to the Sun and the Moon to signify how majestic they looked as they moved ahead with their army, surrounded by hundreds and thousands of monkey and bears. The Sun and the Moon are the most prominent and splendorous entities in the sky even though there are countless other heavenly glittering bodies surrounding them. Similarly, though the brave monkey and bear warriors were all remarkable and glorious in their own right, but Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman stood out prominently in their midst.]

आवृत्य पृथिवीं कृत्स्नां जगाम महती चमूः ।
 प्रस्फोटयन्तः पुच्छाग्रानुद्वहन्तश्च पादपान् ॥ ३८॥
 शैलानारोहयन्तश्च जग्मुर्मरुतवेगतः ।
 असङ्ख्याताश्च सर्वत्र वानराः परिपूरिताः ॥ ३९॥
 हृष्टास्ते जग्मुस्त्यर्थं रामेण परिपालिताः ।
 गता चमूर्दिवारात्रं क्वचिन्नासज्जत क्षणम् ॥ ४०॥ āvṛtya pṛthivīm kṛtsnāṃ jagāma mahatī camūḥ । prasphoṭayantaḥ pucchāgrānudvahantaśca pādapān ॥ 38॥ śailānārohayantaśca jagmurmārutavegataḥ । asaṅkhyātāśca sarvatra vānarāḥ paripūrītāḥ ॥ 39॥ hrṣṭāste jagmurateyartham rāmeṇa paripālītāḥ । gatā camūrdivārātram kvacinnaśajjata kṣaṇam ॥ 40॥

38-40. That huge army almost covered the earth from end to end as it moved ahead (i.e. it stretched as far as the eyes could see). The monkeys shook, twirled, whirled, jerked, swayed, twisted and thrashed their tails; they uprooted trees, jumped and hopped on mountains and hills en-route, and moved swiftly with the speed of wind. At that time, uncountable numbers of monkeys could be visible in all the directions (38-39).

Being protected by Lord Ram (and being assured that they are safe and sound with Lord Ram with them as their supreme commander), they were cheerfully moving ahead with great agility and speed (without fear and doubt). That formidable monkey army moved day and night, without stopping even for a moment (40).

काननानि विचित्राणि पश्यन्मलयसह्ययोः ।
ते सह्यं समतिक्रम्य मलयं च तथा गिरिम् ॥ ४१॥
आयुश्चानुपूर्व्येण समुद्रं भीमनिःस्वनम् ।
अवतीर्य हनूमन्तं रामः सुग्रीवसंयुतः ॥ ४२॥
सलिलाभ्याशमासाद्य रामो वचनमब्रवीत् । आगताः स्मो वयं सर्वे समुद्रं मकरालयम् ॥ ४३॥
इतो गन्तुमशक्यं नो निरुपायेन वानराः ।
अत्र सेनानिवेशोऽस्तु मन्त्रायामोऽस्य तारणे ॥ ४४॥ kānanāni vicitrāṇi paśyanmalayasahyayoḥ । te sahyaṃ samatikramya malayaṃ ca tathā girim ॥ 41॥ āyauścānupūrvyeṇa samudraṃ bhīmaniḥsvanam । avatīrya hanūmantam rāmaḥ sugrīvasaṃyutaḥ ॥ 42॥ salilābhyāśamāsādya rāmo vacanamabravīt । āgatāḥ smo vayaṃ sarve samudraṃ makarālayam ॥ 43॥ ito gantumaśakyaṃ no nirupāyena vānarāḥ । atra senāniveśo'stu mantrayāmo'sya tāraṇe ॥ 44॥

41-44. At last, seeing the magnificent but strange forest between Malayachal and Sahayadri mountains (i.e. the valley between these two mountains), they crossed it, and finally the army reached the shores of the vast ocean which was roaring most fiercely. Then Lord Ram got off the shoulders of Hanuman, and, accompanied by Sugriv (41-42) —

—He approached the water of the ocean. As the Lord stood on its shore, he observed, 'We have come to the shore of the ocean which is full of ferocious alligators and other deadly marine creatures (43). We cannot go across it without adopting some special strategy; it has become imperative for us now to somehow find a mean by which to cross this barrier. So pitch a camp for the army here. Once the army is settled, we shall then discuss amongst ourselves how to cross the ocean.' (44).

श्रुत्वा रामस्य वचनं सुग्रीवः सागरान्तिके ।
सेनां न्यवेशयत् क्षिप्रं रक्षितां कपिकुञ्जरैः ॥ ४५॥

ते पश्यन्तो विषेदुस्तं सागरं भीमदर्शनम् । महोन्नततरङ्गाद्यं भीमनक्रभयङ्करम् ॥ ४६॥ śrutvā rāmasya vacanaṃ sugrīvaḥ sāgarāntike । senāṃ nyaveśayat kṣipraṃ rakṣitāṃ kapikuñjaraiḥ ॥ 45॥ te paśyanto viṣedustaṃ sāgaraṃ bhīmadarśanam । mahonnatatarāṅgādhyam bhīmanakrabhayaṅkaram ॥ 46॥

45-46. Hearing the words of Lord Ram, Sugriv ordered the army to pitch its camp near the ocean. The chief warriors amongst them began to maintain a strict vigil over the army from all sides, to ensure that the soldiers maintained discipline and order (45).

Seeing the dreadful, ferocious and turbulent nature of the ocean which was full of huge surging waves as well as other obstructions that seemed virtually insurmountable, very daunting and formidable, all of them were extremely baffled; their minds and hearts despaired, and they all felt suddenly dejected by the difficulty of the task at hand¹ (46).

[Note—¹When the army reached the ocean they were confronted by a frightening sight that sapped all their energy and enthusiasm. There stretched before them, as far as the horizon, a frightful mass of water that roared and heaved menacingly. It was easy for the army to walk on solid ground, and till now the warriors were full of hope and energy as they moved rapidly across forests and mountains and valleys, but when they saw the massive ocean suddenly blocking their way, they became totally dejected and hopeless. What to do now, they wondered in bewilderment.]

अगाधं गगनाकारं सागरं वीक्ष्य दुःखिताः ।
तरिष्यामः कथं घोरं सागरं वरुणालयम् ॥ ४७॥
हन्तव्योऽस्माभिरद्यैव रावणो राक्षसाधमः ।
इति चिन्ताकुलाः सर्वे रामपार्श्वे व्यवस्थिताः ॥ ४८॥ agādham gaganākāraṃ sāgaraṃ vīkṣya duḥkhitāḥ । tariṣyāmaḥ katham ghoram sāgaraṃ varuṇālayam ॥ 47॥ hantavyo'smābhiradyaiva rāvaṇo rākṣasādhamah । iti cintākulāḥ sarve rāmapārśve vyavasthitāḥ ॥ 48॥

47-48. They felt extremely remorseful, hapless, helpless and gloomy on seeing that ocean which was as fathomless and without an end as the sky. They were extremely baffled and dumbstruck, and began to wonder, 'How shall we cross this vast abode (or a huge receptacle) of water (i.e. the ocean)? (47). We have to kill (overcome and get rid of) the evil, lowly and wicked demon Ravana today itself (but what can we do now, how shall we reach him when this ocean is obstructing our way?)'.

Gravely worrying, brooding gloomily and feeling confounded thus, all of them sat besides Lord Ram (to hold a conference, discuss the matter, and find a resolution of this vexing problem) (48).

रामः सीतामनुस्मृत्य दुःखेन महतावृतः । विलाप्य जानकीं सीतां बहुधा कार्यमानुषः ॥ ४९॥
 अद्वितीयश्चिदात्मैकः परमात्मा सनातनः ।
 यस्तु जानाति रामस्य स्वरूपं तत्त्वतो जनः ॥ ५०॥
 तं न स्पृशति दुःखादि किमुतानन्दमव्ययम् ।
 दुःखहर्षभयक्रोधलोभमोहमदादयः ॥ ५१॥
 अज्ञानलिङ्गान्येतानि कुतः सन्ति विदात्मनि । देहाभिमानिनो दुःखं न देहस्य विदात्मनः ॥ ५२॥ rāmaḥ sītāmanusmṛtya duḥkhena mahatāvṛtaḥ । vilapya jānakīm sītāṃ bahudhā kāryamānuṣaḥ ॥ 49॥ advitiyaścidātmaikaḥ paramātmā sanātanaḥ । yastu jānāti rāmasya svarūpaṃ tattvato janaḥ ॥ 50॥ taṃ na spr̥śati duḥkhādi kimutānandamavyayam । duḥkhaharṣabhayakrodhalobhamohamadādayaḥ ॥ 51॥ ajñānalingānyetāni kutaḥ santi cidātmani । dehābhimānino duḥkhaṃ na dehasya cidātmanaḥ ॥ 52॥

49-52. Lord Ram was already in a gloomy mood as he remembered his separation from Sita and brooded over the prospects of ever seeing her again, especially when he was confronted by the mighty ocean that stood as a formidable challenge for him.

Though the Lord is the one without a second, as he is eternal and the enlightened Parmatma (the Supreme Being) himself personified, still he wailed and lamented for Sita in various ways because he had assumed the form of a human being to complete an assignment (of the Gods)¹.

Verily indeed, if even those persons who know or are aware of the real, essential and truthful form and nature of Lord Sri Ram as being the almighty and eternal Supreme Being (49-50) –

– Are freed from all sorrows and miseries associated with life in this world, then how can the Lord himself feel sorrowful and miserable?

Forsooth and without gainsay, the feeling of sorrow, misery, pain and grief, of happiness and joy, of anger and wrath, of wants and longings, of greed and rapacity, of attractions and attachments, of ego, arrogance and haughtiness, et al,--all are founded on ignorance and delusions so characteristic of this gross mundane world. Say, how can Lord Ram, the enlightened and wise supreme Soul, the pure Consciousness, the Supreme Being, ever be accused of having these negative thoughts and worldly emotions?

[To wit, Lord Ram is free from all such worldly traits, but he had to play his role of a human being to complete perfection with the noble aim of eliminating the demons, so he was obliged to behave like a man who has lost his wife and faces a formidable obstacle that may prevent him from finding and rescuing her.] (51-52)

[Note—¹The assignment was to kill the demons on behalf of the Gods and free the earth of its burden, and for this purpose strict secrecy was to be maintained because Ravana had got a boon that only a human being would be able to kill him, and only monkeys would be able to subdue his might. If the secret leaked out that Lord Ram was not a human being, and these monkeys and bears were the many gods in their forms, then Ravana would get a ground to invoke the conditions of the boon and evade being killed. If this unfortunately happens, then the whole purpose of Lord Ram taking the trouble of coming to Lanka with his army of monkeys and bears would be defeated.

Hence, it was imperative for Lord Ram to behave exactly like a human being would behave in any given set of circumstances. That is why he let it appear that this ocean is too much for him, although he was the almighty Supreme Being himself, and as such he could have very easily tamed the ocean by the simple measure of drying it up or ordering it to part in the middle just like the red sea parted for Moses in the story of the Holy Bible in the Old Testament.]

सम्प्राप्ते दयाभावात्सुखमात्रं हि दृश्यते ।
बुद्ध्याद्यभावात्संशुद्धे दुःखं तत्र न दृश्यते । अतो दुःखादिकं सर्वं बुद्धेरेव न संशयः ॥ ५३॥ samprasāde dvayābhāvātsukhamātram hi drśyate । buddhyādyabhāvātsaṁśuddhe duḥkham tatra na drśyate । ato duḥkhādikaṁ sarvaṁ buddhereva na saṁśayaḥ ॥ 53॥

53. In the state of ‘Samadhi’ (a meditative trance-like state), there is total absence of duality. In this state of higher spiritual existence, the mind with all its inherent fickleness and worldly desires too ceases to exist. Hence, during this state of existence one experiences nothing but pure bliss and happiness. Therefore, it goes without saying that all feelings of miseries, pain and grief arise due to the mind with its focus on a gross world, but they cease to matter when the mind is de-linked from this gross physical world.

[To wit, in higher states of meditation all distinction between the mortal world and the immortal world is removed because the former cease to exist and only the latter prevails. This world of immortality is represented by pure consciousness. This world of consciousness is full of bliss and beatitude; there is no trace of sorrow or misery here.] (53)

रामः परात्मा पुरुषः पुराणो नित्योदितो नित्यसुखो निरीहः । तथापि मायागुणसङ्गतोऽसौ सुखीव दुःखीव विभाव्यतेऽबुधैः ॥ ५४॥

rāmaḥ parātmā puruṣaḥ purāṇo nityodito nityasukho nirīhaḥ । tathāpi māyāguṇasaṅgato'sau sukhīva duḥkhīva vibhāvyate'budhaiḥ ॥ 54॥

54. Lord Ram is verily the Parmatma (the Supreme Soul, the Supreme Being) (rāmaḥ parātmā); he is the Puran Purush (“puruṣaḥ purāṇo”; one who is most ancient, one who is mentioned and extolled by the Purans, the ancient scriptures); he is self-illuminated and an embodiment of eternal light (representing wisdom, truthful knowledge and enlightenment—“nityodito”); he is an image and an embodiment of eternal and truthful bliss, happiness, joy and delight (nityasukho); and he is disinterested, unattached, unaffected and not influenced by anything pertaining to this gross mundane world of artificiality (nirīhaḥ).

But ignorant and foolish people regard or consider him (Lord Sri Ram) to be either happy or sorrowful by the virtue of the characteristic features of delusions which envelop the mind-intellect apparatus of the creature.

[To wit, those who are not wise and enlightened think Lord Ram as an ordinary human being who is subjected to all emotions so characteristic of ordinary mortal creatures in this world. This mis-belief arises out of delusions that overwhelm all living beings in this mortal world, except a few who are self-realised, wise and enlightened, as the latter are free from the influence of Maya.] (54).

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे
प्रथमः सर्गः ॥ १॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
prathamah sargaḥ ॥ 1॥

Thus ends Canto 1 of Yuddha Kand (Lanka Kand) of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and his divine consort Uma.

-----**-----

Section 8.3: Geetawali Ramayan

{Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse no. 22.}

Tulsidas' classic "Geetawali Ramayan" also briefly describes the departure of Lord Ram's army from Kishkindha and its arrival on the shore of the ocean in Sundar Kand, verse no. 22. Since it covers the entire episode in a single verse it is a sort of a recapitulation of the event in brief. Now let us read it:-

वानरसेनाकी लंकायात्रा
राग मारु

(5 / 22)

जब रघुबीर पयानो कीन्हों।
छुभित सिंधु, डगमगत महीधर, सजि सारंग कर लीन्हों॥ 1॥
सुनि कठोर टंकोर घोर अति चौंके बिधि-त्रिपुरारि। जटापटल ते चली सुरसरी सकत न संभु सँभारि॥ 2॥
भए बिकल दिगपाल सकल, भय भरे भुवन दस चारि। खरभर लंक, ससंक दसानन, गरभ स्रवहिं अरि-नारि॥ 3॥
कटकटात भट भालु, बिकट मरकट करि केहरि-नाद।

कूदत करि रघुनाथ—सपथ उपरी—उपरा बदि बाद॥ 4॥
 गिरि—तरुधर, नख मुख कराल, रद कालहु करत बिषाद।
 चले दस दिसि रिस भरि 'धरु घरु' कहि, 'को बराक मनुजाद'?॥ 5॥ पवन पंगु पावक—पतंग—ससि दुरि गए, थके बिमान।
 जाचत सुर निमेष, सुरनायक नयन—भार अकुलान॥ 6॥
 गए पूरि सर धूरि, भूरि भय अग थल जलधि समान।
 नभ—निसान, हनुमान—हाँक सुनि समुझत कोउ न अपान॥ 7॥
 दिग्गज—कमठ—कोल—सहसानन धरत धरनि धरि धीर।
 बारहि बार अमरषत, करषत, करकैं परीं सरीर॥ 8॥
 चली चमू, चहु ओर सोर, कछु बनै न बरने भीर। किलकिलात, कसमसत, कोलाहल होत नीरनिधि—तीर॥ 9॥
 जातुधानपति जानि कालबस मिले बिभीषन आइ।
 सरनागत—पालक कृपालु कियो तिलक लियो अपनाइ॥ 10॥ कौतुकही बारिधि बँधाइ उतरे सुबेल—तट जाइ।
 तुलसिदास गढ़ देखि फिरे कपि, प्रभु—आगमन सुनाइ॥ 11॥

vānarasēnākī laṅkāyātrā
 rāga mārū

(5/22)

jaba raghubīra payānō kīnhōm.
 chubhita sindhu, ḍagamagata mahīdhara, saji sārāṅga kara līnhōm.. 1..
 suni kaṭhōra ṭaṅkōra ghōra ati cauṅkē bidhi-tripurāri.
 jāṭapaṭala tē calī surasarī sakata na sambhu saṁbhāri.. 2..
 bha'e bikala digapāla sakala, bhaya bharē bhuvana dasa cāri.
 kharabhara laṅka, sasaṅka dasānana, garabha sravahim ari-nāri.. 3.. kaṭakaṭāta bhaṭa bhālu, bikaṭa marakaṭa kari kēhari-nāda.
 kūdata kari raghunātha-sapatha uparī-uparā badi bāda.. 4.. giri-tarudhara, nakha mukha karāla, rada kālahu karata biṣāda.
 calē dasa disi risa bhari 'dharu gharu' kahi, 'kō barāka manujāda'?..5..
 pavana paṅgu pāvaka-pataṅga-sasi duri ga'e, thakē bimāna.
 jācata sura nimēṣa, suranāyaka nayana-bhāra akulāna.. 6..
 ga'e pūri sara dhūri, bhūri bhaya aga thala jaladhi samāna.
 nabha-nisāna, hanumāna-hāṁka suni samujhata kō'u na apāna.. 7..
 diggaja-kamaṭha-kōla-sahasānana dharata dharani dhari dhīra.
 bārahi bāra amaraṣata, karaṣata, karakaim parim sarīra.. 8..
 calī camū, cahu ōra sōra, kachu banai na baranē bhīra.
 kilakilāta, kasamasata, kōlāhala hōta nīranidhi-tīra.. 9..
 jātudhānapati jāni kālabasa milē bibhīṣana ā'i.
 saranāgata-pālaka kṛpālu kiyo tilaka liyo apanā'i..10..
 kautukahī bāridhi baṁdhā'i utarē subēla-taṭa jā'i.
 tulasidāsa gaṛha dēkhi phirē kapi, prabhu-āgamana sunā'i..11..

Verse no. 5/22—[A huge army of brave and valiant monkeys and bears who were war veterans was immediately assembled and it departed from Kishkindha for Lanka. The following verse describe this army and how it wended its way to the shores of Lanka. Ravana's younger brother too joined hands with Lord Ram after he was insulted by his brother in open court.

The narration of these events are described in detail in Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, (i) Doha no. 35 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 8-19 and Chanda line nos. 1-8; (ii) from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 41—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 46; (iii) Doha no. 57—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 60; and (b) Lanka Kand, (iv) from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 2; (v) from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4—to Doha no. 5; (vi) Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 11.]

At the time of Lord Ram's departure (with his army), the ocean became turbulent and mountains trembled. [There was a great tumult in the world as the earth shook and the oceans heaved and the mountains rocked as if a great earth-quake was occurring.]

Presently, Lord Ram took his bow in his hands (as he got ready for departure from Kishkindha) (1).

The Lord twanged his formidable bow to announce the departure of his army, whereat even Brahma (the creator) Mahadeo (Lord Shiva, the concluder) and other exalted Gods were startled and stunned at its fierce sound that resembled the sound of the thunderbolt (as it is heard at the time of dooms-day).

River Ganges slipped (in shock) from Lord Shiva's matted hairs, and he could not control her (i.e. there were floods) (2).

All the guardians of the world became uneasy and alarmed; all the fourteen directions of the world were filled with fear.

Meanwhile, there was turmoil in Lanka. Ravana's ears stood on alert, and wives of the demons miscarried (3).

The bears and monkeys began to grind their teeth, and invoking Lord Ram and taking oath in his name, they jumped one on top of the other in excitement (4).

They had trees and mountains in their raised hands. Even the God of death feared their ferocious-looking sharp nails, claws and teeth.

Shouting 'catch him, catch him (with reference to Ravana, the demon king)—what is that demon in front of us'—they enthusiastically soared and moved in all the directions (like the dark clouds that cover the sky on the dooms-day) (5).

So much dust was raised by the movement of the Lord's army that the Wind God got paralysed (i.e. he was unable to move due to the weight of dust particles; the atmosphere was suffocative and dust got suspended thickly in the air).

The sun, the moon and the fire were eclipsed; the chariots of Gods lost their way (in darkness); and since the Gods don't blink their eyes, they got choked with dust so much so that Indra's (king of God's) eyelids became heavy and swollen, and all the other Gods prayed so that this turmoil ends quickly (6).

Many ponds and lakes got filled with the kicked-up dust, and the hollow formed when mountains were uprooted and shifted or toppled over were filled with huge ocean-like water bodies.

No one could hear even himself due to the din and noise created by God's drums in the sky and the roaring of Hanuman on the ground (7).

The brave 'Kurma' (the Tortoise), Varaaha (the Boar) and Shesh Nath (the Serpent God) had somehow managed to hold the earth somehow, with courage and great difficulty, and prevent it from toppling over on its side. Their bones creaked due to fatigue and weight of the army, so they had to repeatedly stretch in weariness to ease their tired bones and muscles (8).

In this way, when the army of monkeys started on their mission, there was phenomenal turbulence, turmoil, uproar and upheaval everywhere on this earth.

It is not possible to describe the immensity and the huge proportion of the crowd: the monkeys were jeering, yelling and cheering, and they were so large in number that they jam-packed the path elbow to elbow. There was a loud and uproarious noise near the ocean's shore (9).

At this moment, Vibhishan came to meet Lord Ram because he had recognised the fact that the demons had subjugated themselves to God of Death and Destruction (Kaal).

Lord Ram, who is naturally benevolent and merciful to refugees who have come to seek refuge at his holy feet, anointed him (as the king of Lanka), and accepted him¹ (10).

[¹It so happened that Vibhishan had tried to make Ravana see sense and avoid a ruinous war for the sake of a woman, a cause of war that made no sense. But death was facing Ravana in his face and had corrupted his wisdom. He publicly insulted Vibhishan and taunted him to leave his kingdom and go join Ram if he is so favourably inclined to him, forcing the latter to abandon Lanka and go to seek refuge with Lord Ram. The Lord immediately accepted him, and by way of showing his appreciation as well as a military strategy he anointed Vibhishan the future king of Lanka. This the Lord did to motivate Vibhishan to remain royal to him with the hope that if the Lord wins the war he would be made the king of Lanka.

These developments are narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 49.]

Then, they constructed a bridge across the ocean² as if it was a mere play for them, crossed it, and landed on the other side, and set up camp near Mt. Subel³.

Tulsidas says that the scouts among the monkeys went ahead, surveyed the fort, and leaving the message of Lord Ram's arrival at Lanka, came back to the camp⁴ (11).

[²Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 2.

³Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 11.

⁴Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line nos. 3-10 that precede Doha no. 5.]

-----**-----

Chapter 9

Vibhishan, the brother of Ravana, joins Lord Ram

In this Chapter no. 9 we read how and why Vibhishan, the brother of the demon king Ravana, had come to seek refuge with Lord Ram, and join him in his campaign against Ravana and the rest of the demons. Lord Ram warmly welcomed Vibhishan, showed great affection by embracing him, and treated him as an equal while accepting him in his camp. Not only this, the Lord was so glad that Vibhishan came to join him that he wished to reward him, and so he forthwith anointed Vibhishan as the next king of Lanka.

This Chapter has four sections as follows:

Section 9.1—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 50.

Section 9.2—Kavitawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse no. 32.

Section 9.3—Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto no. 2 (full)—to Canto 3, verse nos. 1-47.

Section 9.4—Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 23-45.

Section 9.1: Ram Charit Manas

{Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 50.}

चौ०. उहाँ निसाचर रहहिं ससंका । जब तें जारि गयउ कपि लंका ॥ १ ॥
 निज निज गृहं सब करहिं बिचारा । नहिं निसिचर कुल केर उबारा ॥ २ ॥
 जासु दूत बल बरनि न जाई । तेहि आएँ पुर कवन भलाई ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

uhāṁ nisācara rahahim sasaṅkā. jaba tēm jāri gaya'u kapi laṅkā. 1.
 nija nija grhaṁ saba karahim bicārā. nahim niscara kula kēra ubārā. 2.
 jāsu dūta bala barani na jāī. tēhi ā'ēṁ pura kavana bhalāī. 3.

[Now, let us leave Lord Ram and his army on the shore of the ocean, and divert our attention to learn about the developments in Lanka where a lot of turmoil ensued in the wake of Hanuman burning the city, thrashing and killing its army mercilessly, and then fearlessly left the city, without any opposition or resistance, to go back to Kishkindha to report to Lord Ram. This clearly implied that the demons were sore affright and terrified of him, as not a single demon warrior dared to challenge him as he was leaving the city on his way home.]

Ever since the Kapi (Hanuman) burnt Lanka and went away, there was a heavy atmosphere of gloom and dismay in the city. The demons (who were not accustomed to such a severe beating and shame inflicted upon them by a lonely intruder in the form of a humble monkey) were extremely terrorized and bewildered; they lived in a perpetual environment of great fear, uncertainty and consternation. (1)

They gathered together in small groups in their homes, and discussed the developments. The unanimous view was that the demon race was now doomed, and that there seemed no chances of escape from the calamity that stares blankly in their faces. (2)

The general thread of conversation amongst the distraught and terrified demon citizens was this: “He¹ whose mere messenger is so powerful, strong and devastating (and who has caused such havoc single handedly, with no one daring to stop him), say what will happen when he himself arrives here with the full force of his army, and unleashes the fury of his anger!” (3)

[Note—¹The demons were well aware that Hanuman was simply a messenger of Lord Ram whose wife Sita was kidnapped and brought to the city of Lanka by their king Ravana. So they mean Lord Ram here. The citizens’ homes were burnt, and countless demon warriors were either killed or severely wounded in confrontation with Hanuman. All these developments left the inhabitants of Lanka dazed and befuddled.]

दूतिन्ह सन सुनि पुरजन बानी । मंदोदरी अधिक अकुलानी ॥ ४ ॥
 रहसि जोरि कर पति पग लागी । बोली बचन नीति रस पागी ॥ ५ ॥ कंत करष हरि सन परिहरहू । मोर कहा अति हित हियँ धरहू ॥ ६ ॥ dūtinha sana suni purajana bānī. mandōdarī adhika akulānī. 4.

 rahasi jōri kara pati paga lāgī. bōlī bacana nīti rasa pāgī. 5.
 kanta karaṣa hari sana pariharahū. mōra kahā ati hita hiyaṁ dharahū. 6.

When Mandodari, the wife of Ravana, heard of what the citizens were saying through the medium of spies and informers, she was extremely agitated and worried¹. (4)

When she found her husband alone in the palace, she fell down at his feet, and clasping them in supplication, she pleaded with him using sweet words which were wise and full of prudence. (5)

Mandodari said, ‘My dear husband (kanta)! Please abandon animosity with Lord Hari (the Supreme Being; Lord Vishnu who was in the form of Lord Ram). Understand that what I say is for your own profound good, and with this view pay heed to my salutary words of wisdom and keep them in your heart.

[To wit, don’t take me in the wrong sense, don’t think that I am disloyal to you by pointing out your faults and misdemeanours. Listen to my advice as it is for your own good, and pay attention to me. Understand that your welfare is intrinsically linked to my own welfare as I am your wife; and so I can never say anything that will be harmful for you.] (6)

[Note—¹Mandodari came to learn about the gloomy developments and the demoralizing impact they had on the morale of the city when her confidantes informed her about them. She knew the evil, sinful, stubborn and haughty nature of her husband Ravana more than anyone else, and so she feared for the worst. But nevertheless she decided to try and make her husband see the light of reason, and hoped that good sense would somehow prevail upon him.

The question arises that if Mandodari could learn from spies about the things the citizens were saying, why no such information was received by Ravana? The reason lies in Ravana's nature—he was so wrathful and short-tempered, so haughty, arrogant and egoist that he was unwilling to hear anything that did not suit him or that he did not want to hear, that anyone who dared to inform him about the rumblings in the city would not only bear the brunt of his anger, and immediately put to death himself, but would certainly also cause those whom he report to be subjected to a merciless death. So, Ravana's nature went against him as he was kept in the dark about the fact that the city was mentally revolting against him, that the demon army was demoralized, and that tremors of mutiny were rumbling right under his very nose.

During the course of our reading we shall discover this feature in Ravana's character—that he was egoist, stubborn and arrogant to the extreme, and that he would pay no attention to any advice by anyone about anything, no matter how good that advice was, once he had decided on a course of action.

Though it can be argued that it is a good sign for a king to be determined and resolute in his decisions and actions, but at the same time it is expected of a good king that he keeps his mind open to wise council and good advice of his close confidantes such as his own ministers and advisors, and is able to take into account the changes in situations to modify his responses to them. Stubbornness and haughtiness of mind that does not want to accommodate views of others, and thinks that what it thinks is correct and what others think is wrong, without even bothering to weigh the pros and the cons of the various options, would surely ruin the king and would be detrimental for the welfare of his kingdom.]

समुझत जासु दूत कइ करनी । स्रवहिं गर्भ रजनीचर घरनी ॥ ७ ॥

तासु नारि निज सचिव बोलाई । पठवहु कंत जो चहहु भलाई ॥ ८ ॥ samujhata jāsu dūta ka'i karanī. sravahim garbha rajanīcara gharanī. 7.

tāsu nāri nija saciva bōlāī. paṭhavahu kanta jō cahahu bhalāī. 8.

As soon as the wives of the demons hear and recall the fearsome deeds of the messenger, they become so horrified with terror that they miscarry. (7)

Oh my lord (kanta)! If you want your own good (and welfare of the kingdom) then summon your minister and send back the wife of that Lord whose messenger had instilled such great fear in the demons. (8)

तव कुल कमल बिपिन दुखदाई । सीता सीत निसा सम आई ॥ ९ ॥

सुनहु नाथ सीता बिनु दीन्हें । हित न तुम्हार संभु अज कीन्हें ॥ १० ॥ tava kula kamala bipina dukhadā'ī. sītā sīta nisā sama ā'ī. 9.

sunahu nātha sītā binu dīnhēm. hita na tumhāra sambhu aja kīnhēm. 10.

Sita has become a symbol of doom for the entire race of demons who were hitherto living peacefully in the city of Lanka. She is like that frosty night that spells doom for a bed of lotuses that otherwise bloom in a pond.

[To wit, even as a frosty night destroys a bed of lotuses that otherwise bloom in a pond during ordinary nights, Sita too has become ruinous for the demon race which lived happily in Lanka till now. Just as the lotuses bloom in a pond but wither during frost, the demons have become distressed and gloomy ever since Sita came here.]¹ (9)

Listen my lord; without giving Sita back you can never expect any good for yourself. Even Lord Shiva and Lord Brahma themselves won't be able to help you at all.

[To wit, if you think that you have nothing to fear because you worship Lord Shiva and Lord Brahma, and that they would protect you, then listen, even they won't come to your aid if you do not return Sita to her rightful Lord (Ram). Lords Shiva and Brahma cannot side with you and neglect your evil deeds, for these gods cannot condone sins, impropriety and unrighteousness. You are deceiving yourself if you harbour such false beliefs; they are misconceptions that would drive you to your own grave.] (10)

[Note—¹In this metaphor, Sita is like the symbolic frosty night that causes the lotus flowers to shrink; the demon race is like the lotus flower, and Lanka is like the pond in which the lotus flowers bloomed prior to being struck by frost. The city was prosperous and the demons lived happily, but since Sita came here everything turned gloomy and uncertain.]

दो०. राम बान अहि गन सरिस निकर निसाचर भेक । जब लगि ग्रसत न तब लगि जतनु करहु तजि टेक ॥ ३६ ॥
dōhā.

rāma bāna ahi gana sarisa nikara nisācara bhēka.
jaba lagi grasata na taba lagi jatanu karahu taji tēka. 36.

The arrows of Lord Ram are like fierce serpents, and the demon hordes are like mere frogs in their comparison.

So therefore, till the time those serpents (arrows) do not devour (kill) the frogs (demons), you still have time in your hands to put things in order. Abandon stubbornness and haughtiness, and find a way to save the demons from doom while still there is time with you.' (Doha no. 36)

चौ०. श्रवन सुनी सठ ता करि बानी । बिहसा जगत बिदित अभिमानी ॥ १ ॥
सभय सुभाउ नारि कर साचा । मंगल महुँ भय मन अति काचा ॥ २ ॥
caupā'ī.

śravana sunī saṭha tā kari bānī. bihasā jagata bidita abhimānī. 1.
sabhaya subhā'u nāri kara sākā. maṅgala mahuṁ bhaya mana ati kākā. 2.

When that stupid fellow (Ravana) who was renowned in the world as being exceedingly haughty, arrogant and egoist, heard her (Mandodari's) words that he took as admonishment, he roared with laughter defiantly. (1)

He haughtily retorted, 'Truly it is said that a woman's is timid by nature and she is easily overcome by fear. Even in the event when auspicious things are about to happen¹ she harbours doubt, fear and consternation, looking at the darker side of every situation, because she has a weak, fickle and irresolute mind. (2)

[Note—¹This observation of Ravana that "auspicious things are about to happen" is to be marked. No one knew the secret that was in his mind and heart. He had abducted Sita with a clear understanding that it is through her that he can hope to find redemption for his soul, because he felt that his life had been so sinful and his deeds so bad that there is no scope for his soul to find deliverance and emancipation ever. This resolution is clear in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 23.

It was not possible for him to do any righteous, auspicious, holy and virtuous thing now at this late stage in life that could at least neutralize the huge burden of sins and evil deeds that he had accumulated on his head. His soul was crying for redemption and yearning for salvation; he wanted internal peace and bliss for himself, but it eluded him. He knew that he cannot successfully practice any of the means prescribed in the scriptures by which a creature can atone for his past sins and misdeeds; he knew that he can't find deliverance, emancipation and salvation by doing Tapa (penance and austerity), Yoga (meditation), Dhyan (contemplation), Bhakti (devotion for Lord God), Daan (charity), Yagya (religious sacrifices), Daya (showing mercy and compassion), Tirtha (going on a pilgrimage), Prayaschita (penitence and repentance for sins and evil life), Sewa (serving the lowly and humble), or any other means prescribed by the scriptures.

His only chance, he determined for himself, was to get rid of his evil body of a demon by getting killed in a battle at the hands of the Supreme Being, who he firmly believed had come down to earth in the form of Lord Ram. Fighting and waging a cruel war was something that suited his nature and temperament, as he was not inclined to be pious and compassionate.

But to achieve this noble aim—to die at the hands of the Supreme Being personified as Lord Ram—he would have to do something very unconventional and extremely nasty so as to sufficiently provoke the Lord, who is otherwise so merciful and forgiving that he would most probably spare Ravana if there was any scope of forgiving him, that he would be compelled to come to him and kill him in a face-to-face battle. This occurrence would serve a dual purpose—one, it will free Ravana's soul from the cage of the evil body of a demon in which it was trapped, and help it attain deliverance, salvation, emancipation, and two, it will afford Ravana a rare chance to have a 'Darshan', a holy sight of the Supreme Lord, without having to make great spiritual efforts and undertake rigorous religious performances in order to achieve this rarest of rare privilege that all living beings yearn for but rarely get; it would be a singular achievement that would grant him eternal bliss, beatitude and joy.

He had another noble aim in his mind and heart. Suppose he decided to abandon his sinful life and devote himself entirely to a righteous and holy way of life, and do whatever was necessary to atone for and seek forgiveness for his past sins, and also suppose he would succeed in his efforts at penitence and attained his desired spiritual goal of liberation and deliverance, of emancipation and salvation, of obtaining eternal bliss, beatitude and felicity—but it would be restricted to him alone; he alone would be the beneficiary of all such spiritual practices. But it would be too selfish for him to reap this largesse while the rest of his demon companions, his kith and kin, his soldiers and commanders et al, who had faithfully and loyally been serving him for such a long time, were allowed to suffer hell and remain toiling under the horrible yoke of a demon life, with no redemption in sight. Perhaps some of these demons were doing evil deeds that they did not out of their own free will but under obligation to carry out Ravana's orders, as he was their king. So therefore it was obligatory upon him to assume responsibility for the consequences of what they did, and so if he wished for his own spiritual welfare he must also keep their concerns in mind.

Hence, thought Ravana, he must devise a device that would ensure “collective deliverance and emancipation” of all the demons who took instructions from him and served him loyally throughout his life; he cannot abandon them when seeking good destiny for his own self. To attain this noble objective, the only practical way open for Ravana was to start a war with Lord Ram as it would automatically ensure that these poor demons would die one by one in the battles that take place, and consequently each one of them would find liberation and deliverance for his soul; not only this, all the demons would, like himself, also have a chance to have a holy glimpse of the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram, which would grant them eternal bliss and beatitude the way he expects for himself!

If these demons had become sinful and carried out countless evil deeds on the orders of Ravana, and in the process had shared his doomed destiny, they would now be able to share the spiritual reward of ‘Mukti’ (liberation, deliverance) alongside Ravana. A great and noble king is one who shares with his subjects both fortunes as well as misfortunes.

Indeed and forsooth, if we see things from a corrective perspective we would conclude that Ravana was a truly great king who thought for others, who was concerned for his entire generation who had all along sacrificed its life for him and his cause, who decided that if his demon race was ready to share a doomed destiny with him by committing horrible sins on his orders, they have an equal and moral right to enjoy liberation and deliverance if their king had the good fortune to have it.

This is the primary and the only reason why Ravana did not listen to anyone who suggested to him to return Sita to Lord Ram, because if he did so then all his secret planning for the redemption of his soul and that of other demons would be undone.]

जौं आवड़ मर्कट कटकाई । जिअहिं बिचारे निसिचर खाई ॥ ३ ॥

कंपहिं लोकप जाकीं त्रासा । तासु नारि सभित बड़ि हासा ॥ ४ ॥

अस कहि बिहसि ताहि उर लाई । चलेउ सभाँ ममता अधिकाई ॥ ५ ॥

मंदोदरी हृदयँ कर चिंता । भयउ कंत पर बिधि बिपरीता ॥ ६ ॥ jaum āva'i markṭa kaṭakāī. ji'ahim bicārē nīsicara khāī. 3.

kampahim lōkapa jākīm trāsā. tāsu nāri sabhīta baḍi hāsā. 4.

asa kahi bihasi tāhi ura lā'ī. calē'u sabhāṃ mamatā adhikā'ī. 5.
mandōdarī hr̥dayaṃ kara cintā. bhaya'u kanta para bidhi biparītā. 6.

What is there to fear from the army of monkeys? In case they do come here then our demons would feed upon those poor fellows in order to satisfy their hunger and for their sustenance¹. (3)

It is such an irony and a matter to laugh at because it is nothing better than a joke that he (i.e. Ravana) from whom even the Lokpals (the gods responsible for protection of the world) tremble out of fear, his wife should feel so frightened!² (4)

Saying this, Ravana laughed once again and affectionately embraced her (Mandodari). Exhibiting great fondness for her by his demeanours³, he went haughtily to his royal court. (5)

Meanwhile, when Mandodari observed that her husband was not willing to listen to any advice and had become blind to obvious signs of impending disaster, she was highly worried for him and feared for the worst. She thought to herself that the Creator has indeed turned hostile towards her husband because the latter refuses to pay heed to common sense.

[To wit, when the Creator becomes opposed to anyone, the first thing he does is to corrupt the mind of that person so much that he becomes deluded and acts in a way that is detrimental to his own interests. The Creator creates such a situation that the person pushes himself over a cliff and jumps into a deep and dark abyss of self-invited and self-inflicted disaster for which he cannot blame anyone else but his own self. Mandodari came round to the view that this is exactly what has happened with her husband.] (6)

[Note—¹The demons ate flesh of living creatures. So Ravana says that in case the army of monkeys (and bears) comes to Lanka, then he will order his demon army to catch the enemy's soldiers and make a good meal out of them. Imagine what Ravana had planned—he would close all his military canteens and food outlets, forcing the demon army to suffer from hunger, so that when the monkeys arrive in Lanka these famished demons would pounce upon them from all sides, killing the monkeys and bears for their meals if they wished to eat cooked meat, or even eating them alive if they wished so.

²All the gods were scared of Ravana. So he cites this to stress upon his wife Mandodari that he was so mighty and powerful that even the gods fear him, and therefore it is very surprising that his own wife should feel afraid of humble creatures such as human beings and monkeys, a reference to Lord Ram and his army of monkeys and bears. It is a laughable matter as this fear of hers carries no weight and merits no attention.

³So we see why Ravana did not punish Mandodari for admonishing him, not only here but later on too when the war actually commenced. All her entreaties and remonstrations with Ravana gave the impression that she was taking the side of Lord Ram, her husband's enemy, and literally belittling her own husband. No man would tolerate such an attitude of his wife—that she praises his enemy openly and repeatedly while undermining the self-respect and dignity of her husband. But Ravana only smiled at her and excused her for her irreverent behaviour towards him, and the reason is given here—that he loved her very dearly, and was so fond of her that he tolerated all that she said against him, which ordinarily he would have regarded as grave provocation and overt insinuation, almost bordering on treason and disloyalty which is punishable by death.

Another reason for his overlooking Mandodari's recriminating words was that he knew that she is not in the know of the secret of his heart, that he sees Sita as a means by which he and the rest of the demons will find their deliverance from the unholy body of a demon, and when they are killed by Lord Ram in battle they will attain emancipation and salvation for their souls. In pursuit of this grand objective he decided to neglect her.

Instead of getting irritated and angry at Mandodari, Ravana actually felt glad and appreciated her stand—because her intense worry for him proved that she loved him immensely so much so that she did not fear his wrath in trying to stop him from engaging himself in a disastrous war with Lord Ram by even going to the length of praising her husband's enemy if it could somehow dissuade him from entering into a war.

As for Mandodari, her worry was understandable and justified, because as a chaste and loyal wife her fate was directly linked with the fate of her husband Ravana; if Ravana was doomed it was her moral duty to do her best to pull him out of the pit. Actually, if she had not tried to persuade Ravana to abandon his bellicose attitude, she would have failed in her duty as a wife.

We can compare Ravana's responses to Mandodari's advice with that of his own brother Vibhishan's. While he neglected Mandodari chiding him, even embracing her and smiling at her to show how fond he was of her, when Vibhishan advised him almost a similar thing, to give Sita back to Lord Ram and make peace with the Lord, Ravana lost his temper, vehemently kicking Vibhishan in front of full court, and telling him to leave his kingdom forthwith—apropos: Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 41. We shall be reading these verses in detail shortly.]

बैठेउ सभाँ खबरि असि पाई । सिंधु पार सेना सब आई ॥ ७ ॥
 बूझेसि सचिव उचित मत कहहू । ते सब हँसे मष्ट करि रहहू ॥ ८ ॥
 जितेहु सुरासुर तब श्रम नाहीं । नर बानर केहि लेखे माहीं ॥ ९ ॥ baiṭhē'u sabhāṁ khabari asi pā'ī. sindhu pāra sēnā saba ā'ī. 7.

 būjhēsi saciva ucita mata kahahū. tē saba haṁsē maṣṭa kari rahahū. 8.
 jītēhu surāsura taba śrama nāhīm. nara bānara kēhi lēkhē māhīm. 9.

When he (Ravana) sat down on his throne in the court, he got the information that the whole army (of Lord Ram) has arrived on the shore of the ocean on the other side of Lanka. (7)

He asked his ministers to give whatever advice they think was proper and fit concerning the new development. All the ministers laughed in unison as if it was no issue at all, saying, 'Sit quietly and be at ease (for there is nothing to worry). (8)

When we had vanquished the gods and the demons earlier we faced no difficulty, so what do these humble men and monkeys matter for us?

[To wit, when we could easily defeat and conquer the so-called mighty gods as well as the demons who had dared to challenge us, why should we unduly tax our brains and become anxious concerning these wretched monkeys and bears, and their leader (Lord Ram) who is only a human being? Oh king Ravana, sit comfortably and stop worrying.]¹ (9)

[Note—¹The biggest proof that Ravana was under great delusion about his strength and ability is that he relied on this ill-thought advice of his ministers. He should have questioned their wisdom and asked them what were they and their army of so-called invincible demons doing when a single Kapi called Hanuman had ravaged Lanka with impunity, killing his own son Akshayakumar a great number of demon soldiers, and then had burnt the city, with no one to stop him. Where was their strength and daredevilry then? Their bluster and haughty talk deserve no merit in the view of what Hanuman did to Lanka only a short while ago.

But once again, the fact is that Destiny and Providence had other plans for Ravana and his compatriots. The fiat of fate was so strong that it pulled the plug from Ravana's own sense of wisdom, and plunged his intellect into a dark gloomy night of delusions in which he saw phantoms of victory that enticed him to follow them blindly and fall in a trap of death and destruction, and unfortunate as he was, those upon whom he relied for good and sane advice in times of uncertainties and impending disasters, those who could have actually turned the tide in his favour by pulling him away from the precipice, proved to be the ones who actually pushed him over this precipice instead of pulling him away to safety.

Why had this happened? One reason of course was that the Creator was angry with Ravana's deeds and he had devised things that would bring an end of Ravana. The other reason is that all his subordinates and confidantes, all his courtiers and ministers, all his army commanders and lieutenants, were either sycophants bending over their backs to please him, or were too terrified of him to speak things he did not want to hear. Either way, no one wished to annoy Ravana and invite his wrath. They were all aware of his nature that he was egoist, haughty and arrogant, and was not accustomed to hearing things that were not to his liking.

The following Doha no. 37 tells us the perils of a situation where a king surrounds himself with advisors who speak what the king likes to hear, instead of what is truly good for him.]

दो०. सचिव बैद गुर तीनि जौं प्रिय बोलहिं भय आस ।

राज धर्म तन तीनि कर होइ बेगिहीं नास ॥ ३७ ॥

dōhā.

saciva baida gura tīni jauri priya bōlahiṁ bhaya āsa.

rāja dharma tana tīni kara hō'i bēgihīṁ nāsa. 37.

If a minister (or an advisor), a medicine man (a doctor), and a guru (teacher, guide and moral preceptor)—if these three speak, out of fear, things that their patron wishes to hear, then it is certain that the king's kingdom, the patient's body, and the correct path of righteousness that a person is expected to follow are seriously compromised, leading to their quick ruin. (Doha no. 37)

[Note—If a king's minister or his advisor is so scared of punishment that he would speak only such things as the king likes to hear, then the kingdom is ruined sooner than later.

Similarly, if a doctor is so afraid of his patient that he desists from giving him correct advice and speaking the truth about his illness and precautions that are to be taken, they obviously the patient is the one who suffers, and he may even eventually die.

Likewise, if a Guru is reluctant to give correct advice to his disciple out of fear of inviting the latter's wrath should he tell him certain things he does not like, then the disciple's future is ruined.

In all these three cases, both parties suffer. The king is ruined and the blame goes to his minister who cannot absolve himself of his moral responsibility and duty to give correct advice to his king, and prevent his ruin by being proactive in this matter. The doctor can't be excused if he does not live up to his professional credentials by not giving proper advice to his patient and treating his illness properly. The guru can't excuse himself if the fate of his disciple is periled due to his negligence.

To wit, while the king, the patient and the disciple of course have to suffer directly, the minister, the doctor and the guru too suffer immensely by way of gaining infamy and scorn in the world for being instrumental in the fall and ruin of their principals who relied upon them for their good advice and all round support. It amounts to betrayal of trust, dishonesty, disloyalty, un-professional and dishonourable behaviour on part of the minister, the doctor and the guru towards the king, the patient and the disciple respectively.]

चौ०. सोइ रावन कहूँ बनी सहाई । अस्तुति करहिं सुनाइ सुनाई ॥ १ ॥

अवसर जानि बिभीषनु आवा । भ्राता चरन सीसु तेहिं नावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sō'i rāvana kahuṁ banī sahā'ī. astuti karahim sunā'i sunā'ī. 1.

avasara jāni bibhīṣanu āvā. bhrātā carana sīsu tēhim nāvā. 2.

Unfortunately, however, a circumstance that is surely ruinous for an individual and detrimental for his welfare (as outlined in Doha no. 37 herein above) presented itself before Ravana, for the sycophant ministers and courtiers, ever eager to please him, falsely extolled his glories and heaped unnecessary praises on him¹. (1)

Seeing that the opportunity was ripe, Vibhishan (Ravana's younger brother) came to the court. He bowed his head reverentially before the feet of his elder brother. (2)

[Note—¹A doomed fate had, alas, deluded Ravana so much that he was very glad to hear his ministers and courtiers praising him falsely. He could not even see that they were simply trying to please him; that they were merely appeasing him to keep him in good humour. His natural wisdom and intelligence had got so highly corrupted by false praises and a sense of illusionary grandeur and majesty that he could not see the reality that was staring in his face, and believed boisterous claims that were obviously contrary to all available evidence.

Had it been otherwise, the simple question he could have asked his stupid ministers to call their bluff is this: “Hurrah for all of you. Congratulations! Indeed we must have no fear for we are so strong and invincible. But I have a query. Well, can anyone of you tell me what were you doing, and where were you, when that single Kapi named Hanuman had gone on a rampage in Lanka with impunity only a short while ago, when he killed my son Akshayakumar and so many of my demon warriors, and then set Lanka ablaze? Of course it is true that I had conquered the gods and the demons with the least effort, and in all those campaigns you had been by my side and share equal glory for success. But can you tell me what happened to your valour and gallantry with respect to that single Kapi? Why did you allow our golden city to turn black? And if you couldn’t handle one fellow, please just tell me how you plan to tackle thousands of such Kapis when the army of our adversary (i.e. of Lord Ram) comes and attacks us? Now you are so loud in praising our combined strength and powers, but why were you all silent during the time the city was being ravaged by Hanuman?”

But no, Providence had eclipsed Ravana’s wisdom and judgment, and he saw day when it was actually night.

There is another way in which we can view Ravana’s attitude. When he observed that his chief ministers and the commanders of the demon army were, for some inexplicable reason, showing no signs of alarm at what had happened in Lanka, and inspite of all available evidence that portend doom and ruin for the whole demon race they are still talking so haughtily about victory over the enemy, it would be wiser to keep quiet for now, and to not remind them on their failure to protect the city from Hanuman’s wrath, because that might ruffle their self-pride and rub their ego on the wrong side. They may feel insulted and take Ravana’s chiding as personal affront, and secretly turn against him for publicly humiliating and taunting them. Should it happen then it would be disastrous for Ravana, because when the war actually breaks out he would need the support of these same ministers and commanders, and to unnecessarily provoke them now by sarcastic remarks would make them hostile towards him, a situation that no king would like to develop.

Therefore, inspite of realizing that his ministers are simply boasting of bluster, he decided to neglect them. Besides this, it also suited his own planning—for it was the secret desire of his heart to die at the hands of Lord Ram so that he can deliver his soul from the cage of his demonic body, and help it to attain emancipation and salvation.]

पुनि सिरु नाइ बैठ निज आसन । बोला बचन पाइ अनुसासन ॥ ३ ॥
जौ कृपाल पूँछिहु मोहि बाता । मति अनुरूप कहउँ हित ताता ॥ ४ ॥ puni siru nā'i baiṭha nija āsana. bōlā bacana pā'i anusāsana. 3.

jau kṛpāla pūṁchihu mōhi bātā. mati anurūpa kaha'uṁ hita tātā. 4.

Before he sat down on his seat, Vibhishan bowed once again at the feet of his brother (in order to show great respect to him). When he got permission to speak (and give his advice on the matter being currently discussed in the assembly), he said—(3)

‘My dear brother (tātā)! Since your gracious Majesty has been kind to ask me for my views, I shall humbly tell you what I think is the best for you and for your all round welfare. (4)

जो आपन चाहै कल्याना । सुजसु सुमति सुभ गति सुख नाना ॥ ५ ॥ सो परनारि लिलार गोसाईं । तजउ चउथि के चंद कि नाई ॥ ६ ॥ jō āpana cāhai kalyānā. sujasu sumati subha gati sukha nānā. 5.

sō paranāri lilāra gōsā'īm. taja'u ca'uthi kē canda ki nā'īm. 6.

If you wish to have an auspicious future and a happy fate, if you wish to have good fame and glory, if you wish to well advised and lauded in the world as a wise individual, if you desire to have an auspicious destiny for yourself, and if you want happiness and joy of all kind in your life (both present and future)—(5)

--Then oh lord (gōsā'īm) it is better for you not to look at (taja'u) the face of another person's wife (paranāri lilāra) like one would shun looking at the face of moon of the fourth night of its two phases (ca'uthi kē canda) (as it is believed to be a bad omen that brings ruin and suffering to the person who happens to look at it)¹. (6)

[Note—¹The moon has two phases, viz. the waxing and the waning phase. According to popular belief, it is inauspicious to view the moon on the fourth of each phase. So here Vibhishan cites this tradition to implore Ravana to discard Sita and shun looking at her as it would bring nothing but ruin for him.]

चौदह भुवन एक पति होई । भूतद्रोह तिष्ठइ नहिं सोई ॥ ७ ॥ गुन सागर नागर नर जोऊ । अलप लोभ भल कहइ न कोऊ ॥ ८ ॥ caudaha bhuvana ēka pati hō'ī. bhūtadrōha tiṣṭai nahim sō'ī. 7.

guna sāgara nāgara nara jō'ū. alapa lōbha bhala kaha'i na kō'ū. 8.

Even if a man is so powerful and majestic that he rules over all the fourteen divisions of this world, yet if he turns hostile to living beings and causes suffering to them he would certainly fall down from his exalted stature.

[To wit, no matter how powerful and mighty a king might be, but if he makes ordinary creatures suffer under his rule then no one can prevent his ruin, as he invites the curse of their suffering soul, and this curse is so potent and effective that it neutralizes the benefit of any boon that the king may have.]¹ (7)

Likewise, though a man may possess a lot of virtues and is a treasury of wisdom, but if he harbours even a trace of the negative trait of greed and avarice then no one calls him noble and honourable.

[To wit, the small dark trait of greed and avarice neutralizes all the other good traits of a man, giving him a bad name though he is otherwise noble and honourable in all other respects. His wisdom and virtues take a back seat in front of one single negative character that destroys his entire reputation.]² (8)

[Note—¹What is Vibhishan hinting at? He means that though Ravana is so powerful that even the gods of heaven are terrified of him and pay their tributes to him, but he has been making all living beings suffer horribly by creating a reign of terror on this earth. He may have subdued the gods and the demons on the strength of his powerful arms, but he forgets that the cry of the humble soul of the ordinary creature that suffers due to him would prove to be like the last straw that broke the camel's back. The curse from all those who have suffered under him would be the nail in his coffin, and may be he has successfully made the mighty gods bow before him but he would have to bow himself before this curse.

Presently, this curse comes from the soul of Sita because she is suffering immensely in his captivity. This curse would determine his destiny if he lets it persist and does not make amends while there is time.

²Vibhishan says that he does not deny that Ravana was a learned demon king. 'Learned'? Yes surely, because Ravana was well versed in the scriptures. He was also a great devotee of Lord Shiva, and he had performed several rounds of Tapa (penances and sacrifices) to gain boons from Brahma, the creator. But once he acquired power and strength he became excessively greedy; he was not satisfied with his kingdom of Lanka but wished to conquer the whole creation. Further, he was not satisfied with his own wife and the large number of mistresses he had in his harem, and now he eyed Sita, the chaste and loyal wife of Lord Ram. He has crossed the red line and has done what he should not have done.

So therefore, inspite of his being wise and learned he has acted like a big fool, digging his own grave, and inviting ruin for himself as well as for the entire demon race by his reckless deeds.]

दो०. काम क्रोध मद लोभ सब नाथ नरक के पंथ ।

सब परिहरि रघुबीरहि भजहु भजहिं जेहि संत ॥ ३८ ॥

dōhā.

kāma krōdha mada lōbha saba nātha naraka kē pantha.
saba parihari raghubīrahi bhajahu bhajahim jēhi santa. 38.

Oh Lord! Passions (kāma), anger (krōdha), haughtiness (mada), greed (lōbha) etc.—all are paths leading to hell.

Abandon all such things (as they are detrimental for your welfare), and instead you must worship and adore Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) who is worshipped and adored by all saints and pious people. (Doha no. 38)

[Note—Vibhishan's advice is in sharp contrast with what other ministers and courtiers had told Ravana. While others had pampered Ravana's ego and catered to his self-pride, speaking words that he wished to hear, Vibhishan spoke to the contrary. Naturally, a person who is as haughty and egoist as Ravana was would not like to hear what Vibhishan had to say to him. Had Vibhishan said this in a private audience, may be Ravana would have overlooked it like the way he had overlooked Mandodari's entreaties (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 37).

But this was full court, and if he neglected Vibhishan's stern words said publicly he would become a laughing stock for his other courtiers. In future some of them would also gather courage to speak on his face, which no king would ever tolerate.

So, as we will read below, Ravana took exception to Vibhishan's sane advice, and finally kicked him out of his kingdom (apropos: Chaupai line nos. 2-6 that precede Doha no. 41).]

चौ०. तात राम नहिं नर भूपाला । भुवनेस्वर कालहु कर काला ॥ १ ॥
 ब्रह्म अनामय अज भगवंता । व्यापक अजित अनादि अनंता ॥ २ ॥
 गो द्विज धेनु देव हितकारी । कृपा सिंधु मानुष तनुधारी ॥ ३ ॥
 जन रंजन भंजन खल ब्राता । बेद धर्म रच्छक सुनु भ्राता ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

tāta rāma nahim nara bhūpālā. bhuvanēsvara kālahu kara kālā. 1.
 brahma anāmaya aja bhagavantā. byāpaka ajita anādi anantā. 2.
 gō dvija dhēnu dēva hitakārī. krpā sindhu mānuṣa tanudhārī. 3.
 jana rañjana bhañjana khala brātā. bēda dharma racchaka sunu bhrātā. 4.

My dear brother (tāta)! 'Ram' is not an ordinary human prince. In all sooth and without gainsay, he is the Supreme Lord of the entire creation, of the whole world with all its many divisions. He is indeed the Lord who supersedes even the god of death known as Kaal, who causes death of even the 'Death God'. (1)

Lord Ram is a personified form of Brahm (the Supreme Being and the cosmic Consciousness); he is free from all the taints and maladies associated with Avidya (ignorance leading to delusions) (because 'Consciousness' is eternally enlightened, wise and self-realised); he has no birth as he is eternal and infinite (because he is 'unborn' as the cosmic Consciousness neither dies nor takes birth); he is indeed 'Bhagvan' (the Lord of the world who possesses all the excellent virtues and characters that exist in this creation).

Indeed, he is all-pervading and omnipresent; he is invincible; he is without a beginning; and he has no end either as he is infinite and eternal.¹ (2)

The Lord is the supreme well-wisher and protector of humble and meek creatures represented by a 'cow', holy and pious men represented by 'Brahmins', the 'earth' that is like the mother who sustains and nourishes all living beings, and the different 'gods' who protect and support the entire creation.

The Lord, being an ocean of mercy, compassion, kindness, magnanimity, benevolence and grace, assumed the form of a human being as 'Ram' in order to fulfill his above obligations.*²

[*This verse can be read as follows also: "Lord Ram, who is an ocean of mercy and compassion, is the Supreme Being who is the best well-wisher and protector of the entire creation and all its living beings, such as the cows who represent meek and humble creatures, the Brahmins who represent men who are holy and pious, the earth that is the crucible of life, and the many gods who protect and support this entire creation. Verily indeed, it is the same Supreme Being who has manifested himself in the form of a human being known as Lord Ram.”³ (3)

Listen my brother (sunu bhrātā)! The Lord (Ram) grants happiness and joy to all living beings—because on the one hand he is the destroyer or eliminator of all those who are wicked, crooked, vile and evil, and on the other hand he is a protector of the Vedas (scriptures and their spiritual principles) and Dharma (principles of righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety and goodness). (4)

[Note—¹It will be remarked here that Vibhishan has made out the case of Lord Ram as a personified form of the Supreme Being himself. An exactly similar case will be made out in favour of Lord Ram by Mandodari, Ravana’s wife, later on when the war is in full swing when she tells Ravana that Lord Ram is no a human prince whom he thinks he will vanquish with the might of his arms, because the Lord is the all-pervading and almighty Supreme Being known as Brahm himself, and therefore Ravana would do good to himself as well as the entire demon clan by abandoning his stubbornness and surrendering himself before the Lord—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15. This was Mandodari’s third attempt to persuade Ravana to call off the war.

²Refer to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precedes Doha no. 187 where we read that Lord Vishnu, the cosmic form of Brahm and one of the Trinity Gods, has himself said that he will take a birth as a human being in order to eliminate the demons and restore peace on earth when the gods and mother earth had fervently prayed to the Lord to protect them from the terror of the demons led by their king Ravana.

³Lord Shiva, the most enlightened of all the gods, has repeatedly reiterated the fact that Lord Ram was none but the Supreme Being himself, the Lord who is eager to do whatever is necessary in order to make all the living beings happy and joyful—some examples are Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 51; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 116; (iii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 119; (iv) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 120; (v) Doha no. 121 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it.]

ताहि बयरु तजि नाइअ माथा । प्रनतारति भंजन रघुनाथा ॥ ५ ॥

देहु नाथ प्रभु कहूँ बैदेही । भजहु राम बिनु हेतु सनेही ॥ ६ ॥

सरन गएँ प्रभु ताहु न त्यागा । बिस्व द्रोह कृत अघ जेहि लागा ॥ ७ ॥

जासु नाम त्रय ताप नसावन । सोइ प्रभु प्रगट समुझु जियँ रावन ॥ ८ ॥ tāhi bayaru taji nā'i'a māthā. pranatārati bhañjana raghunāthā. 5.

dēhu nātha prabhu kahuṁ baidēhī. bhajahu rāma binu hētu sanēhī. 6.
sarana ga'eṁ prabhu tāhu na tyāgā. bisva drōha kṛta agha jēhi lāgā. 7.
jāsu nāma traya tāpa nasāvana. sō'i prabhu pragaṭa samujhu jiyāṁ rāvana. 8.

You must abandon all animosity and hostility with that Lord, and instead bow your head before him. Lord Raghunath (Lord Ram) is the one who removes all the sorrows and worries of those who seek shelter with him, and who surrender themselves before him.

[To wit, you need not worry about the sort of reception you may get when you approach Lord Ram with the intention to surrender and beg forgiveness. I assure you that you will be welcomed most warmly, and all your past imprudence and evil deeds would be instantly forgotten. Don't be afraid that you will be insulted or punished by the Lord; on the contrary, you will find him most amiable and affable by nature.] (5)

Oh my lord (nātha), I beseech you to give Vaidehi (Sita) back to the Lord (prabhu; Lord Ram), and worship him who has selfless affection for one and all, who loves everyone without there being any vested interest in doing so.¹ (6)

[Note—¹A similar fervent plea is made by Ravana's wife Mandodari in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 7.

But unfortunately, Ravana listened neither to Vibhishan nor to Mandodari.]

दो०. बार बार पद लागउँ बिनय करउँ दससीस ।
परिहरि मान मोह मद भजहु कोसलाधीस ॥ ३९ (क) ॥
मुनि पुलस्ति निज सिष्य सन कहि पठई यह बात । तुरत सो मैं प्रभु सन कही पाइ सुअवसरु तात ॥ ३९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

bāra bāra pada lāga'um̐ binaya kara'um̐ dasasīsa.
parihari māna mōha mada bhajahu kōsalādhīsa. 39 (a).
muni pulasti nija siṣya sana kahi paṭha'ī yaha bāta.
turata sō mair̐ prabhu sana kahī pā'i su'avasaru tāta. 39 (b).

Oh my ten-headed brother (dasasīsa)! I repeatedly bow my head at your feet and plead most earnestly with you that you ought to give up your sense of false pride and ego, you ought to abandon your delusions arising out of ignorance of the reality, and you ought to shun haughtiness and stubbornness. Instead, you ought to worship and adore the Lord of Kaushal, i.e. Lord Ram. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

My dear brother (tāta)! Sage Pulastya has sent this message for you through one of his disciples, and as soon as I found an opportune moment I have conveyed it to you.¹ (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹This remark by Vibhishan clearly implies that he was visited by two gentleman—one was Hanuman (refer—Sundar Kand, Doha no. 6 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede it), and the other was sage Pulastya's disciple.

Since he now says that the messenger of Pulastya had come just ahead of his coming to the court to deliver the message to Ravana, it means that when sage Pulastya heard of the developments in Lanka, i.e. about Ravana bringing Sita and the subsequent arrival of Hanuman and his destruction of Lanka by burning it, he was extremely alarmed as he feared for the worst for his own descendants, because Ravana was his grandson.

What is that “opportune moment” that Vibhishan is talking about? Ravana has summoned all his courtiers and commanders, seeking their opinion regarding the course of action that he should take in the view that the army of Lord Ram has come near, and an assault on Lanka was imminent. All his advisors were giving their opinions; and so this was the time when Vibhishan could convey Pulsatya’s message to Ravana.]

चौ०. माल्यवंत अति सचिव सयाना । तासु बचन सुनि अति सुख माना ॥ १ ॥

तात अनुज तव नीति बिभूषन । सो उर धरहु जो कहत बिभीषन ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

mālyavanta ati saciva sayānā. tāsu bacana suni ati sukha mānā. 1.

tāta anuja tava nīti bibhūṣana. sō ura dharahu jō kahata bibhīṣana. 2.

Malyawant, who was a very wise and sagacious minister of Ravana, felt very pleased and happy when he heard the words of Vibhishan. (1)

Endorsing his views fully, he advised Ravana, ‘My dear (tāta)! Your younger brother is an epitome of wisdom, sagacity and prudence. So I advise you to give credence to what Vibhishan has told you, pay serious attention to what he had said, and enshrine his advice in your heart as something that is extremely good for you; don’t be befuddled by delusions and be so arrogant as to overlook the truth.’ (2)

रिपु उत्तरकष कहत सठ दोऊ । दूरि न करहु इहाँ हड़ कोऊ ॥ ३ ॥

माल्यवंत गृह गयउ बहोरी । कहइ बिभीषनु पुनि कर जोरी ॥ ४ ॥ ripu utakaraṣa kahata saṭha dō'ū. dūri na karahu ihāñ ha'i kō'ū. 3.

mālyavanta gr̥ha gaya'u bahōrī. kaha'i bibhīṣanu puni kara jōrī. 4.

Ravana took Malyawant’s advice as an open affront to his self-respect, dignity and majesty, so he became very angry and retorted, ‘These two fellows (Malyawant and Vibhishan) are (shamelessly) extolling the virtues of my enemy and praising him. Is there no one here (in the court) who can take them away from my presence?’ (3)

Malyawant went home, but Visbhishan stayed back to make another attempt to persuade Ravana to mend his ways. Vibhishan joined his hands in submission and said most politely -- (4)

सुमति कुमति सब कें उर रहहीं । नाथ पुरान निगम अस कहहीं ॥ ५ ॥

जहाँ सुमति तहँ संपति नाना । जहाँ कुमति तहँ बिपति निदाना ॥ ६ ॥

तव उर कुमति बसी बिपरीता । हित अनहित मानहु रिपु प्रीता ॥ ७ ॥

कालराति निसिचर कुल केरी । तेहि सीता पर प्रीति घनेरी ॥ ८ ॥ sumati kumati saba kēm ura rahahīm. nātha purāna nigama asa kahahīm. 5.

jahām sumati tahaṁ sampati nānā. jahām kumati tahaṁ bipati nidānā. 6.
tava ura kumati basī biparītā. hita anahita mānahu ripu prītā. 7.
kālarāti niscara kula kēri. tēhi sītā para prīti ghanērī. 8.

‘Oh Lord (nātha)! The Vedas and the Purans (ancient scriptures) say that every living being harbours two types of qualities in his heart—one is good and another is bad. It is a natural process of creation and there is nothing unusual about it¹. (5)

Where there is wisdom and auspiciousness in one’s thoughts and emotions then access to all sorts of prosperity and happiness is available to him, while doom and gloom is the destiny of those whose wisdom is corrupted and thoughts and emotions are dark and evil. (6)

Unfortunately, your heart has become so deluded by evil emotions and corrupted wisdom that you have started seeing things in the wrong light. That is why you are misled to regard as bad what actually is good for you and your future, and you treat those who actually are your well-wishers and true friends as being your enemy and opponents². (7)

Alas! You have, most regrettably, begin to harbour great affection for Sita who actually represents the dark foreboding cloud of the night of the doomsday that hovers over the demon race, without realizing the peril in which your ill-thoughts are leading you to³. (8)

[Note—¹All living beings in this world have two types of thoughts and emotions—one type that is positive and constructive, and the other type that is negative and destructive. The character of an individual and the course his fate takes depends on the net effect that these two types of thoughts and emotional qualities produce on him. How an individual’s thoughts and emotions affect him decides his actions and the course his life takes, which in turn decides his destiny. If good and auspicious thoughts, refined wisdom and right emotions play a dominant role in his life and its deeds, the person’s character shines like the sun and he attains an exalted destiny, while the reverse happens if his thoughts and emotions are bad and negative.

²Vibhishan means that Ravana is so deluded by his ill-fated destiny that he regards Malyawant and Vibhishan, who are his true well-wishers, as his enemies who are criticizing him and finding faults with him, while treating the other courtiers, who are actually ill-witted and self-serving sycophants and flattering yes-men who only say things which Ravana wishes to hear in order to keep him in good humour, as his friends and faithful advisors.

A king, or for that matter any person, who lends his ears to those who speak falsehood just to keep him happy and pleased, is sure to come to ruin.

³Vibhishan sternly scolds Ravana, and clearly tells him that Sita will become the last nail in his coffin, that Providence has brought her here so that the time-tested and irrevocable Law of Nature that “what takes birth must die one day” applies to Ravana and his demon race too, though he had been granted immunity from death by the virtue of various boons he had extracted from Brahma, the creator, by doing severe Tapa (penances and austerities).

This Providence had first corrupted his mind and intellect, making him haughty and arrogant in the false sense invincibility and the superiority of his power, strength and majesty, making him believe that there is no power in creation that is greater than his, and he can do whatever he likes with impunity, for an eternity. The circle seems to have completed its full cycle, and to solder its two ends together, Providence prevailed upon Ravana to bring Sita to Lanka so that the final act of the epic drama of “creation and destruction” can be played on the stage and his final end can be brought about.

That is why he cannot think correctly and in the right direction; that is why he lends his ears to wrong advice and neglects good advice. But alas, what can be done, for it is the fiat of fate and the call of his destiny.]

दो०. तात चरन गहि मागउँ राखहु मोर दुलार । सीता देहु राम कहूँ अहित न होइ तुम्हार ॥ ४० ॥

dōhā.

tāta carana gahi māga'uṁ rākhahu mōra dulāra.
sītā dēhu rāma kahuṁ ahita na hō'i tumhāra. 40.

My dear brother (tāta)! I hold your feet and beg you to remind you of your natural affection for me¹. [Brother, I know you love me, and that is why I have mustered courage to speak you so boldly. I wish for your good and welfare as it is directly linked to the fate of the whole demon race. Please don't take me in the wrong light, and pay heed to my advice. I am your well-wisher and have confidence that you repose trust in me, that you believe I cannot say anything that would put you in peril. So therefore, I have this to say to you ---]

Please give Sita back to Lord Ram, and be assured that by doing this no harm shall come to you, and no interests of yours will be compromised.' (Doha no. 40)

[Note—¹Vibhishan publicly acknowledges that Ravana had affection for him. This was a fact and it will become obvious when we take into consideration that Vibhishan openly practiced his religious views and had signs of Lord Hari, such as a Tulsi plant (basil plant) and the name of the Lord, displayed in the front of his home in the center of Lanka, without Ravana once objecting to it. Vibhishan used to pronounce loudly Lord Ram's holy name the first thing in the morning, loud enough for it to be heard outside his home and over a large part of the neighbour, and we have already read that this practice of his had enabled Hanuman to recognize him as someone who would be friendly at the time when he (Hanuman) was searching for Sita (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 6).

This has a corollary though. It implies that Ravana tolerated the presence of a saintly soul in Lanka, that he was not totally allergic to the name of Lord God and opposed to religious practices.

We have also read that when he brought Sita he had determined for himself that since he was very sinful the only way he can find deliverance for his soul and attain emancipation and salvation was to get himself killed by Lord Ram, and to do so it was necessary to bring Sita to Lanka, as it would force the Lord to come and kill him in order to free her. And in case Lord Ram was not the Supreme Being but an ordinary human prince, then also Ravana had nothing to lose—for then he would keep Sita as one of his countless mistresses. (Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 23.)

To wit, if we take a holistic view of what was going in the mind of Ravana during those crucial moments of his life, we would come to the conclusion that his stubbornness in keeping Sita as a captive, and refusing to do otherwise, was a well-thought out and planned decision.

But a person's destiny, though said to be pre-determined even at the time of his birth, is subject to profound alterations and changes in course, either for good or for bad, during his present life, because the actual destination for a living being is determined more by his own thoughts and deeds during the course of his present life than by what he has brought with him at the time of birth as a baggage from his previous life.

So therefore, a person is responsible for his own fate, and there is no purpose served by blaming either Providence or Destiny for one's doom or elevation in life. A good birth and upbringing and all sorts of positive opportunities in life are no insurance for an assured good destiny if the person concerned is not conscientious enough to decide what is good and what is bad for him. If he chooses to lead a sinful and pervert life because worldly temptations and sensual pleasures of the material world appeal more to his mind than observing the principles of self-control, righteousness, probity and propriety, if he allows delusions and temptations to overcome his wisdom and have the better of him, then he is surely destined to be doomed, and no one can save him.

In the present case of Ravana the same principle applies. He was born in a family of great sages, was a Brahmin by birth, was highly learned in the scriptures, was a great devotee of Lord Shiva, had done remarkable Tapa (penances and austerity), and had immense strength which he could have properly utilized for the welfare of his demon race and expansion of his kingdom, but he misused all the facilities available to him in order to satisfy his personal lust and passion, and his greed for power and gratification of his sensual desires.

This is evident here for he had great love for Vibhishan and had allowed the latter to pursue his religious beliefs and way of life unhindered till now. But when he was asked by the same Vibhishan to give Sita back to Lord Ram, Ravana lost his cool and exploded in anger as will be clear when we read the verses herein below. He not only will sternly rebuke Vibhishan using harsh words of recrimination, virtually accusing him of treason, betrayal and disloyalty, he will also kick him in full court and tell him to quit his kingdom.]

चौ०. बुध पुरान श्रुति संमत बानी । कही बिभीषन नीति बखानी ॥ १ ॥

सुनत दसानन उठा रिसाई । खल तोहि निकट मृत्यु अब आई ॥ २ ॥

जिअसि सदा सठ मोर जिआवा । रिपु कर पच्छ मूढ़ तोहि भावा ॥ ३ ॥

कहसि न खल अस को जग माहीं । भुज बल जाहि जिता मैं नाहीं ॥ ४ ॥

मम पुर बसि तपसिन्ह पर प्रीती । सठ मिलु जाइ तिन्हहि कहु नीती ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

budha purāna śruti sammata bānī. kahī bibhīṣana nīti bakhānī. 1.
 sunata dasānana uṭhā risā'ī. khala tōhi nikāṭa mṛtyu aba ā'ī. 2.
 ji'asi sadā saṭha mōra ji'āvā. ripu kara paccha mūrha tōhi bhāvā. 3.
 kahasi na khala asa kō jaga māmīm. bhuja bala jāhi jītā maim nāmīm. 4.
 mama pura basi tapasinha para prītī. saṭha milu jā'i tinhahi kahu nītī. 5.

What Vibhishan had said was wise and prudent, and was in accordance with the principles of good conduct, righteousness, propriety and probity as laid down by the Purans and Vedas (scriptures). (1)

But unfortunately the 10-headed Ravana took his advice in the wrong light, and when he heard what Vibhishan said to him (as narrated in the previous verses), he got up angrily and scolded him harshly¹, saying vehemently, 'Oh you wretched and ugly fellow; it seems your death has come calling you, and it is apparently imminent. (2)

Fie, oh you fool! You have been sustained by me and have lived under my patronage. In spite of that, oh you ungrateful and disgraceful fellow, you choose to favour my enemy and plead his cause as if you were his advocate². (3)

Oh you wretch and unfaithful fellow! Tell me who is strong and powerful enough in this world whom I have not been able to vanquish relying solely on the strength and power of my own arms? (4)

You live in my city (Lanka) under my protection and patronage, but you dare to prefer to take sides with my enemy by showing affection for that ascetic (Lord Ram). Fie to you, you stupid fellow.

Well, let it be as you wish. Go away from me and meet that ascetic to give you advice to him; go and preach him wisdom regarding the laws and rules concerning what is good and righteous.³ (5)

[Note—¹As Ravana was doomed, he could not think rightly. As a result of this, instead of heeding Vibhishan's advice and taking it in the right spirit, he took it as a personal affront to his majesty and authority as well as a challenge to his wisdom and intellect. He became extremely peeved and angry, and lost control over himself.

²To wit, I allowed you to follow your own religious practices and did not cause any obstacles in your path. I treated you kindly and with a soft corner in my heart. I protected you from harm from any of my demons. But you have betrayed me and my trust in you. You secretly harbour animosity for me, and favour my enemy instead. You are very ungrateful and disloyal. While you preach me wisdom and good manners by saying that it is improper to keep another person's wife, but you yourself have no compunctions in betraying your own brother and neglecting his love for you; you do not even value how much he has allowed you freedom and how he has been favouring you throughout your life. Oh you ungrateful wretch! And now you prefer to take sides with my enemy as if he was your best well-wisher and grand patron, and as if your own brother is your enemy!

³Well then, if this is the case you are most welcome. Leave me alone to face my destiny, and go and join him whom you think is your well-wisher! Get out of my sight this very instant; I do not wish to see your face even for a moment.]

अस कहि कीन्हैसि चरन प्रहारा । अनुज गहे पद बारहिं बारा ॥ ६ ॥
 उमा संत कइ इहइ बड़ाई । मंद करत जो करइ भलाई ॥ ७ ॥ तुम्ह पितु सरिस भलेहिं मोहि मारा । रामु भजें हित नाथ तुम्हारा ॥ ८ ॥ asa kahi kīnhēsī carana prahārā. anuja gahē pada bārahīm bārā. 6.

 umā santa ka'i iha'i barā'ī. manda karata jō kara'i bhalā'ī. 7.
 tumha pitu sarisa bhalēhīm mōhi mārā. rāmu bhajēm hita nātha tumhārā. 8.

Thus scolding Vibhishan harshly, Ravana vehemently kicked him. Vibhishan on his part fell at Ravana's feet repeatedly and respectfully clasped them in his hands (to show his due regard for his elder brother)¹. (6)

Lord Shiva (the primary narrator of this epic tale) said to his divine consort Uma, 'Oh Uma! This is a unique quality of a saint—that he always thinks of the other person's welfare and good even if that person causes him harm and suffering². (7)

Vibhishan told Ravana, 'You are like my father (being my elder brother). So indeed it is for my own good that you have hit (kicked) me³. But oh lord, I beg to repeat it once again that your good and welfare lies in worshipping Lord Ram and having devotion for him (by surrendering yourself and sending Sita back as a token of this).' (8)

[Note—¹We note here that Ravana has “kicked” Vibhishan but the latter showed no sign of anger or ill-will towards him. Instead of cursing or abusing Ravana, Vibhishan had fell at his feet and respectfully held them in his hands to show due respect to him as his elder brother.

Viewed from a different perspective, Vibhishan thought that it was prudent and wise for him to suppress his anger for the present as he was surrounded by Ravana's soldiers, and if Ravana wished he would have him arrested and killed instantly. So it was imperative to maintain his cool so that he can get out of the court and escape from Lanka. He ought to show utmost caution at present, and not do anything to precipitate disaster. So therefore, he bowed at the feet of Ravana to calm him down and not aggravate matters further.

A little later in the story we will read that Ravana had kicked another of his close associate to express his anger and disgust when advised to call-off his confrontationist attitude towards Lord Ram and send the Lord's wife Sita back to him. His name is Suk, and he was sent by Ravana to spy on Vibhishan after he left the kingdom of Lanka and went to seek refuge with Lord Ram. Suk was so extremely impressed by the warm and affectionate reception that Vibhishan was given by the Lord that he himself decided to leave his sinful and evil master Ravana, and instead seek shelter with the Lord. So when he went back to Lanka and gave his report to Ravana, highly lauding Lord Ram's graceful and kind nature, and advising Ravana to give Sita back to him, the demon king lost his cool. Peeved and exasperated beyond tolerance, Ravana kicked him, giving Suk an excuse to quit Lanka and go surrender before Lord Ram. This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 53—to Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 57. Refer especially to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 57 where we read about Ravana kicking Suk.

²Lord Shiva stresses that this is one of the many grand qualities of true saints—that they always think good of others even if they are made to suffer themselves due to the evil nature of those whose good such saints think of.

³If a father scolds and hits his son whom he loves dearly, it is because he wishes for his son's good, and not because he hates his own son. So Vibhishan says that if Ravana thought it fit to admonish and kick him, then surely it is for his long-term good. He welcomes it instead of taking it as an insult.

What was for Vibhishan's good? Ravana loved him and wished that he survives the war to carry forward the name of his family. He did not want that when the war actually breaks out he would have to force Vibhishan to join it on his side and fight with Lord Ram, and probably get killed in battle. In the course of the war, as we shall read in due course, all kith and kin of Ravana were killed, one by one, except Vibhishan. When the war ended, Lord Ram put Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka as its next king, thus continuing the line of Ravana's own family. But if Ravana had not kicked Vibhishan out, then in all probability the latter would have been compelled to join the battle and consequently get killed. Who then would have ascended the throne of Lanka, and how then would the family line of Ravana continue?

When a father feels that a calamity is looming on the horizon from which there is no escape, his first thought is to put one of his dearest sons to safety so that in case the things go in the wrong direction and all the rest of the family are annihilated, at least there would be one member to carry on the family name and tree to the next generation.

This is exactly what Ravana secretly thought vis-à-vis Vibhishan. Internally Ravana was frustrated with the evil life of a demon, and he wished that the next generation should be pious and devout and not like himself. Vibhishan was the only family member who could fit the bill and fulfill this secret desire of his heart. But to ensure it, it was necessary to put Vibhishan out of danger's reach, and the only way to do it was to send him out of Lanka.

And the best way to ensure that Vibhishan is crowned the next king of Lanka was to force him to join Lord Ram's camp—for Ravana, wise and far-thinking as he was, could predict this happening in the near future, and it was a premonition that he felt would definitely come true.

Later on in the story we shall read that his other brother, Kumbhakarna, too has lauded Vibhishan and praised him as the torch-bearer of his family's good name and fame when the former was forced by Ravana to join battle against Lord Ram. Kumbhakarna had met Vibhishan in the battle-field. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precedes Doha no. 64.

We will also read that Kumbhakarna too had chided Ravana for picking up a war with Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 63.]

सचिव संग लै नभ पथ गयऊ । सबहि सुनाइ कहत अस भयऊ ॥ ९ ॥

saciva saṅga lai nabha patha gaya'ū. sabahi sunā'i kahata asa bhaya'ū. 9.

Meanwhile, Vibhishan took his trusted minister with him and went up in the sky. [Obviously, Vibhishan had an air plane at his disposal on which he ascended to the sky along with his trusted aide.]

Once there (in safety), he declared aloud so that all (who watched him from the ground) could hear him. (9)

दो०. रामु सत्यसंकल्प प्रभु सभा कालबस तोरि । मैं रघुबीर सरन अब जाऊँ देहु जनि खोरि ॥ ४१ ॥

dōhā.

rāmu satyasaṅkalpa prabhu sabhā kālabasa tōri.
maiṁ raghubīra sarana aba jā'uṁ dēhu jani khōri. 41.

Vibhishan addressed Ravana from the sky and declared, 'Lord Ram is true to his vows and commitments¹. He is all-able, strong and powerful. On the other hand, your council of ministers is doomed by ill-fated destiny (because they fail to show you the right path, and instead are leading you by the hand to your doom).

Now I am going to take shelter at the feet of Lord Raghubir (Lord Sri Ram) and surrender myself before him; don't blame me any more². ' (Doha no. 41)

[Note—¹What was Lord Ram's commitment? He, in his primary form as Lord Vishnu, had promise the gods and mother earth that he would personally eliminate the demons and slay Ravana to free the world from their horrors. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 187.

Once again, Lord Ram, while passing through the forest, had also promised the sages and ascetics residing there that he will surely kill the demons who had been causing them a lot of trouble. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 9 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede it.

So now the time has come for the Lord to fulfill these vows, and no one can stop him.

²Ravana has himself told Vibhishan to go and join Lord Ram—apropos: Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes this Doha no. 41 herein above.]

चौ०. अस कहि चला बिभीषनु जबहीं । आयूहीन भए सब तबहीं ॥ १ ॥
साधु अवग्या तुरत भवानी । कर कल्यान अखिल कैहानी ॥ २ ॥ रावन जबहिं बिभीषन त्यागा । भयउ बिभव बिनु तबहिं अभागा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

asa kahi calā bibhīṣanu jabahīm. āyūhīna bha'e saba tabahīm. 1.
sādhu avagyā turata bhavānī. kara kalyāna akhila kai hānī. 2.
rāvana jabahīm bibhīṣana tyāgā. bhaya'u bibhava binu tabahīm abhāgā. 3.

No sooner had Vibhishan left the city after strongly admonishing Ravana than the doom of the demon race was sealed. (1)

[Lord Shiva told his divine consort Parvati, also known by the name of Bhavani—] ‘Oh Bhavani! An insult or disrespect shown to a saint invites immediate repercussions, as it instantly neutralizes all blessings in its wake and paves the way for strong punishment of the offender. (2)

The moment Ravana abandoned Vibhishan, all his hopes for a happy life and a good fate vanished; his glory was lost, his future was assuredly doomed, and he became luckless. (3)

चलेउ हरषि रघुनायक पाहीं । करत मनोरथ बहु मन माहीं ॥ ४ ॥
 देखिहउँ जाइ चरन जलजाता । अरुन मृदुल सेवक सुखदाता ॥ ५ ॥
 जे पद परसि तरी रिषिनारी । दंडक कानन पावनकारी ॥ ६ ॥
 जे पद जनकसुताँ उर लाए । कपट कुरंग संग धर धाए ॥ ७ ॥ हर उर सर सरोज पद जेई । अहोभाग्य मैं देखिहउँ तेई ॥ ८ ॥ calē'u haraṣi raghunāyaka pāhīm. karata manōratha bahu mana māhīm. 4.

 dēkhiha'uṃ jā'i carana jalajātā. aruna mṛdula sēvaka sukhadātā. 5.
 jē pada parasi tarī riṣinārī. daṇḍaka kānana pāvanakārī. 6.
 jē pada janakasutāṃ ura lā'ē. kapaṭa kuraṅga saṅga dhara dhā'ē. 7.
 hara ura sara sarōja pada jēī. ahōbhāgya maim dēkhiha'uṃ tēī. 8.

Meanwhile, Vibhishan felt himself exceedingly fortunate; he was very glad and his heart was exhilarated as he proceeded to meet Lord Raghunayak (Lord Ram).

On the way he was thinking of so many fortunate circumstances, and had so many happy expectations¹ for himself in the days to come that his joy knew no bounds. (4)

“Now I shall go and have a divine glimpse of the sole of the holy lotus like feet of the Lord that are like a red lotus flower, are soft to touch, and are providers of joy and comfort to devotees. (5)

These are the same holy feet of Lord Ram the touch of which not only liberated the wife of the sage from her curse², but also purified the cursed Dandakaranya forest when the Lord passed through it³. (6)

These are the same holy feet of Lord Ram which the daughter of Janak (i.e. Sita) reverentially enshrines in her heart⁴, and which ran behind the decoy golden deer to deliver his soul from the evil body of a demon⁵. (7)

For sooth, how extremely fortunate I am that today I would be able to have a divine glimpse of those holy lotus like feet of Lord Ram that bloom so reverentially in the lake-like shrine of Lord Shiva's heart⁶. (8)

[Note—¹What were Vibhishan's great expectations; why was he so happy? They are wonderfully enumerated in Tulsidas' classic “Geetawali Ramayan”, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 29 and 30. We shall be reading them in detail in this Chapter no. 9, Section no. 9.3 of our Book.

²This incidence refers to the liberation of Ahilya, the wife of sage Guatam, when Lord Ram touched her by his feet. Ahilya was cursed by the sage to become a stone due to some misunderstanding. But when the sage realized that she was not at fault, he blessed her that one day when Lord Ram would pass that way and touch her with his holy feet, she would find deliverance from her curse and come back to him in the heaven. This story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 210—to Doha no. 211.

³The Dandakaranya forest too was cursed. Sage Agastya advised Lord Ram to make it pure by walking through its inhospitable terrain. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 16 that precedes Doha no. 13.

⁴Sita had enshrined in her heart an image of Lord Ram that she last saw of him as he went behind the golden deer; she meditated on this image and focused her mind on the holy feet of Lord Ram throughout her stay in captivity in Lanka. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Aranya Kand, Doha no. 29-b; and (ii) Sundar Kand, Doha no. 30.

⁵This alludes to the event when Lord Ram had gone behind the demon Marich who was forced by Ravana to disguise himself as a golden deer so that Sita could be abducted by the latter (Ravana). Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 25; Chaupai line nos. 1-11 that precede Doha no. 27.

⁶Lord Shiva is renowned to be the greatest devotee of Lord Ram. The very memory of Lord Ram thrills Shiva; he constantly meditates on the holy name of Lord Ram. In fact, the divine story of the Ramayan was first conceived in the mind and heart of Shiva while he was meditating. There are numerous instances of Shiva's unparalleled and singular devotion for Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Doha no. 111 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 19; (iii) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 30; (iv) Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 35; (v) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 51; and (vi) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 108.]

दो०. जिन्ह पायन्ह के पादुकन्हि भरतु रहे मन लाइ ।

ते पद आजु बिलोकिहउँ इन्ह नयनन्हि अब जाइ ॥ ४२ ॥

dōhā.

jinha pāyanha kē pādukanhi bharatu rahē mana lā'i.
tē pada āju bilōkiha'um̐ inha nayananhi aba jā'i. 42.

How indeed lucky am I that today I shall be able to go and see with my own eyes those holy feet whose wooden sandals were accepted by Bharat with such affection and reverence, and which have become a center of his devotion now, for he worships them with great faith and love^{1*}.” (Doha no. 42)

[Note—¹Bharat was the younger brother of Lord Ram. He was not present in Ayodhya when the Lord was sent to forest exile; so as soon as he came to know of this sad development he immediately decided to go to the forest and bring Lord Ram back. However, Lord Ram had to fulfill his mandate of eliminating the demons, and therefore it was imperative for him to stay in the forest and take necessary actions to successfully accomplish this task.

So, when the Lord persuaded Bharat to go back from the forest and wait for him in Ayodhya, Bharat requested him for some token that he could use as a symbolic presence of the Lord. Then Lord Ram had given Bharat his wooden sandals, which the latter accepted with the greatest reverence, and upon his arrival back in Ayodhya Bharat put those sandals on the throne of the kingdom of Ayodhya to represent Lord Ram, and himself went to live like an ascetic at a nearby place.

These developments are the main topics in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand. However, the following verses can be cited specifically with reference to the wooden sandals of Lord Ram and how Bharat worshipped them—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 316; and Doha no. 323—to Doha no. 325.

*It is to be noted here that the “present tense” has been used by Vibhishan. This is because while these events were unfolding in the forest, from Sita’s abduction till the time the army of Lord Ram pitched camp on the shore of the ocean, and even beyond till the time of the end of the war of Lanka, Bharat was worshipping the sandals of Lord Ram back in Ayodhya.]

चौ०. एहि बिधि करत सप्रेम बिचारा । आयउ सपदि सिंधु एहिं पारा ॥ १ ॥
कपिन्ह बिभीषनु आवत देखा । जाना कोउ रिपु दूत बिसेषा ॥ २ ॥
ताहि राखि कपीस पहिं आए । समाचार सब ताहि सुनाए ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

ēhi bidhi karata saprēma bicārā. āya'u sapadi sindhu ēhiṁ pārā. 1.
kapinha bibhīṣanu āvata dēkhā. jānā kō'u ripu dūta bisēṣā. 2.
tāhi rākhi kapīsa pahīṁ ā'ē. samācāra saba tāhi sunā'ē. 3.

In this way, harbouring many happy thoughts and glad tidings in his heart, he (Vibhishan) lost no time to arrive on the shore of the ocean (where Lord Ram had pitched his camp with his army). (1)

When the Kapis (the monkey warriors of Lord Ram’s army) who were on duty as look-outs saw Vibhishan come, they thought that he was a special messenger of their enemy (Ravana). (2)

They stopped him and told him to wait, and then went to their king (Sugriv) to inform the latter of the whole matter. (3)

कह सुग्रीव सुनहु रघुराई । आवा मिलन दसानन भाई ॥ ४ ॥
कह प्रभु सखा बूझिऐ काहा । कहइ कपीस सुनहु नरनाहा ॥ ५ ॥
जानि न जाइ निसाचर माया । कामरूप केहि कारन आया ॥ ६ ॥
भेद हमार लेन सठ आवा । राखिअ बाँधि मोहि अस भावा ॥ ७ ॥ kaha sugrīva sunahu raghurā'ī. āvā milana dasānana bhā'ī. 4.

 kaha prabhu sakhā būjhi'ai kāhā. kaha'i kapīsa sunahu naranāhā. 5.
 jāni na jā'i nisācara māyā. kāmārūpa kēhi kārana āyā. 6.
 bhēda hamāra lēna saṭha āvā. rākhi'a bāmdhi mōhi asa bhāvā. 7.

Upon hearing the news of the arrival of Vibhishan, Sugriv approached Lord Ram and said, 'Listen oh the Lord of the Raghus (Lord Ram)! The brother of the ten-headed Ravana has come to meet you. [What should we do in this matter?]' (4)

The Lord (prabhu) replied by asking Sugriv, 'Oh my friend (sakhā)! What is your opinion in this matter?'

The king of the Kapis (Sugriv) said, 'Oh King (naranāhā), listen; I'll tell you what I think. (5)

No one can know what kind of deceit and dirty trick the demons have. They are very cunning and pretentious, and assume any form that suits them. It is therefore very difficult to say for what real purpose he has come here.

[To wit, he may pretend to be very friendly towards us, he may act as if he is our well-wisher, but actually he may have come with some ulterior motive, and we can never know what his real intentions are.] (6)

I think that this rascal has come to spy upon us and gather intelligence about our secrets (such as about our military strength and strategy). Therefore I feel that it would be wiser for us to tie him up and keep him captive. [This will also help us to interrogate him to extract some useful information about the demon army's strength and its preparedness, as well as to use him as a bargain tool in case we need to engage in some sort of negotiation in the due course.]¹ (7)

[Note—¹In Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 7-8, we read that Sugriv has suggested a similar thing to Lord Ram. Militarily it was a prudent advice because by letting an enemy's brother inside the camp may prove very dangerous for Lord Ram's army as it would be made vulnerable to spying from within. All the chinks in the defense lines of Lord Ram's army, all its shortcomings and strengths, all its preparedness and war strategies would be susceptible to leakage as they would be known to Vibhishan once he is allowed to join the camp, and it will then be so much the easier for Ravana to out-manuever the Lord's army and strike from the behind. Hence, it was a dangerous proposition to allow Vibhishan to join the monkey army, because if he has come with the intention of espionage then this situation would be like digging one's own grave.

But as we shall read in the following verses, Lord Ram had other plans in his mind. The Lord asserts that though what Sugriv suggests is prudent, practical and wise militarily, but he has his own reputation to maintain and vows to keep, which makes it obligatory upon the Lord not to turn back anyone who is distressed and has come to seek the Lord's protection, to surrender to the Lord and seek his refuge and blessings, in which case the Lord must grant that person's wishes and make him fearless from torments that had motivated him to come seeking the Lord's refuge and protection. Besides this, if Vibhishan happens to be the Lord's devotee, which indeed he was, then the case is made all the more stronger in his favour, and there is no reason why Vibhishan should not be warmly welcomed.]

सखा नीति तुम्ह नीकि बिचारी । मम पन सरनागत भयहारी ॥ ८ ॥
 सुनि प्रभु बचन हरष हनुमाना । सरनागत बच्छल भगवाना ॥ ९ ॥ sakhā nīti tumha nīki bicārī. mama pana saranāgata bhayahārī. 8.

 suni prabhu bacana haraṣa hanumānā. saranāgata bacchala bhagavānā. 9.

Lord Ram replied to Sugriv, ‘My friend (sakhā)! What you said is truly wise, but I am committed to protect anyone who comes humbly to surrender himself before me and seek shelter at my feet.

[To wit, I agree with your contention that the visitor being a demon no one can correctly predict what he has in his mind. But I have made a vow that whosoever comes to me in distress, seeking my help and protection, I will not turn him away. It’s a reputation that I must uphold.]’¹ (8)

When Hanuman heard the words of Lord Ram he felt exhilarated in his heart, because now it was evident that the Lord was truly the one who loves those who come to seek shelter with him and surrender themselves at his feet². (9)

[Note—¹When Sugriv expressed his grave reservations in accepting Vibhishan, an enemy’s brother, as a member of Lord Ram’s group as it is a dangerous thing to do from military point of view because this person may be an enemy’s spy pretending to be the Lord’s devotee, the Lord assuaged his fears and said—“Friend, you have given me an advice which is wise and prudent (from strategic, defense and military point of view). But I have taken a vow to remove the fears of those who have come to seek shelter in my feet.”

Lord Ram makes two observations here. One is that he addresses Sugriv as his ‘friend’, and the other is that he says ‘that Sugriv has given a wise advice’. Well, a good friend is indeed one who gives a wise advice that is to the best of his intelligence and thinking. To accept an enemy’s brother as a member of the army is never advisable—and so Sugriv made it clear that he does not agree with the view of accepting Vibhishan in their midst. Lord Ram acknowledged this fact by addressing Sugriv as his ‘friend’.

But then Lord Ram is not an ordinary prince who is driven merely by worldly considerations; he is the Supreme Lord of creation in a personified form, and therefore has many things to consider before taking any decision. Militarily and from strategic defense point of view what Sugriv suggested was very wise and prudent—that it is not advisable to keep an enemy’s brother amongst them. But the Lord is supposed to be giver of protection to all those who are distressed in this world, and therefore he is bound to take this factor into consideration before deciding whether or not to accept Vibhishan as a refugee. Hence the Lord declared that ‘he is determined to remove the ‘fear of those who come to seek shelter with him’.

When we examine the situation on the ground we find that there are to armies having a stand-off, one is that of Ravana of Lanka, the demon kingdom, and the other is that of Lord Ram and his companion Sugriv of the monkey kingdom. In this situation if Vibhishan has come to seek refuge with the Lord then obviously there is something very serious that has compelled him to take this drastic step, as it is extremely dangerous to become a traitor and go openly to join an enemy’s camp prior to a war. Vibhishan will be summarily tried for treason, hounded by his all-powerful demon brother Ravana, hunted down, tortured and killed instantly if the Lord now refused him permission to remain with him. Vibhishan has taken an extremely risky step, and above all he is the Lord's devotee. So there was no question of denying him refuge.

Vibhishan was humiliated and kicked out by Ravana because he was giving him sane and rational advice that was in accordance to the principles of common sense, ethics and probity—that one should not kidnap someone's loyal wife, and then unnecessary get entangled in a bloody and ruinous war for the sake of a single woman. After being sternly rebuked by Ravana and declared as a virtual traitor for advocating the cause of Ravana's enemy, i.e. Lord Ram, it was clearly suicidal for Vibhishan to remain within Lanka for one moment more. He had no other option but to escape before it was too late. He was scared for his life, and if the Lord now refused him protection it would be against the declared principle of the Lord and would undermine the Lord's glorious virtue that he is a merciful and benevolent protector of refugees, and he cheerfully accepts anyone who comes to seek genuine refuge in his holy feet no matter what the sins of the other person are.

Lord Ram is the King of Ayodhya from the temporal perspective, and the Supreme Lord Emperor of the whole world from the perspective of creation. Each action of his will become a law, a precedent and an example that would be followed by others in the world. Thus, from now onwards it would become an established principle of statehood that a king is obliged to grant refuge to refugees if they are distressed, terrified and fear for their lives, and have come seeking asylum with the king. Of course it is now obligatory on the part of the refuge-seeker to be loyal and faithful to the person who has granted him refuge and protection, and any betrayal will be a horrendous sin more intense than treason.

To the credit of Vibhishan, he lived faithful and loyal to Lord Ram for the rest of his life.

²Hanuman could not counter Sugriv as he was the king of the monkeys as well as the commander-in-chief of the army, but internally Hanuman did not like the idea of turning Vibhishan away as he had personally known the latter to be a great devotee of the Lord and the one who had been of a lot of help in showing where Sita was confined in Lanka when Hanuman had gone there in search for her—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6, till Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 8.

Besides this, refusal to accept Vibhishan as a refugee would harm Lord Ram's reputation as the most compassionate and merciful Lord of creation who extends protection to all those who are his devotees and are in distress, and it would also put Hanuman in a bad light and make him out to be a liar because he had lauded the excellent virtues of the Lord when he met Vibhishan in Lanka (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 7—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 8), and if Vibhishan is not accepted and warmly welcomed now then all his assertions about the good nature of Lord Ram would be nothing but mere bluff and bluster.

Therefore, when the Lord declared that he will accept Vibhishan inspite of everything else, it was Hanuman who felt the most happy of the lot.]

दो०. सरनागत कहूँ जे तजहिं निज अनहित अनुमानि ।

ते नर पावँर पापमय तिन्हहि बिलोकत हानि ॥ ४३ ॥

dōhā.

saranāgata kahuṁ jē tajahim nija anahita anumāni.
tē nara pāvaṁra pāpamaya tinhahi bilōkata hāni. 43.

Lord Ram declared—‘He who refuses to give shelter to someone who comes seeking it in great distress, apprehending some harm from him, is a very sinful and despicable man. It is abominable and repulsive to even look at such an immoral person. (Doha no. 43)

[Note—The implication of this edict of the Lord is that those who accept refugees irrespective of all other considerations are righteous men, and it is a lawful duty not to turn away someone who has surrendered himself, is in grave distress, and has come seeking unequivocal protection.

When someone comes to another person seeking protection it implies that the former is sure that the latter is able and strong enough to protect him. If it is within the means of the second person then he must never refuse the first person protection, as this will be tantamount to betrayal of trust and faith that the refuge-seeker has in the person to whom he has come seeking shelter. This will also not be good thing from the view of the reputation of the stronger person; it will give the signal that he is selfish and biased.

Lord Ram signaled to Sugriv that if he refused to accept Vibhishan out of any fear, then he will face such ignominy in this world that he would not be able to show his face to anyone later on, chiefly when the people regard him as an incarnate Supreme Being.]

चौ०. कोटि बिप्र बध लागहिं जाहू । आएँ सरन तजउँ नहिं ताहू ॥ १ ॥

सनमुख होइ जीव मोहि जबहीं । जन्म कोटि अघ नासहिं तबहीं ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kōṭi bipra badha lāgahim jāhū. ā'ēṁ sarana taja'uṁ nahim tāhū. 1.

sanamukha hō'i jīva mōhi jabahim. janma kōṭi agha nāсахim tabahim. 2.

Even if the refuge-seeker is accused of killing countless Vipras (Brahmins), I do not abandon him if he comes sincerely and terrified to seek my refuge, shelter and protection. (1)

[In this verse, the Lord answers the natural question that arises in one's mind—how can the Lord accept someone as sinful as the one who has harmed Brahmins?]

As soon as a Jiva (a creature; a living being) faces me or comes near me, all his sins, faults, corruptions, moral turpitudes and vices that have been accumulated over many countless births are eliminated instantly. (2)

[Note—¹This is said by the Lord to emphasise his determination to accept all those who come to seek the Lord's protection, shelter and refuge. Lord Ram wishes to tell the world that one should not fear harsh treatment and humiliation at his hands just because one is a sinner and has committed some grave error at the time of going to seek shelter with the Lord, as he is ready to pardon him. The fact is that the Lord is extremely merciful and forgiving, and once one surrenders himself before the Lord he has no more to fear from anything. This was the advice given to Ravana by his wife Mandodari on three separate occasions in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand—(i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6, till Doha no. 7; (ii) (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14, till Doha no. 15; and (iii) Doha no. 35 Kha, till Doha no. 37.

Malyawan, an old and wise demon who was one of the chief advisors of Ravana, also advised him the same thing in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 48, till Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 49. And finally, Ravana's own brother Vibhishan had advocated the same thing, and had even assured Ravana that he need not have any fear of retribution or vengeance from Lord Ram should he decide to surrender before the Lord as the latter is extremely forgiving and accepting—refer Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 39.

But the irony is that those who are sinful and innately pervert do not desire to go to the Lord in the first place—this has been clearly stated by Lord Ram himself in the following Chaupai line nos. 3-5.

²From the perspective of metaphysics and the Upanishads, the phrase 'the Jiva facing the Supreme Being' means a creature becoming self-realised and enlightened. Such a creature realises that his true 'self' is the pure conscious Atma and not the gross body that is involved in doing so many deeds, sinful or not, and therefore 'he'—the 'truthful identity of the Jiva'—is not to be blamed or accused for the acts and deeds of the body. Hence, no punishment accrues to 'him'—i.e. to his true self, the Atma. This Atma is a microcosmic form of the cosmic Atma known as the Parmatma, the supreme Atma, the super Consciousness.

This super Consciousness, the true 'self' of the Jiva, is like the brilliant sun shining in the sky; no taints can ever tarnish its image. Appearance of clouds may give the impression that the sun's brilliance has faded, but wise ones know that it is not the truth. Similarly, the countless faults and sins of the world are limited to the body, and they have no bearing on the holiness and purity of the Atma, the true self of the Jiva.

This is what the Lord implies here. Once one has witnessed the truth of his inner-self, once one has experienced the brilliance of the consciousness residing in one's inner-self, all worldly taints known as sins and vices fade into oblivion like the cloud that does not affect the brilliance of the sun's disc.

Now, a controversy is raised. How is it possible for great sinners to attain the Lord who is most holy and divine? This is answered in the next line—that a sinner cannot think of having devotion and affection for Lord Ram. To be sinful and be a devotee of the Lord at the same time is an impossible proposition much like day and night existing together. If one comes to the Lord then it is deemed that he has overcome his sins.

Another connotation is that if a person had committed some mistake in the past but now realises that he had done a grave wrong, then he must be given all opportunities to reform himself, as to err is in human nature, and sincere repentance must be given cognizance. The Supreme Being has taken the trouble to come down to earth and himself suffer as a human being because he is merciful and wishes to provide the world a chance at redemption. Had it been that he simply wished to punish and reward all according to their actions and deeds, there was no need to take this trouble, for he could have easily done it sitting in heaven—rewarding the righteous ones with their desired fruits, and condemning to hell the sinful ones. But that is not the wish of the Supreme Father—he loves all his children alike, and if some of them have gone astray he tries his best to give them a chance for reforming themselves and bring them back to the mainstream of righteous way of life known as Dharma.]

पापवंत कर सहज सुभाऊ । भजनु मोर तेहि भाव न काऊ ॥ ३ ॥

जाँ पै दुष्टहृदय सोइ होई । मोरें सनमुख आव कि सोई ॥ ४ ॥

निर्मल मन जन सो मोहि पावा । मोहि कपट छल छिद्र न भावा ॥ ५ ॥ pāpavanta kara sahaja subhā'ū. bhajanu mōra tēhi bhāva na kā'ū. 3.

jauṁ pai duṣṭahrdaya sō'i hō'ī. mōrēṁ sanamukha āva ki sō'ī. 4.

nirmala mana jana sō mōhi pāvā. mōhi kapaṭa chala chidra na bhāvā. 5.

A person who is sinful and pervert, a person who is corrupt and has vices in him, is by nature averse to having devotion for me and worshipping me.

[To wit, persons with a tainted heart and mind cannot even think of worshipping me or having devotion for me—because there darkness and light cannot go together.]¹ (3)

If he (Vibhishan) has any trace of wickedness or deceit in his heart, then can he ever come to me and face me, surely not!

[Lord Ram is making a general statement here. He says that a person with a wicked heart and mind cannot dare to come before the Lord, he cannot even think of facing the Lord. So, in case someone has approached the Lord then it sure that his heart and mind are un-corrupt, or at least ready to mend their way. This is corroborated by the verse below.]² (4)

Only those Jivas (creatures; living beings) who have a purified, uncorrupt and taintless Mana (mind, sub-conscious and heart) can ever expect or hope to attain me or come near me—as I do not like wickedness, vices, deceit, conceit, pretensions, duplicity and perversions that act like moral cracks, crevices and holes for a person.³ (5)

[Note—¹This is the reason why the Lord will willingly accept anyone who comes seeking refuge and shelter with him. We can understand this by a simple example. The fire has a natural tendency to burn impurities, but it does not burn the pure metal. When impure god is required to be purified, it is put in fire where all the impurities are burnt and pure metal remains.

Similarly, when a Jiva faces the Lord all his sins, vices and perversions, which are like the impurity of the gold, get burnt instantly, and what emerges is the purified Atma which is like pure sample of gold.

²This line is an extension of verse no. 3, and completes the reason given by the Lord for accepting even the sinful ones as his refugees. He goes on to clarify the matter further in the next line no. 5.

³This is a stern warning from Lord Ram. When a person decides to approach the Lord with a petition for surrender and seeking refuge, he must keep this in mind. Lord Ram is all-knowing and omniscient; nothing is hidden from him. No one can cheat him by pretensions and sweet talk. And above all, the Lord is almighty and all-powerful. So there is no joking with him like there is no joking when dealing with a king or emperor. Should the king become annoyed by any remote chance at the petitioner, the latter's fate is too obvious to narrate—he will be at the best thrown in the prison for life if not viciously thrashed instantly and hanged outright.

So we see that after showing his kind side, the Lord now warns cunning people that his gracious nature must not be played fools around with. 'Be warned' he wishes to say; if a wicked man tries to play smart with the Lord, then he had it!]

भेद लेन पठवा दससीसा । तबहुँ न कछु भय हानि कपीसा ॥ ६ ॥
जग महुँ सखा निसाचर जेते । लछिमनु हनइ निमिष महुँ तेते ॥ ७ ॥
जौं सभीत आवा सरनाई । रखिहउँ ताहि प्रान की नाई ॥ ८ ॥ bhēda lēna paṭhavā dasasīsā. tabahuṁ na kachu bhaya hāni kapīsā. 6.

jaga mahuṁ sakhā nisācara jētē. lachimanu hana'i nimiṣa mahuṁ tētē. 7.
jauṁ sabhīta āvā saranā'īm. rakhiha'uṁ tāhi prāna kī nā'īm. 8.

After making his intentions clear, Lord Ram turned to Sugriv and assured him not to fear for anything because of the Lord not accepting his advice to keep Vibhishan in captivity. He reassured Sugriv and said—'Even if the ten-headed Ravana has sent him (Vibhishan) to spy upon us, oh king of monkeys (Sugriv), there is still nothing to fear about at all. [Why? This is answered in the next line no. 7.] (6)

Oh friend! Laxman (Lord Ram's younger brother) is strong and able enough to kill in a short time all the demons who live in this world¹. (7)

On the other hand, if he (Vibhishan) is distressed and has come to seek my shelter out of fear of persecution and punishment, then verily I declare that I will protect him with my life; I will protect him like one protects one's own life². (8)

[Note—¹To wit, even if Vibhishan is a spy and causes sabotage from within our ranks any time in future, something that you fear the most, there is no cause of alarm—because my brother Laxman can single-handedly eliminate all the demons who exist in this world.

Here, Lord Ram is praising Laxman and his valour to send out the signal that he is not alone here to face the enemy, but has a very powerful brother with him. So not only Vibhishan but anyone else amongst the monkey-and-bear army who tries to act smart with them any time during the war should be warned.

Another reason for praising Laxman in public is to give him honour for all the personal sacrifices he has done for the Lord's cause—he left the comfort of the kingdom to accompany Lord Ram to the forest, looked after the Lord and his wife Sita during the course of their long exile period in the forest, and was the Lord's only companion and comrade-in-arm when the Lord was passing through a rough patch in his life. Strategically also it was a clever devise by the Lord—it helped to boost Laxman's morale and standing in the hierarchy of the army; it acknowledged the Lord's faith and reliance upon him. The Lord made it clear that he was the second-in-command.

Lord Ram wished to express his solidarity with his younger brother and thank him for his seminal courage and exemplary loyalty. It would not look good if he had directly praised Laxman in private, so the Lord took the indirect method of praising Laxman's abilities as an able and invincible warrior in public while he was also present to hear the praise.

It ought to be noted that this statement by Lord Ram must not be construed as boastful and bombastic because one may argue that if what Lord Ram asserts is the true case then why couldn't Laxman alone defeat the demon army, and why he was wounded in the battle-field? Well, the answer is that not only did Lord Ram wish to praise his comrade-in-arm and a faithful companion who had been at his side through thick and thin but he also wished to boost the morale of the monkey army that they have a powerful commander to lead them.

In sage Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 10-11, Lord Ram expresses almost similar views, but with a little difference. He says here that should Vibhishan play any dirty tricks against them then he is capable of taking care of him all by himself, as he is that Supreme Lord of the world who can annihilate the entire creation if he so wishes. Compare this to our present chaupai line no. 7 in Ram Charit Manas where Lord Ram points to his younger brother and says Laxman can take care of the eventuality of Vibhishan betraying them because he (Laxman) is capable of killing all the demon forces single-handedly if the situation so demands.

²Lord Ram has placed on the table both the options to make Sugriv overcome his fears. One is that if Vibhishan has come to spy upon them, no harm will be caused—because if he tries to create mischief, then Laxman is competent to take care of him by killing him instantly. The other option is that if he is terrified and has come to seek genuine refuge, then the Lord is duty-bound and obliged to give him full protection.

So under both the circumstances, Sugriv must bring Vibhishan before the Lord without any sort of fear or reservations.]

दो०. उभय भँति तेहि आनहु हँसि कह कृपानिकेत ।

जय कृपाल कहि कपि चले अंगद हनू समेत ॥ ४४ ॥

dōhā.

ubhaya bhāṁti tēhi ānahu haṁsi kaha krpānikēta.
jaya krpāla kahi kapi calē aṅgada hanū samēta. 44.

The merciful Lord smiled and ordered—‘So, bring him to me under both the circumstances. [To wit, whether he is come as a friend or as a foe, there is nothing to worry at all. Bring him to me and then we shall see.]¹

The monkeys applauded the Lord and exclaimed happily in unison, ‘Glory to the merciful Lord’. Then accompanied by Hanuman, they went to bring him (Vibhishan) to the Lord. (Doha no. 44)

[Note—¹Vibhishan came seeking refuge in the holy feet of Lord Ram. Sugriv, who was the commanders of the Lord's army and the chief of the monkeys, had serious doubts about his intentions. He felt that Vibhishan should be tied and held as captive—refer: Chaupai line nos. 4-7 that precede Doha no. 43.

Lord Ram then assured them that they have nothing to fear, and that the Lord will accept Vibhishan in all circumstances as it is a principle of Dharma (morality and righteous conduct) on the part of the Lord not to refuse a request from a distressed person seeking refuge in his holy feet.

Essentially the Lord says that he is determined to accept anyone who is truly distressed and comes to seek sincere refuge and protection from the Lord without having any kind of deceit, pretensions and falsehood in his heart. To refuse permission to such a person, to deny refuge to a person who has come to surrender himself before the Lord is an unthinkable thing for the Lord as he is renowned to be the provider of refuge to the helpless and the hapless, to the distressed and the miserable, to those who have no other succour and solace in this world except the Lord himself.

One very important reason why Lord Ram was sure that Vibhishan had no ill intentions is this: When Hanuman came back from his successful mission to Lanka and briefed the Lord about the details of his adventures, he must have surely told him about his brief meeting with Vibhishan, and how the latter had helped him on two occasions—one by telling him where to find Sita, and on the second occasion by protecting his life when he prevailed upon the mad demons, who were bent on attacking and killing Hanuman in the court of Ravana, to spare his life and instead humiliate him by branding any part of his body, at which they wrapped cloth around his tail and set it on fire. This obviously hinted to the Lord that Vibhishan was favourably inclined towards him.]

चौ०. सादर तेहि आगें करि बानर । चले जहाँ रघुपति करुनाकर ॥ १ ॥

दूरिहि ते देखे द्वौ भ्राता । नयनानंद दान के दाता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sādara tēhi āgēm kari bānara. calē jahāñ raghupati karunākara. 1.

dūrihi tē dēkhē dvau bhrātā. nayanānanda dāna kē dātā. 2.

[The messengers went quickly to where they had kept Vibhishan waiting on the outskirts of the camp. They informed him that Lord Ram has instructed that he be respectfully brought in his presence. So they invited Vibhishan to accompany them to the place where the Lord was waiting to receive him.]

Keeping him (Vibhishan) very respectfully ahead of themselves, the troop of monkeys proceeded to the place where Lord Raghupati (Sri Ram), the Lord who is all-merciful and compassionate, was waiting for them to return. (1)

He (Vibhishan) saw the two brothers (Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman) from a distance. Their sight was universally so magnificent and singular in its majesty and beauty that it granted immense joy to the eyes of the beholder as if it was a largesse given out by the two brothers for free to all those who come to visit them¹.

(2)

[Note—¹This was the first time in his life that Vibhishan was seeing the two brothers, and he was overwhelmed by the magnificence and beauty of the sight. For a few moments he stood mesmerized, losing all awareness of himself and his surroundings. He had heard that the Lord was beautiful to behold, but he had never imagined ‘how’ great that beauty was. And there is nothing unusual or wondrous about it, for Lord Ram was a personified form of the Supreme Being whose other visible form is Mother Nature; and who does not know how beautiful, how amazing, how magnificent and how majestic is Nature!]

बहुरि राम छबिधाम बिलोकी । रहेउ ठटुकि एकटक पल रोकी ॥ ३ ॥

भुज प्रलंब कंजारुन लोचन । स्यामल गात प्रनत भय मोचन ॥ ४ ॥

सिंघ कंध आयत उर सोहा । आनन अमित मदन मन मोहा ॥ ५ ॥ bahuri rāma chabidhāma bilōkī. rahē'u ṭhaṭuki ēkaṭaka pala rōkī. 3.

bhuja pralamba kañjārūna lōcana. syāmala gāta pranata bhaya mōcana. 4.
siṅgha kandha āyata ura sōhā. ānana amita madana mana mōhā. 5.

After the initial amazement that the combined beautiful view of the two brothers had caused to Vibhishan, he turned his attention especially to Lord Ram whom he had come to meet.

The sight of the Lord was singularly unique in its charm and beauty so much so that when Vibhishan focused his attention on the Lord he was so overwhelmed for some time that he stood motionless as if in a daze; he could neither blink his eyes nor could he move his legs. (3)

The Lord's arms were long (implying that his reach was far and wide); his eyes were like red-hued lotus flowers (indicating that they were beautiful and his sight was pure as the lotus); and his body had a dark complexion (like that of the ocean or the sky, indicating that the Lord had no end).

This form of the Lord removed or destroyed the fears of all those who came to surrender themselves before him (pranata bhaya mōcana). [It is because this form of Lord Ram represented the Supreme Being who is the almighty Lord of the world.] (4)

The Lord's shoulders were muscular and broad like that of a lion (indicating that the Lord was strong enough to extend his support and protection to his dependants and followers); and his chest (bosom) was wide (indicating that the Lord had a ‘large, magnanimous, benevolent heart’ that welcomed everyone; that he cheerfully embraced one and all). (5)

नयन नीर पुलकित अति गाता । मन धरि धीर कही मृदु बाता ॥ ६ ॥

नाथ दसानन कर मैं भ्राता । निसिचर बंस जनम सुरत्राता ॥ ७ ॥

सहज पापप्रिय तामस देहा । जथा उलूकहि तम पर नेहा ॥ ८ ॥ nayana nīra pulakita ati gātā. mana dhari dhīra kahī mṛdu bātā. 6.

nātha dasānana kara maiṁ bhrātā. nīcara bansa janama suratrātā. 7.
sahaja pāpapiya tāmāsa dēhā. jathā ulūkahi tama para nēhā. 8.

Vibhishan had become highly emotional at the bewitching sight of Lord Ram; his eyes were filled with tears and his body was thrilled. He, however, soon recovered himself and gathered his wits together, and addressed Lord Ram with sweet and polite words --- (6)

[Vibhishan said to Lord Ram—] ‘Oh Lord (nātha)! I am a brother of the ten-headed Ravana. Oh the Lord who is a protector of the gods (suratrātā)! I am born in the demon race (which, on the other hand, has been always tormenting the gods)¹. (7)

I have an evil body (of a demon) which is inclined to be naturally sinful (i.e. being a demon by birth it is my nature to be sinful), just like an owl that has a natural affinity for darkness of the night.² (8)

[Note—¹Vibhishan means that while Lord Ram is a protector of the gods, he himself is born in the demon race that has traditionally been tormenting the gods.

²Why is Vibhishan outlining all his negative-ness before Lord Ram while introducing himself? He wishes to convey to the Lord that he is humble and unpretentious as he fully understands his background. He is not pretending to be a nice demon who qualifies to be accepted by Lord Ram as a righteous person who deserves respect. But inspite of all the shortcomings and drawbacks he has inherited by the virtue of his birth, over which he had no control, he nevertheless has come to surrender before the Lord as he had heard about the Lord’s greatness and reputation that he gladly welcomes everyone if they are honest and sincere, irrespective of their backgrounds. This is clear in the following Doha no. 45.

Vibhishan decided that it would be absolutely wrong to try to act smart with Lord Ram, and it would be better to point out his negative aspects first and foremost so that when the Lord accepts him in his camp no one would accuse him that he had misled the Lord about himself by not divulging the truth. He wanted to be accepted by Lord Ram the way he was, whether he was bad or good, and not in a way that was artificial and made-up. Relationship that is based on truth and honesty would be lasting and strong for both the parties, for Lord Ram as well as Vibhishan. They would be able to trust each other better when they know that neither of them will speak falsehood to impress the other.]

दो०. श्रवन सुजसु सुनि आयउँ प्रभु भंजन भव भीर । त्राहि त्राहि आरति हरन सरन सुखद रघुबीर ॥ ४५ ॥
dōhā.

śravana sujasu suni āya'uṁ prabhu bhañjana bhava bhīra.
trāhi trāhi ārati harana sarana sukhada raghubīra. 45.

I have come to seek refuge with you after having heard about your great reputation and goodwill that you are an able Lord who can eliminate or destroy the fears arising from the great horrors of this gross mundane world, which is like a vast intractable ocean of endless grief, miseries and torments (prabhu bhañjana bhava bhīra).

Oh Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram)! You remove the suffering of those who have surrendered themselves unconditionally at your holy feet (ārati harana). I repeatedly beseech and beg of you to protect me and save me (trāhi trāhi) by granting me a place at your feet as it would give me a lot of peace, comfort and happiness (sarana sukhada).’ (Doha no. 45)

चौ०. अस कहि करत दंडवत देखा । तुरत उठे प्रभु हरष बिसेषा ॥ १ ॥

दीन बचन सुनि प्रभु मन भावा । भुज बिसाल गहि हृदयँ लगावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

asa kahi karata daṇḍavata dēkhā. turata uṭhē prabhu haraṣa bisēṣā. 1.
dīna bacana suni prabhu mana bhāvā. bhuja bisāla gahi hṛdayaṁ lagāvā. 2.

Saying so, Vibhishan prostrated himself reverentially before Lord Ram. When the Lord observed that Vibhishan has fallen at his feet, he got up immediately with cheer in his heart. (10)

Vibhishan’s words of humility impressed Lord Ram’s compassionate heart a lot. So the Lord instantly got up and extended his long arms to lift Vibhishan from the ground, and then he affectionately embraced him tightly to his bosom. (2)

अनुज सहित मिलि ढिग बैठारी । बोले बचन भगत भयहारी ॥ ३ ॥

कहु लंकेस सहित परिवारा । कुसल कुठाहर बास तुम्हारा ॥ ४ ॥ anuja sahita mili ḍhiga baiṭhārī. bōlē bacana bhagata bhayahārī. 3.

kahu laṅkēsa sahita parivārā. kusala kuṭhāhara bāsa tumhārā. 4.

Both Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman met Vibhishan very affectionately. Then making Vibhishan sit near him, the Lord said polite and reassuring words that remove all fears of his devotees¹. (3)

Lord Ram addressed Vibhishan affectionately and asked of his welfare, saying, ‘Oh the king of Lanka (laṅkēsa)²! Tell me about your welfare along with that of your family. Indeed it is unfortunate that you reside at a place (a reference to Lanka) which is very inhospitable for you. (4)

[Note—¹Vibhishan was very scared and in a dire state; his condition was very precarious. On one side his own brother had become his arch enemy and would kill him if he went back to Lanka; on the other side he was in an enemy camp and uncertain how he would be treated by their king, in this case Lord Ram. He was nervous and terrified. So when Lord Ram and Laxman met him affectionately and welcomed him, and then the Lord made him sit next to him, speaking to him politely, Vibhishan felt he has got a new lease of life. Those few moments must have been very nerve-wrecking and torturing for Vibhishan; and the warmth of Lord Ram's reception immediately lifted the veil of gloom that had engulfed him from all sides.

Although Vibhishan was sure that he would not be turned away, yet he was not expecting the warmth by which he was welcomed by Lord Ram and Laxman. So he was overcome with intense gratitude, and vowed to himself that as long as he lived he will not forget that he owed his life and honour to Lord Ram. The allegiance to Lord Ram that sprouted thus in Vibhishan's heart at that time was profound, natural and honest and spontaneous.

²By addressing Vibhishan as “laṅkāśa”, the ‘king of Lanka’, Lord Ram has predicted the future—that one day Vibhishan would actually be the ruler of the kingdom of Lanka. This epithet was meant to tell Vibhishan that the Lord would treat him with the same respect that he would show to another king, that Lord Ram would not humiliate him or show disrespect to him before his courtiers, and that the Lord would treat him as an equal. This attitude of the Lord had a profound emotional and psychological effect on Vibhishan; he immediately became loyal and faithful towards Lord Ram.

He compared the Lord's loving behavior towards him with that of his own brother Ravana who treated him with utter scorn, disdain and contempt, and the gulf was too evidently deep and wide for him. Mentally Vibhishan became a virtual ‘slave’ of Lord Ram as he found in the Lord someone who was more loving and caring than his own father. Truly, what would a person, who has lost all hopes of succour and solace, who stares at a bleak future of doom and misery, want more?]

खल मंडलीं बसहु दिनु राती । सखा धरम निबहइ केहि भाँती ॥ ५ ॥ मैं जानउँ तुम्हारि सब रीती । अति नय निपुन न भाव अनीती ॥ ६ ॥ khala maṇḍalīm basahu dinu rātī. sakhā dharama nibaha'i kēhi bhāṁtī. 5.

mair̥ jāna'uṁ tumhāri saba rītī. ati naya nipuna na bhāva anītī. 6.

You live surrounded day and night by a vicious and wicked company (of demons at Lanka). In this situation I wonder how you manage to keep your piety and good conduct. (5)

I am amazed because I am aware that you are righteous by your very nature, that you do not like anything that is improper and wrong. [So I wonder how you manage to live and uphold your principles in the midst of the demons who are inherently opposed to the way of life you are accustomed to.]¹ (6)

[Note—¹Lord Ram's assertion that he knows that Vibhishan is pious and righteous by nature is in answer to what Vibhishan had said earlier—that he was sinful, a demon, etc. (apropos: Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precedes Doha no. 45 herein above).

Lord Ram wishes to reassure Vibhishan that he need not fear anything from the Lord, because the Lord knows everything about him. If the Lord can welcome even a sinful creature, then how much the better it is if that creature is pious and righteous?]

बरु भल बास नरक कर ताता । दुष्ट संग जनि देइ बिधाता ॥ ७ ॥ अब पद देखि कुसल रघुराया । जौं तुम्ह कीन्हि जानि जन दाया ॥ ८ ॥ baru bhala bāsa naraka kara tātā. duṣṭa saṅga jani dē'i bidhātā. 7.

aba pada dēkhi kusala raghurāyā. jaum̐ tumha kīnhi jāni jana dāyā. 8.

Oh my dear (tātā)! It is better to live in hell, but let the Creator not let anyone live amongst wicked people (as it causes more torment, misery and grief than what is experienced in hell).' (7)

Vibhishan replied, 'Oh Lord of the Raghus ("raghurāyā"; Lord Ram)! Now that I have had an opportunity to see your holy feet, and have been fortunate enough that you have decided to show mercy to me and accept me as one of your servants (or as your subordinate, follower and devotee), everything has turned auspicious and fortunate for me.' (8)

दो०. तब लगि कुसल न जीव कहूँ सपनेहुँ मन बिश्राम । जब लगि भजत न राम कहूँ सोक धाम तजि काम ॥ ४६ ॥
dōhā.

taba lagi kusala na jīva kahūṁ sapanēhuṁ mana biśrāma.
jaba lagi bhajata na rāma kahūṁ sōka dhāma taji kāma. 46.

[Vibhishan said—] 'Verily indeed, a creature cannot expect even in his dreams to have an auspicious future nor can his mind and heart ever find peace and rest until the time he abandons all worldly desires and passions, that are harbingers of grief, misery and pain, and devote himself instead to worshipping Lord Ram.

[To wit, a living being cannot expect, even in his dream, to have any kind of peace and happiness in his mind or heart, or expect to have any kind of welfare or good for himself, till the time he does not do Bhajan of Lord Ram, i.e. till the time he does not remember the Lord with great love and devotion, after having distanced himself from all worldly attachments and desires which are nothing but a treasury of sorrows and miseries for him.]' (Doha no. 46)

चौ०. तब लगि हृदयँ बसत खल नाना । लोभ मोह मच्छर मद माना ॥ १ ॥
जब लगि उर न बसत रघुनाथा । धरें चाप सायक कटि भाथा ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

taba lagi hṛdayaṁ basata khala nānā. lōbha mōha macchara mada mānā. 1.
jaba lagi ura na basata raghunāthā. dharēm̐ cāpa sāyaka kaṭi bhāthā. 2.

[Vibhishan continued with his submission. He said—] 'The various kinds of negative traits that make a creature wicked and vile—such as 'Lobha' (greed, avarice, rapacity), 'Moha' (delusions, attachments, attractions), 'Matsar' (jealousy, envy and ill-will), 'Mada' (arrogance, haughtiness, ego, vanity etc.) et al— [1] live in the creature's heart only till the time Lord Ram, who holds a bow and arrow in his hands, does not live there [2]¹. (1-2)

[Note—¹Wicked miscreants can enter and live inside a person's home only if there is no one to guard it against them. These wicked people, once they find entry inside the house, would ruin the house as well as its owner, imparting their bad habits on the occupants of the house and giving the whole family a bad name in the neighbourhood. But if the owner is wise and prudent, he will appoint an armed guard to protect his home from such miscreants.

In the present verse, such an armed guard is Lord Ram, and he is armed with a bow and arrow to protect his devotee from the evil-doings of miscreants represented by such negative traits as Lobha, Moha, Matsar, Mada etc. With the presence of Lord Ram in the heart of the devotee, these miscreants would not dare to peep inside.

It is significant to note that the Lord is shown as holding the bow and arrow here—it signifies the Lord's readiness to destroy these negativities from the heart of his true devotees.]

ममता तरुन तमी अँधिआरी । राग द्वेष उलूक सुखकारी ॥ ३ ॥

तब लगि बसति जीव मन माहीं । जब लगि प्रभु प्रताप रबि नाहीं ॥ ४ ॥ mamatā taruna tamī aṁdhi'ārī. rāga dvēṣa ulūka sukhakārī. 3.

taba lagi basati jīva mana māhīm. jaba lagi prabhu pratāpa rabi nāhīm. 4.

Similarly, 'Mamta' (infatuation; passion and affection for material world) is like a dark night which is very pleasing for the owls represented by the two opposing emotions of 'Raag and Dwesh' (attachment for something and repulsion with another). (3)

These negativities (Raag and Dwesh) reside in the heart of a living being only till the time there is darkness (Mamta) in it, but as soon as the light of the sun symbolized by the awareness of the splendorous glory and holiness of Lord Ram dawns in a person's inner being, the darkness vanishes and these owls hide themselves. (4)

[Note—Infatuation and lust for a thing create a longing for it; a person becomes blind in its pursuit. This in its wake creates biases in favour of certain entities and against other entities. For instance, if a man is attached to his money (i.e. has 'Mamta' for money), then anyone who helps him increase it would be his greatest friend, and the man begins to love such persons (i.e. develops 'Raag' for him), even if those persons have vested selfish interests in helping him acquire more and more money. On the other hand, if someone becomes a hindrance in his pursuit of money, he becomes his enemy, he becomes jealous of such a person (i.e. he develops 'Dwesh' with him) inspite of his being the man's well-wisher and helping him in many other ways.

But if a man is wise and develops devotion and affection for Lord Ram, he is able to rid himself of such selfish and capricious nature; he becomes steady in his mind, because now he has the Lord to support and guide him, because the Lord becomes his best well-wisher and friend, and because worldly attachments do not matter to him any longer.]

अब मैं कुसल मिटे भय भारे । देखि राम पद कमल तुम्हारे ॥ ५ ॥ तुम्ह कृपाल जा पर अनुकूला । ताहि न व्याप त्रिबिध भव सूला ॥ ६ ॥ aba mair̥ kusala miṭē bhaya bhārē. dēkhi rāma pada kamala tumhārē. 5.

tumha kṛpāla jā para anukūlā. tāhi na byāpa tribidha bhava sūlā. 6.

Oh Lord, now that I have had the opportunity and the privilege of having a divine sight of your holy feet, all of my greatest of fears have been dispelled, and I am feeling absolutely blessed with all sorts of welfare and well-being. (5)

When you become kind and show your grace upon someone, none of the three types of horrible torments of the world can affect him¹. So therefore, I am free from all fears. (6)

[Note—¹The three torments are the following—(i) Daivik—that related to malignant gods and stars, (ii) Daihik—that related to the body, such as old age related problems and so many diseases, and (iii) Bhautik—that related to the existential problems in this world, or problems created by other creatures.]

मैं निसिचर अति अधम सुभाऊ । सुभ आचरनु कीन्ह नहिं काऊ ॥ ७ ॥
जासु रूप मुनि ध्यान न आवा । तेहिं प्रभु हरषि हृदयँ मोहि लावा ॥ ८ ॥ mair̥ niscara ati adhama subhā'ū. subha ācaranu kīnha nahir̥ kā'ū. 7.

jāsu rūpa muni dhyāna na āvā. tēhir̥ prabhu haraṣi hṛdayaṁ mōhi lāvā. 8.

I am born as a demon who inherently have a very lowly character and sinful nature. As such I cannot claim to ever have done anything that can be said to be truly meritorious. (7)

How exceptionally fortunate and lucky I am therefore that the Lord—whose divine vision is virtually inaccessible for even the great sages and ascetics who make diligent effort to have it during their meditation sessions—has been so kind and graceful that he has embraced and clasped me to his bosom most affectionately! (8)

[Note—¹Vibhishan has clearly indicated here that he knows that Lord Ram is not a human being when he refers to the great sages and ascetics meditating on the Lord's form. These sages and ascetics meditate upon the cosmic form of the Supreme Being known as Brahm, and it is the same Brahm who has manifested himself as Lord Ram.

Realising this, Vibhishan is overwhelmed with gratitude and devotion for Lord Ram.]

दो०. अहोभाग्य मम अमित अति राम कृपा सुख पुंज । देखेउँ नयन बिरंचि सिव सेव्य जुगल पद कंज ॥ ४७ ॥

dōhā.

ahōbhāgya mama amita ati rāma kṛpā sukha puñja.
dēkhē'uṁ nayana birañci siva sēbya jugala pada kañja. 47.

Oh Lord Ram! I am indeed exceptionally fortunate and cannot imagine the greatness of my luck that today I have been meet the Lord who is a fountainhead of mercy, grace, kindness and compassion, and see his holy lotus-like feet that are served, adored and worshipped by the creator Brahma, as well as by Lord Shiva, the concluder of creation. (Doha no. 47)

चौ०. सुनुहु सखा निज कहउँ सुभाऊ । जान भुसुंङि संभु गिरिजाऊ ॥ १ ॥
जौं नर होइ चराचर द्रोही । आवै सभय सरन तकि मोही ॥ २ ॥ तजि मद मोह कपट छल नाना । करउँ सद्य तेहि साधु समाना ॥ ३ ॥
caupāī.

sunahu sakhā nija kaha'uṁ subhā'ū. jāna bhusuṇḍi sambhu girijā'ū. 1.
jauṁ nara hō'i carācara drōhī. āvai sabhaya sarana taki mōhī. 2.
taji mada mōha kapaṭa chala nānā. kara'uṁ sadya tēhi sādhu samānā. 3.

[When Vibhishan has bowed his head at the holy feet of Lord Ram and expressed his earnest desire to take his refuge, the Lord welcomed him and assured Vibhishan of his total acceptance. It was then the Lord gave him the reason for accepting him without reservations. It acts a welcome invitation to all the creatures to come to the Lord who is waiting for them with an open arm to give them freedom from all their miseries, torments, vexations, fears and consternations.]

Lord Ram told Vibhishan—‘Listen friend! I will tell you my innate nature and temperament. It is well-known to Kaagbhusund, the saintly crow, Lord Shiva (Shambu) and Girija (Uma or Parvati, the divine Mother and the holy consort of Shiva)¹. (1)

Even if a person is considered inimical towards the whole world which consists of animate creatures as well as inanimate things, even if he has created animosity all around himself, but still if, stricken with terror and overcome with mortal fear, comes to me to seek refuge in my holy feet [2] after having abandoned or discarding all Mada (ego, pride, arrogance and haughtiness), Moha (delusions, attractions, infatuations and attachments), Kapat and Chal (deceit, conceit, pretensions, wickedness, trickery)—then I verily say I transform him into a saintly figure [3]². (2-3)

[Note—¹It is to be noted here that the Lord has addressed Vibhishan with the word ‘friend’. He had addressed Sugriv with the same word when the two met at the Rishyamook mountain. The glorious virtues of a true friend has already been extolled by the Lord in Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-9 that precede Doha no. 7 when he met Sugriv.

The Lord now reiterates his stand and assures Vibhishan that once the latter has come to surrender himself before the Lord with a sincere heart, he need not worry or fear from anything any more as it has now become the Lord's responsibility to ensure his welfare and safety.

We will read in the Lord's final statement in line no. 8 that he compares Vibhishan with a 'saint' and says that 'saints like you are very dear to me'. Therefore we may also deduce that 'saints' and 'friends' are equally dear to Lord Ram, that all saints are friends of Lord Ram whether they are openly declared so or not, that the auspicious, the righteous, the holy and the glorious characters of all saints make them endeared to the Lord as if they were all his friends, and therefore all of them can be assured of the Lord's unstinted support, protection, care and reciprocal affection even if they expressly request for such blessing from the Lord or not. It also simply means that all saintly people are friends of the Lord, and therefore the Lord is duty-bound to protect and look for their welfare according to his own self-declared policy.

In his worldly play, the Supreme Being had addressed three persons as his friend—(i) one was Nishad, the chief of the boatman community—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 88; Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 94; Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 151; Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 193 etc., (ii) the second is Sugriv, the chief of the monkey race—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 10, 23 that precede Doha no. 7; Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 43 etc.; and (iii) the third is Vibhishan, the brother of the demon king Ravana—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 48; Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 80; Lanka Kand, Doha no. 116 Kha etc.

Lord Ram has cited three persons here who know his nature in right earnest—they are Kaagbhusund, Lord Shiva and Parvati.

(a) Kaagbhusund was well-steeped in devotion for Lord Ram and his spiritual enlightenment and level of wisdom was of such a high standard that Lord Shiva had selected him to preach Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu, when the latter wished to learn about the true nature of Lord Ram—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 85.

The entire episode is narrated in full as the second half of Uttar Kand of Ram Charit Manas, extending from Doha no. 54 right upto to the end of the holy book in Doha no. 125.

(b) Lord Shiva is the main narrator of this divine and holy story of Lord Ram; it was conceived in his heart and mind when he was meditating upon the holy form and name of Lord Ram. Shiva had revealed it first to his divine consort Parvati or Uma, and therefore, like Kaagbhusund, she was the only one who had a first hand knowledge of this divine story and its secrets. It was on her request that Shiva had told this story in the first instance. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 30; Uttar Kand, from Doha no. 127, till Doha no. 129.

Tulsidas has clearly said that the story he is narrating is none of his own creation; it is the same story that was narrated by Lord Shiva to Parvati—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 130.

²It must be noted that the Lord first converts him into a 'saintly figure' before accepting him. Or we can say that as soon as the person coming to seek Lord's grace has this thought in his mind that he will go and surrender before the Lord by throwing off his dirty cloak symbolised by these negative traits as Mada, Moha, Kapat and Chal, he has automatically converted himself into a saintly person—which implies that his Atma, his 'true self' has shed its baggage of worldly taints and emerged fresh and cleaned in its original form. It is this pristine form of the Jiva, the living being, which is eligible to attain the Lord. This process of conversion from a tainted Jiva to a holy and saintly Jiva is as automatic and natural as the chasing away of the darkness of night with the arrival of dawn.

When we read elsewhere in the preaching of Lord Ram in relation with the virtues of saints we find that the taints that are listed here in line no. 3 are the first signs that are to be eliminated from the mental horizon of anyone if he ever hopes to be classified as a saint and pious person.

Earlier, Vibhishan had unilaterally declared this virtue of Lord Ram, that the Lord does not turn away even if a person is so sinful as to have made the whole world his enemy due to his misdeeds, when he was advising his brother Ravana to surrender before the Lord, return Sita to him and avoid unnecessary confrontation with the Lord—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 39.]

जननी जनक बंधु सुत दारा । तनु धनु भवन सुहृद परिवारा ॥ ४ ॥
सब कै ममता ताग बटोरी । मम पद मनहि बाँध बरि डोरी ॥ ५ ॥ समदरसी इच्छा कछु नाहीं । हरष सोक भय नहिं मन माहीं ॥ ६ ॥ jananī janaka bandhu suta dārā. tanu dhanu bhavana suhr̥da parivārā. 4.

saba kai mamatā tāga baṭōrī. mama pada manahi bāṁdha bari ḍōrī. 5.
samadarasī icchā kachu nāhīm. haraṣa sōka bhaya nahiṁ mana māhīm. 6.

[Now, Lord Ram goes on to describe the glorious virtues of saints which make them dear to him—]

Mother, father, brother, son, wife, body, wealth, home, friends, compatriots and other kith and kin, as well as the family [4]—a person who breaks off all his attachments and infatuations with them, who binds them all in a single rope of dispassion and detachment (i.e. who turns his mind away from them; who is no longer infatuated with them or think of them), and instead tie his Mana (i.e. his heart, mind and sub-conscious) in my holy feet [5] --- (4-5)

--- Who has developed exemplary equanimity and evenness of mind and views, who treats all equally and without any bias, who has no desires, hopes, aspirations and yearnings of any kind, who neither feels excited and elated nor sorrowful and depressed (simply because he practices renunciation, detachment, dispassion, self-restraint and equanimity of the highest degree), who has no fear of any kind (because he has surrendered himself to me who am the supreme Protector, and therefore he has faith that no harm can come to him from any quarter) --- (6)

अस सज्जन मम उर बस कैसें । लोभी हृदयँ बसइ धनु जैसे ॥ ७ ॥
तुम्ह सारिखे संत प्रिय मोरें । धरउँ देह नहिं आन निहोरें ॥ ८ ॥ asa sajjana mama ura basa kaisēm. lōbhī hrdayaṁ basa'i dhanu jaisēm. 7.

tumha sārīkhē santa priya mōrēm. dhara'uṁ dēha nahim āna nihōrēm. 8.

--- Verily I say that such a gentleman finds a place in my heart like worldly wealth has in the heart of a greedy man!¹ (7)

Saintly persons and pure souls like you are very dear to me. It is for them that I (Lord Vishnu) have assumed a form of a human being (as Lord Ram)². (8)

[Note—¹A wise person is one who has broken off all his attachments with these worldly entities as these relationships are temporary and unsustainable. They act like fetters for the Atma, tying it down to the gross world that revolves around and recognizes relationships that treat the gross body of the creature as his true identity instead of the Atma. The problem in this sort of relationship is that the very basis of it is gross and temporary—because both the world and the body of the creature are mortal and perishable. Such relationships are bound to break one day, and this will lead to the agony of separation. Besides this, such relationships act as a deep bog, ensnaring the creature for generations after generations.

The only way out of this dilemma and quandary is to recognize that the Atma is one's truthful self, and that Lord Ram is the Parmatma or the Supreme Atma which is the truthful kith and kin of the individual Atma. The Lord is the real and truthful Father of all the living beings, their true friend and companion. The Atma is pure consciousness like the Parmatma who is the cosmic supreme Consciousness. This entity is eternal and imperishable—and therefore any relationship that is established between the two, i.e. between the Atma of the individual creature and the Parmatma, will have an eternal and sustainable dimension to it.

A greedy person thinks of nothing but money and wealth; he will go to any extent in acquiring it and protecting it; he is virtually infatuated with it—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, stanza no. 1 of Doha no. 130 Kha.

Likewise, Lord Ram is always on the look-out for such persons who have saintly qualities in them, and then goes all out to welcome them and afford all his protection and benevolence to them.

²This stanza clearly establishes that the Supreme Being has come down to earth for the benefit of saints and saintly people.

Lord Ram has taught Sabari about the nine virtues that a devotee of the Lord must possess in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 35, till Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 36. Then again, Lord Ram has told Kaagbhusund that if a creature has devotion for him and has abandoned all deceit, conceit, pretensions and tricks, then even if his most lowly the Lord accept him willingly—Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 85, till Doha no. 86.

A remarkable thing emerges if we have a close look at all the characters in the story whom Lord Ram addresses as 'friends' or 'saints' or 'devotees' whom he has cheerfully accepted in his fold. All of them are of low birth and are sinful by their bodies. (i) Nishad is a boatman who eats fish as a staple diet. (ii) Sabari is of a low caste. (iii) Sugriv is a monkey by birth, and so is (iv) Hanuman whom the Lord heaps praises with, going to the extent of saying that he will never be able to repay his debts (Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 32). (v) Vibhishan is born in the demon race. And (vi) Kaagbhusund is a crow.

This list highlights that the Lord has come down to earth to give redemption to the fallen and provide salvation to the humblest and the meekest. A healthy person does not need the care of an expert doctor or nurse; it is the sick who need it. The Lord is that spiritual doctor and nurse!]

दो०. सगुन उपासक परहित निरत नीति दृढ़ नेम ।

ते नर प्रान समान मम जिन्ह कें द्विज पद प्रेम ॥ ४८ ॥

dōhā.

saguna upāsaka parahita nirata nīti dṛṛha nēma.

tē nara prāna samāna mama jinha kēm dvija pada prēma. 48.

Those who worship my (i.e. the Supreme Being's) Saguna form (i.e. form that is visible and has attributes) {that is, those who worship Lord Ram as being an incarnation of the Supreme Being}¹, those who remain engaged in the welfare of others (instead of causing them pain and miseries)², those who are steady in observing sacraments and other religious duties along with being diligent in following the path of righteousness, propriety, morality and ethical conduct inspite of all provocations and temptations³, and those who have affection (respect) for the holy feet of Dwijis (Brahmins; elderly and learned people)⁴—verily I say that such people are as dear to me as my own life. (Doha no.48)

[Note—¹The difference between the Saguna form of the Lord and his Nirguna form (one without any specific attributes; the cosmic invisible and all-incorporating form) have been elucidated in detail by Lord Ram to preach Bharat, Hanuman and the rest in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 37, till Doha no. 41.

²The virtue of striving for the welfare of others is lauded elsewhere also—for instance, in Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 14-15 that precede Doha no. 121 it is asserted that “the natural character of saints is that they endeavour or strive to do good of others and care for their welfare by employing their mind, heart and words to the best of their abilities; suffering for the good, happiness and welfare of others is a character of saints, while being the cause of pain, misery and unhappiness of others is an innate nature of non-saints.” This is the principle of a saint taught by Kaagbhusund, the saintly crow, to Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu.

³To be steadfast in following the correct path inspite of all provocations is reiterated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 46 (Lord Ram teaches Narad); Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 38 (Lord Ram teaches Bharat and others); and Lanka Kand, Doha no. 34 Kha (Angad tells Ravana).

⁴Having respect for Brahmins is reiterated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 16 (when Lord Ram has preached Laxman); and Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 38 (Lord Ram taught Bharat and others); and Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 45 (Lord Ram preaches the citizens of Ayodhya).

In these verses, Lord Ram tells Vibhishan that he treats with great respect a person who might have the world as his enemy but has come to seek refuge with the Lord after abandoning all arrogance, attachments, deceit, cunning and pretensions, after having snapped all his relations with the world and its wealth, after renouncing his household and his near and dear ones such as his wife, his son, parents, kith and kin, friends, etc., if he has no desires and treats everything equally and with stoic neutrality, if he has no fear, and if he is not affected by the sense of worldly happiness or sorrow—if such a man surrenders to the Lord and ties himself irrevocably to the holy feet of the Lord with a thread of devotion, love and affection, without any expectations whatsoever, the Lord promises to take care of him, whatever may come.

Those people who worship my Saguna form (i.e. my form as it appears in my incarnation), those who think of the good of others (i.e. are not selfish), those who diligently follow the rules of proper conduct and ethical behaviour as laid down in the scriptures, those who are steadfast in carrying out their duties with due sincerity, and those who love Dwij (elders and learned people)—verily, such persons are very dear to the Lord's heart.

These verses can be read as follows also—"Lord Ram advised Vibhishan: Those who detach themselves from all worldly relationships and abandon all affection for them and attachment with them, such as with one's mother, father, friend, son, wife, body, material wealth, homestead, kith and kin, compatriots and all other dear and near ones, and instead bind their Mana (mind and heart) to my holy feet (i.e. surrender before me unconditionally and completely, and treat me as their only relation in this world), those who have developed the grand virtue of equanimity and forbearance, who treat everything and everyone alike, who have no desires or expectations whatsoever, those who remain unruffled and unmoved by either happiness or sorrows, those who have no fear of any kind in their heart (obviously because they have me, the Supreme Lord, as their protector and saviour)—verily I say that such persons (devotees) are very close to my heart and dear to me much like material wealth is very dear and close to the heart of a greedy and selfish man."

The extent to which Lord Ram loves his devotees is expressed clearly in the aforesaid verses by the Lord himself to Vibhishan, the younger brother of Ravana, when he came to seek refuge with the Lord.]

चौ०. सुनु लंकेस सकल गुन तोरें । तातें तुम्ह अतिसय प्रिय मोरें ॥ १ ॥

राम बचन सुनि बानर जूथा । सकल कहहिं जय कृपा बरूथा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunu laṅkēsa sakala guna tōrēm. tātēm tumha atisaya priya mōrēm. 1.

rāma bacana suni bānara jūthā. sakala kahahim jaya kṛpā barūthā. 2.

Lord Ram told Vibhishan, 'Listen oh king of Lanka (sunu laṅkēsa)!¹ You possess all the noble virtues (of a true devotee). That is why you are extremely dear to me.' (1)

When the huge gathering of monkeys heard these words of Lord Ram, they cheered him enthusiastically and exclaimed, 'Glory to Lord Ram who is a font of mercy, kindness, grace and compassion.'² (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram has earlier too addressed Vibhishan as ‘the king of Lanka’—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 46.

²The monkeys were surprised at the magnanimity of Lord Ram and his graceful nature that inspite of Vibhishan himself repeatedly saying that he is sinful, the Lord praised his good virtues while neglecting his negativities.]

सुनत बिभीषनु प्रभु कै बानी । नहिं अघात श्रवनामृत जानी ॥ ३ ॥ पद अंबुज गहि बारहिं बारा । हृदयँ समात न प्रेमु अपारा ॥ ४ ॥ sunata bibhīṣanu prabhu kai bānī. nahim̐ aghāta śravanāmṛta jānī. 3.

pada ambuja gahi bārahim̐ bārā. hr̥dayaṁ samāta na prēmu apārā. 4.

When Vibhishan heard the pleasing words of Lord Ram that were as sweet as nectar for him, he felt so exceedingly glad that he could not have enough of it¹. (3)

So emotionally overwhelmed did Vibhishan become that he repeatedly clasped the holy lotus-like feet of Lord Ram even as his heart could not contain the surging waves of affection and gratitude towards the Lord Ram that heaved inside his bosom and brimmed over. (4)

[Note—¹To wit, Vibhishan had not expected, even in his dreams, that he would be so warmly welcomed by Lord Ram and shown so much affection by him. It was for him a fountain of nectar from which the more he drank the more he wanted to drink.]

सुनहु देव सचराचर स्वामी । प्रनतपाल उर अंतरजामी ॥ ५ ॥ उर कछु प्रथम बासना रही । प्रभु पद प्रीति सरित सो बही ॥ ६ ॥ sunahu dēva sacarācara svāmī. pranatapāla ura antarajāmī. 5.

ura kachu prathama bāsanā rahī. prabhu pada prīti sarita sō bahī. 6.

Vibhishan said, ‘Listen oh Lord (sunahu dēva)! You are the supreme Lord of the animate as well as the inanimate aspects of this creation (sacarācara svāmī). You are the Lord who protects all those who surrender themselves at your feet (pranatapāla). And you are the Lord who knows the innermost feelings and thoughts of all living beings (ura antarajāmī). (5)

I honestly acknowledge that my heart earlier had some Vasana (passions and desires pertaining to the sense objects of the world; a desire for self-gratification) present inside it, but now all of them have been washed away in the river symbolized by affection for your holy feet that has sprouted inside my heart¹. (6)

[Note—¹Vibhishan accepts that his heart had worldly desires earlier, but not now, because all negativities in his heart have been washed away once he has developed affection for the holy feet of Lord Ram. In this context, refer to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 48 herein above. Vibhishan says that now his heart has been purified of all negative traits.]

अब कृपाल निज भगति पावनी । देहु सदा सिव मन भावनी ॥ ७ ॥

एवमस्तु कहि प्रभु रनधीरा । मागा तुरत सिंधु कर नीरा ॥ ८ ॥ aba krpāla nija bhagati pāvanī. dēhu sadā siva mana bhāvanī. 7.

ēvamastu kahi prabhu ranadhīrā. māgā turata sindhu kara nīrā. 8.

Oh Lord, be kind enough to grant me an abiding devotion for you, a devotion that is pure itself and purifies those who are blessed by it, a devotion that is eternally loved by Lord Shiva and pleases his heart.¹ (7)

Saying ‘so be it’, the Lord who is steadfast in the battle-field (i.e. who keeps his words and never turns back inspite of the greatest adversities) asked for some water from the ocean (because no other water was available). [Why did Lord Ram ask for water is answered in the verses that follow below.] (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram does not want any kind of tribute from his devotees except devotion. Anyone who asks the Lord for the grant of devotion (Bhakti) endears himself to the Lord. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 45; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 84; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 85; (iv) Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede Doha no. 86.]

जदपि सखा तव इच्छा नाहीं । मोर दरसु अमोघ जग माहीं ॥ ९ ॥

अस कहि राम तिलक तेहि सारा । सुमन बृष्टि नभ भई अपारा ॥ १० ॥ jadapi sakhā tava icchā nāhīm. mōra darasu amōgha jaga māhīm. 9.

asa kahi rāma tilaka tēhi sārā. sumana br̥ṣṭi nabha bha'ī apārā. 10.

He said to Vibhishan, ‘Friend (sakhā), though you have no desire, but meeting me and asking for my blessings never goes in vain.

[To wit, although you don’t want anything, yet I have a vow to keep, which is that anyone who comes to me seeking my shelter and protection can’t remain unfulfilled. You were an heir to the throne of Lanka at the time you came to me. So shall it be—you will get your rights back. And secondly, you wish to be my devotee because you ask for my devotion, so that also would be true.]’ (9)

Saying this, Lord Ram anointed Vibhishan (by sprinkling the water of the ocean that he had asked for) to fulfill his vows as stated above.

Observing this wonderful development, the gods showered flowers from the sky (heaven)¹. (10)

[Note—¹Why did the gods shower flowers upon Lord Ram as well as Vibhishan? The gods wished to celebrate this happy occasion when Lord Ram accepted Vibhishan as his devotee, and at the same time anointed him as the next king of Lanka, thereby sealing the fate of Ravana. This was what the gods were waiting for. They felt exceedingly glad, and rained flowers to express their thanks and show their happiness to Lord Ram.

The gods were full of praise for Lord Ram because the Lord had willingly suffered so much for their cause. They were full of praise for Vibhishan because in spite of being born as a demon he had shown such high degree of spiritualism and purity of heart that the Lord himself praised him.]

दो०. रावन क्रोध अनल निज स्वास समीर प्रचंड ।
जगत बिभीषणु राखेउ दीन्हैउ राजु अखंड ॥ ४९ (क) ॥
जो संपति सिव रावनहि दीन्हि दिऐँ दस माथ ।
सोइ संपदा बिभीषणहि सकुचि दीन्हि रघुनाथ ॥ ४९ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

rāvana krōdha anala nija svāsa samīra pracaṇḍa.
jarata bibhīṣanu rākhē'u dīnhē'u rāju akhaṇḍa. 49 (a).
jō sampati siva rāvanahi dīnhi di'ēṁ dasa mātha.
sō'i sampadā bibhīṣanahi sakuci dīnhi raghunātha. 49 (b).

Ravana's anger was like a fiercely raging fire, and the breath of Vibhishan was like the hot wind that fanned this fire on its own. [To wit, the anger of Ravana could not be calmed down as long as Vibhishan would be alive.]

Vibhishan was being scorched by this fire of Ravana (i.e. he was tormented by fear of Ravana's wrath). Lord Ram extended his protection to him so that he escaped being scorched from that fire. Not only this, the Lord rewarded Vibhishan by anointing him as the next king of Lanka. (Doha no. 49-a)

That immense fortune which was granted to Ravana by Lord Shiva in lieu of the ten heads the former had offered to the Lord as a sacrifice while doing severe Tapa (austerity and penance) to please the latter, the whole of this fortune and the majesty of the kingdom of Lanka was transferred or conferred by Lord Ram to Vibhishan in a hesitant manner¹. (Doha no. 49-b)

[Note—¹Why was Lord Ram feeling so shy, hesitant and reluctant while conferring to Vibhishan the kingship of Lanka and transferring the entire wealth of the kingdom to him? There are four prominent reasons for this as follows:-

One is that the outcome of the impending war was not yet certain, and so to confer the throne of Lanka to Vibhishan at this time seemed a little premature, based on presumptions and conjectures, and a bit too optimistic and far-fetched.

The second reason is that the city which Vibhishan would inherit as a boon from Lord Ram would have been devastated by the end of the war; it was already in a shambles after Hanuman burnt it. So Lord Ram felt very reluctant while granting this boon as it was not a proper reward that was given to Vibhishan. But under the prevailing circumstances, there was nothing better that could be given to him.

The third reason is that by rewarding Vibhishan, Lord Ram was rewarding someone who had betrayed his own brother. This made the Lord hesitant as it was not a proper thing to reward someone who had committed treason. But it was the time of war, and during wars rules change. What is treason for one party is a welcome move for the other party; what is martyrdom for one is the killing of an enemy for another; what is defeat for one is a victory for the other. So it was acceptable.

And the fourth reason was military strategy. By accepting Vibhishan in his camp with a warm show of welcome and affection, and then anointing him as the next sovereign of Lanka, Lord Ram ensured his unflinching loyalty and allegiance towards himself. The Lord's friendly attitude and affectionate gestures had a profound positive impact on Vibhishan's psyche, as he was emotionally traumatized and mentally in an extremely distressed state after the rough treatment that was meted out to him at Ravana's court a short while ago. By making Vibhishan, who knew all the secrets of Lanka and its army, a faithful and loyal ally, Lord Ram had staged a virtual coup against his enemy Ravana as would be proved during the course of the epic war. We shall be reading, in due course, how Vibhishan had played a crucial role in Lord Ram's victory over Ravana by helping him with vital information about Lanka and its army, advising on proper strategies by which breach could be made in the demons' defenses, even alerting the Lord when Ravana was performing a sacrifice, which, if successfully done, would have made him immune to death, and in the final hours of the epic battle by divulging to Lord Ram the location of the secret receptacle of Amrit, the ambrosia of eternity, that kept Ravana alive, a vital clue that enabled the Lord to kill him by drying up this nectar by a volley of hot arrows.

To wit, if there is an impending war, and the brother of a king against whom a rival king has launched an assault comes voluntarily to join the latter, no prudent king would refuse to welcome him; rather, the latter king would see it as a golden god-sent opportunity that ought to be grasped with both hands!]

चौ०. अस प्रभु छाड़ि भजहिं जे आना । ते नर पसु बिनु पूँछ बिषाना ॥ १ ॥

निज जन जानि ताहि अपनावा । प्रभु सुभाव कपि कुल मन भावा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

asa prabhu chāḍi bhajahiṁ jē ānā. tē nara pasu binu pūṁcha biṣānā. 1.
nija jana jāni tāhi apanāvā. prabhu subhāva kapi kula mana bhāvā. 2.

[Lord Shiva observed—] ‘Anyone who abandons such a (magnanimous, benevolent, kind, obliging and gracious) Lord as Sri Ram, and instead worships and adores some other Lord, such people are indeed like animals that have no horns and tails¹. (1)

All the Kapis (monkeys) warmly welcomed and appreciated this grand and noble nature of Lord Ram that he cheerfully accepted anyone who came to seek refuge with him, for the Lord not only gave him shelter but also treated the new comer with great affection and care as if he was an old acquaintance of his, someone who was not a stranger but one of his own close devotees and followers.² (2)

[Note—¹To wit, those who do not worship and adore Lord Ram and seek shelter with him, instead preferring some other Lord to whom they are devoted and offer their allegiance, such people are indeed extremely foolish and unfortunate. They are born as humans but are no better than animals who lack wisdom and intelligence, for they do not know what is good or bad for them.

²This noble character of Lord Ram—which made him so loved by and endeared to his devotees—answered one unasked question that had been lingering in the minds of the monkey chieftains ever since Lord Ram took the side of Sugriv and crowned him as the king of Kishkindha after eliminating Sugriv’s brother Baali. The question was this: Why did Lord Ram decided to favour Sugriv vis-à-vis Baali? The monkeys got their answer now—that it was in the nature of Lord Ram, it was an integral character of his that he would invariably extend his helping hand to those who seek his help, especially when the Lord feels that injustice has been done to them. The Lord cannot turn away those who ask for his grace and blessings, especially when the seeker is distressed and feeling helpless.

In the case of Sugriv the Lord felt grave injustice has been done to him by his elder brother Baali who first beat him mercilessly and then threw him out of the kingdom, kept his wife as a mistress, and even after inflicting this humiliation was always baying for Sugriv’s blood, being on the lookout for a chance to kill him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 5—to Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 7; and Chaupai line nos. 6-10 that precede Doha no. 9.}

It was reminiscent of what has happened in the present case of Vibhishan—he was kicked and humiliated by his elder brother Ravana and thrown out of the kingdom, and if Lord Ram refused to provide protection to Vibhishan it was sure that Ravana would have killed him at the first opportunity.

So when the monkey chieftains observed this nature of Lord Ram, they felt very happy; now they knew why the Lord had sided with Sugriv.]

-----**-----

Section 9.2: Kavitawali Ramayan

{Kavitawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse no. 32.}

We have read in the concluding verses of Section 9.1 above (i.e. of Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 and Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede it) how Lord Ram had anointed Vibhishan as the future king of Lanka.

A similar narration is found in ‘Kavitawali Ramayan’ of Tulsidas, in its Sundar Kand, verse no. 32.

Now let us quickly read what ‘Kavitawali Ramayan’ has to say on the subject before moving ahead to the next section:

नगरु कुबेरको सुमेरुकी बराबरी, बिरंचि-बुद्धिको बिलासु लंक निरमान भो ।
 ईसहि चढ़ाइ सीस बीसबाहु बीर तहाँ,
 रावनु सो राजा रज-तेजको निधानु भो ॥
 ‘तुलसी’ तिलोककी समृद्धि, सौंज, संपदा
 सकेलि चाकि राखी, रासि, जाँगरु जहानु भो ।
 तीसरें उपास बनबास सिंधु पास सो
 समाजु महाराजजू को एक दिन दानु भो ॥32॥

32. nagaru kubērakō sumērukī barābarī, birañci-bud'dhikō bilāsu lañka niramāna bhō.
 īsahi caṛhā'i sīsa bīsabāhu bīra tahāñ, rāvanu sō rājā raja-tējako nidhānu bhō..
 'tulasī' tilōkakī samṛd'dhi, sauēñja, sampadā sakēli cāki rākhī, rāsi, jāṁgaru jahānu bhō.
 tīsarēm upāsa banabāsa sindhu pāsa sō samāju mahārājajū kō ēka dina dānu bhō..32..

Verse no. 5/32—Lanka was called the city of Kuber (who was the God of wealth and treasurer for the Gods). Being made of gold, it is like Sumeru (a mythological golden Mountain); it is so wonderful that it symbolises the excellent creative prowess of Brahma in a personified form (1). There, Ravana, the 20-armed demon, became a king after offering his head as sacrifice to Lord Shiva (2).

Tulsidas says that all the wealth of this world has been concentrated within its boundaries (walls), as it were, and the rest of the world was filled with the residue (3). All this wealth was given (to Vibhishan) by Lord Ram as if it were charitable alms given by the forest-bound-mendicant Lord Ram after doing austerities for three days on the shore of the ocean¹ (4).

[Note—¹Lord Ram had camped on the ocean's shore for three days, requesting the ocean to give him passage. There the Lord had also consecrated a Shiva Lingam, which is a symbol of Lord Shiva. It was called 'Rameshwaram'—literally meaning the Lord of Ram. The word has a dual meaning—for it also means 'Shiva, whose Lord (Ish) is known as Ram'. Anyway, the Lord had performed a religious sacrifice here before he would start on the campaign for conquering Lanka. When any religious event takes place, giving charity and making alms is a part of the ritual. So, Tulsidas uses this tradition as a metaphor to indicate that Lord Ram had voluntarily donated the entire kingdom of Lanka, which he is poised to conquer soon, to Vibhishan.

From the point of military strategy, this was a very clever step of Lord Ram. By anointing Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka even before the campaign had got off the ground and the outcome of the war was still unknown, the Lord extended to Vibhishan a bait to ensure his loyalty. Now Vibhishan had all the reasons to support Ram, because if Ravana is killed then not only will Vibhishan be able to avenge his insult but also get the trophy in the form of kingdom of Lanka. This single act of Lord Ram also meant to convey to everyone around that they should not doubt victory as it is a foregone conclusion. It also subtly warned the monkeys that they should not eye the kingdom of Lanka after victory over it because it is given to Vibhishan, and that the Lord himself had no intention of staying there once Sita was recovered. Lord Ram clearly indicated that he is not there to grab someone's property and wealth like conquerors usually do.

This episode which relates to Lord Ram giving the crown of Lanka to Vibhishan in a token manner by anointing him, and thereby granting him the richest largesse of the time has been documented in (a) Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 39 and 43; (b) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 8-10; and Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 42-47.]

-----**-----

Section 9.3: Adhyatma Ramayan

{Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 2—to—Canto 3, verse nos. 1-48.}

Let us now rewind a bit and see how ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’ of Veda Vyas narrates this episode of Ravana insulting his brother Vibhishan, kicking him, and ordering him to quit his kingdom, after which Vibhishan came to seek refuge with Lord Ram, who not only welcomed him warmly but also guaranteed him protection and a respectable place amongst his ministers.

These developments are described in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand (known as Yuddha Kand), Canto 2 full, and Canto 3, verse nos. 1-48.

Now, let us start reading:-

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 1-46:

॥द्वितीयः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

लङ्कायां रावणो दृष्ट्वा कृतं कर्म हनूमता ।
दुष्करं दैवतैर्वाऽपि ह्रिया किञ्चिदवाङ्मुखः ॥ १॥
आहूय मन्त्रिणः सर्वानिदं वचनमब्रवीत् । हनूमता कृतं कर्म भवद्विदृष्टमेव तत् ॥ २॥

॥dvitīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

laṅkāyāṃ rāvaṇo dr̥ṣṭvā kṛtaṃ karma hanūmatā । duṣkaraṃ daivatairvā'pi hriyā kiñcidavāṇmukhaḥ ॥ 1॥ āhūya mantriṇaḥ sarvānidaṃ vacanamabravīt । hanūmatā kṛtaṃ karma bhavadbhirdr̥ṣṭameva tat ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Meanwhile in Lanka, seeing the deeds of Hanuman¹ which were difficult even for the gods to do (or ever think of doing them), Ravana summoned his ministers, and lowering his head in shame before them, he said with sarcasm in his voice, 'All of you have witnessed all the deeds done by Hanuman! (1-2).

[Note—¹The “deeds of Hanuman” refer to his killing a large number of demon warriors, ransacking the Ashoka garden, and then burning Lanka. These have already been narrated in Section no. 7.2, sub-sections 7.2.1—7.2.5 of our Book.]

प्रविश्य लङ्कां दुर्धर्षा दृष्ट्वा सीतां दुरासदाम् । हत्वा च राक्षसान् वीरानक्षं मन्दोदरीसुतम् ॥ ३॥

दग्ध्वा लङ्कामशेषेण लङ्घयित्वा च सागरम् ।
युष्मान् सर्वानतिक्रम्य स्वस्थोऽगात्पुनरेव सः ॥ ४॥ praviśya laṅkāṃ durdharṣāṃ drṣṭvā sītāṃ durāsadām । hatvā ca rākṣasān vīrānakṣaṃ mandodarīsutam ॥ 3॥ dagdhvā laṅkāmaśeṣeṇa laṅghayitvā ca sāgaram । yuṣmān sarvānatikramya svastho'gātpunareva saḥ ॥ 4॥

3-4. He (Hanuman) entered Lanka which is deemed to be inaccessible for any intruder or trespasser, met Sita, which is also an impossible think to do (as she is guarded round the clock and lives inside a garden that is well protected from outsiders), then he killed many demons along with Mandodari's son (Akshay Kumar), burnt the whole city of Lanka, humiliated all of you brave and strong warriors, and then he successfully crossed the ocean to return safely! (3-4).

किं कर्तव्यमितोऽस्माभिर्युयं मन्त्रविशारदाः ।
मन्त्रयध्वं प्रयत्नेन यत्कृतं मे हितं भवेत् ॥ ५॥
रावणस्य वचः श्रुत्वा रक्षसास्तमथाब्रुवन् । देव शङ्का कुतो रामात्तव लोकजितो रणे ॥ ६॥

kiṃ kartavyamito'smābhiryūyaṃ mantraviśārādāḥ । mantrayadhvaṃ prayatnena yatkṛtaṃ me hitaṃ bhavet ॥ 5॥ rāvaṇasya vacaḥ śrutvā rākṣasāstamathābruvan । deva śaṅkā kuto rāmāttava lokajito raṇe ॥ 6॥

5-6. All of you are wise and prudent, and experts in politics, military strategy, laws of diplomacy, etc. Hence, tell me what should we do now; what course of action should we adopt, what will be practical, prudent and apt in the present circumstances, and what will be in our best of interests? Ponder over it diligently, take into consideration all the pros and the cons, and then advise me' (5).

Hearing the words of Ravana, the demons (ministers, advisors and councilors) said, 'Oh Lord! What fear (literally doubt or suspicion) do you have from Lord Sri Ram? You have won all the different worlds in the many wars that you have fought till now (so how do you doubt about your victory over one human prince known as 'Ram')?'

[To wit, we don't understand why are so worried; winning the gods and the rest of the world was a virtual cake-walk for you, so why are you so concerned about this single warrior who is called Ram? Surely and certainly he stands no chance before your majesty!]¹ (6).

[Note—¹The absurdity of the situation is glaring. Ravana has just reminded them himself of the havoc Hanuman had caused in Lanka, and these same haughty and loud-mouthed boosters could do nothing about it. Now they say that there is nothing to fear from Lord Ram inspite of being aware that Hanuman was his messenger. The very fact that Ravana lent them his ears and believed in their boastful talk of bluster proves that his ill-fated destiny had cast a dark shadow of death upon his mind and corrupted his wisdom so much that he could not see the truth and think rationally.]

इन्द्रस्तु बद्ध्वा निक्षिप्तः पुत्रेण तव पतने ।
जित्वा कुबेरमानीय पुष्पकं भुज्यते त्वया ॥ ७॥
यमो जितः कालदण्डाद्भयं नाभूतव प्रभो ।
वरुणो ह्रुङ्कृतेनैव जितः सर्वेऽपि राक्षसाः ॥ ८॥ indrastu baddhvā nikṣiptaḥ putreṇa tava pattane । jitvā kuberamāniya puṣpakam bhujoyate tvayā ॥ 7॥ yamo jitaḥ kāladaṇḍādbhayaṁ nābhūttava prabho । varuṇo hruṅkṛtenaiva jitaḥ sarve'pi rākṣasāḥ ॥ 8॥

7-8. Your son (Meghnad) had tied Indra and brought him to our capital, bound in shackles. You yourself have won over Kuber (the treasurer of gods) and enjoy his air plane called 'Pushpak' (7).

Oh Lord! You have conquered even Yam (the god of death and hell); you weren't afraid of his 'Kaal Dand' (Yam's the baton of death). You had vanquished Varuna (the patron god of water) as well as the entire demon race who surrendered to you as soon as they heard your roar and shrill cry. [To wit, when they heard your roar and realized that you are coming to attack them, they were so sore affright that they surrendered immediately without a fight.] (8).

[Note—Ravana's exploits are described in detail in Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 33-60. Further, these verses also show how flatterers and sycophants can misguide and ruin a great king.]

मयो महासुरो भीत्या कन्यां दत्त्वा स्वयं तव ।
त्वद्वशे वर्ततेऽद्यापि किमुतान्ये महासुराः ॥ ९॥
हनूमद्वर्षणं यत्तु तदवज्ञाकृतं च नः ।
वानरोऽयं किमस्माकमस्मिन् पौरुषदर्शने ॥ १०॥ mayo mahāsuro bhītyā kanyāṁ dattvā svayaṁ tava । tvadvāśe vartate'dyāpi kimutānye mahāsuraḥ ॥ 9॥ hanūmadvarṣaṇaṁ yattu tadavajñākṛtaṁ ca naḥ । vānaro'yaṁ kiasmākamasmin pauruṣadarśane ॥ 10॥

9-10. What to talk of other great demons, even the greatest of them, the demon named Mayasur, had been so afraid of you that he gave his daughter to you and remains your vassal even till this day.

[To wit, Mayasur not only offered his daughter to you but also undertook to be under your control as one of your vassals. He has, since that time, remained subservient to you.] (9).

The insult and humiliation that Hanuman had subjected you as well as us to was due to our own carelessness, ineptitude and inertia. We thought that he is a mere monkey, so what is the great idea in showing strength and valour against such a humble creature as him. Therefore we neglected him, and as a result we were caught unawares and suffered. Otherwise, how dare could he oppose us and show disdain or contempt for us.

[To wit, we ourselves are to be blamed for what Hanuman did to Lanka. We took him lightly; we thought him to be a mere monkey who can cause no real harm; we took him for a jester. We are indeed sorry that we did not realize the gravity of the situation while there was time, and when we did realize that things were serious and going out of hand, it was too late by then. Oh king, what to say, for we are very sorry and regretful for what happened to us and our city of Lanka at the hands of Hanuman, but it was not because we are weak or incompetent or afraid of him, but unfortunately it was because we were very complacent and took things too lightly, which we now regret greatly, and understand that it shouldn't have been the case.] (10).

इत्युपेक्षितमस्माभिर्धर्षणं तेन किं भवेत् ।
 वयं प्रमत्ताः किं तेन वञ्चिताः स्मो हनूमाता ॥ ११॥
 जानीमो यदि तं सर्वे कथं जीवन् गमिष्यति ।
 आज्ञापय जगत्कृत्स्नमवानरममानुषम् ॥ १२॥
 कृत्वायास्यामहे सर्वे प्रत्येकं वा नियोजय । कुम्भकर्णस्तदा प्राह रावणं राक्षसेश्वरम् ॥ १३॥ ityupekṣitamasmābhirḍharṣaṇaṃ tena kiṃ bhavet । vayaṃ pramattāḥ kiṃ tena vañcitāḥ smo hanūmatā ॥ 11॥ jānīmo yadi taṃ sarve kathaṃ jīvan gamiṣyati । ājñāpaya jagatkṛtsnamavānaramamānuṣam ॥ 12॥ kṛtvāyāsyāmahe sarve pratyekaṃ vā niyojaya । kumbhakarnaṣṭadā prāha rāvaṇaṃ rākṣaseśvaram ॥ 13॥

11-13. Hence, if Hanuman could cheat or trick us (and inflict such humiliation upon us by killing our men and burning the city) because of our own negligence, inertia or carelessness, so what happened; how does it matter? If we had known who he was (or what strength he had, what he was up to, what damage he would or could do) (11)—how could have he gone back alive? You give us your orders—we shall forthwith make the earth free from all the monkeys and humans. [If you so wish then just command us to eliminate all monkeys and humans from the world, and your orders would be carried out instantly.] (12).

Or else, you can appoint single individuals amongst us to do this job.' [To wit, you can either order us as a group to do what you wish, or select some individual from amongst us to carry out your orders. Your command would be implemented. Just say, and we can get rid of the enemy's army single handedly. We do not need any support, for we are fully capable of doing it.]

Then, Kumbhakarn¹ said to Ravana, the king of demons (13)—

[Note—¹Ravana had two brothers, one was Vibhishan, and the other was Kumbhakarn.]

आरब्धं यत्त्वया कर्म स्वात्मनाशाय केवलम् ।
 न दृष्टोऽसि तदा भाग्यात्त्वं रामेण महात्मना ॥ १४॥
 यदि पश्यति रामस्त्वां जीवन्नायासि रावण । रामो न मानुषो देवः साक्षान्नारायणोऽव्ययः ॥ १५॥ ārabdham yattvayā karma svātmanāśāya kevalam । na dr̥ṣṭo'si tadā bhāgyāttvaṃ rāmeṇa mahātmanā ॥ 14॥ yadi paśyati rāmastvāṃ jīvannāyāsi rāvaṇa । rāmo na mānuṣo devaḥ sāksānnārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ ॥ 15॥

14-15. 'The course of action (or the plan) on which you have started working will only lead to your ruin. It was due to your good luck that the great Lord Ram did not see you while you were stealing Sita from his hermitage (at Panchavati). [My dear brother, you were exceptionally lucky that Lord Ram did not see you while you were abducting Sita. Do you know what would have happened had he seen you?] (14).

Oh Ravana! If Lord Sri Ram had seen you at that time, you wouldn't have returned alive. Remember, Lord Ram is no ordinary man. He is Lord Narayan himself, the Supreme Lord of the world, the Lord who is eternal, imperishable and unchanging (devaḥ sāksānnārāyaṇo'vyayaḥ) (15).

सीता भगवती लक्ष्मी रामपत्नी यशस्विनी ।
 राक्षसानां विनाशाय त्वयानीता सुमध्यमा ॥ १६॥
 विषपिण्डमिवागीर्य महामीनो यथा तथा । आनीता जानकी पश्चात्त्वया किं वा भविष्यति ॥ १७॥ sītā bhagavatī lakṣmī rāmapatnī yaśasvinī । rākṣasānāṃ vināśāya tvayānītā sumadhyamā ॥ 16॥ viṣapiṇḍamivāgīrya mahāmīno yathā tathā । ānītā jānakī paścāttvayā kiṃ vā bhaviṣyati ॥ 17॥

16-17. The wife of Lord Ram, the famed Sita, is Bhagwati Laxmi herself personified. He has brought her to be a medium in the destruction of the demons (16).

Just as a large fish calls its own doom by gulping down a morsel of poisonous bait, you have (driven by your doomed fate) brought Janki (Sita) here. No one knows what will happen in future!

[To wit, a greedy fish quickly bites the bait and gets killed, so have you too bitten the bait by bringing Sita to Lanka. Why, you have willingly invited your own doom, and no one else should be blamed for it, just as no one had forced the fish to bite the poisonous bait that would kill it but its own greediness motivated by its doomed fate.] (17).

यद्यप्यनुचितं कर्म त्वया कृतमजानता ।
 सर्वं समं करिष्यामि स्वस्थचित्तो भव प्रभो ॥ १८॥

कुम्भकर्णवचः श्रुत्वा वाक्यमिन्द्रजिदब्रवीत् ।
 देहि देव ममानुज्ञां हत्वा रामं सलक्ष्मणम् ।
 सुग्रीवं वानरंश्चैव पुनर्यास्यामि तेऽन्तिकम् ॥ १९॥ yadyapyanucitaṃ karma tvayā kṛtamajānatā । sarvaṃ samaṃ kariṣyāmi svasthacitto bhava prabho ॥ 18॥ kumbhakarnaṇavacaḥ śrutvā vākyamindrajidabravīt । dehi deva mamānujñāṃ hatvā rāmaṃ salakṣmaṇam । sugrīvaṃ vānarāṃścaiva punaryāsyāmi te'ntikam ॥ 19॥

18-19. Though you have done a very inappropriate and unrighteousness thing by mistake or out of ignorance, but now be quiet and take it easy. Oh Lord! I shall set it right¹ (18).

Hearing Kumbhakarn's word, Indrajeet (Meghnad, the son of Ravana) said (to his father), 'Oh Lord! Give me your permission. I shall immediately kill Laxman along with Lord Ram, Sugriv and all other monkeys, and come back to you soon with the news of success' (19).

[Note—¹In this context Canto 7, verse nos. 51-70 of Adhyatma Ramayan are very relevant. We shall read these verses in due course while describing the war.

Had Ravana paid heed to Kumbhakarn's sane advice now, the calamitous events leading to the horrible war, bloodshed, and complete rout of the demon clan would have been avoided.

So, what did Kumbhakarn mean by saying “I shall set things in order”? He meant that he would go to Lord Ram as an emissary of the demon king Ravana, tell the Lord that his elder brother had done wrong by bringing Sita, and that now he wishes to repent and give her back to him with full honour. Kumbhakarn was so confident of himself that his mission would be successful, as he knew the forgiving and merciful nature of Lord Ram.

But the fiat of fate wished to steer Ravana's destiny on a different and tangential course of collision rather than of compromise and peace, because immediately Meghnad intervened and countered his uncle's proposals, whereby he had proposed of striking a peace deal with Lord Ram, by boasting that he would go and kill all the enemies if his father, Ravana, orders him to do so.]

तत्रागतो भागवतप्रधानो विभीषणो बुद्धिमतां वरिष्ठः । श्रीरामपादद्वय एकतानः । प्रणम्य देवारिमुपोपविष्टः ॥ २०॥ tatrāgato bhāgavatapradhāno vibhīṣaṇo buddhimatāṃ variṣṭhaḥ । śrīrāmapādadvaya ekatānaḥ । praṇamya devārimupopaviṣṭaḥ ॥ 20॥

20. Just at that time, Vibhishan¹—who was one amongst the chief devotees of Lord Ram, and was erudite, sagacious and wise—came there.

He was singularly devoted to Lord Ram, and all aspects of his inner being, such as his inner thoughts and feelings as well as his sub-conscious mind were inclined towards the Lord. He bowed before Ravana², the enemy of the gods, and sat down near him (20).

[Note—¹Vibhishan was the youngest brother of Ravana.

²Vibhishan bowed before Ravana as the latter was his elder brother. So, inspite of his being pervert and sinful he still deserved respect due to one's elder brother. This shows Vibhishan had no ill-will against Ravana, and it also shows that Vibhishan was courteous and followed rules of conduct. He had come to meet Ravana in full court, and so it was obligatory for him that he adhere to court courtesies.]

विलोक्य कुम्भश्रवणादिदैत्यान् मत्प्रमत्तानतिविस्मयेन ।
विलोक्य कामातुरमप्रमत्तो दशाननं प्राह विशुद्धबुद्धिः ॥ २१॥ vilokya kumbhaśravaṇādidaityān mattapramattānavismayena । vilokya kāmāturamapramatto daśānanaṃ prāha viśuddhabuddhiḥ ॥ 21॥

21. Settling down in his seat, Vibhishan cast a rapid glance at all the great demons, including his elder brother Kumbhakarn, who were sitting around him in the court. All of them seemed intoxicated with arrogance and pride, and this attitude of the courtiers much astonished Vibhishan; he felt bewildered and appalled by their folly and stupidity¹. He also observed that Ravana too was overcome with lust, and was driven mad with passions (and because of it, he will listen to no one).

But since Vibhishan had a pure mind that was free from worldly corruptions (because he was a devotee of Lord Ram that ensured that his inner-self remained free from all worldly taints and negativities that had overwhelmed all his peers), he felt that it was his moral duty to give sane advice to his brother.

Thinking thus, Vibhishan said to the 10-headed Ravana (21)—

[Note—¹Why was Vibhishan confused and utterly confounded by the attitude of the demon courtiers? He could not understand their behaviour in the light of what had happened a little while ago in Lanka when Hanuman had slayed a good many demon warriors, killed Ravana's son Akshaya Kumar, and then burned the glorious city of Lanka to a dark hulk of smouldering buildings and smoking public squares. Yet these courtiers pretended as if nothing had happened at all; it shocked Vibhishan, and he was stunned at their utter disregard for reality.

He felt very sorry for the entire demon race as a whole, and especially for his brother Ravana who was now so isolated from the truth and reality, reveling in his imaginary world of invincibility and eternity, that he seemed to live in a fool's paradise that was conjured up by his deluded mind that chose to obstruct Ravana's wisdom, rationality and prudence, and instead impelled him towards his doom by making him have trust and faith in those who were out to ruin him completely.

To wit, Vibhishan felt very pity for Ravana, and he determined that he would do his honest best to pull the latter out of the dark well of grief and destruction into which he was sliding rapidly.]

न कुम्भकर्णेन्द्रजितौ च राजन् तथा महापार्श्वमहोदरौ तौ ।

निकुम्भकुम्भौ च तथातिकायः स्थातुं न शक्ता युधि राघवस्य ॥ २२॥ na kumbhakarnendrajitau ca rājan-tathā mahāpārśvamahodarau tau । nikumbhakumbhau ca tathātikāyaḥ sthātum na śaktā yudhi rāghavasya ॥ 22॥

22. 'Oh king (rājan)! Kumbhakarn, Indrajeet (Meghanad), Mahaparshva, Mahodar, Nikumbh, Kumbh, Atikai etc.—none of them can stand their ground in front of Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) in the battle-field during the war¹. (22)

[Note—¹To wit, when the war actually breaks out, none of these warriors, who pretend so haughtily now that they can crush Lord Ram and his army, would be able to hold their grounds. My dear brother Ravana, they are boasting to bluff you, but I pray that you pay heed to my advice and be wary of their loud-mouthed bluster. It is easy to claim big things, declare imaginary triumph, and glorify oneself while sitting cozily in a secure court, guarded by armed soldiers, and it is quite a different thing when actually facing a powerful enemy in the open field of battle. What has happened to your wisdom? Can you not ask these pretentious boasters what they were doing or where had they been when a humble monkey named Hanuman went on a rampage in our city, ravaging it, and causing untold destruction and havoc in it at his own pleasure, unopposed, unchallenged and unstopped?

Is it not sufficient a warning signal to you of what ill fate stares at our faces in the wake of the developments that have occurred a short while ago with respect to what Hanuman did to us, and our response to him? Oh king, please wake up while there is still time to make amends, for it is better to be late in taking corrective measures than to regret forever by neglecting tell-tale signs of an impending horror and disaster.]

सीताभिधानेन महाग्रहेण ग्रस्तोऽसि राजन् न च ते विमोक्षः । तामेव सत्कृत्य महाधनेन दत्त्वाभिरामाय सुखी भव त्वम् ॥ २३॥ sītābhidhānena mahāgrahaṇa grasto'si rājan na ca te vimokṣaḥ । tāmeva satkṛtya mahādhanena dattvābhirāmāya sukhī bhava tvam ॥ 23॥

23. Oh king! 'Sita' represents a dreadfully dangerous and terrible destiny that seems to have clasped you firmly in its vice-like grip. You cannot get rid of it and free yourself so easily in this way—i.e. in the way you are being advised by your ministers. [They are foolishly advising you to adopt a confrontationist and belligerent attitude towards Lord Ram, with an imaginary hope that you will vanquish him in the battle-field. You are literally digging your own grave by relying on these stupid and dumb-witted courtiers.]

You ought to return her to Lord Sri Ram with full honours; you should also send along with her a lot of precious gifts for Lord Ram. Thereafter, you will be free from all fears, and consequently feel happy and carefree (23).

यावन्न रामस्य शिताः शिलीमुखा लङ्कामभिव्याप्य शिरांसि रक्षसाम् ।
छिन्दन्ति तावद्गुणायकस्य भोस्तां जानकीं त्वं प्रतिदातुमर्हसि ॥ २४॥ yāvanna rāmasya śītāḥ śīlīmukhā laṅkāabhivyāpya śīrāṃsi rakṣasām । chindanti tāvdraghunāyakasya bhostāṃ jānakīm tvam pratidātumarhasi ॥ 24॥

24. Before Lord Ram's sharp and powerful arrows spread over Lanka and pierce through the heads of the demons, impaling them and severing them from their torsos, it is prudent, wise and advisable that you surrender her to him.

[To wit, before death and destruction descends upon Lanka and devours all the demons, it is prudent and advisable for you to give Sita back to Lord Ram with full honours. By doing this, you will save the demon race from sure and certain annihilation.] (24).

यावन्नगाभाः कपयो महाबला हरीन्द्रतुल्या नखदंष्ट्रयोधिनः ।
लङ्कां समाक्रम्य विनाशयन्ति ते तावदुतं देहि रघूत्तमाय ताम् ॥ २५॥ yāvannagābhāḥ kapayo mahābalā harīndratulyā nakhadaṃṣṭrayodhinaḥ । laṅkāṃ samākramya vināśayanti te tāvaddrutam dehi raghūttamāya tām ॥ 25॥

25. Before the time those colossus, mountain-like monkeys—who fight with their nails and jaws using them as their arms and armaments, and who are exceptionally strong, powerful, dreadful and ferocious as if they are living lions—invade Lanka, spread through it and go berserk all over the city, you should hand Sita over to the Lord, who is the most illustrious king in the family of Raghu (i.e. Lord Sri Ram), as soon as possible (25).

जीवन्न रामेण विमोक्ष्यसे त्वं गुप्तः सुरेन्द्रैरपि शङ्करेण ।
न देवराजाङ्कगतो न मृत्योः पाताललोकानपि सम्प्रविष्टः ॥ २६॥ jīvanna rāmeṇa vimokṣyase tvam guptaḥ surendrairapi śaṅkareṇa । na devarājāṅkagato na mṛtyoḥ pātālalokānapi sampraviṣṭaḥ ॥ 26॥

26. Otherwise (i.e. if you do not return Sita and make peace with Lord Ram), even if Indra (the king of gods) and Lord Shiva (the third god of the Trinity) attempt to shield you, or if Indra and the god of death (Yama) try to protect you by lifting you in their laps, or even if you enter and hide yourself in the Patal Loka (i.e. the subterranean world) in the vane hope of escaping Lord Ram's wrath—remember that nothing will succeed, and you cannot hope to survive from the wrath of Lord Ram.' (26).

शुभं हितं पवित् च विभीषणवचः खलः ।
प्रतिजग्राह नैवासौ म्रियमाण इवौषधम् ॥ २७॥
कालेन नोदितो दैत्यो विभीषणमथाब्रवीत् ।

मदत्तभोगैः पुष्टाङ्गो मत्समीपे वसन्नपि ॥ २८॥
 प्रतीपमाचरत्येष ममैव हितकारिणः ।
 मित्रभावेन शत्रुर्मे जातो नास्त्यत्र संशयः ॥ २९॥

śubhaṃ hitaṃ pavitraṃ ca vibhīṣaṇavacaḥ khalah । pratijagrāha naivāsau mriyamāṇa iva uṣadham ॥ 27॥ kālena nodito daityo vibhīṣaṇamathābravīt । maddattabhogaṇi puṣṭāṅgo matsamīpe vasannapi ॥ 28॥ pratīpamācaratyēṣa mamaiva hitakāriṇaḥ । mitrabhāvena śatrurme jāto nāstyatra saṃśayaḥ ॥ 29॥

27-29. The words of sane advice given by Vibhishan, words that were truly auspicious, well-intentioned and meant for the all-round good and welfare of the demon race in general and of Ravana in particular, words that were wise, prudent, pure, unbiased and selfless, were, unfortunately, not received well by Ravana.

The wicked and pervert Ravana did not accept Vibhishan's advice just like a person who is in the throes of death, and being destined to die he would not accept proper medicines prescribed by an expert doctor. Forsooth and without gainsay it is indeed truly said of a doomed creature that "When the evil Spirit has once taken hold of the heart and the mind of a man, it urges him on without letting him stop".

As a consequence of being shackled by death and impelled by a doomed destiny, that rascal of a demon (Ravana) took affront of Vibhishan's good advice, and retorted disdainfully, 'This fellow has been enjoying privileges and comforts due to my magnanimity and blessing upon him. He is nourished and sustained by me as he lives in my city and has a close proximity with me (because he is my sibling, my younger brother).

But alas, he now has the temerity and the audacity to think it proper to talk in the favour of my enemy while deriding me and speaking against me who has been his benefactor and well-wisher all his life! How incredulous and unbelievable it is! In all sooth and without gainsay, definitely he is born as my enemy in the disguise of being my friend (and brother) (29).

अनार्येण कृतघ्नेन सङ्गतिर्मे न युज्यते ।
 विनाशमभिकाङ्क्षन्ति ज्ञातीनां ज्ञातयः सदा ॥ ३०॥
 योऽन्यस्त्वेवंविधं ब्रूयाद्वाक्यमेकं निशाचरः ।
 हन्मि तस्मिन् क्षणे एव धिक् त्वां रक्षःकुलाधमम् ॥ ३१॥ anāryeṇa kṛtaghnena saṅgatirme na yujyate । vināśamabhikāṅkṣanti jñātīnāṃ jñātayaḥ sadā ॥ 30॥ yo'nyastvevaṃvidhaṃ brūyādvākyaamekaṃ niśācaraḥ । hanmi tasmin kṣaṇe eva dhik tvāṃ rakṣaḥkulādhamaṃ ॥ 31॥

30-31. [Continuing his angry diatribe against Vibhishan, Ravana said spitefully—] This 'non-Arya' ("anāryeṇa"; meaning one who is of a low birth and pedigree) and thankless, ungrateful, disloyal fellow (kṛtaghnena) should not stay with me—it will be improper for me to give him shelter any longer.

It is usually seen that people belonging to a particular caste, race, class, clan, vocation or profession always (sadā) wish for the destruction (vināśa) of their own brethrens, compatriots, comrades or peers (mabhikāṅkṣanti jñātīnāṃ jñātayaḥ) (30).

If some other demon had said what he (Vibhishan) has said publicly, or even quietly uttered such words in private, I would have slayed him instantly, without blinking an eye.

Oh you unfaithful wretch; shame to you (dhik tvām)! You are indeed most lowly, contemptible, detestable, loathsome, vile and reprehensible in the demon clan (rakṣaḥkulādhamam)!' (31).

रावणेनैवमुक्तः सन् परुषं स विभीषणः ।
उत्पपात सभामध्याद्गदापाणिर्महाबलः ॥ ३२॥
चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिभिः सार्धं गगनस्थोऽब्रवीद्दत्तः । क्रोधेन महताविष्टो रावणं दशकन्धरम् ।
मा विनाशमुपैहि त्वं प्रियवादिनमेव माम् ॥ ३३॥
धिवकरोषि तथापि त्वं ज्येष्ठो भ्राता पितुः समः । कालो राघवरूपेण जातो दशरथालये ॥ ३४॥ rāvaṇenaivamuktaḥ san parūṣaṃ sa vibhīṣaṇaḥ । utpapāta sabhāmadhyādgadāpaṇiṃmahābalaḥ ॥ 32॥ caturbhirmantribhiḥ sārddhaṃ gaganastho'bravīdvacaḥ । krodhena mahatāviṣṭo rāvaṇaṃ daśakandharam । mā vināśamupaihi tvam priyavādinameva mām ॥ 33॥ dhikkaroṣi tathāpi tvam jyeṣṭho bhrātā pituḥ samaḥ । kālo rāghavarūpeṇa jāto daśarathālaye ॥ 34॥

32-34. When Ravana had said such scornful and outrageous words full of reproach and rancour, the most strong and valorous Vibhishan (felt indignant and embarrassed, so he) took his baton (the mace or the club that demons normally held while appearing in public) and flew (to the sky) from the court¹ (32).

He was accompanied by his four ministers (who were his close aides and companions). Once he was safe high up in the sky (being out of reach of his opponents in the court as they were on the ground), he addressed the 10-headed Ravana angrily from there, as he was filled with disgust and was extremely dismayed at the response Ravana gave him for his good-intentioned advice (33)—'You put me to shame; you scold me most reproachfully even though I wish to tell you about your own welfare and good. In spite of it, I still wish that you are not ruined because you are my elder brother, and hence you are like a father to me. But unfortunately, your death has manifested itself in the form of Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) who is born in the household of Dasrath (the king of Ayodhya) (34).

[Note—¹Vibhishan was so disgusted and dismayed at Ravana's attitude and response that he decided to quit the court immediately to forestall further humiliation. So he came out of the court and ascended to the sky. How? Well, in the ancient period of time, long-long back ago, during which our story is unfolding, it was possible for creatures to lift themselves from the ground and become air-borne like birds. Surely humans could not do so, but ‘non-humans’ could certainly achieve this feat. We have here the example of Hanuman of the monkey race and Vibhishan of the demon race.

Later on, as we progress with the story, we shall have instances of other monkeys flying in the sky, as they did while crossing the ocean, and some of the demons too being able to fly in the sky as they did during the battles that followed, an example of which is Meghnad, the son of Ravana, who did it many times during the course of his battles.]

काली सीताभिधानेन जाता जनकनन्दिनी ।
तावुभावागतावत् भूर्मेभारापनुतये ॥ ३५॥
तेनैव प्रेरितस्त्वं तु न शृणोषि हितं मम ।
श्रीरामः प्रकृतेः साक्षात्परस्तात्सर्वदा स्थितः ॥ ३६॥
बहिरन्तश्च भूतानां समः सर्वत्र संस्थितः । नामरूपादिभेदेन ततन्मय इवामलः ॥ ३७॥ kālī sītābhidhānena jātā janakanandinī । tāvubhāvāgatāvatra bhūrmebhārāpanuttaye ॥ 35॥ tenaiva preritastvaṃ tu na śṛṇoṣi hitaṃ mama । śrīrāmaḥ prakṛteḥ sāksātparastātsarvadā sthitaḥ ॥ 36॥ bahirantaśca bhūtānāṃ samaḥ sarvatra saṁsthitaḥ । nāmarūpādibhedena tattanmaya ivāmalah ॥ 37॥

35-37. The cosmic destructive power of Nature is called ‘Kaali’, and it has revealed itself in the form of Sita, the daughter of Janak. Both of them (i.e. Lord Sri Ram and Sita) have come here to remove the burden of the world¹ (35).

It is due to their delusion-creating powers that you have been inspired not pay heed to my words of sane advice which I speak for your own well-being and welfare².

Lord Ram is beyond the comprehension, the grasp or the influence of ‘Prakriti’ (cosmic aspect of Nature) (36).

He is indeed the cosmic Consciousness that is universally present inside and outside all living beings in equal measure much like the ‘sky or the space element’ that exists both within and without the body of the creature. Indeed also, Lord Ram is eternally pure and steady in his form and nature, though he exhibits certain character traits peculiar to the form he assumes in order to carry out his obligations as the Supreme Lord of this world³. (37)

[Note—¹What is the “burden of the world that Lord Ram and Sita wish to remove”? The cruelty and horrors of the demons who symbolized sinful and evil forces of creation was the ‘burden’ which was breaking the back of the world, for they terrorized all living beings, tortured them, and generally upset the cart of rule-of-law in the world. Under their influence and patronage, negativities of all sorts had become ascendant forces, while goodness and positive forces were forced to go on the decline, almost to the point of complete oblivion.

The almighty and the supreme Lord of this creation tolerated their mischief to a certain point, giving the demons a lot of rope in the hope they would remain within their limits, but beyond that point he had to intervene to restore order and calm in his realm and to restore the world's confidence in him, because it was his moral duty as the Lord Emperor of this world that his innocent subjects, the humble and harmless creatures who were subjected to immense suffering under the rule of the demons, were given protection, and their sufferings brought to an end.

So therefore, the Supreme Being decided to put things in order himself. But for this he had to come down as a human being to overcome certain conditions that granted immunity from death and were an integral part of the slew of boons which the king of the demons, Ravana, had extracted from the creator Brahma. One such incredulous boon was that he would be killed by none but a human being or no one else except a monkey would be able to defeat him in battle! This compelled the Supreme Being to come down as Lord Ram to eliminate the scourge of the demons. {Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2.}

But who was Sita? She represented 'Kaali', the Mother Goddess who is tasked by the Lord to eliminate evil forces in this creation. She represents the cosmic Shakti, the cosmic powers of Nature that is responsible for maintaining balance of the various forces in creation. To wit, if the scale is tilted towards the side of evil forces at the cost of causing immense suffering to the creatures who are unable to restore the balance themselves, then this Mother Goddess is obliged to intervene on behalf of her suffering off-springs. It is just like the case of an ordinary mother who loves all her children equally, but in case if one or two of them become a nuisance for the entire family and the neighbourhood then any conscientious mother would herself take steps to punish such son who had become evil and offending. So therefore, Sita represented this 'Kaali'.

²To wit, since the Supreme Being has decided to get rid of you, he has invoked his delusion-creating powers to benumb your wisdom so that you fail to see what is good for you. It is a tool that the Lord uses to prepare the offender before the final strike to eliminate him just like a surgeon would first use a dose of anesthesia to numb the part of the patient's body he wishes to operate upon so that the patient does not feel the pain of the operation.

³Lord Ram represents the supreme Brahm, the cosmic Consciousness that is uniform and non-dual in its essence. But this 'consciousness' appears to adopt different characteristics in line with the different role it plays in this creation. It is like the case of the 'sky' that is uniform and unchangeable, but it appears to have different shades of colours, and appears to be dark or sun-light due to many extraneous factors that are not its essential nature but are nevertheless a part of it. So likewise, though the Supreme Being who is known as Brahm is essentially invisible, formless and without specific attributes, yet when the same Brahm assumes a form, in this case of a human being known by the name of 'Ram', he is obliged to adhere to the norms, traits and characteristics applicable to the form that he had voluntarily decided to assume—i.e. that of a human being.

So he has a wife, he grieves for her when she is stolen, he collects an army to defeat the evil king who has stolen his wife in order to recover her, and he fights a war and even gets wounded in the battles. All these things create a smoke-screen of illusions, making it appear that Lord Ram was one of the many great princes and kings the world history has witnessed. But for an enlightened and realized man, the fact is different, for he sees behind this smoke-screen to know the truth; he knows who Lord Ram actually was, why Sita was abducted, and why the war of Lanka was fought. To wit, he understands that Lord Ram was actually a personified form of Brahm, that Sita was his Shakti or cosmic powers, that the Lord had to eliminate the demons who were terrorizing the world, and for this purpose he had to maneuver things in such a way that the purpose of his coming down to earth could be fulfilled—so he got Sita abducted by Ravana, corrupted his wisdom so much that he would never see reason, and then eliminated the cruel demons using a war to rescue Sita as an excuse.]

यथा नानाप्रकारेषु वृक्षेष्वेको महानलः ।
ततदाकृतिभेदेन भिद्यतेऽज्ञानचक्षुषाम् ॥ ३८॥
पञ्चकोशादिभेदेन ततन्मय इवाबभौ । नीलपीतादियोगेन निर्मलः स्फटिको यथा ॥ ३९॥ yathā nānāprakāreṣu vṛkṣeṣveko mahānalaḥ । tattadākṛtibhedena bhidyate'jñānacakṣuṣām ॥ 38॥ pañcakośādibhedena tattanmaya ivābabhau । nīlapītādiyogena nirmalaḥ sphaṭiko yathā ॥ 39॥

38-39. Just like the same great life-giving primary force of Nature that manifests itself in the form of the latent 'fire' (heat) that lends warmth to this world and enables all living things, such as the many different forms of plants, to survive in myriads of climates and habitats, and just like a primarily colourless crystal seems to have so many colours in it because of the myriads of colours present in its surroundings, so is the case with the Atma, the essential 'true self' of all living beings.

This Atma is pure Consciousness which has a cosmic presence; it is a subtle and sublime entity that is formless, invisible, constant, unchanging and universal, a unique entity that has no attributes specific to it. But when this same formless Atma assumes a 'form' by entering a physical body, making this body its habitat, it allows itself to be surrounded by the characteristics of its new habitat, the physical body, which however is constituted of the 'five Koshas' or the five sheaths¹.

When this happens, it is natural and obvious that the essentially attributeless Atma assumes the attributes of the body in which it comes to abide, and as long as it tarries in this particular body it will continue to exhibit the characteristic of that body². (38-39).

[Note—¹The gross body of a creature consists of 'five sheaths', and these form concentric rings around the Atma that lives ensconced at the center. The result is that when an observer looks at the Atma and tries to understand its primary form and nature he is unable to see its reality, because he sees the Atma not directly but through the five layers that surround it, and consequentially the characteristics of these five layers or sheaths that enclose the Atma will collectively modify the view of the Atma as observed by the seer, and affect the primary nature of the Atma as understood by the observer.

To wit, the Atma becomes corrupted and tainted in direct proportion to the corruption and taints present in its surrounding sheaths. So therefore it follows that the same Atma that lives in all living beings, the Atma that lends an identity to a creature, comes to acquire many different names and characteristics. Hence, one person is good and the other is bad; one man appears to be sinful and the other righteous. The fact is that it is their 'physical body' that is either good or bad, sinful or righteous, and not their primary 'self' that is represented by the Atma which is pure and uncorrupt consciousness.

In a similar fashion, it is the physical gross body that dies and takes birth, and not the Atma for it is eternal, immortal and imperishable, it neither dies nor takes birth. The Atma merely changes one location to migrate to another when the physical body dies; this explains why the creature takes repeated births.

Now, let us have a quick glance at these 'five Koshas' or the five sheaths that constitute a creature's gross body in which the Atma lives.

Atma—This is the pure-self, pure consciousness which is a microscopic reflection of the vast macrocosmic soul. The Atma provides life or consciousness to the inert layers of matter consisting of the five elements of air, water, space, fire and earth which crystallize to form the five coverings or sheaths around the pure Atma, and together (the Atma and the five sheaths) they create what we call the living being, whether plant, animal or humans.

The Panch Kosha or the five sheaths covering the Atma are as follows—(i) The food sheath; (ii) the vital air sheath; (iii) the mental sheath; (iv) the intellectual sheath; (v) and the bliss sheath.

The Food Sheath—It is the physical body and derives its name because it is nourished by the food eaten by the creature. It consists of 5 organs of perception (eyes, ears, tongue, nose, skin) and 5 organs of action (hands, legs, mouth, genitals, anus).

The Vital Air Sheath—It is the five-fold faculties of perception (seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, touching), excretion (faeces, urine, sperm, sputum, sweat etc.), digestion (stomach, intestine, liver, pancreas, gall bladder, appendix), circulation (blood stream, artery, vein, capillary, heart) and thinking (the power to entertain, absorb and assimilate new information and thought).

The Mental Sheath—It consists of the equipment which receives external stimuli through the sense organs and links it to the organs of action. Integrated response of body to the stimuli is done through the mind sheath. It is a continuous flow of thoughts.

The Intellect Sheath—It acts as a controlling mechanism over the mind; It regulates, filters and modifies the response to the various stimuli. It has the discriminatory power which the mind, left alone to itself, lacks.

The mental and intellect sheaths have no physical form. They are like the softwares of a computer vis-a-vis the food and vital sheaths which resemble the hardware paraphernalia of the entire system.

The Bliss Sheath—It is the innermost sheath surrounding the Atma/the soul. It consists of 'inherent tendencies' or 'Vasanas' before they are manifested into thoughts or actions. The intellect, mind etc. perform under the guidance and control of the bliss sheath. It is so-called because an individual experiences relative bliss, peace and tranquility when he is associated with it.

²The metaphors and similes used in these verses to represent the changing characteristics of the Atma are self-explanatory. There is so much variation and variety in the plant kingdom that it seems difficult to believe that in the beginning all these myriads of plants are merely what is known as a ‘seed’. What mystery is hidden inside this seed that one produces a small blade of grass or a creeper and the other gigantic trees that seem to touch the sky. There are plants growing under the water, there are plants growing in the parched desert, there are plants growing on rocks of mountain sides, and there are plants growing on soft soil; there are plants growing in all sorts of climates and seasons, having so much variety in their forms and characteristics and life-cycles that an entire branch of science known as botany is dedicated to them. But the underlying live-infusing force that keeps all plants alive is the same.

The same principle applies to the member of the animal kingdom, the subjects of the zoological realm. No matter what their names and forms are, the same Atma lives inside the bodies of all living creatures. But depending on the form and other features, these creatures are known by different names and species. But for a wise and enlightened person, the universal form of all these creatures is one, and it is called the Atma.]

स एव नित्यमुक्तोऽपि स्वमायागुणबिम्बितः ।
 कालः प्रधानं पुरुषोऽव्यक्तं चेति चतुर्विधः ॥ ४०॥
 प्रधानपुरुषाभ्यां स जगत्कृत्स्नं सृजत्यजः । कालरूपेण कलनां जगतः कुरुतेऽव्ययः ॥ ४१॥ sa eva nityamukto'pi svamāyāguṇabimbitaḥ । kālaḥ pradhānaṁ puruṣo'vyaktaṁ ceti caturvidhaḥ ॥ 40॥ pradhānapuruṣābhyāṁ sa jagatkṛtsnaṁ srjatyajah । kālarūpeṇa kalanāṁ jagataḥ kurute'vyayaḥ ॥ 41॥

40-41. Therefore, the same Lord whose primary form is the cosmic Atma, which is nothing but pure Consciousness that is eternally free from all attributes associated with this gross world, appears to have the characteristics of a living being when the Lord decides to assume a form and acquire a gross physical body of a human being.

[To wit, when the Parmatma, the supreme Atma, reveals in the form of the Jiva Atma, the individual living being, the former has to play the role of the latter to perfection—because the Atma is perfect. So when the Supreme Being decided to become Lord Ram, a human being, he had to behave like a human being. He can't behave like the Supreme Being in his form as Lord Ram.]

Since the eternally uniform and unchanging Brahm has revealed himself in the form of this creation with its many facets and variations, changing from the subtlest to the grossest forms, he is also known by different names, such as Kaal (time, death, both of the gross world as well as the universe), Pradhan (the chief Lord of the world, both at the universal level and the individual level of a kingdom or any geographical realm), Purush (the primary male; the cosmic Male as well as the individual male) and Avyakta (one who cannot be described, who is beyond comprehension, one who invisible, one who is unquantifiable and beyond qualifications). (40)

Though Brahm himself does not take birth or dies, he presides over this creation, overseeing its birth and death, in his form as the Purush and the Kaal respectively.

[To wit, as the ‘Purush’ he is the Father of this world as he gives birth to it. As ‘Kaal’ he regulates the end of the same world that he has created as its Father.] (41)

कालरूपी स भगवान् रामरूपेण मायया ॥ ४२॥
 ब्रह्मणा प्रार्थितो देवस्त्वद्वधार्थमिहागतः । तदन्यथा कथं कुर्यात्सत्यसङ्कल्प ईश्वरः ॥ ४३॥ kālarūpī sa bhagavān rāmarūpeṇa māyayā ॥ 42॥ brahmaṇā prārthito devastvadvadhārthamihāgataḥ । tadanyathā katham kuryātsatyasaṅkalpa īśvaraḥ ॥ 43॥

42-43. The same Lord who is ‘Kaal’ personified has come in the guise of Lord Sri Ram to kill you at the behest (i.e. on the prayers) of Brahma. The supreme Lord God is true to his words, so how can he forgo his promises that he had made to the Gods¹? (42-43).

[Note—¹The Lord God had promised the gods that he would personally come down to earth as Lord Ram to eliminate the demons who had terrorized the gods and the earth. This being the case, it is certain that Ravana would be killed, for the Lord has to keep his words. This is the reason why Ravana’s wisdom won’t allow him to see the correct path, because if Ravana sees the correct path and returns Sita to Lord Ram then he would be spared death, and that would mean the Lord failed to keep his words.]

हनिष्यति त्वां रामस्तु सपुत्रबलवाहनम् ।
 हन्यमानं न शक्नोमि द्रष्टुं रामेण रावण ॥ ४४॥
 त्वां राक्षसकुलं कृत्स्नं ततो गच्छामि राघवम् । मयि याते सुखीभूत्वा रामस्व भवने चिरम् ॥ ४५॥ haniṣyati tvāṃ rāmastu saputrabalavāhanam । hanyamānaṃ na śaknōmi draṣṭuṃ rāmeṇa rāvaṇa ॥ 44॥ tvāṃ rākṣasakulaṃ kṛtsnaṃ tato gacchāmi rāghavam । mayi yāte sukhībhūtvā rāmasva bhavane ciraṃ ॥ 45॥

44-45. Therefore, it is for certain that Lord Ram will kill you along with all the soldiers and their sons, and decimate your army with all its war paraphernalia, such as its many war machines (chariots, catapults, battering rams, etc.).

Oh Ravana! I cannot afford to see the ruin and total annihilation of the entire demon race at the hands of Lord Ram; I can’t gather myself to become a witness of decimation of my race; I can’t stand the sight of Lanka crumbling to rubble. Hence, I am going to Raghav (Sri Ram)¹. After I go from here, you can enjoy life and its comforts for a long time in your palace.’ (44-45).

[Note—¹What does Vibhishan mean by this statement that seems he is contradicting himself, for on the one hand he says he would not like to see the demon race being annihilated by Lord Ram, and then says he is going to join the Lord though he is certain that Lord Ram is sure to destroy the demons? Well, he means that he cannot remain in Lanka to become a mute spectator and witness of the destruction of the demon race. He would rather go behind the enemy lines of Lord Ram from where he would not be able to see the actual ruin taking place in Lanka, right before his eyes, for he would be far away from the spot of destruction. He does not want to repeat his bitter experience of watching Lanka being burnt by Hanuman and not being able to do anything about it.

Vibhishan is feeling very sad and distraught in his heart, but he has no choice. He can't prevent the war, and this means he would be forced to see a sure destruction of the city of Lanka and witness mass bloodshed that will follow in the wake of the war. So it is better for him to quit the sight of this bloody mayhem and retire to a place which will obstruct this macabre view from him.]

विभीषणो रावणवाक्यतः क्षणादिसृज्य सर्वं सपरिच्छदं गृहम् ।

जगाम रामस्य पदारविन्दयोः सेवाभिकाङ्क्षी परिपूर्णमानसः ॥ ४६॥ vibhīṣaṇo rāvaṇavākyaṭaḥ kṣaṇādisrjya sarvaṃ saparicchadaṃ gr̥ham ।

jagāma rāmasya padāravindayoḥ sevābhikāṅkṣī paripūrṇamānasaḥ ॥ 46॥

46. In this manner, Vibhishan left his household, abandoning all its material contents and renouncing all its comforts because he was publicly rebuked and humiliated by Ravana who scornfully reproached him. Thereafter, Vibhishan went to Lord Ram with total peace of mind, a contented heart and a clear conscience, to serve the lotus-like feet of the Lord (46).

[Note—The reason why Vibhishan has gone to join Lord Ram's camp obvious here. Firstly, he wished to save himself from almost certain death at the hands of Ravana or other demons if he now remained in Lanka because he has openly sided with Lord Ram who was considered as an arch enemy of the demons as is clear by his own words in verse nos. 44-45, 24-25 of this Canto, and verse no. 5 of Canto 3.

Secondly, he was publicly humiliated by his elder brother (Canto 3, verse nos. 3-5), and he did not like this rough treatment in the front of all the courtiers. Had Ravana scolded him in private then perhaps Vibhishan would not have minded it so much as he did when he was scorned at in full public view.

But the point to remark here is this: Vibhishan had not gone to join Lord Ram simply because he was highly devoted to him, but because circumstances forced him to do so. The fact is that he changed sides as a clever move to save himself from Ravana's wrath.

To wit, Vibhishan failed to remain loyal to the demon kingdom and his own brother Ravana; no other demon, whether he was an ordinary soldier or one who had special place in the hierarchy of the army and society, had deserted Ravana, though many of them had not agreed with him and had even at times openly chided him for his evil doings.

In spite of this apparent taint to his otherwise good character, credit should be given to Vibhishan that he did not wish to be a helpless witness to an unjust war that would lead to the calamitous destruction of the city of Lanka and cause untold misery for its inhabitants. It also goes to his credit that he did his best to try and make the stubborn Ravana see reason and end his confrontationist approach to Lord Ram, although he failed in his attempt, even inviting personal humiliation in the process. Then he had shown due respect to his elder brother by bowing before the latter, both before and after the meeting. He had finally chosen to take the side of righteousness and probity rather than of sinfulness and evilness, though that would mean renouncing his own home and its comforts on the one hand, and going down in history as a betrayer of his own brother and committing treason on the other hand, because Vibhishan had played a crucial role in the war by divulging secrets of Lanka and the ways by which the chief demon commanders, including Ravana himself, could be killed as the war progressed.]

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे द्वितीयः सर्गः ॥ २॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṁvāde yuddhakāṇḍe dvitīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 2॥

Thus ends Canto 2 of Yuddha Kand (Lanka Kand) of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and his divine consort Uma.

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 1-48:

॥तृतीयः सर्गः ॥
श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

विभीषणो महाभागश्चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिभिः सह ।
आगत्य गगने रामसम्मुखे समवस्थितः ॥ १॥ उच्चैरुवाच भोः स्वामिन् राम राजीवलोचन ।
यवणस्यानुजोऽहं ते दारहर्तुर्विभीषणः ॥ २॥
नाम्ना भ्रात्रा निरस्तोऽहं त्वामेव शरणं गतः ।
हितमुक्तं मया देव तस्य चाविदितात्मनः ॥ ३॥

॥trtīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥
śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

vibhīṣaṇo mahābhāgaścaturbhirmantribhiḥ saha । āgatya gagane rāmasammukhe samavasthitaḥ ॥ 1॥ uccairuvāca bhoḥ svāmin rāma rājīvalocana । rāvaṇasyānujo'haṁ te dāraharturvibhīṣaṇaḥ ॥ 2॥ nāmnā bhrātrā nirasto'haṁ tvāmeva śaraṇaṁ gataḥ । hitamuktaṁ mayā deva tasya cāviditātmanaḥ ॥ 3॥

1-3. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! Thereafter, the fortunate Vibhishan, accompanied by his four ministers, came and stood in the sky in front of Lord Ram (1).

Vibhishan raised his voice loud enough to enable the Lord to hear him clearly. He said, 'Oh Lord, the lotus-eyed Sri Ram! I am the younger brother of Ravana who has abducted your wife (2).

My name is Vibhishan. I have been thrown out of the kingdom by my own brother after being rebuked, insulted and publicly humiliated by him. That is why I have come to seek shelter and refuge in your feet. Oh Lord! I had spoken for the welfare of that ignorant fellow (Ravana) [but instead of heeding me he chose to scold me and kick me out]. (3).

[Note—(i) Verse no. 3 above and 5 below clearly tell us the reason for Vibhishan joining Lord Ram's camp. After being subjected to public scorn and humiliation by Ravana in open court, Vibhishan had no choice except to protect his dignity and self respect by turning away from Ravana. Please also see Canto 2, verse no. 46.

(ii) The way Vibhishan has come to meet Lord Ram here in 'Adhyatma Ramayan' is very different from the way he is mentioned to do so in Tulsidas' epic 'Ram Charit Manas'. Here he has come directly by the sky path and presented himself before Lord Ram, but Tulsidas' version says that he had stopped outside the camp, a messenger was sent to the Lord to inform him of Vibhishan's arrival, and then he was called to present himself and his credentials before the Lord. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 43; and Doha no. 44 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that follow it.]

सीतां रामाय वैदेहीं प्रेषयेति पुनः पुनः ।

उक्तोऽपि न शृणोत्येव कालपाशवशं गतः ॥ ४॥

हन्तुं मां खड्गमादाय प्राद्रवद्राक्षसाधमः ।

ततोऽचिरेण सचिवैश्चतुर्भिः सहितो भयात् ॥ ५॥

त्वामेव भवमोक्षाय मुमुक्षुः शरणं गतः ।

विभीषणवचः श्रुत्वा सुग्रीवो वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ६॥ sītāṃ rāmāya vaidehīm preṣayeti punaḥ punaḥ । ukto'pi na śṛṇotyeva kālapāśavaśaṃ gataḥ ॥ 4॥ hantuṃ māṃ khaḍgamādāya prādravadrākṣasādhamah । tato'cireṇa sacivaiścaturbhiḥ sahito bhayāt ॥ 5॥

tvāmeva bhavamokṣāya mumukṣuḥ śaraṇaṃ gataḥ ।

vibhiṣaṇavacaḥ śrutvā sugrīvo vākyamabravīt ॥ 6॥

4-6. I have told (advised) Ravana repeatedly “you should send Vaidehi (Sita) to Lord Ram”, but being under the spell of impending death, he wouldn't listen to any sane and rationale advice (4).

Presently the wretched and lowly demon rushed to kill me with a sword. Then, out of fear, I took four of my ministers with me (5), and in order to free myself from the shackles of this mundane existence, I renounced every worldly attachment that I had with my family and home, and decided to finally come to seek shelter and refuge in your feet.’

Hearing these words of Vibhishan, Sugriv said to the Lord (6)—

[Note—Verse no. 6 gives another reason for Vibhishan coming to Lord Ram. It highlights the fact that a creature seeks the shelter of the Lord and wants to take refuge with him when it is scorned, rebuked, insulted, castigated and humiliated by the world, by those whom the creature had hitherto called his own kith and kin. This selfish scorn and reproach fills the creature with indignation and grief, which motivates him towards the virtues of renunciation, detachment and dispassion. The creature finally turns towards the Lord, seeking protection and succour from his miseries.

Such events had turned the cruel robber Valmiki into becoming a great sage, and made prince Dhruv into a great devotee of the Lord.]

विश्वासाहो न ते राम मायावी राक्षसाधमः ।
सीताहर्तुर्विशेषेण रावणस्यानुजो बली ॥ ७॥
मन्त्रिभिः सायुधैरस्मान् विवरे निहनिष्यति । तदाज्ञापय मे देव वानरैर्हन्यतामयम् ॥ ८॥ viśvāsārho na te rāma māyāvī rākṣasādhamah । sītāharturviśeṣeṇa rāvaṇasyānujo balī ॥ 7॥ mantribhiḥ sāyudhairasmān vivare nihanīṣyati । tadājñāpaya me deva vānarairhanyatāmayam ॥ 8॥

7-8. Sugriv said to Lord Ram—'Oh Lord Ram! We should not believe (or rely upon) this imposter and wicked demon who may have come here with some malefic intentions, because demons are by birth very deceitful, cunning, and full of dirty tricks.

(If he had been somebody else, it would have been a different case, but—) He is the younger brother of the abductor of Sita i.e. Ravana. Moreover, he looks strong and powerful (i.e. he does not appear to be someone in great distress, someone who had been suffering under the tyrannical rule of the demon king Ravana, for he looks well-fed, healthy and strong) (7).

He is accompanied by armed ministers. I have strong doubts about his intentions and integrity; I apprehend that he will kill us whenever he finds us alone and gets a chance. So, oh Lord, if you give me your permission I shall get him killed by the monkeys¹ (8).

[Note—¹Expressing his great uneasiness and dread of Vibhishan, Sugriv, the king of the monkey army and a close aide of Lord Ram, advised the Lord to be very wary of him as he was, firstly, a demon by birth, and demons are by their nature very cunning, selfish, ruthless and untrustworthy; secondly, he was the brother of Ravana who had abducted Sita, the Lord's wife, and so can't be trusted; and thirdly, he was accompanied by armed ministers who could strike and kill them once they manage enter the camp of the Lord's army by some stratagem.

Sugriv is of the view that it would be very dangerous and almost suicidal to allow Vibhishan, who happens to be a brother of their arch enemy Ravana, to come and join their ranks, because if he has come with malefic intentions to spy then his entry into the Lord's army would make it very vulnerable. All the secrets and strategies of the Lord's army would be susceptible to leakage as they would be known by the demon camp, as Ravana will have his own spy right in their midst. This would like digging one's own grave.

So it would be wiser to either imprison Vibhishan, or kill him for being a spy of the enemy, the demon king Ravana.]

ममैवं भाति मे राम बुद्ध्या किं निश्चितं वद ।
 श्रुत्वा सुग्रीववचनं रामः सस्मितमब्रवीत् ॥ ९॥
 यदीच्छामि कपिश्रेष्ठ लोकान् सर्वान् सहेश्वरान् ।
 निमिषार्धेन संहन्यां सृजामि निमिषार्धतः ॥ १०॥ अतो मयाऽभयं दत्तं शीघ्रमानय राक्षसम् ॥ ११॥ mamaivaṃ bhāti me rāma buddhyā kiṃ niścitaṃ vada । śrutvā sugrīvavacanam rāmaḥ sasmitamabravīt ॥ 9॥ yadīcchāmi kapiśreṣṭha lokān sarvān saheśvarān । nimiṣārdhena saṃhanyāṃ sṛjāmi nimiṣārdhataḥ ॥ 10॥ ato mayā'bhayam dattaṃ śīghramānaya rākṣasam ॥ 11॥

9-11. Oh Lord Ram! I think this will be a proper and wise course of action. What is your decision in this connection? Do tell us'.

Hearing these words of Sugriv, Lord Ram smiled and replied politely (9), 'Oh the best amongst the monkeys (kapiśreṣṭha)! If I wish, I can destroy the entire world along with its Lokpals (patron gods and guardians of the world) in half a second (nimiṣārdhena saṃhanyāṃ), and I can create them equally easily in another half a second (sṛjāmi nimiṣārdhataḥ)¹. Hence, you should not worry at all. I am giving this demon 'freedom from fear' as a blessing. So go and bring him here soon (10-11).

[Note—¹There is no wonder in this claim of Lord Ram as he was a human manifestation of the Supreme Being who has the actual power and the real ability to do what he claims here he could do. What Lord Ram means is that Sugriv need not have any fear of Vibhishan, for if the latter tries to play any dirty tricks against anyone in the Lord's camp then he would be punished immediately, and the Lord alone is able to carry out this punishment should the need arise at any point of time. But, on the other hand, if Vibhishan has good intentions and has come to surrender himself before the Lord then it becomes obligatory for him to accept Vibhishan notwithstanding his birth as a demon and irrespective of the family to which he belongs.]

सकृदेव पूषन्नाय तवास्मीति च याचते ।
 अभयं सर्वभूतेभ्यो ददाम्येतद्भूतं मम ॥ १२॥
 रामस्य वचनं श्रुत्वा सुग्रीवो हृष्टमानसः ।

विभीषणमथानास्य दर्शयामास राघवम् ॥ १३॥ sakṛdeva prapannāya tavāsmīti ca yācate । abhayaṃ sarvabhūtebhyo dadāmyetadvrataṃ mama ॥ 12॥ rāmasya vacanaṃ śrutvā sugrīvo hr̥ṣṭamānasaḥ । vibhīṣaṇamathānāyya darśayāmāsa rāghavam ॥ 13॥

12-13. It is my established tradition (it's my vow, it's a principle, a practice or rule of thumb that I always follow—"vrataṃ mama") that anyone who comes to me and says even once 'Lord, I am yours', and asks for freedom from fear, I make it sure that he is granted fearlessness from all the issues that worry him' (12).

Hearing these words of assurance from Lord Ram, Sugriv immediately brought Vibhishan, cheerfully and without having any more doubts in his mind, and introduced him to Raghav (Lord Ram) (13).

विभीषणस्तु साष्टाङ्गं प्रणिपत्य रघूत्तमम् ।
हर्षगद्गदया वाचा भक्त्या च परयान्वितः ॥ १४॥
रामं श्यामं विशालाक्षं प्रसन्नमुखपङ्कजम् । धनुर्बाणधरं शान्तं लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितम् ॥ १५॥ कृताञ्जलिपुटो भूत्वा स्तोतुं समुपचक्रमे ॥ १६॥ vibhīṣaṇastu sāṣṭāṅgaṃ praṇipatya raghūttamam । harṣagadgadayā vācā bhaktyā ca parayānvitaḥ ॥ 14॥ rāmaṃ śyāmaṃ viśālākṣaṃ prasannamukhapaṅkajam । dhanurbāṇadharaṃ śāntaṃ lakṣmaṇena samanvitaṃ ॥ 15॥

kṛtāñjalipuṭo bhūtvā stotuṃ samupacakrame ॥ 16॥

14-16. Vibhishan prostrated himself (sāṣṭāṅgaṃ praṇipatya) before Lord Ram, the Lord who was the most illustrious member of king Raghu's family (raghūttamam), to show his respects to the Lord even as he became delighted and overwhelmed with excess of joy and happiness (harṣagadgadayā vācā).

He began to say prayers with an emotionally choked throat and an overwhelmed heart which was full of devotion (for the Lord) (14).

Lord Ram had a dark complexion (śyāmaṃ), had broad eyes (viśālākṣaṃ), his lotus-like face was eternally benign and cheerful (prasannamukhapaṅkajam), he held a bow and an arrow in his hands (dhanurbāṇadharaṃ), and he was an image of peace, tranquility and serenity (śāntaṃ).

While saying his prayers, Vibhishan had folded his hands and joined his palms as a mark of submission and supplication (kṛtāñjalipuṭo bhūtvā stotuṃ) in honour of Lord Ram and his younger brother Laxman who was sitting near the Lord (lakṣmaṇena samanvitaṃ) (15-16).

विभीषण उवाच ।

नमस्ते राम राजेन्द्र नमः सीतामनोरम ।

नमस्ते चण्डकोदण्ड नमस्ते भक्तवत्सल ॥ १७॥
 नमोऽनन्ताय शान्ताय समायामिततेजसे । सुग्रीवमित्राय च ते रघूणां पतये नमः ॥ १८॥

vibhīṣaṇa uvāca ।
 namaste rāma rājendra namaḥ sītāmanorama । namaste caṇḍakodaṇḍa namaste bhaktavatsala ॥ 17॥ namo'nantāya śāntāya rāmāyāmitatejase । sugrīvamitrāya ca te raghūṇāṃ pataye namaḥ ॥ 18॥

17-18. Vibhishan said, 'Oh the King of kings, Lord Ram! I bow before you (to pay my respects and honour). Oh the one who resides in the heart of Sita! I bow before you. Oh the invincible and formidable archer! I bow before you. Oh the one who is exemplarily compassionate, benevolent, munificent, endearing and a singular benefactor of his devotees! I bow before you (17).

I bow before Lord Ram who has no end and a beginning, who is an image of tranquility, peace and serenity, who is one of his only kind, who is unique and matchless in his splendour, radiance and brilliance as he glows in divine energy and his majestic cosmic powers, who is a friend of Sugriv, and who is the most illustrious Lord and a Leader of the great family of king Raghu (of Ayodhya) (18).

जगदुत्पत्तिनाशानां कारणाय महात्मने ।
 त्रैलोक्यगुरवेऽनादिग्रहस्थाय नमो नमः ॥ १९॥
 त्वमादिर्जगतां राम त्वमेव स्थितिकारणम् ।
 त्वमन्ते निधनस्थानं स्वेच्छाचारस्त्वमेव हि ॥ २०॥ jagadutpattināśānāṃ kāraṇāya mahātmane । trailokyagurave'nādigr̥hasthāya namo namaḥ ॥ 19॥ tvamādirjagatāṃ rāma tvameva sthitikāraṇam । tvamante nidhanasthānaṃ svecchācāraṣṭvameva hi ॥ 20॥

19-20. I repeatedly bow before you who are a great and exalted Soul, who are the one who causes this creation to come into being as well as to come to an end, who is the great Guru (teacher, preceptor, guide or advisor of all the creatures in this world, the Lord who is most wise, erudite, sagacious and enlightened) of the entire world consisting of three divisions (such as the subterranean, the terrestrial and the celestial worlds), and who is a householder since time immemorial¹ (19).

Oh Lord Ram! You are the cause of creation and existence of this world, and at the end you are the place where everything goes back². You move around as per your own wish (20).

[Note—¹The Lord has been called a “householder” (gr̥hasthāya) because he is the cosmic Father from whom this creation has come into being. So therefore, like any other father is, the Lord is visualized as the cosmic Father of a household called ‘creation’, the living world of which he is the guardian and caretaker like a normal father is for his family. Brahm is associated with Nature which is the cosmic form of the ‘household’ of the Supreme Being. Being the Father of this creation, Brahm has been taking care of it since the beginning of the world; he looks after it as any householder would look after his family. In other words, the Lord sustains, nourishes and takes care of this world ever since its creation. In this cosmic role he is called Lord Vishnu, and it is Lord Vishnu who has manifested himself as Lord Ram. So the link is easy to establish—Lord Ram is Lord Vishnu, who in turn is Brahm, the cosmic Father who created and sustains this entire creation.

²To wit, this creation originates in you and at the end of its tenure it merges in you. It is because you represent the Absolute Brahm, the cosmic Consciousness and the Truth of this creation. This ‘Truth’ exists before and after this visible world; it precedes and follows this world.

The best example to understand this phenomenon in this: The waves in the ocean rise from its surface, these waves then rise high into the sky, move for long distances, and when their energy is spent and time comes for rest the waves fall back into the same ocean from which they had risen, only to rise again after a time lapse. Likewise, this creation arises from Brahm, runs its course, and then collapses back into Brahm, only to remerge once again when sufficient energy is collected afresh.]

चराचराणां भूतानां बहिरन्तश्च राघव ।
व्याप्यव्यापकरूपेण भवान् भाति जगन्मयः ॥२१॥
त्वन्मायया हृतज्ञाना नष्टात्मानो विचेतसः । गतागतं प्रपद्यन्ते पापपुण्यवशात्सदा ॥ २२॥ carācarāṇāṃ bhūtānāṃ bahirantaśca rāghava । vyāpyavyāpakarūpeṇa bhavān bhāti jaganmayah ॥21॥ tvanmāyayā hṛtajñānā naṣṭātmāno vicetasah । gatāgataṃ prapadyante pāpapuṇyavaśātsadā ॥ 22॥

21-22. Oh Raghav (Lord Ram)! You pervade both inside and outside the whole creation consisting of the five elements (space, air, fire, water, earth). As a result, the whole universe appears to be a manifestation of your own self; it is an image of you¹ (21).

Those persons who are foolish, lowly, stupid and ignorant, those whose wisdom, intelligence and powers of discrimination have been eclipsed by delusions and the illusion-creating force called Maya, are constantly and repeatedly arriving and departing in this mortal gross world² (22).

[Note—¹To wit, you pervade uniformly in this creation; you are present both inside as well as outside this creation; there is nothing in this creation that escapes you. Since this creation is said to be constituted of the five basic elements known as space, air, fire, water and earth that form its building blocks, much like bricks are in any conventional building, it follows that these five elements are nothing but your five subtle forms via which you build each unit of this creation which has two aspects, viz. the invisible aspect and the visible aspect.

²Those persons who do not know the truth and reality of this creation, who do not know that the creation consists of nothing but these five elements operating in different ratios, with so many permutations and combinations that give rise to mind-boggling varieties of creatures, both animate and inanimate, in this world, think of themselves as somebody who has an independent existence, somebody having an identity and name of one's own. They forget that if they are subjected to fine analysis it would be found that they are a combination of these five elements, and nothing more. And, as has been stated herein above, these five elements are one or the other manifestations of the Lord's subtle forms.

This "Lord" refers to the cosmic Consciousness that lends the element of 'life' to this otherwise inane, inert and lifeless creation. This 'Consciousness' is a uniform entity; it neither takes birth nor dies. Hence, if one is self-realised and enlightened he would immediately understand that there is no question of a creature taking birth and dying. 'Birth' of creation at the macrocosmic level, and of the individual creature at the microcosmic level, happens when a particular set of circumstances bring together these five elements that interact and form bonds linking them together in different permutations and combinations. Likewise, 'death' occurs when, due to some reason, these bonds break and the elements fall apart.

So therefore, if a person becomes wise, self-realised and enlightened, he would understand that 'death' simply means that his 'true self', i.e. the pure consciousness that resides in his gross physical body consisting of the above mentioned five elements, has moved out from its present habitat, the gross physical body that 'dies', which means the bond between these five elements have broken and they have reverted to their original form, thereby freeing the consciousness from this cage. In the same manner, 'birth' means that the consciousness comes to live in a product produced by a combination of these five elements. That is all there is to it.]

तावत्सत्यं जगद्भाति शुक्तिकारजतं यथा ।
यावन्न ज्ञायते ज्ञानं चेतसानन्यगामिना ॥२३॥
त्वदज्ञानात्सदा युक्ताः पुत्रदारगृहादिषु । रमन्ते विषयान् सर्वानन्ते दुःखप्रदान् विभो ॥ २४॥ tāvatsatyam jagadbhāti śuktikārajataṁ yathā । yāvanna jñāyate jñānaṁ cetasānanyagāminā ॥23॥ tvadajñānātsadā yuktāḥ putradāragṛhādiṣu । ramante viṣayān sarvānante duḥkhapradān vibho ॥ 24॥

23-24. As long as (i.e. till the time) a person does not concentrate his faculties and realises your true form representing pure enlightenment, wisdom and truthful knowledge, as well as pure consciousness, it is only till then that he continues to regard this world as being true just like silver appears to line the inside of an oyster shell¹ (23).

Oh Vibho (i.e. the Lord who is omnipresent, almighty, all-pervading, magnanimous and eternal)! It is because the people are ignorant of you and your true form that they are engrossed in and infatuated or attached with their worldly relations such as sons, wives and their homestead etc. They mistakenly try to find happiness and peace in the objects of this material world, which ultimately gives them sorrows and anguish that have no end² (24).

[Note—¹The moonlight reflects from the oyster shell's inner layer and it appears to simmer with a silvery light, giving the impression that the shell is lined by a film of silver on its inside. But it is only an optical illusion.

²To wit, the real reason why the living being suffers from so much misery and grief in this world is that he is attracted towards and attached to this gross material world. This creates a chain of desires, a sense of possession, of jealousy and greed, and of grief at its loss.]

त्वमिन्द्रोऽग्निर्यमो रक्षो वरुणश्च तथानिलः ।
 कुबेरश्च तथा रुद्रस्त्वमेव पुरुषोत्तम ॥ २५॥
 त्वमणोरप्यणीयांश्च स्थूलात् स्थूलतरः प्रभो ।
 त्वं पिता सर्वलोकानां माता धाता त्वमेव हि ॥ २६॥ tvamindro'gniriyamo rakṣo varuṇaśca tathānilaḥ । kuberaśca tathā rudrastvameva puruṣottama ॥ 25॥ tvamaṇorapyāṇīyāṃśca sthūlāt sthūlataṛaḥ prabho । tvam pitā sarvalokānāṃ mātā dhātā tvameva hi ॥ 26॥

25-26. Oh 'Purshottam' (an address used for Lord Vishnu, the cosmic Male form of the Supreme Being; the Father of creation; literally meaning the Lord who is the most exalted and the best amongst all males)! You are Indra (the king of gods), the Agni (the patron god of fire), Yam (the patron god of death), Niruti (one of the many forms of Vishnu; the Lord who protects; the Lord of good luck), Varun (the patron god of water), Vayu (the wind god), Kuber (the treasurer of gods) and Rudra (one of the 11 forms of Shiva; the form of Shiva that brings an end of the existing world) (25).

Oh Lord! You are smaller than an atom, and larger than the greatest of universes. You are the Father and the Mother who not only nourishes this creation but who bears its burden too¹ (26).

[Note—¹It will be obvious that these present and preceding verses are describing the primary and cosmic form of Lord Ram, a form that is known as Brahm. This 'Brahm' is the supreme Consciousness that infuses or injects 'life' into this creation. Brahm, the cosmic Consciousness, is the only entity that actually matters in this creation, because if this 'consciousness' is removed from the world, nothing remains in it except lifeless floating bodies of inert gases and hard rocks, which are of no consequence or of any worth. There would be no 'life' in this creation if there is no 'consciousness' in it. This 'consciousness' at the individual level of a creature is called a Jiva, the living being or the creature, and at the cosmic level it is called Brahm, the Supreme Being, the Parmatma.

When applied to Lord Ram it means that the Lord is a manifested form, at the microcosmic level of creation, of the un-manifested Brahm that exists at the macrocosmic level of the same creation.

Further, in order to carry out different functions of creation smoothly, the same Brahm has manifested himself in different forms known by different names, such as Indra, Agni, Varun, Vayu, Kuber, Niruti etc. All of them are singly and jointly responsible for running the affairs of this creation.

These chief gods and junior gods are like the many ministers and courtiers and magistrates working under a great King; they act in the name of the King and hold authority at the pleasure of the King. Since the King cannot personally look after all the myriad functions of a large and extended kingdom, he delegates his royal authority to these office bearers who are all answerable to the King. The main objective in this arrangement is to ensure smooth working of the affairs of the kingdom. Likewise, Brahm is the King of this creation, and these many gods are his ministers, courtiers and magistrates authorized to carry out the duties of Brahm on his behalf.]

आदिमध्यान्तरहितः परिपूर्णोऽच्युतोऽव्ययः ।
त्वं पाणिपादरहितश्चक्षुःश्रोत्रविवर्जितः ॥ २७॥
श्रोता द्रष्टा गृहीता च जवनस्त्वं खरान्तक ।
कोशेभ्यो व्यतिरिक्तस्त्वं निर्गुणो निरुपाश्रयः ॥ २८॥ ādimadhyāntarahitaḥ paripūrṇo'cyuto'vyayaḥ । tvaṃ pāṇipādarahitaścakṣuḥśrotravivarjitaḥ ॥ 27॥ śrotā draṣṭā grahītā ca javanastvaṃ kharāntaka । kośebhyo vyatiriktastvaṃ nirguṇo nirupāśrayaḥ ॥ 28॥

27-28. You are without a beginning, a middle or an end; you are changeless, uniform, complete, eternal, imperishable and limitless. You do not have a physical body with limbs and various organs (such as hands, legs, eyes, nose etc.). [This clearly alludes to the cosmic form of Brahm that is invisible and formless.] (27).

But still, oh the slayer of the demon Khar (kharāntaka), you are the one who hears all, sees all, accepts all, and are very swift in your movement¹.

You are free from the trapping of the physical gross body consisting of the '5-Koshas'².

You are Nirgun (formless, without any attributes, invisible and immeasurable), and therefore you have no physical abode³ (28).

[Note—¹To wit, though you don't have a visible ear yet you hear everything that is said; though you don't have a physical eye yet you see everything.

Similarly, though you don't have a visible hand yet you accept everything offered to you; though you don't have a physical leg yet you can go wherever you please.

²The '5-Koshas' or the five sheaths that constitute a creature's gross body have been explained earlier when we were reading Canto 2, verse no. 39 of Adhyatma Ramayan in this section.

³To wit, the Lord's primary form is known as Brahm whose subtle and sublime form is cosmic Consciousness that pervades throughout this creation. On the other hand,

Brahm's less subtle form is manifested as the five elements, such as space, air, fire, water and earth. Since Brahm pervades in this creation uniformly by means of either of his many above mentioned forms, it cannot be said that he is present only in one specific place; Brahm is present everywhere uniformly, here and there; within and without.]

निर्विकल्पो निर्विकारो निराकारो निरीश्वरः ।
 षड्भावरहितोऽनादिः पुरुषः प्रकृतेः परः ॥ २९॥
 मायया गृह्यमाणस्त्वं मनुष्य इव भाव्यसे ।
 ज्ञात्वा त्वां निर्गुणमजं वैष्णवा मोक्षगामिनः ॥ ३०॥ nirvikalpo nirvikāro nirākāro nirīśvaraḥ । ṣaḍbhāvarahito'nādiḥ puruṣaḥ prakṛteḥ paraḥ ॥ 29॥ māyayā gr̥hyamāṇastvaṃ manuṣya iva bhāvyase । jñātvā tvāṃ nirguṇamajam vaiṣṇavā mokṣagāmināḥ ॥ 30॥

29-30. You have no parallel or alternative. You are eternal, limitless and faultless. You are without a form and attributes. You have no one who would order you to do anything, as you are the Supreme Lord of this creation. You are free from the so-called six emotions that the Consciousness gets associated with in this world¹. You are beyond Nature. And you are the eternal Purush² (29).

You appear to be an ordinary human because of the illusion created by your Maya (the delusion creating powers of the Lord). The Vaishnavs (those who worship Lord Vishnu and treat him as the supreme Lord who manifests in the form of various incarnations to rid the world of evil and vices) attain emancipation and salvation by worshipping you as the Lord who is Nirgun (without attributes) and who has no birth. [They worship the eternal Lord Vishnu who has no attributes.] (30).

[Note—¹ The 6 Vikaars or faults or shortcomings or imperfections of the body are the problems associated with this gross world that has a physical origin, takes a birth and ultimately ends or dies. Naturally they are not applicable to the supreme Lord who does not take birth and does not die. These so-called 'Vikars' can be classified in various ways as follows:-

Generally and broadly speaking, they are the (1) problems associated with birth, (2) problems associated with growth, (3) problems associated with consequences of deeds done and actions taken by a creature in this world, (4) problems associated with gradual decay and decline of the body and its functions, (5) problems associated with old age and its attendant horrors, and (6) problems associated with the ultimate destruction and end of everything that relates to the creature.

These six Vikaars or faults can also be interpreted as the six emotions that cause a fault in the otherwise immaculate nature of the Consciousness. they are the following—(i) The concept of 'birth or origin': When the Consciousness thinks that it has taken a birth as a creature it is tainted by the first fault. This is because it is eternal and imperishable; hence it has no birth or origin. (ii) The concept of 'decay or end': This is directly related to the first concept, i.e. since the Consciousness is eternal and infinite, there is no question of its end and decay. (iii) The concept of ‘development and growth’: Similarly, since Consciousness is uniform and unchanging, there is neither the question of its development or growth. (iv) The concept of ‘doing deeds’: Since the Consciousness has no physical body, it does no deeds. (v) The concept of ‘enjoying or suffering’: The Consciousness neither suffers nor enjoys anything as it is uniform and not attached to any sort of worldly emotions or material things. It also does not get involved in doing any deed, and consequentially it has nothing to feel elated or worry and feel sorry about the result of such deeds, good or bad. (vi) The concept of ‘I or Me or Mine’: Since Consciousness is different from the gross physical body of a creature that the world recognizes as the identity of a person, since this Consciousness is the true identity of an individual instead of his gross body, and since this Consciousness is detached from the gross physical world and its sense objects, a wise and enlightened person never says “I or Mine or Me”.

According to verse no. 18, Canto no. 3 of Maitreyu-panishad of Sam Veda, the 6 faults associated with a creature are—(i) birth and its attendant torments, (ii) existence and its accompanying problems, (iii) contradiction of the mind leading to unrest and perplexities, (iv) developments and their attendant problems, (v) decay, e.g., disease of the body, and (vi) destruction, e.g., death.

One will observe that the life of a creature is a continuous graph of sorrows, sufferings and pains of one or the other kind. It is only when the creature realises the truth of existence and who he really is that he begins to disassociate himself from the body and the world, and thus is able to break free from this seemingly interminable cycle of horrors. Refer Mudgal Upanishad, Canto 4, verse nos. 6-7 of Rig Veda tradition; Varaaha Upanishad, Canto 1 verse nos. 8-9 of Krishna Yajur Veda tradition; the Naradparivrajak Upanishad of Atharva Veda, Canto 7, verse no. 1; and Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, Lanka Kand, Canto 3, verse no. 29.

The Rig Veda’s Mudgal Upanishad, Canto 4, verse no. 6 enumerates the six great faults or flaws in the emotional setup of a creature—“(i) endearments; (ii) taking birth; (iii) to enhance, increase or develop; (iv) to change; (v) to decay, decompose, degenerate and become decrepit or to decline in stature, health, body, fame, development etc.; and (vi) destruction and annihilation (6).

The Rig Veda’s Mudgal Upanishad, Canto 4, verse no. 7 enumerates the six great faults or flaws, known as the ‘Urmies’, that torment the creature and cause him endless miseries and pain—“The 6 ‘Urmies’ (pains, afflictions, agonies and sorrows) of the creature are the following— (i) hunger; (ii) thirst; (iii) misery/grief; (iv) Moha (attachment, infatuation, ignorance, delusion); (v) old age; and (vi) death.”

The Param Hans Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, in its paragraph no. 6 affirms that a self-realised and enlightened Sanyasi who has achieved the exalted stature of Param Hans is free from the six faults called Urmis and Vikars.

The Naradparivrajak Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, in its Canto 7, verse no. 1 describes that a Sanyasi (a renunciate monk or mendicant or hermit or friar) must overcome the six Vikaars of his mind and should not allow them to create any consternation for him.

According to the Varaaha Upanishad, Canto 1, verse nos. 8-9 of the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition, there are six faults or six Urmis associated with all those entities that take a birth and have a gross body. Now let us examine them:-- “verse no. 8 = All those things that take a birth (and therefore die or perish, and hence are mortal and non-eternal and transitory) have six inherent faults or shortcomings of perception in them.

These faults are the following—(i) That there is an ‘Asti’—i.e. to be in existence. [This is a major fault because whatever that exists in this world is an illusion created by the mind just like the existence of water seen in a desert mirage, ghost in the dark, a serpent in the rope, change in the moon’s surface during the lunar cycle, two or more suns when seen as an image in more than one mirror, the sun or moon being devoured by some imaginary demon during eclipses, the rising or setting of the moon or the sun, etc. There is another interpretation of the term ‘existence’—it is the existence of ‘duality’, the conception that there are two independent entities such as the Jiva or the living creature and the Parmatma or the Supreme Being, or the conception of ‘you’ and ‘me’, or ‘this’ and ‘that’. This is against the fundamental tenet of Vedanta which lays stress on ‘non-duality’ of everything which briefly states that whatever that exists is but one single non-dual Brahm revealed in that form. Therefore, the concept of ‘Asti’ has an erroneous, a fallacious and ill-conceived foundation. Anything founded on errors of perception or misjudgment is bound to be faulty, distorted, and away from the reality and truth.

(ii) That there is a ‘Jaati’—i.e. birth. This relates to the conception that there is a birth and that things are freshly born or reborn again. [This is a fault also because of two reasons. One, if anything does not exist as asserted by the first clause, then the question of its being born or dying does not arise. And two, even if we were to treat everything as Brahm personified—because it would be difficult to deny things physically seen and witnessed—then it is forgotten that Brahm does not take a birth, for it is eternal, infinite, imperishable and the ‘one without a birth’. Therefore this very conception of having a birth has no sound footing; it is faulty. It is an upshot of faulty perception of the reality of Brahm and Truth.]

(iii) That there is a ‘Vardhan’—i.e. there is increase, enhancement, expansion, growth. This relates to the conception that an entity increases, enhances, grows or develops. [This is a fault because for one, ‘truth’ never grows and develops, it is always constant, universal, uniform and never changing; and two, ‘Brahm’ also does not grow or enhance or develop or in any way change because it is the ultimate Truth in creation, and ‘Truth’ does not change.]

(iv) That there is a ‘Parinaam’—i.e. result or consequence or effect or sequel. This relates to the conception that there is a sequel, a consequence, an affect, an upshot, an outcome, a result, a follow up or a fruit of certain deed that was done in the past. [This arises out of the fundamental error that one is the doer of anything, that therefore there is a consequence, a result or sequel of that deed—either good or bad—which cannot be avoided and must be either enjoyed or suffered. This is a fundamental error of conception because one is not a doer of anything because all deeds are done by the physical body which is not the ‘self’ of the person, for this ‘self’ is the pure consciousness called the Atma that lives as a distinct entity inside the body as its resident. Further, since there is no truth in what is seen in this world, the question of there being a birth, development and an end does not arise, and consequentially the question of anything being a Parinaam of any deed done in the past life also does not arise.]

(v) That there is a ‘Kshaya/Kchaya’—i.e. decay and decline. This relates to the conception that there is a stage called the last stage when there is decay and decline. [This is an error arising out of the pervious errors because anything that is eternal, infinite, imperishable and truthful, for instance Brahm, never decays or declines, nor does anything that really does not exist, like this illusionary world, can ever decay or decline. It is all imaginary, delusory and false.]

(vi) That there is a ‘Naash’—i.e. destruction and ruin. This relates to the conception that there is finally destruction or termination. [This fault is a derivative of the earlier faults.] (8).

“verse no. 9 = The six Urmis or faults of the body are the following—(i) ‘Ashanaaye’ or hunger, the need to eat, and therefore the need for food (along with all the accompanying problems such as worrying about its production, safety, storage, procurement, cooking, proper digestion etc.); (ii) Pipaasa or thirst, and the desire to drink and therefore the need for liquids to quench the thirst (which create the same sort of problems that are associated with the need for food; (iii) Shoka or grief, distress and dismay (which have a profound negative impact on the overall mental, psychological and general metabolic health of the body); (iv) Moha or to have strong attractions or longing for anything or anyone, to be emotionally attached with anything, to be deluded, to be held under magical spell of anything or to be under its charm, to hallucinate as a result of these emotional faults (all of which makes a man a virtual serf of his emotions and tied down to the object of his adoration, thereby robbing him of his independence and peace, and more often than not becoming the cause of his interminable sufferings); (v) Jaraa or old age and its attendant decline of the body leading to its decrepit and weakened physical state when the body loses its strength, vigour and stamina, thereby becoming a burden on the person; and finally (vi) Mritu or death of the body. All these factors create an immense amount of discomfort and horrors to the person (i.e. to the Atma that is the true identity of the person) to whom this body belongs. [In other words, as long as the person continues to have the erroneous conception that this body is

Then there are six Koshas or coverings or structural features of the body. Now I shall tell you about them. [The Koshas are listed in verse no. 10.] (9).

There also other six faults that are considered as enemies of a man—Kaam (worldly passions, lust, desires and yearning), Krodha (anger, indignation, wrathfulness, vengeance, seeking retribution, leading to spite and ill temper), Lobha (greed and rapacity), Moha (ignorance based delusions, worldly infatuations, attractions and attachments), Mada (egoism, arrogance, haughtiness and hypocrisy) and Matsarya (envy, jealousy, malice, anger and wrath)—refer Mudgal Upanishad, Canto 4, verse no. 4 of Rig Veda tradition; and Varaaha Upanishad, Canto 1, verse no. 10 of the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition.

According to Mudgal Upanishad, 4/7 of the Rig Veda tradition, the six delusions, called ‘Urmi’, that create fear, sorrows, agonies, sufferings and pains to a creature are the following:--(1) hunger, (2) thirst, (3) grief, (4) Moha (worldly attachments, illusions, entrapments), (5) horrors of old age, and (6) death.

²Here the word “Purush” refers to the Viraat Purush, the cosmic Male, the Supreme Being who is known as the Father of creation. It also refers to Lord Vishnu, the cosmic manifestation of Brahm, and the Lord who had revealed himself in a human form as Lord Ram.]

अहं त्वत्पादसद्भक्तिनिःश्रेणीं प्राप्य राघव ।
 इच्छामि ज्ञानयोगारूढ्यं सौधमारोढुमीश्वर ॥ ३१॥
 नमः सीतापते राम नमः कारुणिकोत्तम ।
 रावणारे नमस्तुभ्यं त्राहि मां भवसागरात् ॥ ३२॥
 ततः प्रसन्नः प्रोवाच श्रीरामो भक्तवत्सलः ।
 वरं वृणीष्व भद्रं ते वाञ्छितं वरदोऽस्म्यहम् ॥ ३३॥

aham tvatpādasadbhaktiniḥśreṇīm prāpya rāghava । icchāmi jñānayogākhyam saudhamāroḍhumīśvara ॥ 31॥ namaḥ sītāpate rāma namaḥ kāruṇikottama । rāvaṇāre namastubhyaṁ trāhi mām bhavasāgarāt ॥ 32॥ tataḥ prasannaḥ provāca śrīrāmo bhaktavatsalaḥ । varam vṛṇīṣva bhadraṁ te vāñchitaṁ varado'smyaham ॥ 33॥

31-33. Oh Raghav (rāghava); oh Lord (īśvara)! I wish to climb up the stairs (or steps of the ladder) represented by having pure ‘Bhakti’ for your lotus-like holy feet so, that by-and-by, I can reach the pinnacle of the royal palace called ‘Gyan Yoga’.

[To wit, I wish to have pure devotion for your holy feet and worship you as a means of attaining a higher level of spiritual awareness that comes with enlightenment and self-realisation. This would help me to coordinate all my spiritual efforts for the final realization of blessedness, bliss and beatitude, which in turn would grant my soul eternity, and provide me with liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation.] (31).

Oh the best among those who are merciful, munificent, benevolent and compassionate (kāruṇikottama)! Oh Sita's husband Lord Sri Ram (sītāpate rāma)! I repeatedly bow reverentially before you (namaḥ -- namaḥ). Oh the slayer and the vanquisher of Ravana (rāvaṇāre)! I bow before you and reverentially pray to you (namastubhyaṁ). I am suffering from the horrors and torments of this mundane world which is like an ocean difficult to cross; please save me from being drowned in this ocean (trāhi mām bhavasāgarāt) (32).’

Then Lord Sri Ram, who is endearing, munificent and benevolent towards his devotees and passionately loves them (śrīrāmo bhaktavatsalaḥ), felt very happy, and said to Vibhishan delightedly, 'Oh Vibhishan! You be blessed. I wish to give you a boon. So ask for whatever you desire' (33).

[Note—It has been clearly established in verse no. 31 that devotion and worship are merely steps to climb up the ladder leading up to Gyan—which is self realisation, enlightenment and wisdom as well as acquisition of true knowledge about the reality. Hence, the Bhakti is a means to attain Gyan, and not an end in itself.]

विभीषण उवाच ।

धन्योऽस्मि कृतकृत्योऽस्मि कृतकार्योऽस्मि राघव ।
 त्वत्पाददर्शनादेव विमुक्तोऽस्मि न संशयः ॥ ३४॥
 नास्ति मत्सदृशो धन्यो नास्ति मत्सदृशः शुचिः ।
 नास्ति मत्सदृशो लोके राम त्वन्मूर्तिदर्शनात् ॥ ३५॥

vibhīṣaṇa uvāca ।
 dhanyo'smi kṛtakṛtyo'smi kṛtakāryo'smi rāghava । tvatpādadarśanādeva vimukto'smi na saṁśayaḥ ॥ 34॥ nāsti matsadrśo dhanyo nāsti matsadrśaḥ śuciḥ । nāsti matsadrśo loka rāma tvanmūrtidarśanāt ॥ 35॥

34-35. Vibhishan was overwhelmed with gratitude towards Lord Ram. He replied, 'Oh Raghav (Lord Ram)! I am indeed extremely blessed, privileged and fortunate; I have attained the rewards of all my good actions and virtuous deeds. Forsooth, I feel fully satisfied and contented, and whatever I had ever desired (or was destined to get) I have got them all. I have already become emancipated and liberated from the shackles of this mundane world by the virtue of having a 'Darshan' of your holy feet. [Oh Lord, since I have been blessed by the good fortune of being able to have a divine glimpse of your holy feet, I have had all that I desired for in my life. So therefore, there is nothing more left for me to desire.] There is no doubt about it (34).

Oh Lord Ram! There is no one more privileged, more fortunate and more blessed than me because I have had the Darshan of your beautiful, attractive, charming and magnificent image. Now there is no one in this world who can compare himself with me. [To wit, in all sooth and without gainsay, how fortunate and lucky I am indeed! Say, oh Lord, what would I want after this rarest of rare reward? Surely nothing!] (35).

कर्मबन्धविनाशाय त्वज्ज्ञानं भक्तिलक्षणम् ।
 त्वद्ध्यानं परमार्थं च देहि मे रघुनन्दन ॥ ३६॥
 न याचे राम राजेन्द्र सुखं विषयसम्भवम् । त्वत्पादकमले सक्ता भक्तिरेव सदास्तु मे ॥ ३७॥ karmabandhavināśāya tvajjñānaṁ bhaktilakṣaṇam । tvaddhyānaṁ paramārthaṁ ca dehi me raghunandana ॥ 36॥ na yāce rāma rājendra sukhaṁ viṣayasambhavam । tvatpādakamale saktā bhaktireva sadāstu me ॥ 37॥

36-37. [Now Vibhishan makes his request—] Oh Raghunandan (literally, the illustrious son in the family of king Raghu; i.e. Lord Ram)! In order to destroy the fetters that bind me to my deeds and actions in this world, give me, as a blessing or boon, your 'Bhakti' (the grand virtues of devotion, worship, dedication, adoration, reverence, fellowship and follower-ship) which can lead me to achieve enlightenment, wisdom and true knowledge about you as well as help me meditate/concentrate and focus my mind and its attention on your spiritual and non-worldly form (i.e. attain 'Gyan Yoga')¹ (36).

Oh the King of kings, Lord Sri Ram (rāma rājendra)! I do not desire any happiness or comfort arising out of the worldly sense objects that pertain to this mundane, materialistic world. My only desire is that I must have abiding love, devotion, affection, reverence, dedication, adoration and faith in your lotus-like feet.' (37).

[Note—¹In verse no. 31 herein above we have read that “Bhakti is a ladder that leads to Gyan Yoga”. This is what Vibhishan alludes to here.]

ओमित्युक्त्वा पुनः प्रीतो रामः प्रोवाच राक्षसम् ।
शृणु वक्ष्यामि ते भद्रं रहस्यं मम निश्चितम् ॥ ३८॥
मद्भक्तानां प्रशान्तानां योगिनां वीतरागिणाम् । हृदये सीतया नित्यं वसाम्यत्र न संशयः ॥ ३९॥ omityuktvā punaḥ prīto rāmaḥ provāca rākṣasam । śṛṇu vakṣyāmi te bhadraṁ rahasyaṁ mama niścitam ॥ 38॥ madbhaktānāṁ praśāntānāṁ yogināṁ vītarāgiṇām ।

hr̥daye sītayā nityaṁ vasāmyatra na saṁśayaḥ ॥ 39॥

38-39. Saying 'so be it (omityuktvā)¹', Lord Ram became pleased with that demon named Vibhishan, and said to him affectionately, 'Oh gentleman (bhadraṁ)! Listen. I shall tell you one of my most certain tenets, a secret principle known only to a blessed few (rahasyaṁ mama niścitam) (38).

There is no doubt that I, along with Sita, reside in the heart of my devotees who have a tranquil, placid, serene and calm mind (madbhaktānāṁ praśāntānāṁ), who are dispassionate and detached from this mundane and deluding world consisting of materialistic objects (vītarāgiṇām), and are deeply involved in practicing Yoga (meditation, contemplation and concentration on my true form and their own true self—“yoginām”) (39).

[Note—¹The monosyllabic word “Om” is used as a prefix to invoke the authority and power of Brahm, the Supreme Being, while blessing Vibhishan. It is because Om is a synonym for Brahm, and by invoking this word a seal of divine intervention is affixed on the blessing granted by Lord Ram to Vibhishan. It means that what the Lord says cannot be undone.]

तस्मात्त्वं सर्वदा शान्तः सर्वकल्मषवर्जितः ।
मां ध्यात्वा मोक्षयसे नित्यं घोरसंसारसागरात् ॥ ४०॥
स्तोत्रमेतत्पठेद्यस्तु लिखेद्यः शृणुयादपि । मत्प्रीतये ममाभीष्टं सारूप्यं समवाप्नुयात् ॥ ४१॥ tasmāttvaṁ sarvadā śāntaḥ sarvakalmaṣavarjitaḥ । māṁ dhyātvā mokṣyase nityaṁ ghorasaṁsārasāgarāt ॥ 40॥ stotrametatpaṭhedyastu likhedyah śṛṇuyādapi । matprīṭaye mamābhiṣṭaṃ sārūpyaṃ samavāpnuyāt ॥ 41॥

40-41. Hence, by remembering and concentrating on me, by always remaining peaceful, serene, calm, tranquil and placid, as well as being sinless and keeping away from vices, misdeeds, bad thoughts, misdemeanours and unrighteousness of all kinds, you will be able to cross this formidable world-like ocean, and attain emancipation and salvation (which is your desire—see verse nos. 31-32) (40).

Those persons who read, write or hear this Stotra (hymn or prayer of Vibhishan) to please me, attain the exalted stature of being one with me (i.e., they merged their soul with me)' (41).

इत्युक्त्वा लक्ष्मणं प्राह श्रीरामो भक्तभक्तिमान् ।
 पश्यत्विदानीमेवैष मम सन्दर्शने फलम् ॥ ४२॥
 लङ्काराज्येऽभिषेक्ष्यामि जलमानय सागरात् ।
 यावत्त्वन्द्रश्च सूर्यश्च यावत्तिष्ठति मेदिनी ॥ ४३॥
 यावन्मम कथा लोके तावद्राज्यं करोत्वसौ ।
 इत्युक्त्वा लक्ष्मणेनाम्बु ह्यानाय कलशेन तम् ॥ ४४॥
 लङ्काराज्याधिपत्यार्थमभिषेकं रमापतिः । कारयामास सचिवैर्लक्ष्मणेन विशेषतः ॥ ४५॥ ityuktvā lakṣmaṇaṃ prāha śrīrāmo bhaktabhaktimān । paśyatvidānīmevaiṣa mama sandarśane phalam ॥ 42॥ laṅkārajye'bhiṣekṣyāmi jalamānaya sāgarāt । yāvaccandraśca sūryaśca yāvattiṣṭhati medinī ॥ 43॥ yāvanmama kathā loke tāvadrājyaṃ karotvasau । ityuktvā lakṣmaṇenāmbu hyānāya kalaśena tam ॥ 44॥ laṅkārajyādhityārthamabhiṣekaṃ ramāpatiḥ । kārayāmāsa sacivairlakṣmaṇena viśeṣataḥ ॥ 45॥

42-45. Having said this to Vibhishan, Lord Ram told Laxman, 'Oh Laxman! Have you seen (observed) the fruit or the reward of having my Darshan? (42).

Bring some water from the ocean—I shall anoint Vibhishan on the throne of Lanka right now. As long as the sun, the moon and the earth exist, and as long as my stories are narrated in this world, he shall rule over the kingdom of Lanka!

Saying so, Ramapati (literally the 'husband of Laxmi'; i.e. Lord Vishnu in his incarnation as Lord Ram) had Laxman bring water of the ocean in a pitcher and got him (Vibhishan) anointed on the throne of Lanka by his ministers, and specially by Laxman (who was acting on the behalf of Lord Ram) (43-45).

[Note—It is to be remarked here that Lord Ram did not perform the anointment ceremony himself but got it done through Laxman who was acting on his behalf. At the time of Surgiv's anointment in Kishkindha, Sri Ram had found an excuse that he cannot go to a city for the remaining of the 14 year exile period. But there were no such constraints here at the ocean shore. He could have done the anointment himself. The plausible reasons are—(i) Since only a king is empowered to anoint someone when he conquers another kingdom, Sri Ram could not do so for 14 years of exile period when he was not a king. (ii) He wanted Laxman to have importance in the hierarchy so that his orders are given due weight during the forthcoming conflict. (iii) To tell Laxman subtly that he gives him a lot of strategic importance besides love and affection.

In Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede Doha no. 49 too we read that Lord Ram had anointed Vibhishan as the next king of Lanka.

Lord Ram did this to assure Vibhishan that he means what he says—i.e. he will surely restore his rights and dignity back to him by appointing him the next king of Lanka once the war is won, its incumbent king Ravana eliminated, and Sita was freed. From the point of view of military strategy too it was well-planned by Lord Ram to gain unflinching allegiance and solid loyalty of Vibhishan, because the latter saw his only hope if he remained loyal to Lord Ram during the war vis-à-vis his brother Ravana who had kicked him out of Lanka, insulting and totally disinheriting him. So, if Ravana survived, Vibhishan would be doomed; on the other hand if Lord Ram prevails, he would get back his lost honour and rights to the throne.

Therefore, what little uncertainty may have lingered in the mind of Vibhishan as to the side he should be loyal to, the matter was settled in favour of Lord Ram for good.]

साधु साध्विति ते सर्वे वानरास्तुष्टुवर्भृशम् ।
सुग्रीवोऽपि परिष्वज्य विभीषणमथाब्रवीत् ॥ ४६॥
विभीषण वयं सर्वे रामस्य परमात्मनः ।
किङ्करास्तत्र मुख्यस्त्वं भक्त्या रामपरिग्रहात् । रावणस्य विनाशे त्वं साहाय्यं कर्तुमर्हसि ॥ ४७॥

sādhū sādhwiti te sarve vānarāstuṣṭuvurbhṛśam । sugrīvo'pi pariṣvajya vibhīṣaṇamathābravīt ॥ 46॥ vibhīṣaṇa vayaṁ sarve rāmasya paramātmanah । kiṅkarāstatra mukhyastvaṁ bhaktyā rāmaparigrahāt । rāvaṇasya vināśe tvaṁ sāhāyyaṁ kartumarhasi ॥ 47॥

46-47. At that time, all the monkeys, who were witnessing the interaction between Lord Ram and Vibhishan, felt very happy and elated at this benevolent gesture and noble outlook of Lord Ram. They exclaimed unanimously, 'It is so great; it is indeed so noble and great for the Lord'!

Sugriv embraced Vibhishan and said (46), 'Oh Vibhishan! All of us are servants (devotees, followers, subordinates) of Lord Ram who is Parmatma (supreme Soul; the Lord God) personified. Still, you are the chief amongst us because you have taken his shelter and sought refuge with him out of your pure devotion for him (see verse nos. 31-32) (whereas I have sought his refuge due to my self interest)¹. Now, you should help us to destroy (i.e. kill or overcome) Ravana.' (47).

[Note—¹Though both Sugriv and Vibhishan had taken shelter or sought protection from Sri Ram because both were tormented by their respective brothers, but there is a slight difference. Sugriv had never given Baali a chance to see reason and surrender before Sri Ram. In fact, Sugriv wished to avenge Baali because he had thrown him out of the kingdom and had kept his wife. On the other hand, Vibhishan had tried his best to make Ravana see reason and had tried to rationalise with him but was instead publicly rebuffed by Ravana.

Further, Ravana had treated Vibhishan's wife Sarma with due respect behooving her status as his sister-in-law, and this was not the reason for Vibhishan surrendering to Sri Ram. Though it is true that Sugriv had shown a lot of wisdom after Baali was slayed and had wished to renounce the kingdom, but that was after he had squared up his account with his brother. When both Sugriv and Vibhishan are put on the scale, it tends to tilt more in favour of the latter than the former in this particular aspect, though both were betrayers of their respective brothers. But their reasons for such betrayal were different.

Another point is this: Vibhishan was a noble soul from the very beginning and he had asked for 'wisdom and righteous thinking' as a boon from Brahma when he was pleased by the former's Tapa (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 18-19). Once again, he sought 'Bhakti and Gyan' as well as deliverance from this mundane world of transmigration as a boon from Lord Ram himself (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 31-32).

Sugriv's life has no such episode; he sought Lord Ram's support only to square up his personal account of revenge with his brother Baali (apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 45-73, and Canto 2, verse nos. 2-7).

Hence, we conclude that Vibhishan was a better devotee of Lord Ram as compared to Sugriv.]

विभीषण उवाच ।

अहं कियान् सहायत्वे रामस्य परमात्मनः ।

किं तु दास्यं करिष्येऽहं भक्त्या शक्त्या ह्यमायया ॥ ४८॥

vibhīṣaṇa uvāca ।

ahaṃ kiyān sahāyatve rāmasya paramātmānaḥ ।

kiṃ tu dāsyam kariṣye'haṃ bhaktyā śaktyā hyamāyayā ॥ 48॥

48-49. Vibhishan joyously exclaimed, 'What, and how, can I be of any help to Lord Ram who is the supreme Soul (Parmatma, the Lord God himself)! Still I shall do my best to honestly serve the Lord and render whatever service I can for the Lord, without having any sort of deceit, conceit and craft in my mind and heart' (48).

-----**-----

Section 9.4: Geetawali Ramayan

{Geetawali Ramayan, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 23-45.}

This episode of Vibhishan coming to surrender before Lord Ram and seeking refuge and shelter with the Lord, and the amiable way he was welcomed by Lord Ram and cheerfully accepted by him as one of his own ministers and devotees has been beautifully and poetically narrated by Goswami Tulsidas in his classic 'Geetawali Ramayan', in its Sundar Kand, verse nos. 23-45. As is the usual pattern adopted by Tulsidas while writing Geetawali Ramayan, the focus here is on the depth of devotion which Vibhishan had for the Lord, and it being the sole reason why he was accepted by the Lord without asking any further questions.

Details of why Vibhishan was forced to leave Lanka and join Lord Ram's camp have been narrated in verse nos. 23-25; his state of mind as he quitted Lanka, full of hope of finding refuge and succour with Lord Ram, is described in verse nos. 26-30; his arrival at Lord Ram's camp and the discussions that were quickly held between the Lord and his advisors as to the wisdom and the prudence of admitting him, with the Lord deciding in Vibhishan's favour and welcoming him warmly is narrated in verse nos. 31-35; the actual meeting of the Lord with Vibhishan and how the latter was dumb-founded and emotionally exhilarated by the warmth and affection with which he was received by Lord Ram which made Vibhishan regard himself as the most fortunate being in this world is narrated in verse nos. 36-45.

So, now let us start reading Geetawali Ramayan and see how it describes this episode of Vibhishan being accepted by Lord Ram in his camp.

रावणकी मन्त्रणा
राग आसावरी

(5 / 23)

आए देखि दूत, सुनि सोच सठ—मनमैं।
बाहर बजावैं गाल, भालु कपि कालबस।
मोसो बीरसों चहत जीत्यो रारि रनमैं॥ 1॥
राम छाम, लरिका लषन, बालि—बालकहि, घालिको गनत ? रीछ जल ज्यों न घनमैं।
काजको न कपिराज, कायर कपिसमाज, मेरे अनुमान हनुमान हरिगनमैं॥ 2॥
समय सयानी मृदु बानी रानी कहै पिय !
पावक न होइ जातुधान बेनु—बनमैं।
तुलसी जानकी दिए, स्वामीसों, सनेह किये कुसल, नतरु सब हैहै छार छनमैं॥ 3॥

rāvaṇakī mantraṇā

rāga āsāvarī

(5/23)

ā'e dēkhi dūta, suni sōca saṭha-manamaim̐.
bāhara bajāvaim̐ gāla, bhālu kapi kālabasa.
mōsō bīrasōm̐ cahata jītyō rāri ranamaim̐.. 1..
rāma chāma, larikā laṣana, bāli-bālakahi, ghālikō ganata? rīcha jala jyōm̐ na ghanamaim̐.
kājakō na kapirāja, kāyara kapisamāja, mērē anumāna hanumāna hariganamairṁ.. 2..

 samaya sayānī mṛdu bānī rānī kahai piya!
 pāvaka na hō'i jātudhāna bēnu-banamairṁ.
 tulasī jānakī di'ē, svāmīsōm, sanēha kiyē kusala, nataru saba hvaihai chāra chanamairṁ.. 3..

Ravana's Council-I

Verse no. 5/23—[When Lord Ram's formidable army landed on the soil of Lanka, Ravana summoned his ministers and sought their advice for the next course of action. All of them were flatterers and sycophants, telling Ravana what he wished to hear instead of giving him wise council. Then his wife Mandodari tried to dissuade him from entering into a bloody war for senseless cause, against a formidable enemy with which he has no chance to win.

These developments are also narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 8.]

Ravana's spies had come back after seeing (during their reconnaissance mission) Sri Ram's army¹. Hearing their report, that hypocrite and wicked fellow was worried internally, but overtly he boasted, 'Ah! Impelled by death, these bears and monkeys want to get victory in battle over a brave and valorous one like me!² (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 51—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 56.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 56—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 57.]

Lord Sri Ram is emaciated (because of sorrows of Sita's separation); Laxman is still a boy; the son of Baali (Angad) is ruinous and fatal for his own clan (because he is taking sides with Sugriv, his uncle, who had got his father Baali killed): who bothers about him; Jamvant (the aged bear chief) is impotent or inconsequential like a rainless cloud (because of his old age); Sugriv has no stature (because he is a betrayer of his own brother and got him killed due to his greed for the crown); and the whole of the monkey community is coward.

Yes, in my opinion, there is only one monkey among them all who is really brave and full of valour—and that is Hanuman! (2).

Tulsidas says that at this opportunity, the most wise queen Mandodari spoke with a sweet voice, 'My dear! Do not become a fire in the forest of bamboo represented by the demons. [To wit, like a single spark of fire readily destroys a forest of bamboo trees, likewise your single stubbornness would destroy the entire demon race. Say, what sense is in it?]

It is wise to return Sita back to Sri Ram and make peace with him. Otherwise, everything would soon be ruined in a fraction of a moment.³ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8.]

आपनी आपनी भाँति सब काहू कही है ।
 मंदोदरी, महोदर, मालवान महामति, राजनीति पहुँच जहाँलौं जाकी रही है ॥ 1 ॥
 महामद—अंध दसकंध न करत कान,
 मीचु—बस नीच हठि कुगहनि गही है ।
 हँसि कहै, सचिव सयाने मोसों यों कहत, चहै मेरु उड़न, बड़ी बयारि बही है ॥ 2 ॥
 भालु, नर बानर अहार निसिचरनिको, सोऊ नृप—बालकनि माँगि धारि लही है ।
 देखो कालकौतुक, पिपीलिकनि पंख लागो, भाग मेरे लोगनिके भई चित—चही है ॥ 3 ॥
 'तोसो न तिलोक आजु साहस, समाज—साजु, महाराज—आयसु भो जोई, सोई सही है' । तुलसी प्रनामकै बिभीषन बिनती करै,
 'ख्याल बेधे ताल, कपि केलि लंका दही है' ॥ 4 ॥

(5/24)

āpanī āpanī bhāṁti saba kāhū kahī hai.
 mandōdarī, mahōdara, mālavāna mahāmati, rājanīti pahuṁca jahāṁlauṁ jākī rahī hai.. 1..
 mahāmada-andha dasakandha na karata kāna, mīcu-basa nīca haṭhi kugahani gahī hai.
 haṁsi kahai, saciva sayānē mōsōm yōm kahata, cahai mēru urāna, baṛī bayāri bahī hai.. 2..
 bhālu, nara bānara ahāra nisicaranikō, sō'ū nṛpa-bālakani māṁgi dhāri lahī hai.
 dēkhō kālakautuka, pipīlikani paṅkha lāgō, bhāga mērē lōganikē bha'ī cita-cahī hai.. 3..
 'tōsō na tilōka āju sāhasa, samāja-sāju, mahārāja-āyasu bhō jō'ī, sō'ī sahī hai'.
 tulasī pranāmakai bibhīṣana binatī karai,
 'khyāla bēdhē tāla, kapi kēli laṅkā dahī hai'.. 4..

Ravana's Council-II

Verse no. 5/24—Mandodari as well as Mahodar and the most wise Malyawan etc.¹ all tried to make Ravana see reason as well as they could, according to their best judgment and wisdom, and as far as they were proficient in the science of politics and persuasion. [But to no avail as Ravana rebuked them all.]¹ (1).

[¹Mandodari = Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8; (ii) from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 16; (iii) Doha no. 35 kha—to Doha no. 37; (b) Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/17—6/29.

Prahasta = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Doha no. 8—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 10.

Malyawan = (a) Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 40; (ii) Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 48—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 49; (b) Kavitawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 5/21—5/22.]

But, blinded as he was by his haughtiness, ego, hypocrisy and vanity, Ravana did not listen (and pay heed) to any of their advice. That wicked rascal, being under the spell of imminent death (and impelled or instigated by it), willingly followed the path of unrighteousness (which would lead to his ruin and disaster for the whole demon race).

He laughed and said derisively, ‘Ah! Our clever ministers (advisors) appear to suggest that a strong wind (gale, storm) is blowing, and so the Sumeru mountain² can blow away by its force! (2).

[²Here, Ravana compares him to Mt. Sumeru, the huge mountain on earth where the Gods have their terrestrial abode. He means that just like it is impossible for a storm, no matter how strong it blows, to shift this mighty mountain, so it is also impossible for this seemingly huge army of Lord Ram to do any harm to him or his demon army.]

Indeed, monkeys and humans are staple food of the demons by nature. Besides this, these princes have a borrowed army³.

[³To wit, Ram’s army consists of monkeys and bears who owe their allegiance to Sugriv, the betrayer of his own brother. This army does not belong to Ayodhya whence I could have thought it to be loyal to its prince Sri Ram. How can this ‘borrowed army’ be loyal to the two brothers Ram and Laxman when they find that they are sure to be annihilated in the battle field, fighting someone else’s war? They are sure to run away fearing for their own safety and families. They are not fighting for their own sake or for their own king; after all, the two brothers are strangers for their kingdom. What serious interest would this army have in the battle?]

Look at the marvel of Kaal (death, time, circumstance) that even ants have got wings⁴!

[⁴Here, Ravana compares the monkeys and bears to the humble ants; when the time for the ants come to die they develop wings so that they rush to a flame only to burn themselves to death.]

It is due to my luck that the people (i.e. the demons who are my subjects; the citizens of Lanka) have got what they desired (i.e. now they can have a good meal by devouring monkeys, bears and these two princes and douse their fire of hunger).’ (3).

Tulsidas says that it was then that Vibhishan intervened, bowed his head reverentially and said, ‘Oh great king! Really it is true that there is no one like you in the three Lokas (i.e. the terrestrial, the subterranean and the celestial worlds) who has as much courage and strength, and a strong army as you have. It will be done as you order (or wish). But, please be practical and weigh the strength of the opposite side as well—for, he (Sri Ram) had pierced the seven (tall and robust) coconut trees by a mere wish (at the time preceding Baali’s death), and the monkey Hanuman had reduced Lanka to ashes almost playfully (i.e. without the least effort). [Therefore, the enemy is not easy to be overcome as you imagine him to be.]’⁴ (4).

[⁴Vibhishan's entreaty to Ravana is continued in the next verse no. 5/25.]

(5 / 25)

दूसरो न देखतु साहिब सम रामै ।
 बेदऊ पुरान, कबि-कोबिद बिरद-रत, जाको जसि सुनत गावत गुन-ग्रामै ॥ 1 ॥
 माया-जीव, जग-जाल, सुभाउ, करम-काल, सबको सासकु, सब मै, सब जामै ।
 बिधि-से करनिहार, हरि से पालनिहार, हर-से हरनिहार जपै जाके नामै ॥ 2 ॥
 सोइ नरबेष जानि, जनकी बिनती मानि, मतो नाथ सोई, जातें भलो परिनामै ।
 सुभट-सिरोमनि कुठारपानि सारिखेहू लखी औ लखाई, इहाँ किए सुभ सामै ॥ 3 ॥
 बचन-बिभूषन बिभीषन-बचन सुनि
 लागे दुख दूषन-से दाहिनेउ बामै ।
 तुलसी हुमकि हिये हन्यो लाता, 'भले तात', चलयो सुरतरु ताकि तजि घोर धामै ॥ 4 ॥

(5/25)

dūsarō na dēkhatā sāhiba sama rāma.
 bēda purāna, kabi-kōbida birada-rata, jākō jasi sunata gāvata guna-grāmai.. 1..
 māyā-jīva, jaga-jāla, subhā'u, karama-kāla, sabakō sāsaku, saba maim, saba jāmaim.
 bidhi-sē karanihāra, hari sē pālanihāra, hara-sē haranihāra japaim jākē nāmaim.. 2..
 sō'i narabēṣa jāni, janakī binatī māni, matō nātha sō'i, jātēm bhalō parināmaim.
 subhaṭa-sirōmani kuṭhārapāni sārīkhēhū lakhī au lakhā'i, ihāñ ki'ē subha sāmaim.. 3.. bacana-bibhūṣana bibhīṣana-bacana suni lāgē dukha dūṣana-sē dāhinē'u bāmaim.
 tulasī humaki hiyē han'yō lātā, 'bhalē tāta', calyō surataru tāki taji ghōra dhāmaim.. 4..

Ravana's Council-III

Verse no. 5/25—[Vibhishan was the younger brother of Ravana, and as destiny would have it and as an example of paradoxes in creation, he was a pious soul and a devotee of Lord Vishnu, about whom he had got a wind that the Lord has manifested as Lord Ram, instead of his being cruel and inimical to Gods like the rest of his race. The reason is that very long ago when the three demon brothers, Ravana, Kumbhakaran and Vibhishan, had done severe Tapa (penances and austerities) to please Brahma, the creator, the latter appeared before them and asked them to seek a boon about whatever they desired. While Ravana sought invincible powers to rule the world, Kumbhakaran sought a ridiculous boon that he should enjoy sleeping for months on end, and finally Vibhishan sought unwavering devotion for Lord Vishnu so that when the time comes to leave this mortal body and die he can find emancipation and salvation for his soul and free it from the horrors of living in a demon's body. Brahma granted their will. This is how Vibhishan became an ardent devotee of Lord Ram whom he knew to be Lord Hari in a human form.

The origin of the three brothers and their subsequent Tapa and acquiring their desired wishes has been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 176—to Doha no. 177.

The fact that Vibhishan was a great devotee of Lord Ram is highlighted in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 8 when Hanuman meets him during the search for Sita.

Now, Vibhishan did not want ruin to come to the whole family and the entire demon race because of the reckless and non-sensical behaviour of one individual, Ravana, especially when the cause of all mischief is highly sinful, degrading, unrighteous and unethical, such as kidnapping someone's wife and forcibly keeping her captive, and trying to force oneself on her. Hence, he tried his best to persuade his brother to come to his senses and return Sita to her husband to avoid the calamity that stares on the face of the entire demon race. But as Destiny had different plans already chalked out to get rid of the cruel demons, Ravana's intellect and wisdom went for a toss; he wouldn't listen to anyone, and anyone who talked of making peace with Lord Ram and return his wife to him was deemed to be a traitor by him, and charged with sedition that deserved severe punishment.

In the present verse no. 5/25 we read how Vibhishan tried to convince Ravana to make peace with Lord Ram.

The earnest request by Vibhishan to Ravana to make peace with Lord Ram was taken in the wrong light by Ravana who regarded this plea as high treason and sedition, and therefore he not only rejected it but vented his ire on his brother by kicking Vibhishan in the chest for taking sides with his enemy, whereat Vibhishan abandoned Lanka and took refuge with Lord Ram where he was warmly welcome. Besides the present book Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 5/25—5/46, these developments are also narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 49.]

[Vibhishan tried to plead with Ravana to make peace with Lord Ram. He prayed—]

‘There is no other more exalted Lord in sight than Lord Sri Ram anywhere in the world, the Lord whose great fame, immense glories, magnificent virtues, noble deeds and excellent characters are being incessantly sung by the Vedas, Purans (i.e. the ancient scriptures and histories), the Bards (scribes and other narrators of the landmark events of the past) and the Wise Ones (i.e. sages, hermits, seers, mystics etc.) (1).

He (Lord Ram) is the ruler (sovereign, controller, Lord) of māyā (worldly delusions), jīva (living beings; the creatures of this creation), jaga-jāla (the deluding and entrapping web of mundane existence in this mortal world), subhā'u (one's inherent tendencies, habits, inclinations, nature), karama (all the deeds and actions undertaken by a creature) and kāla (factors of time, circumstance, death); he is all-pervading, omnipresent and all encompassing, being present in each individual unit of this creation (saba mair̥m, saba jāmair̥m); and his holy name is constantly chanted (repeated, remembered, recalled) by the most exalted Gods in this creation, such as the creator Brahma, the sustainer Vishnu, and the concluder Shiva¹---- (2).

[¹Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 39.]

----The same Lord (the Supreme Being; the Brahm; the Parmatma, the Supreme Soul of creation) has manifested himself as a human (in the body of Lord Ram), and you would be well advised to treat and recognise him as such.

And therefore my Lord (Ravana), please pay heed to this humble servant's pleadings, and do such things which have a pleasant ending. Look! Even sage Parashuram who wields a battle axe, is most brave, strong and valorous (and who is so furious and uncompromising by nature that he had mercilessly slayed all the kings of the Kshatriya clan repeatedly to wipe them off the surface of the earth)—even he had judged and weighed the pros and cons of antagonizing and confronting Lord Ram, and had come to the conclusion that it was wise and prudent for him to make peace and amends with the Lord (at the bow-breaking ceremony at Janakpur, whereat he surrendered before Lord Ram and even gave the Lord his own bow, and went away to the forest to resume his Tapa)² (3).'

[²This event is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 268—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.]

Hearing these words of Vibhishan, which were albeit so adorable and truthful as to be like being jewels among words and which were undoubtedly most beneficial for Ravana, the latter regarded them as most contemptible, exceedingly derogatory, very insinuating, highly treacherous, most painful and tormenting to hear, greatly corrupt and utterly blasphemous.

Hence (literally charging Vibhishan with high treason and sedition), he got up seething with wrath, and angrily kicked Vibhishan in the chest in a most contemptuous way.

Then, saying, 'Alright dear brother, what you did is for good' (bhalē tāta), Vibhishan abandoned the scorching heat (represented by Ravana), and started towards the Kalpa Tree (represented by Sri Ram) to seek its shelter/shade (which would give him peace, protection and comfort from the grave danger to his life that he now faced in Lanka if he still abided there after being so severely threatened, humiliated and kicked by its king Ravana)³ (4).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Doha no. 41.]

विभीषण—शरणागति

(5 / 26)

जाय माय पायँ परि कथा सो सुनाई है ।

समाधान करति बिभीषनको बार बार, ' कहा भयो तात ! लात मारे, बड़ो भाई है ॥ 1 ॥
 साहिब, पितु समान, जातुधानको तिलक, ताके अपमान तेरी बड़िए बड़ाई है '। गरत गलानि जानि, सनमानि सिख देति, 'रोष किये दोष, सहें समुझें भलाई है ॥ 2 ॥
 इहाँतें बिमुख भये, रामकी सरन गए
 भलो नेकु, लोक राखे निपट निकाई है'। मातु—पग सीस नाइ, तुलसी असीस पाइ चले भले सगुन, कहत 'मन भाई' है ॥ 3 ॥

vibhīṣaṇa-śaraṇāgati

(5/26)

jāya māya pāyaṁ pari kathā sō sunā'ī hai.
 samādhāna karati bibhīṣanakō bāra bāra,
 'kahā bhayō tāta! lāta mārē, baṛō bhā'ī hai.. 1..
 sāhiba, pitu samāna, jātudhānakō tilaka, tākē apamāna tērī baḍiē baṛā'ī hai'.
 garata galāni jāni, sanamāni sikha dēti,
 'rōṣa kiye dōṣa, sahēm samujhēm bhalā'ī hai.. 2.. ihāṁtēm bimukha bhayē, rāmakī sarana ga'e bhalō nēku, lōka rākhē nipaṭa nikā'ī hai'. mātu-paga sīsa nā'i, tulasī asīsa pā'i calē bhalē saguna, kahata 'mana bhā'ī' hai.. 3..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-I

Verse no. 5/26—[Insulted by his brother Ravana, Vibhishan decided to quit Lanka and join Lord Ram. It had been his long-standing desire to take refuge with the Lord as is clear from his conversation with Hanuman in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 7. But he did not want to do anything from his side that would seem like his deserting his family and his king for selfish reasons, to switch sides in favour of an enemy of the king (Ravana) in whose realm he lived. But when Ravana kicked him he decided that it was the right time to say good-bye.

Now, as it happened, many of Ravana's close family members had also advised him against confronting Lord Ram, such as his wife Mandodari, his own spies whom he had sent behind Vibhishan to report about the strength of the Lord's army, his son Prahasta, and his old uncle Malyawan (refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 5/23, stanza no. 3 and 5/24; Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/1), as well as by his brother Kumbhakaran (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Doha no. 63 where we read that like Vibhishan, Kumbhakaran too had sternly admonished Ravana for all the mischief he has done for a wrong cause, and on his part he felt happy that at last he would get an opportunity to find liberation and deliverance from the unholy body of a demon by being killed at the hands of Lord Ram).

In the following verse nos. 5/26—to 5/46 of Geetawali we shall read in detail how Vibhishan reached Lord Ram's camp, the way he was warmly welcomed and accepted by Lord Ram.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Doha no. 41—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 50.]

Vibhishan went straight to his mother, fell at her feet and told her the entire episode. His mother tried to comfort him, saying, 'Son, what great harm is done by his (Ravana's) kicking you? After all, he is your elder brother (1).

Firstly, he is your king and lord of the kingdom in which you live and is sustained by him. Secondly, he is an elder brother equivalent to a father. And thirdly, he is the best in the demon clan.

His insulting you is no less than a favour for you. [How? To wit, firstly this has motivated you to seek refuge in the holy feet of Lord Ram, and secondly you must remember that he is a 'demon' who pays little heed to civil manners and courteous behaviour. It is his nature to be rude and haughty, every time wanting to have his way on all matters, and never tolerating dissent or opposition. So therefore, you must take it lightly.]'

Seeing that Vibhishan was full of despair, very aggrieved and highly indignant at being publicly humiliated, she continued to try to placate his ruffled feelings, and said, 'Son, getting angry and revengeful at this point time is very unwise and futile, while being reasonable and tolerant will be most advisable and would provide for the well-being of all of us (because a calamitous war is looming over the city, and at this juncture everyone ought to keep his calm so that the enemy does not get a hint that there is some sort of revolt in the kingdom) (2).

Indeed, albeit it is better for you to turn away from here and take shelter with Lord Ram (because you have been publicly insulted and declared a traitor by your brother who happens to be a king of this place, and therefore it is highly dangerous for you to stay here any longer), yet I would suggest that it would be far more better for you if you are able to resist this temptation (to leave Lanka and join Lord Ram) and hold out here as it would look good in the eyes of the world that you forgave your brother at a time when he faces a war and that you didn't become a traitor by joining the enemy and being the cause of destruction of the family and kingdom to which you belong and which has sustained you till now.¹

[¹Clever use of words by Vibhishan's wise mother! She did not support treason; she could not openly support sending Vibhishan to Sri Ram knowing full well that it would be abetting revolt and speed-up the death of her elder son, Ravana. But, at the same time, there were three prominent factors at play in her mind to give a subtle and tacit approval for Vibhishan's decision to leave Ravana and join Sri Ram.

First and foremost was that she realised that Vibhishan had his mind made up, would not listen, especially after being publicly rebuked and insulted. Secondly, in the case of a complete route of the demons and their annihilation in the war, at least one of her sons would survive to carry forward the demon clan. And thirdly, she realised that what Vibhishan had decided was indeed the correct and wise path, for by this time she must have been herself disgusted by Ravana's evil ways and sinful demeanours. As such, here she saw an opportunity of cleaning the demon race of all evil mongers and unrighteous characters, because as an elderly woman she could not consent to excesses of unrightful behaviour by her own sons.

Being by now certain that Ravana would not listen to anyone, and therefore decimation of the demon race was now a forgone conclusion, she preferred that Vibhishan join Lord Ram's camp to escape annihilation with the rest of the family, and thereby carry on the race to the next generation. It is every mother's wish that if destruction can't be avoided, then at least one of her sons must live to carry on the family line.]

Tulsidas says that hereat, Vibhishan bowed his head at the mother's feet, took her blessings, and left the place (for Sri Ram's camp). Seeing auspicious omens on the way, he thought—"I have got what I desired (i.e. my decision is correct)" (3).

(5 / 27)

‘भाइ को सो करौं, डरौं कठिन कुफेरै ।
 सुकृत-संकट पर्यो, जात गलानिन्ह गर्यो, कृपानिधिको मिलौं पै मिलिकै कुबेरै ॥ 1 ॥
 जाइ गह पाँय, धाइ धनद उठाइ भेट्यो, समाचार पाइ पोच सोचत सुमेरै ।
 तहँई मिले महेस, दियो हित उपदेस, रामकी सरन जाहि ‘सुदिनु न हेरै ॥ 2 ॥
 जाको नाम कुंभज कलेस-सिंधु सोखिबेको, मेरो कह्यो मानि, तात ! बाँधे जिनि बेरै ।
 तुलसी मुदित चले, पाये हैं सगुन भले, रंक लूटिबेको मानो मनगन-ढेरै ॥ 3 ॥

(5/27)

‘bhā'ira kō sō karaum, ḍaraum kaṭhina kuphērai.
 sukṛta-saṅkaṭa paryō, jāta galāninha garyō, kṛpānidhikō milaurṁ pai milikai kubērai'.. 1..
 jā'i gaha pām̐ya, dhā'i dhanada uṭhā'i bhētyō, samācāra pā'i pōca sōcata sumērai.
 tahaṁī milē mahēsa, diyō hita upadēsa, rāmakī sarana jāhi 'sudinū na hērai.. 2..
 jākō nāma kumbhaja kalēsa-sindhu sōkhibēkō, mērō kahyō māni, tāta! bāṁdhē jini bērai'.
 tulasī mudita calē, pāyē hairṁ saguna bhalē, raṅka lūṭibēkō mānō manigana-ḍhērai.. 3..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-II

Verse no. 5/27—[After his discussions with his mother as narrated in verse no. 5/26 herein above, Vibhishan thought to himself—] ‘I should respect my elder brother

(Ravana), but I have a big problem. (He has threatened my life, kicked me, publicly humiliated me, and has held me to be a spy of his enemy; so staying any longer is full of grave dangers).’

So, he decided to first meet his brother Kuber (the God's treasurer), and then decide on meeting Sri Ram (1).

So he went to Kuber and clasped his feet. Kuber rushed forward and embraced him. Hearing the entire episode, he (Kuber) stood on Mt. Sumeru and became thoughtful.

Meanwhile, Vibhishan met Lord Shiva there who gave him this advice: ‘Vibhishan! You go and seek refuge at the holy feet of Lord Sri Ram; you need not wait for an auspicious day or time for it (i.e. you need not take anyone's permission or discuss the matter with anyone to take their opinion) (2).

Oh dear! The Lord whose name is like sage Agastya for the purpose of drying up the ocean of sorrows, miseries and pains, there is no need to imagine any obstacles in going to take refuge at such a Lord's holy feet. Pay heed to this singular wise advice of mine, and you do not need to make preparations for it!’

Tulsidas says, hearing this, Vibhishan's doubts were removed, and he happily started for meeting Lord Sri Ram. On the way, he met many auspicious and good omens which made him all the more enthusiastic as if a pauper is thrilled while he is on his way with the prospect of looting a treasury of jewels (3).

राग केदारा

(5/28)

संकर—सिख आसिष पाइकै ।
 चले मनहि मन कहत बिभीषन सीस महेसहि नाइकै ॥ 1 ॥
 गये सोच, भए सगुन, सुमंगल दस दिसि देत देखाइकै ।
 सजल नयन, सानंद हृदय, तनु प्रेम—पुलक अधिकाइकै ॥ 2 ॥
 अंतहु भाव भलो भाईको, कियो अनभलो मनाइकौ ।
 भइ कूबरकी लात, बिधाता राखी बात बनाइकै ॥ 3 ॥
 नाहित क्यों कुबेर घर मिलि हर हितु कहते चित लाइकै ।
 जो सुनि सरन राम ताके मैं निज बामता बिहाइकै ॥ 4 ॥
 अनायास अनुकूल सूलधर मग मुदमूल जनाइकै ।
 कृपासिंधु सनमानि, जानि जन दीन लियो अपनाइकै ॥ 5 ॥
 स्वारथ—परमारथ करतलगत, श्रमपथ गयो सिराइकै ।
 सपने कै सौतुक, सुख—सस सुर सींचत देत निराइकै ॥ 6 ॥
 गुरु गौरीस, साँइ सीतापति, हित हनुमानहि जाइकै ।
 मिलिहौं, मोहि कहा कीबे अब, अभिमत, अवधि अघाइकै ॥ 7 ॥
 मरतो कहाँ जाइ, को जानै लटि लालची ललाइकै ।
 तुलसिदास भजिहौं रघुबीरहि अभय—निसान बजाइकै ॥ 8 ॥

rāga kēdārā

(5/28)

saṅkara-sikha āsiṣa pā'ikai.
 calē manahi mana kahata bibhīṣana sīsa mahēsaḥi nā'ikai.. 1..
 gayē sōca, bha'e saguna, sumaṅgala dasa disi dēta dēkhā'ikai.
 sajala nayana, sānanda hṛdaya, tanu prēma-pulaka adhikā'ikai.. 2.. antahu bhāva bhalō bhā'ikō, kiyo anabhalō manā'ikau.
 bha'i kūbarakī lāta, bidhātā rākhī bāta banā'ikai.. 3.. nāhita kyōm kubēra ghara mili hara hitu kahatē cita lā'ikai.
 jō suni sarana rāma tākē maim nija bāmatā bihā'ikai.. 4..
 anāyāsa anukūla sūladhara maga mudamūla janā'ikai.
 kṛpāsindhu sanamāni, jāni jana dīna liyō apanā'ikai.. 5.. svāratha-paramāratha karatalagata, śramapatha gayō sirā'ikai.
 sapanē kai sautuka, sukha-sasa sura sīncata dēta nirā'ikai.. 6..
 guru gaurīsa, sāmī sītāpati, hita hanumānahi jā'ikai.
 milihaum, mōhi kahā kībē aba, abhimata, avadhi aghā'ikai.. 7.. maratō kahām jā'i, kō jānai laṭi lālaci lalā'ikai.
 tulasidāsa bhajihauṁ raghubīrahi abhaya-nisāna bajā'ikai.. 8..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-III

Verse no. 5/28—Having received the wise advice and blessings of Lord Shiva (as narrated in verse no. 5/27 herein above), Vibhishan bowed his head to him and started forthwith for Sri Ram's camp, contemplating in his mind as follows—(1).

‘I can discern auspicious signs in all the ten directions (and therefore my journey will be fruitful and for my good).’ This observation caused all his sorrows, dilemmas, uncertainties and perplexities to be removed (eliminated instantly).

His eyes were filled with tears (of joy), his heart was overcome with exhilaration, and his body was highly thrilled with surge of affectionate emotions (for Lord Ram) (2).

[He muttered to himself—] ‘Indeed, the action of my brother proved to be my boon and well-being in disguise, albeit his intention was just the opposite (for, he had wanted to scornfully reproach and humiliate me).

The Creator has made me fortunate (for he has turned circumstances in my favour), because for me, Ravana's kicking has become akin to the kick that is administered on the haunched-back¹ (3).

[¹Even as a sprained back or bent back can be straightened by a violent kick, Ravana's kick has made me turn towards Lord Sri Ram by symbolically straightening my resolve to seek redemption with him and get rid of all moral deformities and spiritual taints I had naturally inherited by the virtue of my birth as a member of the demon. Further, Sri Ram would also have no reservations accepting me because I have been ousted by Ravana himself.

This stanza also shows that there is no rancour or bitterness in the mind of Vibhishan. The following stanzas also show that in fact he considers Ravana's kicking him and throwing him out of his court as a blessing in disguise.]

Had I not been so lucky and blessed, why then would Lord Shiva have met me at the palace of Kuber and advised me to do this (i.e. seek Sri Ram's shelter immediately without further procrastinations; refer verse 5/27 above), hearing which advice I have forsaken my wickedness, conceit and imposterings, and have decided to seek refuge in the holy feet of Sri Ram's? (4).

That bearer of the trident, who is an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness (i.e. Lord Shiva), has involuntarily and without any self or vested interest, shown me this path of joy and happiness.

The Lord (Shiva) has recognized me as one of his own humble and meek servants, and that is why he has accepted me (and has shown his benevolence and munificence on me by voluntarily advising me to go and take shelter with Lord Ram without any reservations) (5).

By his (Shiva's) grace and kindness, both my worldly self-interest (in this mundane world) as well as my soul's salvation and emancipation in the after life has been ensured, and I have been freed from my torments and travails.

I marvel with exceeding wonder—is it a dream that I see, or is it for real? For in all sooth it seems that the exalted Gods themselves appear to be watering my harvest of joy, delight, happiness and bliss (i.e. I am euphoric, exhilarated and ecstatic with immense joy that is only possible when the Gods are agreeable) (6).

Now, I shall go and meet my Guru, Lord Shiva, my Lord Sri Ram (the husband of Sita), and my benefactor and well-wisher Sri Hanuman. What more I have to do now (or what more good and fortunate circumstance can I ever want and expect).

I have got my fill of the best of fruits (i.e. highest of rewards that one can ever expect to get in this life) (7).

Who knows where otherwise I would have gone and died while pursuing, and at the same time being pursued by, the intense and huge delusions, greeds and infatuations created by this sensual, illusionary world of sense objects and their accompanying torments, anguish and sorrows?²

[²To wit, if I hadn't been kicked by Ravana, and not advised by Lord Shiva to seek redemption by surrendering before Lord Ram, who knows what my bad fate would have been. Like all other demons and creatures, I would have remained entangled in this world of sense objects, spending my entire life mired in delusions and pursuing gratifications for my sense organs. When finally my life would have come to an end, I would have died an ignominious death, faced with the horrible fate of having to bear the consequences of all the deeds that I would have done in my lifetime, none of which would have contributed to my peace and bliss. I would have suffered even after death. But now the tide has turned in my favour: for now my redemption and deliverance is certain.]

Quoting Vibhishan, Tulsidas says for himself that he too would now beat the kettle-drum of victory and fearlessness which comes when one surrenders one's self to Lord Ram and develops devotion for Lord Raghubir (Ram), worshipping him and adoring him with love and affection³.

[³Tulsidas cites the example of Vibhishan to express his own joyous sentiments that he is also lucky like him to have surrendered himself to Lord Ram and have developed devotion and affection for the Lord.] (8).

(5 / 29)

पदपदुम गरीबनिवाजके ।
 देखिहौं जाइ पाइ लोचन—फल हित सुर—साधु—समाजके ॥ 1 ॥
 गई बहोर, ओर निरबाहक, साजक बिगरे साजके ।
 सबरी सुखद, गीध—गतिदायक, समन सोक कपिराजके ॥ 2 ॥
 नाहिन मोहि और कतहूँ कछु, जैसे काग जहाजके । आयो सरन सुखद पदपंकज चौथे रावन—बाजके ॥ 3 ॥
 आरतिहरन सरन, समरथ सब दिन अपनेकी लाजके ।
 तुलसी 'पाहि' कहत नत—पालक मोहुसे निपट निकाजके ॥ 4 ॥

(5/29)

padapaduma garībanivājakē.
 dēkhihaum̐ jā'i pā'i lōcana-phala hita sura-sādhu-samājakē.. 1.. ga'ī bahōra, ōra nirabāhaka, sājaka bigarē sājakē.
 sabarī sukhada, gīdha-gatidāyaka, samana sōka kapidājakē.. 2.. nāhina mōhi aura katahūṁ kachu, jaisē kāga jahājakē.
 āyō sarana sukhada padapaṅkaja cōnthē rāvana-bājakē.. 3.. āratiharana sarana, samaratha saba dina apanēkī lājakē.
 tulasī 'pāhi' kahata nata-pālaka mōhusē nipaṭa nikājakē.. 4..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-IV

Verse no. 5/29—‘Ah! Now I shall go and have a look at the holy feet of the friend and sustainer of the poor, the meek, the underdog, the downtrodden and the wretched ones (i.e. the holy feet of Lord Sri Ram), and consequentially I shall get the fruit (reward) of my eyes by having the Lord’s divine sight.

These august feet (of Sri Ram) are the best benefactor of all, and they are a provider of all welfare to the Gods and the community of saints (1).

Lord Sri Ram can revive lapsed happiness and bliss; he is the protector till the end; and he is the one who can rectify or redo what has already been erred or undone¹.

He is the one who has provided comfort and solace to Sabari, has liberated (i.e., delivered from this cycle of birth and death) the vulture (Jatau) and has quelled the sorrows and anguish of Sugriv, the king of monkeys (2).

[¹Reviving lapsed happiness and redoing the undone means that he can pull one back from the quagmire and slush of delusions of ignorance, infatuations, avarice/greed, lust/passion, anger/malice, discord and hordes of evils, sins and misdemeanours that the creature indulges in, or is trapped in, which together are the cause of his spiritual miseries and downfall. And once the creature is pulled out of the slush and muck, the pristine purity of the soul re-emerges from under the thick layer of these vices, resulting in its reverting back into its inherent state of blissfulness, happiness and contentedness.]

Like the crow perching on the (mast of a) ship; I do not have any shelter or protection anywhere (because there is no land in sight nor shelter from the scorching sun, or anywhere to hide), and when tormented (attacked) by the falcon-like Ravana, my only succour is to take refuge in his (Sri Ram's) lotus-like holy feet (3).

He (Lord Ram) is always alert, eager and able to protect the dignity and esteem of his devotees, and is the remover (eliminator) of the sorrows and tribulations of his refugees (i.e. those who have taken protection of his holy feet).'

Tulsidas says that by merely pleading earnestly 'Save me²', he (Lord Sri Ram) becomes the protector of those persons who are the most worthless duds in the world like me (Tulsidas)³ (4).

[²Refer also to Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/43, stanza no. 5.

³Tulsidas praises the glory of Lord Ram as the most munificent and gracious Lord anyone can ever find. For, in all sooth, even the most worthless of creatures can be sure of Lord's attention and protection if he simply says "Lord, save me". It's as easy as this; what more would one wish to have from one's lord?

This fact is endorsed by Lord Ram himself in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 44.]

(5 / 30)

महाराज रामपहँ जाउँगो ।
 सुख—स्वारथ परिहरि करिहौं सोइ, ज्यों साहिबहि सुहाउँगो ॥ 1 ॥
 सरनागत सुनि बेगि बोलि हैं, हौं निपटहि सकुचाउँगो ।
 राम गरीबनिवाज निवाजिहैं, जानिहैं, ठाकुर—ठाउँगो ॥ 2 ॥
 धरिहैं नाथ हाथ माथे, एहितें केहि लाभ अघाउँगो ।
 सपनो—सो अपनो न कछू लखि, लघु लालच न लोभाउँगो ॥ 3 ॥
 कहिहौं, बलि, रोटिहा रावरो, बिनु मोलही बिकाउँगो । तुलसी पट ऊतरे ओढ़िहौं, उबरी जूठनि खाउँगो ॥ 4 ॥

(5/30)

mahārāja rāmapaham̐ jā'uṁgō.
 sukha-svāratha parihari karihaum̐ sō'i, jyauṁ sāhibahi suhā'uṁgō.. 1.. saranāgata suni bēgi bōli haim̐, haur̐ nipṭahi sakucā'uṁgō.
 rāma garībanivāja nivājihaim̐, jānihaim̐, ṭhākura-ṭhā'uṁgō.. 2..
 dharihaim̐ nātha hātha māthē, ēhitēm̐ kēhi lābha aghā'uṁgō.
 sapanō-sō apanō na kachū lakhi, laghu lālaca na lōbhā'uṁgō.. 3.. kahihaum̐, bali, rōṭihā rāvarō, binu mōlahī bikā'uṁgō.
 tulasī paṭa ūtarē oḍhihaum̐, ubarī jūṭhani khā'uṁgō.. 4..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-V

Verse no. 5/30—'Now that I will go to the Great King Sri Ram (mahārāja rāma), I shall forsake all my personal comforts and vested self-interests, and do all those things which would please the Lord (or, which would make the Lord pleased with me and treat me favourably) (1).

As soon as the Lord hears that I have come to seek his refuge he would immediately call me (i.e. accept me), but I will feel extremely hesitant. Then he, who is a friend of the poor, the meek, the humble, the underdog, the downtrodden, the lowly and the distressed ones, would protect me, realising the fact that I have no other patron Lord (over my head to act as my benefactor and protector other than Lord Ram), or that I have no other destination or standing except the Lord (i.e. I have no where else to go except at the holy feet of Lord Ram which are now my only destination and succour in life) (2).

Forsooth, the Lord would place his hands on my head! What greater benefit or profit there is than this privilege which would satisfy me?

This world is like an illusionary dream; I shall not henceforth regard any of its (illusionary, perishable) objects as mine, and I shall also not be enticed or tempted by any of the world's lowly tendencies such as avarice, greed, lust, passions and desires (3).

I shall say, 'Lord! I say honestly, I shall survive by eating your left-overs and shall sell my self without a price at your hands (i.e. I shall serve you like a faithful and loyal servant all my life). Also, I shall wear clothes discarded by you, and shall eat morsels of food from your plate that you leave on it or ask me to partake of them.'¹ (4).

[¹This is only a way of expressing Vibhishan's desire to surrender and submit himself before Lord Ram with a sincere spirit of humility and devotion for the Lord. It does not mean that he will actually eat the left-over food from Sri Ram's plate, or wear his clothes—its highly incongruous to think that Lord Ram would stoop so low as to allow it to happen. It's below the Lord's own dignity to allow his loyal, faithful and loving devotees to do so like arrogant masters demand from their serfs and slaves. The Lord is exceptionally gracious and nice, and he will never want his devotee to behave like a slave of his. In fact, it will hurt the Lord if this happens.

But when the devotee makes these statements it is because he wishes to express his sincere desire to surrender and submit before the Lord even as he knows that the Lord will not allow this to actually happen.]

(5/31)

आइ सचिव बिभीषनके कही ।
 कृपासिंधु! दसकंधबंधु लघु चरन—सरन आयो सही ॥ 1 ॥
 बिषम बिषाद—बारिनिधि बूझत थाह कपीस—कथा लही ।
 गये दुख—दोष देखि पदपंकज, अब न साध एकौ रही ॥ 2 ॥
 सिथिल—सनेह सराहत नख—सिख नीक निकाई निरबही ।
 तुलसी मुदित दूत भयो, मानहु अमिय—लाहु माँगत मही ॥ 3 ॥

(5/31)

ā'i saciva bibhīṣanakē kahī.
 kṛpāsindhu! dasakandhabandhu laghu carana-sarana āyō sahī.. 1.. biṣama biṣāda-bārinidhi būrata thāha kapīsa-kathā lahī.
 gayē dukha-dōṣa dēkhi padapaṅkaja, aba na sādha ēkau rahī.. 2.. sithila-sanēha sarāhata nakha-sikha nīka nikā'ī nirabahī.
 tulasī mudita dūta bhayō, mānahu amiya-lāhu māṁgata mahī.. 3..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-VI

Verse no. 5/31—When Vibhishan reached the camp of Lord Ram, his minister or the assistant who had accompanied him, came to the Lord and said, ‘Oh Lord who is an ocean of mercy and compassion (kṛpāsindhu)! The younger brother (i.e. Vibhishan) of he who has ten necks (i.e. Ravana; “dasakandhabandhu laghu”), has come to seek refuge at your feet without any trick and deceit in his heart¹ (1).

[¹When Vibhishan left Lanka, one of his trusted aides accompanied him, and when they reached the camp of Lord Ram, the monkeys immediately accosted them. Hanuman recognized Vibhishan who told him the reason of his coming. Hanuman was glad beyond measure, and he took the companion of Vibhishan and went to Lord Ram to report. This aide of Vibhishan was well aware of all the circumstances on both sides of the camps, i.e. Lord Ram’s side as well as Ravana’s side, and he was also privy to the thoughts of Vibhishan, his lord.

So, when the messenger was accompanied by Hanuman and other chief monkey warriors to convey the reason of Vibhishan coming to Lord Ram, and that he had come with a clean conscience and had no trick in his mind while coming to seek the Lord’s shelter, it convinced Lord Ram, even more so because Hanuman had already briefed the Lord about the way he found Sita at Lanka with the help of Vibhishan, and now Hanuman was there to identify that the demon who has come to seek the Lord’s refuge is indeed the same person as Vibhishan, and no imposter.]

He (Vibhishan) was almost drowned in the sea of distress and dismay, feeling helpless and hopeless, when the story of Sugriv² (as told to him by Hanuman by way of introducing himself at the time they met in Lanka when the latter had gone there in search of Sita) gave him hope and buoyed his spirits.

[Since then, Vibhishan was longing for a chance to escape from the cage he was finding himself trapped in, and now he has found a way out.] Oh Lord, now having reached your feet, all his woes, troubles and tribulations are over, and he has no other wishes left (except that you will accept him and give him your protection). Hence, will you please accept him? (2).’

[²When Hanuman had briefed Vibhishan about how Sugriv, who was being subjected to immense torment by his elder brother Baali, was assured protection by Lord Ram and ultimately made king of Kishkindha by slaying his inimical brother, Vibhishan immediately saw a ray of hope as his condition was almost similar. He too was subjected to immense miseries at the hands of his elder brother Ravana who was doing unrighteous things to which Vibhishan did not agree, and so upon hearing Sugriv’s story he too hoped that one day he would find his freedom.]

Lord Sri Ram’s countenance and attitude looked charming and welcoming, and the minister (or messenger of Vibhishan) felt relaxed in the Lord’s presence³.

[³The Lord's demeanours and expressions showed that he was not annoyed or angry upon learning that his enemy's brother has come; he had not become alarmed or suspicious. Rather his attitude was friendly, welcoming, amiable and gracious. This instilled confidence and hope in the heart and mind of Vibhishan's messenger.]

Tulsidas says that at that moment, the minister was so happy as if he got nectar while asking for mere butter-milk⁴.

[⁴To wit, the minister of Vibhishan had not expected such kind reception in an enemy's camp, so he was pleasantly surprised when Lord Ram welcomed him.] (3).

(5 / 32)

बिनती सुनि प्रभु प्रमुदित भए ।
रीछराज, कपिराज नील-नल बोलि बालिनंदन लए ॥ १ ॥
बूझिये कहा ? रजाइ पाय नय-धरम सहित ऊतर दए ।
बली बंधु ताको जेहि बिमोह-बस बैर-बीज बरबस बए ॥ २ ॥
बाँहपगार द्वार तेरे तैं सभय न कबहूँ फिरि गए ।
तुलसी असरन-सरन स्वामिके बिरद बिराजत नित नए ॥ ३ ॥

(5/32)

binatī suni prabhu pramudita bha'ē.
rīcharāja, kaporāja nīla-nala bōli bālinandana la'ē.. 1..
būjhiyē kahā? rajā'i pāya naya-dharama sahita ūtara da'ē.
balī bandhu tākō jēhi bimōha-basa baira-bīja barabasa ba'ē.. 2.. bāmhapagāra dvāra tērē taim sabhaya na kabahūṁ phiri ga'ē.
tulasī asarana-sarana svāmikē birada birājata nita na'ē.. 3..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-VII

Verse no. 5/32—The Lord (Sri Ram) felt very glad on hearing the prayers of the messenger.

He summoned the bear king (Jamvant), the king of monkeys (Sugriv), Neel, Nal (the architects and engineers) and the son of Baali (Angad) (1).

(He asked them—) 'What do you think (and advice) on this matter?'

Getting his permission, they answered according to established edicts and traditions of Dharma (noble conduct, probity, propriety, righteousness) and Law (of politics), 'He (Vibhishan) has great strength and is the brother of the person who has willingly and forcibly sowed the seeds of enmity and hatred with you. [Hence, it is advisable to be careful of him.]¹ (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 43.

Lord Ram's advisors were very apprehensive, sceptical and weary of Vibhishan. They feared that if he is allowed inside the camp, he would secretly pass on all strategic information to the demon enemy, for after all they reasoned that blood is thicker than any other relation. But they had forgotten one important point: and it was that Vibhishan has been kicked out of Lanka in a most ignominious and insulting way, being branded a traitor and charged with treason, and so his chances of rapprochement with his brother Ravana were not at all practically feasible.]

But, Lord Ram's advisors continued, oh the one who protects the shelter-seekers by using your arms as a rock-solid wall of support for them (bāṁhapagāra).

In all sooth, no one who is frightened and tormented has ever returned empty handed (i.e. without assurance of your help) from your doorway!' [To wit, oh Lord you have a reputation that you never turn back anyone who is afraid and has come to your door seeking protection and refuge: dvāra tērē tair̥ sabhaya na kabahūṁ phiri ga'ē.]

Tulsidas avers that the Lord's fame as the one who gives shelter to those who are shelter-less (asarana-sarana svāmikē birada) is well established (and well known) everywhere, and every day some instance is found to affirm its truth (birājata nita na'ē) (3).

(5 / 33)

हिय बिहसि कहत हनुमानसों ।
 सुमति साधु सुचि सुहृद बिभीषन बूझि परत अनुमानसों ॥ 1 ॥
 'हौं बलि जाऊँ और को जानै ?' कही कपि कृपानिधानसों ।
 छली न होइ स्वामि सनमुख, ज्यों तिमिर सातहय—जानसों ॥ 2 ॥
 खोटो खरो सभीत पालिये सो, सनेह सनमानसों ।
 तुलसी प्रभु कीबो जो भलो, सोइ बूझि सरासन—बानसों ॥ 3 ॥

(5/33)

hiya bihasi kahata hanumānasōṁ.
 sumati sādhu suci suhṛda bibhīṣana būjhi parata anumānasōṁ.. 1..
 'hauṁ bali jā'uṁ aura kō jānai?' kahī kapi kṛpānidhānasōṁ.
 chalī na hō'i svāmi sanamukha, jyōṁ timira sātahaya-jānasōṁ.. 2..
 khōṭo kharo sabhīta pāliyē sō, sanēha sanamānasōṁ.
 tulasī prabhu kībō jō bhalō, sō'i būjhi sarāsana-bānasōṁ.. 3..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-VIII

Verse no. 5/33—Then he (Lord Sri Ram) smiled (feeling amused internally) and said to Hanuman, 'In my estimate (view, opinion, understanding), Vibhishan is of a righteous mind and noble thoughts, he is saintly at heart, pure and wise, and he has an uncorrupt intellect (sumati sādhu suci). Besides this, he seems to be favourably inclined and has a friendly disposition (suhṛda).' (1).

Hanuman (the “kapi”, literally the monkey) replied to the Lord who is an abode of kindness, grace and munificence (“kṛpānidhāna”; i.e. Lord Sri Ram), ‘I say truthfully, indeed, who can know better than you on this subject? Even as darkness cannot exist in the presence of sunlight, so an imposter, someone who is crooked, cunning and deceitful in his heart and mind, a wicked person, cannot dare to come in front of the Lord¹ (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 44.]

He is frightened and tormented; so, notwithstanding whether he is good or bad, you should sustain (and protect) him with due affection and respect as is deserving of you (i.e. without showing any undue favour while respecting his dignity and self respect, and making him feel welcomed and at home)².

Or else, (if you are still unable to decide) ask your bow and arrows and do what is suitable in such a situation (because your bow and arrows are habitually and traditionally the protector of righteous and saintly people, and are the slayer of wicked and rascals, so they will be able to advice you)³, (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 43 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it, and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.

³What Hanuman means here is this: If the Lord is doubtful about whether or not to accept Vibhishan and allow him access to the Lord's camp because he is an enemy's brother and there are chances that at the last moment he may turn a turncoat, a betrayer, then it would be proper for the Lord to judge him by weighing his own strength against Vibhishan's, so that in case the latter plays any dirty tricks and betrays the Lord then the Lord should be able to handle him alone, relying on his own strength, without depending upon any of the monkeys and bears, for who knows in which way the tide of war would turn.

Hence, if the Lord has this confidence that he would be easily able to tackle Vibhishan under all situations, then he should accept him, but if he thinks that in a one-to-one face-off his personal strength and valour may not be a match against Vibhishan in case he betrays, then it will be well to reject him now in the beginning before damage is done.

Another way of interpreting this stanza is this: Hanuman means that Sri Ram has a reputation of being the protector of refuge seekers, distressed and tormented ones as well as those who are righteous, upright and humble. He has drawn Sri Ram's attention to the bow and arrow with the subtle hint that this is one of your (Sri Ram's) duties, responsibilities and promises/vows, and for which purpose, as a Kshatriya lord, you bear a bow and arrows. Besides, you have nothing to fear—in case Vibhishan tries dirty tricks, you have potent arms with you. So, why worry? It must be noted that Hanuman has only hinted at these things, but he does not give a positive reply as to whether the demon should be accepted or not—the final decision is with the Lord.]

(5 / 34)

साँचेहु बिभीषन आइहै ?

बूझत बिहँसि कृपालु, लखन सुनि कहत सकुचि सिर नाइ है ॥ 1 ॥

ऐहै कहा, नाथ ? आयो ह्यौ, क्यों कहि जाति बनाइ है ।

रावन-रिपुहि राखि, रघुबर बिनु, को त्रिभुवन पति पाइहै ॥ 2 ॥

प्रभु प्रसन्न, सब सभा सराहति, दूत-बचन मन भाइहै ।

तुलसी, 'बोलिये बेगि', लषनसों भइ महाराज-रजाइ है ॥ 3 ॥

(5/34)

sāmcēhu bibhīṣana ā'ihai?

būjhata bihaṁsi kṛpālu, lakhana suni kahata sakuci sira nā'i hai.. 1..

aihai kahā, nātha? āyō hyāṁ, kyōm kahi jāti banā'i hai.

rāvana-ripuhi rākhi, raghubara binu, kō tribhuvana pati pā'ihai.. 2..

prabhu prasanna, saba sabhā sarāhati, dūta-bacana mana bhā'ihai.

tulasī, 'bōliyē bēgi', laṣanasōm bha'i mahārāja-rajā'i hai.. 3..

Vibhishan comes to seek refuge with Lord Ram-IX

Verse no. 5/34—The kind and gracious Lord (Sri Ram) laughed wonderingly (or smiled in amusement), and asked, 'Will Vibhishan really come here?'

Hearing his query, Laxman¹ bowed his head and said hesitantly..... (1).

[¹Getting feedback from all his advisors, Lord Ram turned to his younger brother Laxman and smiled at him with amusement in his countenance. He was like asking Laxman if he thought that Vibhishan really has the guts to come near them.]

'Lord! What to talk about 'whether he will come', for he has already come here. How can we (i.e. all the monkeys, bears and the rest of the group) dare to speak cunningly in front of you; how can we ever speak a lie or ambiguously, dubiously with you?

Indeed, by keeping the enemy of Ravana in his company, who can remain established in this world except Raghubar (Sri Ram)²?' (2).

[²Keeping Vibhishan is sure to antagonise Ravana exceedingly, and incur his wrath. Who will durst do it except the Lord who is all-powerful and omnipotent? Opposing such a fierce, ferocious and invincible enemy as Ravana by instigating him by giving refuge to a person hated by him is a sure invitation to incur his strongest of revenge. It is only Lord Sri Ram who can stand up and face this enemy up-front and accept the challenge, and emerge victorious in whatever follows.]

At this reply, the Lord was pleased (because Laxman hinted that he is agreeable), the whole assembly (council of ministers) praised it, and even the messenger (who had come with Vibhishan) liked the words in his heart.

Tulsidas says that Laxman received instructions from the Lord to bring him (Vibhishan) soon (immediately and speedily)³ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 44.]

(5 / 35)

चले लेन लषन—हनुमान हैं।

मिले मुदित बूझि कुसल परसपर—सकुचत करि सनमान हैं॥ 1॥

भयो रजायसु पाँउ धारिए, बोलत कृपानिधान हैं।

दूरितें दीनबंधु देखे, जनु देत अभय—बरदान हैं॥ 2॥

सील सहस हिमभानु, तेज सतकोटि भानुहूके भानु हैं।

भगतनिको हित कोटि मातु—पितु अरिन्हको कोटि कृसानु हैं॥ 3॥

जनगुन रज गिरि गनि, सकुचत निज गुन गिरि रज परमानु हैं।

बाँह—पगारु, बोलको अबिचल बेद करत गुनगान हैं॥ 4॥
 चारु चाप—तूनीर तामरस—करनि सुधारत बान हैं।
 चरचा चलति बिभीषनकी, सोइ सुनत सुचित दै कान हैं॥ 5॥ हरषत सुर, बरषत प्रसून सुभ सगुन कहत कल्यान हैं।
 तुलसी ते कृतकृत्य, जे सुमिरत समय सुहावनो ध्यान हैं॥ 6॥

(5/35)

calē lēna laṣana-hanumāna hair̥m.
 milē mudita bījhi kusala parasapara-sakucata kari sanamāna hair̥m.. 1..
 bhayō rajāyasu pām̐u dhāri'ē, bōlata kṛpānidhāna hair̥m. dūritēṁ dīnabandhu dēkhē, janū dēta abhaya-baradāna hair̥m.. 2..
 sīla sahasa himabhānu, tēja satakōṭi bhānuhūkē bhānu hair̥m.
 bhagatanikō hita kōṭi mātu-pitu arinhakō kōṭi kṛsānu hair̥m.. 3.. janaguna raja giri gani, sakucata nija guna giri raja paramānu hair̥m.
 bām̐ha-pagāru, bōlakō abicala bēda karata gunagāna hair̥m.. 4.. cāru cāpa-tūnīra tāmarasa-karani sudhārata bāna hair̥m.
 caracā calati bibhīṣanakī, sō'i sunata sucita dai kāna hair̥m.. 5..
 haraṣata sura, baraṣata prasūna subha saguna kahata kalyāna hair̥m.
 tulasī tē kṛtakṛtya, jē sumirata samaya suhāvanō dhyāna hair̥m.. 6..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-I

Verse no. 5/35—[Vibhishan's meeting with Lord Ram has been described also in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 45—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 50.

Presently, in Geetawali, Sundar Kand, it is narrated in verse nos. 5/35—to 5/46 herein below.]

Getting instructions from Lord Ram to bring Vibhishan to him, Laxman and Hanuman started-off to bring the latter to meet the Lord.

They happily met Vibhishan, exchanged pleasantries, paid mutual respects and asked for his well-being, both the sides feeling hesitant and uneasy all the while (1)¹.

[¹This was very natural. Both, Vibhishan on one side, and Laxman and Hanuman of the other side, belonged to opposite camps. It was the first meeting between Vibhishan and Laxman, both being brothers of two principal enemies, viz. Ravana and Lord Ram respectively. There were hidden apprehensions and suspicions and doubts on both sides.

Vibhishan wondered if his decision to come to the enemy's camp was correct and wise: has he not escaped the devil to fall in the deep sea; would Lord Ram hold him captive and subject him to more torture than what he had to endure at Lanka. No one can say anything at this juncture.

Similar apprehensions were thick in the mind of Laxman. What if Vibhishan has been sent by Ravana to act as a spy, and all the story of his being kicked out was pre-planned and a mere stratagem so that he could be planted in the enemy's camp. What if he suddenly changes sides and betrays in the thick of battle, even holding him (Laxman) and the Lord hostage?

So the two, Laxman and Vibhishan, met with coldness in the air; it was by no means a cordial welcome to a known friend. The only person who was doubtless was Hanuman as he had had first hand knowledge of Vibhishan's condition and that he was speaking the truth when he said that he has come to seek the Lord's shelter without any deceit or conceit hidden in his heart.

Hanuman was also comfortable with Vibhishan on another count: the latter had seen the former's strength and valour when Lanka was burnt, and so he wouldn't dare play dirty tricks when Hanuman was around!]

They (Laxman and Hanuman) said to Vibhishan, 'Welcome and well come! The Lord has given his permission, and the merciful, gracious and kind one (Sri Ram) is calling you. So come along with us!'

Thereafter, Vibhishan saw the Lord (Sri Ram) who is a friend of the distressed, the wretched, the lowly and the humble ones (dīnabandhu), sitting in a posture which appeared to give a boon (blessing) of fearlessness to those who come to him (janu dēta abhaya-baradāna hairṁ) (2).

(Besides this, Sri Ram is) Peaceful, courteous and tranquil like thousands of moons (sīla sahasa himabhānu), is like millions of suns in splendour and radiance (tēja satakōṭi bhānuhūkē bhānu hairṁ), is a well-wisher, favourable and benevolent benefactor of devotees like crores of parents are towards their off-springs (bhagatanikō hita kōṭi mātu-pitu), and is like millions of fierce and ferocious fires as far as the enemies are concerned (arinhakō kōṭi kṛsānu hairṁ) (3).

He (Sri Ram) considers even a miniscule, dust-like petty (or tiny) virtues of his devotees as being large (great, huge, immense and potent) enough like a mountain (janaguna raja giri gani)²; and the Lord feels hesitant (in front of them) while regarding his own mountain-like virtues and glories as being negligent as a particle of dust (sakucata nija guna giri raja paramānu hairṁ)³.

The Lord protects his refugees by the strength of his arms; the Lord protects his protectees by holding their arms so that no harm comes to them (bāṁha-pagāru). The Lord is extremely steadfast in his vows and promises (i.e. he is true to his words; "bōlakō abicala").

Forsooth, this is how the Vedas (ancient scriptures) sing his glories and assert about him (bēda karata gunagāna hairṁ) (4).

[²To wit, the Lord always acknowledges whatever goodness his devotee has, even if it is a trifling, and tries to enhance this quality manifold for the devotee's benefit so that he can get maximum rewards from it.

³The Lord never allows his devotee to feel shy, hesitant, reluctant and afraid to present himself before the Lord's glorious, majestic and exalted presence. The Lord is never proud of his own virtues and glories, for after all he is a treasure of all the excellent virtues and glorious qualities that exist in this creation. He never allows his devotees to feel overly self-conscious and guilty of low virtues and qualities vis-à-vis the Lord's; on the contrary the Lord always tries to encourage his devotees and give them honour for whatever goodness they have.]

Presently, when Vibhishan approached Lord Ram, he was causally moving his hands over his bow, arrow and quiver (to indicate to Vibhishan that he is getting them ready for any emergency; and also as a warning to Vibhishan not to try any dirty tricks with him).

The Lord was very intently listening to all that was being said and discussed about Vibhishan (in order to judge the general opinion, and to gather nuggets of valuable information about him from his monkey and bear advisors) (5).

The Gods are happily showering flowers (to celebrate the occasion). These good omens portend future auspiciousness and good tidings (for Vibhishan, and helped him to overcome his initial shyness, hesitation and reluctance).

Tulsidas says, “Those who recall and concentrate on that pleasant moment and circumstance, are most privileged and fortunate⁴.” (6).

[⁴To wit, this was a moment when the Lord is about to give refuge to a demon, and by extension, it is a general signal to all those who are unfortunate and low-born, with a sinful body and vile demeanours, but wish to become good by turning themselves over to the care of the Lord, that they are most welcome like Vibhishan was. It was an event of momentous importance for all the devotees of Lord Ram who have doubts whether or not the Lord would accept them due to their sins and lowly nature.]

(5 / 36)

रामहि करत प्रनाम निहारिकै।
 उठे उमंगि आनंद-प्रेम-परिपूरन बिरद बिचारिकै॥ 1॥
 भयो बिदेह बिभीषन उत, इत प्रभु अपनपौ बिसारिकै।
 भलीभाँति भावते भरत-ज्यों भेंट्यो भुजा पसारिकै॥ 2॥
 सादर सबहि मिलाइ समाजहि निपट निकट बैठारिकै।
 बूझत छेम-कुसल सप्रेम अपनाइ भरोसे भारिकै॥ 3॥
 नाथ! कुसल-कल्याण-सुमंगल बिधि सुख सकल सुधारिकै।
 देत-लेत जे नाम रावरो, बिनय करत मुख चारिकै॥ 4॥
 जो मूरति सपने न बिलोकत मुनि-महेस मन मारिकै।
 तुलसी तेहि हौं लियो अंक भरि, कहत कछू न सँवारिकै॥ 5॥

(5/36)

rāmahi karata pranāma nihārikai.
 uṭhē umaṅgi ānanda-prēma-paripūrana birada bicārikai.. 1..
 bhayō bidēha bibhīṣana uta, ita prabhu apanapau bisārikai.
 bhalībhāṁti bhāvatē bharata-jyōm bhēṅṭyō bhuajā pasārikai.. 2..
 sādara sabahi milā'i samājahi nipaṭa nikaṭa baiṭhārikai.
 būjhata chēma-kusala saprēma apanā'i bharōsē bhārikai.. 3.. nātha! kusala-kalyāna-sumaṅgala bidhi sukha sakala sudhārikai.
 dēta-lēta jē nāma rāvarō, binaya karata mukha cārikai.. 4..
 jō mūrati sapanē na bilōkata muni-mahēsa mana mārikai.
 tulasī tēhi haum liyō aṅka bhari, kahata kachū na saṁvārikai.. 5..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-II

Verse no. 5/36—Seeing Lord Sri Ram, Vibhishan bowed his head most reverentially, remembering his nature of giving refuge to the distressed and being merciful to the sinful.

Lord Ram's heart overflowed with joy, and he rose to welcome him affectionately. At the moment, on the one hand Vibhishan had lost consciousness of his surroundings, so thrilled and overwhelmed with joy he was, and on the other hand Lord Ram, remembering his earlier meeting at Chitrakoot with brother Bharat, embraced Vibhishan with wide open arms, and clasped him most affectionately to his bosom¹(2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 45 along with Chaupai line nos.1-8 that precede it, and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.

The meeting between Lord Ram and Vibhishan was most cordial, warm and welcoming. Compare this with the way Laxman and Vibhishan had met in verse no. 5/35, stanza nos. 1-2. It was a formal meeting, but the way Lord Ram met Vibhishan was more informal and warm. Whatever misgivings Vibhishan may have harboured in his heart were immediately dispelled, and he felt that he is warmly accepted, without any reservations. This was a strategic move by Lord Ram: by a simple warm hug he had made Vibhishan feel comfortable and homely, and this first interaction helped to cement a tie that lasted for a lifetime. Vibhishan's heart was injured by the way his own brother Ravana had treated him, and in this background when he received a warm bear-hug, his happiness knew no bounds. He decided that this is the right place to be: for here in Lord Ram's camp his self respect and dignity would be shown due respect and honour.

Vibhishan was all the more overjoyed as he found that whatever he had heard of Lord Ram's nature and attitude proved to be absolutely true and correct. This instilled reassurance in his heart and gave comfort to his mind.]

Then, introducing him to all his companions, Lord Ram seated him near himself, and accepting him as one of his own men, reassured him and asked about his welfare² (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 46.]

Vibhishan replied, 'Oh Lord! Those who chant your name are highly regarded by Brahma (the creator) and provided by all welfare, happiness and peace by him, so what to talk of me³! (4).

[³That is, those who merely take your holy name are blessed by good fortune by the Creator, but here I am sitting directly in front of you, hence these benefits are guaranteed to me in abundance. The Creator would shower me with his blessings. I am indeed so fortunate that you have seated me beside you.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 46—to Doha no. 47.]

Even eminent sages and gods find it difficult to have a vision of the Lord in their dreams despite all austerities and penances they do. That same Lord has embraced me!

Say, in all sooth, how lucky I am indeed! I do not boast, nor am trying to please you or flatter you. [To wit, it is a fact.] (5).'

(5 / 37)

करुणाकरकी करुणा भई ।
 मिटि मीचु, लहि लंक संक गइ, काहूसो न खुनिस खई ॥ 1 ॥
 दसमुख तज्यो दूध-माखी-ज्यौं, आपु काढ़ि साढ़ी लई ।
 भव-भूषन सोइ कियो बिभीषन मुद मंगल-महिमामई ॥ 2 ॥
 बिधि-हरि-हर, मुनि-सिद्ध सराहत, मुदित देत दुंदुभी दई ।
 बारहि बार सुमन बरषत, हिय हरषत कहि जै जै जई ॥ 3 ॥
 कौसिक-सिला-जनक-संकट हरि भृगुपतिकी टारी टई ।
 खग-मृग सबर-निसाचर, सबकी पूंजी बिनु बाढ़ी सई ॥ 4 ॥
 जुग-जुग कोटि-कोटि करतब, करनी न कछू बरनी नई ।
 राम-भजन-महिमा हुलसी हिय, तुलसीहूकी बनि गई ॥ 5 ॥

(5/37)

karunākarakī karunā bha'ī.
 miṭi mīcu, lahi laṅka saṅka ga'i, kāhūsō na khunisa kha'ī.. 1..
 dasamukha tajyō dūdha-mākhī-jyauṁ, āpu kāḍhi sārḥī la'ī.
 bhava-bhūṣana sō'i kiyō bibhīṣana muda maṅgala-mahimāma'ī.. 2..
 bidhi-hari-hara, muni-sid'dha sarāhata, mudita dēta dundubhī da'ī.
 bārahi bāra sumana baraṣata, hiya haraṣata kahi jai jai ja'ī.. 3.. kausika-silā-janaka-saṅkaṭa hari bhṛgupatikī ṭārī ṭa'ī.
 khaga-mṛga sabara-nisācara, sabakī pūṁjī binu bārḥī sa'ī.. 4..
 juga-juga kōṭi-kōṭi karataba, karanī na kachū baranī na'ī.
 rāma-bhajana-mahimā hulāsī hiya, tulasīhūkī bani ga'ī.. 5..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-III

Verse no. 5/37—In this way, when the Lord who shows mercy, compassion and grace showered his blessings and benedictions upon Vibhishan, the latter's worries and lamentations regarding his fear of death were erased¹, he got the kingdom of Lanka as a reward², and the constant fear of Ravana that had made him sore affright was eliminated (from his heart and mind).

Verily, Vibhishan's inner-self felt so blessed and contented that he no more harboured any ill-will, malice, hatred, discord and suspicion towards anyone, and he had no fear from any quarter (1).

[¹Prior to his being accepted by Lord Ram, Vibhishan was constantly tormented by the fear of death, for he knew that once Ravana had become openly hostile towards him, the fear of death always loomed over his head. But now he became fearless.

²Lord Ram had anointed him as the 'king of Lanka' to express his thanks to him for coming to join him in the war. This was another master stroke of wise military strategy of the Lord: for now Vibhishan had all the more reasons to remain loyal to the Lord because if the Lord wins the impending war he would be made the next king of Lanka. Otherwise, if Ravana survives and the tide of war does not turn favourable, the worst affected would be Vibhishan. Ravana would go hammer and tong after him, baying for his blood, and no matter where he hides he would be caught and summarily executed.]

Vibhishan—who was summarily discarded with utter contempt like a ‘fly in the milk’ by Ravana who had usurped the entire cream (i.e. the entire wealth of Lanka without sharing it with his brothers)—was made a jewel of the world by the virtue of his being accepted by Lord Ram and more so by taking the side of righteousness and morality (represented by Lord Ram) vis-à-vis unrighteousness and immorality (represented by Ravana), and was bestowed with the fame and glory which were not only fine but also rare and unprecedented (2).

Brahma, Vishnu, Lord Shiva, Sages, Hermits and Siddhas (mystics; the attained ones) began to praise his luck and good fortune, while the Gods played kettle-drums (and other musical instruments) in delight and showered flowers repeatedly with a joyful heart and cries of applause for Vibhishan (3).

He (Sri Ram) had removed the troubles and tribulations of sage Vishwamitra (by protecting his fire sacrifice)³, Janak (by breaking the bow and marrying his daughter Sita when the king faced a piquant situation as no one else had been able to even move the bow, resulting in the king worrying about the fate of his daughter)⁴, and the rock-like Ahilya (when the Lord had given her deliverance by touching her with his feet)⁵. Not only this, the Lord had vanquished the terror caused by Parshuram⁶.

*At the same time, he had improved the stature (and the fate) of the bird (Jatau)⁷, the deer (Marich)⁸, Sabari (the tribal woman)⁹ and the demon (Vibhishan)¹⁰ even without their having any capital (good deeds, high birth, righteousness, noble characters etc.) at their disposal (4).

[*Refer also to Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/43, stanza no. 1.

³Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse nos. 1/47—1/56; 1/60, stanza no. 1; 1/66.

⁴Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse nos. 1/73—1/90.

⁵Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse nos. 1/57—1/59.

⁶Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse nos. 1/90, stanza no. 7.

⁷Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse nos. 3/12—3/16.

⁸Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse nos. 3/3—3/7.

⁹Refer: Geetawali, Aranya Kand, verse nos. 3/17/1—3/17/8.

¹⁰Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse nos. 5/33—5/37.]

The Lord has numerous such divine, marvelous and spectacular deeds to his credit spread over different ages (eras, Yugs)—nothing astonishing or new has been said here.

Tulsidas asserts about himself that by remembering such excellent virtues of the Lord, there is an upsurge of emotional warmth, devotion and affection for the Lord in his heart; he wants to worship, do service to, and submit himself all the more to Lord Ram. The excellent glories and renowned fame and fine virtues of the Lord have firmly enshrined themselves in his (Tulsidas') heart, and this has made him most lucky and fortunate too (like the ones described above) (5).

भयो बिसोक बिलोकि बिभीषन, नेह देह-सुधि-सीव गई ॥ 1 ॥
 उठि दाहिनी ओरतें सनमुख सुखद माँगि बैठक लई।
 नखसिख निरखि-निरखि सुख पावत भावत कछु, कछु और भई ॥ 2 ॥
 बार कोटि सिर काटि, साटि लटि, रावन संकरपै लई।
 सोइ लंका लखि अतिथि अनवसर राम तृनासन-ज्यों दर्ई ॥ 3 ॥
 प्रीति-प्रतीति-रीति-सोभा-सरि, थाहत जहँ जहँ तहँ घई।
 बाहु-बली, बानैत बोलको, बीर बिस्वबिजई जई ॥ 4 ॥
 को दयालु दूसरो दुनी, जेहि जरनि दीन-हियकी हई ?
 तुलसी काको नाम जपत जग जगती जामति बिनु बई ॥ 5 ॥

(5/38)

mañjula mūrati maṅgalama'ī.

bhayō bisōka bilōki bibhīṣana, nēha dēha-sudhi-sīnva ga'ī.. 1.. uṭhi dāhiniṁ ōratēm sanamukha sukhada māṁgi baiṭhaka la'ī.
 nakhasikha nirakhi-nirakhi sukha pāvata bhāvata kachu, kachu aura bha'ī.. 2..
 bāra kōṭi sira kāṭi, sāṭi laṭi, rāvana saṅkarapai la'ī.
 sō'i laṅkā lakhi atithi anavasara rāma ṭṛnāsana-jyōm da'ī.. 3..
 prīti-pratīti-rīti-sōbhā-sari, thāhata jahaṁ jahaṁ tahaṁ gha'ī.
 bāhu-balī, bānaita bōlakō, bīra bisvabija'ī ja'ī.. 4..
 kō dayālu dūsarō duni, jēhi jarani dīna-hiyakī ha'ī?
 tulasī kākō nāma japata jaga jagatī jāmati binu ba'ī.. 5..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-IV

Verse no. 5/38—Seeing the most attractive and auspicious image (of Lord Ram), Vibhishan became free from all sorrows, anguish and miseries, and he was so enchanted and enraptured by its captivating view that he encroached upon the limits of the awareness of his body (i.e. he became unaware of himself or his surroundings)¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 45.]

Then he (Vibhishan) got up from the right side (where he had been seated upto now) and asked to be seated right in front of the Lord, facing him². There, he observed the Lord intently from the toe-nails to the tuft of hair on his head, and became exhilarated (at his stupendous beauty and charm). He wanted something different while something else happened³ (2).

[²By sitting right in front, Vibhishan wished to ascertain the facial expressions of Lord Ram to judge for himself if he is sincerely welcome as a friend, or was there some sort of doubt in the mind of Lord Ram which would be evident from the Lord's expressions. Besides this, it will also give the Lord an opportunity to judge Vibhishan by looking directly into his eyes. The resultant trust that would be built between them would be more robust and sustaining than what they have garnered about each other by way of hearing from others.

³What was that he wanted or expected, and what different thing happened? This question is answered in the next stanza. Vibhishan had merely expected to be accepted by Lord Ram so that he could escape the wrath of his brother Ravana. He came as a refugee, and a refugee in a king's court can't expect the same status as the original inhabitants of the country immediately, with full honour as is bestowed on others in the royal court. But the treatment he got at the hands of Lord Ram was beyond his imagination. First, the Lord embraced him as if he was very dear to him and were like his own brother Bharat (refer: verse no. 5/36, stanza no. 2 herein above). Second, he seated Vibhishan close to him like he would make his close confidantes and ministers sit (refer: verse no. 5/36, stanza no. 3 herein above). Third, the Lord anointed him as the next king of Lanka (refer: verse no. 5/38, stanza no. 3 herein below).

What more would Vibhishan want; he got more than was due to him. So he was astonished and felt exceedingly obliged towards Lord Ram.]

The Lanka which Ravan had got as a boon (blessing) from Shiva after having offered his head to him numerous of times (literally crores of times), and suffering immense troubles and difficulties to get this boon (“bāra kōṭi sira kāṭi, sāṭi laṭi, rāvana saṅkarapai laṭi”), the same realm of Lanka was given by Lord Ram to Vibhishan even though the latter never asked for it, with great hesitance as if this was an inadequate gift by the Lord to his guest who had come uninvited and sudden at a time when the Lord had nothing more to offer him as a gift that is usually given to an honoured guest, for the Lord regarded this gift (of offering him the kingship of Lanka) as very inconsequential and humble like offering a valueless reed or a blade of grass to an honourable guest that does not match its stature or standing in society (in the absence of anything more valuable or worthwhile that could be given to be given to him at the moment) (sō'i laṅkā lakhi atithi anavasara rāma ṭṇāsana-jyōm daṭi)⁴. (3).

[⁴Or conversely, it can also mean that Sri Ram gave Vibhishan a seat made of grass or reed, which is a humble seat for a king, in the absence of a better seating arrangement. And this seat of grass was symbolically the throne of Lanka. Since Lanka had been stripped bare of all its gold, fortunes and fames of being invincible at the hands of Hanuman earlier, Sri Ram indeed felt reluctant to give such a desolate city as a reward to Vibhishan. Another probable reason for his reluctance and hesitation was the fear that he (Sri Ram) would go down in history as the one who—inspite of being the epitome of righteousness and probity—had rewarded a person for treason and betrayal because, notwithstanding the spiritual aspects of devotion, humility, worship, surrender before the Lord, abandoning those who are evil and vile etc., what Vibhishan had actually done was exactly this—treason and betrayal. Thirdly, Ravana was still alive, the outcome of the war may not be certain or known now. So, Sri Ram thought—what if Ravana is not killed, or the war ends in such a way that the throne is retained by the latter. What shall he give to Vibhishan then? This is why Lord Ram felt hesitant and shy at the time of anointing Vibhishan in a symbolic manner as the king of Lanka.

Remember: Vibhishan was not an ordinary defecting demon who came to join an enemy's camp out of disenchantment with his own king Ravana, or for seeking personal gains when he realized that the invading army was stronger and sure to conquer the land. He was a prince in his own right, and an apparent heir to the throne of Lanka should the present king Ravana pre-decease him. Welcoming a great prince who would be the next king of the country by offering him a seat of grass was not in accordance to his royal stature. This is also why Lord Ram felt hesitant.

Refer also to: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 along with Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede it; and (b) Kavitawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/52.]

He (Sri Ram) is like a river of love and affection who upholds mutual trust and endearing relationships, one who obeys the laws and regulations of code of good behaviour and respect for each other, and one who generally is adorned by excellent virtues, adorable qualities and immaculate character that are like his ornaments (prīti-pratīti-rīti-sōbhā-sari).

Wherever and whenever attempts are made to measure his glorious virtues and noble characters, they are found to be measureless and fathomless (thāhata jahaṁ jahaṁ tahaṁ gha'ī).

The Lord's arms are very strong and his is exceedingly valiant (bāhu-balī). He is steadfast in his vows (i.e. he is true to his words and promises; "bānaita bōlakō"). And he is the conqueror of those who are world-conquerors themselves (e.g. sage Parshuram, demon Ravana; "bīra bisvabija'ī ja'ī") (4).

Who else is so merciful, compassionate and kind in this world that he has removed (erased, eliminated) the burnings (anguish, sorrows, tribulations, miseries, agonies) in the heart of those who are the underdogs, who are downtrodden, poor, humble, meek and lowly (kō dayālu dūsarō dunī, jēhi jarani dīna-hiyakī ha'ī)?

Tulsidas declares assertively—who else is there in this world, chanting (or repeating, remembering, recalling, taking shelter of) whose name the earth gives produce even without sowing (i.e. one gets the auspicious blessings or rewards even without doing noble and virtuous deeds) (tulasī kākō nāma japata jaga jagatī jāmāti binu ba'ī)⁵. (5)

[⁵Tulsidas does not advise one to become indolent, lithargic and lazy. It is evident that the earth will not produce anything without sowing seeds. It's absolutely absurd. He was a poet, so his words should be understood in their true 'spirit content' rather than the 'letter content'. For him, Sri Ram's holy name is far superior than Sri Ram himself, and personifies dignity and holiness. When one constantly remembers the Lord's name it guards him from any evil doings, evil thoughts or evil mongerings. So, what Tulsidas' intention is, is to safeguard us from vices, sins and evils by keeping the holy name as a constant guard against these vices and misdemeanours, and not to sit idle at home doing nothing, with a rosary in hand and saying 'Ram-Ram'. That will be of no use. Advice of philosophers should be properly understood and interpreted to be of any benefit. This should clear the air of accusation which Tulsidas is generally subjected to—that he advocates indolence, lithargy and in-action in the name of chanting Lord Sri Ram's holy name.]

(5 / 39)

सब भाँति बिभीषनकी बनी ।

कियो कृपालु अभय कालहुतें, गइ संसृति-साँसति घनी ॥ 1 ॥

सखा लषन-हनुमान, संभु गुर, धनी राम कोसलधनी ।

हिय ही और, और कीन्हीं बिधि, रामकृपा औरै ठनी ॥ 2 ॥

कलुष-कलंक-कलेस-कोस भयो जो पद पाय रावन रनी ।

सोइ पद पाय बिभीषन भो भव-भूषन दलि दूषन-अनी॥ 3॥
 बाँह-पगार, उदार-सिरोमनि, नत-पालक, पावन पनी।
 सुमन बरषि रघुबर-गुन बरनत, हरषि देव दुंदुभी हनी॥ 4॥
 रंक-निवाज रंक राजा किए, गए गरब गरि गरि गनी।
 राम-प्रनाम महामहिमा-खनि, सकल सुमंगलमनि-जनी॥ 5॥
 होय भलो ऐसे ही अजहुँ गये राम-सरन परिहरि मनी।
 भुजा उठाइ, साखि संकर करि, कसम खाइ तुलसी भनी॥ 6॥

(5/39)

saba bhāṁti bibhīṣanakī banī.
 kiyo kṛpālu abhaya kālahutēm, ga'i sansṛti-sāṁsati ghanī.. 1..
 sakhā laṣana-hanumāna, sambhu gura, dhanī rāma kōsaladhanī.
 hiya hī aura, aura kīnhīm bidhi, rāmakṛpā aurai ṭhanī.. 2.. kaluṣa-kalaṅka-kalēsa-kōsa bhayō jō pada pāya rāvana ranī.
 sō'i pada pāya bibhīṣana bhō bhava-bhūṣana dali dūṣana-anī.. 3..
 bāmha-pagāra, udāra-sirōmani, nata-pālaka, pāvana panī.
 sumana baraṣi raghubara-guna baranata, haraṣi dēva dundubhī hanī.. 4..
 raṅka-nivāja raṅka rājā ki'ē, ga'ē garaba gari gari ganī.
 rāma-pranāma mahāmahimā-khani, sakala sumaṅgalamani-janī.. 5..
 hōya bhalō aisē hī ajahuṁ gayē rāma-sarana parihari manī.
 bhujā uṭhā'i, sākhī saṅkara kari, kasama khā'i tulasī bhanī.. 6..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-V

Verse no. 5/39—Vibhishan had achieved everything in all respects. The merciful Lord Sri Ram made him fearless from the God of Death, as well as from the torments of this world (1).

He (Vibhishan) found good friends such as Laxman and Hanuman, Guru such as Lord Shiva, and his lord and master such as Lord Ram. He had something different in his heart (fear of Ravana and worry for his own safety), but with Lord Ram's mercy an opposite prevailed (i.e. he became fearless and the happiest being in the world) (2).

Ravana, who as a demon, had become the treasury of sins, most disgraceful in his race, and a storehouse of wickedness upon becoming the king of Lanka, but the same post or designation (of being a demon king of Lanka) turned Vibhishan into the jewel of his race, and a slayer (eliminator) of all that was un-righteous and un-holy (3).

The Gods showered flowers, beat trumpets and sang the glory of Lord Ram whose arms are like walls to protect the distressed (bāmha-pagāra), who is the most magnanimous and kind Lord of all the Lords (udāra-sirōmani), who is an eternal maverick sustainer of the universe (nata-pālaka), and who makes righteous vows and keep them diligently (pāvana panī) (4).

The helper of the poor (i.e. Lord Ram) had made the pauper Vibhishan into a King (of Lanka) (raṅka-nivāja raṅka rājā ki'ē). This crushed the false pride of the so-called millionaires and super-rich people (who boast of being charitable by giving only a miniscule portion of their fortunes as charity or alms while hiding the bulk of their wealth and treasures) (ga'ē garaba gari gari ganī).

Bowing before Lord Ram and submitting one's self to the Lord is like a rich mine that bestows all types of honour, fame, achievements and glory that are priceless (rāma-pranāma mahāmahimā-khani)¹.

[¹That is, if one surrenders one's self before the Lord, all the goodness that exists in this world, all the auspicious virtues and qualities, all the good fortunes and luck, all sorts of peace and happiness—everything becomes easily accessible by him.] (5).

Tulsidas says that if one goes to seek refuge at the feet of Lord Ram even now, all these benefits can be had by him. He says this with Lord Shiva as a witness, raising his hands and making a solemn oath that what he says is the truth, without gainsay, and he is very definite about it² (6).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 50; and (ii) Doha no. 60 along with Chanda line nos. 3-4 that precede it.]

(5 / 40)

कहो, क्यों न बिभीषनकी बनै ?
गयो छाडि छल सरन रामकी, जो फल चारि चार्यौ जनै ॥ 1 ॥
मंगलमूल प्रनाम जासु जग, मूल अमंगलके खनै ।
तेहि रघुनाथ हाथ माथे दियो, को ताकी महिमा भनै ? ॥ 2 ॥
नाम—प्रताप पतितपावन किए, जे न अघाने अघ अनै ।
कोउ उलटो, कोउ सूधो जपि भए राजहंस बायस—तनै ॥ 3 ॥
हुतो ललात कृसगात खात खरि, मोद पाइ कोदो—कनै ।
सो तुलसी चातक भयो जाचत राम स्यामसुंदर घनै ॥ 4 ॥

(5/40)

kahō, kyōm na bibhīṣanakī banai?
gayō chāḍi chala sarana rāmakī, jō phala cāri cāryauṁ janai.. 1.. maṅgalamūla pranāma jāsu jaga, mūla amaṅgalakē khanai.
tēhi raghunātha hātha māthē diyō, kō tākī mahimā bhanai?.. 2..
nāma-pratāpa patitapāvana ki'ē, jē na aghānē agha anai.
kō'u ulaṭō, kō'u sūdhō japi bha'ē rājahansa bāyasa-tanai.. 3..
hutō lalāta kṛsagāta khāta khari, mōda pā'i kōdō-kanai.
sō tulasī cātaka bhayō jācata rāma syāmasuṁdara ghanai.. 4..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-VI

Verse no. 5/40—Say, why should Vibhishan not be rewarded (or be treated as being most fortunate and lucky)? For, after forsaking all trickery, deception, pretension, cheating and stratagem, he had come to seek refuge with and shelter of Lord Sri Ram who gives all the four types of celebrated fruits to all the four types of devotees¹ (1).

[¹The 4 types of fruits are—“Artha” = wealth, prosperity; “Dharma” = virtues of righteousness, probity, propriety; “Kaam” = fulfilled of all desires; and “Moksha” = emancipation, salvation, liberation and deliverance from the shackles of this mundane, delusory world.

The 4 types of devotees are as follows— (a) “Aarta” = one who worships the Lord to get rid of their sorrows, miseries, agonies, troubles and tribulations; (b) “Arthaarthi” = those who worship the Lord for material gain, wealth, prosperity etc.; (c) “Jigyaasu” = those who worship the Lord in order to seek Him, or find out about His true nature, the Supreme Truth, the essence of existence etc.; and (d) “Gyani” = those who have realised Him, and worship Him selflessly. They are also aware of the true nature of the soul.

Refer: Geetawali, Uttar Kand, verse no. 7/15, stanza no. 3; verse no. 7/16, stanza no. 2; verse no. 7/17, stanza no. 2.]

Doing ‘Pranam’ (i.e. paying obeisance by bowing the head) to Lord Sri Ram is the root of all auspiciousness and well-beings, and is potent enough to uproot all inauspiciousness and evil forebodings in this world. Verily, it is the same Raghunath (Sri Ram) who had placed his benevolent and merciful hands on the head of Vibhishan. Say, how can one describe his (Vibhishan's) privilege and good luck, and the resultant fame that he acquired for himself? (2).

The power and might of the Lord's holy Name has purified even those sinners and vile ones who were never tired of doing evil, sinning and committing misdemeanours and unrighteousness of all kinds². Some had chanted his name in the correct order, and others in the reverse order (i.e. some as RAAM and some as MARAA)³, and by doing so, even those whose characters and deeds were like crows became as exalted as royal swans (3).

[²The glory of Lord Ram's holy name is extolled in (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 28; (b) Kavitawali, Uttar Kand, verse nos. 7/89—7/93; and (c) Vinai Patrika, verse nos. 46, 64—70.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 19. The legendary sage Valmiki had repeated Lord Ram's name in the reverse order to achieve an exalted stature amongst the greatest sages and seers of his time.]

[Talking about himself, Tulsidas says—] ‘He, who was of a weak body (i.e. under-nourished, emaciated) and had to eat husk (i.e. eat worthless, left-over food), who yearned for bits and morsels of food, and had to content himself with ordinary food and felt happy even to get it (in short, who was extremely impoverished and hungry to even find sufficient to feed his stomach)—now is so privileged that he is able to directly ask or seek like a Papiha (a sparrow hawk) from the beautiful dark cloud representing Sri Ram⁴ (4).

[⁴Tulsidas cites his early life when he was so poor that he had to beg for food, but no one cared for him. Now that he has declared himself as a servant and devotee of the Lord, everyone around wishes to please him and get his blessings, and therefore there is no dearth of anything that he needs. All this is because of one factor: that is his surrendering before Lord Ram.

Realizing the import of this, Tulsidas has decided not to seek from anybody other than his Lord Ram who is compared here to the dark rain-bearing clouds. The cloud is symbolic of magnanimity, generosity and charity, and used as a metaphor for life and its abundant pleasures and joys. The cloud showers rain which sustains life on this earth so much so that when it rains and the dark cloud is cited in the sky, the farmer rejoices and the animals begin to sing in the garden and the forests. The 'Papiha' asks for rain-drops from the cloud to satisfy its own thirst, but the gracious and kind cloud gives rain not only to him, but at his behest or on his excuse, to the whole world at large.

Similarly, Tulsidas asks from Lord Sri Ram for his own benefit, but the magnanimous Lord showers his grace and munificence on the whole creation. Tulsidas rejoices at the Lord's grace and benevolent nature.]

(5 / 41)

अति भाग बिभीषनके भले ।
 एक प्रनाम प्रसन्न राम भए, दुरित-दोष-दारिद दले ॥ 1 ॥
 रावन-कुंभकरन बर माँगत सिव-बिरचि बाचा छले ।
 राम-दरस पायो अबिचल पद, सुदिन सगुन नीके चले ॥ 2 ॥
 मिलनि बिलोकि स्वामि-सेवककी उकटे तरु फूले-फले ।
 तुलसी सुनि सनमान बंधुको दसकंधर हँसि हिये जले ॥ 3 ॥

(5/41)

ati bhāga bibhīṣanakē bhalē.
 ēka pranāma prasanna rāma bha'ē, durita-dōṣa-dārida dalē.. 1..
 rāvana-kumbhakarana bara māṁgata siva-birañci bācā chalē.
 rāma-darasa pāyō abicala pada, sudina saguna nīkē calē.. 2..
 milani bilōki svāmi-sēvakakī ukaṭhē taru phūlē-phalē.
 tulasī suni sanamāna bandhukō dasakandhara haṁsi hiyē jalē.. 3..

Vibhishan meets Lord Sri Ram-VII

Verse no. 5/41—Vibhishan is extremely fortunate for Lord Sri Ram was pleased by his bowing his head once, and, as a result, all his sins, faults and poverties were eliminated (erased, removed) for good (1).

At the time when Ravana and Kumbhakarn propitiated Lord Shiva and Brahma respectively and received boons, both of them were deceived by the latter two¹.

But even at that time, Vibhishan was blessed with a boon that would bring him stable good fortune and eternal glory and exalted stature (by way having devotion for Lord Ram) which fructified and took effect when he started on his journey to meet the Lord².

Forsooth, Vibhishan had embarked on his journey to meet the Lord on an auspicious day and time as he was blessed with a stable stature and eternity of life by simply having a divine sight of Lord Ram. (2).

[¹To wit, these two Gods used clever ploys and use of words that had double meaning and interpretations to mislead these two demon brothers so that when the time came to ask for boons they asked for things that made no sense, and rendered them vulnerable. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 177.

Both Ravana and Kumbhakaran had asked and got boons that related to worldly fame and comfort; they had not sought anything for their spiritual welfare. This single error on their part proved to be their undoing, for the body is perishable and one or the other day it has to come to an end. And that is what happened: both the brothers died in the war of Lanka. Whereas their brother Vibhishan got the blessing of devotion for Lord God that made him live a life for a long time that transcended the era. It is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas that Vibhishan ruled over Lanka till the time Lord Ram himself left this world, and at that time the Lord asked Vibhishan to stay back and look after the remnants of the demon race. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 32—34.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 177 where Vibhishan has asked for the boon of having devotion for Lord God. And as it turned out, this paved his way for his meeting and acceptance by Lord Ram who was a manifestation of the 'Lord God'.]

Watching this union of the Lord and his servant (devotee, follower Vibhishan), even the dried-up trees blossomed once again, bearing flowers and fruits.

Tulisdas says that when Ravana heard that his brother had been welcomed by Sri Ram, he laughed overtly, but jealousy and envy burnt his heart³ (3).

[³He laughed externally to hide his embarrassment, to conceal his annoyance and indignation that his own brother has joined his enemy's camp, and to show his utter contempt for Vibhishan. But internally he was scared stiff because Vibhishan knew all the secrets of Lanka, and this may prove dangerous when the war starts.

At the same time as this, Ravana had an inkling and his sixth sense told him that Sri Ram was no ordinary human prince, but was actually an incarnation of the Supreme Lord himself in a human form (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 22 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that follow it).

He was repeatedly told that this is a fact, first by Marich (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 25 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede it), then by his own wife Mandadori (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 36 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-10 that precede it), his old minister and uncle Malyawan (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 40), and later on by his own brother Kumbhakaran (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 62 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that follow it).

Ravana felt envious of Vibhishan because the latter had reached the Lord even before he himself had a chance to see him face to face and seek deliverance from his gross body of a demon. Also because the Lord had welcomed Vibhishan and had put his hand on his head, something for which all souls yearned but rarely had the privilege to get.

Then, Lord Ram had declared Vibhishan as the future king of Lanka, and this peeved Ravana the most and made him burn out of jealousy, as no king would ever want that his crown should be so easily usurped in favour of someone whom he despises.]

(5 / 42)

गये राम सरन सबकौ भलो ।
 गनी—गरीब, बड़ो—छोटो, बुध—मूढ़, हीनबल—अतिबलो ॥ 1 ॥
 पंगु—अंध, निरगुनी—निसंबल, जो न लहै जाचे जलो ।
 सो निबह्यो नीके, जो जनमि जग राम—राजमारग चलो ॥ 2 ॥
 नाम—प्रताप—दिवाकर कर खर गरत तुहिन ज्यों कलिमलो ।
 सुतहित नाम लेत भवनिधि तरि गयो अजामिल—सो खलो ॥ 3 ॥
 प्रभुपद प्रेम प्रनाम—कामतरु सद्य बिभीषनको फलो ।
 तुलसी सुमिरत नाम सबनिको मंगलमय नभ—जल थलो ॥ 4 ॥

(5/42)

gayē rāma sarana sabakau bhalō.
 ganī-garība, baṛō-chōṭō, budha-mūrha, hīnabala-atibalō.. 1..
 paṅgu-andha, niragunī-nisambala, jō na lahai jācē jalō.
 sō nibahyō nīkē, jō janami jaga rāma-rājamāraga calō.. 2..
 nāma-pratāpa-divākara kara khara garata tuhina jyōm kalimalō.
 sutahita nāma lēta bhavanidhi tari gayō ajāmila-sō khalō.. 3.. prabhupada prēma pranāma-kāmataru sadya bibhīṣanakō phalō.
 tulasī sumirata nāma sabanikō maṅgalamaya nabha-jala thalō.. 4..

Benefits of Taking Shelter with Lord Ram

Verse no. 5/42—Everyone stands to gain and have welfare by seeking refuge in the holy feet of Lord Sri Ram—whether he is rich or impoverished, whether he is of high or low birth, of whatever stature and position in society he is, whether he is wise or an idiot, and whether he is weak or most strong and valiant (1).

Even those who are lame, blind, without any virtues and qualities, and most impoverished and wretched, who do not even get water to drink when desired—if they took birth in this world and followed the highway that leads to Lord Ram (i.e. the path of devotion, worship, adoration, love, affection, surrender, submission and service etc.), they were well looked after and sustained by the Lord (2).

In the face of the brilliant and splendorous rays of the sun representing the might, glory, fame and virtues of Sri Ram's Holy Name, the faults (i.e. evils, vices, misdemeanours, sins etc.) of Kaliyug melt away like snow.

Even the wicked rascal such as Ajaamil crossed the ocean of this illusionary and mundane world, and attained emancipation and salvation just by calling out his name (“Narayan”), even though he had meant to call out to his son of the same name¹ (3).

[¹Ajaamil was so horrified at seeing the messengers of death that he called for his own son, named Narain, to protect him. But since the word also was the name of Vishnu, the latter immediately sent his own messengers to rescue the wretched Ajaamil and bring him to heaven.]

The bowing of his head by Vibhishan (to pay obeisance to Lord Ram) proved to be a Kalpa Tree (the all wish-fulfilling tree) for him, and it bore fruits for him immediately too².

Tulsidas cites this as an example to say that similarly, when one recalls or remembers the Lord's Holy Name, the sky, the earth (land) and the water (rivers, oceans etc.) all become auspicious and full of good omens for him (4).

[²Vibhishan was subjected to great humiliation in Lanka by his own brother Ravana who treated him with great contempt because Vibhishan was a stout follower of Lord Vishnu. But when Vibhishan came and took the shelter of Lord Ram, he was not only warmly welcomed but also given respect and a position in the hierarchy of Lord's ministers. Not only this, his honour was restored as the Lord anointed him as the next king of Lanka.]

(5 / 43)

सुजस सुनि श्रवन हौं नाथ ! आयो सरन ।
 उपल-केवट-गीध-सबरी-संसृति-समन, सोक-श्रम-सीव सुग्रीव आरतिहरन ॥ 1 ॥
 राम राजीव-लोचन बिमोचन बिपति, स्याम नव-तामरस-दाम बारिद-बरन ।
 लसत जटाजूट सिर, चारु मुनिचीर कटि, धीर रघुबीर तूनीर-सर-धनु-धरन ॥ 2 ॥
 जातुधनेस-भ्राता बिभीषन नाम
 बंधु-अपमान गुरु ग्लानि चाहत गरन ।
 पतितपावन ! प्रनतपाल ! करुनासिंधु !
 राखिए मोहि सौमित्रि-सेवति-चरन ॥ 3 ॥
 दीनता-प्रीति-संकलित मृदुबचन सुनि
 पुलकि तन प्रेम, जल नयन लागे भरन ।
 बोलि, 'लंकेश' कहि अंक भरि भेंटि प्रभु, तिलक दियो दीन-दुख-दोष दारिद-दरन ॥ 4 ॥
 रातिचर-जाति, आराति सब भाँति गत
 कियो सो कल्याण-भाजन सुमंगलकरन । दास तुलसी सदयहृदय रघुबंसमनि
 'पाहि' कहे काहि कीन्हों न तारन-तरन? ॥ 5 ॥

(5/43)

sujasa suni śravana haurṁ nātha! āyō sarana.
 upala-kēvaṭa-gīdha-sabarī-sansṛti-samana, sōka-śrama-sīva sugrīva āratiharana.. 1..
 rāma rājīva-lōcana bimōcana bipati, syāma nava-tāmarasa-dāma bārīda-barana.

 lasata jaṭājūṭa sira, cāru municīra kaṭi, dhīra raghubīra tūnīra-sara-dhanu-dharana.. 2.. jātudhanēsa-bhrātā bibhīṣana nāma bandhu-apamāna guru glāni cāhata garana.
 patitapāvana! pranatapāla! karunāsindhu!
 rākhi'ē mōhi saumitri-sēvati-carana.. 3.. dīnatā-prīti-saṅkalita mṛdubacana suni pulaki tana prēma, jala nayana lāgē bharana.
 bōli, 'laṅkēsa' kahi aṅka bhari bhēṇṭi prabhu, tilaka diyō dīna-dukha-dōṣa dārīda-darana.. 4.. rāticara-jāti, ārāti saba bhāṁti gata kiyo sō kalyāna-bhājana sumaṅgalakarana.
 dāsa tulasī sadayahṛdaya raghubansamani
 'pāhi' kahē kāhi kīnhōm na tārana-tarana?.. 5..

Vibhishan speaks to Lord Ram, and his Anointment
 As the King of Lanka-I

Verse no. 5/43—[Vibhishan said—] ‘Oh Lord! I have come to seek shelter at your holy feet after having heard your renown, glory and fame with my own ears’¹.

You are the one who brought to rest the cycle of birth and death of the rock-like Ahilya, Kewat (the boatman), the vulture (Jatau) and Sabari (the old out caste Bhil woman) as well as are the remover of the sorrows and miseries, travails and weariness of Sugriv (the king of monkeys)² (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 45.

²Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/37, stanza no. 4.]

Oh Lord Sri Ram! You have lotus-like eyes, are the destroyer of all types of troubles, misfortunes, difficulties and adversities, have a countenance which is radiant and glowing like a dark blue lotus, and a complexion like a dark rain-bearing cloud.

A crown of matted hairs adorns your head. There are attractive clothes suitable for a hermit around your waist, and you are a most patient, courageous and steadfast warrior of Raghu's clan, who holds a bow, arrow and a quiver (2).

I am a brother of the demon king Ravana. My name is Vibhishan. I am anguished, exceedingly remorseful and dejected at being scornfully humiliated and reproached publicly by my brother (in the full assembly of demons).

Oh the purifier of the lowly, downtrodden, wretched, sinful and humble ones (patitapāvana)! Oh the protector or sustainer of those who have surrendered themselves before you and have sought your refuge/shelter by bowing their heads before you (or those who are humble, modest and meek = pranatapāla)! Oh an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness (karunāsindhu)! Please give me the shelter of your feet which are served by Laxman too.³ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 45 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it, and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.]

Hearing these humble, meek and pleasant words of Vibhishan that were soaked in affection and earnest pleadings, the Lord's body was thrilled with affectionate emotions and tears began welling-up in his eyes.

The Lord, who removes the sorrows, miseries, troubles, faults and wants (poverty) of the meek, lowly, humble, poor and downtrodden ones, called him by the title of 'Lankesh' (meaning 'the king of Lanka'), spread his arms and embraced him, and then anointed him (as the king of Lanka), putting a ceremonial Tilak Mark on his forehead to formalise it⁴ (4).

[⁴Refer: (a) Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/36, stanza no. 2; verse no. 5/38, stanza no. 3; verse no. 5/42, stanza nos. 1-2; verse no. 5/44, stanza no. 4; (b) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 46; Doha no. 48 and Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it; and Doha no. 49 along with Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede it.]

Vibhishan, being a demon by birth and belonging to the enemy camp, was to be forsaken and avoided at all costs (or looked at with suspicion and scepticism). In spite of that, he was made an abode of auspiciousness and good fortune by him (Sri Ram) who is the bestower of all auspiciousness, good fortunes and welfares.

The servant (of Lord Sri Ram, i.e.) Tulsidas asserts that the jewel of Raghu's clan ("raghubansamani"; i.e. Lord Sri Ram) is of a very merciful, simple, pure and tender heart (sadayahṛdaya). Simply by pleading 'Save me⁵', who has he not made so exalted and potent that the latter himself becomes capable of liberating others? (5).

[⁵Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/29, stanza no. 4.]

(5 / 44)

दीन-हित बिरद पुराननि गायो ।
 आरत-बंधु, कृपालु, मृदुल-चित जानि सरन हौं आयो ॥ 1 ॥
 तुम्हरे रिपुको अनुज बिभीषन, बंस निसाचर जायो ।
 सुनि गुन-सील-सुभाउ नाथको मैं चरननि चितु लायो ॥ 2 ॥
 जानत प्रभु दुख-सुख दासनिको, तातें कहि न सुनायो ।
 करि करुना भरि नयन बिलोकहु, तब जानौं अपनायो ॥ 3 ॥
 बचन बिनीत सुनत रघुनायक हँसि करि निकट बुलायो ।
 भेंट्यो हरि भरि अंक भरत-ज्यों, लंकापति मन भायो ॥ 4 ॥
 करपंकज सिर परसि अभय कियो, जनपर हेतु दिखायो ।
 तुलसिदास रघुबीर भजन करि को न परमपद पायो ? ॥ 5 ॥

(5/44)

dīna-hita birada purānani gāyō.

ārata-bandhu, kṛpālu, mṛdula-cita jāni sarana haum āyō.. 1..

tumharē ripukō anuja bibhiṣana, bansa nisācara jāyō.

sunī guna-sīla-subhā'u nāthakō maim caranani citu lāyō.. 2..

jānata prabhu dukha-sukha dāsanikō, tātēm kahi na sunāyō.

kari karunā bhari nayana bilōkahu, taba jānaum apanāyō.. 3..

bacana binīta sunata raghunāyaka haṁsi kari nikaṭa bulāyō.
 bhēṇṭyō hari bhari aṅka bharata-jyōm, laṅkāpati mana bhāyō.. 4.. karapaṅkaja sira parasi abhaya kiyō, janapara hētu dikhāyō.
 tulasidāsa raghubīra bhajana kari kō na paramapada pāyō?.. 5..

Vibhishan speaks to Lord Ram, and his Anointment
 As King of Lanka-II

Verse no. 5/44—[Vibhishan pleads with Lord Ram—] ‘Oh Lord! The Purans (ancient histories of the Hindus) have sung your glories (i.e. made you renowned) as being one who is the well-wisher and benefactor of the meek, weak, lowly, humble, wretched and downtrodden, the underdogs and the miserable ones (dīna-hita birada purānani gāyō).

I too have come to seek your refuge and shelter, recognising you as a friend of the lowly, the humble and the distressed, as being merciful, compassionate and gracious, and of being a sweet, amiable and friendly temperament (ārata-bandhu, kṛpālu, mṛdula-cita) (1).

I am born in the demon clan and am a younger brother of your arch enemy Ravana. Hearing your virtues, noble characters and merciful temperament, I have concentrated my mind in your holy feet (with the hope that you will bless me and be compassionate towards me) (2).

The Lord is aware of the joys and sorrows of those who serve him faithfully, with devotion and sincerity (i.e. the Lord knows the pain and sufferings as well as joys and happiness of all his devotees, followers and subordinates—because he is omniscient and resides in the heart of all as their soul). This is the reason why I have not told you anything; I did not mention in detail about my sufferings and agonies.

Now, only when you intently look at me with merciful, loving and compassionate eyes will I know that you have accepted me (as one of your own, as your devotee whom you have given refuge and shelter—taba jānaum apanāyō) (3).’

Hearing such prayerful words of earnest pleadings spoken by Vibhishan, Raghunayak (i.e. the Lord of king Raghu’s race; Lord Sri Ram) laughed (i.e. smiled politely) and called him near, embraced him, and held him close to his bosom as if he were his own brother Bharat¹, and regarded him as a king of Lanka for all practical purposes² (4).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/36, stanza no. 2; verse no. 5/43, stanza no. 4.

²Refer: Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/38, stanza no. 3; verse no. 5/43, stanza no. 4.]

Then, touching his (Vibhishan's) head with his lotus-like hands (i.e. palms), the Lord made him fearless—this is how Lord Ram exhibited his affection for his devotee (and faithful, loyal follower)³.

Tulsidas observes that indeed, who has not attained the most exalted and the supreme state (or status) of existence⁴ by worshipping and having devotion for Lord Sri Ram? (5).

[³To wit, the Lord not only elevated Vibhishan to the high stature of being equivalent to his own beloved brother Bharat, embracing him with the same affection as he would have embraced Bharat, but also made him the king of Lanka, and to top it he blessed Vibhishan by putting his hands on his head as a gesture of providing him fearlessness and abiding protection from his side.

⁴The 'supreme post or stature' for Vibhishan here has different connotations—in the material world it is the kingship of Lanka and freedom from Ravana's fear. In the spiritual realm it is to be blessed by the divine sight and blessing of the Lord, be recognised as his devotee, and attain the chance to serve his holy feet. And in the highest realm of metaphysics it is the oneness with the Supreme Soul. Frankly speaking, without any prejudice and interpolating with the context, this third state was attained by Ravana and Kumbhakarn but not by Vibhishan.

During the final battle, a bright shaft of effulgence representing the life-force or Soul had emerged from their bodies and merged with Sri Ram (Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103, and Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 71 respectively), but this privilege was denied to Vibhishan, albeit it is true that a devotee prefers to eternally serve the holy feet of the Lord, but the ultimate peace and bliss is attained only when the microcosmic soul merges with the macrocosmic Soul that is an eternal ocean of bliss—this stature both Ravana and Kumbhakarn achieved, but Vibhishan missed!]

राग धनाश्री

(5 / 45)

सत्य कहौं मेरो सहज सुभाउ ।
 सुनहु सखा कपिपति लंकापति, तुम्ह सन कौन दुराउ ॥ 1 ॥
 सब बिधि हीन—दीन, अति जड़मति जाको कतहुँ न ठाउँ ।
 आयो सरन भजौं, न तजौं तिहि, यह जानत रिषिराउ ॥ 2 ॥
 जिन्हके हौं हित सब प्रकार चित, नाहिन और उपाउ ।
 तिन्हहिं लागि धरि देह करौं सब, डरौं न सुजस नसाउ ॥ 3 ॥
 पुनि पुनि भुजा उठाइ कहत हौं, सकल सभा पतिआउ ।
 नहि कोऊ प्रिय मोहि दास सम, कपट—प्रीति बहि जाउ ॥ 4 ॥
 सुनि रघुपति बचन बिभीषन प्रेम—मगन, मन चाउ ।
 तुलसिदास तजि आस—त्रास सब ऐसे प्रभु कहँ गाउ ॥ 5 ॥

rāga dhanāśrī

(5/45)

satya kahauṁ mērō sahaja subhā'u.
 sunahu sakhā kapipati laṅkāpati, tumha sana kauna durā'u.. 1..
 saba bidhi hīna-dīna, ati jaṛamati jākō katahuṁ na ṭhā'uṁ.
 āyō sarana bhajauṁ, na tajauṁ tihi, yaha jānata riṣirā'u.. 2..
 jinhakē hauṁ hita saba prakāra cita, nāhina aura upā'u.
 tinhahirṁ lāgi dhari dēha karauṁ saba, ḍarauṁ na sujasa nasā'u.. 3..

puni puni bhujā uṭhā'i kahata haurṁ, sakala sabhā pati'ā'u.
 nahi kō'ū priya mōhi dāsa sama, kapaṭa-prīti bahi jā'u.. 4..
 suni raghupati bacana bibhīṣana prēma-magana, mana cā'u.
 tulasidāsa taji āsa-trāsa saba aisē prabhu kahaṁ gā'u.. 5..

Lord Ram's Proclamation

Verse no. 5/45—[After giving refuge and shelter to Vibhishan, Lord Ram made his basic kind and merciful nature known to the assembly. Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 48 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it where the same declaration has been made by Lord Ram.

Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, (i) from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 85—to Doha no. 87 where Lord Ram has preached the saintly crow Kaagbhusund on the same theme; (ii) from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 42 where Lord Ram has preached to Hanuman and Bharat and the rest of the company about the characters of saintly people who are dear to him; and (iii) from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 43—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 47 where Lord Ram has preached the citizens of Ayodhya about the characters of people who are dear to him.

If one understands the import of these teachings, one is motivated to improve one's self and inculcate these virtues that would make him feel very comfortable and assured of redemption at the hands of Lord Ram. It also motivates one to surrender himself fearlessly before the Lord who is none but the Supreme Being in a visible human form, a prospect that makes seeking deliverance and salvation so much the easier as compared to worshipping a God who is unknown and unseen.]

[Lord Sri Ram proclaimed—] 'I speak truthfully about my inherent and natural temperament. Listen attentively, the king of monkeys (Sugriv) and the king of Lanka (Vibhishan). There is nothing which I have to conceal from you (1).

He—who is lowly, drowntrodden, meek, humble, most foolish and highly unfortunate, one who has no where to go and has no destination, one who has no succour and solace anywhere in this world—if any such person comes to me seeking shelter and refuge, I 'serve' him in all possible ways, and never abandon, avoid or forsake him. This fact is well known to (and endorsed by) sage Valmiki and other exalted sages and seers (2).

Those whose mind and intellect regard me as their sole benefactor, their only protector, and their single well-wisher, and who find no solution (or way out) of their problems except seeking my refuge (i.e. they are in a virtual log-jam in this mundane world but sincerely seek a way out of their quandry)—I assume a human form for them and finish off all their works for them, not bothering (or fearing) that by doing any such act my reputation and fame will be harmed or tainted in any way¹ (3).

[¹To wit, I am not tardy and reluctant at helping my devotees, even at the cost of tarnishing my immaculate image or reputation. Sri Ram seems to justify his many acts that would seem a little bit unrighteous on their face. But since those acts would be of good of his devotees, the Lord did not hesitate to do them. For instance, his acceptance of Vibhishan would seem as a strategic military move to spark dissention and desertion in the enemy's camp, as well as to give shelter to such deserters and traitors to serve strategic gains on the battle field and get insider information on the enemy's army and preparedness. But the Lord did not accept Vibhishan for this reason; the Lord accepted him as he was subjected to immense torment and was suffering horrors under the rule of his cruel and selfish demon brother Ravana who did not know what good treatment to his dependants meant.

Think what would be the fate of Vibhishan if Lord Ram had turned him away for fear of inviting ill-fame in the world for giving refuge to traitors such as Vibhishan? The latter would have surely been tortured to death by Ravana. Since Vibhishan came to seek help from the Lord when he was in immense consternation and fear of his life, it was incumbent upon the Lord to extend his protection to him because it his declared policy to give protection to all who come to seek it, and especially when Vibhishan was not in the wrong and was a pious soul. The Lord just could not refuse him.

Similar accusation can be made with respect of Lord Ram dethroning Baali and putting Sugriv on the throne of Kishkindha—because then Sugriv would be obliged to the Lord and be under his command, almost like his vassal, providing the much needed army and arms for the campaign of Lanka. In this case, Lord Ram was more concerned for the good and welfare of Sugriv who had been wronged by his brother Baali. If mere help of the monkey army was the Lord's concern in making Sugriv the king of Kishkindha, the same objective could have been more easily achieved by seeking the help of Baali if Lord Ram would have helped the latter in capturing Sugriv. But the Lord preferred to accept the ignominy of taking sides in what was a mutual conflict between two brothers as it helped Sugriv to regain his honour and rightful share.

Earlier also, Lord Ram had liberated Ahilya, the wife of sage Guatam who was in the form of a stone, by 'touching her with his feet', something which is not totally beyond reproach as it is not right to touch a woman, especially if she is a sage's wife. But since this seemingly not-so-right action was necessary for the good of Ahilya, the Lord did it, fully knowing that the coming generation would continue to raise fingers at him for this kind act.]

I repeatedly lift my arms and declare, let the whole assembly listen carefully to it and believe my words—no one is dearer to me than my servant (i.e. my ardent devotee, humble follower, refuge seeker). But yes, that servant should be of pure intellect, pure mind and pure heart, uncorrupt, truthful, honest, free from deceit and conceit, and of pure disposition in all possible ways² (4).'

[²To wit, the Lord does not accept rascals and pretenders who wish to escape judgment by taking the garb of a devotee of the Lord for the time till he can hide himself from punishment, only to rear his ugly head and go back to his old evil ways once the danger of punishment is over. For in all sooth, this is not allowed; the Lord makes it clear here when he says that he abhors deception, pretensions, conceit, deceit, or cunning of any kind. If one wishes the Lord to help him or her, then he or she has to first clean the heart and mind before expecting anything from the Lord.

Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 44; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 48.]

Hearing these words of Raghupati (Sri Ram), Vibhishan was overwhelmed with waves of surging affections and emotions of endearment for the gracious Lord, while his heart and mind were greatly encouraged and enthused by the Lord's solemn oath.

Tulsidas advises that one should avoid or abandon all hopes of succour and solace from this world, and become fearless by taking refuge with Lord Ram. One should sing the glories, the virtues and the fames of such a (munificent, benevolent, merciful, compassionate, gracious, benign, magnanimous and kind) Lord as Sri Ram! (5).

-----**-----

Chapter 10

Building a Bridge across the Ocean; Crossing of it and Landing of Lord Ram's Forces on the Soil of Lanka

In Chapter no. 10 we shall read how Lord Ram's huge army crossed the ocean and landed on the soil of Lanka by constructing a bridge across the mighty ocean, spanning it from its northern shore till its shores in Lanka in the south. Since Lanka was situated at a distance of 100 Yojans (approximately 800 miles) in the middle of the ocean from its northern shore where Lord Ram had pitched his camp, it follows that this Bridge was also of this length.

It was indeed an awesome and spectacular sight to behold, of the formidable army of Lord Ram consisting of monkeys and bears crossing the mighty ocean, covering not only the surface of the bridge from one end to the other but also the surface of the ocean itself as the Kapi warriors enthusiastically and excitedly ran forward, energetically hopping, leaping and jumping over the backs of all sorts of marine creatures, small and large, that had come to the surface of the water due to the sudden obstruction of its flow caused by the bridge, as well as due to the extraordinary noise and tumult that was created by the excited waves after waves of cheering and shouting Kapi warriors who were eager to get to the other side ahead of their companions.

Once across, the Lord pitched his camp on "Mt. Subel", the third of the three summits of the Trikoot mountain upon which Lanka was situated. As has been noted earlier, this third summit known as 'Subel' was actually a plateau which was normally used by the demons for practicing martial arts, but which was now to be used as the battle-field of the impending war. {Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 5; and (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11; (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 8.}.

This Chapter no. 10 has been divided into two sections as follows:

Section 10.1—This section again has two sub-sections as follows:

Sub-section 10.1.1—It describes our Story from Ram Charit Manas. It picks up the thread of this fascinating Story from where we took a pause at the end of the previous sub-section 9.1, i.e. now we start reading from Ram Charit Manas once again, from Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 50—to—Doha no. 60.

Sub-section 10.1.2—It narrates our Story from Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to—Doha no. 5; and (ii) Doha no. 11 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

Section 10.2—It narrates this part of our Story from Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos.49-87, and Canto 4, verse nos. 1-8.

Section 10.1: Ram Charit Manas

Sub-section 10.1.1—Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 50 to Doha no. 60:-

After accepting Vibhishan in his camp, Lord Ram called him and the monkey king (Surgriv) to hold a consultation regarding the next course of action to be taken, which was to decide on the question of ‘how to cross the ocean’. In this meeting Vibhishan suggested that though Lord Ram was capable of drying the ocean by his arrows but it would be strategically better and wiser to adopt a reconciliatory approach towards it by first politely requesting the deity representing the ocean to give them a safe passage across the water to Lanka. If it fails then the other option of using force was always open.

Vibhishan’s approach was right from the military point of view, as it would be wiser to not annoy the deity of the ocean by straightaway using force against it as it would mean the ocean becomes an enemy of the Lord’s forces, and it may prove disastrous once the army lands in Lanka and the war actually starts because they will have an enemy in their rear, right in their back yard, who may want to take revenge for his humiliation at the opportune time. This may prove fatal in case of an emergency when some kind of strategic retreat becomes necessary during the course of the war. But if the deity of the ocean voluntarily agrees to allow the Lord’s army to cross the water, then he would be friendly, and there would be no danger of back-stabbing.

So Lord Ram agreed to try out this approach, first as it was correct line to be adopted in the face of an impending ferocious war in an alien land, and second to show respect to his new friend Vibhishan and to signal to him that his advice is given its due weight.

Meanwhile, when Vibhishan had left Lanka upon being rebuked and insulted by his elder brother Ravana, the latter had sent one of his trusted spies, a demon named Suk, behind Vibhishan to follow his movements and report back about the developments. Suk had witnessed how Vibhishan was warmly welcomed by Lord Ram and shown great affection and respect. He was so emotionally overwhelmed by the Lord’s gracious nature that for a moment he forgot he was a spy and openly acclaimed the glory of Lord Ram. This indiscretion on his part revealed his identity, and he was caught by the guards of the Lord’s army, and beaten mercilessly. But when Laxman came to know of it he pardoned him; he gave Suk a letter addressed to Ravana and allowed him to go back home to Lanka safely.

This merciful nature of Laxman, and the earlier observation of Lord Ram’s nature vis-à-vis Vibhishan, had such a profound impact on Suk that he went back to Ravana's court, and much to the annoyance and chagrin of the demon king, praised Lord Ram lavishly, proclaiming the Lord's kind and gracious nature. Suk even went to the extent of telling Ravana that the path of confrontation that he has adopted against Lord Ram was totally wrong, and he should return Sita to the Lord and make a rapprochement with him.

At this, Ravana kicked him the same way he had earlier kicked Vibhishan, and like Vibhishan, Suk too went to surrender to Lord Ram, praying for acceptance. The all-knowing Lord not only accepted him most affectionately but also blessed him so that Suk was freed from a curse cast upon him earlier by sage Agastya, and resumed his earlier form of a great sage.

In the meantime, Lord Ram tried all means to please the ocean's deity and seek permission to cross the ocean without use of force, but the deity remained stubborn, not even having the courtesy to pay its obeisance to the Lord. Finding this option closed and time running out, the Lord finally decided to show his might and asked Laxman to bring his fiery arrow so that he can now dry up the ocean.

Facing the prospect of complete annihilation, the ocean and its deity finally surrendered before Lord Ram; the Ocean, or rather the deity representing the ocean, appeared in person before the Lord with a lot of precious gifts that are exclusively found in the ocean, such as pearls, corals, shells etc., asking for mercy.

The Ocean then advised the Lord to build a bridge across its surface, promising that he would fully cooperate in its construction, and will not disturb or dismantle the bridge at any cost.

Lord Ram obliged the Ocean by heeding to the latter's request by eliminating his enemies in the north who were constantly annoying the Ocean. The Ocean felt exceedingly grateful towards the Lord, and returned after paying obeisance to him.

This part of the wondrous Story is now narrated as follows:

पुनि सर्वग्य सर्व उर बासी । सर्वरूप सब रहित उदासी ॥ ३ ॥
 बोले बचन नीति प्रतिपालक । कारन मनुज दनुज कुल घलक ॥ ४ ॥
 सुनु कपीस लंकापति बीरा । केहि बिधि तरिअ जलधि गंभीरा ॥ ५ ॥ संकुल मकर उरग झष जाती । अति अगाध दुस्तर सब भाँती ॥ ६ ॥ puni sarbagya sarba ura bāsī. sarbarūpa saba rahita udāsī. 3.

 bōlē bacana nīti pratipālaka. kārana manuja danuja kula ghalaka. 4.
 sunu kapīsa laṅkāpati bīrā. kēhi bidhi tari'a jaladhi gambhīrā. 5.
 saṅkula makara uraga jhaṣa jāṭī. ati agādha dustara saba bhāṁṭī. 6.

Then Lord Ram—the Supreme Being who is all-knowing and omniscient, who resides in the subtle space of the heart of all living beings (as their pure consciousness known as the Atma), who has revealed himself in all the forms that constitute this creation, especially as a human being with the purpose of eliminating the scourge of the demon race, but who, inspite of his omnipresence and an all-pervading nature, is essentially detached from everything¹—spoke wise and prudent words that suited the occasion, and also conformed to the form of a human being that he had assumed². (3-4)

Lord Ram said, ‘Listen the brave king of monkeys (Sugriv) and the equally brave king of Lanka (i.e. Vibhishan)³. Tell me now, how shall we cross the formidable ocean? (5)

It is full of huge alligators and crocodiles, as well as formidable sea serpents and fish of all denominations, and of all sizes and shapes. It is also deep and vast, appearing to be un-crossable.’ (6)

[Note—¹To wit, Lord Ram, is a personified form of the cosmic Consciousness known as the Parmatma, the Supreme Atma or the Supreme Being, also known as ‘Brahm’. This whole creation is revelation of Brahm, which implies that each single entity in this creation is a form of Brahm. If the ‘Consciousness’ is known as the Parmatma at the macrocosmic level, it is known as the ‘Atma’ of the individual living being at the microcosmic level. That is to say, there is nothing that is not “Ram”. In spite of this universal Truth, the Lord remains detached from everything. So therefore, in spite of residing in the heart of all living beings and assuming the identity of everything that exists in this vast creation, Lord Ram is deemed to be independent from them.

²Lord Ram was the almighty Supreme Being, and as such he need not consult anyone and seek advice. But presently he was in the form of a human being, so he had to act and speak as a human being, and not as the Supreme Being. How would a human being behave when faced with a daunting challenge? He would consult his friends and well-wishers; a king would consult his ministers and commanders. So therefore, Lord Ram sought advice from his friends and advisors, presently Vibhishan and Sugriv, about what is to be done now.

³Lord Ram has addressed Vibhishan as the ‘king of Lanka’ (laṅkāpati) because he had declared him as the next king of Lanka once the war was over by anointing him—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 49 along with Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede it.]

कह लंकेस सुनुहु रघुनायक । कोटि सिंधु सोषक तव सायक ॥ ७ ॥ जद्यपि तदपि नीति असि गाई । बिनय करिअ सागर सन जाई ॥ ८ ॥ kaha laṅkēsa sunahu raghunāyaka. kōṭi sindhu sōṣaka tava sāyaka. 7.

jadyapi tadapi nīti asi gāī. binaya kari'a sāgara sana jāī. 8.

Vibhishan offered his advice to Lord Ram by replying, ‘Oh Lord of the Raghus (raghunāyaka), listen. Although your arrows have the ability to dry up countless such oceans by its fiery nature, yet it is prudent and better advised to first try a gentler method to tame the ocean politely (before resorting to the use of force)¹.

So therefore, you should pray to the deity of the ocean, requesting him to give us a passage across the surface of the water. (7-8)

[Note—¹Vibhishan wished to ensure that the deity of the ocean is not offended as far as it was possible; this was to safeguard the rear of the monkey army once the war started in Lanka by keeping the deity of the ocean in good humour by not offending the ocean and making it their enemy. A friendly ocean would be helpful during the course of the war in case of an emergency when the need for a strategic retreat arose, and the army of Lord Ram wished to leave the shore of Lanka quickly. Surely it is not wise to have someone who is inimical in one's backyard.]

दो०. प्रभु तुम्हार कुलगुर जलधि कहिहि उपाय बिचारि ।
बिनु प्रयास सागर तरिहि सकल भालु कपि धारि ॥ ५० ॥
dōhā.

prabhu tumhāra kulagura jaladhi kahihi upāya bicāri.
binu prayāsa sāgara tarihi sakala bhālu kapi dhāri. 50.

Oh Lord (prabhu)! The deity of the ocean is a senior member of your clan; he is one of your ancestors¹. Hence, it is necessary to show him due respect and seek his permission to cross the water, for then he will consider your request and suggest a solution so that the monkey and bear warriors would be able to cross the ocean easily, without taking much trouble. (Doha no. 50)

[Note—¹King Sagar, who was an ancient king and an ancestor of Lord Ram, had created the ocean by getting the earth dug up. This is the reason the ocean was called after him as 'Saagar'. So, the deity of the ocean will certainly cooperate with Lord Ram as he belongs to the family of king Sagar. It is also proper to seek the blessings of one's ancestors at the beginning of an enterprise instead of offending them.

Hence, the best course of action would be to first politely ask the deity of the ocean to allow the army to pass over the surface of the water before resorting to some other means.]

चौ०. सखा कही तुम्ह नीकि उपाई । करिअ दैव जौं होइ सहाई ॥ १ ॥
मंत्र न यह लछिमन मन भावा । राम बचन सुनि अति दुख पावा ॥ २ ॥
नाथ दैव कर कवन भरोसा । सोषिअ सिंधु करिअ मन रोसा ॥ ३ ॥ कादर मन कहूँ एक अधारा । दैव दैव आलसी पुकारा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

sakhā kahī tumha nīki upāī. kari'a daiva jaum hō'i sahāī. 1.
mantra na yaha lachimana mana bhāvā. rāma bacana suni ati dukha pāvā. 2.
nātha daiva kara kavana bharōsā. sōṣi'a sindhu kari'a mana rōsā. 3.
kādara mana kahūṁ ēka adhārā. daiva daiva ālasī pukārā. 4.

Lord Ram replied to Vibhishan, 'My friend. The course of action that you suggest is indeed right, and we may succeed in it if the gods are favourable and willing to help and cooperate in this matter.' (1)

This council of Vibhishan, however, did not find favour with Laxman; he did not agree with it. He felt very sad when he heard Lord Ram speak in its favour. (2)

So he (Laxman) interjected and expressed his strong reservations in this method of trying to appease the deity of the ocean by begging it to give the Lord and his army a passage across the water of the ocean, and relying on the mercy of the gods to succeed in this endeavour.

Laxman said, ‘Oh Lord! What reliance can be put on gods and their whims; how can one be certain of the freakish nature of fate and fortune? Me thinks that it would be wiser for you to be more determined in your mind and become proactive; you should become aggressive and dry up the ocean (with your fiery arrows)¹. (3)

Only those who are cowards and lazy think of praying to gods and humbly submit themselves to their wishes, blaming their misfortunes to pre-determined destiny². (4)

[Note—¹Laxman doubted Vibhishan’s integrity; is it possible that he was trying to delay the progress of the Lord’s army by wasting time in prayers and attempts at appeasement of the ocean? Is Vibhishan secretly not in favour of launching an assault on Lanka? Does he want that the demons get a chance to prepare for the war during the time the Lord spends in prayers and making humble requests to the ocean’s deity to let his army go across the water of the ocean?

Or is it possible that Vibhishan is playing some kind of dirty trick on Lord Ram by making him pray to the ocean and submitting himself to the mercy of its deity who may grant initial permission to the Lord to cross the heaving waters of the mighty ocean, only to suddenly betray him and go back on his words while the Lord’s army is mid-way across its surface; in this scenario the whole army would be drowned! Perhaps Vibhishan has cooked up the story of his being kicked out of the kingdom by his brother Ravana so that he can gain the Lord’s sympathy, only to stab him in the back at the first opportunity. It is quite possible that the demons have some secret tactical understanding with the ocean’s deity who may easily agree with the Lord’s request to allow his army to go across the ocean, and then submerge the whole army while it is left to the mercy of the water of the ocean, with no solid ground under its feet.

Laxman thought over all these possibilities and determined that the best course of action was not to be humble and submissive, but to be aggressive and proactive. This attitude would also boost the morale of the Lord’s army as all its soldiers (the monkey and bear warriors) were in favour of an all-out war instead of making compromises. If they found that their own Lord is weak in mind, being fearful of gods and submissive to their whims, and seeks an easy way out of things instead of being determined and confident of his own abilities to face hurdles and adversities, then it would be disastrous for the outcome of the war.

²To wit, lazy people want everything served to them on a platter; they loathe making effort to achieve success and attain their goals. They meekly accept whatever comes their way. If success comes to them and they make some gain, they say that they are lucky; if they fail they blame their misfortunes on bad destiny.

Similarly, cowards don’t have the courage to stand up boldly to face their enemy and adversary; they meekly submit themselves to their opponents without a fight.

Neither of these two attitudes is good for a man of excellent character. Submitting to the ocean humbly and meekly will not be proper for the Lord; he should take up arms and show his mettle by making the ocean submit to his might instead.]

सुनत बिहसि बोले रघुबीरा । ऐसेहिं करब धरहु मन धीरा ॥ ५ ॥ अस कहि प्रभु अनुजहि समुझाई । सिंधु समीप गए रघुराई ॥ ६ ॥ sunata bihasi bōlē raghubīrā. aisēhiṁ karaba dharahu mana dhīrā. 5.

 asa kahi prabhu anujahi samujhā'ī. sindhu samīpa ga'e raghurā'ī. 6.

When Lord Raghubir (Lord Sri Ram) heard what Laxman said, he smiled and said, 'Wait a while; have patience for I shall do as you advice.'¹ (5)

In this way, the Lord reassured his younger brother (Laxman). Then, the Lord of the Raghus ("raghurā'ī"; Lord Ram) went near the ocean (i.e. he went to shore of the ocean). (6)

[Note—¹Lord Ram fully appreciated Laxman's views. He smiled at Laxman to indicate that he is aware of the situation, but there is a reason why he wishes to follow Vibhishan's advice first, before taking up arms against the ocean. What was the reason? First, the Lord wished to tell Vibhishan that he gives importance to him and treats him as his close associate. From a strategic and military point of view it was very important to take Vibhishan into confidence and make him believe that the Lord has great faith in him and fully relies on him, because Vibhishan can help the Lord and his army by disclosing all the secrets of the demons, their strengths and weaknesses, the chinks in the defences of the demon army and the fort of Lanka, which in turn will enable the Lord's army to easily overrun obstacles as soon as the war begins, as well as during the course of the war.

By smiling at Laxman the Lord indicated to him that he knows what the former says is true, but "let us wait for a while to prove that Vibhishan is wrong". This will be helpful in the future, for at times when Lord Ram or Laxman would have to neglect Vibhishan or overrule his advice during the heat of battle, they would have a precedent to justify their actions—that Vibhishan's council is not acceptable at that particular instance as he oftentimes makes an error of judgement, as is evident from the case when he had advised the Lord to pray to the deity of the ocean to allow the army to cross the barrier that the ocean presented to its progress, but which method failed completely.]

प्रथम प्रनाम कीन्ह सिरु नाई । बैठे पुनि तट दर्भ डसाई ॥ ७ ॥ जबहिं बिभीषन प्रभु पहिं आए । पाछें रावन दूत पठाए ॥ ८ ॥ prathama pranāma kīnha siru nā'ī. baiṭhē puni taṭa darbha ḍasā'ī. 7.

 jabahiṁ bibhīṣana prabhu pahīṁ ā'e. pāchēm rāvana dūta paṭhā'ē. 8.

When the Lord reached to shore of the ocean, he first bowed his head to the deity of the ocean to pay his obeisance to it, and then spread a seating mat on the ground near the shore and sat down on it calmly to pray humbly and meditate¹. (7)

In the meantime, when Vibhishan had left Lanka and come to Lord Ram, Ravana had sent one of his trusted spies (named Suk) to follow Vibhishan and track his movements. [This spy was tasked with reconnaissance, and to report back to Ravana about the latest developments.] (8)

[Note—¹To wit, Lord Ram approached the ocean in a peaceful way, without showing any sign of aggression. He had a calm mind and a submissive demeanour. He cast aside his arms, the bow and the arrow, to indicate that he has no intention to challenge the might of the deity of the ocean.]

दो०. सकल चरित तिन्ह देखे धरें कपट कपि देह । प्रभु गुन हृदयँ सराहहिं सरनागत पर नेह ॥ ५१ ॥
dōhā.

sakala carita tinha dēkhē dharēm kapaṭa kapi dēha.
prabhu guna hṛdayaṁ sarāhahim saranāgata para nēha. 51.

That spy had assumed a false form of a monkey to avoid detection. In this deceitful form he had closely observed everything first hand.

He was greatly impressed by Lord Ram's gracious and magnanimous nature by which he shows such exceptional grace and mercy on those who come to seek refuge with him and surrender themselves at his feet¹. The spy therefore highly praised the Lord in his heart for this excellent and glorious virtue of his. (Doha no. 51)

[Note—¹The spy was amazed at the warm welcome that Lord Ram extended to Vibhishan, and accepting him in his camp affectionately inspite of his knowing that Vibhishan was a demon and a brother of his enemy Ravana, and also while his own commanders, such as Sugriv etc., expressed a strong reservation against accepting Vibhishan in the camp as he might spy on them and relay all information to their enemy, the demons. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 43—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 45.}

This attribute of Lord Ram that he cares more for those who are suffering and seek his protection than for his own safety overwhelmed Suk, the spy, so much so that he could not conceal his joy at having met such a gracious Lord. His happiness was so profound that he could not suppress his emotions; he loudly proclaimed the Lord's glory which betrayed his true identity and led to his capture, as will be evident in the following verses.]

चौ०. प्रगट बखानहिं राम सुभाऊ । अति सप्रेम गा बिसरि दुराऊ ॥ १ ॥
रिपु के दूत कपिन्ह तब जाने । सकल बाँधि कपीस पहिं आने ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

pragaṭa bakhānahim rāma subhā'ū. ati saprēma gā bisari durā'ū. 1.
ripu kē dūta kapinha taba jānē. sakala bāṁdhi kapīsa pahim ānē. 2.

Ravana's agent or spy (named Suk) was so overwhelmed with joy at having witnessed the nobility of Lord Ram's heart as well as his magnanimous and gracious nature that he could not suppress his emotions. He became ecstatic so much that he affectionately lauded the greatness of Lord Ram and his excellent virtues openly, in a very effusive way. For a moment he forgot that his own master (Ravana) was inimical to Lord Ram, and there was an intense animosity between the demon race and the Lord. (1)

[This burst of emotional ecstasy betrayed him, and the monkeys immediately caught him as being an outsider.] The Kapis (the monkey warriors; the guards of the Lord's army) realised that he was an agent or a spy of the enemy (Ravana, the king of the demons). So they caught hold of him, tied him up, and brought him as a captive to their king Sugriv. (2)

कह सुग्रीव सुनुहु सब बानर । अंग भंग करि पठवहु निसिचर ॥ ३ ॥
 सुनि सुग्रीव बचन कपि धाए । बाँधि कटक चहु पास फिराए ॥ ४ ॥
 बहु प्रकार मारन कपि लागे । दीन पुकारत तदपि न त्यागे ॥ ५ ॥
 जो हमार हर नासा काना । तेहि कोसलाधीस कै आना ॥ ६ ॥ kaha sugrīva sunahu saba bānara. aṅga bhaṅga kari paṭhavahu nisicara. 3.

 suni sugrīva bacana kapi dhā'ē. bāṁdhi kaṭaka cahu pāsa phirā'ē. 4.
 bahu prakāra mārana kapi lāgē. dīna pukārata tadapi na tyāgē. 5.
 jō hamāra hara nāsā kānā. tēhi kōsalādhīsa kai ānā. 6.

Sugriv instructed his monkey warriors, 'Listen all of you monkeys. Disfigure this demon by mutilating his body, and then let him go back¹. (3)

The monkeys immediately lunged at the spy and tied him more tightly; then they made him walk around the whole camp of the monkey army as a captive to humiliate him. (4)

While the spy was being taken around the camp, the monkey warriors beat him mercilessly in different ways, subjecting him to kicks and blows. He pleaded for mercy and piteously cried for help, but to no avail, as the monkeys continued to jeer at him and beat him viciously. (5)

Overcome with dismay and seeing no hope of succour any other way, the spy finally decided to invoke the merciful nature of Lord Ram in order to get rid of his tormentors. He pleaded, 'In the name of the Lord of Kaushal ("kōsalādhīsa"; Lord Ram) I solemnly urge you not to harm me any further, and not to cut off my nose or ear². (6)

[Note—¹We may recall that when Hanuman was caught and brought to the court of Ravana in Lanka, the demon king also gave similar instructions—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 24.

It appears that at the time to which our Story relates it was a practice to punish a spy by mutilating him and sending him back to his master as a token of causing insult and inflicting injury to the master himself. It was a sort of a challenge to the opposite party to come forward to settle scores if he dares to do so, or otherwise accept defeat. It was a grave provocation to the master himself who had sent the messenger or the agent, as the latter was merely carrying out his duty and acting on behalf of his master.

²Sugriv had not told his warriors to cut-off the 'nose and ears' of the spy; he had merely instructed them to mutilate him. How then did the spy guess that his captors were preparing to chop off his nose and ears? Well, the answer is simple: There was a precedent; Laxman had cut-off the nose and ears of Supernakha, the sister of Ravana. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 17.

So the spy feared that these monkeys would follow the example set by Laxman and repeat what he had done to the demoness Supernakha.]

सुनि लछिमन सब निकट बोलाए । दया लागि हँसि तुरत छोड़ाए ॥ ७ ॥ रावन कर दीजहु यह पाती । लछिमन बचन बाचु कुलघाती ॥ ८ ॥ sunī lachimana saba nikṭa bōlā'ē. dayā lāgi haṁsi turata chōṛā'ē. 7.

rāvana kara dījahu yaha pātī. lachimana bacana bācu kulaghātī. 8.

When Laxman heard the pitiful cries of the demon, he called everyone near. When he found out what had happened, he took pity for the demon and smiled, ordering him to be set free immediately. (7)

Then he gave the demon a letter for Ravana and said, 'Give this letter to Ravana, the one who would ruin his own race, and tell him to read this missive as a personal message from Laxman. (8)

दो०. कहेहु मुखागर मूढ़ सन मम संदेसु उदार । सीता देइ मिलहु न त आवा कालु तुम्हार ॥ ५२ ॥
dōhā.

kahēhu mukhāgara mūṛha sana mama sandēsu udāra.
sītā dē'i milahu na ta āvā kālu tumhāra. 52.

Tell that stupid fellow in an emphatic way that I am sending this message to him for his own welfare and good.

Tell him that he should give (return) Sita back and come to meet us to make peace. Otherwise, let it be known to him that his doom is a foregone conclusion; that Death is coming to him sooner than he expected.' (Doha no. 52)

चौ०. तुरत नाइ लछिमन पद माथा । चले दूत बरनत गुन गाथा ॥ १ ॥
कहत राम जसु लंकाँ आए । रावन चरन सीस तिन्ह नाए ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

turata nā'i lachimana pada māthā. calē dūta baranata guna gāthā. 1. kahata rāma jasu laṅkāṃ ā'ē. rāvana carana sīsa tinha nā'ē. 2.

The messenger bowed his head to Laxman and immediately departed for Lanka, lauding Laxman's virtues and extolling his qualities on his way back home. (1)

At the time when he reached Lanka, the messenger was applauding the excellent glories of Lord Ram. Then he went to the court of Ravana and bowed his head at the latter's feet. (2)

बिहसि दसानन पूँछी बाता । कहसि न सुक आपनि कुसलाता ॥ ३ ॥
पुनि कहु खबरि बिभीषन केरी । जाहि मृत्यु आई अति नेरी ॥ ४ ॥ करत राज लंका सठ त्यागी । होइहि जव कर कीट अभागी ॥ ५ ॥ bihasi dasānana pūṁchī bātā. kahasi na suka āpani kusalātā. 3.

puni kahu khabari bibhīṣana kērī. jāhi mṛtyu ā'ī ati nērī. 4.
karata rāja laṅkā saṭha tyāgī. hō'ihī java kara kiṭa abhāgī. 5.

When Ravana saw the messenger, he laughed in a derisive manner¹ and asked him, 'Well, why don't you first tell me about your welfare?' (3)

Then report to me about Vibhishan whose death seems to have come calling upon him. (4)

He (Vibhishan) is such a stupid fellow that while he was living a comfortable life as a ruler in Lanka where he could have lived without fear, he chose to leave it, and now (by joining that hermit, Lord Ram) he will die like that wretched beetle that gets crushed and smothered along with the grains of barley when they are crushed to make flour². (5)

[Note—¹Why did Ravana laugh? When he saw the messenger standing silently as if in a state of confusion, he thought that the latter had faced some great trouble and was yet to overcome the mental trauma of his experience. The fact is that the messenger was indeed emotionally overwhelmed and so dazed that he stood silently, unable to speak anything. His speechlessness was not out of any bad experience, but because he was uncertain what to say and how to express himself.

He was so impressed by the good nature of Lord Ram and Laxman that when he stood before his own master Ravana, whose evil nature he was well acquainted with, he was undecided for some moment what to say.

Should he speak the truth about his own first hand experience and tell Ravana and all other demons present in the court that Lord Ram is not the sort he is depicted to be by their king (Ravana), for he found the Lord to be extremely gracious, generous and kind unlike what he expected of him according to the general bad impression he had had of Lord Ram due to the misinformation given by Ravana about him, or should he speak lies and criticise the Lord just to please Ravana, out of fear of annoying him which might cost him his own life?

The messenger was in a dilemma for some time, but then he chose the path of 'Truth' and decided to tell Ravana that he was pursuing a wrong path by unnecessarily confronting Lord Ram. This will be clear when he spoke.

²To wit, if Vibhishan had remained in Lanka he would have lived a life like that of a prince, because he is my younger brother. But when death comes calling, even the wisest man loses his senses; so he fell pray to the trap laid out for him by the death god by abandoning Lanka and joining the camp of Lord Ram. His fate is doomed now, for when the war begins and Lord Ram's army is crushed by the demon army, Vibhishan too would perish along with the rest of them. Don't blame me for Vibhishan's destiny.]

पुनि कहु भालु कीस कटकाई । कठिन काल प्रेरित चलि आई ॥ ६ ॥
जिन्ह के जीवन कर रखवारा । भयउ मृदुल चित सिंधु बिचारा ॥ ७ ॥ कहु तपसिन्ह कै बात बहोरी । जिन्ह के हृदयँ त्रास अति मोरी ॥ ८ ॥ puni kahu bhālu kīsa kaṭakā'ī. kaṭhina kāla prērita cali ā'ī. 6.

jinha kē jīvana kara rakhavārā. bhaya'u mṛdula cita sindhu bicārā. 7.
kahu tapasinha kai bāta bahōrī. jinha kē hṛdayaṁ trāsa ati mōrī. 8.

Tell me next about the army of a motley horde of monkeys and bears who have dared to come here, driven by their dark and doomed fate. [Tell me about their numbers, their arms, their enthusiasm, their strengths and their weaknesses etc.] (6)

Fortunately, the poor Ocean has been kind-hearted and graceful enough to become a protector of their lives by standing in the way and preventing them from proceeding any further!

[But will the Ocean succeed in saving their lives for long? I don't think so, for this poor fellow is not strong enough to counter the force of Providence and Destiny which have decided about the doom of these poor monkeys and bears, for sooner rather than later they would overcome the resistance offered by the Ocean and cross over to Lanka where 'death' awaits them with open arms.] (7)

After that, tell me more about those two hermits (Lord Ram and Laxman) who harbour an intense fear of me secretly in their hearts.

[To wit, they are terribly scared of me in their hearts, but put up a bold face outwardly as if they do not care for me. Well, let me hear about them, and tell me about their general behaviour and facial expressions that would betray their nervousness and the gravity of the fear lurking in their minds and hearts.] (8)

दो०. की भइ भेंट कि फिरि गए श्रवन सुजसु सुनि मोर । कहसि न रिपु दल तेज बल बहुत चकित चित तोर ॥ ५३ ॥
dōhā.

kī bha'i bhēṇṭa ki phiri ga'ē śravana sujasa suni mōra.
kahasi na ripu dala tēja bala bahuta cakita cita tōra. 53.

Did you meet those hermits, or did they turn back and return home after hearing of my glory and fame¹.

I observe that you seem to be extremely dazed and out of your wits. Well, what is the matter with you; why don't you come out of your shell and frankly disclose what confounds you. Why don't you tell us about what you saw and experienced about the enemy's strength and abilities as well as his weaknesses that has left you so much perplexed?' (Doha no. 53)

[Note—¹Tell me if you found those two hermit brothers, or was it that they decided not to confront me and turned back after hearing of my matchless reputation as an invincible warrior whose strength, powers, valour and abilities have enabled him to subdue even the so-called powerful gods of heaven, and who has conquered every known powerful army in this world as no one has been able to stand before him in the battle-field.]

चौ०. नाथ कृपा करि पूँछेहु जैसैं । मानहु कहा क्रोध तजि तैसैं ॥ १ ॥
मिला जाइ जब अनुज तुम्हारा । जातहिं राम तिलक तेहि सारा ॥ २ ॥
रावन दूत हमहि सुनि काना । कपिन्ह बाँधि दीन्हें दुख नाना ॥ ३ ॥
श्रवन नासिका काटैं लागे । राम सपथ दीन्हें हम त्यागे ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

nātha krpā kari pūṁchēhu jaisēm. mānahu kahā krōdha taji taisēm. 1.
milā jā'i jaba anuja tumhārā. jātahim rāma tilaka tēhi sārā. 2.
rāvana dūta hamahi suni kānā. kapinha bāṁdhi dīnhē dukha nānā. 3.
śravana nāsikā kāṭaim lāgē. rāma sapatha dīnhēm hama tyāgē. 4.

Suk, the messenger-cum-spy, replied, 'Oh Lord! I prithee to not to become angry at me and listen to my submission with the same grace and kindness with which you have treated me heretofore, and have asked me to give you a truthful report about my personal experiences inside the enemy's camp. (1)

As soon as your younger brother (Vibhishan) met Lord Ram, the Lord welcomed him warmly by putting a Tilak mark on his forehead immediately (as a gesture of accepting him as one of his closest companions and anointing him as the future king of Lanka). (2)

Meanwhile, as soon as the monkeys heard that I was a messenger-cum-spy of Ravana¹, they pounced upon me and captured me; they tied me up and tormented me in different ways. (3)

They became ready to cut off my nose and ears, but when I pleaded for mercy in the name of Lord Ram, they let me off². (4)

[Note—¹And how did the monkeys come to know that this fellow was Ravana's spy? We have already read that when Suk, the spy, observed the kind treatment extended to Vibhishan by Lord Ram he was extremely amazed and overwhelmed with joy as he had not expected such a noble and warm reception of Vibhishan in an enemy's camp. He couldn't conceal his excitement and publicly exulted, expressing his feelings loudly, praising Lord Ram and the good luck of Vibhishan. This emotional outburst betrayed him, and the monkey guards immediately caught hold of him. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 51—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 52.

²Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 52.]

पूँछिहु नाथ राम कटकाई । बदन कोटि सत बरनि न जाई ॥ ५ ॥
 नाना बरन भालु कपि धारी । बिकटानन बिसाल भयकारी ॥ ६ ॥
 जेहिं पुर दहेउ हतेउ सुत तोरा । सकल कपिन्ह महुँ तेहि बलु थोरा ॥ ७ ॥ अमित नाम भट कठिन कराला । अमित नाग बल बिपुल बिसाला ॥ ८ ॥ pūṁchihu nātha rāma kaṭakāī. badana kōṭi sata barani na jāī. 5.

 nānā barana bhālu kapi dhārī. bikaṭānana bisāla bhayakārī. 6.
 jēhim pura dahē'u hatē'u suta tōrā. sakala kapinha maham tēhi balu thōrā. 7.
 amita nāma bhaṭa kaṭhina karālā. amita nāga bala bipula bisālā. 8.

Oh Lord; you have asked me about the army of Lord Ram. Well, let me then tell you frankly what I had observed. Forsooth, if I had a thousand mouths I wouldn't be able to fully describe this army—its formidable strength, its astounding numbers, its extreme enthusiasm, zeal and courage, its unrestrained energy and intense dynamism, and this boisterous army is raring to go to battle instantly. (5)

The army consisting of monkeys and bears have warriors of many forms and complexions that I wot naught how to describe. All of them have terrible and ferocious visages; their faces and bodies are fear-inspiring in as much as they are huge and deadly terrifying to look at. (6)

To give you an idea of the might of this army, recall the monkey who had burnt the city (of Lanka) and had killed your son (Akshay Kumar)—well, his strength is very much less as compared to the rest of his companions in the army. [To wit, he seemed to be a junior member of the army; I found him quite docile and orderly as compared to his peers who were all wild and ferocious in their talks and demeanours.] (7)

The warriors have so many names and are so countless in numbers that it is not possible to tell you much about them, except giving you a general picture. But one thing is definitely certain—and it is that they are extremely powerful, strong, ferocious and terrible, having unmatched strength and powers that are equivalent to innumerable war-elephants. (8)

दो०. द्विबिद मयंद नील नल अंगद गद बिकटासि । दधिमुख केहरि निसठ सठ जामवंत बलरासि ॥ ५४ ॥

dōhā.

dvibida mayanda nīla nala aṅgada gada bikaṭāsi.
dadhimukha kēhari nisaṭha saṭha jāmavanta balarāsi. 54.

I remember the name of some of these great warriors—they are Dwivida, Mayand, Neel, Nal, Angad, Gada, Vikataasya, Dadhimukha, Kehari, Nisatha, Satha, Jamvant etc.¹

All of them, without exception, are very powerful, valiant and strong. (Doha no. 54)

[Note—¹Nal and Neel were great architects and engineers; they were instrumental in getting the bridge constructed across the surface of the ocean—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 60; Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 2.

²Angad was the prince of Kishkindha and a nephew of its king Sugriv; he was the son of Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv. At the time of his death, Baali had put his son Angad in the protection of Lord Ram, making the Lord his guardian. Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.

³Jamvant was the chief of the bear community; he was old and very wise. It is believed that Brahma, the creator, had assumed this form when all the gods decided to come down to earth in the form of monkeys and bears to serve Lord Vishnu, who himself had come down as Lord Ram.]

चौ०. ए कपि सब सुग्रीव समाना । इन्ह सम कोटिन्ह गनइ को नाना ॥ १ ॥
राम कृपाँ अतुलित बल तिन्हहीं । तून समान त्रैलोकहि गनहीं ॥ २ ॥ अस मैं सुना श्रवन दसकंधर । पदुम अठारह जूथप बंदर ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

ē kapi saba sugrīva samānā. inha sama kōṭinha gana'i kō nānā. 1.
rāma kṛpāṁ atulita bala tinahīṁ. tr̥ṇa samāna trailōkahi ganahīṁ. 2.
asa mair̥ṁ sunā śravana dasakandhara. paduma aṭhāraha jūthapa bandara. 3.

The few chiefs whom I have named heretofore are like Sugriv, who is the king of the monkeys and of the kingdom of Kishkindha. But I have named only a few, for there are so many countless others of whom I aught naught about; I had limited time and limited access, so obviously I could not gather more information about the Lord's expansive army (because I was caught very soon). (1)

By the grace and blessing of Lord Ram, they have acquired astounding strength and stupendous valour so much so that they treat the entire universe, consisting of three divisions (known as the heaven, the earth and the nether world), as if it was inconsequential as a blade of humble grass.

[To wit, they have no fear of any power in the world, no matter how majestic and strong it is. They are confident that they can easily pluck it and throw it away, or squash and rub it under foot like one does to an ordinary blade of grass or a small twig that comes in the way.] (2)

Oh the ten-headed One (Ravana; “dasakandhara”)! I have heard it being said that there are as many as eighteen thousand billion commanders of the monkey and bear army. [So just imagine: if this is the amazing number of commanders, then how many soldiers might actually be there in the army!] (3)

नाथ कटक महँ सो कपि नाहीं । जो न तुम्हहि जीतै रन माहीं ॥ ४ ॥ परम क्रोध मीजहिं सब हाथा । आयसु पै न देहिं रघुनाथा ॥ ५ ॥ nātha kaṭaka maham̐ sō kapi nāhīm̐. jō na tumhahi jītai rana māhīm̐. 4.

parama krōdha mijahim̐ saba hāthā. āyasu pai na dēhim̐ raghunāthā. 5.

Oh Lord; in my view there is not a single warrior in the army of monkeys and bears who is not capable of vanquishing you single-handed in the battle-field if he is afforded a chance to do so¹. (4)

The commanders and the warriors are very angry and restless; they are wringing their hands in excess of wrath, eager and raring to launch an immediate offensive to conquer Lanka. But they are constrained only because Lord Ram is not granting them his permission. (5)

[Note—¹Surely, this single statement must have sounded very offensive and insulting to Ravana, coming as it did from one of his own demons and a close confidante, and in front of the whole demon court. It acted as the spark that lit the fuse of Ravana’s anger, and as we shall see soon that he was so extremely peeved and exasperated by Suk’s speech and relentless praise of Lord Ram that finally he kicked the latter viciously in disgust—apropos: Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 57 herein below.

सोषहिं सिंधु सहित झष ब्याला । पूरहिं न त भरि कुधर बिसाला ॥ ६ ॥
मर्दि गर्द मिलवहिं दससीसा । ऐसेइ बचन कहहिं सब कीसा ॥ ७ ॥ गर्जहिं तर्जहिं सहज असंका । मानहुँ ग्रसन चहत हहिं लंका ॥ ८ ॥ sōṣahim̐ sindhu sahita jhaṣa byālā. pūrahim̐ na ta bhari kudhara bisālā. 6.

mardi garda milavahim̐ dasasīsā. aisē’i bacana kahahim̐ saba kīsā. 7.
garjahim̐ tarjahim̐ sahaja asaṅkā. mānahuṁ grasana cahata hahim̐ laṅkā. 8.

They are confidently saying: ‘We will dry up the ocean with all its fish and other marine creatures; or we shall fill it up with huge rocks and boulders (to block its flow and create a bridge across it, or completely annihilate its existence by creating an artificial land mass where the ocean presently exists; we would change the geography and topography of earth if the need arises). (6)

We would squeeze and crush the ten-headed Ravana, contemptuously reducing him to dust.' Oh Lord, such are the words spoken boldly by all the monkey and bear warriors whom I had heard. (7)

All the warriors, who are fearless by nature, are shouting and roaring violently as if they would devour Lanka at the first available opportunity. (8)

दो०. सहज सूर कपि भालु सब पुनि सिर पर प्रभु राम । रावन काल कोटि कहूँ जीति सकहिं संग्राम ॥ ५५ ॥

dōhā.

sahaja sūra kapi bhālu saba puni sira para prabhu rāma.
rāvana kāla kōṭi kahuṁ jīti sakahim saṅgrāma. 55.

All the monkeys and bears are born warriors having immense courage, valour, strength and abilities. Besides that, they have the mighty and all-able Lord Ram over their heads to extend his patronage and protection to them.

So this combination is simply formidable, making it possible for them to vanquish not only a single Ravana but even millions of Kaals (the gods of death) themselves should they decide to do so¹. (Doha no. 55)

[Note—¹The monkeys and bears are exceptionally powerful in their own right, but now they have the additional support and blessing of Lord Ram who is their Lord and patron. This makes them warriors absolutely invincible and the most powerful fighting force in this creation; they can overcome millions of death gods simultaneously, what to talk about a single demon king named Ravana!]

चौ०. राम तेज बल बुधि बिपुलाई । सेष सहस सत सकहिं न गाई ॥ १ ॥
सक सर एक सोषि सत सागर । तव भ्रातहि पूँछेउ नय नागर ॥ २ ॥
तासु बचन सुनि सागर पाहीं । मागत पंथ कृपा मन माहीं ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

rāma tēja bala budhi bipulāī. sēṣa sahasa sata sakahim na gāī. 1.
saka sara ēka sōṣi sata sāgara. tava bhrātahi pūṁchē'u naya nāgara. 2.
tāsu bacana suni sāgara pāhīm. māgata pantha kṛpā mana māhīm. 3.

Lord Ram's majesty, glory and greatness, his might, strength and powers, as well as his intelligence, wisdom and erudition are so amazing and stupendous that even with a thousand heads (or mouths) Lord Sheshnath, the legendary serpent who is believed to hold the earth aloft on his thousand hoods, will be unable to narrate them. (1)

The Lord is capable of drying up thousands of oceans with a single arrow of his, yet, out of courtesy, civility and good manners, and also because he is an expert in following the laws of probity and propriety, he has sought your brother's (i.e. Vibhishan's) opinion regarding the question of how to cross the ocean¹. (2)

Hearing his (Vibhishan's) advice, the Lord is presently requesting the ocean to give him a passage across its surface². (3)

[Note—¹Lord Ram could have soaked the water of the ocean by shooting a single fiery arrow at it, but he wishes to follow a more reconciliatory path by trying to first find out a way to cross the ocean without any use of force. Besides this, the Lord chose to consult Vibhishan on this issue to show due respect to him as he had appointed the latter as his close minister and advisor with respect to the impending campaign of Lanka.

The Lord wanted to keep the patron Deity of the ocean in good humour to ensure that the backyard is a safe place once the war begins in Lanka, because once the Lord's army lands on the soil of Lanka the ocean would be in the rear, separating the army from the mainland. No wise and intelligent military general would ever want a hostile force in the backyard of his army. In case an emergency arose and a quick withdrawal was needed for the Lord's army, a friendly ocean would be of great help as opposed to the situation when the ocean is inimical and willing to settle its own scores with the Lord as it feels that it had been humiliated and subjected to ruthless force earlier. So the Lord wished to be on good and friendly terms with the ocean by giving the latter a chance to let his army pass peacefully, in a friendly manner. Use of unwarranted force would not be conducive to a wise military strategy, as well as for establishing and maintaining long term amiable relations.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 50—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 51.]

सुनत बचन बिहसा दससीसा । जौं असि मति सहाय कृत कीसा ॥ ४ ॥
 सहज भीरु कर बचन दृढ़ाई । सागर सन ठानी मचलाई ॥ ५ ॥
 मूढ़ मृषा का करसि बड़ाई । रिपु बल बुद्धि थाह मैं पाई ॥ ६ ॥ सचिव सभीत बिभीषन जाकें । बिजय बिभूति कहाँ जग ताकें ॥ ७ ॥ sunata bacana bihasā dasasīsā. jauri asi mati sahāya kṛta kīsā. 4.

 sahaja bhīru kara bacana dṛṛhā'ī. sāgara sana ṭhānī macalā'ī. 5.
 mūrha mṛṣā kā karasi baṛā'ī. ripu bala bud'dhi thāha mairi pā'ī. 6.
 saciva sabhīta bibhīṣana jākēm. bijaya bibhūti kahāṁ jaga tākēm. 7.

When the ten-headed Ravana heard what Suk had to say, he laughed in a derisive manner, saying 'With this sort of low intelligence there is no wonder that he (Lord Ram) has chosen to make monkeys as his allies and supporters. (4)

What an irony it is that he (Lord Ram) has sought the advice of Vibhishan who himself is cowardly, and has decided to follow the latter's advice by meekly praying to the ocean (like a child seeking favour from someone) in an attempt to make it agree, something that is impossible. (5)

Oh you dumb-witted wicked fellow; why are you falsely praising him (Lord Ram)? Listen, I have been able to measure how strong and powerful the enemy is on the basis of your own version of the developments. (6)

Say, someone who has a cowardly and frightened person like Vibhishan as his advisor and minister, how can he ever expect to have the glory of victory for himself, how can he ever hope to have the crown of triumph over his head? [No, it is not at all possible.]² (7)

[Note—¹Ravana alludes to Lord Ram praying to the ocean to let his army pass to the other side. He means that a brave and valiant warrior would forcefully remove all obstacles that stand in his way, not plead meekly before his opponent to let him move ahead. From Ravana's perspective, had Lord Ram been brave and capable as he is reputed to be, and also as Suk has himself so lavishly praised him to be, then why is he not subduing the ocean by use of force instead of wasting time praying like a humble man, fully knowing that the ocean would not yield as it is very stubborn. This clearly indicates that Lord Ram is trying to avoid a confrontation, and is looking out to find an excuse as he is uncertain of its outcome.

Ravana felt that perhaps Lord Ram is making the ocean a scapegoat, as an excuse to tell everybody that he could not win Lanka and conquer its king Ravana just because the ocean would not give passage to his army to cross over to Lanka and wage a war. It implies that he lacks confidence and is not sure of a win, putting the blame for his abandoning the Lanka campaign on the head of the ocean—for the ocean stood in the way and did not let him pass. Well, why can't Lord Ram show his mettle and grit in the first instance by overcoming the obstacle of the ocean if he talks so much of defeating the demon army that is a much more difficult task than subduing the ocean? Surely, there is more bluster and hollow talk than something concrete in all the claims he makes about his abilities and powers.

²Ravana means that he is now sure that Lord Ram would never win against him because he has chosen to make Vibhishan as his advisor and war minister. Why? It is because he knows how simple-hearted and docile Vibhishan is, how scared he is of facing his elder brother Ravana, and how his nature is of a peaceful type instead of being aggressive and confrontationist that foster war-like conditions. This is because Vibhishan is his younger brother, and no one would know more about Vibhishan's nature and inclinations and habits than his own elder brother Ravana.]

सुनि खल बचन दूत रिस बाढ़ी । समय बिचारि पत्रिका काढ़ी ॥ ८ ॥

रामानुज दीन्ही यह पाती । नाथ बचाइ जुड़ावहु छाती ॥ ९ ॥

बिहसि बाम कर लीन्ही रावन । सचिव बोलि सठ लाग बचावन ॥ १० ॥

sunī khala bacana dūta rīsa bāṛhī. samaya bicāri patrikā kāṛhī. 8.

rāmānuja dīnhī yaha pātī. nātha bacā'i jurāvahu chātī. 9.

bihasi bāma kara līnhī rāvana. saciva bōli saṭha lāga bacāvana. 10.

Hearing haughty words of the wicked fellow (Ravana), the messenger's lost his cool as his anger was further stoked¹, and feeling that the time was now appropriate, he indignantly took out the letter of warning that Laxman had given to him for Ravana. (8)

He said scornfully, ‘See, the younger brother of Lord Ram (“rāmānuja”; Laxman) has given me this note for you. Oh Lord, first read it (or get it read by someone), and then try to cool down and comfort your heart (i.e. realise the gravity of the situation if you think I am lying to you)².’ (9)

Ravana received the letter with a show of contempt: he smirked sarcastically and took the letter by his left hand³. Then he summoned his minister and ordered him to read it aloud. (10)

[Note—¹Why was the messenger’s anger stoked; why did he become indignant? It is because Ravana had called him a ‘liar’—apropos Chaupai line no. 6 herein above. Suk was giving an honest report like a true spy, but instead of thanking him for gathering vital information and giving an honest opinion about the situation that existed on the ground so that proper action can be initiated, Ravana chose to rebuke him, calling him a virtual traitor and a liar just because he was praising his enemy even though what Suk said was nothing but the truth.

²Suk said “Look; you think I am telling you a bunch of lies. Here is a missive from Laxman; read it yourself or get it read by someone. Then you will realise the gravity of the matter.

³Good manners expect that a person receives a letter from someone with his right hand, instead of the left hand. Receiving someone’s letter by the left hand is a gesture that implies that the recipient of the letter holds the sender in great contempt.]

दो०. बातन्ह मनहि रिझाइ सठ जनि घालसि कुल खीस । राम बिरोध न उबरसि सरन बिष्नु अज ईस ॥ ५६ (क) ॥ की तजि मान अनुज इव प्रभु पद पंकज भृंग । होहि कि राम सरानल खल कुल सहित पतंग ॥ ५६ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

bātanha manahi rijhā'i saṭha jani ghālasī kula khīsa.
 rāma birōdha na ubarasi sarana biṣṇu aja īsa. 56 (a).
 kī taji māna anuja iva prabhu pada paṅkaja bhṛṅga.
 hōhi ki rāma sarānala khala kula sahita pataṅga. 56 (b).

This letter read as follows: “Oh you dumb-witted and wicked fellow! Don’t cheat yourself and become a cause of ruin of your race by living in a fool’s paradise and trying to fool yourself by imaginary good times and happy tidings by living in an artificial world of colourful dreams!

Face reality and remember this: by being inimical to Lord Ram you will not be able to save yourself even if you go to seek shelter with the powerful Gods of the Trinity, i.e. Brahma the creator, Vishnu the sustainer, and Shiva the concluder of this creation¹. (Doha no. 56-a)

Alternatively (if you wish to actually save yourself and your race from complete annihilation), discard your sense of false pride and arrogance, and come to seek refuge at the feet of Lord Ram like your younger brother (Vibhishan) has wisely done. Become a devotee of the Lord like a bee is of the lotus flower².

Oh you evil fellow! Otherwise, you and your race will be roasted alive in the fire unleashed by the angry arrows of Lord Ram.

[To wit, the choice is yours: Either face annihilation by opposing Lord Ram, or seek redemption and eternal happiness by surrendering before the Lord.] (Doha no. 56-b)”

[Note—¹The same warning was given to Ravana by Hanuman earlier in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 23.

On both the occasions, however, he did not pay attention.

²The honey bee is so enamoured of the lotus flower and devoted to it that it hovers over it, longing to alight and drink its nectar. Likewise, a devotee of Lord Ram always thinks of worshipping the Lord and fixes his attention on the holy feet of the Lord, as this bestows great bliss, happiness and joy to him.]

चौ०. सुनत सभय मन मुख मुसुकाई । कहत दसानन सबहि सुनाई ॥ १ ॥

भूमि परा कर गहत अकासा । लघु तापस कर बाग बिलासा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunata sabhaya mana mukha musukāī. kahata dasānana sabahi sunāī. 1.

bhūmi parā kara gahata akāsā. laghu tāpasa kara bāga bilāsā. 2.

Ravana felt sore affright internally, but he laughed to hide his consternations, fears and worries, and putting up a bold face as if all was well and he is not at all concerned, he addressed everyone present and said scornfully [1], ‘Just like someone lying prostrate on the ground raises his hand and closes his fists to pretend that he is grasping the sky with his hands, this message from the younger hermit (i.e. Laxman) is nothing but an extension of his pretentious boast and loud bluster encapsulated in a fiery speech [2].’ (1-2)

कह सुक नाथ सत्य सब बानी । समुझहु छाड़ि प्रकृति अभिमानी ॥ ३ ॥

सुनहु बचन मम परिहरि क्रोधा । नाथ राम सन तजहु बिरोधा ॥ ४ ॥ kaha suka nātha satya saba bānī. samujhahu chāḍi prakṛti abhimānī. 3.

sunahu bacana mama parihari krōdhā. nātha rāma sana tajahu birōdhā. 4.

Suk (also pronounced as Suka; Shuka; Shuk) replied, ‘Oh Lord (nātha); abandon your inherently stubborn and proud nature, become serious in this matter, and treat what is being said as the truth. (3)

Oh Lord (nātha)! Discard your anger and listen to my good advice: abandon your confrontation with Lord Ram and stop being hostile to him. [Be prudent and wise; arrogance and haughtiness will not serve any purpose for you.] (4)

अति कोमल रघुबीर सुभाऊ । जद्यपि अखिल लोक कर राऊ ॥ ५ ॥
मिलत कृपा तुम्ह पर प्रभु करिही । उर अपराध न एकउ धरिही ॥ ६ ॥ जनकसुता रघुनाथहि दीजे । एतना कहा मोर प्रभु कीजे ॥ ७ ॥ ati kōmala raghubīra subhā'ū. jadyapi akhila lōka kara rā'ū. 5.

milata kṛpā tumha para prabhu karihī. ura aparādha na ēka'u dharihī. 6.
janakasutā raghunāthahi dījē. ētanā kahā mōra prabhu kijē. 7.

Lord Ram's nature is extremely graceful, kind and polite, though he is the Lord Emperor of the entire creation. (5)

Be rest assured that as soon as you go and meet the Lord, he would grant his mercy to you; he would grace you; he would bestow his kindness upon you in abundance. Be sure that the Lord would not harbour a single whit of your sins in his heart (as he warmly welcomes and embraces you). (6)

Oh Lord (prabhu)! Please be gracious and kind enough to oblige me by doing one simple thing that I sincerely advise you—and it is to give Janki (Sita, the daughter of Janak) back to Lord Raghunath (Lord Ram).' (7)

जब तेहिं कहा देन बैदेही । चरन प्रहार कीन्ह सठ तेही ॥ ८ ॥ नाइ चरन सिरु चला सो तहाँ । कृपासिंधु रघुनायक जहाँ ॥ ९ ॥ jaba tēhim kahā dēna baidēhī. carana prahāra kīnha saṭha tēhī. 8.

nā'i carana siru calā sō tahāñ. kṛpāsindhu raghunāyaka jahāñ. 9.

When Ravana was told by Suk, the messenger, to give Janki (Sita) back to Lord Ram, he lost his temper; that vile fellow vented his ire on Suk by kicking him contemptuously¹. (8)

Suk bowed his head before Ravana and immediately left the place (Ravana's court and the city of Lanka) to go where Lord Ram was². (9)

[Note—¹This is the second time Ravana has kicked one of his close associates when he was advised to give Sita back to her husband, Lord Ram. The first instance was when he had kicked his own brother Vibhishan—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 41.

²Once again we find that Vibhishan too had done the same thing: when kicked by Ravana he had also bowed before him and immediately left Lanka to go and meet

Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 41 to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 43.

Thus we observe that even before the actual war commenced, Ravana had lost two of his friends and well-wishers, first Vibhishan and now Suk, due to his haughty, stubborn and angry nature.]

करि प्रनामु निज कथा सुनाई । राम कृपाँ आपनि गति पाई ॥ १० ॥
 रिषि अगस्ति कीं साप भवानी । राछस भयउ रहा मुनि ग्यानी ॥ ११ ॥
 बंदि राम पद बारहिं बारा । मुनि निज आश्रम कहूँ पगु धारा ॥ १२ ॥ kari pranāmu nija kathā sunā'ī. rāma kṛpāṁ āpani gati pā'ī. 10.

 riṣi agasti kīṁ sāpa bhavānī. rāchasa bhaya'u rahā muni gyānī. 11.
 bandi rāma pada bārahīm bārā. muni nija āśrama kahuṁ pagu dhārā. 12.

When he reached Lord Ram's camp he reverentially bowed his head before the Lord to pay his obeisance to him, and then told him all about himself by way of an introduction. The Lord blessed him, and he attained the destiny that he deserved. [What was Suk's fate? It is outlined in the following verse.] (10)

In his previous life he was a wise, erudite and enlightened hermit, but unfortunately he had become a demon due to a curse cast on him by another sage named Agastya¹. (11)

When Lord Ram blessed him (Suk), the latter was freed from this curse. After that, the sage expressed his gratitude to Lord Ram by bowing his head repeatedly before the Lord, and then he went back to his old hermitage. (12)

[Note—¹What probable reason could have been for sage Agastya cursing Suk? Perhaps Suk may have very proud of his knowledge and erudition, and on some occasion he might have done something or behaved in some way that had offended sage Agastya. Annoyed thus, Agastya may have cursed him as a punishment to become a demon. Then Suk may have asked for pardon, whereupon sage Agastya must have blessed him that some day he would be freed from this curse when he meets Lord Ram and has the good fortune of being graced by the Lord himself.

Life of Suk/Shuka has been narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 1-24. After receiving Lord Ram's blessings, he went to the forest to do meditation and follow his spiritual pursuits with other enlightened ascetics and hermits.]

दो०. बिनय न मानत जलधि जड़ गए तीन दिन बीति । बोले राम सक्रोप तब भय बिनु होइ न प्रीति ॥ ५७ ॥
 dōhā.

binaya na mānata jaladhi jara ga'e tīni dina bīti.
 bōlē rāma sakōpa taba bhaya binu hō'i na prīti. 57.

Meanwhile, the stupid Ocean was so dumb and stubborn that it did not pay any whit of attention to Lord Ram's prayers to allow the Lord a passage across it even though three days had passed.

Exasperated by the Ocean's arrogance, Lord Ram angrily exclaimed, 'It appears that there would be no peaceful and friendly way out of this predicament; there is no option left but of taking recourse to an action that would create fear for the Ocean¹. (Doha no. 57)

[Note—¹Lord Ram knew, in the very beginning itself, that he would have to ultimately use force to make the ocean give him a passage: this is evident by the answer the Lord gave to Laxman when the latter was not in favour of making humble pleadings to the ocean for passage, because it would be taken as a weakness on part of the Lord. But the Lord wanted to make sure that all peaceful means are exhausted before resorting to the use of force. So he had then assured Laxman that his wishes of using force will be fulfilled, but he ought to wait patiently for a while. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-7 that precede Doha no. 51.}]

चौ०. लछिमन बान सरासन आनू । सोषौं बारिधि बिसिख कृसानू ॥ १ ॥
 सठ सन बिनय कुटिल सन प्रीती । सहज कृपन सन सुंदर नीती ॥ २ ॥
 ममता रत सन ग्यान कहानी । अति लोभी सन बिरति बखानी ॥ ३ ॥ क्रोधिहि सम कामिहि हरि कथा । ऊसर बीज बाँ फल जथा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

lachimana bāna sarāsana ānū. sōṣaum bāridhi bisikha kṛsānū. 1.
 saṭha sana binaya kuṭila sana prīti. sahaja kṛpana sana sundara nīti. 2.
 mamatā rata sana gyāna kahānī. ati lōbhī sana birati bakhānī. 3.
 krōdhihi sama kāmīhi hari kathā. ūsara bīja ba'eṃ phala jathā. 4.

Lord Ram said angrily, 'Laxman; bring my bow and arrows. I shall dry up this ocean with my fiery arrows¹. (1)

[Now the Lord lays down some wonderful principles of prudence that can serve as guidelines to help us deal with the people of the world and the difficulty we face in making the right decision regarding how to deal with a particular situation and people of specific character and nature. Here he lists seven special characters of people, and tells us how to deal with them.]

Praying or making supplication before an idiot (saṭha sana binaya), making friendship with a scoundrel and having affection for an evil rogue (kuṭila sana prīti), teaching good virtues of liberality, charity, generosity and philanthropy to someone who is a born miser and exceedingly thrifty (sahaja kṛpana sana sundara nīti) [2],

--- Preaching spirituality and its eclectic principles that lead to wisdom, self-realisation and enlightenment to someone who is deeply passionate and engrossed in worldly affairs (mamatā rata sana gyāna kahānī), lecturing on the virtues of renunciation, detachment and dispassion to one who is exceptionally greedy and rapacious (ati lōbhī sana birati bakhānī) [3], ---

--- Attempting to inculcate the virtues of calmness and evenness of the mind and emotions to someone who is prone to anger, easily becoming wrathful and vehement (krōdhihi sama), and to narrate the divine stories of Lord Hari (Lord God) to one who is overcome with lust and passion (kāmihi hari kathā)—well, all these (seven) things are like trying to sow seed and expect it to sprout in a land that is infertile, dry and barren (ūsara bīja ba'eṃ phala jathā) [4]². (2-4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram threatened the ocean in these words: “I shall teach the deity of this ocean, which is stubborn and stupid, a good lesson of his life by shooting energised arrows at him. These arrows are unique and exceptionally ferocious by their inherent nature inasmuch as that they are presided over by the fire god, resulting in their target bearing the brunt of the wrath of the fire god, which simply means that anything at which these arrows are shot is reduced to ash in an instant. Since the ocean is a reservoir of water and can’t logically be turned to ash, it means that it will immediately be dried up, and its bed exposed in the form of a cracked and parched stretch of dessert land.”

Lord Ram actually did not want to carry out his threat because the Lord, who himself is an ‘ocean’ of mercy and compassion, was well aware that by drying up the ocean he would be killing all the marine creatures for whom the ocean is their home. Surely and certainly this cruel action was not in the nature of the Lord; his main intention was to instil fear in the heart of the ocean so that it agrees, albeit under the threat of extinction, to let the Lord’s army cross over to the other side and land on the shores of Lanka. That was all, and no real harm was intended.

²In these analogies, the ‘negative traits’ are like the dry and infertile land, while the ‘positive virtues’ are like the seed that sprouts into a flowering plant.

To wit, just as it is worthless to expect a seed to sprout and produce a beautiful flowering plant if it is sowed in an infertile and dry piece of land, so it is also useless to expect any good result by trying to attempt any of the things listed in these verses.

For instance, if one expects that an idiot would understand one’s situation and heed to his prayers for help, then he himself is an idiot because one is sure to be frustrated in his attempt. Similarly, it is dangerous to have friendship with someone who is crooked and vile; there is no use in trying to make a miserly person loosen his purse string and make donations or help others monetarily; a passionate man who enjoys worldly pleasures and who is deeply engrossed in sensual matters would turn a deaf ear and a blind eye when told about spiritual matters, its wonderful values and its principles of renunciation, detachment and dispassion along with the bliss, joy and peace they provide; an angry person would not listen to reasoning; and a worldly man for whom this gross material world is the real thing, talk of Lord God as well as of love and devotion for him is a boring subject.]

अस कहि रघुपति चाप चढ़ावा । यह मत लछिमन के मन भावा ॥ ५ ॥

संधानेउ प्रभु बिसिख कराला । उठी उदधि उर अंतर ज्वाला ॥ ६ ॥

मकर उरग झष गन अकुलाने । जरत जंतु जलनिधि जब जाने ॥ ७ ॥

कनक थार भरि मनि गन नाना । बिप्र रूप आयउ तजि माना ॥ ८ ॥

asa kahi raghupati cāpa caṛhāvā. yaha mata lachimana kē mana bhāvā. 5.
sandhānē'u prabhu bisikha karālā. uṭhī udadhi ura antara jvālā. 6.
makara uraga jhaṣa gana akulānē. jarata jantu jalanidhi jaba jānē. 7.
kanaka thāra bhari mani gana nānā. bipra rūpa āya'u taji mānā. 8.

Saying this, Lord Raghupati (Lord Sri Ram) mounted his arrow on the bow. This attitude of the Lord found favour with Laxman, and he greatly appreciated it¹. (5)

When the Lord mounted his fiery, ferocious arrow on the bow and raised it (to shoot), there arose a great turbulence in the heart (middle) of the ocean.

[To wit, there was a sudden churning, bubbling and frothing of the water of the ocean. It appeared that a huge underwater volcano had suddenly erupted, making the ocean boil; or it was like a huge underwater quake that seemed to lift the ocean and split it into two, causing monstrous waves that replicated the scene of the doom's day.] (6)

All the marine creatures, such as alligators, sea-serpents and fish of all varieties, were immensely vexed and agitated (by the unexpected churn and the sudden turmoil).

The Deity of the ocean became alarmed and thought that all the creatures who inhabit its realm (i.e. who live in the ocean) would be severely scalded and boiled alive. (7)

To prevent a catastrophe from happening, it (Deity of the ocean) decided to approach Lord Ram and make peace with him. So it collected a large assortment of gems and precious stones found in the ocean (such as pearls, shells and corals etc.), arranged them in a golden plate, and having abandoned all its haughtiness and ego, it came out on the surface of the ocean in the form of a Brahmin². (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-4 that precede Doha no. 51. Here Laxman had strongly expressed his reservations about an attempt to make the ocean give a passage by humbly praying to it for this purpose; he was in favour of a robust action, of forcing the deity of the ocean to submit to Lord Ram's orders rather than making humble supplications.

Laxman was of the view, and correctly so, that Lord Ram's wish to make a peaceful crossing by avoiding a confrontation with the deity of the ocean would be taken in the wrong light by the latter, for since the ocean is dumb-witted by nature it would regard the Lord's gracious nature and friendly gesture as a sign of weakness, and not of nobleness. Eventually, Laxman's views turned out to be correct.

²Why did the Deity of the ocean assume the form of a 'Brahmin' when it came out to make peace with Lord Ram? The Deity was so scared of Lord Ram that it did not want to take the risk of coming out in his original form, whatever that form was. So to ensure that Lord Ram would not punish him he assumed the form of a Brahmin, for a Brahmin is a respected person and usually receives a warm welcome.

This sudden capitulation of the ocean, which was so stubborn and unrelenting just a while ago, proves the truth of Lord Ram's observation in Doha no. 57 and Chaupai line no. 2 that follows it.]

दो०. काटेहिं पड़ कदरी फरइ कोटि जतन कोउ सींच । बिनय न मान खगेस सुनु डाटेहिं पड़ नव नीच ॥ ५८ ॥

dōhā.

kāṭēhiṁ pa'i kdarī phara'i kōṭi jatana kō'u sīnca.
binaya na māna khagēsa sunu ḍāṭēhiṁ pa'i nava nīca. 58.

No matter what pains one may take to water a plantain tree in order to make it bear fruits, but it will not oblige. The only way to make the plantain tree to bear fruits is to cut or chop it down completely¹.

Oh the king of birds (khagēsa; Garud, the celestial Eagle who is the mount of Lord Vishnu)²! Listen to this maxim—those who are lowly and wicked do not mend their ways by polite prayers and requests; the only way to bring them around is to deal with them sternly and strongly admonish them for their behaviour. (Doha no. 58)

[Note—¹The banana tree bears fruits only once in its life cycle. No matter what care is given to its stem or roots, and how much water is showered on it, it would not bear fruits again. The only way to have a good harvest of banana fruit is to cut off the earlier tree and plant a new one. To wit, those who have a particular bad habit often do not break that habit unless they are severely punished for it.

²Garud was one of the primary listeners of this divine Story of Lord Ram. The narrator in his case was the saintly crow named Kaagbhusund. This episode of Kaagbhusund narrating the divine Story of Lord Ram, known as the 'Ram Charit Manas', is the subject matter of the second half of the last chapter the aforesaid Holy Book, i.e. from Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 58—to Doha no. 125.

A full English version of this wonderful narrative, known as the "Kaagbhusund Ramayan" that is soaked in spiritual wisdom and the virtues of devotion and love for Lord God, has been published by this author separately. It is available at the same site from where this current book the reader is reading presently was accessed.]

चौ०. सभय सिंधु गहि पद प्रभु केरे । छमहु नाथ सब अवगुन मेरे ॥ १ ॥
गगन समीर अनल जल धरनी । इन्ह कइ नाथ सहज जड़ करनी ॥ २ ॥
तव प्रेरित मायाँ उपजाए । सृष्टि हेतु सब ग्रंथनि गाए ॥ ३ ॥
प्रभु आयसु जेहि कहँ जस अहई । सो तेहि भाँति रहें सुख लहई ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

sabhaya sindhu gahi pada prabhu kērē. chamahu nātha saba avaguna mērē.

1.

gagana samīra anala jala dharanī. inha ka'i nātha sahaja jaṛa karanī. 2.

tava prērita māyāñ upajā'ē. sṛṣṭi hētu saba granthani gā'ē. 3.

prabhu āyasu jēhi kahaṁ jasa aha'ī. sō tēhi bhāṁti rahēṁ sukha laha'ī. 4.

The terrified Deity of the ocean fell at the feet of Lord Ram, and clasping it with his hands he said, 'Oh Lord! Please be kind and gracious to excuse me for all my misdemeanours and faults. (1)

Oh Lord, the five elements, i.e. the sky, the wind, the water, the fire and the earth, are gross, thoughtless and dumb by their very nature¹. (2)

Every scripture affirms that it is your mystical and magical cosmic power known as 'Maya', i.e. the supernatural power that creates delusions of gigantic proportions, which is responsible for the creation of all these five gross elements for the purpose of creating this vast universe². (3)

Oh Lord! Since these elements were created to fulfil your wish (to create the world), they are obedient to you and faithfully follow the guidelines set for them by you. Since each and every single entity of this creation follows your wishes and obeys your instructions, doing aught naught which is contrary to what you desire keeps all of them happy and contented, and these five elements are no exception to this general rule. However, all problems and discontents arise when any of these entities attempt to violate this universal rule of conduct; all sorts of discord in any society or kingdom arise when the orders and authority of the realm's sovereign are undermined and individuals begin to act in their own way, heedless to the advice of their commanding authority (which in the case of this creation is you, the Supreme Lord).

Hence, one would do well and attain happiness in life if one is contented with where the Lord has placed him, and if one follows the instructions and wishes of the Lord³. (4)

[Note—¹To wit, their behaviour lacks finesse and delicacy; they are gross in their behaviour, thoughts and actions. Since the 'ocean' is a personified form of the 'water element', so it's but natural for it to be inherently gross and thoughtless. Therefore, oh Lord, you being merciful and considerate are requested to overlook the ocean's ill behaviour and stubbornness, and be kind to forgive it for its irreverent actions.

²To wit, these five elements are the basic building blocks for this creation. They were created by Maya, which is your supernatural cosmic power that enables you to create delusions of reality, which conjures up a surreal world of magic that is so wonderful and full of life, vibrancy and colour that even the wisest of sages are misled into believing it as being the real thing, whereas in fact it is just an imaginary dream-like world. This Maya, therefore, just in order to give effect to your wish to create an exceptionally fascinating creation of wondrous dimensions from virtually nothing, first created these five elements, viz. the sky, the air or the wind, the water, the fire and the earth, and then used them in myriads of permutations and combinations to craft the world as you wished.

It follows from this fact that since these five elements were created by Maya, i.e. the cosmic power of the Supreme Being to create delusions, they are 'gross, dull and inane' by themselves. They appear to be real and life-like just because the Lord himself wanted them to look as such just in the way a magician would like that he creates on the stage should appear to be absolutely life-like and real, without a hint of falsehood, though he himself knows that they are all imaginary.

When the originator or creator of these five elements is Maya, the progenitor of grand delusions of cosmic proportions, and when this Maya has employed its powerful delusion-creating powers to create these five elements, then say how can it be expected that these five elements, and anything made from them, would have any truth or substance in them?

³To wit, these five elements stick to their basic nature ordained by you at the time of their creation. If they begin to do what they like themselves, if they do what they wish, then the order and regulatory mechanism in this universe would break down. I am sure you, being the Supreme Lord and Master of this world, would not like that your subordinates begin to do what they like, because that would create anarchy and chaos.

If they are not stubborn and act in a dumb manner by not relenting, not heeding to pleadings and not bowing to pressure tactics, then every powerful creature in this creation would brow-beat them to do their bidding. For instance, everyone would want the ‘ocean’ to part and give them a passage at their own convenience, or someone would want the ocean to rise and submerge his opponent’s realm, or to freeze so that boats and ships can’t move, and others would want it to irrigate their fields.

Similarly, someone would order the ‘fire element’ to burn his opponent, and someone would order the fire element to cool down so that his enemy can’t cook food and die of hunger.

The earth may be ordered to dry up or shake to cause ruin and havoc for one’s opponents. The sky may lose control over all its stars and planets, failing to act as a buffer between them, which in turn would mean that these stars and planets start colliding with each other. Imagine the hellish conditions of anarchy and chaos that would prevail if these five elements do not act stubbornly and adhere to their basic nature.

The subjects of any kingdom can live in peace and harmony and prosperity only if they respect their king and follow his laws; otherwise there would obviously be anarchy and chaos. This applies to all countries: the citizens are expected to follow the established constitution and laws of their country; there would be peace and harmony if this is practiced. Otherwise there would be constant friction between different sections of the society, leading to disharmony and tensions.

Similarly, the Supreme Being had laid down certain rules of behaviour and conduct for the five elements, which form the fundamental building-blocks of this creation, at the time of beginning of creation; these elements are expected to adhere to these rules and regulations in order to maintain peace and equilibrium in this creation. If they break this regulation, if they do what suits them, then there would be chaos all around. If these basic elements follow the norms laid out for them by the Supreme Being, then the overall structure of this creation as well as its finer constituents, which are formed out of these five elements, too would maintain their proper place, resulting in a peaceful existence. Otherwise, the structure would weaken and start crumbling from within.]

प्रभु भल कीन्ह मोहि सिख दीन्ही । मरजादा पुनि तुम्हरी कीन्ही ॥ ५ ॥

ढोल गवाँर सूद्र पसु नारी । सकल ताड़ना के अधिकारी ॥ ६ ॥

prabhu bhala kīṇha mōhi sikha dīnhī. marajādā puni tumharī kīnhī. 5.
dhōla gavāmra sūdra pasu nārī. sakala tāḍaṇā kē adhikārī. 6.

Oh Lord (prabhu)! You have done the correct thing by teaching me a lesson and upbraiding me for my impertinence (and I owe my thanks to you for it)¹. But the fact is that I was reluctant to give a passage across the water (of the ocean) because I did not wish to break the laws ordained by your own self; I was merely following the laws of conduct established for me and doing my duties². (5)

It is a established practice that a drum, one who is an utter fool, a lowly person, an animal, and a woman who has an evil character and a mean nature (like that of a lowly person or an animal)—these five entities deserve strictness in order to be tamed and taught good conduct³. (6)

[Note—¹What lesson did Lord Ram teach the Deity of the ocean? The Lord taught him that though it is okay that one should follow standard rules of conduct in routine life under ordinary circumstances, but one ought to be practical, prudent, wise and flexible enough in life to adjust and adapt oneself under changed circumstances, instead of being too rigid and stubborn.

For instance, though it was alright for the ocean not to allow anyone to cross over its surface, for that would break the law of Nature which had ordained that the surface of the ocean is different from the hard surface of the land, and though one could easily walk on the land one would be barred from walking over the surface of the water of the ocean or the river. The mass of solid earth known as ‘land’ does not drown anyone, and one can walk over it easily, but the mass of water known as an ‘ocean’ or a ‘river’ has the characteristic of drowning anyone who tries to walk over it barefoot like he does over the land. In order to go across the water of the ocean or river one needs a boat unlike in the case of the land where one can simply walk.

This is the normal law of Nature under ordinary circumstances. But the situation and circumstance here was different: if the ocean did not allow the army of Lord Ram to cross over it to the other side then it would be impossible for the Lord to free an innocent lady (Sita) who was kidnapped by a demonic person, and it would also prevent the Lord from carrying out his duty to restore peace and order in this world by eliminating the scourge of the evil demons who had run amok in this world, horrifying all the creatures, and creating terror and devastation everywhere.

In this peculiar situation, the stubbornness of the Ocean in not allowing Lord Ram to cross over its surface to go to Lanka to stop the demons from further spreading mayhem in this world was actually an act of the Ocean that was obstructing the Lord and creating hurdles in his path in carrying out his duties as the Supreme Lord of this creation. The Lord was not going to Lanka on a holiday, for a picnic or for pleasure. The Lord was on a divine mission of eliminating the evil and cruel demons, and obstructing him from carrying out his noble duties for the welfare of the world as a whole was a sinful act on the part of the Deity of the ocean. Therefore it was not pardonable, and the Lord, being the King Emperor of the world, had the right to punish the Ocean for being so stupid as to not understand the reality, and foolishly creating hurdles in the Lord’s path on the pretext of just following his natural character.

²The Ocean tried to explain his actions by pleading before the Lord that since it is an embodiment of the ‘water element’, it was ordained not to allow any creature who walks on foot on land to also walk over water in the same way. Hence, it was merely following the rule established for it by the Lord himself at the time of creation. The Ocean said ‘sorry’ and asked the Lord to forgive him.

³The word used in the verse is “tāḍaṇā”, which refers to the ‘use of force’ against anybody. The ‘drum’ needs to be ‘beaten’ or ‘struck’ or ‘hit’ by a stick in order to make it produce sound. If one touches it softly in order not to hurt it or be kind to it, then the drum would produce no sound. To wit, the ‘drum’ is so dumb that it requires a harsh treatment to produce desired results; treating it politely is useless.

If anyone is a complete fool then trying to make him do something sensible in a polite manner is a waste of time and energy. He needs stern words, constant strict vigil and the fear of punishment if one wants him to do anything worthwhile.

Similarly, a lowly person needs strictness if one expects him to be disciplined; showing politeness and being courteous with such persons would make them go wild with arrogance and get up on one’s nerves.

An animal is to be treated with strictness, and so is the case with a woman who is of an evil character.

It is interesting to note here that the word “pasu”, which means an animal, is strategically placed between “sūdra” and “nārī”, meaning a lowly person and a woman respectively. It implies that a lowly person and a woman who are “animal-like” in their mind and heart, whose intellect and behaviour are no less dumb and gross than that of an animal, surely deserve to be treated like one would treat an animal. They deserve harsh and strict treatment if one wants to keep them under leash.

Shakespeare has famously said regarding a woman in ‘Hamlet’: “Frailty thy name is woman”. These observations need not be taken in the wrong light as they are clearly meant for a woman who is ‘no better than an animal’ by her inherent nature.

Of course such ‘evil women’ are exceptions, and so are persons called ‘Sudras’ who are so ‘mean and lowly’ by nature that they are at the bottom of the rung in hierarchy of civil society, and these rules are meant only for such persons.]

प्रभु प्रताप मैं जाब सुखाई । उतरिहि कटकु न मोरि बड़ाई ॥ ७ ॥

प्रभु अग्या अपेल श्रुति गाई । करौं सो बेगि जो तुम्हहि सोहाई ॥ ८ ॥ prabhu pratāpa maim jāba sukhāī. utarihi kaṭaku na mōri baṛāī. 7.

prabhu agyā apēla śruti gāī. karaum sō bēgi jō tumhahi sōhāī. 8.

[The Ocean pleaded:] Oh Lord (prabhu)! Though it is true that I would be dried up if your majesty so wishes, and then the army of monkeys and bears would easily cross over to the other shore (i.e. reach Lanka by walking on my dried bed), but that would deprive me of a chance to get some glory of being able to be of some service to you! (7)

Your orders and instructions are sacrosanct and inviolable in this creation, so say the scriptures. Hence, I (and for that everyone else) am bound to obey you. So please be kind to instruct me regarding what pleases you, and what you expect me to do.’ (8)

[Note—The Deity of the ocean tells Lord Ram that he is at the Lord’s command. The Lord should forgive him as all great Kings ought to be merciful, considerate and forgiving in their hearts. If the Lord decides to go ahead and punish the Ocean then it would not be good for the Lord's reputation. On the other hand, if the Lord shows mercy on the Ocean and gives him a chance to devise a device by means of which the Lord's army gets across it while letting the Ocean retain its dignity, form and status, then both would gain—the Lord's reputation as a merciful and gracious Lord would be enhanced further, and the Ocean would also feel happy that it could serve the Lord and help him fulfil his divine mission of getting rid of the demons who were tormenting the world.

So therefore it would be fit and proper if Lord Ram does not dry up the Ocean but allows it to form a strategy which would help the army of the Lord go across its surface without violating his dignity.]

दो०. सुनत बिनीत बचन अति कह कृपाल मुसुकाइ ।
जेहि बिधि उतरै कपि कटकु तात सो कहहु उपाइ ॥ ५९ ॥

dōhā.

sunata binīta bacana ati kaha krpāla musukā'i.
jēhi bidhi utarai kapi kaṭaku tāta sō kahahu upā'i. 59.

When the merciful Lord Ram heard these polite words of the Deity of the ocean, he smiled affectionately and replied, 'Alright; so be it. Now tell me a way by which the army of monkeys and bears can go to the other side.' (Doha no. 59)

[Note—Why did Lord Ram 'smile'? It was because only after he had threatened the Ocean with dire consequences that the latter had relented. By 'smiling' at the Ocean the Lord indicated that he had no actual animosity or rancour against the former in his heart, but was only showing superficial anger at the Ocean just in order to make him mend his ways, and stop being inveterately arrogant and stubborn. That was all, and the Lord did not actually intend to harm the Deity of the ocean in any material way.

Why would the Lord not actually harm the ocean by drying it up? It is because the Lord knew that the ocean harbours a rich culture of marine life, and being merciful by nature and protector of the world, the Lord would never imagine doing anything rash that would extinguish this life.]

चौ०. नाथ नील नल कपि द्वौ ज़ाई । लरिकाई रिषि आसिष पाई ॥ १ ॥
तिन्ह कें परस किऐँ गिरि भारे । तरिहहिँ जलधि प्रताप तुम्हारे ॥ २ ॥
मैं पुनि उर धरि प्रभु प्रभुताई । करिहउँ बल अनुमान सहाई ॥ ३ ॥ एहि बिधि नाथ पयोधि बाँधाइअ । जेहिँ यह सुजसु लोक तिहुँ गाइअ ॥ ४ ॥ caupā'i.

nātha nīla nala kapi dvau bhā'i. larikā'īm riṣi āsiṣa pā'i. 1.
tinha kēm parasa ki'ēṁ giri bhārē. tarihahim jaladhi pratāpa tumhārē. 2.
mairṁ puni ura dhari prabhu prabhutā'i. kariha'uṁ bala anumāna sahā'i. 3.
ēhi bidhi nātha payōdhi baṁdhā'i'a. jēhim yaha sujasu lōka tihumṁ gā'i'a. 4.

[Reassured by the way Lord Ram politely and calmly received the Deity of the ocean and smiled affectionately at him, he felt very grateful to the Lord. Then he volunteered to help the Lord in the best way possible, a way that would maintain the sanctity of the laws of Nature and become a precedent for the coming generations. And what was that way? It was this:--]

The Deity of the ocean replied courteously, ‘Oh Lord (nātha). Two monkeys named Nala and Neela had been granted a boon by a venerated sage during their childhood days. (1)

By the virtue of this boon as well as by your blessings, even huge boulders and rocks as large as hills and mountains would be able to float on the surface of the water of the ocean¹.

[Verily indeed, the world would see this miraculous deed as an evidence of your glory and mystical powers—for no one can ever imagine that huge and heavy rocks and boulders that resemble miniature mountains can ever float on the surface of the ocean; it is virtually impossible. Oh Lord, very few would know that this feat was achieved by these two monkey warriors also due to the boon that was granted to them by some ancient sage. The world would actually praise you and your mystical powers alone that enabled this stupendous feat to be achieved by them. So therefore, you can see that I am really helping to enhance your glory instead of reducing it.] (2)

Meanwhile, I too would eternally feel grateful to you in my heart for showing immense mercy and grace upon me, and I will do my best to help you in whatever way I can. (3)

Oh Lord (nātha). In this way you can get the ocean tamed by getting a bridge built across its surface. This method would establish your glory and majesty in all the three divisions of the world² for all times to come, and all future generations would be able to sing about it and glorify you for this remarkable act of yours.

[To wit, oh Lord, this would be win-win situation for both of us—for on the one hand it would help me to maintain my dignity and obey the laws of Nature by which it was ordained that land-bound living beings cannot walk on water, and on the other hand it would also help your Lordship’s majesty and glory to reach greater heights. Further, it would help your army to cross the water easily, with the least trouble. It would also enable all the marine creatures living in the realm of the ocean to pay their obeisance to you and see your divine and holy form while you are crossing the ocean. This method of crossing the ocean would be in line with the human form that you have assumed, in spite of the fact that you are the Supreme Being having an all-pervading, omnipresent cosmic form.]³ (4)

[Note—¹The legend goes that Nala and Neela were sons of Vishwakarma, the architect of the gods in heaven. They had inherited their father’s acumen in constructing great structures; they would be quietly helped by their father Vishwakarma himself once the construction of the bridge commenced. When they were young they used to be naughty, throwing idols worshipped by learned sages into the water. These sages knew who these two young monkey-boys were, and that when they grow up they would one day help the Supreme Being proceed on his mission of eliminating the cruel demon race. Besides this they were very young in age, and the sages also knew that the monkeys are inherently mischievous and fond of creating nuisance. So they forgave Nala and Neela for their childish behaviour.

But since these two fellows continued with their deed of throwing the sages' idols into the water for the sake of fun, without realising the gravity and sinfulness of their deed, the sages devised a device by which they could protect their idols from sinking in the water—which was to pronounce a boon, by way of a curse, that all stone-like things (such as the idols) which Nala and Neela would touch will not sink but float on the surface of the water. So these idols never drowned, and they were recovered by the sages and reinstated in their hermitages.

This sort of 'curse' later on became a 'boon' for Nala and Neela, as it helped them to put together huge boulders and rocks to construct the bridge across which Lord Ram's army crossed over to Lanka!

²The three divisions of the world are heaven, earth and nether world.

³The Deity of the ocean is wise and intelligent, and not as dumb as he appeared to be! The way the Deity answered Lord Ram, and the reasoning he gives showing how they both would be gainers if the method advocated by him is implemented by the Lord, clearly proves his wisdom and prudence.

In the future, if anyone wished to cross a river or any other large water body then he would have a precedence to guide him what to do: he would have to construct a 'bridge' across the water.

This event of heavy rocks and boulders, which were definitely larger and heavier than ordinary wooden boats that were normally used to cross the water during those days, being able to 'float' on the water's surface also perhaps laid the foundation of the concept of building huge ships and water-crafts of gigantic proportions by future generations.]

एहिं सर मम उत्तर तट बासी । हतहु नाथ खल नर अघ रासी ॥ ५ ॥ सुनि कृपाल सागर मन पीरा । तुरतहिं हरी राम रनधीरा ॥ ६ ॥ ēhiṁ sara mama unāra taṭa bāsī. hatahu nātha khala nara agha rāsī. 5.

suni kṛpāla sāgara mana pīrā. turatahiṁ harī rāma ranadhīrā. 6.

On my northern coast or boarder (i.e. to my north; in the northern direction from here) there live certain very vile criminals who are a constant source of grief for me. So oh Lord, please be kind to exterminate them with your arrow (that you had mounted on your bow to punish me)¹. (5)

When the merciful Lord heard of the torments of the Ocean's heart, he was moved by pity at him. So taking cognizance of this, the graceful Lord who is valiant and steadfast in the battle-field immediately acted to dispel the troubles of the Ocean. [To wit, the Lord immediately shot the arrow in the direction indicated by the Deity of the ocean, and once the arrow was gone the ocean felt at ease as now there was no physical danger for it.] (6)

[Note—¹This verse is very interesting. We have read that Lord Ram had mounted his arrow on his bow to punish the Ocean before he appeared to plead for mercy and be forgiven. This arrow was still there, mounted on the bow! The Ocean felt terrified at the sight of this mounted arrow and was sore affright that if he does not tell the Lord of any target for this arrow then chances are that he himself would be one, for the Lord's arrow, once raised, cannot go in vain; it must be shot at something to dissipate its energy. So what ought to be done now?

By the term 'northern direction' or 'northern boarder', the Ocean means the land mass extending all the way up from the shore where Lord Ram met it till the fringes of the mighty Himalayan Mountain range which formed the extreme northern boundary of the known land mass of that era. There were many criminal tribes and demons who still lived there. So the Deity of the ocean requested Lord Ram to shoot his arrow in that direction so that it can eliminate such elements in the Ocean's backyard.

This request has great symbolic importance and significance—it means the Ocean reminded Lord Ram that while it is okay that he is going to Lanka to exterminate the demons who are sinful, cruel and vile to the extreme, but if this is the aim of the Lord then why should he neglect or ignore similar evil creatures still living in his own backyard, up in the main land? In Lanka only the worst of such demonic entities are concentrated, but others who may be less evil at present and who may one day evolve into evil forces similar to those who live presently in Lanka if they are not rooted out now are spread all over the north of the ocean. The Ocean reminded Lord Ram that it is a precautionary measure the Lord ought to take!

According to sage Valmiki's Ramayana, there was a place known as Droom-Kulya lying to the north of the ocean. That place was inhabited by low-caste people who were very sinful. The Ocean asked Lord Ram to shoot his arrow in that direction so that its explosive and fiery landing on the land would terrify these people, and they would think that the gods in heaven have shot this meteor at them to warn them to mend their sinful ways. There are good chances that it would suffice the purpose of reforming these sinful people. It is said that Lord Ram shot the arrow in the direction proposed by the Ocean, and the land got scorched, turning it into a desert known as 'Marukantar'. But since Lord Ram is kind and merciful in his heart, and since he wished to give the land and its people a chance for reformation, he blessed them that the land would be free from diseases, and that it would soon bear green trees that would have fruits on them. {Refer: Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 22, verse nos. 32-43.}

It is believed that this area is known as the Thar Desert and its surrounding areas in the present-day state of Rajasthan in India. In ancient times there was a huge cavity in the land, and it was filled with salt water to form a huge lagoon, or it could have been a fresh-water lake, a sort of an 'inland sea'. This lake or lagoon had a narrow water-channel linking it to the present-day Arabian Sea, that in turn merged with its parent body known as the 'Ocean' which was where Lord Ram now stood, on the southern tip of the mainland India.]

देखि राम बल पौरुष भारी । हरषि पयोनिधि भयउ सुखारी ॥ ७ ॥

सकल चरित कहि प्रभुहि सुनाव । चरन बंदि पाथोधि सिधावा ॥ ८ ॥ dēkhi rāma bala pauruṣa bhārī. haraṣi payōnidhi bhaya'u sukhārī. 7.

sakala carita kahi prabhuhi sunāvā. carana bandi pāthōdhi sidhāvā. 8.

When the Deity of the ocean observed the might and valour of Lord Ram (as well as the Lord's readiness to oblige him and adopt a friendly attitude towards him), he felt extremely glad and exhilarated in his heart. (7)

Then after narrating the whole story to the Lord (regarding the evil doings of the inhabitants of his northern borders as well as other things directly related to the Lord's campaign, such as the reason for the ocean's initial reluctance to allow the Lord's army to cross over to Lanka)¹, the Deity of the ocean reverentially bowed his head at the feet of Lord Ram and went back to his own abode. (8)

[Note—¹The Deity of the ocean told Lord Ram that he had no real intention of creating an obstruction in the Lord's way, and to prove his integrity and a cooperative attitude he cited how he had asked a mountain named Mainak to rise from the depth of the ocean and invite Hanuman to take some rest while the latter was on his way to Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 1 and Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes it.

The demons led by Ravana were a formidable enemy, so the Ocean wished to make sure that the Lord is sufficiently powerful to defeat them by testing his might and resolve just like the case of Hanuman when the mother of serpents, known as Sursa, was sent by the gods to test his mettle and war readiness—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 2 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-12 that precede it.

There was another reason why the Ocean initially pretended to obstruct Lord Ram's way to Lanka. It was well known that Ravana was very harsh and cruel and unforgiving in his wrath and meting out punishment to those who offended him. So if the Ocean did not pretend to block Lord Ram's progress to Lanka, and if it appeared that he was a willing ally of the Lord, then there were good chances that his act would certainly offend Ravana, and that would mean unending horror for himself as well as all the marine creatures that live in his realm. So therefore, in order to deflect such a terrifying situation the Ocean decided to pretend to block Lord Ram's progress to Lanka; it was merely for show to appease Ravana. Now when the Lord had pulled out his arrow to shoot at him, the Ocean would have an excuse, in case Ravana became furious and came calling, that he was forced to cooperate with Lord Ram under the threat of death.

There was fear from the backyard too, because demon pickets were posted by Ravana on the mainland, to the north of the shore of the ocean where Lord Ram presently stood. We have already read about demons defiling the fire sacrifices of sages, about them attacking Lord Ram himself on different occasions, and how Ravana's sister Supernakha had tried to trap the Lord, an event that culminated in Sita's abduction by Ravana.

These were the many stories and facts that the Deity of the ocean confided to Lord Ram.]

छं०. निज भवन गवनेउ सिंधु श्रीरघुपतिहि यह मत भायऊ । १ ।
 यह चरित कलि मलहर जथामति दास तुलसी गायऊ ॥ २ ॥
 सुख भवन संसय समन दवन बिषाद रघुपति गुन गना । ३ । तजि सकल आस भरोस गावहि सुनहि संतत सठ मना ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

nija bhavana gavanē'u sindhu śrīraghupatihi yaha mata bhāya'ū. 1.
 yaha carita kali malahara jathāmati dāsa tulasī gāya'ū. 2.
 sukha bhavana sansaya samana davana biṣāda raghupati guna ganā. 3.
 taji sakala āsa bharōsa gāvahi sunahi santata saṭha manā. 4.

The Ocean (i.e. the Deity of the ocean) went to his own abode. The advice given by him to Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) was very much liked by the Lord. (Chanda line no. 1)

This narrative is able to wipe out the negative consequences arising out of sins prevalent in the era of Kaliyug.

[To wit, by hearing and narrating this glorious story of Lord Ram, a devotee is cleansed of all taints that tarnish his inner self in the age of Kaliyug that is known for predominance of sins and evil qualities.]

Tulsidas has sung the Lord's glories and the divine story narrating the Lord's deeds in this world according to his limited abilities. (Chanda line no. 2)

Singing and narrating the divine qualities and glorious virtues of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) through the means of stories related to the Lord and his life on earth are like a treasury of happiness, joy and peace (for they bestow eternal pleasure and bliss to the heart). They have the potential of destroying or exterminating all spiritual doubts and consternations that confuse a devotee. They vanquish all grief and sorrows that cause torment to the creature. (Chanda line no. 3)

Oh my stupid mind and heart ("saṭha manā")! Listen to me: abandon all other wishes that you may have, and stop relying on any other source for obtaining peace and happiness in life.

Instead, rely solely on listening to and singing of these divine stories of Lord Ram as the single-window source for all your spiritual requirements, as the only panacea for accessing eternal bliss and happiness, as the fountainhead that would grant you everlasting beatitude and felicity. (Chanda line no. 4)

दो०. सकल सुमंगल दायक रघुनायक गुन गान ।

सादर सुनहिं ते तरहिं भव सिंधु बिना जलजान ॥ ६० ॥

dōhā.

sakala sumaṅgala dāyaka raghunāyaka guna gāna.
 sādara sunahim tē tarahim bhava sindhu binā jalajāna. 60.

Verily indeed, the singing and narrating of the glories and divine stories of Lord Raghunayak (Lord Ram) is the only fountainhead that bestows all sorts of auspiciousness, good omens, welfare and well-being to one and all.

Truly, in all sooth and without gainsay, those who are fortunate to listen to the narration of Lord Ram's divine story and of the Lord's glories are able to cross over this symbolic ocean represented by the endless cycle of transmigration. [To wit, their soul finds liberation and deliverance once and for all. They attain emancipation and salvation for themselves. Their soul attains eternity; they find eternal beatitude and felicity.] (Doha no. 60)

Sub-section 10.1.2—Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to—Doha no. 5; (ii) Doha no. 11 (a) along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it:-

(i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to—Doha no. 5:-

दो०. लव निमेष परमानु जुग बरष कलप सर चंड । १ । भजसि न मन तेहि राम को कालु जासु कोदंड ॥ २ ॥

dōhā.

lava nimēṣa paramānu juga baraṣa kalapa sara caṇḍa. 1.
bhajasi na mana tēhi rāma kō kālū jāsū kōdaṇḍa. 2.

[The poet-saint Tulsidas exhorts his own self, i.e. his mind and his heart known as the ‘Mana’, to worship and adore Lord Ram who is none but the Supreme Being himself in a physical form. Addressing his Mana, the learned poet says:-]

‘Oh my dear Mana! Why don’t you worship and adore Lord Ram—the Supreme Being whose primary form is cosmic and timeless in nature, a form that transcends the boundaries of Time as it is eternal and infinite, a form that is all pervading and all-encompassing—for whom the ‘Kaal’ (the factor of immortal Time; the factor of Time that precedes this creation and would even follow its conclusion) is the cosmic ‘Bow’, and the different divisions of this Time factor, both at the microcosmic level as well as the macrocosmic level of existence, from the very tiny fractions such as Lava, Nimesh and Parmaanu (referring to an hour, a minute and a second), to the cosmic scale of the measurement of Time known as Yuga, Varsha and Kalpa (referring to an era, a year and one cycle of creation) are different types of ‘Arrows’, fierce and powerful, that the Lord employs both for short-range as well as for long-range use respectively. (Doha line nos. 1-2)

[Note— The factor of Time and how the Supreme Being represented by Lord Ram uses it to exercise his control over this creation should be clearly understood. When anything comes into existence it has a certain life-span or life-time at the end of which time it ceases to exist. This is a universal Law of Nature that is true for everything, both at the macrocosmic level of creation and its microcosmic counterpart. Therefore, by exercising control over this factor of Time, and ensuring that this Law of Nature remains inviolable, the Lord ensures that each and every entity in this creation remains within its designated limits.

The Lord himself also follows this Law of Nature that has been promulgated by him—and this is the reason why when the time came for him to leave this world and return to his heavenly abode he willingly accepted it and shed his worldly mortal coil. This fact is explicitly narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 9-39 where we read that ‘Kaal’, the god of death, came to Lord Ram and reminded him that his time on earth has come to an end, and it would be proper for him to return to heaven. The Lord willingly accepted this advice, and thereafter he maneuvered things in such a clever way which gave him an excuse to make an honourable exit from this mundane, physical and gross world. How Lord Ram steered his exit has been narrated in detail in Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 8, verse nos. 40-72, and Canto 9, verse nos. 1-67.

In the current verse we are reading, it is the cosmic form of Lord Ram that is being invoked. This form is also known as Brahm in the Upanishads. This form has no physical characteristics, for it is without any attributes, is invisible, sublime and subtle, is all-pervading and all-encompassing. The Upanishads assert that there is nothing beyond Brahm, and this Brahm is a term that is used to refer to the ‘cosmic Consciousness’ that is the only Truth in this creation. Without this Consciousness there will be no ‘life’ in this world, and a world without life is dead.

Lord Ram is the Supreme Emperor of this creation, and like an Emperor he employs different means to control his realm. At the microcosmic level of creation the Lord ensures that the cycle of creation keeps on rotating or moving in the form of each passing moment represented by seconds, minutes and hours. Similarly, on a larger plane, or at the macrocosmic level, he ensures that the creation slowly revolves and changes from one year to another, from one era to the next, and from one cycle of creation to the next, a fresh cycle.

This is like a gigantic wheel rotating slowly but certainly, without pause and stopping. Whatever has come into existence would end one day, whether that ‘day of end’ is measured in an hour, a year or an era, but the fact is that the end cannot be avoided.

But then, what remains after that ‘end’? It is the immortal Time, known as ‘Kaal’, that presides the birth and death of everything; it is Kaal that brings about an ‘end’ of what exists, and it also Kaal that sees the ‘beginning’ of another or a new phase of everything. But Kaal has no ‘life’ or ‘authority’ of its own; it is but a tool in the hands of Brahm, the Supreme Being, the cosmic Consciousness. Lord Ram represents this Brahm. So therefore it follows that Time, known as Kaal, is an instrument in the hands of Lord Ram by which he controls this creation.

And just like the case of an Emperor who presides over a vast administrative machinery with a governor at the helm of each division of his extended empire, and then appoints other authorities to help these governors to exercise proper control over the realm, Lord Ram, in his cosmic role as the Supreme Being, employs Time and its various divisions as outlined in this verse to exercise his control over the vast realm known as ‘creation’.]

सो०. सिंधु बचन सुनि राम सचिव बोलि प्रभु अस कहेउ । १ ।

अब बिलंबु केहि काम करहु सेतु उतरै कटकु ॥ २ ॥

सुनहु भानुकुल केतु जामवंत कर जोरि कह । ३ ।

नाथ नाम तव सेतु नर चढ़ि भव सागर तरहि ॥ ४ ॥

sōraṭhā.

sindhu bacana suni rāma saciva bōli prabhu asa kahē'u. 1.

aba bilambu kēhi kāma karahu sētu utarai kaṭaku. 2.

sunahu bhānukula kētu jāmavanta kara jōri kaha. 3.

nātha nāma tava sētu nara caḍhi bhava sāgara tarahim. 4.

[After a little pause marked by the end of Canto 5 known as Sundar Kand, the learned poet Tulsidas resumes his narration in Canto 6 known as Lanka Kand.]

After hearing the advice of the Deity of the ocean¹, Lord Ram summoned his advisors and ministers (such as Sugriv, Vibhishan, Jamvant, Angad, Hanuman etc.) and instructed them: ‘Why are you delaying now? Get cracking immediately and make preparations for building a bridge across the ocean so that the army can cross it and land on the other shore.’ (Sortha line nos. 1-2)

Jamvant (the old bear chieftain) joined his hands in prayer and politely submitted to Lord Ram, ‘Listen oh Lord Ram who symbolizes the exalted glory of the Solar Race (bhānukula kētu). Your divine and holy Name is itself a symbolic bridge which helps creatures cross this mundane world of birth and death with its accompanying torments and horrors, thereby helping them to attain eternal peace and beatitude². (Sortha line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 59 and Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that follow it.

²Jamvant said: “Oh Lord, by taking the help of your holy Name a creature easily finds liberation and deliverance from this world of transmigration. Your divine Name helps the creature’s soul to attain emancipation and deliverance. Your exalted Name provides peace, bliss, beatitude and felicity to the tormented creature.

This being the case, if a creature can be certain to cross this vast ocean-like world consisting of an endless cycle of birth and death along with its attendant grief and horrors, an ‘ocean’ that seems to have no end in sight, then getting across this ‘worldly ocean’ is no problem. Of course we have to construct a bridge, but your Name is so powerful that if it is constructed by invoking your Name each time its blocks are put into the water then it is assured that they will never sink, and so by employing this method we will be able to build the bridge step by step.”]

चौ०. यह लघु जलधि तरत कति बारा । अस सुनि पुनि कह पवनकुमारा ॥ १ ॥

प्रभु प्रताप बड़वानल भारी । सोषेउ प्रथम पयोनिधि बारी ॥ २ ॥

तव रिपु नारि रुदन जल धारा । भरेउ बहोरि भयउ तेहिं खारा ॥ ३ ॥

सुनि अति उकुति पवनसुत केरी । हरषे कपि रघुपति तन हेरी ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

yaha laghu jaladhi tarata kati bārā. asa suni puni kaha pavanakumārā. 1.

prabhu pratāpa baṛavānala bhārī. sōṣē'u prathama payōnidhi bārī. 2.

tava ripu nāri rudana jala dhārā. bharē'u bahōri bhaya'u tēhim khārā. 3.

sunī ati ukuti pavanāsuta kērī. haraṣē kapi raghupati tana hērī. 4.

[Jamvant continued—] In the context of what I have just said, what does this humble worldly ocean mean? [If your Name is so powerful that it enables the creature to cross over the infinite ocean of transmigration, than what is there to worry about this worldly ocean which has a limited dimension, especially when you yourself are present here to tame it and help us to cross over it?]¹

Hearing these words of Jamvant, the son of the wind god (Hanuman) said --- (1),

‘Oh Lord (prabhu)! Your majesty’s anger had created such a fierce underwater fire known as ‘baravānala’² that it has already dried up the ocean. What is seen now is salty water that has filled the cavity that was formed when the original water was evaporated. (2)

The emptied cavity or trough of the ocean was then filled with streams of tears shed by your enemy’s wives, and that is why the water of the ocean is so salty and alkaline³.’ (3)

Hearing this witty observation of the son of the wind god (Hanuman), all the assembled monkeys and bears glanced at Lord Ram and marveled at this idea, feeling joyous in their hearts. [To wit, everyone heard Hanuman’s witty statement and thoroughly enjoyed it.]⁴ (4)

[Note—¹Jamvant said: “Oh Lord! If your Name is so powerful, potent, majestic and authoritative that by merely remembering it and invoking its mystical powers a creature is able to help his soul cross over the endless barriers that come in the way of his liberation and deliverance from the cycle of transmigration that is like a huge cosmic ocean without any end, then this body of water which lies in the front, and which the world likes to call an ‘ocean’, is of no consequence, for its dimensions are equivalent to a small puddle of water collected in the hollow made in the ground by the hoof of a cow as compared to the dimensions of the ocean symbolizing the cycle of birth and death which the creature crosses easily by simply relying on the mystical powers of your holy and divine Name. So therefore, there is nothing to worry about. Just issue your instructions and see how we tame this ocean.’

²The “baravānala fire” is the fierce fire that burns in the bowls of the earth, underneath the bed of the ocean. It is believed that it keeps the water of the ocean warm and helps sustain a rich culture of marine life, both zoological and botanical, even in great depths of the ocean, a life which would otherwise have died due to constant dampness and coldness of the water. The existence of this life-sustaining underwater fire is the reason why liquid water and marine life are sustained even under glaciers that would have otherwise frozen everything under them.

Like overland volcanoes, this underwater fire also erupts once in a while, giving rise to spouts of water and steam that are observed rising from the surface of the ocean at some places. It is also this underwater fire that produces ‘hot water springs’.

Perhaps it was produced at the time when the ocean was vigorously churned by the gods and the demons in some ancient time in search of the ambrosia known as ‘Amrit. In order to churn the celestial ocean they used Mt. Madrachal as the churning rod, and it was placed on the bed of the ocean. The vigorous turning of this ‘rod’ created friction that produced the ‘baravānala’.

Another possibility is that some drops of the exceedingly hot and corrosive ‘Halal poison’ that was produced due to this churning may have fallen in the ocean, which in turn not only heated its water but also caused it to become corrosive. In due course of time this Halal poison so much affected the rocks already present in the water that they formed into corals.

According to 'Kalki Puran', when Lord Shiva produced the shaft of fire that burned Kamdeva (because this god of passion was tormenting the Lord and disturbing his meditation), the creator Brahma intervened to stop further destruction in this creation. Brahma converted this horrifying dart of fire into a 'sea-horse' and sent it to the ocean in an attempt to cool it down. The marine creature of this name and the underwater fire were the result of this.

Valmiki Ramayan says that the 'baravānala' is the anger of a sage named Aurva, and it is this fire that one day would heat the ocean so much that it would eventually evaporate and dry up, leading to an end of all water resources that cool this world that would eventually result in the extinction of all life on earth as it becomes a hot ball of fire.

Another narrative appears in Padma-Puran, Shristi-Khand, Pushkar-Mahatamya where it is said that Saraswati, the goddess of wisdom, was asked by the creator Brahma to take the golden pot full of eternally burning fire from the possession of Lord Vishnu and keep it in the custody of the god of the ocean because the creator feared this pot could fall in the hands of the demons who had many a times attacked heaven.

³We have read earlier that Lord Ram had prepared to shoot his fiery arrow or missile at the ocean to burn it and dry it up, when the Deity of the ocean appeared before the Lord and pleaded for mercy. The Ocean asked the Lord to shoot the arrow in the 'northern direction'. The Lord shot his arrow as requested. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 57—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 60.}

But then what might have happened? This fierce and hot arrow dried up the water body where it landed, and then bored itself into its bed. Since the water was shallow and it dried up quickly, the arrow was not sufficiently cooled down, and so when it drilled itself into the earth it made the bowls of the earth hot too. This event could have produced an event that in modern times we can liken to an underground nuclear explosion. This phenomenon not only heated the bowls of the earth and dried up the water where the arrow landed but it also contaminated all the water that had any link with the water body where the arrow landed, i.e. the lagoon that was referred to by the Ocean, and at which Lord Ram had shot his arrow.

This is possibly why the entire ocean became corrosive, and this is also what might have caused the underground fire, because the red hot arrow may have ignited the vast underground reservoir of natural gas and oil that lies under the bed of the ocean.

In Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 82-83 we read that the "Lord's formidable arrow returned to his quiver after successfully completing its assignment". This means in practical terms that the entire stretch of water, from where the Lord stood now till the place where the arrow was initially shot at, was dried up by the Lord's missile.

Then how was the cavity of the ocean filled again? Hanuman gives here an interesting way how it may have happened, and why the ocean became saline and corrosive. He says that when the original water, that was sweet, evaporated due to the heat of Lord Ram's arrow, the empty cavity was filled by streams of tears of the wives of demon warriors who wept bitterly at the prospect of the death of their male relatives in the war that loomed on the horizon of Lanka. These tears formed streams that flowed into the empty ocean just like ordinary rivers today do when they fall into the ocean. This imagery is indeed a fantastic and a wonderful way of depicting an event that may have actually happened long-long ago!

Was it possible for the ocean to dry up instantly while everyone was observing it, and then how did it get so quickly filled with the tears of the ladies of the demon warriors? What did Hanuman actually mean? Well, from the more practical perspective Hanuman meant that from the time Lord Ram decided to go to Lanka to eliminate the demons, his anger was seething inside him much like the underground fire that burns invisibly inside the earth. This wrath of the Lord had quietly dried up the ocean, and by the time they reached its shores it was filled by the tears of weeping demon ladies.

Why were the demonesses so sure that their male relatives would all die? Well, the whole city of Lanka had witnessed what havoc Hanuman had unleashed when he had burnt it down during the time he had gone there in search of Sita. In fact, large numbers of demon warriors were already killed in the skirmishes they had with Hanuman at that time. So the signs were loud and clear: that doom was not far away. So the demonesses wept and grieved bitterly, shedding tears endlessly that flowed into the cavity of the ocean.]

⁴Everyone present heard Hanuman's witty observation and thoroughly enjoyed the subtle sense of humour it contained. They glanced at the Lord to see how he reacted to Hanuman's reasoning, and when they saw him smile they understood that he too enjoyed the wit of Hanuman. After the somber situation that had just ended with the Ocean succumbing to the Lord, it was a pleasant turn of events. An otherwise serious and grave atmosphere was suddenly changed into a pleasant one by Hanuman, lifting everyone's spirits and sending a ripple of laughter in the rank and file of the Lord's army. Of course, Lord Ram too enjoyed and appreciated it.]

जामवंत बोले दोउ भाई । नल नीलहि सब कथा सुनाई ॥ ५ ॥

राम प्रताप सुमिरि मन माहीं । करहु सेतु प्रयास कछु नाहीं ॥ ६ ॥ jā mavanta bōlē dō'u bhā'ī. nala nīlahi saba kathā sunā'ī. 5.

rāma pratāpa sumiri mana māhīm. karahu sētu prayāsa kachu nāhīm. 6.

Jamvant (the bear chieftain) called the two brothers Nala and Neela, and told them about everything. [Jamvant related to the two brothers what the Deity of the ocean had told Lord Ram a little while ago—that to cross the ocean a bridge across the surface of the water had to be constructed, and for this purpose the two brothers, Nala and Neela, were fully qualified and very competent¹.] (5)

He exhorted them to start the construction of the bridge forthwith, saying, 'You must remember the glory of Lord Ram and feel rest assured that you would be successful in constructing the bridge. So don't worry. Building this bridge will not need any great effort, and you will be able to do it as if it was a mere sport for you.' (6)

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 60.]

बोलि लिए कपि निकर बहोरी । सकल सुनुहु बिनती कछु मोरी ॥ ७ ॥
 राम चरन पंकज उर धरहू । कौतुक एक भालु कपि करहू ॥ ८ ॥
 धावहु मर्कट बिकट बरूथा । आनुहु बिटप गिरिन्ह के जूथा ॥ ९ ॥ सुनि कपि भालु चले करि हूहा । जय रघुबीर प्रताप समूहा ॥ १० ॥ bōli li'ē kapi nikara bahōrī. sakala sunahu binatī kachu mōrī. 7.

 rāma carana paṅkaja ura dharahū. kautuka ēka bhālu kapi karahū. 8.
 dhāvahu markṭa bikaṭa barūthā. ānahu biṭapa girinha kē jūthā. 9.
 suni kapi bhālu calē kari hūhā. jaya raghubīra pratāpa samūhā. 10.

After briefing Nala and Neela, Jamvant summoned large number of monkey and bear warriors and addressed them as follows: 'I pray to all of you to listen to my little request. (7)

This request is a simple one. First invoke the glory of Lord Ram and enshrine his holy feet in your hearts, and then engage yourselves in a little sporting activity¹. (8)

All of you who are full of daring and courage must get cracking immediately. Run in all the directions, wherever you wish to go. Find trees and rocks, pick them up, and bring them here as fast as you can.' (9)

As soon as the multitudes of monkeys and bears heard this instruction they gave out a thunderous cheer (as there was nothing better they could have been asked to do). Then they embarked on this mission instantly, with immense zeal and energy.

They enthusiastically applauded Lord Ram and exclaimed in unison, 'Hail Lord Ram; Glory to you. [Oh Lord, off we go! Just wait for some more time and see what wonder unfolds right in front of you.]' (10)

[Note—¹Jamvant told the assembled monkey and bear warriors, "Listen my friends! What I will now ask you to do is something all of you will enjoy doing. You have always been playing around with huge trees and their branches, and you have always enjoyed throwing big boulders and rocks here and there as well at each other playfully. I mean that you have been doing this since your childhood days; all of you are habituated in uprooting great trees and rocks, and using them as tools for your games and other sporting activities. Now well, it is the time to employ this skill and put it to some good use.

I am absolutely sure that you will thoroughly enjoy this activity—of uprooting trees and boulders and rocks from wherever you can find them, and then bringing them here and dumping them into the ocean so that Nala and Neela could use them to build a bridge. So go ahead and enjoy yourselves!

Remember: Never earlier you had a chance of being actually asked to uproot trees and dislodge rocks and boulders from hills and mountains, and then get praised for this mischievous deed of yours. Since this is a natural game for you, since it is a habit for all of you, and the icing on the cake is that now you are being actually asked to do it instead of being reprimanded for it, so get cracking immediately and thoroughly enjoy this freedom to engage in an activity that suits your natural temperament. This is a sort of a boon for you. So go ahead; you have my permission. Good luck!"]

दो०. अति उत्तंग गिरि पादप लीलहिं लेहिं उठाइ । आनि देहिं नल नीलहि रचहिं ते सेतु बनाइ ॥ १ ॥

dōhā.

ati utaṅga giri pādapa līlahiṁ lēhiṁ uṭhā'i.
āni dēhiṁ nala nīlahi racahiṁ tē sētu banā'i. 1.

The huge army of monkeys and bears got a bonanza of their lives. They uprooted large trees as well as stones, boulders and rocks of all sizes and shapes from mountains and hills, and brought them immediately to the shore of the ocean. There they handed their collection over to Nala and Neela who used these trees, stones, boulders and rocks to construct the bridge step-by-step. (Doha no. 1)

[Note—We must remember that Nala and Neela were blessed by a boon that anything they touched would float on the water. So it means that the rocks and boulders which the warriors brought were first handed over to the two brothers, and not directly dumped into the water because then they would have sunk. When Nala and Neela touched these heavy rocks and boulders they began floating. There was of course no problem with tree trunks as they naturally float on the surface of the water.

Nala and Neela had merely to put these trees, stones, rocks and boulders into their proper position and tie them up. Perhaps they first tied up the trees using thick but soft stems and creepers as twines, and then over this temporary float they placed the rocks and the boulders, fixing them tightly over the tree trunks that acted as rough wooden planks over which slabs of stones were placed to make a strong floating bridge.

It has also been said that the stones that were used to construct this miraculous bridge were actually porous and light, and not solid rocks, thereby enabling them to float on the surface of the water instead of sinking.

A very interesting question arises here: Ravana was surely informed by his spies on this development, that a bridge is being constructed. Why then did he not react; why did he not do anything to disrupt it somehow even if his attempt failed?

There are two ways to look at the answer of this question. One is that Ravana wanted to find deliverance from his evil body of a demon, and it was for this purpose he had abducted Sita in the first place as this would force Lord Ram to come and kill him. This 'killing' of his gross body would free his soul that was trapped in it. So therefore, in spite of all the pretensions of hostility, boastful talk and angry posturing, Ravana secretly welcomed the move of building the bridge as this would ensure that Lord Ram actually came to Lanka.

Ravana actually wished that the Supreme Being in the physical form of Lord Ram set his holy feet on the soil of Lanka which would purify his land. Not only this, being a magnanimous and generous king, albeit of the evil demon race, he wished that all other demons of his race could also find liberation and spiritually benefit by the actual presence of the Supreme Lord in their midst. This being his desire, why would he disrupt the bridge?

There is another angle to the reason why Ravana did not do anything to break the bridge while it was still under construction. He was so extremely deluded about his own powers, strength, invincibility and authority that he was sure that the Deity of the ocean would never ever dare to offend him by allowing his enemy Lord Ram to get across. He was therefore sure that the ocean is playing some trick on the Lord by seemingly being cooperative, but would suddenly break the bridge either before its completion, or when the whole army of Lord Ram was on it while crossing to Lanka. In the former case, both Nala and Neela, along with their aides, would be drowned, and so there would be no one left to continue with the bridge. It would also completely demoralize the rest of the Lord's army. In the second case—when the ocean would make the bridge collapse while the army was mid-way across it, it would be the end of the whole story.

Besides this, even in the remote chance of the ocean betraying Ravana, the latter felt that the demon warriors were strong and powerful enough to easily get rid of the invaders. Or, he would cut the bridge himself from the place where it touched the soil of Lanka at the right time. He minced no words in this regard when later on in the story we read that he first reassured his wife Mandodari that there is nothing to fear because not even gods dared to stand before him so what is there to worry about monkeys, bears and humans—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 8.

Then, when the Lord's army actually launched the attack, Ravana thought that his demon warriors would easily overcome the enemy by simply eating them up as it was the habit of meat-eating demons. So he ordered his hungry demons to 'go and eat those monkeys and bears and human brothers alive'—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (1) Chaupai line nos. 6-9 that precede Doha no. 8; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 40.

So, the deluded and over-confident Ravana, who was too haughty, proud and egoist to come to terms with ground realities that there was someone stronger and more powerful than him in this world, decided to 'wait and watch' while the bridge was being constructed. In the end when Lord Ram's army succeeded to cross the ocean and land on the soil of Lanka, and this news was conveyed to Ravana, he was absolutely shocked, stunned and amazed as he had never ever imagined even in his wildest of dreams that this thing, of crossing the virtual un-crossable ocean, is actually possible. His astonishment and inability to digest this bit of news is clearly mentioned in (i) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 5; and (ii) Devi Puran Mahabhagvat Ramayan, Canto 40, verse no. 8. We shall be reading them by-and-by.]

चौ०. सैल बिसाल आनि कपि देहीं । कंदुक इव नल नील ते लेहीं ॥ १ ॥
देखि सेतु अति सुंदर रचना । बिहसि कृपानिधि बोले बचना ॥ २ ॥
परम रज्ज उत्तम यह धरनी । महिमा अमित जाइ नहिं बरनी ॥ ३ ॥
करिहउँ इहाँ संभु थापना । मोरे हृदयँ परम कल्पना ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

saila bisāla āni kapi dēhīm. kanduka iva nala nīla tē lēhīm. 1.
dēkhi sētu ati sundara racanā. bihasi kṛpānidhi bōlē bacanā. 2.
parama ramya uttama yaha dharanī. mahimā amita jā'i nahim baranī. 3.
kariha'uṁ ihāṁ sambhu thāpanā. mōrē hṛdayaṁ parama kalapanā. 4.

The monkeys (and bears) brought heavy rocks and boulders and handed them over to Nala and Neela who received them as if they were balls. [To wit, the warriors brought the large rocks and boulders and simply flung them towards Nala and Neela, who caught them like one catches a football.] (1)

When Lord Ram, who is an ocean of mercy, saw the progress of the construction of this wonderful bridge that looked exceptionally magnificent and wondrous as it stretched in front of him as far as the eyes could see (i.e. appearing to touch the horizon), he was very glad and fascinated¹. He marveled at this sight, smiled and said --- (2),

‘This land is very beautiful, charming and auspicious. Its glory and importance cannot be sufficiently described². (3)

I wish to sanctify it by establishing (consecrating) Lord Shiva here (in the form of his Lingam).

[To wit, I will make this land holy and purified by establishing an idol of Lord Shiva here and consecrate it. I will sanctify this place by worshipping Lord Shiva first before setting my foot on the bridge.]³

This has been the cherished wish of my heart for long; I had imagined that I would be able to fulfill my heart’s wish soon, and I had been planning to do it for a long time.’ (4)

[Note—¹Lord Ram stood on the shore and gazed at this fascinating sight of the construction of the bridge and its rapid progress into the distant horizon. He watched amused as thousands of his warriors were singing and dancing merrily as they untiringly and full of enthusiasm brought boulders and rocks and trees and creepers of all imaginable sizes, shapes and denominations, either dumping them on the shore of the ocean to be used later when required, or directly passing them over to those who were engaged in helping Nala and Neela in the construction work.

The Lord surveyed his surroundings: to his left, right and front stretched a vast expanse of water of the ocean. A pleasant breeze blew from all the directions. There was a chorus of noises made by the excited monkey and bear warriors who sang, cheered and joked with each other, encouraging their companions and boosting the energy of one another.

Lord Ram marveled at this fascinating scene and smiled in amusement. He called his trusted lieutenant Sugriv to his side and shared his joy with him. Then the Lord said, “Look Sugriv! Behold this wonderful sight. Look around yourself and see how beautiful the scene is. It’s awe-inspiring and most fascinating, is it not? Well, I had an inspiration. While our troops are engaged in the construction of this bridge, which is obviously going to take some time during which period we have some free time in our hands, it is my earnest wish to utilize it to honour and worship Lord Shiva. My friend, it is an established tradition that one should worship one’s revered deity and seek the latter’s blessings before starting on an enterprise. So let me first pay my obeisance to Lord Shiva whom I adore, and who himself adores me, during the free time that we have before the bridge is completed, for once it is finished there would be no time to be lost. Hence, summon those warriors who are free and not directly engaged in the construction work, and send them to nearby sages, hermits and seers with an invitation for them to come here to attend the consecration ceremony of Lord Shiva’s Lingam which I propose to establish here. This will not only sanctify this place but also ensure that the bridge is completed without any hurdle.”

²⁻³Why is this land so special? And why did Lord Ram wish to worship Lord Shiva here before embarking on his mission to Lanka? Now, let us examine these points one by one.

First, let us see why Lord Ram worshipped Lord Shiva. There are a variety of reasons why Lord Ram worshipped and prayed to Lord Shiva before he set foot on the bridge and his actually embarking on his campaign to eliminate the cruel demons in Lanka. Let us see some of the most important reasons.

When the bridge across the ocean was getting ready and Lord Ram was about to embark on his military campaign to Lanka with his majestic and vast army not only to free his wife Sita from the captivity of the demon king Ravana but also to eliminate, with freeing Sita as an obvious excuse, the cruel and sinful demons from the world so that the rest of the creatures can live fearlessly in peace and harmony, and the laws of Dharma can be restored, he decided to offer his worship to Lord Shiva and pay his obeisance to the latter.

Before launching any enterprise it is necessary and prudent to offer one's respects and worship to one's chosen deity to invoke the latter's blessing, good wishes and patronage. Lord Shiva is not only the revered God of the whole world in general as he is the 'Maha-Deva', the 'Great God', but is also the God revered by Lord Ram himself, as well as the patron God of Ram's arch enemy and rival Ravana, the king of Lanka and of the demon race.

So therefore, Lord Ram offered his worship to Lord Shiva before he stepped on the bridge to launch his campaign for the conquest of Lanka. It was on this occasion that Lord Ram praised Shiva and declared that if anyone wants to have devotion for him (Ram as an incarnation of the Supreme Being) then it is ordained upon him to first offer his respects and worship to Lord Shiva.

Lord Shiva was not an ordinary god; he is honoured by the epithet of 'Maha-Deva', i.e. a 'Great God'. Amongst all the gods of the Hindu pantheon, Lord Shiva occupies a very important and revered place; he is regarded as being the wisest, the most enlightened and extremely self-realised amongst all the gods. Whenever the gods needed help they approached him for correct guidance. It is narrated in the book 'Ram Charit Manas' that when the cruelty and terror unleashed by the demons led by Ravana reached a point that was intolerable and the whole creation began to suffer, all the gods and mother earth first approached the Creator (Brahma) for help. Controlling Ravana was beyond his means, so he suggested to the group that they pray to Lord Vishnu who would surely help them as he is responsible for the safety, security and welfare of this creation. Now the big question was where to find Vishnu. It was then that Lord Shiva intervened and advised that the Supreme Being, Lord Vishnu, is available wherever his devotees seek him if they pray to him with sincerity and devotion. So on his advice, all the gods, including Brahma himself, prayed to Lord Vishnu who revealed himself and assured the assembled gods that he will come down to earth in the form of Lord Ram to take care of things. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Doha no. 187.}

Since it was Lord Shiva who showed the gods the correct way to access Lord Vishnu, so when the latter manifested himself as Lord Ram he now wished to request Shiva to do the same to him, i.e. to show him the path to victory, because Lord Shiva, being very wise and enlightened, knows the correct path that would help anyone to achieve his desired goal.

The second reason is this: Lord Shiva is the third God of the Trinity, the others being Lord Vishnu, the protector and sustainer of creation, and Lord Brahma who is the creator. Lord Shiva represents the deity that presides over the third phase of creation, i.e. the end of creation. Therefore, Shiva is responsible for bringing to a conclusion or an end to one cycle of creation that was started by Brahma and looked after by Vishnu. This being the case, Lord Ram thought it fit to seek Shiva's permission and blessing before he moves ahead with his mission of bringing to an end of the demon race that was evil and sinful. There were many other demons whom Lord Ram had eliminated or killed earlier, but those were isolated cases and that did not involve the extinction of an entire clan or a whole community of demons as would be done during the forthcoming war at Lanka. So it was absolutely necessary for Lord Ram to seek Lord Shiva's permission to do so as mass extinction of a race, a clan or a community, or bringing to an end of an era, falls within Shiva's jurisdiction.

The third reason: Lord Ram is an exceptionally merciful and compassionate Lord God. He was not happy that he would become an instrument of mass death and destruction of the demons, but he couldn't help because he was also the protector and well-wisher of this creation, responsible for maintaining peace, security, law and order in the world, and as these demons had caused so much untold misery and suffering in the world, tormenting all its creatures, it became obligatory for Lord Vishnu, Lord Ram's primary form, to step in to end this horror and mayhem. So while compelled to kill and eliminate the demons Lord Ram also wished that their souls found deliverance, emancipation and salvation, instead of being condemned to hell. This only Lord Shiva could do. Lord Shiva utters the holy Name of Lord Ram in the ears of dying creatures so that they find eternal freedom from the cycle of transmigration, and attain emancipation and salvation, i.e. attain 'Moksha'—this fact is mentioned in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 19; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 46; (iii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 119.

Had Lord Ram been vengeful and wanted the demons to 'go to hell', he would have invoked and worshipped Yama, the god who presides over hell, and definitely not Lord Shiva who gives liberation and deliverance to the soul of a dying creature.

The fourth reason: Shiva worships Lord Ram as his favourite deity, and he uses Lord Ram's holy Name as a Mantra (a divine, spiritual formula) for the purpose of Dhyan (meditation) and Japa (repetition). In fact, the whole Story of Lord Ram, known as the Ramayana, was originally conceived by Lord Shiva in his heart while meditating. So therefore, Lord Ram wished to pay his obeisance to Lord Shiva and show due respect to him by worshipping him and praying to him to reciprocate the latter's devotion for the former.

The fifth reason: It is a normal practice to first worship one's revered deity and seek the latter's blessings before one launches a project or embarks on a strategic mission, especially the one that was as important as the campaign to eliminate the cruel demons in the war of Lanka, a mission that was full of hazards and uncertainties.

The sixth reason: Ravana worshipped Lord Shiva and was his great devotee. So it was strategically important for Lord Ram to first seek Shiva's blessings and take him into confidence before launching his campaign to vanquish Ravana. It must be remembered that it was Lord Shiva who had showed the gods the way to invoke Lord Vishnu and ask him to get rid of the demons led by Ravana. So now Lord Ram wishes to remind Shiva of that day and seek his help; this would ensure that Shiva did not favour Ravana when the war actually begins even in the case of Ravana attempting to seek Shiva's favour to escape death.

The seventh reason: Ravana worships Lord Shiva, and therefore he would never come to attack Lord Ram and his companions during the time Lord Shiva's worship is in progress. This will ensure that the bridge would be constructed without interference and much of a trouble from the demons.

Now, let us examine the second point. This land was beautiful because the ocean here was calm as compared to other shores where it roars in a frightful way. The reason is that Lord Ram had tamed it and overcome its arrogance.

This place also marked the spot where for the first time in human history someone had built a floating bridge across the deep and churning waters of the ocean. It was no ordinary bridge; it successfully carried the weight of an entire army of monkeys and bears numbering in countless hundreds and thousands. And they weren't quietly strolling across it; they were jumping and dancing and stamping their feet heavily on the bridge all the way across it. This means that the bridge was exceptionally strong and sustainable.

There was ocean on three sides—east, west and south. It was a point on land from where one could see both the sunrise and the sunset in the east and the west respectively, making it a unique place geographically. The ocean lying to the south was the one that was needed to be bridged and crossed, and this bridge extended over the surface of the water as far as the eyes could see. Remember: Lanka was at a distance of 100 Yojan (approximately 800 miles) from this shore, and so the bridge obviously was also of the same length. This effectively divided the ocean into two parts—one that was to the east of this causeway, and one that was to the west of it. This presented a wonderful sight—the hitherto undivided ocean was now virtually partitioned into two! It was a 'beautiful' sight.

A soothing and cool breeze blew in from the three directions, the left, the right and the front, where the ocean was present. This made the atmosphere very pleasant.

This land also marked the place from where the Supreme Being finally launched his mission of eliminating the cruel demons to free the world from their tyranny and horror. But the war that led to the death of these demons was actually a blessing in disguise for them, for their souls were liberated and all the demons found salvation.

This land was the spot that marked the dawn of a new era of peace and tranquility in this world. It also marked the place where hopelessness turned into hope, where gloom gave way to cheer, where despair yielded to success.

Symbolically, this magnificent bridge represented a creature's effort to cross over from his mundane worldly existence mired by grief and worries, by making a little effort on his part and also by relying on the strength of Lord Ram's blessings and grace, to a new world of glory and happiness—because now Lord Ram would not only free the world from the horrors of the demons but would also free Sita from her captivity and distressful existence. In the process, the Lord would also free the souls of the demons and grant them a destiny that they would not ordinarily have imagined they could have ever attained.]

सुनि कपीस बहु दूत पठाए । मुनिबर सकल बोलि लै आए ॥ ५ ॥

लिंग थापि बिधिवत करि पूजा । सिव समान प्रिय मोहि न दूजा ॥ ६ ॥ sunī kapīsa bahu dūta paṭhā'ē. munibara sakala bōli lai ā'ē. 5.

liṅga thāpi bidhivata kari pūjā. siva samāna priya mōhi na dūjā. 6.

Hearing Lord Ram's wishes, the king of the monkeys, i.e. Sugriv, sent many messengers who went hastily in all the directions. They brought with them all the great sages and seers they could find to participate in this auspicious ceremony¹. (5)

Then, Lord Ram duly established and consecrated an idol of Lord Shiva, known as the "Lingam", and worshipped it as per established tradition. After completing the worshipping rituals and paying his obeisance to Lord Shiva, Lord Ram declared, 'There is no one who is as dear as Lord Shiva is for me'². (6)

[Note—¹The fact that a number of sages and seers were called to attend this consecration ceremony at such a short notice shows that they lived not far away. There was not much time in hand as the construction of the bridge was already underway, and no time could be wasted once it was finished.

This means that these sages and seers lived in the kingdom of Kishkindha and its nearby areas. Why were they called? Lord Shiva's "Lingam" had to be duly consecrated and worshipped, and for this purpose learned sages who were well-versed in worship rituals were needed.

A very important point can be inferred here. Ravana, though reviled as being a blood-thirsty demon who was a terror for sages and seers, killing them at will, was not after all as cruel and merciless as he has been painted out to be—for it is obvious that many sages, hermits and seers lived around the area so close to the shore of the ocean from where Lanka was merely 800 miles away. These sages and seers had no fear from Ravana while coming to attend Lord Ram's ceremony though they were fully aware that the Lord was about to launch a campaign against Ravana and was determined to eliminate the demons.

It is also possible that since the invitation sent to them was for attending a consecration ceremony of Lord Shiva's Lingam, they could not refuse even if they had some fear for their safety. But they knew Ravana and his nature well; they knew that Ravana was a great devotee of Lord Shiva, and so definitely he would never create any hindrance in worshipping Lord Shiva, and equally surely he would not harm anyone who was worshipping Lord Shiva or had come expressly for such worship.

²Here and in the verses that follow herein below, Lord Ram hints at the reason why he has worshipped Lord Shiva—it is because he adores and loves Shiva more than any other god.]

सिव द्रोही मम भगत कहावा । सो नर सपनेहुँ मोहि न पावा ॥ ७ ॥ संकर बिमुख भगति चह मोरी । सो नारकी मूढ़ मति थोरी ॥ ८ ॥ siva drōhī mama bhagata kahāvā. sō nara sapanēhum mōhi na pāvā. 7.

saṅkara bimukha bhagati caha mōrī. sō nārakī mūrha mati thōrī. 8.

Anyone who is inimical to Lord Shiva and claims to be my devotee then let it be clear to him that he can never attain me or find me even in his dreams. (7)

A person who is opposed to Lord Shiva and then expects to have Bhakti (devotion) for me is utterly stupid and ignorant. He is committing a grave mistake which would only lead him to hell. [To wit, he will have to suffer spiritually.] (8)

[Note—In these verses Lord Ram stresses the importance of paying obeisance to Lord Shiva. He says that if one wishes to worship Lord Ram, the manifested form of the Supreme Being, then the first step is to worship Lord Shiva.

It has already been pointed out a little earlier that Lord Shiva is a great devotee of Lord Ram; Shiva continuously chants the holy Name of Lord Ram and uses this Name as his chosen spiritual formula which he employs during meditation. The divine story of Lord Ram as we know it today was first conceived in Shiva's heart while he was once meditating. And now we read here that Lord Ram too is a great devotee of Lord Shiva. This means that both, Lord Ram and Lord Shiva, adore each other.

This is the reason why the holy place where Lord Ram had established Lord Shiva's image is called 'Rameshwaram', meaning 'The Lord of Ram or the Lord whom Ram worships', a reference to Lord Shiva, and 'One for whom Lord Ram is the Lord God', once again a reference to Lord Shiva.

This unique combination of words and ideas incorporated in the deity's name 'Rameshwaram' simply means "Lord Shiva who worships Lord Ram, and who himself is worshipped by Lord Ram". The glory and importance of Rameshwaram as a sacred pilgrimage sight is highlighted in Chaupai line no. 1 that follows Doha no. 2 herein below.]

दो०. संकरप्रिय मम द्रोही सिव द्रोही मम दास ।

ते नर करहिं कलप भरि घोर नरक महुँ बास ॥ २ ॥

dōhā.

saṅkarapriya mama drōhī siva drōhī mama dāsa.

tē nara karahim kalapa bhari ghōra naraka mahum bāsa. 2.

[Lord Ram reiterated—] Let it therefore be clear: Those for whom Lord Shiva is dear but who are opposed to me, and conversely those who love me and have devotion for me but are opposed to Lord Shiva—both such individuals are destined to live in hell for an entire generation. [To wit, it is absolutely wrong to do so; it is sinful to distinguish between me and Lord Shiva, and to treat either of us insultingly.] (Doha no. 2)

[Note—This verse is directly addressed to Ravana though he is not mentioned by name. Ravana was a great devotee of Lord Shiva, but he was inimical to Lord Ram. This was not allowed. So Lord Ram indirectly gives the reason why it would be okay for Ravana to die as he is violating this rule.]

चौ०. जे रामेस्वर दरसन करिहहिं । ते तनु तजि मम लोक सिधरिहहिं ॥ १ ॥

जो गंगाजलु आनि चढ़ाइहि । सो साजुज्य मुक्ति नर पाइहि ॥ २ ॥

होइ अकाम जो छल तजि सेइहि । भगति मोरि तेहि संकर देइहि ॥ ३ ॥

मम कृत सेतु जो दरसनु करिही । सो बिनु श्रम भवसागर तरिही ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

jē rāmēśvara darasanu karihahim̐. tē tanu taji mama lōka sidharīhahim̐. 1.

jō gaṅgājalū āni caṛhā'ihī. sō sājujya mukti nara pā'ihī. 2.

hō'i akāma jō chala taji sē'ihī. bhagati mōri tēhi saṅkara dē'ihī. 3.

mama kṛta sētu jō darasanu karihī. sō binu śrama bhavasāgara tarihī. 4.

[Lord Ram continued—] ‘He who comes here and reverentially beholds this holy sight with its consecrated deity known as “Rameshwar”¹ (and pays his obeisance to Lord Shiva here) shall attain my abode at the time of his death.

[To wit, those who undertake a pilgrimage to Rameshwar and pay their homage to Lord Shiva, such persons are sure to attain my heavenly abode at the time of death—“tē tanu taji mama lōka sidharīhahim̐”] (1)

He who brings the water from the sacred river Ganges and offers it to Lord Shiva’s Lingam here would attain the reward of being one with me at the time of death². [This is called “sājujya mukti”.] (2)

Those who serve (worship) Lord Shiva selflessly and without pretensions, Lord Shiva would grant such persons Bhakti (devotion) for me (i.e. for Lord Ram)³. [To wit, one of the primary methods for having devotion for Lord Ram is to first worship Lord Shiva. Then Lord Shiva would grant the worshipper his desire—which is to have devotion for Lord Ram.] (3)

Verily, those who behold the bridge got constructed by me would be able to cross over this ocean-like mundane world of transmigration, along with all its attendant problems, very easily. [To wit, such persons who come on a pilgrimage to this sacred place, who first worship Lord Shiva’s Lingam consecrated by me here and after that they reverentially view this bridge, they surely would be blessed with the boon of liberation and deliverance from the endless cycle of birth and death in which their soul is trapped. They would be able to get over all their worldly problems as easily as one crosses a vast body of water by walking across it on a bridge.]’ (4)

[Note—¹Refer a note appended to Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 2 herein above.

The Lingam of Lord Shiva established and consecrated by Lord Ram on the shores of the ocean is named after Ram. The word ‘Rameshwar’ has two-pronged meaning—one is ‘the Lord who is the Ishwar or God of Lord Ram, the deity who is worshipped and adored by Ram’, and the other meaning is ‘the Lord, i.e. Shiva, who regards Lord Ram as his Ishwar or Lord God’.

This is an extremely important observation—as it removes in one intelligent stroke the schism and dichotomy that has led to the delusion of ‘duality’ between the two facets of the same Divinity. In other words, it lays stress on the fact that there is absolutely no difference between Lord Ram and Lord Shiva—they are both the same Supreme Being performing two different roles, to sustain and protect the creation as Vishnu or Ram, and to bring about its conclusion and punish the sinful as Shiva.

This obvious metaphysical tenet is at the base of the principle of Non-duality or Advaita Vedanta, and is evident also in fact that both Lord Ram and Shiva worship each other.

There is no other God or non-God in creation who is more well-versed in and more convinced of the spiritual philosophy of non-duality, as well as the fact that Lord Ram's divine name 'Ram' is a synonym of the cosmic word-symbol for the supreme Brahm, i.e. 'OM', than Lord Shiva. It is this reason why Shiva had selected the divine name 'Ram' as his spiritual formula—both for his personal usage during meditation and for providing liberation and deliverance to the dying man by muttering the holy word 'Ram' into his ears at Kashi or Varanasi. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, 1/19/3; Ram Uttar Tapini Upanishad, Canto 4.

²In the 'Sayuja' form of Mukti, the concerned creature is able to become one with the deity worshipped. In other words it means to merge oneself with the Lord God.

References: Atharva Veda's Tripadvibhut Upanishad of the Atharva Veda, Canto 5, paragraph nos. 3-17; Canto 6, paragraph no. 22; Canto 8, paragraph nos. 6-7, 17, 19, 22. While discussing this specialised form of Mukti, this Upanishad also describes the eclectic concept of Mukti in a comprehensive form in paragraph nos. 4-13 of Canto 5. In the Bhasma Jabal Upanishad of the Atharva Veda, Canto 2, paragraph no. 15, Lord Shiva tells sage Jabal Bhusund that if one offers proper worship to the Shiva Lingam as described in detail in this particular Upanishad, the worshipper is able to obtain Sayujya Mukti.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 104.]

राम बचन सब के जिय भाए । मुनिबर निज निज आश्रम आए ॥ ५ ॥ गिरिजा रघुपति कै यह रीती । संतत करहिं प्रनत पर प्रीती ॥ ६ ॥ rāma bacana saba kē jiya bhā'ē. munibara nija nija āśrama ā'ē. 5.

girijā raghupati kai yaha rītī. santata karahim pranata para prītī. 6.

The words of Lord Ram were liked by one and all. The sages, hermits and seers who were present there (during the consecration ceremony of Lord Shiva's Lingam) were pleased to hear these words of Lord Ram. Once the ceremony was over, all of them returned to their respective hermitages with gladdened hearts. (5)

[Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this divine story known as Ram Charit Manas, said to his consort Parvati to whom he was narrating it.]

Shiva said—'Oh Girija (meaning 'daughter of Giri', the king of the kingdom of mountains; here referring to Parvati, Shiva's divine consort)! It is a natural habit and an established practice of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) that he always shows affection for those who come to seek refuge at his holy feet (santata karahim pranata para prītī)¹. (6)

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 16.]

बाँधा सेतु नील नल नागर । राम कृपाँ जसु भयउ उजागर ॥ ७ ॥
 बूड़हिँ आनहि बोरहिँ जेई । भए उपल बोहित सम तेई ॥ ८ ॥ महिमा यह न जलधि कइ बरनी । पाहन गुन न कपिन्ह कइ करनी ॥ ९ ॥ bāṁdhā sētu nīla nala nāgara. rāma kṛpāṁ jasu bhaya'u ujāgara. 7.

 būṛahim ānahi bōrahim jē'ī. bha'ē upala bōhita sama tē'ī. 8.
 mahimā yaha na jaladhi ka'i baranī. pāhana guna na kapinha ka'i karanī. 9.

Meanwhile, Nala and Neela completed the construction of the legendary bridge. This miraculous feat of theirs, that was however made possible by the grace of Lord Ram, granted the two brothers (Nala and Neela) eternal fame; their glory shone and spread far and wide in the whole world (like the sun's light). (7)

The stones, rocks and boulders that have the characteristic quality of sinking in the water themselves, and drown anything else that is attached to them, even those stones, rocks and boulders miraculously and magically floated on the surface of the ocean like boats usually do! (8)

Verily indeed, those who are in the know and are enlightened about facts do not give credit to the ocean for successful construction of this floating bridge, nor do they ascribe this success and the achievement of this marvelous feat to the construction skills of Nala and Neela, or to any especial quality of the stones, rocks and boulders used for the construction that they could float on water. [Then who should be given credit for this miraculous event? The answer is given in the next Doha no. 3 herein below.] (9)

दो०. श्री रघुबीर प्रताप ते सिंधु तरे पाषान ।
 ते मतिमंद जे राम तजि भजहिँ जाइ प्रभु आन ॥ ३ ॥
 dōhā.

śrī raghubīra pratāpa tē sindhu tarē pāṣāna.
 tē matimanda jē rāma taji bhajahim jā'i prabhu āna. 3.

In all sooth and without gainsay there is no doubt that those stones, rocks and boulders floated on the surface of the ocean due to the grace of Lord Ram; there is no other way to explain this unusual phenomenon.

Verily indeed, he who does not worship Lord Ram (the Lord whose grace and mere wishes could make lifeless stones float magically on water against all established norms and laws of Nature), and instead goes to worship some other deity, is a dumb-witted and utterly foolish fellow. (Doha no. 3)

[Note—To wit, the stones floated on the surface of the turbulent waters of the ocean due to the grace and blessings of Lord Ram; they floated because the Lord wished them to do so. This proves the supremacy of Lord Ram over all other forces of creation—for the Lord can make possible that which is impossible. This being the case, why would a sensible person not worship Lord Ram and seek his blessings for his own welfare? Say, why would any intelligent person go to someone else to seek fulfillment of his wishes when all that he wants can be granted by Lord Ram very easily?]

चौ०. बाँधि सेतु अति सुदृढ़ बनावा । देखि कृपानिधि के मन भावा ॥ १ ॥

चली सेन कछु बरनि न जाई । गर्जहिं मर्कट भट समुदाई ॥ २ ॥

सेतुबंध ढिग चढ़ि रघुराई । चितव कृपाल सिंधु बहुताई ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

bāṁdhi sētu ati sudr̥ḥa banāvā. dēkhi kṛpānidhi kē mana bhāvā. 1.
calī sēna kachu barani na jāī. garjahiṁ markṭa bhaṭa samudāī. 2.
sētubandha ḍhiga caḍhi raghurāī. citava kṛpāla sindhu bahutāī. 3.

The bridge was finally completed; all precautions were taken to make it exceptionally strong and secure¹.

When Lord Ram, who is an ocean of mercy, compassion and grace, saw this fantastic bridge, a wonderful creation of outstanding ingenuity, skill and creativity, he appreciated it very much. Verily, the bridge pleased the Lord's heart and mind (kṛpānidhi kē mana bhāvā). (1)

The army of monkeys and bears marched enthusiastically on this bridge, presenting a sight so wonderful and fascinating that it cannot be described in words. All the valiant warriors, individually as well as in groups, were roaring and yelling loudly. (2)

Then Lord Ram (the Lord of the Raghus; “raghurāī”) set his foot on this wondrous bridge that was exceptionally strong and secure. He looked around him and saw the wide expanse of the ocean spreading majestically on all the sides (to his right and left, to the front and to the rear)². (3)

[Note—¹How long did it take Nala and Neela to finish the bridge? Well, according to (a) Valmiki's Ramayana, Lanka Kand, Canto 22, verse nos. 64-68, and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 5-6, the entire bridge, spanning a length of 100 Yojans (approx. 800 miles) was completed in five days.

How long and wide was this bridge? Well, it was 100 Yojans (roughly 800 miles) long, and 10 Yojans (80 miles) wide—apropos: Valmiki's Ramayana, Lanka Kand, Canto 22, verse no. 72.

On the 1st day of the construction, 14 Yojans length of the bridge was laid; on the 2nd day another 20 Yojans were added; on the 3rd day a further span of 21 Yojans was completed; on the 4th day, further 22 Yojans were finished; and on the 5th and the final day, the remaining part of the bridge covering 23 Yojans was put into place. After completion this bridge stretched for 800 long miles, its one end was at the northern shore of the ocean that touched the mainland, and its other end was on the further end of the ocean that touched the shore of the island of Lanka at its northern tip.

However, in Devi Puran Mahabhogwat Ramayan, it is said that the bridge was completed in a record time of '2 Prahars', which means roughly 6 hours. [1 Prahara = 3 hours.] {Refer: Devi Puran Mahabhogwat Ramayan, Canto 40, verse nos. 6-7.}

The existence of this bridge has been established by satellite images taken by the Indian satellite IRS-1A which in 1962 had taken photographs of the remnants of a stone bridge. It appeared as an underground streak from Dhanushkoti in India to Talai Manner in Sri Lanka. This was corroborated by U.S. astronauts aboard Gemini XI satellite launched on 14/9/1966.

One wonders 'what happened to this bridge later on'? It is said in the story of the Ramayana that Lord Ram returned to Ayodhya with his wife Sita and younger brother Lakshman, along with many of his friends from Kishkindha as well as Vibhishan who had all helped the Lord in his Lanka campaign, by an air-plane called 'Pushpak'. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 119; and Uttar Kand, Doha no. 4.}

This means he went back home by the path of the sky, and not overland. So this bridge was not used for the Lord's return journey. What then was its fate? Well, the fate of the unique bridge is narrated in Padma Puran, Shristi Khand, Chapter 38, verse 28-32 as follows: When the airplane was above the bridge, Vibhishan requested Lord Ram to demolish it. The Lord first struck the bridge with the tip of his formidable bow, rupturing the bridge somewhere from the center. Hence, the 100 Yojan bridge collapsed into two segments. Then the Lord broke each of these two segments into three smaller parts; then each of these parts further into still smaller units measuring roughly 10 Yojans each. To make it sink completely below the surface of the water, and render it useless for all times to come, each of these 10-Yojan units were further broken down into smaller parts measuring 1 Yojan in length. So finally, Lord Ram broke the bridge into 100 units, each fraction measuring 1 Yojan (approx. 8 miles) in length.

Why did Vibhishan wish to get the bridge demolished by Lord Ram himself? In all probability he feared for the future of safety of Lanka; he feared an invasion in the future from the mainland. He had witnessed the war and watched how the army of Kishkindha, consisting of ferocious, strong and fearless monkeys and bears, had completely ravaged and recklessly destroyed what was once a golden city of Lanka, a prosperous, thriving and almost impenetrable citadel of the demons that rivaled heaven in its beauty and magnificence. The warriors of Kishkindha were the victors; they were the conquerors who regarded the remnants of the demon race as vanquished and vile. So Vibhishan feared that in the future there was a probability that once he managed to make Lanka prosperous and beautified once again, these same warriors of Kishkindha, who are now his friends and are restrained because of Lord Ram, would turn hostile in due time; they will be tempted to tease him every now and then, coming to Lanka and running amok in the reconstructed city, uprooting trees in parks and occupying buildings, and may be even going to the extent of extracting tributes from him to let him live in peace. What would he do then? Lord Ram would not be there always to protect him.

In case he decided to break the bridge on his own, then that would be a dangerous step. Why? Because the army of Kishkindha wouldn't let him do so, arguing that he had no right over it as it was constructed by them on the express orders of Lord Ram. They would tell Vibhishan: "Oh, stop! We have built this bridge. It was on the orders of Lord Ram. So first go and get the Lord's permission, and then only, mind you, can you remove a single stone from it; not before that."

So Vibhishan thought that it would be very wise and prudent to get it demolished by the Lord himself while he is here. He was sure that the Lord would not go against his wish, for the Lord was wise and intelligent enough to guess what was in Vibhishan's mind. And Vibhishan was correct in his assumption, as the Lord willingly obliged him and broke the bridge without asking 'why'.

²Only a person who has an experience of standing on a long suspension bridge across a wide river that has rapidly flowing currents and frothy waters can understand how Lord Ram must have felt on this bridge. The thrill is indescribable. To the left and the right, as far as the eyes could see, there was nothing but water. When the Lord moved ahead on this bridge, say for a mile or two, the mainland was much behind him, almost lost to sight. What the Lord saw was the bridge spreading like a ribbon across the surface of the water of the ocean, with water on its two sides and underneath it. The bridge swayed gently with the movement of the water of the ocean, majestically heaving slightly upwards and downwards as well as to the left and the right from its median plane; it was wobbling on the surface of the ocean like a lifebuoy, a raft, or a balloon. It was virtually like being suspended on water; or like being on a swing, swaying to the left and the right.]

देखन कहूँ प्रभु करुना कंदा । प्रगट भए सब जलचर बृंदा ॥ ४ ॥
मकर नक्र नाना झष ब्याला । सत जोजन तन परम बिसाला ॥ ५ ॥
अइसेउ एक तिन्हहि जे खाहीं । एकन्ह केँ डर तेपि डेराहीं ॥ ६ ॥ प्रभुहि बिलोकहिं टरहिं न टारे । मन हरषित सब भए सुखारे ॥ ७ ॥ dēkhana kahuṁ prabhu karunā kandā. pragaṭa bha'e saba jalacara bṛndā. 4.

makara nakra nānā jhaṣa byālā. sata jōjana tana parama bisālā. 5.
a'isē'u ēka tinhahi jē khāhīm. ēkanha kēm ḍara tēpi ḍērāhīm. 6.
prabhuhi bilōkahīm ṭarahīm na ṭārē. mana haraṣita saba bha'e sukhārē. 7.

All the marine creatures that lived in the ocean around the bridge came on the surface of the water¹ to have a divine glimpse of Lord Ram who is a treasury of mercy, compassion and kindness (prabhu karunā kandā).

There were many kinds of alligators, crocodiles, fish and sea-serpents, of all shapes and sizes, of different families and classes, who gathered on the surface of the water. Some were small, but others were of gigantic proportions with bodies extending even up to a hundred Yojans in length, width or height. (5)

Each one of these creatures was ferocious in its own right and large enough to be able to devour other creatures, but there were many more like them that were far more ferocious and larger in size who could terrorize and devour the former very easily. The variety of such marine animals was so wide and large that those who were terrifying themselves were fearful for their lives from others². (6)

All these creatures watched Lord Ram with awe and wonder; they were so amazed at the divine sight of the Lord that they were stunned and refused to move. Their heart and mind felt, and they were very glad that they had this opportunity³. (7)

[Note—¹The Bridge obstructed the flow of the water of the ocean. It was like a modern day dam or a dyke, albeit built not on land but in the middle of the ocean, effectively blocking its normal flow. This caused a build-up of marine animals such as fish and others that normally swam freely in the water of the ocean; their path was now choked by the bridge. So one by one they piled up along the two sides of this great bridge; as the number of animals increased there was pushing and shoving, first gently and then angrily as each agitated creature growled and snarled, trying to elbow out others in order to get ahead in the crowd milling around the bridge's two sides. In the chaos that followed, smaller marine animals such as fish etc. got crushed; some were drowned and others were angrily eaten by their larger neighbours, say whales and sharks, or even crocodiles who bit ferociously at any other creature that blocked their way and gobbled it.

²To wit, the marine creatures were all exceptionally ferocious and dangerous. It appeared that there was no end to the large variety of creatures present in the bosom of the ocean who surfaced to look at the sight of the wonderful bridge that had blocked their way, and also watch the magnificent sight of Lord Ram, surrounded by his army, walking majestically across this bridge as it swayed on the surface of the ocean.

³It ought to be remembered that 'Ram Charit Manas' is a telling of the Story of Lord Ram, which is known universally as the Ramayana, with a high devotional quotient in it. Lord Ram is a personified form of the Supreme Being, so his presence is naturally appealing and pleasant to the creature's soul, known as the creature's Atma. The individual Atma of a creature is an image of the Parmatma, the Supreme Atma that is pure Consciousness and also known as the Supreme Being. Hence, a natural affinity exists between the creature's own Atma, which in effect is the creature's true 'self', and Lord Ram who personifies the universal Atma. Therefore, when a creature sees Lord Ram he feels a natural affection for the Lord; for the Atma of a creature there is no one dearer than Lord Ram.

Like the case of two siblings having a natural bond between them arising out their being of the same stock of blood, resulting in creating a sense of natural affection for each other and an untold familiarity that when they meet each other for the first time in their lives after ages of separation they find that some intangible force seems to pull them together, creating a bond between the two, the creature too is naturally related to Lord Ram, and whenever the creature feels the presence of Lord Ram nearby he experiences natural affection for the Lord as if he has met his kith and kin after a long time.

So therefore, when these marine creatures saw Lord Ram for the first time in their lives, their Atma got naturally attracted to the Lord; the creatures felt exhilarated as if they have met their long-time friend and a lost parent after passing through the many phases of cycle of birth and death.

And this good news spread quickly and widely in the community of marine creatures. So even those who had yet not come made all haste to arrive. The result was that the crowd of excited marine creatures around the bridge got thicker and wilder with each passing moment, with each creature trying to squeeze himself ahead of the others to be closer to the bridge so as to get a more close-up view of their beloved Lord Ram.]

तिन्ह की ओट न देखिअ बारी । मगन भए हरि रूप निहारी ॥ ८ ॥
चला कटकु प्रभु आयसु पाई । को कहि सक कपि दल बिपुलाई ॥ ९ ॥ tinha kī ōṭa na dēkhi'a bārī. magana bha'e hari rūpa nihārī. 8.

calā kaṭaku prabhu āyasu pā'ī. kō kahi saka kapi dala bipulā'ī. 9.

The marine creatures were so densely packed around the sides of the bridge that the water of the ocean could not be seen. Verily indeed, the creatures were mesmerized by the charming sight of Lord Hari (Lord Ram) so much so that they did not want to move away. (8)

Meanwhile, on the orders of Lord Ram, the huge and formidable army of monkeys and bears marched ahead on the bridge. No one can say what the numbers of the warriors were, for they were countless. (9)

दो०. सेतुबंध भइ भीर अति कपि नभ पंथ उड़ाहिं । अपर जलचरन्हि ऊपर चढ़ि चढ़ि पारहि जाहिं ॥ ४ ॥

dōhā.

sētubandha bha'i bhīra ati kapi nabha pantha uṛāhim.
apara jalacaranhi ūpara caḍhi caḍhi pārahi jāhim. 4.

There was such a large crowd of warriors on the bridge that it seemed to be jam-packed with them. Finding insufficient space on the bridge, some of these warriors went ahead through the path of the sky (i.e. they jumped for long distances over others, or probably flew across the sky much like Hanuman had done earlier), while others walked (jumped, hopped and skipped) across over to the other side on the back of the marine creatures who had gathered together in a tight pack on either side of the bridge. (Doha no. 4)

चौ०. अस कौतुक बिलोकि द्वौ भाई । बिहँसि चले कृपाल रघुराई ॥ १ ॥
सेन सहित उतरे रघुबीरा । कहि न जाइ कपि जूथप भीरा ॥ २ ॥

caupā'ī.

asa kautuka bilōki dvau bhā'ī. bihañsi calē kṛpāla raghurā'ī. 1.
sēna sahita utarē raghubīrā. kahi na jā'i kapi jūthapa bhīrā. 2.

The two brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, watched with fascination this wonderful spectacle. They smiled at this sight, and marched ahead (with their army). (1)

By-and-by, Lord Ram reached the other end of the bridge and set foot on the shore of Lanka along with his army¹. No one can say how large this army was². (2)

[Note—¹How long did the army take to cross the bridge and land on the shores of Lanka? Well, according to (a) Skanda Puran, Brahm Khand, Canto 30, and (b) Padma Puran, Patal Khand, Canto 36—the Lord and his army crossed the bridge in “three days”.

And what was the formation of this army when it landed at Lanka? Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 24, verse nos. 14-18 describes it as follows: “Lord Ram and Laxman would lead from the front; Nala and Angad were to follow them from behind with their troops; to their right should be Rishava and to their left should be Durghash Gandhamaadan with their monkey troops; Jamvant and Sushen should take control of the remaining troops that follow from behind by being at the center, and the rear should be under the command of Sugriv and his troops.”

²Refer: Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 4 herein above.]

सिंधु पार प्रभु डेरा कीन्हा । सकल कपिन्ह कहूँ आयसु दीन्हा ॥ ३ ॥
खाहु जाइ फल मूल सुहाए । सुनत भालु कपि जहँ तहँ धाए ॥ ४ ॥ sindhu pāra prabhu ḍērā kīnhā. sakala kapinha kahūṁ āyasu dīnhā. 3.

khāhu jā'i phala mūla suhā'ē. sunata bhālu kapi jaham̐ taham̐ dhā'ē. 4.

The Lord pitched his camp on the other side of the ocean (on the soil of Lanka). Then the Lord instructed all the monkeys --- (3)

--- ‘Go and eat to your heart’s content as many sweet fruits and edible roots and stems as you wish’. Hearing this instruction (and getting Lord Ram’s permission), all the monkeys and bears ran in all the directions wherever they wished¹. (4)

[Note—¹The warriors were very hungry as they had not got anything to eat while crossing the ocean. So naturally as soon as they got Lord Ram’s permission they ran in all the directions in search of fruits, stems and roots.

They feared nothing; they were not scared of meeting demons. These verses also show that the place where Lord Ram landed in Lanka with his army was deserted; they did not meet any demon guard or lookout, or any resistance. In all probability any demon who may have been there earlier ran away out of fear of his life as soon as he saw the army set foot on land. The common demons were already demoralized and terrified of the prospect of having to face the wrath of the monkey warriors after the horrifying experience they have had with Hanuman who had killed many of them, even Ravana’s own son Akshaya Kumar, and had burnt Lanka to a dark hull. So, Lord Ram and his army found the field clear upon arrival!

The next verse shows that this place was lively and verdant, lush with greenery, having a lot of edible roots and stems as well as fruit-bearing trees.

Earlier, when Hanuman had arrived in Lanka in search of Sita, he too had landed at this same place because we have read that he too saw a wonderful forest with animals and birds as well as fine fruit-bearing green trees—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 3.]

सब तरु फरे राम हित लागी । रितु अरु कुरितु काल गति त्यागी ॥ ५ ॥

खाहिं मधुर फल बिटप हलावहिं । लंका सन्मुख सिखर चलावहिं ॥ ६ ॥ saba taru pharē rāma hita lāgī. ritu aru kuritu kāla gati tyāgī. 5.

khāhim madhura phala biṭapa halāvahim. laṅkā sanmukha sikhara calāvahim.
6.

All the trees had been in full blossom, whether or not it was the season and the time of the year for them to bear sweet fruits or edible stems and roots, for the sake of the convenience of Lord Ram and his army¹. (5)

The hordes of monkey and bear warriors went wild while eating sweet-and-succulent fruits from trees, shaking the trees (uprooting some of them and breaking the branches of others) and picking up rocks of all shapes and sizes from the adjoining hills and mountains and hurling them in the direction of the fort (or citadel) of Lanka.

[The excited monkeys and bear warriors vented their anger at the demons by pelting stones and rocks in the direction of their city. Perhaps they wanted to instigate or provoke the demons to retaliate so they would get a chance to pounce upon them.]
(6)

[Note—¹The members of the Plant kingdom decided to do their bit to serve the Supreme Being who had come visiting them in the form of Lord Ram. They thought that it was their moment of glory and honour that they would be able to serve the Lord, that the gracious Lord had been kind enough to give them an opportunity to serve him. So they must not miss this chance because by serving Lord Ram they would be freed from the sin of growing up in the land of the demons and serving their interests all their lives till now.

Here ‘Prakriti’, or Mother Nature, had stepped in to serve her own Lord known as the ‘Viraat Purush’, the cosmic form of the supreme Consciousness that is also known as ‘Brahm’, and is deemed to be the one who had created this world in conjunction with Prakriti. A similar thing had happened earlier too while Lord Ram was on his way to the forest when Nature had done its best to provide as much comfort to the Lord by giving him the shade of clouds to protect him from the heat of the sun, and making the earth soft below his tired legs—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Doha no. 113 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it.

Then when Lord Ram reached Chitrakoot mountain and decided to stay there for some time, all facets of Nature became pleasant to please the Lord—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5 that precedes Doha no. 137—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 139.

Later on during the Lord’s sojourn in Panchavati, the part of the dense forest from where Sita was abducted by Ravana, Mother Nature once again went out of her way to serve Lord Ram—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 14.

Once again we read how Nature was at its vibrantly colourful best in order to give comfort to and please Lord Ram during his stay on Mt. Prabarshan in Kishkindha prior to the time the messengers were dispatched in search of Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 12—to—Doha no. 17.]

जहँ कहँ फिरत निसाचर पावहिं । घेरि सकल बहु नाच नचावहिं ॥ ७ ॥

दसनन्हि काटि नासिका काना । कहि प्रभु सुजसु देहिं तब जाना ॥ ८ ॥ jahaṁ kahuṁ phirata nisācara pāvahiṁ. ghēri sakala bahu nāca nacāvahiṁ.

7.

dasananhi kāṭi nāsikā kānā. kahi prabhu sujasu dēhiṁ taba jānā. 8.

If they chanced to find any demon roaming around, they caught hold of him, surrounded him from all sides and then teased him by making him dance to their tune, poking fun at the helpless captive, mocking him and humiliating him in various ways. (7)

They bit the demon's ears or nose with their sharp teeth while telling him about the glory of Lord Ram, and only then (when the monkeys and bears had enough fun from their captive and had thoroughly bashed him) would they let the demon go¹. (8)

[Note—¹We have observed that the army of Lord Ram landed on the shores of Lanka without any resistance. All the demons who may have guarded the front facing the ocean ran away in fear as they saw the colossal army of ferocious monkeys and bears aggressively heading towards the shore of Lanka over the ocean. The majority of these demon sentries took to the safety of the fort, but some may have strayed, deciding to stay back in order to do some reconnaissance work.

The monkeys and bears were itching for a fight, but while they rampaged through the forested area around the fort of Lanka they were dismayed to find no trace of demon forces on which to vent their ire. But however they found some isolated demon here and there, so they immediately pounced upon this poor and helpless fellow and made a good time teasing and ragging him in different ways. They made the captured demon dance, do sit-ups and many other things to mock him; they snarled at him, pinched and poked at him, and unable to suppress their anger they even bit the demon in his ears and nose, leaving the poor fellow bleeding profusely and gravely wounded. Then they let him go so that when he went back to the city the rest of the demons would get a stern warning—that the brave warriors of Lord Ram have finally arrived, and they are eager for war.]

जिन्ह कर नासा कान निपाता । तिन्ह रावनहि कही सब बाता ॥ ९ ॥

सुनत श्रवन बारिधि बंधाना । दस मुख बोलि उठा अकुलाना ॥ १० ॥

jinha kara nāsā kāna nipātā. tinha rāvanahi kahī saba bātā. 9.

sunata śravana bāridhi bandhānā. dasa mukha bōli uṭhā akulānā. 10.

These demons who had got their noses and ears bitten off ran back into the city of Lanka, and reported all the developments to their king Ravana. (9)

As soon as Ravana heard that the virtually un-crossable and indomitable ocean had been finally tamed and tied with a bridge, he was exceedingly amazed and confounded. He was so agitated and exasperated beyond measure that he could not suppress his dread and blurted out his utter astonishment at this alarming development by speaking all at once with his ten mouths¹. (10)

[Note—¹Normally Ravana would speak with one of his ten mouths. But on this occasion he was so utterly shaken by surprise and became so extremely dreadful and alarmed of the fact that his arch enemy, Lord Ram, had actually landed in Lanka that all his wits went for a toss and all his mouths opened at once, as if to exclaim: “Awe, oh gosh; what am I hearing? Is it really possible that the mighty ocean known for its stubbornness and independence has been actually tamed and tied by a bridge? Is it true or am I having delusions? Am I not hearing properly, or have these messengers gone mad? Oh come on, you fools; don’t joke with me. Is what you say true? Mind you, I shall get you roasted alive if it turns out to be wrong information. I just can’t believe it.”]

दो०. बाँध्यो बननिधि नीरनिधि जलधि सिंधु बारीस । सत्य तोयनिधि कंपति उदधि पयोधि नदीस ॥ ५ ॥

dōhā.

bāṁdhyō bananidhi nīranidhi jaladhi sindhu bārīsa.
satya tōyanidhi kampati udadhi payōdhi nadīsa. 5.

‘Is it really true that someone can actually bind and tie the fathomless abode of water, of the waves and the billows that is known by various names such as the ocean and the sea which is also the lord of the clouds that produce rain, that which is full of heaving and swirling tides, that which is full of brine and sour liquid, that which is deep, measureless and endless, and that which is also the lord of the rivers?’¹ (Doha no. 5)*

[Note—We have read in the preceding verse that Ravana could not suppress his emotions and spoke with all his ten heads at once. Each head used one epithet to describe the ocean, and they are the following: (1) bananidhi, (2) nīranidhi, (3) jaladhi, (4) sindhu, (5) bārīsa, (6) tōyanidhi, (7) kampati, (8) udadhi, (9) payōdhi, and (10) nadīsa. All these terms are synonyms for the ocean because it is a vast habitat of marine life, is an endless reservoir of water, it has no end as all its different divisions are seamlessly joined together, it has huge waves and high tides, is always on the move, is turbulent, is the origin of rain-bearing clouds, and is where all the rivers end or empty themselves.

The way Ravana expresses his amazement and disbelief shows that never before in the history of the world the ocean had ever been bridged and tamed. It was therefore a miraculous feat, never achieved hitherto, that took Ravana by surprise and left him stunned.

When told by the demons who had run to him to report after being released by the monkeys and bears as we have just read above, that a bridge had been constructed over the mighty ocean and Lord Ram’s army has landed on the shore of Lanka, Ravana was dumb-founded and taken aback. Till now he was rest assured that it is absolutely impossible that someone can cross the ocean by making a bridge over its surface. This proves that his own spies and look-outs whom he had assigned the job of keeping an eye on the frontiers had betrayed him, or perhaps they were too terrified of him to come and tell him some unpleasant news which he did not want to hear because they all feared for their own lives, not wishing to annoy Ravana and invite his wrath.

Ravana had been feeling secure in Lanka so far because the island-city and its fort were surrounded on all the four sides by the ocean which effectively formed a deep and exceptionally wide moat around them, making Lanka inaccessible from all sides. That security has now been breached and compromised. Ravana was not prepared for this sudden rupturing of his defenses. So he was exceedingly alarmed and upset, not knowing how to cope with this new and un-imagined challenge; it was a danger for which the demons were not prepared.

* If we carefully analyse the Story of the Ramayan and ponder over the question as to why Ravana was ultimately defeated and killed we find that there are four crucial points which cannot escape our attention as being the primary reasons for Ravana's undoing. These are the following:

(a) Ravana was surrounded by many close aides and subordinates on whom he had great faith, but who were disgruntled and disenchanted with him. Some had openly expressed their displeasure at his attitude, his way of thinking and doing things, while others may have remained quiet out of fear of their own safety but were nevertheless unhappy with him. In the first category come Mandodari, Ravana's wife, Vibhishan, his youngest brother, Kumbhakaran, another younger brother of his, Shuk (or Shuka), his trusted spy and messenger, Malyawan, an old demon who was very close to him, his maternal grandfather and one of his senior ministers, and so on. In the second category come Lankini, the female demon tasked with the security of the gates of the fort of Lanka, Trijata, the old demoness tasked to guard Sita in her captivity, and may be many more of whom we have no account.

Mandodari had tried to persuade Ravana on four different occasions to abandon his confrontationist attitude towards Lord Ram and make peace with him (refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37; (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8; (iii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 16; and (iv) Lanka Kand, Doha no. 35-b—to Doha no. 37).

Vibhishan was kicked out by Ravana when he had attempted to dissuade the latter from pursuing a hostile attitude towards Lord Ram, the reason why Vibhishan decided to go and join Lord Ram (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; and Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Doha no. 41).

Malyawan had endorsed Vibhishan's advice, but he too was shouted down by Ravana (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 40).

Shuk was sent by Ravana behind Vibhishan to spy on him, and when he came back to report he very strongly rebuked Ravana and pleaded with him to stop his madness and make peace with Lord Ram (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 51—to Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 57).

Kumbhakaran too had sternly chided Ravana when he was asked to go and fight Lord Ram during the heat of battle (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 62—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 63).

Then we have the instances of the two female demons named Lankini and Trijata who weren't happy at all with Ravana, and had predicted his demise. For (a) Lankini, refer to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 4—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 5; and for (b) Trijata, refer to refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 11; and Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 99—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 100).

(b) The second prominent reason of Ravana's fall was lack of an efficient and skilled network of spies. Having a good and competent network of spies and informers who are diligent and dedicated and loyal to their masters and their country are absolutely vital and a most important feature for success in politics and statecraft. Ravana's spies failed him. There are two glaring examples of this failure: (a) When the gods and mother earth had gathered to pray to Lord Vishnu to protect them against Ravana and his demon horde, and Vishnu promised them he would come down himself as Lord Ram to fulfil their needs, Ravana did not get a wind of this meeting. Had he been informed then it is most certain that he would have gone there and chased away the gods and grabbed mother earth like he had done with Sita. (b) The second glaring example of his failed intelligence apparatus is that a huge bridge was being built right next door to his kingdom, literally right under his nose, and he had no inkling of it as he was kept in the dark. This is very clear when he was taken aback with astonishment and expressed his dismay when finally informed that a bridge was in place and Lord Ram's army has landed (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 5 along with Chaupai line no. 10 that precede it). Obviously, the bridge was not built surreptitiously or in a clandestine manner without any sound emanating. Why was Ravana not informed?

(c) The third most obvious reason for his fall was his own nature. He was egoist, arrogant, stubborn and haughty to the extreme. He was over-confident of himself, and over-estimated his own invincibility, valour, strength, abilities and powers. He was transformed so blind and deaf in his self-pride and ego that he failed to see the reality and hear sane voices.

It is to be noted here that Ravana was not weak or lacking in courage, valour, strength and abilities as he himself has asserted so many times, but he misgauged the actual measure of these virtues in him when they were compared with those of his opponent, who in this case was Lord Ram. When put on a scale to measure and compare these qualities between Lord Ram and Ravana, the scale tilted heavily in favour of the Lord, which unfortunately Ravana, in his egoist haughtiness, could not come to terms with.

(d) And the fourth and perhaps the main reason why Ravana would not listen to anyone is this:

Lord Vishnu, the cosmic form of the Supreme Being that is known as the 'Viraat Purush', had assumed a human form as Lord Ram to eliminate the scourge of the evil demons led by their king Ravana of the demon kingdom of Lanka. The Gods and Mother Earth had prayed to Lord Vishnu to protect them from Ravana's merciless reign of terror and mayhem. In order to fulfill his promise made to them, Lord Ram was on his mission to Lanka from his capital city of Ayodhya. During his journey through the forests, he, along with his wife Sita and brother Laxman, took a break and rested for some time at a place endowed with nature's bounty of exceptional beauty; it was called Panchvati. Sage Agastya had advised the Lord to abide here for some time, and during his retreat he must devise a device by which the next phase of his mission could be realized—which was to find out a way that would give the Lord an honourable excuse to go to Lanka and get rid of Ravana.

Lord Ram pondered over the subject and decided that the only way to get the ball rolling was to use his powerful force known as ‘Maya’ (which is the Lord’s magical cosmic powers that create an overriding sense of delusion and conjures up a world of illusions so real that even the wisest of sages are taken for a ride) and have Sita abducted by Ravana. To keep the momentum going and ensure success in his mission, the Lord decided that he would employ this Maya of his to the full, and in such a way that no matter what happens Ravana would not see the reality and listen to no one who might advise him to give Sita back to the Lord and end hostility.]

(ii) Doha no. 11 (a) along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it:-

चौ०. इहाँ सुबेल सैल रघुबीरा । उतरे सेन सहित अति भीरा ॥ १ ॥
 सिखर एक उत्तंग अति देखी । परम रज्ज सम सुभ्र बिसेषी ॥ २ ॥
 तहँ तरु किसलय सुमन सुहाए । लछिमन रचि निज हाथ डसाए ॥ ३ ॥
 ता पर रुचिर मृदुल मृगछाला । तेहिं आसन आसीन कृपाला ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

ihāṁ subēla saila raghubīrā. utarē sēna sahita ati bhīrā. 1.
 sikhara ēka utaṅga ati dēkhī. parama ramya sama subhra bisēṣī. 2.
 tahaṁ taru kisalaya sumana suhā'ē. lachimana raci nija hātha ḍasā'ē. 3.
 tā para rucira mṛdula mṛgachālā. tēhiṁ āsana āsīna kṛpālā. 4.

[This verse tells us the exact place where Lord Ram and his army landed on the shore of Lanka. It continues from Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 5 herein above where we have already read that the Lord crossed the ocean and landed on the soil of Lanka. But where did he actually land? This question is now answered:-]

Meanwhile, Lord Ram landed on Mt. Subel¹ along with his huge army that formed a big crowd around the place. (1)

Lord Ram looked at the mountain (or the large hill) and saw that its high summit was clean, very pleasant, and in the form of a flat piece of land (or a plateau). (2)

On this high ground, Laxman himself spread soft and newly plucked green leaves and flower petals [3], upon which he laid out a deer skin, and the merciful Lord Ram sat down on it [4]. (3-4)

[Note—¹Mt. Subel was in the north of the island of Lanka. It was a little away from the shore. It was very high and gave a magnificent view of the city. So when the monkey and bear warriors had eaten their fill and Lord Ram had rested a while near the shore of the ocean after landing, he decided to move to a higher ground so as to have a vantage point where he would pitch his camp during the war. Mt. Subel presented a viable option as it was right in front and easily accessible; it also afforded a clear view of the fort of Lanka. Perhaps it was from here that Hanuman too had viewed Lanka when he came here in his search of Sita. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8 and 10 that precede Doha no. 3.}

प्रभु कृत सीस कपीस उछंगा । बाम दहिन दिसि चाप निषंगा ॥ ५ ॥ दुहुँ कर कमल सुधारत बाना । कह लंकेस मंत्र लगि काना ॥ ६ ॥ prabhu kṛta sīsa kapīsa uchaṅgā. bāma dahina disi cāpa niṣaṅgā. 5.

duhum̐ kara kamala sudhārata bānā. kaha laṅkēsa mantra lagi kānā. 6.

[Lord Ram wished to relax a bit, so he lied down on the soft bed made by Laxman by spreading tender leaves and flowers on the ground as described in the previous verse.]

Sugriv, the commander of the monkey army and the Lord's trusted friend, offered his lap to the Lord to rest his head upon like he would have done on a pillow. The Lord's bow was lying to his left, and his quiver was to his right. (5)

Lord Ram held an arrow in his hands and was moving them casually on it. At that time, Vibhishan (the future king of Lanka; "laṅkēsa") whispered something secretly in the ears of the Lord¹. (6)

[Note—¹Vibhishan and Lord Ram were discussing something about the future course of action; perhaps it was about how to penetrate the virtually impregnable fort of Lanka. In the whole army, it was only Vibhishan who knew all the secrets of Lanka as he was its prince before joining Lord Ram's camp. They were talking in a hushed tone so that no one could listen what they were talking about. It was necessary to maintain top secrecy for in times of war no one can be certain who would betray whom. Vibhishan feared the most because if there was some spy of Ravana mingling with the monkeys and bears after assuming their form then he will dig his own grave and push others into it even before the war commenced.

Both Sugriv and Vibhishan were princes of their respective kingdoms—so they sat near Lord Ram's head. Angad and Hanuman were the Lord's favourite and devoted followers who were very eager to serve the Lord personally—so they messaged his tired legs, one each. And Laxman, the Lord's younger brother, sat a respectable distance to keep vigil.]

बड़भागी अंगद हनुमाना । चरन कमल चापत बिधि नाना ॥ ७ ॥ प्रभु पाछें लछिमन बीरासन । कटि निषंग कर बान सरासन ॥ ८ ॥ baṛabhāgī aṅgada hanumānā. carana kamala cāpata bidhi nānā. 7.

prabhu pāchēm lachimana bīrāsana. kaṭi niṣaṅga kara bāna sarāsana. 8.

While Lord Ram thus reclined, Hanuman and Angad felt themselves exceedingly lucky and blessed because they got a chance to press and message the Lord's legs in many different ways (to make the Lord as comfortable as possible, and to alleviate his tiredness). (7)

Laxman was sitting in a posture called “bīrāsana”¹ with a bow and an arrow ready in his hands, and a quiver tied to his waist². (8)

[Note—¹The “bīrāsana” is a sitting pose that is normally adopted by a warrior because it keeps him alert and ready to jump to take action at short notice.

²Laxman was sitting in this way to keep a strict watch over the proceedings. Should any danger appear and Lord Ram was in harm’s way, Laxman was ready to leap up to defend the Lord and take appropriate action. Earlier also in the story of the Ramayana it is narrated that on any occasion when Lord Ram and Sita slept during the course of their long journey to the forest, Laxman would sit at a distance with his bow and arrow at the ready to keep guard over the Lord and Sita for the whole night to ensure no harm comes to them. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 90.}]

दो०. एहि बिधि कृपा रूप गुन धाम रामु आसीन ।
धन्य ते नर एहिं ध्यान जे रहत सदा लयलीन ॥ ११ (क) ॥
dōhā.

ēhi bidhi kṛpā rūpa guna dhāma rāmu āsīna.
dhan'ya tē nara ēhīm dhyāna jē rahata sadā layalīna. 11 (a).

Lord Ram, who is a treasury of grace, kindness, beauty and excellent virtues, rested in the way described herein before.

Verily, he who is able to meditate upon this magnificent view of the Lord and remain submerged in the thoughts of it, is surely and without gainsay very fortunate and blessed. (Doha no. 11-a)

-----**-----

Section 10.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

{Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand,
Canto 3, verse nos. 59-87, and Canto 4, verse nos. 1-8 }

After reading how Lord Ram crossed the ocean and landed in Lanka from the classic ‘Ram Charit Manas’ of Goswami Tulsidas, now let us see how ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’ of Veda Vyas describes it.

This episode appears in ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 59-87, and Canto 4, verse nos. 1-8.

(i) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 59-87:-

शार्दूलोऽपि ततः पूर्वं दृष्ट्वा कपिबलं महत् ।
यथावत्कथयामास रावणाय स राक्षसः ॥ ५९॥
दीर्घचिन्तापरो भूत्वा निःश्वसन्नास मन्दिरे । ततः समुद्रमावेक्ष्य रामो रक्तान्तलोचनः ॥ ६०॥ śārdūlo'pi tataḥ pūrvam dr̥ṣṭvā kapibalaṁ mahat । yathāvatkathayāmāsa rāvaṇāya sa rākṣasaḥ ॥ 59॥ dīrghacintāparo bhūtvā niḥśvasannāsa mandire । tataḥ samudramāvekṣya rāmo raktāntalocanaḥ ॥ 60॥

59-60. Prior to Shuk (one of the spies sent by Ravana to reconnoiter Vibhishan's movement and report back), another demon (who had also come at the instance of Ravana, but preferred to stay hidden all along while Shuk was caught and teased by the monkeys and bears) had seen the great army of monkeys, and when he went back to Lanka he described about it to Ravana (59).

Hearing all this, Ravana was extremely perplexed and profoundly worried, not knowing what to do next. So he sat in his palace breathing heavily (out of anxiety).

Meanwhile, Lord Sri Ram glared at the ocean with eyes red with indignation, exasperation and anger, and said (60)—

पश्य लक्ष्मण दुष्टोऽसौ वारिधिर्मामुपागतम् । नाभिनन्दति दुष्टात्मा दर्शनार्थं ममानघ ॥ ६१॥
जानाति मानुषोऽयं मे किं करिष्यति वानरैः । अद्य पश्य महाबाहो शोषयिष्यामि वारिधिम् ॥ ६२॥ paśya lakṣmaṇa duṣṭo'sau vāridhirmāmupāgatam । nābhinandati duṣṭātmā darśanārthaṁ mamānagha ॥ 61॥ jānāti mānuṣo'yaṁ me kiṁ kariṣyati vānaraiḥ । adya paśya mahābāho śoṣayiṣyāmi vāridhim ॥ 62॥

61-62. 'Oh Laxman! How wicked is this fellow Ocean! I have come to its shore, but oh Anagh (one who is pure and faultless), this wicked soul has no good manners for he has not even bothered to greet me as his guest. [To wit, the Deity of the ocean appears to be too haughty, arrogant, un-courteous and un-civilised.] (61).

It thinks 'after all, he is an ordinary human being; what harm can he do to me although he has joined forces with the powerful monkeys and bears who reside on my northern banks'.

So, my brave brother, look: today I shall dry up this ocean (to teach its stubborn and haughty deity a good lesson) (62).

पादेनैव गमिष्यन्ति वानरा विगतज्वराः ।
 इत्युक्त्वा क्रोधताम्राक्ष आरोपितधनुर्धरः ॥ ६३॥
 तूणीराद्वाणमादाय कालाग्निसदृशप्रभम् । सन्धाय चापमाकृष्य रामो वाक्यमथाब्रवीत् ॥ ६४॥ pādenaiva gamiṣyanti vānarā vigatajvarāḥ । ityuktvā krodhatāmrākṣa āropitadharnurdharaḥ ॥ 63॥ tūṇīrādbāṇamādāya kālāgnisadr̥śaprabham । sandhāya cāpamākṛṣya rāmo vākya mathābravīt ॥ 64॥

63-64. Then, when I have dried the ocean up, the army of monkeys (and bears) can cross it on foot'.

Saying this, the Lord lifted and stringed his formidable bow (63), took out from his quiver a fiery arrow which was as fierce as the fire of dooms-day, mounted it on the bow, pulled it, and said (64)—

पश्यन्तु सर्वभूतानि रामस्य शरविक्रमम् ।
 इदानीं भस्मसात्कुर्यां समुद्रं सरितां पतिम् ॥ ६५॥
 एवं ब्रुवति रामे तु सशैलवनकानना ।
 चचाल वसुधा द्यौश्च दिशश्च तमसावृताः ॥ ६६॥
 चुक्षुभे सागरो वेलां भयाद्योजनमत्यगात् । तिमिनकृज्झषा मीनाः प्रतप्ताः परिततूंसुः ॥ ६७॥ paśyantu sarvabhūtāni rāmasya śaravikramam । idānīm bhasmasātkuryāṃ samudraṃ saritām patim ॥ 65॥ evaṃ bruvati rāme tu saśailavanakānanā । cacāla vasudhā dyauśca diśaśca tamasāvṛtāḥ ॥ 66॥ cukṣubhe sāgaro velāṃ bhayādyojanamatyagāt । timinakrajhaṣā mīnāḥ prataptāḥ paritatraśuḥ ॥ 67॥

65-67. 'Let all the creatures see the might, the prowess and the potential of Ram's arrow. I will immediately reduce to ashes (i.e. dry up) the king of rivers known as the 'ocean' (65).

As soon as Lord Ram threatened the Deity of the ocean in the aforesaid manner, the whole earth trembled along with its mountains and forests, while darkness covered all the directions of the earth as well as the sky (66).

The ocean was extremely terrified and was out of its wits. Out of anxiety it began to swell, and its water moved 1 Yojan (roughly 8 miles) inland¹.

This sudden rise of the water caused turbulence in the ocean, which in its turn agitated all the marine creatures that lived in it. So therefore, large and small fish of all sizes and classifications, such as sharks, whales, crocodiles, alligators etc., became agitated and perplexed; the water churned and swirled to form huge whirlpools (67).

[Note—¹To wit, there was a huge tidal wave in the ocean which pushed the water for 8 miles inland along the shoreline. Lord Ram was standing on the shore, so the water obviously touched the Lord's holy feet in a symbolic gesture to indicate that the Deity of the ocean wishes to wash his feet to ask for forgiveness by saying 'sorry'.]

एतस्मिन्नन्तरे साक्षात्सागरो दिव्यरूपधृक् ।
दिव्याभरणसम्पन्नः स्वभासा भासयन् दिशः ॥ ६८॥
स्वान्तःस्थदिव्यरत्नानि कराभ्यां परिगृह्य सः । पादयोः पुरतः क्षिप्त्वा रामस्योपायनं बहु ॥ ६९॥
दण्डवत्पूणित्याह रामं रक्तान्तलोचनम् । त्राहि त्राहि जगन्नाथ राम त्रैलोक्यरक्षक ॥ ७०॥ etasminnantare sāksātsāgaro divyarūpadhrk । divyābharaṇasampannaḥ svabhāsā bhāsayan diśaḥ ॥ 68॥ svāntaḥsthadivyaratnāni karābhyāṃ parigrhya saḥ । pādayoḥ purataḥ kṣiptvā rāmasyopāyanaṃ bahu ॥ 69॥ daṇḍavatpraṇityāha rāmaṃ raktāntalocanam । trāhi trāhi jagannātha rāma trailokyarakṣaka ॥ 70॥

68-70. Just about that moment, the Ocean appeared himself (i.e. in a personified form that was represented by its presiding Deity) before Lord Ram. He had a divine form, was adorned by magnificent ornaments, and carried in his hands beautiful gems / jewels that are naturally found inside the ocean (such as pearls, corals, shells etc.) as gifts for the Lord. He was illuminating all the directions by his self-radiant glow. He kept the various gems / jewels that he had brought as gifts at the feet of Lord Ram (68-69).

Then he fell down like a stick (i.e. prostrated) at the feet of the Lord whose eyes were extremely red with anger, exasperation and indignation. After that the Ocean said, 'Oh Lord Ram. You are a protector of the three worlds¹ as well as the Supreme Lord of the whole universe. Lord, I beseech you to protect me, to save me from any harm (70).

[Note—¹The 'three worlds' mean the three divisions of creation, viz. the past, the present and the future. It also refers to the three divisions of the world, such as the heaven, the earth and the nether world.]

जडोऽहं राम ते सृष्टः सृजता निखिलं जगत् ।
स्वभावमन्यथा कर्तुं कः शक्तो देवनिर्मितम् ॥ ७१॥
स्थूलानि पञ्चभूतानि जडान्येव स्वभावतः । सृष्टानि भवतैतानि त्वदाज्ञां लङ्घयन्ति न ॥ ७२॥ jaḍo'haṃ rāma te sṛṣṭaḥ srjatā nikhilaṃ jagat । svabhāvamanyathā kartuṃ kaḥ śakto devanirmitam ॥ 71॥ sthūlāni pañcabhūtāni jaḍānyeva svabhāvataḥ । sṛṣṭāni bhavataitāni tvadājñāṃ laṅghayanti na ॥ 72॥

71-72. 'Oh Lord Sri Ram! At the time of creation of the world, you had created me (along with the other five elements¹) and had made me (i.e. the 'water element') gross. Say then, how can anyone change the temperament, the basic nature, and one's inherent tendencies and inclinations with which he has been born? (71).

All the five basic elements¹ that you had created (at the time of creation, and one of which, the 'water element' is represented by me) are all gross by nature. They cannot think for themselves, they cannot violate the nature you had assigned them at the time of their creation, and they must follow the laws and regulations you had laid out for them (72).

[Note—¹The five elements from which the whole creation has materialized are the following—earth or soil, water which is here represented by the 'ocean', fire, air and space. These are the basic ingredients for the whole creation.

The Supreme Being laid out the law that those who lived on hard surface of the earth, such as on land, cannot walk on water, and those creatures who lived in the water cannot walk on the solid surface represented by the land. To wit, animals and humans can't walk on the surface of any water body, including the ocean, and likewise water-living creatures such as fish etc. cannot walk on dry land.

Hence, the ocean pleaded with Lord Ram that he was merely following this law in not allowing the Lord and his army to go across its watery, fluid surface on foot. So therefore, there is no reason why the Lord should be angry at him.]

तामसादहमो राम भूतानि प्रभवन्ति हि । कारणानुगमात्तेषां जडत्वं तामसं स्वतः ॥ ७३॥
निर्गुणस्त्वं निराकारो यदा मायागुणान् प्रभो ।
लीलाङ्गीकरोषि त्वं तदा वैराजनामवान् ॥ ७४॥
गुणात्मनो विराजश्च सत्त्वादेवा बभूवरे । राजोगुणात्प्रजेशाद्या मन्योर्भूतपतिस्तव ॥ ७५॥ tāmasādahamo rāma bhūtāni prabhavanti hi । kāraṇānugamātteṣāṃ jaḍatvaṃ tāmasaṃ svataḥ ॥ 73॥ nirguṇastvaṃ nirākāro yadā māyāguṇān prabho । līlayāṅgīkaroṣi tvaṃ tadā vairājanānavān ॥ 74॥ guṇātmano virājaśca sattvāddeva babhūvire । rajoguṇātprajesādyā manyorbhūtapatistava ॥ 75॥

73-75. [The following verses deal with the metaphysical philosophy of creation and its elements.]

Oh Lord Ram! The elements originate from 'Tamas Ahankar' (i.e. illusive or false pride, ego, haughtiness, arrogance, hypocrisy). Hence, since their origin is not pure and noble, these five elements would naturally be tainted and faulty by nature, acquiring the characteristic of the seed (Tamas Ahankar) from which they have sprouted. This is a self evident fact.

[To wit, since the ingredient of 'Tamas Ahankar' is negative and gross in nature, so the elements that were formed from it too acquired its characteristic. Since, the input was of a negative character, how can one expect the output to be of positive character?] (73).

Oh Lord! You are the Supreme Being known as Brahm who has no attributes and forms. When you playfully (i.e. willingly, just for the sake of it) accept the qualities or characteristics of Maya (the cosmic power of Brahm that creates delusions or illusions), you are known by the name of ‘Vairaj’ (“vairājanāmavān”; meaning the supreme Lord known as the Parmatma who has assumed form for the purpose of creation; this form is known as the Creator Brahma) (74).

Out of the different aspects of that Vairaj, the different Gods and demi-Gods were created. Such as for instance, the senior Gods were created out of the Satvic aspect of Vairaj. [This is the best of the three qualities, and it symbolizes virtuousness, nobility, positivity, holiness and divinity etc.]

The Prajapatis, the junior Gods in the hierarchy who look after the day-to-day functions of the world and take care of its creatures, were created out of the Rajsic aspect of Vairaj. [This quality produces a desire to remain involved in worldly affairs and help the world to sustain, expand, acquire and enjoy worldly things.]

Finally, the different Rudras were created out of the Tamas aspect of Vairaj. [This aspect symbolizes negative characteristics of creation such as anger, wrath, discords, quarrels, conflicts, malice, vengeance, animosity, ill-will, jealousy, quarrels etc. This is the lowest quality in creation and fully negative in nature.] (75).

त्वामहं मायया छन्नं लीलया मानुषाकृतिम् ॥ ७६॥

जडबुद्धिर्जडो मूर्खः कथं जानामि निर्गुणम् ।

दण्ड एव हि मूर्खाणां सन्मार्गपूषकः प्रभो ॥ ७७॥

भूतानाममरश्रेष्ठ पशूनां लगुडो यथा ।

शरणं ते व्रजामीशं शरण्यं भक्तवत्सल ।

अभयं देहि मे राम लङ्कामार्गं ददामि ते ॥ ७८॥

tvāmahaṃ māyayā channaṃ līlayā mānuṣākṛtim ॥ 76॥

jaḍabuddhirjaḍo mūrkhaḥ katham jānāmi nirguṇam ।

daṇḍa eva hi mūrkhāṇāṃ sanmārgaprāpakāḥ prabho ॥ 77॥

bhūtānāmamaraśreṣṭha paśūnāṃ laguḍo yathā ।

śaraṇam te vrajāmīśam śaraṇyam bhaktavatsala ।

abhayaṃ dehi me rāma laṅkā-mārgam dadāmi te ॥ 78॥

76-78. You have assumed a human form by willingly and almost playfully letting yourself be surrounded (or being influenced, affected) by your ‘Maya’ (delusion creating powers of the Supreme Being that results in ignorance, illusions, hallucinations and deceptions) (76).

How can I, who am by nature ignorant, foolish, gross and block-headed, therefore realise or comprehend the cosmic form of yours that is known as ‘Nirguna’, i.e. a form that has no attributes and physical forms, that is invisible and cosmic, and which pervades the whole creation in the form of pure consciousness.

[To wit, oh dear Lord, how can I, who am of such a low intellect, ever fathom the vastness of the Lord who is the object of profound and deep meditation, who is so miniscule that he is invisible to the naked eye like the atom or the molecule of the elements, but at the same time is so vast and myriad in his forms that the entire universe with its spectacular diversity and variety of forms is actually your own revelation as it has its origin in you.]

Oh Lord! Say then, how can such an ignorant and dumb-headed fellow like me be ever expected to follow the path of righteousness, propriety, probity and noble conduct merely by 'using the stick', i.e. by the fear of punishment or by coercion.

[To wit, why do you intend to use force against me by shooting your fiery arrow at this poor fellow. Oh Lord, you are exceptionally wise, intelligent and understanding, so you ought to realize that I am by nature dumb and gross, so a compassionate and merciful Lord like you must not use force against me for my being stubborn and appearing to obstruct your path purposefully just to tease you and test your might. No Lord, it is not that at all. Say, what do you expect from a stupid servant like me? If I had the sort of wisdom to know that my actions are offending you then I wouldn't have dared to do what I did, but unfortunately I don't have it and so couldn't realize my errors and follies. So therefore, in the cause of justice, I must be forgiven.] (77).

Verily, just like the case of a herdsman prodding and cajoling his animals to walk properly along their path, for otherwise his animals would either not move or go astray from the chosen path, you too should guide me along the right path.

Oh Lord whose name is the most exalted and superior amongst all the names in this animate as well as inanimate creation, I have come to take refuge at your auspicious feet and seek shelter there. So oh Lord Ram, you must protect me as you are exceedingly compassionate towards your devotees who have taken shelter with you and have sought refuge in your holy feet. Therefore oh Lord, bless me with fearlessness. I shall give you the right of passage to Lanka (and this I promise to you).' (78).

श्रीराम उवाच ।

अमोघोऽयं महाबाणः कस्मिन् देशे निपात्यताम् ।

तक्ष्यं दर्शय मे शीघ्रं बाणस्यामोघपातिनः ॥ ७९॥

रामस्य वचनं श्रुत्वा करे दृष्ट्वा महाशरम् ।

महोदधर्महातेजा राघवं वाक्यमब्रवीत् ॥ ८०॥ śrīrāma uvāca ।

amogho'yaṃ mahābāṇaḥ kasmin deśe nipātyatām ।

lakṣyaṃ darśaya me śīghraṃ bāṇasyāmoghapātinaḥ ॥ 79॥

rāmasya vacanaṃ śrutvā kare dr̥ṣṭvā mahāśaram ।

mahodadhirmahātejā rāghavaṃ vākyaṃ abravīt ॥ 80॥

79-80. Lord Ram said, referring to his raised arrow, 'This great arrow of mine cannot go in vain. Hence, in which direction must I shoot it? Show me quickly the target for this arrow.' (79).

Hearing these stern and urgent words of the Lord, and seeing that the formidable and potent arrow in his hand was about to be shot, the Ocean who had appeared before Lord Ram in a glorious and radiant form, replied politely --- (80).

रामोत्तरप्रदेशे तु द्रुमकुल्य इति श्रुतः । प्रदेशस्तत्र बहवः पापात्मानो दिवानिशम् ॥ ८१॥
 बाधन्ते मां रघुश्रेष्ठ तत्र ते पात्यतां शरः ।
 रामेण सृष्टो बाणस्तु क्षणादाभीरमण्डलम् ॥ ८२॥
 हत्वा पुनः समागत्य तूणीरे पूर्ववत्स्थितः । ततोऽब्रवीद्रघुश्रेष्ठं सागरो विनयान्वितः ॥ ८३॥ rāmottarapradeśe tu drumakulya iti śrutaḥ । pradeśastatra bahavaḥ pāpātmāno divāniśam ॥ 81॥ bādhante māṃ raghuśreṣṭha tatra te pātyatām śaraḥ । rāmeṇa sṛṣṭo bāṇastu kṣaṇādābhīramaṇḍalam ॥ 82॥ hatvā punaḥ samāgatya tūṇīre pūrvavatsthitaḥ । tato'bravidraghuśreṣṭhaṃ sāgaro vinayānvitaḥ ॥ 83॥

81-83. 'Oh Lord Sri Ram! There is a country called 'Drumkul' to the north of here. Many sinners and evil persons reside there. Night and day (always) (81) they torment and harass me. So therefore oh the most exalted Lord of king Raghu's line (of Ayodhya), if you must shoot your arrow then let it be shot in that direction. '

Thence, that arrow shot by Lord Ram annihilated the whole of the area inhabited by those indicated by the Deity of the ocean. Having accomplished its assigned task, the mystical arrow returned to the Lord's quiver.

After that, feeling reassured that he was out of harms way and the Lord is pleased with him, the Ocean said to Lord Ram, who is the best amongst all the kings of Raghu's line, in a very polite way --- (82-83).

नलः सेतुं करोत्वस्मिन् जले मे विश्वकर्मणः ।
 सुतो धीमान् समर्थोऽस्मिन् कार्ये लब्धवरो हरिः ॥ ८४॥
 कीर्तिं जानन्तु ते लोकाः सर्वलोकमलापहाम् । इत्युक्त्वा रघवं नत्वा ययौ सिन्धुरदृश्यताम् ॥ ८५॥

nalaḥ setuṃ karotvasmin jale me viśvakarmaṇaḥ । suto dhīmān samartha'smin kārye labdhavaro hariḥ ॥ 84॥ kīrtiṃ jānantu te lokāḥ sarvalokamalāpahām । ityuktvā rāghavaṃ natvā yayau sindhuradrśyatām ॥ 85॥

84-85. 'Let Nala, the son of Vishwakarma (the architect of the gods), construct a bridge over the water. This clever and expert monkey is able to do it because of a special boon that he possesses¹ (84).

By doing so (i.e. by constructing the bridge), your name and fame would spread in all the corners of the world. People would remember you for all times to come as the Lord who overcomes all obstacles and oppositions that one faces in one's life (without harming any innocent creature in the process)².

Saying this to Raghav (Lord Sri Ram), the Ocean vanished from sight (85).

[Note—¹Nala and his brother Neela had a boon granted to them in their childhood by sages that any stone or rock that they would touch will float on the surface of water—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 60. This boon was employed to use rocks and stone and boulders of all shapes and sizes to make a floating bridge across the water of the ocean. This bridge was 100 Yojans (800 miles) long to link the two shores of the ocean, one where Lord Ram stood and the other at Lanka.

For more details, the reader should refer to Section 10.1, sub-section 10.1.2 of this Book.

²Such a ‘floating bridge’ was never ever constructed in the history of the world. So this unique and marvelous feat would surely spread the fame and glory of Lord Ram throughout the world. It goes without saying that the fame and glory of its actual builders and craftsmen, the two brothers Nala and Neela, would also be immortalized by this fantastic bridge.

The world would especially honour Lord Ram for showing compassion on the ocean by not harming it although it was trying to obstruct the Lord’s way.]

ततो रामस्तु सुग्रीवलक्ष्मणाभ्यां समन्वितः ।
नलमाज्ञापयच्छीघ्रं वानरैः सेतुबन्धने ॥ ८६॥
ततोऽतिहृष्टः प्लवगेन्द्रयूथपैर्महानगेन्द्रप्रतिमैर्युतो नलः ।
बबन्ध सेतुं शतयोजनायतं सुविस्तृतं पर्वतपादपैर्दृढम् ॥ ८७॥

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे तृतीयः सर्गः ॥ ३॥

tato rāmastu sugrīvalakṣmaṇābhyāṃ samanvitaḥ । nalamājñāpayacchīghraṃ vānaraiḥ setubandhane ॥ 86॥ tato'tihṛṣṭaḥ plavagendrayūthapairmahānagendrpratimairyuto nalaḥ । babandha setuṃ śatayojanāyataṃ suviśṛtaṃ parvatapādapairdṛḍham ॥ 87॥

iti śrīmadadhyātmarāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde yuddhakāṇḍe
tṛtīyaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 3॥

86-87. Thereafter, Nala was ordered by Lord Sri Ram, Sugriv and Laxman to tie the bridge together with the help of other monkeys (86).

Then Nala, with the help of commanders and chieftains of the different groups of monkeys, who were as colossus as mountains themselves, skillfully and cheerfully built a bridge with huge mountains and trees¹. The bridge was very strong and sturdy, and it extended for 100 Yojans (i.e. for 800 miles from the northern shore of the ocean where Lord Ram stood with his army, to the southern shore which touched the island of Lanka, the kingdom of the demon race) (87).

Thus ends Canto 3 of Yuddha Kand of Adhyatma Ramayan that narrates the conversation between Lord Shiva and his divine consort Uma.

[Note—¹The logs of wood from trees were used because they would keep the stone slabs afloat on the water, and the planks were tied together using creepers found on mountains and trees. The existence of this bridge has been established by satellite images taken by the Indian satellite IRS-1A which in 1962 had taken photographs of the remnants of a stone bridge. It appeared as an underground streak from Dhanushkoti in India to Talai Manner in Sri Lanka. This was corroborated by U.S. astronauts aboard gemini XI satellite launched on 14/9/1966.]

(ii) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 1-8:-

श्रीमहादेव उवाच ।

सेतुमारभमाणस्तु तत्र रामेश्वरं शिवम् ।

संस्थाप्य पूजयित्वाह रामो लोकहिताय च ॥ १॥

पूणमेत्सेतुबन्धं यो दृष्ट्वा रामेश्वरं शिवम् ।

ब्रह्महत्यादिपापेभ्यो मुच्यते मदनुग्राहात् ॥ २॥

śrīmahādeva uvāca ।

setumārabhamāṇastu tatra rāmeśvaram śivam ।

saṁsthāpya pūjayitvāha rāmo lokahitāya ca ॥ 1॥

praṇametsetubandham yo dr̥ṣṭvā rāmeśvaram śivam । brahmahatyādipāpebhyo mucyate madanugrahāt ॥ 2॥

1-2. Lord Shiva said—'Oh Parvati! At the time of beginning of the construction of the bridge, Lord Sri Ram installed the Lingam of 'Rameshwar Shiva' (literally, Shiva who is the Lord of Sri Ram, and conversely, Sri Ram who is the Lord of Shiva), worshipped Shiva in the form of this consecrated Lingam, and said the following words for the welfare of the world (1), ---

'Those people who would have 'Darshan' of Rameshwar Shiva (i.e. who would come here and view this Lingam established by me with due reverence and faith, and pay homage to Lord Shiva), and then bow reverentially with devotion before the bridge (which I have built), verily they shall be freed from many horrible sins, such as the killing of a Brahmin¹ etc. (2).

[Note—¹This statement of Lord Ram must not be seen or read in the wrong light. The Lord never meant that he condones sins. It is not meant to allow people to commit sins freely in the belief that they would easily overcome punishment by going to Rameshwar Shiva and offering prayers there. There is nothing of the sort intended.

The Lord simply means that if one sincerely regrets for having committed some grave sin and wants to actually atone for it, then there is a remedy for it. Such persons must offer their prayers and ask for forgiveness from Lord Shiva along with paying their homage to this bridge that symbolizes the Lord's effort to go and liberate even the most horribly sinful creatures that ever walked on the surface of the earth, i.e. the demons who had been perpetually tormenting countless Brahmins.

Lord Ram means that it is a normal thing for a human being to err, but that does not mean the end of the world. Therefore, all persons who are sincere and wish to repent for their past evil, who wish to turn a new leaf in their lives, must be given a chance to do so. The first sin ought to be forgiven and the creature ought to be given a chance to reform. By undertaking a pilgrimage to Rameshwar Shiva, he will mentally free himself of the guilt of having committed something wrong, and this would go a long way to help in his reformation and rehabilitation at the psychological level.]

सेतुबन्धे नरः स्नात्वा दृष्ट्वा रामेश्वरं हरम् ।
सङ्कल्पनियतो भूत्वा गत्वा वाराणसीं नरः ॥ ३॥
आनीय गङ्गासलिलं रामेशमभिषिच्य च ।
समुद्रे क्षिप्ततद्भारो ब्रह्म प्राप्नोत्यसंशयम् ॥ ४॥ setubandhe naraḥ snātvā dr̥ṣṭvā rāmeśvaram haram । saṅkalpaniyato bhūtvā gatvā vārāṇasīm naraḥ ॥ 3॥ āniya gaṅgāsailaṁ rāmeśamabhiṣicya ca । samudre kṣiptatadbhāro brahma prāpnotyasamśayam ॥ 4॥

3-4. Any person who first bathes in the ocean near the bridge, has a Darshan (divine and august viewing) of Rameshwar Har (Shiva), goes to Kashi (Varanasi) determined to bring the water of the holy river Ganges from there to this place, pours that holy water over the Rameshwaram Lingam, and then puts the container (in which the water was brought) in the ocean—such a person shall attain Brahm (the supreme Soul). There is no doubt about it. [To wit, such persons shall attain liberation and deliverance from his sins, and at the time of death they would find emancipation and salvation for their soul.] (3-4).

[Note—These two verses describe the proper way to undertake a pilgrimage to Rameshwar Shiva.]

कृतानि प्रथमेनाह्ना योजनानि चतुर्दश ।
द्वितीयेन तथा चाह्ना योजनानि तु विंशतिः ॥ ५॥
तृतीयेन तथा चाह्ना योजनान्येकविंशतिः ।
चतुर्थेन तथा चाह्ना द्वाविंशतिरिति श्रुतम् ॥ ६॥
पञ्चमेन त्रयोविंशद्योजनानि समन्ततः ।
बबन्ध सागरे सेतुं नलो वानरसत्तमः ॥ ७॥
तेनैव जग्मुः कपयो योजनानां शतं द्रुतम् ।
असङ्ख्याताः सुवेलाद्रि रुरुधुः प्लवगोत्तमाः ॥ ८॥ kṛtāni prathamēnāhnā yojanāni caturdaśa । dvitīyena tathā cāhnā yojanāni tu viṁśatiḥ ॥ 5॥ tṛtīyena tathā cāhnā yojanānyekaviṁśatiḥ । caturthena tathā cāhnā dvāviṁśatiriti śrutam ॥ 6॥ pañcamena trayoviṁśadyojanāni samantataḥ । babandha sāgare setuṁ nalo vānarasattamaḥ ॥ 7॥ tenaiva jagmuḥ kapayo yojanānām śataṁ drutam ।

asaṅkhyātāḥ suvelādrim rurudhuḥ plavagottamāḥ ॥ 8॥

5-7. It is heard being said (in ancient scriptures) that on the first day the bridge was tied for a distance of 14 Yojans, on the second day for 20 Yojans (5), on the third day 21 Yojans further, on the fourth day 22 Yojans were added (6), and on the fifth day the last leg of 23 Yojans were completed.

Thus, the bridge was finally completed and made ready for use to cross the ocean by Nala who was the best amongst the monkeys in his field of expertise (7).

The monkeys crossed the 100-Yojan wide ocean on that bridge without losing much time. After crossing the bridge and landing on the soil of Lanka, the countless monkey warriors laid siege of Mt. Subel (8).

[Note—We see that the bridge spanning 100 Yojans was completed in a record number of five days as follows—14+20+21+22+23 = 100 Yojans.]

-----**-----

Part 3

Chapter 11

A brief Recapitulation of the Story from the episode of Sita's abduction by Ravana till the time Lord Ram landed in Lanka from 'Devi Puran Mahabhagwat Ramayan'

Before proceeding ahead with the telling of our fascinating Story titled 'Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka', let us pause for some moments to recapitulate the events that led to the abduction of Sita by Ravana followed by Lord Ram's search for her, his meeting with Sugriv, the king of Kishkindha, and befriending him, Vibhishan, the brother of the demon king Ravana, joining Lord Ram's camp, messengers being sent out in all the directions to find the whereabouts of Sita, Hanuman's success in locating her in the Ashok grove in Lanka, the construction of the magnificent bridge across the ocean, and the landing of Lord Ram on the shore of Lanka with his formidable army of monkey and bear warriors.

There is a wonderful ancient classic in Sanskrit titled "Devi Puran Mahabhagwat Ramayan" which describes all these events briefly in its (i) Canto 38, verse nos. 33-53, (ii) Canto 39, verse nos. 1-42, and (iii) Canto 40, verse nos. 1-12.

"Devi Puran Mahabhagwat Ramayan" is a rare book and little known. By quoting this book and reading the relevant verses from it here we get to have a different view, a sort of a different perspective of the unfolding of the events which we have already read in our present Book, from Chapter no. 5 to Chapter no. 10.

It will be interesting to read these verses from “Devi Puran Mahabhogwat Ramayan” as it would truly make our present Book ‘The Story of Ravana and the Epic War of Lanka—Told in Slow Motion’ a really colourful bouquet by adding another version of the magnificent Story from a source other than the ones cited earlier.

This Chapter has three Sections, nos. 11.1—to—11.3.

So, let us start reading now:-

Section 11.1: Devi Puran Mahabhogwat Ramayan, Canto 38, verse nos. 33-53:-

These verses narrate the episode of Supernakha approaching Lord Ram with evil intentions, and the Lord punishing her by getting Laxman to cut-off her nose and ears. Angered and insulted, she first goes to instigate her demon brothers Khar and Dushan to take revenge for her; they attacked Lord Ram with their huge army of demons but were quickly eliminated by the Lord in the ensuing battle. Then Supernakha approaches Ravana, the king of demons of Lanka, and pleads with him to intervene and seek retribution on her behalf. Ravana forced a demon named Marich to assume the form of a golden deer to lure Lord Ram away so that he can abduct Sita. While on his way back to Lanka with her, Ravana fought a pitched battle with Jatayu, the king of vultures, and mortally wounded him. Finally, Ravana reached Lanka and kept Sita captive in his royal garden called the ‘Ashok Van’ which was a small forest or a wonderful grove of beautiful trees.

रामस्तु दण्डकारण्ये विराधं घोररूपिणम् । हत्वा राक्षसनाशाय कियत्कालमुवास ह ॥३३॥
निर्माय पर्णशालां तु पञ्चवट्यां महामते ॥३४॥
तत्र शूर्पणखानाम्नी राक्षसी कामरूपिणी । समेत्य राघवं कर्तुं पतिमैच्छत्स्मरातुरा ॥३५॥ rāmastu daṇḍakāraṇye virādhaṁ ghorarūpiṇam । hatvā rākṣasanāśāya kiyatkālamuvāsa ha ॥33॥ nirmāya parṇasālāṁ tu pañcavaṭyāṁ mahāmate ॥34॥ tatra śūrpaṇakhānāmnī rākṣasī kāmārūpiṇī । sametya rāghavaṁ kartuṁ patimaicchatsmarāturā ॥35॥

Lord Ram killed a fierce demon named Viradh in the Dandakaranya forest. Then for the purpose of eliminating the demons, he stayed there for some time (33) in Panchvati. There, the great and wise one (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) erected a thatched hut for his dwelling (34).

During his stay there, a demoness named Supernakha, who could assume any form that she wished, once came to visit that place. She was overwhelmed with passion and lust (when she saw the handsome personality of Lord Ram), and so she approached Raghav (i.e. Lord Sri Ram) with a desire to make him her husband (35).

तां ज्ञात्वा राक्षसीं दुष्टां लक्ष्मणो भ्रातृशासनात् । चिच्छेद कर्णौ नासां च खड्गेन मुनिपुङ्गव ॥३६॥
ततः सा रुदती गत्वा भ्रातरौ खरदूषणौ । उवाच वचनं क्रुद्धा राक्षसी भीमरूपिणी ॥३७॥

tām jñātvā rākṣasīm duṣṭām lakṣmaṇo bhrātr̥śāsanāt । ciccheda karṇau nāsām ca khaḍgena munipuṅgava ॥36॥ tataḥ sā rudatī gatvā bhrātarau kharadūṣaṇau । uvāca vacanaṁ kruddhā rākṣasī bhīmarūpiṇī ॥37॥

[Lord Shiva said—] Oh the most exalted sage (i.e. Narad)¹! On the instructions of (or a hint from) his brother (i.e. Lord Ram), Laxman cut-off her ears and nose with a sword because he realized that she was a ferocious demoness (instead of the beauty she appeared to be) (36).

Humiliated, peeved and wounded, she went away weeping to her demon brothers Khar and Dushan, and said to them angrily— (37)

[Note—¹This story is being narrated to sage Narad by Lord Shiva.]

शूर्पणखोवाच

अयोध्याधिपतिः श्रीमान् रामो भ्रात्रा सह स्वयम् । आगतो दण्डकारण्ये श्यामो दूर्वादलप्रभः ॥३८॥
तस्याङ्गनापि तेनैव सार्धं तत्र समागता । सा यथा रूपसौन्दर्यशालिनी न तथा क्वचित् ॥३९॥
सर्वो मर्त्ये च पाताले कैश्चिद्दृष्टं न च श्रुतम् । त्वदर्थं तामानयन्त्या भ्राता तस्यानुजो मम ॥४०॥
चिच्छेद कर्णौ नासां च तेन याता त्वदन्तिकम् ॥४१॥

śūrpaṇakhovāca

ayodhyādhīpatiḥ śrīmān rāmo bhrātrā saha svayam । āgato daṇḍakāraṇye śyāmo dūrvādalaprabhaḥ ॥38॥ tasyāṅganāpi tenaiva sārḍhaṁ tatra samāgatā । sā yathā rūpasaundaryaśālīnī na tathā kvacit ॥39॥ savarge martye ca pātāle kaiścidḍṛṣṭaṁ na ca śrutam । tvadārthaṁ tāmānayaṁtyā bhrātā tasyānujo mama ॥40॥ ciccheda karṇau nāsām ca tena yātā tvadantikam ॥41॥

Supernakha said— 'Oh brother! The king of Ayodhya, Lord Sri Ram, has come to the Dandakaranya forest along with his brother (Laxman). He is dark complexioned like the Durba grass (38).

His wife (Sita) has also come along with him. She is so beautiful that the like of her has never been heard of anywhere (39), not in the celestial world, neither in the terrestrial nor in the nether world. I was bringing her for you, but his younger brother (Laxman) (40) chopped-off my ears and nose. That is why I have come to you' (41).

[Note—What a big pack of lies! Supernakha did not go to the place where Lord Ram lived to somehow bring Sita as a gift for her two demon brothers Khar and Dushan. She had approached Lord Ram because she had gone mad with passion and wished to marry him herself. But now she says that she wished to bring Sita for her demon brothers.

We see here how that the wicked demoness has twisted facts to incite her brothers to avenge her insult and hide her own misdeeds. Had she been truthful, she would not have been a demoness in the first place.]

श्री महादेव उवाच

इति तस्या वचः श्रुत्वा राक्षसौ खरदूषणौ । राक्षसानां परिवृतौ चतुर्दशसहस्रकैः ॥४२॥
जग्मतुः कानने तत्र यत्रास्ते रघुनन्दनः । तान् जघान शरव्रातै रामचन्द्रः समागतान् ॥४३॥

śrī mahādeva uvāca

iti tasyā vacaḥ śrutvā rākṣasau kharadūṣaṇau । rākṣasānām parivṛtau caturdaśasahasrakaiḥ ॥४२॥ jagmatuḥ kānane tatra yatrāste raghunandanau । tān jaghāna śaravrātai rāmacandraḥ samāgatān ॥४३॥

Lord Shiva said to Narad— 'Hearing her words, the demons Khar and Dushan, accompanied by fourteen thousand demon warriors, went to the forest where the two Raghunandans (Lord Sri Ram and his younger brother Laxman) lived.

[The demon army attacked Lord Ram, and in the ensuing battle—] Lord Ram killed all those demons by a hail of his arrows (42-43).

ततः शूर्पणखा गत्वा लङ्कायां शोकविह्वला । वृत्तान्तं कथयामास रावणाय महामते ॥४४॥
स तस्या वचनं श्रुत्वा सीताया रूपमुत्तमम् । गुण्ठितः कालपाशेन तां हर्तुं मतिमादधे ॥४५॥ tataḥ śūrpaṇakhā gatvā laṅkāyām śokavihvalā । vṛttāntaṁ kathayāmāsa rāvaṇāya mahāmate ॥४४॥ sa tasyā vacanaṁ śrutvā sītāyā rūpamuttamam । guṇṭhitaḥ kālapāśena tāṁ hartuṁ matimādadhe ॥४५॥

Then Supernakha was overwhelmed with anguish and sorrows (at the death of her brothers Khar and Dushan). She rushed to Lanka to narrate the whole episode to Ravana, the great king of the demon race (45).

When he heard her and learnt about the matchless beauty of Sita, and then being inspired by death (or prodded by his doomed destiny), he decided, out of his wickedness, delusions and stupidity, to abduct her (Sita) (45).

ततः सहायं कृत्वा तु मारीचं ताडकासुतम् । तां हर्तुकामः प्रययौ काननं तं स रावणः ॥४६॥
मारीचस्तु विनिश्चित्य श्रीरामान्मृत्युमात्मनः । मायास्वर्णमृगो भूत्वाऽनयद्रामं सुदूरतः ॥४७॥ tataḥ sahāyaṁ kṛtvā tu mārīcaṁ tāḍakāsutam । tām hartukāmaḥ prayayau kānanaṁ taṁ sa rāvaṇaḥ ॥46॥ mārīcastu viniścitya śrīrāmānmṛtyumātmanaḥ । māyāsvaṇṇamṛgo bhūtvā'nayadrāmaṁ sudūrataḥ ॥47॥

Thence, in order to take the help of Tadak's son Marich to kidnap Sita, he went to that forest (where Marich resided) (46).

Marich decided that his death at the hands of Lord Sri Ram was a certainty¹, so he assumed the form of a golden deer (a stag) and took the Lord far away from the latter's hermitage by employing deceit² (47).

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 26.

²How did Marich, disguised as a golden stag, manage to take Lord Ram away from his hermitage so that Ravana could steal Sita? This is answered in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-16 that precede Doha no. 27.

Briefly, Marich's magnificent golden hide attracted Sita's attention, and she asked Lord Ram to bring the golden deer to her as she wished to keep it as a pet. Lord Ram went behind the 'golden deer' to catch it, but it ran away. So the Lord went deep into the forest pursuing it. Observing that it is not possible to catch the deer alive, the Lord shot an arrow to kill it so that its skin can be used as a seating mat. When Lord Ram killed the demon Marich, the latter gave out a shrill cry, loud enough to be heard at the hermitage. When Sita heard it, she got alarmed, thinking that the Lord was within harms way. So she sent Laxman to go and help the Lord.

Meanwhile, finding Sita alone in the hermitage, Ravana came to her disguised as a mendicant, asking for alms. As soon as Sita stepped close to him to fulfill her religious duty of giving alms to a mendicant, Ravana grabbed her and scampered away to Lanka on his chariot as fast as he could drive it. We read about these developments below.]

रामस्तं प्राहिणोद्बाणं तेन विद्धः स राक्षसः । पपात धरणीपृष्ठे लक्ष्मणेति वदन्मुने ॥४८॥
तन्मत्वा रामचन्द्रस्य भाषितं जनकात्मजा । सद्यः प्रस्थापयामास रामं प्रति च लक्ष्मणम् ॥४९॥

rāmastaṁ prāhiṇodbāṇaṁ tena viddhaḥ sa rākṣasaḥ । papāta dharaṇīpṛṣṭhe lakṣmaṇeti vadanmune ॥48॥ tanmatvā rāmacandrasya bhāṣitaṁ janakātmajā ।

sadyaḥ prasthāpayāmāsa rāmaṁ prati ca lakṣmaṇam ||49||

[Lord Shiva said—] Oh sage (Narad)! Lord Ram aimed and shot an arrow at him (Marich, disguised as a golden deer). Being mortally wounded, he cried aloud ‘oh Laxman’ as he fell to the ground (48).

The daughter of Janak (Sita) thought that it was Lord Sri Ram calling out in distress, and she immediately sent Laxman in that direction (to help him) (49).

एतस्मिन्नन्तरे सोऽपि समागत्य दशाननः । जहार जानकीं लक्ष्मीदेव्या मूर्त्यन्तरं बलात् ॥५०॥
तदैव भस्मसात्कर्तुं समर्थापि सुरेश्वरी । नाकरोत्प्रार्थिता यस्माद्देवीरूपेण सा सदा ॥५१॥ etasminnantare so'pi samāgatya daśānanaḥ ।

jahāra jānakīm lakṣmīdevyā mūrtyantaram balāt ||50||

tadaiva bhasmasātkartuṁ samarthāpi sureśvarī ।

nākarotprārthitā yasmāddevīrūpeṇa sā sadā ||51||

Meanwhile, the 10-headed one (Ravana) came there and forcibly kidnapped Janki (Sita) who was actually an incarnation of Goddess Laxmi (the divine consort of Lord Vishnu, the second God of the Trinity) (50).

Though that great Goddess was capable of reducing him to ashes then and there if she so wished, but she refrained from doing so because Ravana always worshipped her in her another divine form as a Goddess (Jagdamba, the Universal Mother Goddess, also known as Katyayani) (51).

रक्षसा नीयमानां तां जटायुः पक्षिपुङ्गवः । त्रातुकामोऽकरोद्युद्धं रावणेन दुरात्मना ॥५२॥
स तस्य पक्षौ छित्त्वा तां बलाद्राक्षसपुङ्गवः । गृहीत्वा प्रययौ लङ्कां रात्रौ देवर्षिसत्तम ॥५३॥ rakṣasā nīyamānām tām jaṭāyuh pakṣipuṅgavaḥ ।

trātukāmo'karodyuddham rāvaṇena durātmanā ||52||

sa tasya pakṣau chittvā tām balādrākṣasapuṅgavaḥ ।

grhītvā prayayau laṅkāṁ rātrau devarṣisattama ||53||

Jatau, the king of birds and the most respected amongst them¹, intervened. He was very angry, and he fought bravely and courageously with the wicked and sinful Ravana in order to protect and retrieve Sita who was being forcibly taken away by him (52).

Oh the most exalted sage of the gods (i.e. Narad)! However, that fellow, who was the best in the race of demons (i.e. Ravana), cut-off his (Jatau's) wings (to immobilise him)², and took away Sita stealthily to Lanka during the night (53).

[Note—¹Jatau was a vulture of gigantic size. On his way to Panchavati, the part of the forest from where Sita was abducted, Lord Ram had befriended him. Then Jatau had promised the Lord that he would try his best that was within his means to protect him and his companions, i.e. his wife Sita and brother Laxman. Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 13; (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 1-8.

²Ravana chopped-off the wings of Jatau, which made the latter fall down on the ground, gravely wounded and bleeding profusely. With the giant bird out of his way, Ravana drove his chariot towards Lanka as fast as he could through the night sky.]

अशोककानने रम्ये स्थापयामास तां सतीम् । न धर्षितुमभूच्छक्तो ज्वलदग्निसमप्रभाम् ॥५४॥
एवं भगवती देवी भवकालं शुभप्रदा । स्वयं लङ्केश्वरी देवी ह्यन्तर्धातुं मनो दधे ॥५५॥ aśokakānane ramye sthāpayāmāsa tām satīm । na dharṣitumabhūcchakto jvaladagnisamaprabhām ॥54॥ evaṁ bhagavatī devī bhavakālaṁ śubhapradā । svayaṁ laṅkeśvarī devī hyantardhātuṁ mano dadhe ॥55॥

He kept the Sati¹ (i.e. Sita) in the charming Ashok grove. He failed to exert influence or use force on her because she was radiant and fierce like raging fire² (54).

After that, the patron Goddess of Lanka called Lankeshwari— whose presence had made Ravana and Lanka invincible— decided to abandon the city (as she was disgusted and fed-up with Ravana).¹ (55).

[Note—¹The word “Sati” refers to a married woman who is chaste, virtuous, righteous, faithful and loyal to her husband.

²Ravana could not use force upon Sita because she was a ‘Sati’, a lady who possessed immense spiritual and mystical powers that come naturally to a woman who is exemplarily chaste, virtuous and righteous. Just as one gets burnt if one touches a raging fire, Ravana would recoil in terror if he ever dared to get too close to her with malefic intentions of trying to outrage her modesty.

At the time of her abduction his priority was simply to kidnap her and escape from the site as fast as he could lest Lord Ram and Laxman returned and slayed him on the spot. In such a situation he was too mentally worried and scared for his own physical safety to have the time for being passionate and lustful. But once Sita was securely in his custody, Ravana may have tried to use some force on her. So whenever he came close to her with evil intentions, he had to recoil in horror just like a man would do if he puts his finger in the flame of a raging fire.]

{Thus ends Canto 38 describing the story of Lord Sri Ram till the time of Sita’s abduction by Ravana and her incarceration at Lanka.}

Section 11.2: Devi Puran Mahabhagwat Ramayan, Canto 39, verse nos. 1-42:-

[This Canto narrates that Lord Ram lamented for Sita and began his search for her, how then he made Sugriv his friend, how Hanuman crosses the ocean, reaches Lanka, meets Sita, requests the patron Goddess to abandon the city, burns Lanka, returns to Kishkindha with the news of Sita, and how Vibhishan came to seek refuge with Lord Ram.]

श्री महादेव उवाच

रामस्तु हत्वा मारीचं लक्ष्मणेन समन्वितः । आगत्य पर्णशालायां नापश्यत्तत्र जानकीम् ॥१॥
बभ्राम कानने तत्र रुदन् सीतामनुस्मरन् । तत्र दृष्ट्वा पतङ्गेशं जटायुं छिन्नपक्षतिम् ॥२॥
सीतापहारिणं मत्वा हन्तुकामोऽन्तिकं ययौ । ततस्तमपि विज्ञाय सखायं पितुरात्मनः ॥३॥

śrī mahādeva uvāca

rāmastu hatvā mārīcaṁ lakṣmaṇena samanvitaḥ । āgatya parṇaśālāyāṁ nāpaśyattatra jānakīm ॥1॥ babhrāma kānane tatra rudam sītāmanusmaran । tatra dr̥ṣṭvā pataṅgeśaṁ jaṭāyuraṁ chinnaṣṭim ॥2॥ sītāpahāriṇaṁ matvā hantukāmo'ntikaṁ yayau । tatastamapi vijñāya sakhāyaṁ piturātmanaḥ ॥3॥

Lord Shiva continued with his narrative and said to Narad— 'After slaying Marich, when Lord Sri Ram came back to his thatched dwelling, he didn't find Sita there. Being extremely dismayed and overwhelmed by sorrows and anguish, he distressfully started wandering aimlessly in the forest, very fondly remembering Sita and frantically searching for her. Seeing the king of birds named Jatau (lying wounded on the ground) with wings cut-off (2), the Lord (wrongly) thought that the mighty bird might be the one who had kidnapped her (Sita). So he went near him (Jatau) to kill him to avenge Sita's abduction. There, he found out that Jatau was actually a friend of his father, king Dashrath (3).

न प्राहिणोच्छरं तत्र रामः सत्यपराक्रमः । ततः स उक्त्वा रामाय रावणेन हृतां प्रियाम् ॥४॥ परित्यज्य दिवं प्रायात्प्राणान् रामस्य पश्यतः । ततस्तमपि दग्ध्वा च कानने तत्र राघवः ॥५॥

na prāhiṇoccharaṁ tatra rāmaḥ satyaparākramaḥ । tataḥ sa uktvā rāmāya rāvaṇena hṛtāṁ priyām ॥4॥ parityajya divaṁ prāyātprāṇān rāmasya paśyataḥ । tatastamapi dagdhvā ca kānane tatra rāghavaḥ ॥5॥

As soon as Lord Ram, who was a most truthful, steadfast, righteous, principled and valiant warrior, realized this fact (that Jatau was his father's friend, and therefore couldn't have abducted Sita), he immediately restrained himself and did not shoot the arrow as intended. Then, Jatau told Lord Ram about the abduction of his beloved Sita by Ravana (4).

Then, being mortally wounded, he (Jatau) died immediately while Lord Sri Ram watched him ascending to the heaven.

Thereafter, Raghav (Lord Ram) himself performed Jatau's last rites in the forest (as his next-of-kin because Jatau was his father Dashrath's friend) (5).

हत्वा कबन्धं प्रययावृष्यमूकं महामते । यत्र वालीभयादास्ते सुग्रीवः सूर्यनन्दनः ॥६॥
हनुमत्प्रमुखैर्वीरैश्चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिसत्तमैः । तत्र सख्यं स कृत्वा तु सुग्रीवेण महात्मना ॥७॥
निहत्य समरे वीरं वालिनं भीमविक्रमम् । राज्याभिषेचनं चक्रे सुग्रीवस्य महामते ॥८॥ hatvā kabandham prayayāvṛṣyamūkaṁ mahāmate । yatra vālībhayādāste sugrīvaḥ sūryanandanah ॥6॥ hanumatpramukhairvīraiściturbhirmantrisattamaiḥ । tatra sakhyaṁ sa kṛtvā tu sugrīveṇa mahātmanā ॥7॥ nihatya samare vīraṁ vāliṁ bhīmavikramam । rājyābhiṣecanaṁ cakre sugrīvasya mahāmate ॥8॥

Oh the wise one (Narad)! After killing the demon Kabandh¹, both the brothers reached Mt. Rishyamook where the Sun God's son Sugriv (6) stayed along with his four chief ministers, of whom Hanuman was one. Sugriv lived there due to the fear of his brother Baali². There, he (Lord Ram) befriended the great soul named Sugriv (7).

Oh the wise one (Narad)! Then he (Lord Ram) killed the extremely valiant, strong, fearless and powerful Baali, the elder brother of Sugriv, in battle, and then anointed the latter (Sugriv) on the throne (of Kishkindha)³ (8).

[Note—¹Kabandha was a demon who was like a giant octopus. His body consisted of his abdomen which had large holes for eyes, nose, ears and mouth, and long protuberances to represent hands. Lord Ram was confronted by Kabandha as he moved ahead in the direction of Lanka as indicated by Jatau.

²Baali had threatened to kill his younger brother Sugriv due to some grave misunderstanding between them. The cause of this animosity is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-13 that precede Doha no. 6.

³When Sugriv told his story of woes to Lord Ram, the latter felt that injustice had been done to the former. The Lord motivated Sugriv to go and settle his accounts with Baali, promising to him that in case things go wrong he personally would protect him. In the ensuing duel between the two brothers, Baali was killed.]

ततो व्यतीत्य वर्षा स स्थित्वा माल्यवति प्रभुः । आनाय्य वानरं सैन्यं विपुलं मुनिसत्तम ॥९॥
सीतान्वेषणकार्यार्थं दूतान् प्रास्थापयद्भुवि । चतुर्दिक्षु ययुस्तेऽपि सीतान्वेषणतत्पराः ॥१०॥

tato vyatītya varṣāṁ sa sthitvā mālyavati prabhuḥ । ānāyya vānaraṁ sainyaṁ vipulaṁ munisattama ॥9॥ sītānveṣaṇakāryārthaṁ dūtān prāsthāpayadbhuvi । caturdikṣu yayuste'pi sītānveṣaṇatatparāḥ ॥10॥

Oh the most exalted sage (Narad)! After the rainy season, Sugriv summoned the vast army of monkeys (and bears) on the Malyawan Mountain where Lord Ram had been staying during the intervening period (9).

Then he sent messengers in all the four direction of the earth in search of Sita. Those messengers went to search for her everywhere (10).

तत्र याता दिशं यामीं हनूमदङ्गदादयः । जाम्बवत्प्रमुखाश्चापि महाबलपराक्रमाः ॥११॥
 ते सम्पातिमुखाच्छ्रुत्वा सविशेषं महामते । समुद्रलङ्घनायाशु मन्त्रयामासुरेव हि ॥१२॥ tatra yātā diśaṁ yāmīṁ hanūmadaṅgadādayaḥ । jāmbavatpramukhāścāpi mahābalaparākramāḥ ॥11॥ te sampātimukhācchrutvā saviśeṣaṁ mahāmate । samudralaṅghanāyāśu mantrayāmāsureva hi ॥12॥

Those who were most famous, strong, courageous, brave and powerful amongst the monkeys and bears, such as Hanuman, Angad and Jamvant etc., went in the south direction (11).

Oh wise sage (Narad)! They heard everything in detail (about the place where Sita was incarcerated at Lanka) from the mouth of Sampati (the brother of Jatau), and discussed how to cross the ocean¹ (12).

[Note—¹The full episode is narrated in (a) Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 29; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Kishkindha Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 29-56.]

अथर्क्षधिपतेर्वाक्याद्धनुमान्भीमविक्रमः । उल्लङ्घ्य सागरं घोरं शतयोजनविस्तृतम् ॥१३॥
 सायं प्रविश्य लङ्कायां रात्रौ च व्यचरत्पुरीम् । अन्वेषयन्नकजां सप्तरात्राणि मारुतिः ॥१४॥
 अशोकवनिकामध्ये तां ददर्श शुभाननाम् । ततश्चिकीर्षुरत्यन्तं दुष्करं कर्म मारुतिः ॥१५॥ atharkṣādhipatervākyāddhanumānbhīmavikramaḥ । ullāṅghya sāgaram ghoram śatayojanavistṛtam ॥13॥ sāyam praviśya laṅkāyāṁ rātrau ca vyacaratpurīm । anveṣayañjanakajāṁ saptarātrāṇi mārutiḥ ॥14॥ aśokavanikāmadhye tāṁ dadarśa śubhānanām ।

tatścikīrṣuratyantam duṣkaram karma mārutiḥ ||15||

Then on the advice of Jamvant, the most valiant, brave, strong and courageous Hanuman leapt across the ocean which was one hundred Yojans wide (i.e. appx. 800 miles wide) (13), entered Lanka during the evening hours, and roamed around the city during the night in search of Janaki (Sita). The son of the wind god spent seven consecutive nights searching for her (14).

Then finally he saw the most auspicious Sita in the centre of the Ashok grove. Maruti (Hanuman) decided that he will accomplish the most difficult and a very daunting task which was at hand (no matter what comes) (15).

सस्मार पूर्ववृत्तान्तं देव्या युद्धं कृतं पुरा । तत आरुह्य वृक्षाग्रं देव्या मन्दिरमद्भुतम् ॥१६॥
दिदृक्षुर्दिक्षु सर्वत्र स दृष्टिं प्राहिणोत्तदा । तथापश्यत्स ऐशान्यां मन्दिरं सुमनोहरम् ॥१७॥

sasmāra pūrvavṛttāntam devyā yuddham kṛtam purā ।
tata āruhya vṛkṣāgrm devyā mandiramadbhutam ||16||
didṛkṣurdikṣu sarvatra sa dṛṣṭim prāhiṇottadā ।
tathāpaśyatsa aiśānyām mandiram sumanoharam ||17||

He recalled an earlier episode when the Mother Goddess had prophesized about the war, saying that the end of the wicked Ravana would come when he would abduct Sita and Lord Ram would launch a campaign to free her from his captivity. Then Ravana and his cruel demon race would be eliminated by the Lord in the ensuing war¹.

He then climbed atop a tall tree and looked in all the directions in order to have a good bird's eye-view of the majestic temple of the Goddess. He then saw a beautiful shrine in the east (16-17).

[Note—¹This episode is narrated in detail in 'Devi Puran Mahabagwat Ramayan', Canto 36, verse nos. 56-76.

The question arises 'how did Hanuman know about this episode?' Well, Lord Shiva has eleven forms, one of which is known as 'Rudra', meaning the Lord's angry form. It is believed that Hanuman was a manifestation of this Rudra aspect of Shiva which is the latter's eleventh form. See verse no. 24 herein below.

When Mother Goddess was advising Lord Vishnu to come down to earth in the form of Lord Ram, and bring his divine consort goddess Laxmi with him in the form of Sita, at that time Lords Shiva and Brahma were both present along with the other gods and mother earth.]

मणिमाणिक्यरचितं शुद्धहेमपरिष्कृतम् । सिंहध्वजं च तस्याग्रे दृष्ट्वा पवननन्दनः ॥१८॥
चकार निश्चयं देव्या मन्दिरं चैतदेव हि । ततस्तन्मन्दिरद्वारं गत्वाऽपश्यत्सुरेश्वरीम् ॥१९॥ maṇimāṇikyaracitam śuddhahemapariṣkṛtam ।

siṁhadhvajaṁ ca tasyāgre dṛṣṭvā pavananandanāḥ ||18||
 cakāra nīscayaṁ devyā mandiraṁ caitadeva hi |
 tatastanmandiradvāraṁ gatvā'paśyatsureśvarīm ||19||

The gold plated, beautiful, charming, auspicious and clean shrine was studded with glittering gems and priceless jewels. There was a 'Singha-dhwaj (siṁhadhvajaṁ)¹' on it. Seeing it, the son of the wind God (Hanuman) (18) determined that it was the temple of the Goddess. He went to the main door of the temple and had a divine glimpse of Goddess Sureshwari ("sureśvarīm")² there (19).

[Note—¹The "siṁhadhvajaṁ" is a high ceremonial standard or flag bearing the mark of the patron deity worshipped in a shrine. In this case it was the patron goddess of the kingdom of demons.

²The word "sureśvarīm" means the Goddess of the Gods; the Mother Goddess.]

नृत्यन्तीं प्रहसन्तीं च सहितां योगिनीगणैः । तां प्रणम्य महादेवीं प्रावृत्य पवनात्मजः ॥२०॥ उवाच त्रिजगद्वन्द्यां भक्त्या परमया युतः ॥२१॥

nṛtyantīm prahasantīm ca sahitām yoginīgāṇaiḥ |
 tām praṇamya mahādevīm prāvṛtya pavanātmajaḥ ||20||
 uvāca trijagadvandyām bhaktyā paramayā yutaḥ ||21||

She was merrily dancing in the shrine along with her companions called Yoginis. The son of the wind god (Hanuman) went around the Goddess to pay his respects to her, and then bowed before her (20).

Then he most humbly said to the Goddess who is worshipped by the three worlds (as she is the 'Mother Goddess')— (21).

हनुमानुवाच

देवी प्रसीद विश्वेशि रामस्यानुचरोऽस्म्यहम् । अन्वेष्टुं जानकीं लक्ष्मीं लङ्कायां समुपागतः ॥२२॥
 त्वयैव प्रेरितो विष्णुर्मनुजत्वमुपागमत् । वधार्थं राक्षसेन्द्रस्य रावणस्य दुरात्मनः ॥२३॥

hanumānuvāca

devī prasīda viśveśi rāmasyānucaro'smyaham |
 anveṣṭuṁ jānakīm lakṣmīm laṅkāyām samupāgataḥ ||22||
 tvayaiva prerito viṣṇurmanujatvamupāgamat |
 vadhārthaṁ rākṣasendrasya rāvaṇasya durātmanaḥ ||23||

Hanuman said— 'Oh divine Goddess! Oh Mistress and Goddess of the whole world! Be pleased with me. I am a humble servant (messenger) of Lord Sri Ram, and I have come to Lanka searching for Janki who is an incarnate Laxmi herself. [Lord Ram is an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, and Sita of goddess Laxmi.] (22).

It is on your inspiration that Lord Vishnu has manifested himself as Lord Sri Ram with the express purpose of killing the tyrannical, the wicked, the cruel, the sinful and the evil king of demons named Ravana¹ (23).

[Note—¹Refer 'Devi Puran Mahabagwat Ramayan, Canto 36, verse nos. 61-76. The reason was that Ravana had unleashed a reign of terror and mayhem in the world, undermining all the laws of righteous behaviour, probity and propriety collectively known as Dharma, and upturning the Supreme Being's cart of the 'rule of law' that granted peace and joy and liberty and safety for all living beings.]

शिवोऽहमपि सम्भूय वानरोऽत्र समागतः । कर्तुं रामस्य साहाय्यं तवाज्ञावशतः शिवे ॥२४॥
 त्वयैवैतत्पुरा प्रोक्तं लङ्कायामागते त्वयि । संत्यज्य नगरीमेनां प्रस्थास्ये स्वनिवेशनम् ॥२५॥
 तस्मात्त्यज पुरीमेनां रावणं सुदुरासदम् । पातयस्व महादेवी रक्ष विश्वं चराचरम् ॥२६॥ śivo'hamapi sambhūya vānaro'tra samāgataḥ । kartuṁ rāmasya sāhāyyaṁ tavājñāvaśataḥ śive ॥24॥ tvayaivaitatpurā proktaṁ laṅkāyāmāgate tvayi । saṁtyajya nagarīmenāṁ prasthāsye svaniveśanam ॥25॥ tasmā'ttyaja purīmenāṁ rāvaṇaṁ sudurāsadam । pātayasva mahādevī rakṣa viśvaṁ carācaram ॥26॥

Oh Shive (the divine goddess who is the consort of Lord Shiva; she is known by various names, one of which is Parvati, and the other is Uma)¹! I (Hanuman) myself am Shiva (śivo'hamapi), and I have manifested myself as a monkey on your advice and orders in order to help Lord Sri Ram on this earth (24).

You had earlier said that when I come to Lanka, you will leave the city and go to your divine abode (at Mt. Kailash, the abode of Lord Shiva) (25).

So, oh the great Goddess, you must leave this city forthwith, help in destroying that formidable Ravana, and protect the entire animate as well as the inanimate world (which is being tormented and tyrannized by him).² (26).

[Note—¹Lord Shiva is known as 'Mahadeva', the 'Great God', and his divine consort is therefore the 'Great Goddess', or the 'Maha-Devi'. It was this Goddess that Ravana used to worship; he was also a great devotee of Lord Shiva.

²These facts are narrated in 'Devi Puran Mahabagwat Ramayan', Canto 36, verse nos. 64-66, 88-89, and Canto 37, verse no. 8.]

सीतावमानेनापि रुष्टाहं वानरर्षभ । लङ्कात्यागमतिं पूर्वमकार्षं पुरुषर्षभ ॥२७॥
 त्वद्वक्यापेक्षयाद्यापि स्थिताहं रावणालये । त्यजाम्येतां पुरीं लङ्कां त्वयोक्ता कपिपुङ्गव ॥२८॥

śrī devyuvāca

sītāvamānanenāpi ruṣṭāhaṁ vānararṣabha । laṅkātyāgamatiṁ pūrvamakārṣaṁ puruṣarṣabha ॥27॥ tvadvakyāpekṣayādyāpi sthitāhaṁ rāvaṇālaye । tyajāmyetāṁ purīm laṅkāṁ tvayoktā kapipuṅgava ॥28॥

The Goddess replied— 'Oh the best amongst monkeys (vānararṣabha)! I am very angry, extremely peeved and exasperated at the way Ravana has insulted Sita. Oh the best amongst males (puruṣarṣabha)! I have already decided to abandon Lanka¹ (27).

Oh the most exalted monkey (kapipuṅgava)! I have been staying here waiting for the moment when I would meet you and shall hear this request from you (to abandon Lanka and go back to my abode in Mt. Kailash). Now as per your wishes therefore, I am abandoning Lanka forthwith.' (28).

[Note—¹The Mother Goddess had been tolerating Ravana's mischief for quite some time. But her tolerance reached a limit when he kidnapped Sita, who was herself an incarnation of goddess Laxmi, the divine consort of Lord Vishnu. Laxmi herself was one of the many forms of Mother Goddess. So by insulting Sita, Ravana had unwittingly insulted the Mother Goddess whom he used to worship. This was unacceptable, so the Goddess decided to leave his kingdom for good.]

श्री महादेव उवाच

इत्युक्त्वा सा महादेवी लङ्कां त्यक्त्वा महेश्वरी । अन्तर्दधे मुनिश्रेष्ठ सहसा तस्य पश्यतः ॥२९॥
 ततो बभञ्ज गहनं राक्षसेन्द्रेण पालितम् । अशोकवृक्षसंघातं मारुतिः क्रोधमूर्च्छितः ॥३०॥

śrī mahādeva uvāca

ityuktvā sā mahādevī laṅkāṁ tyaktvā maheśvarī । antardadhe muniśreṣṭha sahasā tasya paśyataḥ ॥29॥ tato babhañja gahanaṁ rākṣasendreṇa pālitaṁ । aśokavṛkṣasaṁghātaṁ mārutiḥ krodhamūkhracchataḥ ॥30॥

Shiva said to Narad— 'Oh the best amongst sages (muniśreṣṭha)! Saying this, the great Goddess Maheshwari (literally, the divine consort of Lord Mahesh, i.e. Shiva) vanished from sight immediately even while Hanuman watched (29).

Then, being extremely angry and furious so much that he literally fainted with anger, Maruti (Hanuman; the son of the wind god known as 'Marut') wrathfully destroyed the Ashok grove that was very dear to Ravana and well looked after by him (30).

तच्छ्रुत्वा रावणः क्रोधाद्राक्षसान्सुबहूंस्तदा । अक्षाहं तनयं चापि प्रेषयामास नारद ॥३१॥
तं जघान महाबाहुर्हनुमान् सुमहाबलः । वृक्षैराताड्य समरे स्वयमुत्पाटितैर्बलात् ॥३२॥ tacchrutvā rāvaṇaḥ krodhādrākṣasānsubahūmstadā । akṣāhnaṁ tanayaṁ cāpi preṣayāmāsa nārada ॥31॥ taṁ jaghāna mahābāhurhanumān sumahābalaḥ । vṛkṣairātāḍya samare svayamutpāṭitairbalāt ॥32॥

Oh Narad! When the news reached Ravana, he was annoyed beyond measure, and so he angrily sent his son named Akshay along with many other demons (31).

In the ensuing duel, Hanuman, who was extremely strong, brave, courageous and powerful, uprooted trees and killed him (Akshay) with them¹ (32).

[Note—¹As soon as news reached Ravana that an unknown intruder in the form of a monkey is ruining his favourite garden, the Ashok grove, he dispatched his valiant son Akshay Kumar with his troops to control the situation. Akshay rushed to the scene and challenged Hanuman. In the free-for-all uproarious fracas that followed, Hanuman uprooted huge trees to use them as a baton, and swinging them wildly he bashed Akshay Kumar violently with them, resulting in his death.]

ततो विरूपं तं कर्तुं रावणो राक्षसाधिपः । लाङ्गूलं वाससा बद्ध्वा दत्त्वा वह्निं स दीपयत् ॥३३॥
ततः स मारुतिर्वीरो वह्निना तेन नारद । लङ्कां दग्ध्वा समुल्लङ्घ्य पुनस्तं सरितां पतिम् ॥३४॥ tato virūpaṁ taṁ kartuṁ rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ । lāṅgūlaṁ vāsasā baddhvā dattvā vahnim sa dīpayat ॥33॥ tataḥ sa mārutirvīro vahninā tena nārada । laṅkāṁ dagdhvā samullaṅghya punastaṁ saritāṁ patim ॥34॥

Thereafter, the king of demons, Ravana, got his (Hanuman's) tail wrapped in cloth and put fire to it in order to punish and deform him¹ (33).

Oh Narad! The most brave Maruti (Hanuman) burnt down Lanka with that ferociously raging fire, and then crossed the ocean (literally, the Lord of rivers—“saritām patim”) and came back to this side of the shore (where other monkeys were waiting eagerly for him) (34).

[Note—¹It will be noted that this version of the Ramayan is extremely brief inasmuch as it tells the story in the form of an outline, touching only on the main events and omitting the details. It does not, for example, tell us here ‘how Hanuman was caught after he had killed Akshay Kumar and brought to the court of Ravana where the latter ordered his tail to be wrapped in oil-soaked cloth and set ablaze’.

Well, after Akshay was killed, Ravana sent his other valiant son named Meghnad who caught Hanuman after a pitched battle when he shot the latter with an arrow provided to him by the creator Brahma and then tied him with a magical snare consisting of serpents. Then Meghnad brought Hanuman as a captive to his father Ravana's presence. This was followed by a heated and acrimonious oral spat between Ravana and Hanuman following which Ravana ordered his soldiers to set Hanuman's tail on fire in order to punish him as well as to deform him so that when he goes back to the Lord who had sent him (i.e. Sri Ram) the latter would be sternly rebuffed and hinted of the consequences of attacking Lanka.

All these developments are narrated earlier in our Book in Chapter no. 7. {More specifically, refer to (a) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 19—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 26; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 89-199, and Canto 4, verse nos. 1-46.}

सत्प्राप तीरं यत्रैव सन्ति तेऽप्यङ्गदादयः । ततश्च समुपागम्य जाम्बवत्प्रमुखैर्वृतः ॥३५॥
 भुक्त्वा मधुवनं राज्ञो ययौ रामस्य सन्निधिम् । तं दृष्ट्वा रामचन्द्रस्तु दूरतो मुनिसत्तम ॥३६॥
 पप्रच्छ जानकीं चाथ हनुमांस्तुष्टमानसः । ततः सर्वं यथावृत्तं राघवाय न्यवेदयत् ॥३७॥ satprāpa tīraṁ yatraiva santi te'pyaṅgadādayaḥ । tataśca samupāgamyā jāmbavatpramukhairvṛtaḥ ॥35॥ bhuktvā madhuvanaṁ rājño yayau rāmasya sannidhim । taṁ dṛṣṭvā rāmacandrastu dūrato munisattama ॥36॥ papraccha jānakīṁ cātha hanumāṁstusṭmānasaḥ । tataḥ sarvaṁ yathāvṛttaṁ rāghavāya nyavedayat ॥37॥

Here, on this side of the ocean, Angad, Jamvant and other brave warriors were present (35).

He (Hanuman) refreshed himself by playing and eating in the 'garden of honey' called Madhuvan that belonged to their king (Sugriv). Then, accompanied by all other messengers, he presented himself before Lord Sri Ram.

Oh the most exalted sage (Narad—"munisattama")! Lord Ram saw him approaching from a distance (36) and asked about his meeting with Janki (Sita). Then Hanuman cheerfully told him everything as it had happened (37).

ततः स राघवश्चापि समस्तैर्वानरैर्वृतः । दशम्यां शुक्लपक्षस्य श्रावणे मासि निर्ययौ ॥३८॥
 वधार्थं राक्षसेन्द्रस्य रावणस्य महामते । स्थितः परिवृतः सर्वैः ससैन्यैर्वानरर्षभैः ॥३९॥ tataḥ sa rāghavaścāpi samastairvānarairvṛtaḥ । daśamyāṁ śuklapakṣasya śrāvaṇe māsi nirayayau ॥38॥ vadhārthaṁ rākṣasendrasya rāvaṇasya mahāmate ।

sthitāḥ parivṛtāḥ sarvaiḥ sasainyairvānararṣabhaiḥ ॥39॥

Then on the 10th day of the bright lunar fortnight in the Hindu month of Shrawan (roughly late July-early August), Lord Sri Ram made his departure (for Lanka) along with all other monkeys (38).

Oh the wise one (Narad; “mahāmate”)! Lord Ram, together with the excellent and brave monkey army, pitched camp on the shore of the ocean with the objective of slaying Ravana, the king of demons (as promised by Lord Vishnu to the gods earlier¹) (39).

[Note—¹Refer: ‘Devi Puran Mahabagwat Ramayan’, Canto 36, verse nos. 48-55.]

एतस्मिन्नैव काले तु रावणो राक्षसाधिपः । आहूय मन्त्रिणः सर्वान्मन्त्राय समुपाविशत् ॥४०॥
तत्रोवाच महाबुद्धिः सर्वमन्त्रविदां वरः । विभीषणो दशास्यं तु वारयन् सर्वतो रणे ॥४१॥ etasminnaiva kāle tu rāvaṇo rākṣasādhipaḥ । āhūya mantriṇaḥ sarvānmantrāya samupāviśat ॥40॥ tatrovāca mahābuddhiḥ sarvamantravidāṁ varaḥ । vibhīṣaṇo daśāsyaṁ tu vārayan sarvato raṇe ॥41॥

Meanwhile, Ravana called all his ministers to a meeting to discuss the matter (which by now had assumed a grave proportion and a serious dimension) (40).

There, Vibhishan—who was an expert in the laws of proper conduct, propriety, probity and good behaviour, and was also very wise, sagacious, prudent and intelligent (mahābuddhiḥ sarvamantravidāṁ varaḥ)—tried all the methods he could think of to dissuade the 10-headed one (Ravana) from going to war (which would be ruinous for the whole of the demon race) (41).

सीतां त्यक्तुं मुहुः प्राह राघवस्य पराक्रमम् । तच्छ्रुत्वा रावणः क्रुद्धस्तं पदास्ताडयन्मुने ॥४२॥
ततः क्रुद्ध स्वयं धर्मस्वरूपोऽयं विभीषणः । चतुर्भिर्मन्त्रिभिः प्रायाद्रामचन्द्रस्य सन्निधिम् ॥४३॥

sītāṁ tyaktuṁ muhuḥ prāha rāghavasya parākramam । tacchrutvā rāvaṇaḥ kruddhastam padā'tāḍayanmune ॥42॥ tataḥ kruddha svayaṁ dharmasvarūpo'yaṁ vibhīṣaṇaḥ । caturbhirmantribhiḥ prāyādrāmacandrasya sannidhim ॥43॥

He (Vibhishan) described the immense glory, the majestic powers, the famed valour and the stupendous prowess and strength of Raghav (Lord Sri Ram), and advised him (Ravana) that Sita should be sent back to the Lord.

Hearing this, Ravana became furious with anger (as he did not like the idea of his younger brother Vibhishan heaping praises on his arch enemy, Lord Ram).

Oh sage (Narad)! Ravana was so extremely annoyed with Vibhishan that he kicked him disgustedly (in full court) (42).

After that, Vibhishan—who was like Dharma (the virtues of righteousness, probity, propriety, noble and virtuous conduct) personified (dharmasvarūpo'yaṁ bibhīṣaṇaḥ)—became very exasperated and angry himself¹, and accompanied by four of his ministers (or advisors), he came to Lord Sri Ram Chandra (to join him and seek his refuge).¹ (43).

[Note—¹Vibhishan was advising something which would ensure that the destructive war could be avoided and the demon race could be saved from annihilation. It was his moral duty to give good advice to his elder brother Ravana even if it sounded like his praising Ravana's enemy. But Ravana did not like this advice as he mistook it for Vibhishan's cowardice and disloyalty. He accused his younger brother of treason and kicked him out of the court. Thus humiliated and shown the door in such a rough manner, Vibhishan decided that it is not good for him to stay for one more minute in Lanka as there was always the chance that Ravana would order his demon soldiers to arrest Vibhishan and throw him in a dungeon. So Vibhishan immediately took four trusted aides and escaped from Lanka to come and join Lord Ram's camp where he was cordially received by the Lord.

This episode is narrated in great detail in (a) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 40—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 50; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 1-46, and Canto 3, verse nos. 1-16, 34-48.]

Section 11.3: Devi Puran Mahabhogwat Ramayan, Canto 40, verse nos. 1-12:-

In this Section no. 11.3 we read briefly about the construction of the bridge across the mighty ocean, and the landing of Lord Ram's formidable army on the soil of Lanka.

श्री महादेव उवाच

विभीषणमशेषेण ज्ञात्वा तु शरणार्थिनम् । सख्यं कृत्वा महाबाहुर्लङ्कारज्येऽभ्यषेचयत् ॥१॥
ततस्तितीर्षुर्जलधिं रामस्तं वानराधिपम् । सुग्रीवं वचनं प्राह जिज्ञासुर्बलविक्रमम् ॥२॥

śrī mahādeva uvāca

vibhīṣaṇamaśeṣeṇa jñātvā tu śaraṇārthinaṁ । sakhyaṁ kṛtvā mahābāhurlaṅkārajye'bhyaṣecayat ॥1॥ tatastitīrṣurjaladhiṁ rāmastaṁ vānarādhipam । sugrīvaṁ vacanaṁ prāha jijñāsurbalavikramam ॥2॥

Lord Shiva said to Narad— 'Seeing that Vibhishan has come with a sincere intention to seek refuge and succour with him, he (Lord Sri Ram) established a cordial and friendly relationship with him.

The Lord (Sri Ram) who has strong and sturdy arms (i.e. the Lord is capable of protecting those who come to seek refuge with him; “mahābāhu”) anointed Vibhishan to the throne of Lanka in a symbolic way (by putting a ‘Tilak Mark’¹ on his forehead after a brief formal ceremony on the shore of the ocean) (1).

Then, with the intention of crossing the ocean, Sri Ram enquired of Sugriv about the potentials of his army (2).

[Note—¹According to Hindu tradition, when a king is put on the throne of a kingdom for the first time, a ritual is held in which a ‘Mark’ is made on his forehead using a scented paste made of many auspicious materials such as sandalwood etc. in a formal ceremony. Then some consecrated water is sprinkled on his body amidst chanting of sacred verses. In this case the ceremony was brief, and the formality was fulfilled by sprinkling the water of the ocean, and the Tilak Mark was made using a paste made from sand mixed with water.

Even though it was not an elaborate ceremony but it served its purpose. Lord Ram in effect declared that after winning the war of Lanka, he would make Vibhishan its next king. This was a clever and wise act on the part of Lord Ram because now Vibhishan would certainly be loyal to him as he knew that his future lay in Lord Ram winning the war, and not otherwise, for if Ravana did not lose the war and was not killed, Vibhishan would have a dark future; he’d probably be killed himself or be imprisoned for life.]

स आह भगवंस्त्वं तु मा चिन्ता कर्तुमर्हसि । समुद्रं शोषयिष्यामि सेतुं चोत्पाद्य भूधरान् ॥३॥ रचयिष्ये महासिन्धौ तेन पारं गमिष्यसि । तच्छ्रुत्वा सम्प्रहृष्टात्मा रामः सत्यपराक्रमः ॥४॥ sa āha bhagavaṁstvaṁ tu mā cintā kartumarhasi । samudraṁ śoṣayisyāmi setuṁ cotpātyā bhūdharān ॥3॥ racayisye mahāsindhau tena pāraṁ gamisyasi । tacchrutvā samprahṛṣṭātmā rāmaḥ satyaparākramaḥ ॥4॥

He (Sugriv) replied— 'Oh Lord! You must not worry in this regard. We will dry up (conquer or tame) the ocean by uprooting mountains and constructing a bridge across it. We will throw huge mountains (i.e. huge boulders and rocks as large as hills) in the ocean and create an artificial dam across it. We shall hammer these mountains and trees into place and walk across this rough structure (3). You can then easily get across the great ocean on top of it.'

The truly powerful and valiant Lord Sri Ram felt extremely glad when he heard it (4).

चक्रे जलनिधिं घोरं स्वयंस्वीकृतबन्धनम् । ततः सुग्रीववचनादुत्पाद्योत्पाद्य भूधरान् ॥५॥
रचयामास जलधौ सेतुं मयसुतो नलः । आरभ्य पौर्णमास्यां तु श्रावण्यां मुनिसत्तम ॥६॥ यामद्वयेनैव सेतुं सागरे वानरर्षभः । बबन्ध मुनिशार्दूल सर्वलोकसुदुष्करम् ॥७॥ cakre jalanidhiṁ ghoram svayaṁsvīkṛtabandhanam । tataḥ sugrīvavacanādutpāṭyotpāṭya bhūdharān ॥5॥ racayāmāsa jaladhau setuṁ mayasuto nalaḥ । ārabhya paurṇamāsyāṁ tu śrāvaṇyāṁ munisattama ॥6॥ yāmadvayenavai setuṁ sāgare vānararṣabhaḥ । babandha muniśārdūla sarvalokasuduṣkaram ॥7॥

Lord Ram created such a situation that the ordinarily fierce and uncompromising ocean had to relent and submit itself to the Lord's wishes by willingly accepting to be tied (or 'bridged')¹.

Thereafter, on the instructions of Sugriv, huge mountains were uprooted and dumped in the ocean (5) by Nala, the son of Maye. Thus was created (constructed) the marvelous bridge.

Oh the great sage who is the most exalted in the community of sages (i.e. Narad; "munisattama; muniśārdūla")! The construction of this fabulous bridge was started on the full moon day of the month of Shrawan (roughly late July-early August; "ārabhya paurṇamāsyāṁ tu śrāvaṇyāṁ") (6), and that great and expert monkey named Nala completed it in (a record period of) two Prahars (i.e. approximately 6 hours; 1 Prahar = 3 hours) between sunrise and sunset (yāmadvayenavai setuṁ sāgare --- babandha).

Oh the most superior amongst sages (Narad)! This feat was impossible for anyone to accomplish, and even thinking of it was unimaginable in the whole world (sarvalokasuduṣkaram) (7).

[Note—¹Why the ocean surrendered before Lord Ram and agreed to be tied with a bridge across it has been elaborately explained earlier in our Book in Chapter no. 10. {More specifically, refer to: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 57—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 60; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 60-87.}]

ततस्तु रावणः श्रुत्वा सेतुबन्धं महाम्बुधौ । भयं मोहं च सम्प्राप्य चकम्पे च मुहुर्मुहुः ॥८॥
 ततः परिवृतो रामो वानरैश्च महाबलैः । कोटिलक्षैर्महाबाहुलक्ष्मणेन समन्वितः ॥९॥ त्रयोदश्यां तु कृष्णायां लङ्कां प्राप महामते । वेष्टिता वानरैर्लङ्का समन्ताद्भीमविक्रमैः ॥१०॥

tatastu rāvaṇaḥ śrutvā setubandhaṁ mahāmbudhau । bhayaṁ mohaṁ ca samprāpya cakampe ca muhurmuḥuḥ ॥8॥ tataḥ parivṛto rāmo vānaraiśca mahābalaiḥ । koṭīlakṣairmahābhūlakṣmaṇena samanvitaḥ ॥9॥ trayodaśyāṁ tu kṛṣṇāyāṁ laṅkāṁ prāpa mahāmate । veṣṭitā vānarairlaṅkā samantādbhīmavikramaiḥ ॥10॥

When Ravana heard about the taming of the ocean by the construction of the bridge across it, he became extremely alarmed, astonished and terrified so much so that he repeatedly shivered and trembled with fear (8).

Meanwhile, surrounded by millions of monkeys and accompanied by Laxman (his brother) (9), Lord Ram reached Lanka on the 13th day of the waning phase of the moon (“trayodaśyām tu kṛṣṇāyām laṅkāṁ prāpa”)¹.

Oh great sage! The most courageous and brave monkeys besieged Lanka from all the sides (10).

[Note—¹We have read in verse no. 7 herein above that the construction of the bridge was started on the ‘day of the full moon’, and now we read that the Lord and his army landed on the ‘thirteenth day after the full moon’. So it obviously means that the time lapse between the start of the construction of the bridge and Lord Ram actually setting foot on Lanka was of thirteen days. It was during this time that he worshipped Lord Shiva as well as the Goddess for success in his endeavour to vanquish Ravana and defeat the demons.]

जले स्थले च प्राकारे वृक्षेषु गृहमध्यतः । चत्वरेषु गोपुरेषु वनेषूपवनेषु च ॥११॥
नासीद्वानरशून्यं तु स्थलं किञ्चिन्महामते । ततो युयुत्सुर्भगवान् चिन्तयामास चेतसा ॥१२॥

jale sthale ca prākāre vṛkṣeṣu gr̥hamadhyataḥ । catvareṣu gopureṣu vaneṣūpavaneṣu ca ॥11॥ nāsīdvānaraśūnyaṁ tu sthalaṁ kiñcinmahāmate । tato yuyutsurbhagavān cintayāmāsa cetasā ॥12॥

In the water and on the land, on the ramparts, the trees and the houses, in the public squares, at the entrances and the gates, in the gardens, groves and forests (11) — there was not a single place where one could not find the monkeys (and bears)¹.

Oh the wise one (Narad)! Then the Lord (i.e. Sri Ram) thought of starting the war (12).

[Note—¹To wit, the huge army of monkeys and bears invaded the city of Lanka and swamped the place, roaming around it freely. The war had yet not commenced, but the demons were so scared out of their wits that none dared to oppose or resist the monkeys who had a free run of the place.]

-----**-----

An interesting thing is to be remarked at this point of our Story. The form of Lord Ram passing through the region of Kishkindha and then fighting the war of Lanka is known by the name of ‘Kodand Ram’. In the next section no. 11.4 we shall examine it closely, and see what it means and what its significance is, as well as its relationship with the other form of Lord Ram that is known as ‘Sarang Pani Ram’.

Section 11.4:

‘Kodand Ram’ and ‘Sarang Pani Ram’

Upon close examination of the divine Story of Lord Ram as narrated in Goswami Tulsidas’ classic epic ‘Ram Charit Manas’, we come across two forms of Lord Ram—one is known as ‘Kodand Ram’, and the other as ‘Sarang Pani Ram’.

Both these two forms pertain to Lord Ram, but with a wee whit of subtle difference. These two names are assigned to the Lord by the virtue of the ‘Bow’ that he holds in his hand. The ‘Kodand Bow’ is the name of the bow that Lord Ram normally holds, while the ‘Sarang Bow’ is the one that is held by Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, and is exclusive to him.

The word ‘Kodand’ always refers to the bow of Lord Ram; and therefore, ‘Kodand Ram’ is that form of Lord Ram who held this bow. The word ‘Kodand’ has two parts—viz. Ko and Danda. While ‘Ko’ may refer to ‘who’ or ‘whom’, ‘Danda’ clearly means punishment or use of force to enforce a rule.

The word ‘Sarang’ refers always to the bow held by Lord Vishnu, and therefore it follows that by saying that Lord Ram too held this bow in his hand, i.e. assigning the name of ‘Sarang Pani Ram’ to the Lord, it is clearly meant that Lord Ram is no one else but Lord Vishnu himself in his form. The word ‘Pani’ means to hold something in one’s hand.

It must be remembered that Lord Vishnu had promised the gods and mother earth that he would come down to the mortal world in the form of Lord Ram to eliminate the terror of the sinful Ravana and his cruel demon race who had run madly amok in this world, unleashing a reign of cruelty, tyranny, dread and horror all around, tormenting and traumatizing every single humble creature. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede Doha no. 187.}

So, Lord Ram was fulfilling this promise. In order to do it, he had to use force against the demons and their king Ravana, and it had to be force that not only matched that of the opponents, but even surpass it in its dynamics and energy so as to effectively overcome and neutralize it. Therefore, the bow which Lord Ram used to vanquish Ravana and his cruel demons was no ordinary bow; it was a special bow endowed with unique qualities and powers.

Now, let us read briefly about the origin of these two bows—the Kodand and the Sarang. In ancient scriptures the story goes that during the legendary War of the Gods in some ancient time in the past, said to be the Sata-yuga, the first of the 4-era period of one cycle of creation and destruction of this creation according to Hindu mythology, a huge castor-oil tree was produced. It measured approximately 25 feet. Out of the stem of this tree, Vishwakarma, the chief engineer of the gods, devised the following ‘bows’ when asked to do so by the gods: one bow of 9 feet length for Lord Vishnu which was called Sarang, one bow of 7 feet length for Lord Shiva which was called Pinak, one bow of 5 feet length for Lord Ram which was called Kodand (or Kodanda), one bow of 3 feet length for Arjun of the Pandava race, and it was called Gandiva, and the remaining part of the tree, measuring 1 foot, was used to make the flute of Lord Krishna which was called Vanshi.

Since Lord Ram was a visible manifestation in this physical world of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, who has a cosmic form that is invisible, it follows that the form of the Supreme Lord as Lord Ram holding a bow was addressed by two interchangeable names, viz. he was called ‘Kodand Ram’ because he held the Kodand bow especially made for him by Vishwakarma, while at the same time he was also called ‘Sarang Pani Ram’, i.e. Lord Ram who holds the Sarang bow of Lord Vishnu in his hand, as this Sarang bow was specifically made for Lord Vishnu.

To wit, the term ‘Kodand Ram’, or Lord Ram with the Kodand bow, refers to the human form of Lord Vishnu as Ram, while an occasional reference to the ‘Sarang bow’ is employed to remind the reader not to forget that Lord Ram is not an ordinary prince of Ayodhya, but the Supreme Lord Vishnu himself in that form.

In fact, the term ‘Kodand Ram’ is used to indicate how fierce the Lord would be for those who try to disrupt peace and order in the Lord’s creation. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 91.}

This form of Lord Ram known as the ‘Kodand Ram’—i.e. Lord Ram with the Kodand bow—refers to the Lord’s divine form while he was on his way through the wild forests to eliminate the scourge of the demons living in Lanka and led by their cruel king Ravana. This form is worshipped especially in the south of India, i.e. through the territory where Lord Ram passed en-route to Lanka; this area covered the ancient region known as Kishkindha, the kingdom of the monkey race, and in modern age it is the region covered by the states of Karnataka and Tamil Nadu. The inhabitants of this geographical area mentioned herein above recognized this fact that their land had been made holy and pure and sanctified by Lord Ram in his individual capacity as the Supreme Being who is free from all attachments and delusions that are associated with Maya—because Sita, who represented the Lord’s ‘Maya’, did not accompany Lord Ram during this phase of Lord’s life; and so Lord Ram represented the absolutely pure and holy form of the Supreme Being.

During the period when he was alone and single in the forest, Lord Ram symbolized the Supreme Being, the Parmatma, in his purest and holiest form, a form that had no grossness or attachments that are normally associated with worldly existence. Indeed, the Lord known as ‘Kodand Ram’ was like a true ascetic, a hermit roaming in the forest; it was the Lord’s truly holy form. Besides this fact, he was on a divine mission on behalf of the gods and mother earth—which was to eliminate the scourge of the evil demons. Hence, the Kodand Ram is the form of Lord Ram where the Lord is getting ready to fulfill his divine mission of eliminating the tyranny of the demons—the mission for which the Supreme Being, Lord Vishnu, had come down to earth in the human form known as Lord Ram.

But should one forget that this form of Lord Ram is none else but Lord Vishnu himself in that form, and also to quell confusion and doubts about the Lord having two bows at the same time, something which seems impractical, it is mentioned in Ram Charit Manas that these two terms, i.e. the Kodand bow and the Sarang bow, are used synonymously and interchangeably when applied to the bow of Lord Ram at a point of time when he is stepping out on the battle-field to fight and deliver Ravana. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 and Chanda line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 86.}

There are other instances also that show that the two forms of Lord Ram—i.e. the ‘Kodand Ram’ and the ‘Sarang Pani Ram’—are one and the same. So we see that while normally Lord Ram’s bow was referred to as the ‘Kodand bow’, but when the time came for the Lord to slay the two great demons, Kumbhakaran and Ravana, the term ‘Sarang bow’ is used for the Lord’s bow. This is to indicate that it was actually Lord Vishnu in the form of Lord Ram who was fulfilling his words given to the gods and mother earth that he would himself eliminate the sinful demons. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 68 with reference to Kumbhakaran; and (ii) Chanda line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 86 with reference to Ravana.}

It is important to note at this juncture that Lord Ram has always held a 'bow' in his hand, so what was so special about him during the phase of his life after Sita's abduction and till her recovery at the end of the war of Lanka that he is especially honoured and worshipped by his devotees as a 'Kodand Ram'?

Well, the answer is simple and straight: this form of 'Lord Ram holding the Kodand bow' symbolizes the Lord's determination to punish those who are sinful and evil by nature, and to provide protection, solace and succour to all those who rely upon the Lord; it is indicative of the Lord's firm resolution not to allow evil and wild forces to have their way, and torment and cause trouble to those who are good, noble, righteous and pious.

While Lord Ram was passing through the kingdom of Kishkindha he was not accompanied by Sita, as she had already been stolen away by Ravana by this time. Sita represented 'Maya', the secret power of Brahm represented by Mother Nature's ability to create delusions and attachments to this world. With Sita by his side, Lord Ram was accompanied by this Maya; her sight would make him believe that he was a human being who had a wife named Sita. This interfered, no matter how subtly and silently, with the Lord's divine mandate to eliminate the scourge of the demons who were evil, sinful, pervert and tormentors of the world and its creatures, the primary purpose for which Lord Vishnu had come down to earth in Lord Ram's form. But when the Lord was free from this encumbrance of a wife accompanying him, he was also freed of its attendant delusions and attachments, becoming more conscious and diligent towards accomplishment of his real mission in the world.

Hence, once Lord Ram embarked on the final leg of his mission to eliminate the evil forces symbolized by the demons, and passed through the region of Kishkindha, he became famous as 'Kodand Ram', i.e. the Ram who holds the Kodand bow, ready to punish those who were vile, mischievous, evil, sinful and tormentors of other humble creatures of the Lord's creation.

In this form as Kodand Ram, he is also free from 'Maya', as Sita was not with him. The Lord is in the form of a wandering hermit, an ascetic, a sage walking through the forest towards his goal, towards his destination, which in the case of Lord Ram was to free the world from the horrors of the demons led by Ravana, to grant the unfortunate souls of the demons freedom from the cycle of birth and death, to help their souls leave their evil bodies and attain eternal liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation—all of which fits in perfectly with the concept of someone who is free from Maya, someone who is a true ascetic or hermit. It is because only such a person would be able to overcome and vanquish all the negativities, perversions, sins, vices and evils that are associated with this gross mortal world of material attractions, and at the same time aim to attain final freedom for his soul from the cycle of birth and death in which it had been hitherto trapped, to free his 'self', represented by his pure conscious Atma, from the fetters of his gross physical body, to help his Atma attain salvation and emancipation that would grant him eternal beatitude and bliss.

It was a form that was truer and more nearer to Lord Ram's primary and essential form as the supreme Brahm, the Supreme Being and the cosmic Consciousness that is represented by Lord Vishnu at the macrocosmic level of existence.

Hence, the 'Kodand' form of Lord Ram is holy, pure and divine; it is worthy of worship, adoration and devotion; it is an image of an illustrious sage, an ascetic or a hermit who is free from delusions and worldly attachments, one who is focused on the holy mission of his life rather than being distracted by any of the effects of Maya.

Since Lord Ram traveled through the region of Kishkindha in his form known as ‘Kodand Ram’, he is worshipped and adored in this form in the southern regions of modern India, i.e. Karnataka and Tamil Nadu, that cover the geographical area known as the ancient kingdom of Kishkindha.

Now, one pertinent query is this: On what occasions did Lord Ram employ the ‘Kodand bow’, and on which the ‘Sarang bow’?

The answer is this: When Lord Ram had to eliminate the senior demons, such as the demon king Ravana and his brother Kumbhakaran, the Lord had employed the Sarang bow, and he had used his normal bow known as the Kodand bow to eliminate the junior demons, such as demon commanders Khar, Dushan and Subahu, as well as the demon army. There is ample proof of this in Ram Charit Manas where the term ‘Sarang bow’ is used only when the Lord has stepped out to fight Kumbhakaran and Ravana*, while during the rest of the war a reference is made only to a ‘bow’, which obviously means the ‘Kodand bow’ as it was Lord Ram’s personal bow. {*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 68—this is reference to Lord Ram stepping out to fight Kumbhakaran; (ii) Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 86, Chanda line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 86, and Doha no. 96—this is reference to Lord Ram stepping out to slay Ravana.}

The other query is also important: How, when and from whom did Lord Ram get these two bows?

The answer is this: The Lord was given the ‘Kodand bow’ by sage Vishwamitra when he was accompanying the sage to his hermitage to protect his fire sacrifice from being defiled by the demons, and the ‘Sarang bow’ was given to him by sage Parashuram during the ceremony of the Lord’s marriage with Sita at Janakpur.

Briefly, the story related to these two events is as follows:-

When Lord Ram had slayed the demoness Tadka who came to attack sage Vishwamitra, the sage realized the true nature of the Lord, because it was not possible to kill this giant demoness so easily. So in order to help Lord Ram to fulfill his mission of eliminating the demons and free the world of their terror, the sage gifted divine weapons to the Lord, and a bow is definitely an important part of a weapon system that was used in those times as it was the tool by which arrows could be shot by way of missiles that are launched to hit at the enemy. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 209.}

The bow of Lord Vishnu, known as Sarang, on the other hand was handed over to Lord Ram by sage Parashuram at the venue of the Lord’s marriage ceremony in Janakpur. It so happened that sage Parashuram was very angry when Lord Ram had broken the old bow of Lord Shiva, known as Pinak, to fulfill the vow of king Janak, Sita’s father, that he would marry his daughter to anyone who could lift and break the bow. It was because sage Parashuram worshipped Lord Shiva, and he felt that breaking of the bow had insulted his deity. A heated argument followed, and inspite of all his threats and angry outbursts to punish Lord Ram the sage failed to even raise his arms against the Lord. This stunned Parashuram as he had a reputation of being merciless and unforgiving, and once he decided to punish someone, no one could dare to save his victim. So, the sage was mightily astonished at his inability to harm either Lord Ram or his younger brother Laxman. Surely, he thought when he calmed down a bit, that there must be more to Lord Ram than what meets the eye; he had a subtle feeling that Lord Ram was not an ordinary prince but an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. To test his hunch, the sage gave the Lord the ‘bow of Lord Vishnu’, i.e. the Sarang bow, and to his amazement he observed that this bow went on its own to Lord Ram, who received it easily. This miraculous event confirmed to sage Parashuram that Lord Ram was no one else but Lord Vishnu himself in this form. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 284 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede it.}

That said, let us now have a quick glance at the verses that refer to these two forms of the Lord's bow—the 'Kodand bow' and the 'Sarang bow'—as follows:

(a) कटितट परिकर कस्यो निषंगा । कर कोदंड कठिन सारंगा ॥ १० ॥ kaṭitaṭa parikara kasyō niṣaṅgā. kara kōdaṇḍa kaṭhina sārāṅgā. 10.

He (Lord Ram) fastened his quiver to a length of cloth tied around his waist, and held his formidable Kodand bow, also known as the legendary bow known as Sarang, in his hand (as he stepped on the battle-field to face the demon king Ravana and his ferocious demon army). (10)

[Note—Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 86—this is reference to Lord Ram stepping out to slay Ravana. Here is clearly meant that the two terms 'Sarang' and 'Kodand' refer to the same bow.]

(b) छं०. भए क्रुद्ध जुद्ध बिरुद्ध रघुपति त्रोन सायककसमसे । १ ।

कोदंड धुनि अति चंड सुनि मनुजाद सब मारुत ग्रसे ॥ २ ॥

chanda.

bha'ē krud'dha jud'dha birud'dha raghupati trōna sāyaka kasamasē. 1.
kōdaṇḍa dhuni ati caṇḍa suni manujāda saba māruta grasē. 2.

When Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram, the Lord of Raghu's line of great kings of Ayodhya) became highly enraged with the enemy in the battle-field (of Lanka), the arrows in his quiver became restless and vied with each other to shoot forth at the enemy, while the fierce and hair-raising formidable twang of the Lord's Kodand bow instilled so much terror in the man-eating demons that they were seized with horror and became mortally pale with fear.

[Note—Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 91. This verse shows how fierce Lord Ram would be in order to overcome evil and sinful creatures.]

(c) चौ०. कर सारंग साजि कटि भाथा । अरि दल दलन चले रघुनाथा ॥ १ ॥

प्रथम कीन्हि प्रभु धनुष टँकोरा । रिपु दल बधिर भयउ सुनि सोरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kara sārāṅga sāji kaṭi bhāthā. ari dala dalana calē raghunāthā. 1.
prathama kīnhi prabhu dhanuṣa ṭaṁkōrā. ripu dala badhira bhaya'u suni sōrā.

2.

Arming himself with his famous bow known as ‘Sarang’ that he held in his hand, and a quiver full of arrows that was tied to his waist, Lord Raghunath (i.e. Lord Ram) went forward to tackle the enemy (Kumbhakaran) and his army. (1)

The Lord first twanged his mighty bow so loudly that it produced a thunderous sound which had the effect of deafening the enemy hordes. (2)

[Note—Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 68—this is reference to Lord Ram stepping out to fight Kumbhakaran.]

(d) छं०. सारंग कर सुंदर निषंग सिलीमुखाकर कटि कस्यो । १ ।

chanda.

sāraṅga kara sundara niṣaṅga silīmukhākara kaṭi kasyō. 1.

The Lord (Sri Ram) held the formidable Sarang bow in his hand, and he tied a quiver, with an inexhaustible stock of arrows, to a band of cloth wrapped around his waist. Both the bow and the quiver looked magnificent on the body of the Lord.

[Note—Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chanda line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 86—this is reference to Lord Ram stepping out to fight with Ravana. He has invoked his ‘Sarang bow’.]

(e) दो०. सुर बानर देखे बिकल हँस्यो कोसलाधीस ।

सजि सारंग एक सर हते सकल दससीस ॥ ९६ ॥

dōhā.

sura bānara dēkhē bikala haṁsyō kōsalādhīsa.
saji sāraṅga ēka sara hatē sakala dasasīsa. 96.

[In the advanced stages of the epic war, Ravana unleashed his famed potentials of spreading terror and mayhem in his opponents, and uncorked the genie of his dreaded wrath upon them all, the monkey army on the ground as well as the gods who were witnessing the war and cheering the army of Lord Ram from their station in the sky. A fearful atmosphere of dread and horror spread in all the directions; Ravana employed his ability to create horrifying illusions to strike terror in the rank and file of his enemy by making it appear that there was not one but countless Ravanases who were full of wrath and vengeance running everywhere in the battle-field, all over the place, pouncing on the monkeys and bears on the ground, and chasing the gods in the sky, all simultaneously. This caused a massive stampede.]

When Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal, observed this alarming situation—that the monkeys on the ground and the gods in the sky were very agitated and panicky because of Ravana’s excessive aggressiveness and his use of tricks that created fearful illusions of countless Ravanases attacking them simultaneously from all the sides, spreading utter dread and terror in all directions—the Lord readied his Sarang bow and shot one arrow which at once cut-off the illusion of there being so many Ravanaas attacking the monkeys and gods, providing instant relief to them all.

To wit, Lord Ram invoked his cosmic form of Lord Vishnu and used his Sarang bow to shoot an arrow that removed this illusion (of numerous Ravanaas attacking everyone from all sides instantaneously) with a snap. This dispelled the fear of everyone in an instant, as suddenly only one Ravana, the original demon king, was left on the battle-field, while all the illusionary Ravanaas vanished from sight. This sudden change in the situation for good led both the monkey and bear warriors on the battle-field and the gods in heaven rejoice and celebrate. {Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 96.}

-----**-----

NOTE: Till now we have read that Lord Ram has crossed the ocean and landed on the soil of Lanka with his formidable and invincible army of brave and valiant monkeys and bears. The Lord had pitched his camp on Mt. Subel.

The next part of this fabulous Story is continued below:

Part 4

Introduction:

In Part 4 of this Book, we read about the following episodes:-

(A) Prelude to the Sacking of Lanka: This is divided into two Chapters as follows—

Chapter 12: Ravana's wife Mandodari's many attempts to avoid the war by trying to make her husband abandon his stubbornness, heed sane advice and come to terms with reality. This Chapter further has the following Sections—

- Section 11.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 11.2 Adhyatma Ramayan
- Section 11.3 Geetawali Ramayan
- Section 11.4 Kavitawali Ramayan

Chapter 13: War Parleys in both the camps of Lord Ram and Ravana; Lord Ram sends Angad as an Emissary of Peace to avoid the Destructive War. This Chapter has the following Sections—

- Section 12.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 12.2 Adhyatma Ramayan
- Section 12.3 Geetawali Ramayan
- Section 12.4 Kavitawali Ramayan

(B) The War Begins: The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces and the Horrors of War; The Sack of Lanka; Death of Kumbhakaran and Meghanad; Battle with Ravana and His Death. These episodes are narrated in the following five Chapters—

Chapter 14: The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces; The Horrifying and Blood-Curdling War between the Demons and the Army of Monkeys and Bears; The Sack of Lanka and the Ravages of War. This Chapter has the following Sections—

- Section 14.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 14.2 Adhyatma Ramayan
- Section 14.3 Geetawali Ramayan
- Section 14.4 Kavitawali Ramayan

Chapter 15: Laxman's fainting during the battle. This Chapter has the following Sections—

- Section 14.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 14.2 Adhyatma Ramayan
- Section 14.3 Geetawali Ramayan
- Section 14.4 Kavitawali Ramayan

Chapter 16: Battle with Kumbhakaran and His Death. This Chapter has the following Sections—

- Section 16.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 16.2 Adhyatma Ramayan

Chapter 17: Battle with Meghnad and His Death. This Chapter has the following Sections—

- Section 17.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 17.2 Adhyatma Ramayan

Chapter 18: The Final Battle with Ravana and His Death. This Chapter has the following Sections—

- Section 18.1 Ram Charit Manas
- Section 18.2 Adhyatma Ramayan

Now, let us commence reading.

Prelude to the Sacking of Lanka

Chapter 12

Ravana's wife Mandodari's many attempts to avoid the war by trying to make her husband abandon his stubbornness, heed sane advice and come to terms with reality.

Ravana's faithful wife named Mandodari was totally confounded and aghast at her husband's negative attitude, his stubbornness and his reckless actions. Why, she wondered, was he being so arrogant and unrelenting inspite of being warned repeatedly about the perils and the disastrous consequences of his wildness? Why can't he read the so-called writing on the wall symbolized by so many is clear and unambiguous signs which all point to complete ruin and calamitous end that stares in his face like the dark clouds of dooms-day destruction looming menacingly on the horizon of Lanka? Couldn't he see what is certainly coming after Hanuman had burnt the city of Lanka right under his nose? Why doesn't he realize the gravity of the situation and comes to term with reality?

Therefore, Mandodari berated Ravana and made several attempts to try to persuade him to end his bellicose behaviour and hostility towards Lord Ram, and instead make peace with him. She tried her best to dissuade him from being instrumental in the annihilation of the demon race.

She had made four attempts in all. The first such attempt was made after Hanuman had burned Lanka and killed Akshayakumar (pronounced as "Akshay Kumar") with his army. We have already read it in our Book in the previous Chapter no. 9, section no. 9.1. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37.}

Her other three attempts to diffuse the situation and avoid the bloody war were made after Lord Ram and his formidable army of ferocious monkey and bear warriors have finally landed on the soil of Lanka. The first of these three attempts was made immediately after this news arrived. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8.}

The second such attempt was made soon thereafter, after Ravana's crown and other paraphernalia of kinghood of the demon race were made to fall by an arrow shot by Lord Ram from his camp on Mt. Subel. The Lord had shot them to warn Ravana that it was still time to make amends. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 16 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.}

The third and the final attempt by Mandodari was after Lord Ram's emissary Angad had rebuked and humiliated Ravana in full court. Angad too had tried his best to persuade Ravana to give Sita back to Lord Ram and avoid a calamitous war, but the demon king wouldn't listen. After Angad had left, warning Ravana that Death seems to be hungry and wished to devour him which seems to be the apparent reason why he is not listening to anybody, Mandodari was filled with consternation, felt sore affright, and was extremely worried about the fate of her husband. So she made another attempt to persuade Ravana to abandon his madness and make peace with Lord Ram by sending his wife Sita back to him to end the confrontation. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 35 (b)—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38.}

But Mandodari's all attempts failed. She finally realized that it was the fiat of fate and the writ of destiny that the end of her husband had finally arrived, and so therefore it was futile to make him change his mind. So she gave up.

In the following Section nos. 12.1.1—12.1.3 we shall read how Mandodari tried to persuade Ravana to end his confrontational attitude towards Lord Ram and make peace with him on three occasions.

Even a causal reading of these verses would make it abundantly clear that Mandodari had lavishly praised Lord Ram in front of her husband. To praise someone who is her husband's enemy, and that too on her husband's face without fearing for her life, and without inviting severe punishment for her audacity to do so, shows how much Ravana loved her and how much secretly he knew that she was speaking the truth. He appreciated this quality in her—that she could muster courage to tell him what was in his best of interests even if the truth was unpalatable and unpleasant to hear for him. An ordinary husband would have taken his wife to severe task for praising another person before him, but not Ravana. It once again proves that though on the outside Ravana appeared to be a wild and an intolerant person, but internally he was very compromising and understanding.

He knew that his life had been spent in wickedness, so if a chance came by which his soul could be freed from his evil body and attain deliverance he must grab it with both hands. And this chance has now come, for now he would be killed by Lord Ram whom he had rightly guessed to be an incarnation of the Supreme Being. So he determined in his heart and mind that he would not budge an inch from his determination to get killed by Lord Ram. Say, what more honourable death can a brave warrior have than to die in the battle-field without showing his back to his enemy? Why then should Ravana surrender?

The conversation between Mandodari and Ravana can be interpreted in another way also. Mandodari espouses the path of Bhakti (devotion); this is the reason why she insists her husband Ravana to surrender before Lord Ram, whom she knows to be a manifestation of the Supreme Being, and worship the Lord. She is of the view that by doing this her husband, who has led a life so pervert and full of sinfulness that all chances of him ever finding rest for his soul are beyond his reach, would at last now be easily able to attain eternal peace and happiness by surrendering to Lord Ram and worshipping him. This simple method would enable him to find deliverance, emancipation and salvation for himself and his soul. He ought to be thankful to Lord Ram that he has taken the trouble to come to his very doorstep to provide him an opportunity to find beatitude and felicity for his soul. This in essence is Mandodari's view.

Ravana too knows fully well that Lord Ram is a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, and surely not a human being. He is of the view that the only way his soul—which is trapped inside his sinful body of a demon, a body which has become so thick and hardened with layers and layers of accumulated sins, pervert practices and evil deeds done over a long period of time that it has made very hard for his soul to break free from inside it—can find its liberation and deliverance only when this body is killed, or should we say it is ruptured or slit into two or perforated by being cut or pierced by Lord Ram's arrows. When that happens, the soul would be able to move out of the body, and escape from the trap to find its freedom.

In this scenario, his soul, better known as the Atma which is pure consciousness and a living being's 'true self', would be able to find eternity by merging with the supreme Soul or the supreme Atma known as the Parmatma which is represented by Lord Ram. Ravana's wishes were fulfilled because at the time of death his Atma emerged from his body, which was perforated by a hail of arrows shot by Lord Ram, and entered the holy body of the Lord, symbolizing the merger of the individual's soul, a person's Atma, with the cosmic Soul or the supreme Atma that is known as the 'Parmatma' represented by Lord Ram. This is the ultimate exalted destiny of the Atma, a destiny known as 'Moksha', as it grants eternity and beatitude to the Atma which is henceforth freed from the cycle of transmigration.

So in brief we can say that Ravana's approach was based on 'Gyan', a path which implies truthful knowledge and enlightenment that comes with a thorough understanding of the philosophy of the Upanishads and their metaphysical teachings regarding an Atma and what its ultimate destiny is, what true liberation and deliverance implies, and how a soul can find its eternal peace, bliss, beatitude and felicity.

To wit, whereas Mandodari prefers the path of 'Bhakti', Ravana likes to follow the path of 'Gyan'.

Section 12.1: Ram Charit Manas

This Section no. 12.1 is divided into three Sub-sections to narrate Mandodari's pleadings with Ravana:

(i) Sub-section 12.1.1 = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8.

(ii) Sub-section 12.1.2 = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 16 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.

(iii) Sub-section 12.1.3 = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 35 (b)—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38.

(i) Sub-section 12.1.1 = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8:-

चौ०. निज बिकलता बिचारि बहोरी । बिहँसि गयउ गृह करि भय भोरी ॥ १ ॥

मंदोदरीं सुन्यो प्रभु आयो । कौतुकीं पाथोधि बंधायो ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

nija bikalatā bicāri bahōrī. bihañsi gaya'u gṛha kari bhaya bhōrī. 1.
mandōdarīm sun'yō prabhu āyō. kautukahīm pāthōdhi bañdhāyō. 2.

[We have read earlier, at the end of Chapter 10, section 10.1.2, that Ravana was utterly confounded and extremely worried when he came to know of Lord Ram landing on the soil of Lanka with his huge and formidable army of brave and fearless monkey-and-bear warriors. This news took him by surprise as he had not dreamt about it even in his wildest of dreams that it was ever possible for anyone to cross the mighty ocean.

As his secret fear of annihilation and complete destruction reared its ghostly and dreaded head inside his heart, leaving Ravana shaken to the core, he decided to retire from the court to take a break to recover from this initial shock. So he went to his royal palace to regain his composure. There he was confronted by his wife Mandodari who was equally shaken and worried. She had taken a decision that she would try her level best to make her husband see reason and come to terms with ground realities, instead of dreaming of living in a fool's paradise where everything was honey and sweet. All was not lost till this point of time, and now there was still a chance of controlling the damage without much further loss. Though time was running out but still it was not too late.

Therefore, when Ravana entered his royal chamber to recover his wits and get some time to reflect, Mandodari approached him with an urgent appeal to abandon a confrontational attitude with Lord Ram as there was no match between the Lord and her husband Ravana. To engage in a destructive war that loomed on the horizon was not at all justified on the part of her husband, especially when the fault was not of Lord Ram but entirely of Ravana himself. She advised her husband to return Sita to her husband, Lord Ram, as this simple action of his would not only save the entire demon clan from annihilation but would give him immense good fame as well.

But unfortunately, the fiat of Fate and the writ of Destiny wished something different for the demon race, and so Ravana, under the influence of these two powerful forces of creation, was so much deluded and made so stubborn that he refused to relent and budge from his position.]

When Ravana felt that he was feeling very restless, he dismissed the court, smiled as if to dispel his worries (and hide his embarrassment), and then retired to his palace.
(1)

Meanwhile, Mandodari (Ravana's wife) heard the news¹ that Lord Ram has finally arrived by tying or bridging the ocean as it was a mere sport for him. [To wit, Lord Ram had no difficulty in getting a bridge across the ocean constructed. It was almost like a sporting activity for him, requiring no great effort.] (2)

[Note—¹How did Mandodari hear the news? Well, the queens had their own loyal spies and confidantes who would keep her updated about the goings-on in the kingdom. Mandodari too had her own network of faithful spies and messengers who would keep her informed of all the developments in and around Lanka—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 36.]

कर गहि पतिहि भवन निज आनी । बोली परम मनोहर बानी ॥ ३ ॥

चरन नाइ सिरु अंचलु रोपा । सुनहु बचन पिय परिहरि कोपा ॥ ४ ॥

kara gahi patihi bhavana nija ānī. bōlī parama manōhara bānī. 3.
carana nā'i siru āncalu rōpā. sunahu bacana piya parihari kōpā. 4.

She received her husband at the gate of the palace, and holding his hands she brought him inside her own palace, speaking to him sweetly and in a polite way. (3)

Once inside, she respectfully bowed her head at his feet, and then spreading the end of her garment before him in a symbolic gesture of submission and as a token of her expecting him to fulfill her wishes, she pleaded, 'My dear husband! Please listen to my words without getting angry at me. [My Lord, abandon your anger and listen to what I have to say. It is for your own good, as well as mine.] (4)

नाथ बयरु कीजे ताही सों । बुधि बल सकिअ जीति जाही सों ॥ ५ ॥
तुम्हहि रघुपतिहि अंतर कैसा । खलु खद्योत दिनकरहि जैसा ॥ ६ ॥ nātha bayaru kījē tāhī sōṁ. budhi bala saki'a jīti jāhī sōṁ. 5.

tumhahi raghupatihi antara kaisā. khalu khadyōta dinakarahi jaisā. 6.

Oh Lord, one should be hostile towards and make an enemy with only such a person with whom one is very sure to win by the virtue of one's superior intellect as well as far better strength and abilities¹. (5)

Verily, the difference between you and Raghupati (Lord Ram, the Lord of the Raghu line of kings of Ayodhya) is akin to the difference between a glow-worm and the sun². (6)

[Note—¹To wit, it is an established maxim that one should be sure of his own strength and abilities, of one's own strengths and weaknesses before creating animosity with another person. Otherwise, it is a stupid thing for one to create hostility with someone who may later on prove to be a hard nut to crack and more than a match for the former. A careless action of dare devilry often leads to an embarrassing situation and loss of face, if not outright defeat and loss of whatever prestige and dignity that one possesses.

Two virtues are mentioned by Mandodari here—'intellect or intelligence' and 'strength and power'. These two qualities are needed to vanquish one's opponent and win a war. An intelligent and wise commander who has a strong and powerful army can easily out-manoeuvre the enemy and defeat him even if the latter is superior in terms of number of soldiers.

These qualities—of intelligence and wisdom on the one hand, and strength, power, skill and ability on the other hand—are essential to achieve success in an endeavour. Sursa, the mother of the serpents, who was sent by the gods to test Hanuman on these parameters while he was on his way to Lanka to search for Sita, also declared that since Hanuman did have these virtues he would definitely succeed in his mission—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 2.

Later on when Hanuman met Sita and wished to eat fruits from the trees in the Ashok garden because he was feeling very hungry, Sita too let him do so because she decided he is highly intelligent and strong enough to cope with any eventuality and protect himself—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 17.

²Here, Mandodari compares Lord Ram to the bright sun and her husband Ravana to the glow-worm. Just like the dim light of the glow-worm fades in comparison to the brilliant light of the sun, all the strength, powers, glories and virtues of Ravana taken together are dimmed when weighed against those of Lord Ram.

It ought to be noted here that the same analogy of a glow-worm vis-à-vis the sun to compare Ravana with Lord Ram was used by Sita when she rebuked the demon king for his attempt to force her to submission—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 9. It should also be noted that at that time Ravana had become furious with Sita, but when Mandodari now chides him with the same example he remained restrained. It is because he loved Mandodari dearly and knew that what she was saying was out of her concern for his own safety, while in the case of Sita it was a rebuke from a captive and an enemy's wife, which was unacceptable.

Another reason is that here Ravana and Mandodari are alone, while when he was talking to Sita in the Ashok grove there were so many demons and demonesses in attendance, a situation which made him furious because he felt that he was being insulted publicly in front of his own subordinates.]

अतिबल मधु कैटभ जेहिं मारे । महाबीर दितिसुत संघारे ॥ ७ ॥

जेहिं बलि बाँधि सहसभुज मारा । सोइ अवतरेउ हरन महि भारा ॥ ८ ॥ atibala madhu kaitabha jēhim mārē. mahābīra ditisuta saṅghārē. 7.

jēhim bali bāṁdhi sahasabhuja mārā. sō'i avatarē'u harana mahi bhārā. 8.

He (Lord Ram in his primary form as Lord Vishnu, the 2nd of the Trinity Gods and the protector and sustainer of creation; the cosmic form of the Supreme Being) is the one who had slayed the most powerful and strong demons named Madhu and Kaitav¹, as well as the great warriors who were the sons of Diti (i.e. the two demon brothers Hiranyakashipu² and Hiranyaksha³). (7)

He who had tied the legendary king of demons named Bali⁴, and had slayed Sahastrabahu⁵, he is the Lord who has now manifested himself as Lord Ram.

[To wit, my dear husband, be wary of Lord Ram. He is the same Lord who had killed so many powerful demons as listed here, demons who had considered themselves virtually invincible and un-conquerable during their time. They were all like you, may be stronger and more powerful. But they stood no chance against Lord Vishnu. So mind you—there is an alarm bell ringing and you ought to wake up before it's too late for you.] (8)

[Note—¹Madhu and Kaitav—According to the legendary story as narrated in Markandey Puran, the Vedas had been stolen by two demons named Madhu and Kaitav who had hidden them in the eastern ocean. Lord Vishnu had assumed the form of Hayagriva to kill them and restore the Vedas.

The legend about the birth of these two demons Madhu and Kaitav is that at the time Brahma the creator emerged atop a thousand-petal lotus that sprouted from the navel of Lord Vishnu, the Viraat Purush, two drops of water symbolising the two Gunas (qualities) of Raja and Tama (the medium and the lowest type of qualities) were present on one of the petals on which Brahma sat. Madhu was born from the drop of Raja Guna, and Kaitav from the drop of water representing Tama Guna.

Once they went up to the heaven and saw the Vedas in all their glorious form placed alongside Brahma who was engaged in the process of creation. The duo immediately stole the Vedas and hid them under the water of the eastern ocean. Brahma was confounded and requested Lord Vishnu to retrieve them as the Vedas were the former's eyes as they contained all the knowledge needed for all the aspects of creation. So Vishnu appeared as a deity with a head of a horse—i.e. as Hayagriva. The heaven was his head, the rays of the Sun were his glistening hairs, the sky and the underworld were his ears, the earth was his forehead, the river Ganges and Saraswati were the two halves of his chest, the oceans were his thighs, the Sun and the Moon were his eyes, dusk was his nostril, OM was his ornament, electric was his tongue, the Pittars (Spirits of dead ancestors) were his teeth, the Brahma Loka was his lip, and Kalratri (the night of the doomsday) was his neck.

The Lord entered the ocean and went to the ocean bed, the nether world called the 'Patal Loka'. There, he began to neigh melodiously, singing the hymns of the Sam Veda. The two demons were so enchanted by this singing that they came out to hear it. Lord Hayagriva got an opportunity and he immediately took the Vedas and gave them to Brahma. After their restoration, he went back to the ocean and lived there for some time.

When the demons reached the place from where they had heard the sweet singing emanating, they found no one. So they got suspicious and rushed back to where they had concealed the Vedas to find them missing. Then they began frantically to search for the Vedas as well as the miscreant who removed the scriptures from the hiding place. They reached the surface of the ocean and found Lord Vishnu peacefully reclined on the bedstead of the celestial serpent named Sheshnath. They assumed that certainly the Lord was the one who had taken away the Vedas. They shouted and caused so much raucous that Lord Vishnu woke up from his cosmic sleep, and then there ensued a battle between the Lord and the demons which lasted for five thousand years.

Pleased by their valour and ardour, Vishnu asked them to request for a grant of a boon. The haughty demons retorted and sneered at the Lord, asking the latter to ask for a boon instead. The Lord asked that they be killed at his hands. [Markandey Puran, 81/74.] Taken aback, the demons said that they were also entitled for a boon as promised by the Lord himself. The Lord granted them permission to ask, and they requested that they be killed at a place where the earth was not submerged in water. [Markandey Puran, 81/76.] Vishnu immediately spread his thighs on the surface of the ocean, and deluded by the Lord's Maya the demons thought that dry earth has emerged from the ocean. Aside of this, they also found in this happening a chance of their own salvation and so willingly put their heads on it. Vishnu invoked his Sudarshan Chakra (the sharp weapon of Vishnu which is like a circular saw) to chop off their heads. This episode is described in detail in the Markandey Puran, Chapter 81.

Perhaps this episode describes how the continents and islands came into being during the process of creation.

A slight variant of the above narration is available in the Mahabharat, Van Parva, Canto no. 203. According to it, the demons Madhu and Kaitav went to the Kshir Sagar, the celestial ocean of milk where Lord Vishnu was reclining on the coiled body of Seshnath, some time after Brahma, the creator of the physical world and the Vedas, was born atop a divine lotus that emerged from Lord Vishnu's navel. These two demons began to terrorize Brahma. The scared Brahma shook the stem of the lotus violently, and this stirred up Lord Vishnu from his sleep. The Lord saw the two great demons and was very impressed by them and their valour. Lord Vishnu asked the two demons to request for a boon which will be granted to them. The two demons were very haughty, and they sneered at Vishnu, saying that the latter should ask for a boon instead. They will grant Vishnu anything he wants.

Vishnu was extremely annoyed and taken aback at their temerity and arrogance. So he said that he wished to kill them—this is the boon he wants to be granted. The two demons replied that though they do not like giving this boon as this means their death, but they are true to their words, so Lord Vishnu could go ahead and kill them. But since Vishnu had asked them for a boon first, they also had a right to be granted what they wished. The first boon they wanted to be granted to them was that must die at a place where there is no water, and the second boon was that they wished to become sons of the Lord. So Lord Vishnu spread his thighs on which he placed the two demons and cut off their heads with his circular weapon known as the Sudarshan Chakra.

According to the version in Devi Bhagwat, 1/4/9, these two demons were killed at the intervention of goddess Mahakali, the divine Mother and the cosmic force that brings an end to this creation. She was invoked by Brahma when the demons began terrorizing him. She woke Vishnu from his deep sleep of meditation, and when even Vishnu couldn't kill these demons after a vicious battle, the goddess Mahakali used her powers of delusions to help Vishnu slay them.

There is another demon by the name of Madhu. He was himself the son of demoness Lolaa, and the father of the demon Lavanaasur. This Madhu was a great devotee of Lord Shiva and had obtained a powerful Trident from the Lord with the condition that it would not be used to attack the gods or harm (injure and kill) anybody in this world. He built a city named Madhupura and ruled from there. His queen was called Khumbhinasi.

When his son Lavanaasur began transgressing the laws of Dharma (righteous conduct), he became extremely disgusted so much so that he went away to do Tapa (austerities and penances). After his going away, Lavanaasur became very cruel and tyrannical. Ultimately, he was killed by Shatrughan, the younger brother of Lord Ram.

²Lord Vishnu had assumed the form of 'Narsingh or Nirsingh' (half-lion and half-man) to slay the demon Hiranyakashipu who had been tormenting Prahalad, his son, because the latter worshipped and had devotion for Lord Vishnu whom the demon loathed. After having killed the demon, Nrsingh started roaming in the forests, striking terror in the hearts of all the creatures. It was then that Shiva, the universal Lord who has been honoured with the epithet of 'Mahadev' as he is the greatest and supreme God, had assumed the form of Sharav, the killer, and liberated Vishnu from the body of Nrsingh. [Refer Sharav Upanishad of Atharva Veda, verse no. 8.] Thus liberated, Vishnu had thanked him a lot (refer Sharav Upanishad of Atharva Veda, verse no. 19) and went to his divine abode called Vaikunth. So this ferocious form of Shiva known as Sharav was also called 'Rudra', the angry and ferocious form of the Lord. One can imagine the fight that might have raged between Nrsingh and Rudra, and obviously Rudra must have been more ferocious than Nrsingh in order to subdue the latter.

This 'half lion and half man' form of the Lord is a visible image that has a cosmic counterpart as the 'half man and half female' manifestation of the Lord that is known as 'Ardha-Narishwar'. This cosmic form of Brahm as Ardha-Narishwar has two components—the right half is depicted in iconography as being a male representing Shiva, the great God, the other half is female representing his divine Shakti known as Parvati or Uma. This Shakti represents the dynamic energy of Shiva. When this applies to Brahm, the male aspect refers to the Supreme Being himself while the female aspect applies to Maya which is the dynamic power that Brahm employed to initiate this magical creation. This depiction is basically envisioned to drive home the point that Brahm and Shakti are inseparable in the context of the creation of the world. This elementary method of reproduction is known as 'asexual reproduction' and is depicted by many asexual plants and animals even today. For instance, the one-celled amoeba reproduces itself by cleavage. On the other hand, if we were to regard Brahm in its purest form as the cosmic Consciousness, then Brahm would not need the other half of the Maya, and would only be one and universal entity which has no definite and describable form and shape, it has no characteristic features, attributes and qualities. This form of the sublime and most subtle Brahm is known as either the Hiranyagarbha or the Viraat Purush depending upon the level of subtlety and grossness which is assigned to it, the former being more subtle than the latter.

The 'lion' part is a metaphor for the grand qualities of unmatched authority, stupendous strength, physical prowess and complete and unchallenged sway over the entire domain of creation just like a lion has over the forest and its inhabitant wild animals. This term is symbolic of the inherent stupendous might of the supreme Brahm as the unquestioned and powerful Lord of this forest-like world inhabited by myriad varieties of living beings, called the Jivas, just like a dense forest infested by wild animals. Similarly, the 'man' part symbolizes the fact that Brahm is the most highly placed Lord much like a human being who represents the highest level in the ladder of evolution.

In other words, even as the lion is the unquestioned lord of the wilds and the man is of all the living beings, the supreme transcendental Brahm is the unquestioned Lord of all that exists with all its variations in this creation, whether in its primary form represented by the wild and primitive animals of the jungle or in its more evolved and developed form represented by the man, with all the other stages of creation included in between these two.

Lord Nrisingh is the fourth incarnation of the Supreme Being who had taken various forms to ward off and overcome evil forces in creation when they become ascendant and overcame the good and the righteous. The Lord did this to maintain order in the creation which is like his offspring.

So when one of his great devotees known as Prahalad was being extremely tormented by his own father, the demon Hiranyakashipu, the Lord appeared as Nrisingh—or as a half lion and half man form—from the pillar to which the innocent lad was tied by the demon to prove to him the omnipresence and all-pervading form of the Supreme Being. Nrisingh is a personification of the grand virtues of dynamism, power, energy, valour and strength, and hence is worshipped by warriors and rulers in general. The Mantra of this Lord is believed to be very powerful and effective against enemies and opponents.

Tulsidas has narrated this incident in his book "Kavitawali", Uttar Kand, verse no. 128 which says—

“The demon Hiranyakashipu drew his sword to kill Prahalad (his son), but though the former had no mercy in his heart, the latter did not run away seeing his father who resembled the terrible God of death in a personified form. And when he challenged Prahalad saying, ‘Tell me where your Ram is?’ The son replied, ‘Everywhere!’ At this, the father asked him, ‘Is he present in this stone pillar as well?’ Then Prahalad replied, ‘Yes, sure!’.

Hearing his earnest conviction and urgent call, Lord Narsingh manifested immediately, destroyed Prahalad’s enemy (his father), and became ferociously angry. Then, it was only after Prahalad prayed to him that he calmed down.

³Hiranyaksha—He was slayed by Lord Vishnu in his incarnation as the Boar. It is the third incarnation of Vishnu in which he killed the demon Hiranyaksha and lifted the earth from the flood water where it had vanished. According to some versions, this demon had hidden the earth in the bowls of the ocean. This extrication and resurrection of the earth is a symbolic way of saying that the Lord saves the creation from being submerged in the vast ocean of sins and evil. An Upanishad preached by Lord Varaaha appears in the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition as its 30th Upanishad. The female aspect of Varaaha is known as Goddess Vaaraahi.

⁴The demon king Bali— The story of king Bali appears in Srimad Bhagwat, 8/15-23. It relates to the Vaaman (dwarf mendicant) incarnation of Lord Vishnu. This is the fifth incarnation of Vishnu. Bali was a grandson of Prahalad for whom Vishnu had incarnated as Nrisingh (half men and half lion) earlier.

King Bali was very righteous and powerful; he chased away Indra, the promiscuous and lustful king of Gods, from the throne of heaven, and conquered it. He performed a thousand Ashwamedha Yagya (horse sacrifice) during the course of which he had conquered the entire world and deprived Indra, the king of Gods who ruled over the heavens, of his heavenly powers. Aditi, the mother of Gods, was peeved, and she requested her husband, sage Kashyap, to find a way out. Kashyap advised her to pray to Lord Vishnu. Aditi did severe penance for twelve days at the end of which Vishnu appeared before her and asked how he could help her. When Aditi told him the problem, Vishnu promised that he will take birth as her son in the form of a ‘Vaaman’ (a dwarf Brahmin) and retrieve the earth and the kingdom of heaven from Bali’s dominion.

Once he heard that king Bali was performing a great fire sacrifice, something Bali used to do routinely, and during which he had declared that he will give anything asked for, again something for which he was renowned. This religious sacrifice was being conducted on the banks of river Narmada. Seizing this opportunity, Vishnu in the form of a Vaaman approached Bali who welcomed him and paid his due respects. Then Bali asked Vaaman to ask for some gift or donation as this was the traditional practice during such great religious sacrifices. Vaaman was waiting for this chance. First he made Bali repeat his vows in public, and then asked for land measuring his three steps.

Bali was dumbfounded—he wondered at the inconsequential dimension of the land covered by three tiny steps of this dwarf! Bali requested Vishnu to ask for something more, but Vishnu was adamant. Bali’s priest, sage Shukracharya, knew that this dwarf was no one else but Vishnu, and so he tried to persuade Bali to abstain from making such commitment off-hand, because he will lose his entire kingdom. But Bali refused, saying that being the grandson of Prahalad, he cannot rescind on his words that he will give this Brahmin dwarf whatever he asks, even if it means sufferance.

Shukracharya was annoyed at this disobedience, but Vishnu was extremely pleased, and the Lord decided that after fulfilling the promise made to the Gods he will instantly reward Bali in ample terms, and will himself serve him! What a wonderful grace Vishnu shows.

So it happened that Vishnu, in the form of Vaaman, assumed a colossal form of cosmic proportions. The Lord measured the entire earth that Bali ruled in his first step. In the second step Vishnu measured the whole heaven. Nothing was left for the third step—so Bali offered his head! Vishnu was extremely pleased, and being the Lord of the world, he decided that since Bali has offered his own self to him like a faithful devotee, he will fully reward him. Hence, Vishnu blessed Bali that he will go down in history as the greatest donor and righteous of all times, that he will become Indra, the king of Gods, and rule over the heavens during the celestial era known as Saawarni Manvantar, that till that time he shall become the king of the nether world where demons would live, and to add icing to the cake the Lord declared that he himself will become his gatekeeper, and anybody who dared oppose him would be punished by the Lord himself!

⁵Sahasbahu— The story of ‘Sahastra-baahu’ in brief is as follows—There was once a thousand-armed Kshatriya (warrior class) king known as ‘Sahastraarjun’ or ‘Arjun with a thousand hands’. He was the son of king Kritvirya whose kingdom was known as Anup; its capital city was known as Maahismati and it was situated on the southern bank of river Narmada.

In his early life he was a very righteous and conscientious person, a man of upright thoughts and noble conduct. After the death of his father when the court ministers wished to anoint him on the throne of the kingdom, he refused, saying: ‘Kingdom leads a king to hell if he cannot live upto the expectations of his subjects and rule according to the principles of Dharma (righteousness and probity). The main source of income of a king is ‘tax collected from his subjects’, but if this tax is collected in an improper way, and if it is not utilized for the welfare of the subjects of the kingdom in accordance with the principles of Dharma which say that the main use of state revenue is to ensure that traders are given all facilities and protection for carrying out legitimate trade, are not looted by thieves, the subjects of the kingdom are given due protection and their interests are always kept ahead of everything else, and so on and so forth. So unless I acquire such powers and abilities by doing Tapa (penance), I will not accept the throne.’

When Sahastrabahu said this, the great sage Garg advised him that if he indeed wishes to do Tapa and acquire mytical powers to rule the vast kingdom in accordance to Dharma then he should go and serve Lord Dattatreya, an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. Dattatreya lived in a cave of Mt. SahyaParvat and did Tapa there (Markandeya Puran, Canto 18). So, Sahastrabahu went to Lord Dattatreya and began serving him diligently for a long period of ten thousand years.

According to Padma Puran, Sristi Khand, Canto 12, when Dattatreya was pleased with his service and austerities, he granted him four boons: (i) First, the king asked for one thousand arms. (ii) Second, he wished that no one in his kingdom would even dare to think in an unrighteous and sinful way. (iii) Third, he wanted to conquer the whole earth and rule over it. (iv) Fourth, that if he has to die then it must be in the battle-field at the hands of a warrior who is superior to him in every way.

According to Markandey Puran, Canto 18, verse nos. 14-18, the king was granted ten boons as follows: (i) The powers and authority to rule over his subjects without acquiring sins. (ii) The ability to know the thoughts of others. (iii) No one should be able to face in the battle-field (i.e. he should become invincible). (iv) During a war he should have a thousand arms so as to fight his opponent with all of them at once. [This is also mentioned in Harivansha Puran, Canto 33, verse no. 14.] (v) He should have unhindered access to all places in the sky, water, earth, mountains and the nether world. (vi) If he has to die then it should be at the hands of someone stronger than him. (vii) If by chance he goes astray and falls on the wrong path, then he must have a chance to get good advice and company of saintly persons (i.e. he must be given an opportunity to mend his ways). (viii) He must have illustrious persons as his guests so that he can serve them and get their blessings. (ix) His wealth should never diminish even after liberal charities and giving of alms regularly; there should be no shortage of wealth in his kingdom. (x) The virtue of Bhakti (having devotion for Lord God) should be firm and perpetual in him.

In Mahabharat, Van Parva, Canto 115, verse no. 12, it is said that by the grace of Dattatreya the king acquired an air-plane made of gold; that he ruled over the entire earth; and that no one could stop his chariot. He was a great Emperor who conquered the whole world and made liberal charities. He is also regarded as a great scholar of Tantra Shastra.

He was so powerful and mighty that when he bathed in the ocean and thrashed it with his thousand arms, he could turn the tide backwards. He would splash the water so heavily that marine creatures were tossed into the air like ninepins. [Brahm-Vaivarta Puran, Ganesh Khand, Canto 23-27.]

But the Laws of Creation are such that every good thing has to come to an end one day; nothing is eternal and permanent in this mortal gross world. This also applied to Sahastrabahu. As time passed, he became extremely haughty and cruel. He started subjugating even the Gods so as to remove all challenges to his authority and power. It is said that he ruled for eighty-five thousand years before he was killed by sage Parashuram.

Once he was asked by the Fire God for alms, and the noble king could not refuse. The Fire God used this grant to burn everything and cause havoc everywhere, because he was certain that Sahastrabahu would not stop him. During this burning spree, the Fire destroyed the hermitage of sage Aapava (who was later on known as sage Vasistha according to Brahm Puran during its description of the race of Yayaati). The sage cursed king Sahastrabahu that his arms, relying upon whose strength the Fire God had destroyed his hermitage and was wreaking havoc on earth, would be cut by sage Parashuram. [Refer: Mahabharat, Shanti Parva, Canto 49, verse nos. 35-45; and Padma Puran, Sristi Khand, Canto 12.]

One day, he was wandering along the shore of the ocean and out of his pride and haughtiness he covered it with thousands of arrows. The Ocean assumed a form and appeared before him to plead that he stop showering arrows into the water as all the marine creatures that live in the water would die. Sahastrabahu accepted the prayer but asked the Ocean to tell him about someone who could face him in battle, as he was itching for a face-off with anyone who could claim to be stronger than him as he wished to conquer the opponent and become an unchallenged warrior in this world. The Ocean told him to go sage Jamdagni whose son Parashuram would be fit opponent for him and would welcome him in battle. [Refer: Mahabharat, Ashwamegh Parva, Canto 29.]

Such was Sahastraarjun's sense of ego and pride that he could not bear that someone stronger be there on earth in his presence. So he collected his huge army and went to the hermitage of sage Jamdagni.

The sage duly welcomed the king and extended warm hospitality to him. Sahastraarjun was however astonished at the lavish way the forest-dwelling hermit had entertained him. So he wanted to know the reason. Upon finding out that the sage managed to do this miracle because he possessed a divine cow known as 'Kamdhenu' or Kapila cow which could produce anything desired in an instant, the greedy king was filled with jealousy. Driven by avarice and rapacity, he demanded that the sage give this cow to him. Obviously Jamdagni refused. So the king forcefully snatched the cow from him and in the ensuing tussle he killed Jamdagni.

At that time, Jamdagni's brave son Parashuram was not there. When he returned, home he found his mother grieving. Coming to know of the reason, he immediately took the vow that he will eliminate all the Kshatriya kings from the surface of the earth by killing all of them. His mother had beaten her chest twenty-one times as a sign of mourning, so he declared that he will continue to wipe out the Kshatriya kings for an equal number of times, i.e. for twenty-one generations.

He comforted his mother and attacked Sahastraarjun, severed all his thousand arms with his battle-axe and then killed him. [This story is narrated in Mahabharat, Ashwamegha Parva, Canto 29.]

Extremely peeved by the Kshatriya race to which this king belonged, Parashuram vowed to eliminate the entire race from the surface of the earth as a revenge for the killing of his father. This was the reason why Parashuram had fought and killed thousands of Kshatriya to avenge the killing of his father by Sahastraarjun.

The story of Sahastrabahu and how Ravana, the king of the demon race who ruled in Lanka, was humiliated by him, is narrated in Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto nos. 31-33; Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 55-57; and in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 90-95.

Briefly it is as follows: Sahastrabahu was the son of Kritvirya and the king of Mahishmati situated on the banks of river Narmada. By the blessings of sage Dattatreya he could get a thousand arms when he so desired. One day when he was enjoying himself with his ladies and mistresses in the river, Ravana had too gone there to offer worship to Lord Shiva. Ravana's attendants had collected flowers for offering to Lord Shiva. In the meantime, Sahastrabahu, who was showing off his majesty to impress the women, had used his thousand arms to block the flow of water in the river, which therefore flooded the banks and flowed upstream. The flowers that Ravana's attendants had collected for worship were washed away, which gravely annoyed Ravana as it disrupted his worship. On learning the cause of this flood, Ravana immediately went to challenge Sahastrabahu and started a fierce battle with his soldiers. Upon learning that Ravana has destroyed the entire army, Sahastrabahu himself came to face him. A severe battle ensued. As soon as the chief commander of the demon army, named Prahasta, fell, the rest of the demons fled; and then followed a one-to-one duel between Ravana and Sahastrabahu. These two mighty warriors used massive war-maces to hit each other. Finally, Sahastrabahu hit Ravana so hard that he tottered and swooned, and was so dazed that he sat down to recover himself. Seizing the moment, Sahastrabahu captured Ravana and held him tight in his thousand arms, using these arms like ropes to ensnare him so firmly that Ravana could not wriggle out. After this, Sahastrabahu brought Ravana to his capital city and imprisoned him like an ordinary prisoner of war. Later on, sage Pulastya went to plead with Sahastrabahu, and he not only succeeded in getting Ravana released but also in forging a friendship between the two. This version is according to Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto nos. 31-33.]

तासु बिरोध न कीजिअ नाथा । काल करम जिव जाकें हाथा ॥ ९ ॥ tāsu birōdha na kīji'a nāthā. kāla karama jiva jākēm hāthā. 9.

Oh Lord. It is not wise to oppose him whose hands command the destiny of the world by way of regulating the factors of time and death, the deeds done by all, and the fate of all living beings.

[To wit, Lord Ram is the Supreme Lord under whose command lie Kaal (time, death), Karma (deeds) and Jiva (the living being)¹.] (9)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 25 where we read that Marich too has advised Ravana the same thing; and once again in (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 27 where Angad, Lord Ram's emissary, tells Ravana a similar thing.

'Kaal' or time is a factor that determines the lifespan of all things, animate and inanimate. 'Kaal' is also the name of the god of death who devours everything in creation.

'Karma' or the deed done by a living being is a factor that determines his fate.

'Jiva' or the living being, the creature, is under the control of both the Kaal and Karma, i.e. his lifespan is fixed by the factor of time, and his fate is determined by the deeds done by him.

And the Supreme Being controls all of them. Lord Ram is this Supreme Being.]

दो०. रामहि सौंषि जानकी नाइ कमल पद माथ ।

सुत कहूँ राज समर्पि बन जाइ भजिअ रघुनाथ ॥ ६ ॥

dōhā.

rāmahi saumpi jānakī nā'i kamala pada mātha.

suta kahūṁ rāja samarpi bana jā'i bhaji'a raghunātha. 6.

I advise you to give Janki (Sita) back to Lord Ram¹, and then after bowing reverentially at his lotus-like holy feet you should hand over the reins of the kingdom to your son (Meghnad) and head to the forest to (meditate and) worship Lord Raghunath (the Supreme Being in the form of Lord Ram). (Doha no. 6)

[Note—¹Earlier, the same advice was given to Ravana by Vibhishan, Malyawant and Shuk—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no 39 (a); (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 40; (iii) Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 57.

In both these cases, Ravana had become exceedingly wrathful. But now in the case of Mandodari, though he did not like her advice, yet he did not react so vehemently as he had done with Vibhishan and Malyawant.]

चौ०. नाथ दीनदयाल रघुराई । बाघउ सनमुख गाँ न खाई ॥ १ ॥
 चाहिअ करन सो सब करि बीते । तुम्ह सुर असुर चराचर जीते ॥ २ ॥
 संत कहहिं असि नीति दसानन । चौथेंपन जाइहि नृप कानन ॥ ३ ॥
 तासु भजनु कीजिअ तहँ भर्ता । जो कर्ता पालक संहर्ता ॥ ४ ॥
 caupāī.

nātha dīnadayāla raghurāī. bāgha'u sanamukha ga'ēṁ na khāī. 1.
 cāhi'a karana sō saba kari bītē. tumha sura asura carācara jītē. 2.
 santa kahahim̐ asi nīti dasānana. cauthēmpana jā'ihi nṛpa kānana. 3.
 tāsu bhajanu kīji'a tahaṁ bhartā. jō kartā pālaka sanhartā. 4.

My Lord; Raghurai (Lord Ram) is exceedingly kind, gracious, compassionate and merciful towards those who are humble, downtrodden and devoid of any resources (dīnadayāla).

The Lord has such stupendous mystical powers and majesty that if a tiger goes near him it will not be able to devour the Lord¹. (1)

You have done whatever you had wished to do and accomplish in your life. You have vanquished the gods and the demons; you have conquered the entire creation that consists of animate creatures and inanimate things. [So therefore, what more is left for you to desire? All your wishes of acquiring fame and glory have already been fulfilled.] (2)

Oh Ravana (“dasānana”; the ten-headed one)! Saints have laid down a principle that during the last quarter of a king’s life (“cauthēmpana”; the latter part of an ordinary person’s life when one crosses the age of 75 years), he ought to go to the forest. (3)

There (in the forest), he (the king) should worship the Lord God who the creator, the sustainer and the protector, as well as the concluder of this creation².

[To wit, in ripe old age a wise king should hand over the reins of his kingdom to his chosen and competent heir, and proceed to the forest by detaching himself from all worldly affairs. Once in the forest, he should do meditation and penances, undertake penitence for past sins, and generally prepare his soul for exiting this mundane gross world to attain final peace and rest. This phase of life has two divisions—(a) Vaanprastha Ashram, and (b) Sanyas Ashram.]³ (4)

[Note—¹This part of the verse has another interpretation though. It can also be read as follows: “Even a tiger, which is by nature a most ferocious animal, would not like to devour any creature if the latter goes and humbly submits itself before it, seeking protection and mercy.”

What Mandodari intends to say is this: If her husband Ravana heeds her advice and goes to make peace with Lord Ram, then she is absolutely sure that though he had committed such a grave error and a sinful deed as abducting Sita, the wife of the Lord, yet the Lord will certainly forgive him because it is his nature to forgive the sinful and fallen creature if they are ready to repent, undertake penitence, and make a determination to change their bad nature.

She cites the example of a tiger which feels reluctant to kill another creature if the latter pleads before the former to spare its life. Well, it is believed that if a person is suddenly confronted by a tiger and instead of trying to run away or looking terrified he looks straight in the eye of a tiger fearlessly, without once shifting his gaze, then the tiger would stop in its track and gradually withdraw. It attacks only when its prey turns away and tries to flee.

There is another variation to this example. It is also believed that if a person suddenly confronts a tiger and falls to the ground to pretend to be dead, then the tiger would not kill him; the animal would come, smell the body, and thinking it to be a corpse would go away. The tiger hunts and kills its prey alive; it never feeds on dead bodies.

Here, Mandodari is simply citing the odd example of the tiger sparing the life of another creature to emphasize the fact if an otherwise cruel animal as a tiger would not like to kill someone who is bold enough to face it, or as she would like to say “has voluntarily submitted himself before it by lying prostrate on the ground”, as it would rather prefer to spare his life, then how can Lord Ram, who is by his inherent nature exemplarily merciful, kind and compassionate can ever think of harming someone who goes to him to surrender and seek his protection and grace.

So therefore, Ravana must not have any reservations in going to Lord Ram to make peace with him. He should approach Lord Ram with humility and prostrate himself before the Lord as a sign of surrender. If he does so, then he ought not to fear of being caught off guard and be captured by Lord Ram as his enemy; no such thing will happen for sure. But Ravana must be bold and courageous enough to go and face the Lord in spite of the huge bundle of sins he carries on his head; he must also throw away his inflated ego and be prepared to prostrate before the Lord.

²To wit, Mandodari advises her husband to follow tradition and hand over the reins of the demon kingdom to their son Meghnad, and then renounce all worldly attachment and head for the forest to prepare for final exit from this gross mundane world by doing meditation and repenting for his sins so that when the soul leaves this mortal body it can find its peace and rest.

³The life of a man was divided into four quarters by ancient sages, forefathers and patriarchs of the society. These four quarters are the following—Brahmcharya, Grihastha, Vanaprastha and Sanyas. Each quarter was of approximately 20-25 years.

The first quarter is when a man was supposed to study and learn the skills that are needed for the affairs of an adult life. This was ‘Brahmcharya Ashram’. The word literally means a celibate and one who exercises self-restraint. This was essential for study and inculcating skills which require focus of mind and heart. During this time, the man is young and is supposed to observe austerities while he studies and acquires knowledge to equip him to face the world when he grows up.

The second quarter is ‘Grihastha Ashram’. It is when the student enters the household phase of life. He marries, raises a family and carries on with his profession or vocation to increase wealth and progeny.

When a person becomes ripe in age, his working capacity decreases and he must prepare to pass on the baton to the next generation, to his heirs when they are ready to step in his shoes, and when he has done his bit for society. This is the ‘Vanaprastha Ashram’—the third phase of life when a person prepares to hand the responsibilities of his worldly affairs to his heirs and mentally prepares himself to lead a calm and detached life so that he can get ready for the final phase of old age.

Though it literally means ‘heading for the forest’, but not necessarily it be so. Its primary function is to withdraw from playing an active role in the affairs of the world and give one’s mind and body rest and peace after the toil of the previous years. In ancient times though, it actually meant going to the forest and spending time in a serene place in some hermitage. But in modern times it is neither feasible nor advisable. The best avenue is to withdraw from active role and serve more as an advisor and guide for the next generation in a dispassionate manner.

The final and fourth quarter is called ‘Sanyas Ashram’ which clearly means absolute withdrawal from the world and its affairs. This is the time when the man is of about say 70 or more years of age. So he needs complete peace and should prepare to make an exit from the world without a fuss. He is expected to create such a situation that no one misses or wails for him nor anything suffers due to his absence. Thus, he dies peacefully and self-contentedly.

During the ‘Sanyas Ashram’ a person is expected to completely renounce the world and its entanglements, and instead spend the remaining part of his life in spiritual pursuit and searching ways for his spiritual liberation and deliverance.]

सोइ रघुबीर प्रनत अनुरागी । भजहु नाथ ममता सब त्यागी ॥ ५ ॥

मुनिबर जतनु करहिं जेहि लागी । भूप राजु तजि होहिं बिरागी ॥ ६ ॥ sō'i raghubīra pranata anurāgī. bhajahu nātha mamatā saba tyāgī. 5.

munibara jatanu karahim jēhi lāgī. bhūpa rāju taji hōhim birāgī. 6.

[And who is this “Lord God” whom one ought to worship in the forest? Mandodari answers this question:-] That Lord God is none other than Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram, the brave king in the family line of Raghu) who has great affection for those who prostrate before him (as a token of surrender and submission).

So oh Lord; I beg of you that you should worship and adore him by abandoning all your worldly attachments and turning away from them. (5)

He is the same Lord to attain whom great and illustrious sages and hermits undertake strenuous exercises of meditation and penances, and it is for him attaining him that great and famous kings of illustrious lineage renounce their homes and kingdoms to become mendicants. (6)

सोइ कोसलाधीस रघुराया । आयउ करन तोहि पर दाया ॥ ७ ॥

जौं पिय मानहु मोर सिखावन । सुजसु होइ तिहुँ पुर अति पावन ॥ ८ ॥ sō'i kōsalādhīsa raghurāyā. āya'u karana tōhi para dāyā. 7.

jaum piya mānahu mōra sikhāvana. sujasu hō'i tihum pura ati pāvana. 8.

It is the same Supreme Lord who has manifested himself as the ‘Lord of Kaushal’ (i.e. as the King of Ayodhya, a kingdom of which the capital city had the same name), and he is known as ‘Raghuraya’ (literally ‘a great king of the Raghu dynasty).

Indeed it is 'he' who has come to show his grace and mercy upon you. (7)

Oh my dear husband, if you pay heed to and accept my advice (which, as your beloved wife, I am giving you for your own good and welfare), then be sure that your glory and goodness would spread and be eternally established in all the three divisions of this creation (i.e. in the heaven, on the earth, and in the nether world).¹ (8)

[Note—¹Mandodari told her husband Ravana that he has a golden opportunity to attain eternal freedom from sins and their horrendous consequences, and attain eternal peace and bliss for his soul as well as ensure his salvation and emancipation without the least trouble because the Supreme Lord who can bless a creature with these boons has been so gracious and kind enough to have taken the trouble of coming to Ravana's own doorstep offering them to him. Now Ravana will be spared the trouble of having to undertake the difficult and most strenuous path by which a person can normally free himself of sins and attain emancipation and salvation for his soul by renouncing the world during the last quarter or phase of his life, and spend his time exclusively in doing penances, austerities, meditation, contemplation and prayers, as well as in worshipping the Supreme Being. The scriptures has prescribed this path for all human beings, whether he be a king or a sage.

Mandodari tells her husband that he is so exceedingly lucky and fortunate that the Supreme Being who is so difficult to access, to attain whom great sages, seers, hermits and ascetics do hard penances and austerities, for whom even great kings and emperors renounce their prosperous kingdoms and empires full of charmed life of pleasure and comfort, and head to the forest instead to do meditation and contemplation so that when they die their soul can attain eternal peace and rest, for whose sake the scriptures prescribe that a person should go on pilgrimage and do penances to clean his inner-self of all sins so that at the time of leaving his body the person's soul, his 'Atma', can attain deliverance and emancipation—the same Lord has been so merciful and compassionate and kind and graceful that he has decided to spare Ravana all these great troubles by coming himself to his doorstep to offer him a chance for repentance and redemption.

Hence, Mandodari says that Ravana would do the wisest thing in his life if he grabs this opportunity and goes to welcome Lord Ram, a manifested form of the Supreme Being, who is standing at his gate, waiting for Ravana to open the gates of his palace and meet his revered guest at the threshold. Be sure, she tells her husband, that he would be affectionately received by Lord Ram; he ought naught to have any doubt and misgivings on this count; he ought naught to fear for his safety at all.

If he accepts her advice then he will reap a rich harvest of both fame and glory in this world as long as he lives, as well as of eternal peace and rest for himself and his soul when his life comes to an end.]

दो०. अस कहि नयन नीर भरि गहि पद कंपित गात ।

नाथ भजहु रघुनाथहि अचल होइ अहिवात ॥ ७ ॥

dōhā.

asa kahi nayana nīra bhari gahi pada kampita gāta.
nātha bhajahu raghunāthahi acala hō'i ahivāta. 7.

As Mandodari said these things, her eyes were filled with tears and her body trembled.

Unable to restrain herself, she made a final appeal to Ravana, pleading with him as follows: ‘Oh Lord! I plead with you that you must worship Lord Ram so that my union with you as your wife would last forever.’¹ (Doha no. 7)

[Note—¹Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 15-b.]

Mandodari has clearly hinted here that if Ravana does not pay heed to her good advice, then in the ensuing war he is certain to be killed. She loved her husband so much that while expressing her views she trembled and wept at the very thought of the prospect of his death.

On the other hand of the scale, if he does pay attention to her then his future would be safe and secure. While alive he would rule over his kingdom in peace and freed from the guilt of having abducted another person’s wife, and when he finally dies, which all living beings must, his soul would be liberated from his body of a demon and delivered from this world of transmigration to attain eternity. What more would anyone want? This glorious future is being offered to Ravana on a platter, so why should, and why would, he refuse it if any trace of sanity is left in him?

Mandodari knew her husband’s nature well, so she was very fearful he would not listen to her advice because it did not fit in well with what he has decided to do. That is why, fearing for doom and destruction, she wept and trembled.]

चौ०. तब रावन मयसुता उठाई । कहै लाग खल निज प्रभुताई ॥ १ ॥

सुनु तैं प्रिया बृथा भय माना । जग जोधा को मोहि समाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

taba rāvana mayasutā uṭhāī. kahai lāga khala nija prabhutāī. 1.

sunu taiṁ priyā br̥thā bhaya mānā. jaga jōdhā kō mōhi samānā. 2.

Then Ravana picked up Mandodari (who was the daughter of the demon Maye; “mayasutā”) who was lying on the ground at his feet. That evil fellow scoffed at her, and began boasting about himself and his abilities as follows— (1)

‘Listen my dear wife. You are unnecessarily worried and feeling so excessively affright. Tell me: is there any other warrior comparable to me in this whole world; so what makes you so scared about my safety and security?

[To wit, don’t you know that there is no one in this whole world who can match me in courage, strength, powers, valour and martial skills? So why on earth do you worry and feel so terrified about my safety, I don’t understand.] (2)

बरुन कुबेर पवन जम काला । भुज बल जितेउँ सकल दिगपाला ॥ ३ ॥

देव दनुज नर सब बस मोरें । कवन हेतु उपजा भय तोरें ॥ ४ ॥ baruna kubēra pavana jama kālā. bhuja bala jitē'uṁ sakala digapālā. 3.

dēva danuja nara saba basa mōrēm. kavana hētu upajā bhaya tōrēm. 4.

[Now, Ravana lists his achievements and military successes in an attempt to reassure Mandodari and dispel her fears.]

I have conquered all the Diggals (junior gods who are assigned different roles in this creation and act as custodians of the world in their respective domains)—such as Varun (the god of water), Kuber (the treasurer of the gods), Pawan (the wind god), Yam (the god of hell), Kaal (the god of death and the one who presides over a living beings lifespan)—well, I have vanquished all of them by the strength of my arms. [Don't you know about it?] (3)

Well, all the Gods and the Danuj (demons; non-gods) as well as the Nars (human beings) are under my control (don't you know that too?)¹.

So therefore, tell me what makes you so scared; why are you so sore affright about my safety (and my ability to face my enemy, Lord Ram)?' (4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Baal Kand, Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-13 that precede it; and (ii) Lanka Kand, Doha no. 25 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it where Ravana asserts the same thing before Angad who was sent by Lord Ram as his emissary to see if some way could be found to avoid the bloody war.]

नाना बिधि तेहि कहेसि बुझाई । सभाँ बहोरि बैठ सो जाई ॥ ५ ॥ मंदोदरीं हृदयँ अस जाना । काल बस्य उपजा अभिमाना ॥ ६ ॥ nānā bidhi tēhi kahēsi bujhā'ī. sabhā'ñ bahōri baiṭha sō jā'ī. 5.

mandōdarīm hr̥daya'ñ asa jānā. kāla basya upajā abhimānā. 6.

Ravana tried to dispel Mandodari's fears and tried to comfort her in different ways, and then he went back to sit in his royal court¹. (5)

Meanwhile, Mandodari realized that her husband was highly deluded and mightily distracted in his mind as he was, by the fiat of Providence, in the throes of death, and that is why he has become so haughty and stubborn as well as out of his wits². (6)

[Note—¹We have read earlier that Ravana was in his royal court where he had received the shocking information about the bridge being built and Lord Ram landing on the shores of Lanka with his formidable army. Then he had left the assembly briefly and went to his palace to recover from this initial shock. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 5 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.}

Ravana comforted his wife Mandodari and asked her to stop worrying about imaginary things. He seemed very confident about his own abilities and invincibility; he reassured her that everything would be alright, and there was no cause for the panic reaction she seems to portray.

“Look dear”, said he to her, “I very much appreciate your concern for me, but at the same time I don't understand what makes you so agitated and worried. Tell me, aren't you aware of my unparalleled strength, powers, valour and achievements; aren't you aware that I have conquered the whole world, and even the so-called gods and digpals are terrified even by my name. They run away when they hear I am in a foul mood; they scamper for cover and run helter-skelter when I go to their places. What is this human prince called 'Ram' before my might? Why are you so confounded and shaken? Surely you must be under the influence of some evil spirit that has instilled so much fear in your noble and otherwise fearless heart. Look my dear; this sort of behaviour does not behoove of the wife of Ravana. You must be shameful of your attitude! So get up and cheer up. There is nothing at all to worry."

²She was certain that since 'death' is fast approaching her husband, his mind and its sense of wisdom and rationality have been clouded by the dark and negative forces of haughtiness and stubbornness. He seems to have lost his prudence, and is behaving arrogantly and irrationally. He is driven so insane by 'death', the mighty force of creation that leaves no one immune to its rule and spares no one from its grasp, that he is being drawn towards it involuntarily like a leaf being sucked in by a violently swirling whirlwind. She realized that the fiat of fate and the dictate of destiny has prevailed over her husband's mind so much so that he is driven more by his false pride of invincibility and strength than coming to terms with truth and acting with prudence in accordance with the ground realities.]

(ii) Sub-section 12.1.2 = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 16 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it:-

Mandodari was very restless. She thought that perhaps her husband was not in the proper frame of mind to heed her request for the first time, so she must try again.

Meanwhile, the assembly was in a sort of stupor as all the courtiers were struck with fear and very uncertain of their future. All the developments, right from the time Hanuman had entered Lanka till now portended a calamity and hinted at some grave and dangerous future. For the first time in their lives the demons felt so helpless, alarmed, despaired and worried. Fear was writ large on their faces; there were obvious signs of internal agitation and a storm brewing in their minds and hearts. A dark pall of gloom descended upon the assembly like a thick veil of choking smoke so much so that Ravana thought it best to dismiss the assembly and ask everyone to retire to their homes. He went to his palace himself where Mandodari made her second attempt to try to persuade Ravana to discard his confrontationist attitude towards Lord Ram and make peace with the latter.

Earlier she had told Ravana that Lord Ram was none but the Supreme Being himself (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 7); now she elaborates on who this 'Supreme Being' is.

Mandodari tries to persuade her stubborn and haughty husband to abandon his belligerence and send Sita back to Ram. She tells Ravana that he must understand that Lord Ram is not an ordinary human prince whose wife he has brought home. The Lord was the cosmic Lord of creation, and therefore Ravana stands no chance of overcoming him or defeating him in any war. It is then she narrates the ‘Viraat’ form of Lord Ram—i.e. the cosmic form of the Supreme Being whom Lord Ram represents.]

दसमुख देखि सभा भय पाई । बिहसि बचन कह जुगुति बनाई ॥ ३ ॥
 सिरउ गिरे संतत सुभ जाही । मुकुट परे कस असगुन ताही ॥ ४ ॥ सयन करहु निज निज गृह जाई । गवने भवन सकल सिर नाई ॥ ५ ॥ dasamukha dēkhi sabhā bhaya pā'ī. bihasi bacana kaha juguti banā'ī. 3.

 sira'u girē santata subha jāhī. mukuṭa parē kasa asaguna tāhī. 4.
 sayana karahu nija nija gr̥ha jā'ī. gavanē bhavana sakala sira nā'ī. 5.

When the ten-headed Ravana saw that the assembly was overcome with an overwhelming air of excessive fear, he smiled wryly and tried to make light of the situation by giving a humorous twist to the development¹. (3)

He said, ‘Tell me, he whose heads have fallen so many times but proved to be a boon for him, how can the mere falling of a crown cause any harm or ill to him?’² (4)

Take a break now and go to your respective homes to sleep (and rest) peacefully.’³

All the assembled courtiers bowed their heads before him, took their leave and went home. (5)

[Note—¹It had so happened that Lord Ram had shot an arrow from his camp, and this arrow struck Ravana crown which fell to the ground. It was a very bad omen. So all the courtiers were struck with terror and alarmed about the future. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 13—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 14}.

²Ravana refers to the time when he had offered his heads to Lord Shiva as a personal sacrifice. This voluntary cutting of his own head and offering them as a sacrifice to the Lord proved to be a boon for him for it pleased Lord Shiva so much that he granted Ravana many boons, including immunity from death by severance of the head, lordship of all the gods, demons and creatures, as well as invincibility and matchless glory. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 25.}

So he argued that the crown is merely a decoration of his head, a sort of head-gear. How does it matter if it falls by some accident as long as the heads are protected by Lord Shiva’s immortal boon? Hence, there is nothing to worry at all.

³Look, worrying unnecessarily for imaginary things is a waste of energy and time. I think you all are under some evil spell and suffering from some delusions that seems to have had the better of your senses and undermined your natural courage and dare devilry for which the demon race is so famed. What has happened to you all? It is better for all of us to take a break and sleep over the matter overnight. Tomorrow morning we’ll all have a fresh start and feel rejuvenated. Go, sleep soundly and peacefully. No hell’s breaking upon us right now. All of you need mental rest, so go home, relax and sleep, forgetting about imaginary fears.]

मंदोदरी सोच उर बसेऊ । जब ते श्रवनपूर महि खसेऊ ॥ ६ ॥
 सजल नयन कह जुग कर जोरी । सुनहु प्रानपति बिनती मोरी ॥ ७ ॥ कंत राम बिरोध परिहरहू । जानि मनुज जनि हठ मन धरहू ॥ ८ ॥ mandōdarī sōca ura basē'ū. jaba tē śravanapūra mahi khasē'ū. 6.

 sajala nayana kaha juga kara jōrī. sunahu prānapati binatī mōrī.
 kanta rāma birōdha pariharahū. jāni manuja jani haṭha mana dharahū. 4.

[Meanwhile, after dismissing the courtiers with these words of reassurance, Ravana himself got up and retired for the night to his palace where he found Mandodari once again in a state of utter fear. She had experienced some bad omen and was extremely upset about its implications. So for the second time straight she confronted Ravana as he entered the palace, begging him to see sense and overcome his egoist arrogance.]

Ever since the ear-ring of Mandodari had fallen to the ground¹, she was mentally very worried and extremely upset. (6)

When she saw Ravana she joined her hands in supplication and begged before him with tears in her eyes, pleading as follows: 'Listen my beloved husband who is the lord of my life and very dear to me (prānapati). Pray, please pay attention to my prayers; I sincerely and earnestly plead before you. (7)

My dear husband (kanta)! Please abandon your animosity with and a belligerence attitude towards Lord Ram in the erroneous belief that he is an ordinary human prince². (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram had shot an arrow from his camp as a signal to warn Ravana that he has arrived. It was the first arrow shot by the Lord in Lanka. This arrow had struck and fell three things—(i) The ceremonial umbrella over his heads that symbolized his authority and majesty as the king of the demon race, and of a king of; (ii) Ravana's crowns; and (iii) Mandodari's ear-ring. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 13 (a).}

²Refer also to Vibhishan's advice in Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-2 and 5 that precede Doha no. 39 which is the same as that of Mandodari's.

No one in this creation can protect someone who is opposed to Lord Ram—Mandodari knows it as she has this information from her own network of spies that all those who had opposed the Lord had bit the dust.

There were many precedents—for instance, when the demons Marich and Subahu attacked sage Vishwamitra's fire sacrifice which Lord Ram stood guard to protect, the whole army accompanying these demons was demolished along with Subahu. Marich was spared then, but he was killed later on when he tried to cheat Lord Ram disguised as a golden deer. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 210; and (ii) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 10-14 that precede Doha no. 27.}

When the demon forces of Khar and Dushan attacked Lord Ram, they too were all eliminated quickly. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 20.}

Indra's son Jayant also faced this piquant situation when no one in the heaven was ready to give him shelter when he annoyed Lord Ram by pricking Sita's legs with his beak, leading to blood oozing out of the wound and Lord Ram deciding to punish him by plucking a blade of grass and shooting it at Jayant as an improvised arrow. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 2.}

Marich, Vibhishan and Shuk too had advised Ravana the same thing as Mandodari does now—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 25—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 25 (Marich); (ii) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39 (Vibhishan); (iii) Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 56 and Chaupai line nos. 3-8 that precede Doha no. 57 (Shuk).

Hanuman too had a similar advice for Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 22—to Doha no. 23.

A little later we shall read Angad's interaction with Ravana where the former also tried to persuade the latter on similar lines as Mandodari's: refer—Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 20 along with Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede it; and Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precedes Doha no. 27.]

दो०. बिस्वरूप रघुवंस मनि करहु बचन बिस्वासु।

लोक कल्पना बेद कर अंग अंग प्रति जासु ॥ १४ ॥

dōhā.

bisvarūpa raghubansa mani karahu bacana bisvāsu.
lōka kalpanā bēda kara aṅga aṅga prati jāsu. 14.

My Lord! Believe my words that real form of the who is like a gem in the family of king Raghu (“raghubansa mani”; Lord Ram) is cosmic in nature inasmuch as the whole creation, the entire universe, is nothing but a manifestation of the Lord, and the Lord pervades uniformly in this creation as its essence (known as cosmic Consciousness).

Verily indeed, the Vedas (primary and most ancient of the scriptures) have envisioned that each pore of the cosmic body of the Lord is a universe in its own right. (Doha no. 14)

[Note—Mandodari says “Believe me my lord when I say that the gem of the Raghu dynasty, Lord Ram, is a manifested form of the invisible cosmic form of the Supreme Being of whom this entire world is an image. In other words, the original form of Lord Ram is known as the ‘Viraat Purush’, the cosmic Male who has revealed himself in the form of this vast and myriad world, pervading intrinsically everywhere in it, present in every pore of it. In fact, this world is a gross visible form of subtle and invisible form of Lord Ram who is none but the Supreme Being known as Brahm or as the ‘Viraat Purush’.

The Vedas conceive that each limb and part of the body of this cosmic all-inclusive form of the Lord is the habitat of one or the other world that are known to exist in this creation. To wit, there are different worlds that exist at different levels in creation at different points of time. All of them are lodged at some point on the cosmic body of the Lord like so many tiny pearls stitched and embroidered on a huge length of cloth as long and wide as the firmament.”

The cosmic all-pervading form of Lord Ram who is the Supreme Being, the cosmic form that is also known as the ‘Viraat Purush’, has also been described at various places in ‘Adhyatma Ramayan’ of sage Veda Vyas. Some of the instances relevant to our present reading are: (i) Aranya Kand, Canto 9, verse nos. 31-45: prayer by Kabandha; (ii) Lanka Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 25-29: assertion by Vibhishan; (iii) Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 63-69: as affirmed by sage Agastya.]

चौ०. पद पाताल सीस अज धामा । अपर लोक अँग अँग बिश्रामा ॥ १ ॥

भृकुटि बिलास भयंकर काला । नयन दिवाकर कच घन माला ॥ २ ॥ caupāṭi.

pada pātāla sīsa aja dhāmā. apara lōka aṅga aṅga biśrāmā. 1.

bhṛkuṭi bilāsa bhayaṅkara kālā. nayana divākara kaca ghana mālā. 2.

This feet of the cosmic form of Lord Ram are represented by the ‘Patal’ (the nether world or the subterranean world; the lower world), and the Lord’s head consists of the heavens where Brahma, the creator, lives.

The rest of the world that lies between these to extremes (i.e. between the foot and the head of the cosmic form of Lord Ram, a form also known as the Viraat Purush) is located or distributed in all other parts of the Lord’s cosmic body. (1)

The formidable power of ‘Kaal’ (death; the powerful forces of time that bring about epochal changes in this world, including destruction) is represented by the movement of the Lord’s eyebrows.

His eyes are represented by the Sun, and the dense dark clouds are his thick lock of black hairs. (2)

जासु घ्रान अस्विनीकुमारा । निसि अरु दिवस निमेष अपारा ॥ ३ ॥

श्रवन दिसा दस बेद बखानी । मारुत स्वास निगम निज बानी ॥ ४ ॥ jāsu ghrāna asvinīkumārā. nisi aru divasa nimēṣa apārā. 3.

śravana disā dasa bēda bakhānī. māruta svāsa nigama nija bānī. 4.

The twin gods known as ‘Aswini-kumars’ (who are the physicians of the gods) are the Lord’s two nostrils.

The day and the night are representatives of the blinking of the eyes of the Lord, with the day representing the open eyes, and the night standing for the closed eye. (3)

The Vedas have declared (asserted) that the Lord’s ears is represented by the ten directions or quarters of this world¹.

His breath is the wind, the Vedas (primary scriptures; the treasury of knowledge) are the Lord's words. (4)

[Note—¹The ten directions or quarters of the world are the following—north, north-east, east, south-east, south, south-west, west, north-west, zenith and nadir.]

अधर लोभ जम दसन कराला । माया हास बाहु दिगपाला ॥ ५ ॥

आनन अनल अंबुपति जीहा । उत्पति पालन प्रलय समीहा ॥ ६ ॥ adhara lōbha jama dasana karālā. māyā hāsa bāhu digapālā. 5.

ānana anala ambupati jīhā. utapati pālana pralaya samīhā. 6.

'Lobha' (greed) represents the Lord's lips; the ferocious 'Yam' (god of death) represents his sharp teeth; 'Maya' (delusions) stands for the Lord's laughter or smile (because the Lord laughs at the way the world begins to hallucinate under its influence); and the 'Digpals'¹ (the powerful semi-gods who support the world and prevent it from collapsing) are representatives of the Lord's strong arms (that sustain and protect the entire creation). (5)

The Lord's tongue is represented by 'Anal' (fire)², and the tongue represents 'Ambupati' (the patron god of water)³.

Creation, sustenance and conclusion or destruction of this creation are his mere acts done effortlessly and in a causal manner; they are like his natural gestures⁴. (6)

[Note—¹The Digpals:— There are believed to be eight Digpals as follows:-

Indra who is the king of Gods and who has a thousand eyes on his body, and is therefore called 'Sahastraaksha', Agni or the Fire God, Yam or the God of Dharma (i.e. the God responsible to ensure that the great tenets of righteousness and proper conduct are observed by the creatures, and to punish those who violate these laws), Nirritiya (also known as Nairritya/Nirriti), Varun or the Water God, Anil or the Wind God, Indu or the Moon God (often replaced by Kuber who is the treasurer of Gods), Ishan or Lord Shiva, Brahma the creator, and Anant who is Lord Vishnu, the sustainer and protector of creation (or Lord Seshnath, the legendary serpent who holds the earth on its hoods in a symbolic gesture to indicate that Lord Vishnu is responsible for taking care of this creation).

The eight Digpals are the divine forces of creation in a personified form of various Gods who are assigned the task of taking care of the entire creation. They are the following—(i) Indra who is the king of Gods and responsible for production of rain as well as to control all other Gods who are said to be represented by the various independent forces of Nature; (ii) Agni is the personified form of the fire element responsible for providing heat, energy, light, vitality, strength, vigour and vibrancy to creation; (iii) Yam is the personified form of death as well as assigned the duty to uphold the laws of Dharma (or the auspicious virtues of righteousness, nobility, propriety, probity etc.), and to punish those who violate it; (iv) Nirriti or Nairitya who is the God responsible for the actual death and punishment of the sinful and unholy creatures in creation; (v) Varun is the personified form of the most essential ambrosia of life known as the water element that provides nourishment and lubrication to this creation, and is regarded as the basic element that harbours life in all its forms in its bosom; (vi) Anil is the personified form of the life-giving air or wind element which is also called Pran—literally meaning ‘life’ which is a proof of its importance and significance vis-à-vis this creation; (vii) Kuber is the treasurer of Gods and responsible to provide all the necessities of life to the inhabitants of this world; the Moon God is the custodian of the Amrit, the ambrosia of life and eternity which is a priceless asset for the creation; (viii) Ishan is Lord Shiva who is also known as Mahadev, the Great Lord, as well as the one who is responsible for maintain balance in this creation by controlling death, and hence is called the ‘concluder’; (ix) Brahma is the creator of the physical world as well as the body of knowledge known as the Vedas, and therefore assumes the role of a grand old patriarch of the family known as the world; and (x) Anant or Lord Vishnu who is so-called because he is eternal, infinite and endless, has infinite responsibilities, and is assigned the multi-prong duty of taking good care of the world in all respects. He is also called Anant as he is none but the eternal Brahm himself in the form of the Viraat Purush, the all-pervading, all-encompassing and almighty Lord of creation. In fact, even Brahma and Shiva are said to be born from this Viraat Purush. [Refer Ram Purva Tapini Upanishad, Canto 4, verse no. 38.]

These Digpals are responsible for the eight directions where they are worshipped as follows—

- (1) Indra (the king of Gods) is the custodian or guardian of the east direction.
- (2) Agni (the fire-God) is the custodian or guardian of the south-east direction.
- (3) Yama (the death-God) is the custodian or guardian of the south direction.
- (4) Nirriti or Nairitya is the custodian or guardian of the south-west direction.
- (5) Varun (the Water God) is the custodian or guardian of the west direction.
- (6) Vayu (the Wind God) is the custodian or guardian of the north-west direction.
- (7) Kuber (the treasurer of Gods) is the custodian or guardian of the north direction.
- (8) Ish (Lord Shiva; the chief amongst the Gods) is the custodian or guardian of the north-east direction.

²This is why we use the phrase “the tongue of fire” with leaping flames. It also refers to a person’s “fiery words” or a “heated argument” which can scorch or irritate others as much as a raging fire can do by its heat.

³That is why the tongue is always moist. It is a medical necessity because all food that we eat is moistened and softened by the saliva which is water-based. Besides this physical softening to make the food easy on the stomach, the enzymes that start the chemical process of digestion in the tongue itself work only when they are diluted with water. This is the reason why hastily eaten food that is gulped down directly into the throat without being properly chewed in the mouth and made into a semi-fluid form with the help of the water contents of the saliva secreted by the tongue that helps the food to be mixed with digestive enzymes that would help the stomach to further the process of digestion and extraction of the nutrients present in the food lies like a load in the abdomen and ruins health.

⁴The Lord can effect such great changes such as creating this world from virtually nothing, then sustaining it on such a huge and grand scale, and finally winding it up like one closing a book, needs no special effort or exertion to be done by the Supreme Lord. He merely gestures or wishes that it be so, and it happens to his liking.]

रोम राजि अष्टादस भारा । अस्थि सैल सरिता नस जारा ॥ ७ ॥

उदर उदधि अधगो जातना । जगमय प्रभु का बहु कलपना ॥ ८ ॥ rōma rāji aṣṭādasā bhārā. asthi saila saritā nasa jārā. 7.

udara udadhi adhagō jātanā. jagamaya prabhu kā bahu kalapanā. 8.

The eighteen principle species of the vegetable (botanical) kingdom, each having countless members of different types, are like the hairs on the body of the Viraat (the cosmic form of the Supreme Being that is infinite in dimension).

The lofty mountains are its bones, and the many rivers and countless streams are the network of veins, arterioles and capillaries of this cosmic body. (7)

The measureless ocean is its stomach and abdomen, while the organs present in the lower part of this cosmic body (i.e. the excretory and genital organs) are represented by the hell (which is hot and tormenting; is an eternal inferno where everything is hot and burning).

In brief, this entire creation (universe) is a manifestation of the Supreme Lord (here referring to Lord Ram in his primary form as the Viraat Purush), and therefore it is futile to attempt to describe it or go into the details of this form and its mind-boggling revealed variations in the form of a creation that has no end, a creation in which no two units are alike though all of them have the same origin as they are all revelation of the same Supreme Lord.' (8)

दो०. अहंकार सिव बुद्धि अज मन ससि चित महान ।

मनुज बास सचराचर रूप राम भगवान ॥ १५ (क) ॥

अस बिचारि सुनु प्रानपति प्रभु सन बयरु बिहाइ ।

प्रीति करहु रघुबीर पद मम अहिवात न जाइ ॥ १५ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

ahaṅkāra siva bud'dhi aja mana sasi citta mahāna.

manuja bāsa sacarācara rūpa rāma bhagavāna. 15 (a).

asa bicāri sunu prānapati prabhu sana bayaru bihā'i.

prīti karahu raghubīra pada mama ahivāta na jā'i. 15 (b).

'Ahankar' (the element of pride) symbolizes Shiva (the concluder), 'Buddhi' (intellect; the faculty of reasoning and understanding) stands for Brahma (the creator), the 'Mana' (mind and heart) represents 'Chandrama' (the Moon God), and 'Chitta'¹ is the greatest of them all (citta mahāna) (as it represents Lord Vishnu).

Verily indeed and in all sooth, it is the Supreme Lord God, whose cosmic form includes all the animate as well as the inanimate aspects of this vast universe, who himself has assumed the form of a human being known by the name of 'Ram'. (Doha no. 15-a)

In the view of this, and keeping all these facts in mind, oh my beloved husband, you should abandon all animosity with the Lord (Sri Ram).

Inculcate devotion and have affection in the holy feet of Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram) so that my good fortune as being your wife does not desert me (or, my union with you as your wife can last forever)². (Doha no. 15-b)

[Note—¹The word ‘Chitta’ stands for the sub-conscious mind. It is that faculty that works behind the scene to control the way a person thinks, behaves and acts. It is that aspect of the consciousness that governs a person’s personality and the quality of his inner self by storing all information that a creature receives by the medium of his sense organs of perception, and then using this information as a background upon which the creature relies to take decisions. It is a sort of a library of all information and experiences. Often times it is the sub-conscious mind that plays a crucial role in helping the creature to come at a conclusion and make a certain decision in a given situation where he has to make a choice from a given set of information. This we often refer to as relying on one’s ‘experience’.

²Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 7.]

चौ०. बिहँसा नारि बचन सुनि काना । अहो मोह महिमा बलवाना ॥ १ ॥

नारि सुभाउ सत्य सब कहहीं । अवगुन आठ सदा उर रहहीं ॥ २ ॥

साहस अनृत चपलता माया । भय अबिबेक असौच अदाया ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

bihaṁsā nāri bacana suni kānā. ahō mōha mahimā balavānā. 1.
nāri subhā'u satya saba kahahīm. avaguna āṭha sadā ura rahahīm. 2.
sāhasa anṛta capalatā māyā. bhaya abibēka asauca adāyā. 3.

When Ravana heard the words of his wife Mandodari, he laughed aloud in derision, and exclaimed, ‘Ah! How great and powerful is the power of infatuation and attachment that comes with true love!’ (1)

Forsooth, all great poets have rightly observed that a woman by nature always has eight faults or shortcomings in her character. (2)

These eight faults or shortcomings are the following: Recklessness and rashness (sāhasa); falsehood and deceit (anṛta); fickleness and transigency (capalatā); being prone to delusions and hallucinations (māyā); unwarranted fear and apprehensions (bhaya); ignorance and lack of knack in dealing with the practical problems of the world (abibēka); impurity of thought and lack of cleanliness of mind (asauca); and selfishness and lack of mercy (adāyā)². (3)

[Note—¹Here Ravana acknowledges that his wife loves him very dearly, and that is why she is so greatly worried at the prospect of harm coming to him, and mortally upset about his safety and security. Why, he had fought so many countless wars but never ever had she expressed such fear and anxiety for his safety, so therefore there is aught naught any reason now for her consternations.

However, it ought to be noted that in her zeal to protect her husband Ravana and to express her grave apprehensions, Mandodari has dared to cross the boundary of decency, modesty, propriety and probity by openly praising another person, who happens to be her husband's arch enemy, right in front of him without bothering about its serious repercussions and grave consequences. She could be severely censored and jailed for open disloyalty and immodesty as well as for gross impropriety and misconduct by lavishing praise upon another man right before her husband; she could be thrown into a dungeon with charges of treason and sedition.

But true love is so great a moving force that the lover is not worried about his or her safety in order to safeguard the welfare of the beloved. Hence, Mandodari was ready to face all accusations if somehow her entreaties could persuade Ravana to abandon his aggressive nature and hostile attitude towards Lord Ram and make peace with the Lord so that not only his life is spared but the doom of the entire demon race could be averted.

²Ravana has listed eight shortcomings in the character of a woman. Let us examine how they hold true for Mandodari.

(i) Even though she knows her husband's stubborn nature that once he decides to do something he would listen to nothing that is contrary to his decision, yet she tries four times to make him change his mind. She also knows how wrathful he becomes if contradicted, and how mercilessly he takes revenge. Yet she has the temerity to face him boldly and praise his enemy right before him. Is this not short of dare devilry? Her anxiety and restlessness could have boomeranged upon her and cost her very dear if Ravana had chosen to throw her into prison and be tortured for speaking against him.

She also knows that he would never give Sita back to Lord Ram and make peace with him, yet she repeatedly asks him to do so—refer: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6, 7-8 that precede Doha no. 36; (b) Lanka Kand, Doha no. 6; (c) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no 8 that precedes Doha no. 14, and Doha no. 15-b; and (d) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1, 3 that precede Doha no. 36 and Doha no. 37.

(ii) Ravana accuses her of speaking a lie and creating a smokescreen of delusions and falsehood that seems to portray Lord Ram as being more powerful than her husband Ravana.

(iii) She is of a fickle mind and uncertain of what to do and how to persuade her husband to change his mind—for she sometimes weeps, then at other times falls down at his feet, and then tries to scare him by painting a picture of his enemy Ram as someone who is the Supreme Being himself, whereas from all apparent signs he seems to be an ordinary prince of the kingdom of Ayodhya, for Lord Ram acts and behaves like one, showing no supernatural prowess or super-human powers. He ran like an ordinary man behind the golden deer; he lamented for his lost wife, began searching for her here and there in the wilderness, then prayed to the Ocean to let him cross it, and so many other developments that show he is an ordinary but courageous prince, and definitely not the Supreme Being that Mandodari makes him out to be before Ravana. This is the reason why “Ravana laughed derisively when Mandodari tried to tell him that Lord Ram was not an ordinary man but the Viraat Purush”.

(iv) And this is also the reason why Ravana accuses her of ignorance and utter lack of knowledge of the affairs of the world. She has become scared because for some reason, say lack of alertness on the part of the demons, a monkey (Hanuman) has managed to successfully cross the ocean and surreptitiously enter Lanka, and later burning it when he managed to escape from captivity, but that does not mean that the same thing would be repeated in a war when the demon army is fully prepared and armed to the teeth to face any challenge.

(v) This is also why Ravana believes her to be deluded and hallucinating—as if doomsday is right around the corner. Has she forgotten about his might and prowess with which he had so easily subdued all the combined strength of the gods of heaven? They ran helter-skelter to save themselves as soon as they heard that Ravana is coming to attack them. So what is such an issue with a human being that has so much shaken Mandodari if it is not an imaginary ghost of doom and death that has scared the wits out of her?

(vi) Why is she so terrified of monkeys and bears of Kishkindha, and the two human princes Lord Ram and his brother Laxman who were thrown out of their own kingdom by their father (king Dasrath) and step mother (Kaikeyi), and who could not muster courage to claim their rights then? What will they do now regarding Sita; if they have the right over her, then let them claim her.

“When they couldn’t claim their right to the throne of Ayodhya, I wonder”, Ravana told Mandodari, “about their ability to exercise their right over Sita. Let them go ahead and retrieve her. But why are you so overcome with consternation and anxiety, this I can’t understand.”

(vii) Ravana also says that a woman is selfish and has no mercy. Well, he taunts Mandodari by this remark. Where was her concern, he seems to ask, about the sufferings of a woman captive when he had captured so many women-folk of the human race as well as of the gods, and brought them as trophies to Lanka. What is so special about Sita that worries Mandodari so much; Sita is already so weak and miserable that she does not stand any chance of recovery if he decides to cut-off her meagre ration of food and water if he becomes annoyed at Mandodari’s stance of siding with his prisoner. When all the gods together could not gather courage to free their women folk from him, what will two princes do?

Mandodari is accused of being ‘selfish’ because now she is so worried about Sita as she fears that Sita’s husband Lord Ram is very powerful and he is a danger for the safety of her own husband Ravana, but earlier she was not at all concerned about other women in Ravana’s captivity as she was confident that their respective husbands were no threat to her own husband Ravana. It is clearly a case of selfishness and self-centred expression of concern for the miseries of a prisoner.

(viii) Ravana calls Mandodari ‘impure and un-clean in mind’ because she praises his opponent. It is surely not a proper conduct and a modest behaviour for a wife to criticise her own husband and praise another woman’s husband, which in the present case Mandodari does by finding fault with her husband Ravana and glorifying Sita’s husband Lord Ram. This behaviour is not acceptable even in modern times, and may result in a sharp spat between a husband and a wife, the former accusing the latter of infidelity, and it may even culminate in a divorce.]

रिपु कर रूप सकल तैं गावा । अति बिसाल भय मोहि सुनावा ॥ ४ ॥

सो सब प्रिया सहज बस मोरें । समुझि परा प्रसाद अब तोरें ॥ ५ ॥

जानिउँ प्रिया तोरि चतुराई । एहि बिधि कहहु मोरि प्रभुताई ॥ ६ ॥ ripu kara rūpa sakala tairṁ gāvā. ati bisāla bhaya mōhi sunāvā. 4.

 sō saba priyā sahaja basa mōrēm. samujhi parā prasāda aba tōrēm. 5.
 jāni'uṁ priyā tōri caturā'ī. ēhi bidhi kahahu mōri prabhutā'ī. 6.

You have tried to frighten me by describing the cosmic and all-pervading form of my enemy (i.e. Lord Ram's 'Viraat' form, to tell me that he has supernatural powers that are possessed by the Supreme Being).

[To wit, you wish to scare me by saying that my opponent is exceptionally powerful and strong so that I buckle and surrender to him for fear of my life.] (4)

But me dear, all such forms (i.e. all the gods who represent one or the other form of the Supreme Being whose cosmic form you have invoked) are well under my control¹.

I am grateful to you that now I have realised what the reality is, and I also thank you very much indeed to remind me of my own immensity of powers and valour in this respect (so that I can face my enemy with renewed courage, vigour and enthusiasm)². (5-6)

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Baal Kand, Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-13 that precede it; (b) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 37; (c) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 8.

²To wit, you love me so much that at a time when I need some encouragement and a reminder of my own immensity of strength and power, you have been witty enough to step in and remind me about my abilities and majesty by invoking the cosmic form of the Supreme Being, because all the gods of heaven whom I have subdued by the strength of my arms are in reality manifestations of this Supreme Being who has assumed the forms of these many gods to carry out the different functions of creation. So therefore, you actually mean to tell me that in a way I have conquered the Supreme Being himself by vanquishing these gods.

So thank you very much indeed for this veiled encouragement! Well, when I could so easily conquer so many varied manifestations of the Supreme Being as represented by the individual and the combined might of so many gods of heaven, then say why should I worry for a single form that Supreme Being might have taken as Lord Ram? Cheer up; there's nothing to worry!

I do appreciate your ingenuity that you have employed this ruse to remind me of my own strength.]

तव बतकही गूढ़ मृगलोचनि । समुझत सुखद सुनत भय मोचनि ॥ ७ ॥ मंदोदरि मन महुँ अस ठयऊ । पियहि काल बस मतिभ्रम भयऊ ॥ ८ ॥ tava batakahī gūṛha mṛgalōcani. samujhata sukhada sunata bhaya mōcani. 7.

 mandōdari mana mahum̐ asa ṭhaya'ū. piyahi kāla basa matibhrama bhaya'ū.
 8.

Oh the one with beautiful eyes like that of a fawn (mṛgalōcani)! Your words are veiled or encrypted in secrecy, and they convey a message that is not apparent on the surface. This veiled message though, when fully understood, gives comfort to think of it; it grants immense joy and happiness to the hearer; and it dispels all his fears'¹. (7)

Meanwhile, Mandodari concluded that her husband is under the influence of Kaal (death; doomed destiny) so much that his mind has become deluded and it has lost its rational way of thinking resulting in his wisdom and prudence becoming eclipsed². (8)

[Note—¹Ravana means two things here. Firstly, he thanks Mandodari to remind him that the Supreme Being has come himself to give him deliverance from this gross sinful body of a demon, and to liberate his soul that is trapped inside it. So therefore he is very fortunate as otherwise there was little hope of his ever finding redemption and salvation for his soul.

Secondly, he thanks her for reminding him of his own valour, power and strength by which he had conquered all the gods of the heaven who are one or the other manifestations of the Supreme Being. So he must not feel scared in facing Lord Ram.

He says that Mandodari's words are encrypted in secrecy because had she spoken straightforward in the way outlined herein above then it would seem that she is instigating her husband to wage a bloody war that might culminate in the ruin of the whole demon race. So she used a round about way of conveying her intent.

²Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8; (ii) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37.]

दो०. एहि बिधि करत बिनोद बहु प्रात प्रगट दसकंध ।

सहज असंक लंकपति सभाँ गयउ मद अंध ॥ १६ (क) ॥

dōhā.

ēhi bidhi karata binōda bahu prāta pragatā dasakandha.
sahaja asaṅka laṅkapati sabhāṁ gaya'u mada andha. 16 (a).

In this way, the night was spent in jest and light talk. When the next day dawned, the ten-headed Ravana—who was accustomed to being fearless by his nature (sahaja asaṅka) and made blind with a sense of false pride of strength and invincibility that made him arrogant and haughty (mada andha)—went to attend his royal court as he used to do routinely (as if nothing serious has happened at all, and therefore there is aught naught to worry). (Doha no. 16-a)

सो०. फूलइ फरइ न बेत जदपि सुधा बरषहिं जलद ।

मूरुख हृदयँ न चेत जौं गुर मिलहिं बिरंचि सम ॥ १६ (ख) ॥

sōraṭhā.

phūla'i phara'i na bēta jadapi sudhā baraṣahim jalada.
mūrukha hṛdayaṁ na cēta jaum gura milahim birañci sama. 16 (b).

Verily indeed, it is said that no matter how much it rains, but the reed never bears flowers or fruits.

Likewise, a fool (especially the one who is under the spell of death and doom) will never learn or understand anything (nor will he rectify his mistakes and change his wayward manners) even if he is advised and shown the correct path by the most learned of teachers, such as the Creator himself¹. (Sortha no. 16-b)

[Note—¹Here the ‘reed’ is used to mean Ravana. He was so stupid and had come under the influence of his doomed destiny that he did not listen to anyone who advised him to avoid a confrontation with Lord Ram as it would ruin him. None of Ravana’s advisors succeeded in bringing him to his senses.]

(iii) Sub-section 12.1.3 = Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 35-b—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38:-

After Mandodari had failed in her three previous attempts to somehow persuade Ravana to abandon his haughtiness and ego that would lead to his ruin, and instead wake up to the realities and make peace with Lord Ram by sending his abducted wife Sita back to him, she felt awfully exasperated and frustrated as well as desperate. She decided to shame Ravana by debunking his boast and bluster of invincibility and infallibility with a list of his failures and weaknesses, asking him where was his valour and strength and courage during those moments where he had to bite dust and put himself to public shame and humiliation. She intended to point out to him that all his claim of invincibility and infallibility, of possessing matchless power and strength fall flat and sound hollow boast when considered in the backdrop of the listed events. She wished to boldly tell him how weak, fragile and ill-prepared he actually is, how deluded he has become by living in an illusionary world of his own dreams which he has managed to conjure up in his imagination just to satisfy is misplaced ego and a sense of false self-pride.

But unfortunately Ravana would not listen to any entreaty and reasoning as he was grabbed by the claws of the God of Death.

In the following verses we read how Mandodari makes a last-ditch effort to make her husband relent and avoid the bloody war with Lord Ram.

साँझ जानि दसकंधर भवन गयउ बिलखाइ । मंदोदरीं रावनहि बहुरि कहा समुझाइ ॥ ३५ (ख) ॥ sām̐jha jāni dasakandhara bhavana gaya'u bilakhā'i.

mandōdarīm rāvanahi bahuri kahā samujhā'i. 35 (b).

[After Angad, Lord Ram’s messenger, had humiliated Ravana in full court and called his bluff of invincibility and infallibility for all the naught it was worth, the demon king was crestfallen and utterly dejected. He dismissed his court, and as it was twilight hours he retired to his palace.]

As evening fell, the ten-headed demon king Ravana went to his palace in a completely disconsolate and somber mood.

[Mandodari was highly upset by the recent developments, and when she observed that her husband Ravana was extremely perturbed she realized that the situation was truly very grave.]

As soon as Ravana entered the palace, Mandodari made another attempt to try and persuade him to abandon his arrogance, and make peace with Lord Ram. (Doha no. 35-b)

चौ०. कंत समुझि मन तजहु कुमतिही । सोह न समर तुम्हहि रघुपतिही ॥ १ ॥
रामानुज लघु रेख खचाई । सोउ नहिं नाघेहु असि मनुसाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kanta samujhi mana tajahu kumatihi. sōha na samara tumhahi raghupatihi.
(1)

rāmānuja laghu rēkha khacāī. sō'u nahim nāghēhu asi manusāī. 2.

She said, ‘My dear husband (kanta)! Ponder earnestly about the developments and think seriously about them in your mind. You ought to abandon your perversity as a confrontation between you and Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) is quite out of the place, for it would bring no glory to you, but only ignominy and shame. (1)

Lord Ram’s younger brother (Laxman) had marked a small circle (around Sita) which you dared not cross (at the time you abducted her)—such is your valour and courage, isn’t it¹? (2)

[Note—¹After all her previous attempts had failed, Mandodari decided to shame her husband by calling his boast a bluff in a final effort to make him realize his weaknesses, fears and failures by citing some instances that highlight his Achilles’ heel.

It seems in all probability that Mandodari chose to put her husband to embarrassment and disgrace by rebuking him and listing all the events that show him in a very poor light as being totally incompetent, impotent and cowardly inspite of his boast and bluster is because Ravana had rebuked her earlier by saying that she, being a woman, has eight faults or shortcoming or weaknesses in her character that are natural to her—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 16.

Mandodari had felt intensely disgusted at Ravana’s above remark at that time because it was totally unwarranted, as her attempt to persuade him to avoid a war with Lord Ram was good intentioned and meant to avoid a calamity befalling her husband, and nothing more. She never meant to insult him or undermine his status as a great warrior whose valour and abilities were undoubted. But after Ravana’s chiding her and calling her weak in character, she decided to turn the tables on him—to prove to him that it was he who had so many weaknesses, instead of her.

The first instance she cites is of the moment when Ravana had gone to kidnap Sita at Panchavati. At that time, Laxman had made a circle on the ground by the tip of his arrow before leaving the hermitage on the insistence of Sita who had compelled him to go in the direction in which Lord Ram had gone pursuing the golden deer in order to help his brother. Laxman had infused this circle with magical charm that if anyone tries to overstep it and come inside he would be burnt. Sita would be safe within it.

Ravana did not dare to cross this cursed circle to grab Sita, so he employed a ruse of assuming the form of a mendicant and asking her for alms which she could give him only by stepping outside the circumference of the circle because Ravana was standing a little away from it. So, as soon as she stepped out of the circle to give him alms, Ravana grabbed her and ran away like a scared animal who has dared to steal a lion's kill in his absence and fears for his own life.

This incident of Laxman drawing a circle around Sita and Ravana not having the courage to cross it is mentioned in a little known book titled "Hanumanna Naatak", in its Canto 8, verse no. 36, and Canto 9, verse no. 9.]

पिय तुम्ह ताहि जितब संग्रामा । जाके दूत केर यह कामा ॥ ३ ॥
 कौतुक सिंधु नाघि तव लंका । आयउ कपि केहरी असंका ॥ ४ ॥
 रखवारे हति बिपिन उजारा । देखत तोहि अच्छ तेहि मारा ॥ ५ ॥
 जारि सकल पुर कीन्हेसि छारा । कहाँ रहा बल गर्ब तुम्हारा ॥ ६ ॥ piya tumha tāhi jitaba saṅgrāmā. jākē dūta kēra yaha kāmā. 3.

 kautuka sindhu nāghi tava laṅkā. āya'u kapi kēharī asaṅkā. 4.
 rakhavārē hati bipina ujārā. dēkhata tōhi accha tēhirī mārā. 5.
 jāri sakala pura kīnhēsi chārā. kahāñ rahā bala garba tumhārā. 6.

My dear (piya)! Do you hope that you can win him (Lord Ram) in a war whose humble messengers had done such marvelous deeds that were recently witnessed by all of us, and which defy imagination? (3)

A monkey (i.e. Hanuman) playfully (i.e. effortlessly) leapt across the mighty ocean and entered Lanka fearlessly as if he was a lion (moving boldly and fearlessly in the forest). (4)

Once here, he had laid to ruin your forest and killed its guards. When your son Akshay Kumar was sent by you to capture him, he too was killed even while you watched. (5)

Not only this, he (Hanuman) had burnt your city of Lanka to ashes¹. Tell me, where was your strength and power, of which you boast so much, at that time; what were you doing?

[Tell me, couldn't you stop Hanuman and prevent the devastation that he had unleashed right under your nose? What to talk of preventing the calamity that befell our city, you could not even punish Hanuman for what he did, for he went away from Lanka unharmed with no single demon warrior having the guts to stop him from escaping. And you could not garner the courage to summon those demon guards who were assigned the duty of protecting the borders of the kingdom, and ask for at least an explanation from them.] (6)

[Note—¹These events are narrated in detail in the fifth Canto called ‘Sundar Kand’ of Ram Charit Manas.]

अब पति मृषा गाल जनि मारहु । मोर कहा कछु हृदयँ बिचारहु ॥ ७ ॥ पति रघुपतिहि नृपति जनि मानहु । अग जग नाथ अतुल बल जानहु ॥ ८ ॥ aba pati mṛṣā gāla jani mārahu. mōra kahā kachu hṛdayaṁ bicārahu. 7.

pati raghupatihi nṛpati jani mānahu. aga jaga nātha atula bala jānahu. 8.

Now my dear husband, do not boast unnecessarily and stop talking bluster; enough is enough. You must pay heed to my advice even now as it is still not too late to make amends. (7)

Oh my husband (pati)! Do not treat the Lord of the Raghus (“raghupati”; Lord Ram) as an ordinary human prince, but regard him as the ‘Lord of the whole world’¹, and one who has immense supernatural powers at his disposal. (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 15.]

बान प्रताप जान मारीचा । तासु कहा नहिं मानेहि नीचा ॥ ९ ॥
जनक सभाँ अगनित भूपाला । रहे तुम्हउ बल अतुल बिसाला ॥ १० ॥
भंजि धनुष जानकी बिआही । तब संग्राम जितेहु किन ताही ॥ ११ ॥

bāna pratāpa jāna māricā. tāsu kahā nahim mānēhi nīcā. 9.
janaka sabhāṁ aganita bhūpālā. rahē tumha'u bala atula bisālā. 10.
bhañji dhanuṣa jānakī bi'āhī. taba saṅgrāma jitēhu kina tāhī. 11.

Marich was fully aware of the might and prowess of his (Lord Ram’s) arrows¹. When you had gone to him (Marich) to ask him to help you abduct Sita, he had tried to tell you the reality and dissuade you from being rash, but you treated him with utter contempt and disdain, not listening to his sane advice which was intended for your own welfare². [What was the result? Marich lost his life for no fault of his. You brought Sita to Lanka, and this led to Hanuman coming here and killing our son Akshay Kumar and setting the city of Lanka on fire. Is it not enough to make you alarmed?] (9)

In the royal court of king Janak, all the great kings and princes of the world had assembled, and you, who claim to possess huge strength and immense powers, were present there too (weren’t you)³. (10)

In that assembly, he (Lord Ram) had broken the bow (of Lord Shiva) and wed the daughter of Janak (i.e. Sita)⁴. Why didn't you challenge him at that time and defeat him in order to claim the hands of Sita right then and there?⁵ (11)

[Note—¹When Marich and Subahu and other demons had gone to disrupt sage Vishwamitra's fire sacrifice which Lord Ram and Laxman were protecting, the Lord had killed all the other demons but spared Marich's life by shooting him with a headless arrow which struck Marich with such a force that he was immediately flung to a far away island in the middle of the ocean. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 210.}

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 26.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 250.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 262; (ii) Doha no. 292.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-8 that precede Doha no. 292.

Aren't you ashamed of yourself? All other assembled kings and princes had at least shown the courage to rise in revolt against Janak, although they were subdued immediately because sage Parashuram had intervened angrily to protest the breaking of the bow. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 266; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 268.}

But you had chosen to escape silently without letting anyone know that you are gone. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 256.}

Tell me, where was your valour and courage and dare devilry then? Had you challenged Lord Ram for a duel at that time and defeated him, you would not only have got Sita as a trophy but would also have gained immense fame and world-wide recognition. Tell me, what stopped you from doing it? Instead of claiming Sita as your rightful prize, you stole her slyly like a thief. Is this how a brave warrior acts; is this the character of a brave soul that you pretend to be? Verily, the actual way you behaved shows you in a very poor light, more like that of a coward and a scoundrel than any warrior worth his name.]

सुरपति सुत जानइ बल थोरा । राखा जिअत आँखि गहि फोरा ॥ १२ ॥

सूपनखा कै गति तुम्ह देखी । तदपि हृदयँ नहिं लाज बिसेषी ॥ १३ ॥ surapati suta jāna'i bala thōrā. rākhā ji'ata āṁkhi gahi phōrā. 12.

sūpanakhā kai gati tumha dēkhī. tadapi hrdayaṁ nahim lāja bisēṣī. 13.

The son of the king of Gods (i.e. Jayant, who was the son of Indra) believed that he (Lord Ram) did not have much strength and powers. But though Jayant committed a grave impropriety yet the Lord spared his life by just blinding him in one eye¹. (12)

You have witnessed the miserable fate that Supernakha had suffered², and yet you aren't ashamed of anything. (13)

[Note—¹This episode is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 2.

Briefly it is this: Jayant doubted the might of Lord Ram, so he assumed the form of a crow and went to prick Sita with his sharp beak. When Lord Ram saw blood oozing out of the wound, he picked a blade of grass and shot it at Jayant. No one in the world dared to shelter him against Lord Ram's arrow. Finally he was advised by sage Narad to go and plead for mercy with Lord Ram. The Lord took pity upon him and said that since his arrow can't go in vain so it would take out one eye of Jayant and spare his life. Thus, the 'crow' was left blinded in one eye.

²This episode is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 22.

Mandodari severely chides Ravana, saying sarcastically, "Supernakha happens to be your sister, and when she came wailing to you to complain that her nose and ears had been cut by Lord Ram, why did you not immediately go and attack him to take revenge and settle scores? Why couldn't you avenge her insult directly instead of taking recourse to deceit and falsehood by becoming a mendicant to steal Lord Ram's wife instead? Is your cowardly, lowly, stupid and mean act not enough to put you to shame?"

दो०. बधि बिराध खर दूषनहि लीलाँ हत्यो कबंध ।

बालि एक सर माख्यो तेहि जानहु दसकंध ॥ ३६ ॥

dōhā.

badhi birādha khara dūṣanahi līlāṁ hatyō kabandha.

bāli ēka sara māryō tēhi jānahu dasakandha. 36.

He (Lord Ram) had slayed, without the least effort as if it was a sporting activity for him, the demons named Viradha¹, Khar, Dushan² and Kabandha³. Not only this, he had slayed Baali⁴ (king of Kishkindha and the elder brother of Sugriv) with a single arrow.

Tell me oh Ravana ("dasakandha"; literally someone with 'ten shoulders', implying 'ten heads', one head over one shoulder)—don't you know about these developments? Aren't you yourself aware that these deaths cannot be caused by an ordinary person; hasn't this thought crossed your mind and caused a lot of alarm to you⁵? (Doha no. 36)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 7.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 20; and Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 23.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 33.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 8; and Sortha no. 33-a.

⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 22 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-36 that follow it.]

चौ०. जेहिं जलनाथ बँधायउ हेला । उतरे प्रभु दल सहित सुबेला ॥ १ ॥
 कारुनीक दिनकर कुल केतू । दूत पठायउ तव हित हेतू ॥ २ ॥ सभा माझ जेहिं तव बल मथा । करि बरूथ महुँ मृगपति जथा ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

jēhiṁ jalanātha baṁdhāya'u hēlā. utarē prabhu dala sahita subēlā. 1.
 kārunīka dinakara kula kētū. dūta paṭhāya'u tava hita hētū. 2.
 sabhā mājha jēhiṁ tava bala mathā. kari barūtha mahuṁ mṛgapati jathā. 3.

He (Lord Ram) had tied the ocean by constructing a bridge across it as if it were a sport for him (i.e. he achieved this stupendous feat of building a bridge across the turbulent surface of the mighty ocean, a feat never ever done heretofore, without the least effort)¹, and then landed in Lanka at Mt. Subel with his formidable army². [Were you asleep then; what were you doing? Why couldn't you stop him from building the bridge first, and then why couldn't you muster courage to stop him from landing in Lanka and pitching the camp for his huge army on Mt. Subel, right under your nose?]
 (1)

That merciful Lord (kārunīka) who is the flag-bearer of the glory of the Solar race (dinakara kula kētū) had been so kind and gracious that he chose to send a messenger of peace to your court keeping in mind your interests and welfare.

[To wit, Lord Ram decided to give a chance to peace by sending Angad as his messenger to you to explore the possibility of making peace and avoiding a war because he is so merciful that he did not wish to willingly become an instrument of your ruin, and instead forgive you for all your mischief in case you realized your mistakes and were willing to relent and make amends.]² (2)

In the middle of the full court that emissary had crushed your strength and trampled upon your honour fearlessly⁴ just like a brave lion enters a herd of elephants and vanquishes their pride by killing one of them⁵. (3)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 4—to Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 5.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 17 where Lord Ram makes his intentions clear, at the time of sending Angad as his emissary to Ravana, that he wants to act in a way that would be conducive for the good and welfare of the demon king although the latter was his enemy and was definitely at fault. The Lord instructs Angad that he should explore the possibility if any strategy can be devised by which whatever is done could be for the welfare and good of Ravana.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 32—to Doha no. 35-a.

Briefly it so happened that Angad, who was sent by Lord Ram to see if something could be done to avoid the war and peace could be restored, and Ravana had a heated argument, each trying to out wit and embarrass the other and talk him down. Their interaction started on a softer note but soon degenerated into a no-holds barred acerbic verbal spat, with both of them shooting volleys of disparaging remarks and scalding taunts at each other, casting aspersions at each other's self-esteem, character, honour and integrity. Tempers rose sharply and the angry verbal dual became exceedingly bitter, sarcastic, caustic, acrimonious and hostile in nature by degrees, with both Ravana and Angad leaving no stone unturned at insulting and out-witting each other.

What started, therefore, as a formal dialogue between Angad and Ravana to explore the possibility of ending hostility by a negotiated settlement of outstanding issues, gradually descended into a dirty cesspool of nasty tit-for-tat involving personal attacks and disparaging comments on each other's character and integrity, leading to a rapid rise in temper, abrasiveness and impertinence of the words used, and the contemptuous tone in the speech employed in the exchange.

This melodramatic episode, with its singularly theatrical histrionics not found elsewhere in the entire story of the Ramayan, is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 20—to Doha no. 35.

At the climax however, when Angad realized that Ravana is not amenable as the latter was exceptionally stubborn and arrogant, as well as in the throes of death and destined for destruction, which had eclipsed his wisdom and blinded his reasoning, he became exasperated so much so that he finally decided to end this meeting by completely demolishing Ravana's pride and esteem, and proving to him that his time was up, and that all his talk of might and power and strength and invincibility was mere bluster and nothing but hollow sound of a drum, a sound that is louder from a drum which is equally large, with a big hollow in the inside.

Thus, before leaving Ravana's court Angad did two things that completely demolished the remnants of Ravana's esteem and dignity in full view of the demon court. The first deed was this: Angad thumped the ground with his clenched fists so violently that there was a minor quake and Ravana lost his balance. All his ten crowns toppled down and fell to the ground; some of these crowns were picked up by Ravana and put on his head, while some were kicked by Angad as if he was kicking a football, and these landed in front of Lord Ram who was sitting in his camp on Mt. Subel. This first deed of Angad to humiliate Ravana is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 32-a along with Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede it.

As if it was not sufficient enough to embarrass and humiliate his adversary Ravana and put him to abject shame in the front of his royal court, Angad did another remarkable thing of bravery and courage that cast a pall of gloom and despair to descend on the entire assembly, leaving Ravana morally defeated and emotionally depressed and dejected and forlorn like a vanquished warrior who has lost all hopes of victory. Angad stamped his foot on the ground with an open challenge to Ravana to move it. The bet was that if Ravana could move Angad's foot then it would be deemed that Ravana has won and Lord Ram has lost, and on the other hand if Ravana could not move Angad's foot then he must concede defeat and surrender. Ravana and many of his demon warriors failed to move Angad's foot, either individually or exerting all their energy and might together. This event signified Ravana's total defeat and his complete moral subjugation; it demoralized him and subjected him to abject humiliation like the one he had never experienced before in his career. This second deed of Angad to humiliate Ravana is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Doha no. 35-a.

⁵The analogy is apt here because Ravana was surrounded by so many of his brave demon warriors whereas Angad was all alone. The lion is not afraid by a herd of elephants; it would pounce on the back of one of them to kill his prey even as other elephants may watch in vain.

The same idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 19.]

अंगद हनुमत अनुचर जाके । रन बाँकुरे बीर अति बाँके ॥ ४ ॥ तेहि कहँ पिय पुनि पुनि नर कहहू । मुधा मान ममता मद बहहू ॥ ५ ॥ aṅgada hanumata anucara jākē. rana bāṁkurē bīra ati bāṁkē. 4.

tēhi kahaṁ piya puni puni nara kahahū. mudhā māna mamatā mada bahahū.
5.

It is such an aggravated irony of a doomed fate that you are unable to see the reality that stares right in your face, and you have become blind to it. Why, don't you know that Hanuman and Angad are exceptionally able, strong and brave warriors who have no match in this world, who are so dauntless in battle?

The gentleman whom they serve so diligently, loyally, faithfully and obediently, how stupid it is for you to treat that person (i.e. Lord Ram) as an ordinary human being¹? Why do you wish to carry the burden of guilt on your head; why are you so driven by a false sense of pride and made irrational by arrogance that you can't see what is obvious.

[To wit, why don't you understand that there must be something unique and great in Lord Ram that these two mighty warriors Angad and Hanuman chose to serve him and seek his refuge? They don't raise their heads before Lord Ram, and do what they are told to do without as much as asking 'why'. Then say, why don't you come to terms with reality and end your hostility with Lord Ram?] (4-5)

[Note—¹Any great warrior worth his name would not like to serve anyone so humbly and obediently, without as much as even raising his head before the master or lord they serve or ask any question or requesting to be told the rationale behind any instruction issued by the master to him, like the way Angad and Hanuman serve Lord Ram.

Surely both Angad and Hanuman must have observed something unique in Lord Ram that convinced them he was not an ordinary human being but someone who possessed supernatural powers, someone who is divine and great, someone who is endowed with some extraordinarily great mystical powers.

So here Mandodari severely chides her husband Ravana why is he not able to see tell-tale signs that are self-evident. After all, did Ravana not see the prowess of Hanuman when he had killed his son Akshay Kumar and had fearlessly burnt Lanka and equally fearlessly went back from the city, with no one daring to stop him? Then once again, Angad has trounced his pride and crushed his honour and self-esteem in full view of the court, and like Hanuman he too went back unchallenged.

Are these not enough signs of their fearlessness, boldness, courage, valour, prowess, strength, invincibility and dare devilry that have surpassed even the combined might of the whole demon army that prides itself for these grand virtues that make for a great warrior?

Surely then there must be something special in Lord Ram that motivated and inspired both Angad and Hanuman to seek the Lord's blessing and patronage, and serve him so faithfully and diligently.]

अहह कंत कृत राम बिरोधा । काल बिबस मन उपज न बोधा ॥ ६ ॥

काल दंड गहि काहु न मारा । हरइ धर्म बल बुद्धि बिचारा ॥ ७ ॥

निकट काल जेहि आवत साई । तेहि भ्रम होइ तुम्हारिहि नाई ॥ ८ ॥ ahaha kanta kṛta rāma birōdhā. kāla bibasa mana upaja na bōdhā. 6.

kāla daṇḍa gahi kāhu na mārā. hara'i dharma bala bud'dhi bicārā. 7.
nikaṭa kāla jēhi āvata sālīm. tēhi bhrama hō'i tumhārihi nālīm. 8.

Alas my beloved husband (ahaha kanta)! It is so unfortunate and sad that inspite of being aware of all the above facts you still chose to be hostile to Lord Ram. It is because you are under the firm grip of 'Kaal' (the factor of 'time' that governs the span of a living being's life in this mortal world) so much that all your wisdom and intelligence and prudence have been eclipsed. (6)

Verily indeed, 'Kaal' does not kill anyone by hitting him with a baton, but it employs a subtle way of achieving that end, and that way is by robbing the doomed creature's goodness and virtues by which he might have done good deeds, acted righteously, practiced probity and propriety in life and his dealings with others, or by robbing his strength so quietly and imperceptibly that the affected creature is not even aware that he has become very weak till the time of testing his strength comes, or by clouding his wisdom, decimating his intelligence and the power to think rightly to such an extent that he is turned into a dumb-witted and worthless stupid fellow who is not even shadow of his former illustrious self. (7)

My lord (sālīm)! When Kaal comes calling near a creature then the latter becomes as deluded and overcome by hallucinations as has become of you.

[To wit, when the end of a person is near then he will do all the wrong things and take all the wrong decisions, and no matter how hard it is tried to show him that he is treading a wrong path that would lead to his ruin, he simply wouldn't listen. The same thing applies to you it certainly seem, for you too appear to be under the firm grip of Kaal so much so that your wisdom and intelligence seem to have totally abandoned you, leaving you sinking in a dark void of delusions and hallucinations that have prompted you to slide towards your own destruction. Alas, it is so sad and dismaying that this seems to be the fiat of your fate and the writ of your destiny over which no one has any control whatsoever.] (8)

दो०. दुइ सुत मरे दहेउ पुर अजहुँ पूर पिय देहु । कृपासिंधु रघुनाथ भजि नाथ बिमल जसु लेहु ॥ ३७ ॥

dōhā.

du'i suta marē dahē'u pura ajahuṁ pūra piya dēhu.
krpāsindhu raghunātha bhaji nātha bimala jasu lēhu. 37.

Two of you sons have died; your city has been burnt to ashes¹. Oh my dear husband (piya)! In spite of these calamities, your body is still whole, and you are unharmed as yet².

Oh Lord (nātha); worship Lord Raghunath (Lord Ram) who is like an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness. By doing this you will gain good fame and pure glory (as this act of yours would be auspicious, righteous and proper, and it would automatically have its due rewards)³. (Doha no. 37)

[Note—¹You boast so much of your valour and strength. Tell me—where were you and what had happened to you famed valour, strength and powers when your sons died and when your city of Lanka was burnt to ashes? Why didn't, and why couldn't, you stop these calamities happening right under your nose? Why couldn't you stop Kaal from carrying out these two things—killing your sons and having your city burnt? So how will you stop the same Kaal from killing you? Don't you realise that Kaal has been emboldened by your inability to stop him then, and so now this time around the Kaal will strike you harder, and with more confidence.

Who were the two sons of Ravana that Mandodari mentioned as being killed, and by whom were they killed?

The first son was Akshay Kumar, and he was slayed by Hanuman—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 18 and Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.

The second son was killed by Angad when he had gone as Lord Ram's emissary to Ravana. This son was as bad mannered as his father Ravana. He was playing when Angad met him. The interaction that followed between the two soon became heated and acerbic. Ravana's son, as was his habit, raised his leg to kick Angad, at which the latter grabbed him and smashed him to the ground, instantly killing Ravana's second son. This event occurred prior to Mandodari's fourth and last attempt to persuade Ravana to end his hostile attitude towards Lord Ram, and it is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-7 that precede Doha no. 18.

²To wit, though horribly frightening things have been happening here, yet you are still safe, and therefore you still have time to take precautionary steps that no further damage is done, and no personal harm comes to you. It is said that one must save the harvest while there is time. So you must take immediate remedial measures to avoid further damage.

³If you abandon hostility towards Lord Ram and return his wife Sita, whom you have wrongfully stolen, then be sure this deed of yours will give you immense fame and glory—because it is the right thing to do.

On the other hand, even if you manage to win the war, you will get nothing but infamy and ignominy as a person who was so highly pervert, sinful, evil and unscrupulous that he abducted another person's wife to satisfy his lust, and when that person came to free his wife you had the temerity to defeat him in battle just to prove that you are more powerful. But this proving of your might, even if it's successfully achieved, is not with some auspicious and righteous objective, but it is to satisfy your perversity, arrogance and rapacity.

How do you imagine that this thing would give you any good name? No, I must tell you that it would be a very shameful and ignominious victory even if you do become victorious in the war! I'd be myself ashamed to call you my husband in such a scenario.]

चौ०. नारि बचन सुनि बिसिख समाना । सभाँ गयउ उठि होत बिहाना ॥ १ ॥

बैठ जाइ सिंघासन फूली । अति अभिमान त्रास सब भूली ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

nāri bacana suni bisikha samānā. sabhāṁ gaya'u uṭhi hōta bihānā. 1.
baitha jā'i siṅghāsana phūlī. ati abhimāna trāsa saba bhūlī. 2.

The stern words of Mandodari that were shot at Ravana were like sharp arrows that wounded his pride and ego¹.

[The night passed, and—] The next morning Ravana went to his court. (1)

He forgot (or pretended to forget) all his worries and fears, and sat very proudly on his throne (putting up a bold face, and letting all the demons know that their king is fearless and not at all worried by the impending war)². (2)

[Note—¹Mandodari's scorching rebuke left Ravana squirming in embarrassment; he was stunned, peeved and exasperated all at once. But how much he may have become angry inside himself and appalled at his wife's audacity to tell him all the things that she boldly dared to say, things surely he wouldn't have like to hear, yet he still kept quiet as he knew that she was speaking the truth. It goes to Ravana's credit that he did not take any revenge against Mandodari throughout the war for speaking the truth on his face.

But why; why did he not take revenge on Mandodari? There are reasons for this: One reason is that whatever she told him, no matter how bitter it may have been, were said in private, in their personal apartment, and not in public as was the case with others such as his own brother Vibhishan, then again his other brother Kumbhakaran, and his trusted messenger Suka, as well as his aged courtier Malayawant. On all these occasions Ravana had shown his anger at the speaker because it was a public chiding of a kingdom's king, which obviously no sovereign would tolerate. The other reason is that Ravana loved Mandodari, and her repeated pleadings only proved to him that she too loved him intensely as she felt no hesitation in pointing out his weaknesses on his face inspite of being aware that all others who had advised him almost on the same lines were punished.

We read in Adhyatma Ramayan of Veda Vyas, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 36-61, that towards the end of the war Ravana has explicitly told Mandodari that she should stop worrying about him as he has willingly chosen to die at the hands of Lord Ram because he knows the Lord to be an incarnation of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, and by dying at the Lord's hands he would be able to free his soul (Atma) that is trapped inside his evil body of a demon. This would grant him deliverance, emancipation and salvation as well as eternal peace, bliss and beatitude all at one go. What better could it be! So, since he is fighting this war for his own good, as well as for the good of all other demons who would die before Lord Ram and are sure to find deliverance themselves, he must not be stopped, and neither will he.

Forsooth and without gainsay therefore, Ravana had not fought Lord Ram because the Lord was his worldly enemy whose wife he had wished to keep, as the world thinks, but because this fight was the only way by which Ravana's sacred Atma, his soul and pure consciousness that is eternally pure and holy, would be freed from his evil body of a demon which had become like a hard shell of a coconut or a walnut that is not easy to break. Just as these hard shells need an external medium to break them, Ravana's soul too needed an external medium to pierce his body so that his Atma could escape from the slit thus formed and find its freedom.

And Ravana had been correct in his thinking, for when he finally died his soul emerged from his body as a shaft of dazzling light and went straight to enter the body of Lord Ram, signifying the merger of the individual Atma with the cosmic Atma that Lord Ram represented. This fact has been clearly narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 103; and Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 78-79.

The celestial sage Narad had made it absolutely clear to the assembled gods, who were very astonished at Ravana's soul merging with the Soul of Lord Ram, that even though the world recognized Ravana as an evil demon but he was pure and holy internally, and that he had fought the Lord not out of any animosity but with the sole objective of attaining liberation and deliverance of his soul, to find emancipation and salvation for his tormented self, for attaining eternal beatitude and felicity that is usually not available to even the most learned sages and ascetics. Refer: (i) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 11, verse nos. 80-87; and (ii) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 114.

And what about others; what about the fate of Ravana's demon army and its individual soldiers who had laid down their lives in the battle-field? Well, they too attained deliverance and emancipation. This is explicitly said in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-9 that precede Doha no. 114.

²This external show of confidence and defiance was a very necessary strategy for Ravana so as to keep the morale of his army high. If he had sulked and given the slightest hint that he is worried and upset then the war would have been lost even before its beginning. And if that happened, if his demons had deserted him in the beginning en masse, then all his planning of dying and finding liberation for his soul would have come to a naught.]

-----**-----

Section 12.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

{Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand,
Canto 10, verse nos. 36-61}

Towards the end of the war, Ravana went to Sukracharya, the Guru or preceptor of the demon race, to advice him some way to win the war. On the latter's advice Ravana decided to do a fire sacrifice that would enable him to emerge victorious. When smoke from this sacrifice rose up into the sky and was spotted by Vibhishan, he became very alarmed. In order to stop Ravana from completing the fire sacrifice successfully, a detachment of monkey troops was sent. These soldiers disrupted the fire sacrifice, and in the melee that followed, Mandodari was dragged out of her palace and gravely insulted. Unable to restrain himself and continue with the ritual of the fire sacrifice any more in the face of such aggravated humiliation of his chaste and loving wife, Ravana got up, and this effectively disrupted the completion of the sacrifice.

Mandodari was lamenting and grieving very remorsefully. She regretted that all her attempts to persuade her husband to abandon hostility with Lord Ram had failed, culminating in her public insult and abject humiliation the like of which no queen was ever subjected to earlier. When Ravana observed her extremely sad countenance and saw that she was very dejected and dismayed, he decided to finally tell her the truth that whatever he has chosen to do, which was to fight this war with Lord Ram, was a conscious decision on his part.

Mandodari however tried for the last time to convince Ravana that Lord Ram was not an ordinary human being whom he thinks he could win in battle. At that time, Ravana had cleared all doubts in her mind as to why he had chosen to fight the Lord and die at his hands—he confided with her that he fully knows that Lord Ram was a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, and it is with this knowledge that he wishes to die at his hands, because it is the only way left for him to free his soul that is trapped inside his evil body of a demon. When he is killed by the Lord he will attain Mukti—i.e. his Atma or the 'true self' would find deliverance from this mortal gross world, and attain emancipation and salvation for itself. This death would grant him eternal peace and beatitude. So Mandodari ought naught to worry or lament; there is aught naught to grieve about anything at all. On the other hand, it is time for her to celebrate that her husband was finally on the threshold of attaining eternal liberation and deliverance from the ignominy of being an evil demon.

Ravana's discourse shows that he had a philosophical bent of mind and was well-versed in the principles of metaphysics.

This episode is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 36-61.

Now, let us read it.

रवणस्तु ततो भार्यामुवाच परिस्रान्त्वयन् ।
दैवाधीनमिदं भदे जीवता किं न दृश्यते ।
त्यज शोकं विशालाक्षि ज्ञानमालम्ब्य निश्चितम् ॥ ३६॥

अज्ञानप्रभवः शोकः शोको ज्ञानविनाशकृत् । अज्ञानप्रभवाहन्धीः शरीरादिष्वनात्मसु ॥ ३७॥ rāvaṇastu tato bhāryāmuṇvāca parisāntvayan । daivādhīnamidaṃ bhadre jīvatā kiṃ na dṛśyate । tyaja śokaṃ viśālākṣi jñānamālambya niścitam ॥ 36॥ ajñānaprabhavaḥ śokaḥ śoko jñānavināśakṛt । ajñānaprabhavāhandhīḥ śarīrādiṣvanātmasu ॥ 37॥

36-37. Ravana consoled his wife and said, 'Oh Bhadre (a term used for a noble lady)! All types of sorrow and joy are dependent upon one's destiny—is this not visible (or apparent, obvious) to a living being? [To wit, happiness and unhappiness come to a person because it is destined so. No one can help it, and therefore it is better to maintain internal peace and calmness in both the situations.]

So, oh the broad-eyed one, relying on this established wisdom and having this knowledge, you must stop lamenting and regretting, you ought to stop feeling so remorseful and sorrowful (36).

Sorrows, remorse, miseries, consternations, gloom, dismay etc. have their origin (or cause) in ignorance or unawareness of truthful knowledge of reality as well as in the absence of wisdom, and they in turn destroy one's ability to think rationally and wisely, using the faculty of discrimination and intelligence properly.

Having ego, pride and a sense (feeling, perception) of 'me, I, mine' etc. in the body, which is gross and 'non-Atma', is also due to ignorance and absence of wisdom and truthful knowledge¹. (37)

[Note—¹To wit, a living being's body is gross and non-conscious; it is separate and distinct from the person's true self which is known as his Atma. This Atma is pure consciousness and the 'true self' of a creature as compared to his physical gross body which is merely a habitat of the Atma. To regard the body and the Atma as one is nothing but stupidity. The Atma, the entity that is the 'true self' of all living beings, is eternal and imperishable, whereas the body is gross and mortal; the Atma never dies while the body is destined to die. So, where is the cause that makes you so sorry about my dying?

Well, the person for whose safety you worry so much is not my gross physical body that is visible to you; it is my Atma which you can't see. Rest assured that this Atma is safe and sound; it is eternal and imperishable. You ought to actually celebrate that your husband's 'true identity', i.e. his soul, will finally be freed from the horrors of being trapped inside the body of a demon, but it is an irony that you weep and lament. This proves that you are totally ignorant of the truth and reality about the principles of life and creation. Remember one thing: he who has been born with a gross body must certainly die, but this 'death' is limited to his gross body and not to his true self which is eternal. This 'self' merely leaves the old body to migrate to another. This cycle continues. But if the 'self' wants true freedom then there is only one way—which is to merge the individual's 'self', i.e. his Atma which is his soul and pure consciousness, with the Supreme Self known as the Parmatma, the cosmic Consciousness. It is like dropping the water of a small pot into the ocean—the microcosm merging with the macrocosm, which removes their distinction.]

तन्मूलः पुत्रदारादिसम्बन्धः संसृतिस्ततः ।
 हर्षशोकभयक्रोधलोभमोहस्पृहादयः ॥ ३८॥
 अज्ञानप्रभवा ह्येते जन्ममृत्युजरादयः ।
 आत्मा तु केवलं शुद्धो व्यतिरिक्तो ह्यलेपकः ॥ ३९॥ tanmūlaḥ putradārādisambandhaḥ saṁsṛtistataḥ । harṣaśokabhayakrodhalobhamohasprhādayaḥ ॥ 38॥ ajñānaprabhavā hyete janmamṛtyujarādayaḥ । ātmā tu kevalaṁ śuddho vyatirikto hyalepakaḥ ॥ 39॥

38-39. This false ego or sense of belonging or identification of the soul with the external, gross body is at the root of all illusions (deceptive relationships) that one develops with other living beings in this world. To wit, all relationships that a person has with others in this world, such as treating another person as a son, a wife or any other kind kith and kin, is basically wrong as it is limited to a relationship that develops between the external gross bodies of two individuals; it has nothing to do with their 'true self' or 'true identity' which is Atma, the pure conscious soul.

This being the case, all sense of attachment that is based on worldly relationships that are limited to the physical gross body of two living beings are inherently wrong and fallacious.

The irony is that this sense of attachment, though fundamentally false and erroneous, becomes the cause of all troubles for a creature. It gives him joy and sorrows; it is the cause of all fears, anger, greed, infatuation, envy and jealousy that torment an ignorant person. (38)

The many aspects or facets of life of a person in this gross mortal world, such as birth, growth, death, disease etc., are all concerned and limited to his gross body, and not to his Atma.

[To wit, it is the body that takes birth, grows into an adult, becomes old and sick, and one day dies. The Atma is immune to all such changes, because it is immortal and a constant entity.]

Therefore, to grieve for a person's death or worry about his death is totally wrong and based on ignorance.

Verily indeed, the Atma is an independent entity, separate and distinct from the body as well as everything related to it, and hence it has no relationships of any kind.

[So therefore, why do you think that I am your husband and you are my wife? Why do you lament that I will die, for it is my gross body that will die and not my eternal Atma. Why don't you realize the truth and be glad that at last I, whom you love so much, am on the threshold of deliverance and salvation? Verily, you ought to rejoice and celebrate instead of grieving and lamenting.] (39)

आनन्दरूपो ज्ञानात्मा सर्वभावविवर्जितः । न संयोगो वियोगो वा विद्यते केनचित्सतः ॥ ४०॥
 एवं ज्ञात्वा स्वमात्मानं त्यज शोकमनिन्दिते ।

इदानीमेव गच्छामि हत्वा रामं सलक्ष्मणम् ॥ ४१॥
 आगमिष्यामि नो चेन्मां दारयिष्यति सायकैः । श्रीरामो वज्रकल्पैश्च ततो गच्छामि तत्पदम् ॥ ४२॥ ānandarūpo jñānātmā sarvabhāvavivarjitaḥ । na saṁyogo viyogo vā vidyate kenacitsataḥ ॥ 40॥ evaṁ jñātvā svamātmānaṁ tyaja śokamanindite । idānīmeva gacchāmi hatvā rāmaṁ salakṣmaṇaṁ ॥ 41॥ āgamiṣyāmi no cenmāṁ dārayiṣyati sāyakaiḥ । śrīrāmo vajrakalpaiśca tato gacchāmi tatpadam ॥ 42॥

40-42. That Atma is an embodiment of pure bliss, peace, tranquility and happiness; it is pure; it has true knowledge and wisdom; it is free from all feelings, emotions or sentiments. That image or an embodiment of 'eternal truth' does not have a union or separation with anybody or anything (40).

Oh the eternal, blissful one¹! Forsake sorrows, lamentations, grieving, mourning and gloom of all kind! Realise the true nature of your soul (your Atma) and become cheerful. I am going right now—either I shall return after killing (overcoming and defeating) Lord Sri Ram and his younger brother Laxman (41), or Lord Ram will perforate me and cut me into pieces by his arrows which are as strong as Vajra (Indra's weapon). In the latter event I shall attain a stature that would make me as exalted as the Lord himself.

[To wit, if I die, if my physical gross body is killed by arrows shot by Lord Ram, then my Atma would be able to make its exit from it, and then it will merge with the cosmic Atma that Lord Ram represents. In this event, obviously 'I', that is my Atma which is my true self, shall attain an exalted stature as the Lord himself! So what is there to worry about?] (42).

[Note—¹Here Ravana is addressing Mandodari, but not her physical self in the form of her body but her Atma which is her 'true self'. This is why he calls her 'eternal and blissful' as these are the virtues the Atma, the soul.]

तदा त्वया मे कर्तव्या क्रिया मच्छासनात्प्रिये ।
 सीतां हत्वा मया सार्धं त्वं प्रवेक्ष्यसि पावकम् ॥ ४३॥
 एवं श्रुत्वा वचस्तस्य शवणस्यातिदुःखिता । उवाच नाथ मे वाक्यं शृणु सत्यं तथा कुरु ॥ ४४॥

tadā tvayā me kartavyā kriyā macchāsanātpriye । sītāṁ hatvā mayā sārdhaṁ tvaṁ pravekṣyasi pāvakam ॥ 43॥ evaṁ śrutvā vacastasya rāvaṇasyātiduḥkhitā । uvāca nātha me vākyaṁ śṛṇu satyaṁ tathā kuru ॥ 44॥

43-44. [Expressing his last wish, in case he dies in the battle-field, Ravana tells Mandodari—] 'Oh dear! By my command, by my orders, you must do one last thing for me—you must kill Sita and enter the cremation fire with me (i.e. my dead body in case I am killed in the war with Lord Ram)¹.' (43).

Hearing these words of Ravana, Mandodari became very distressed, dismayed and gloomy. She said, 'Oh Lord! I tell you what is proper and truthful. Listen to it and act with wisdom and prudence (44).

[Note—¹Ravana's wish to have Sita killed and then Mandodari enter the fire to burn herself along with the dead body of her husband has many ramifications. Let us see why he instructed Mandodari to do so.

To begin with, there was nothing surprising in this wish of Ravana that Sita be killed if he lost the war. This is a standard military strategy of despots and tyrants—let not the enemy get what is considered a prized victory. By getting rid of Sita, Ravana wished to ensure that Lord Sri Ram would be wringing his hands in utmost disgust, abject frustration, distress and dismay after the initial euphoria of winning the battle when he finds out that Sita is dead. It would prove disastrous for Sri Ram—and in spite of having won physical victory over Ravana in the battle he would have, in effect, ultimately lost the war because Sita would not be found alive!

Though there seems to be no clarity in what exactly Ravana meant or intended, but it is quite possible that he meant that when Mandodari would try to carry out his orders she will discover the truth of what he was about to say in a few moments—that he knows that Sita was not an ordinary human being but a manifestation of goddess Laxmi, and therefore she can't be killed! This will go a long way to prove to his wife as well as the world at large that he was well aware of the divine nature of Sita even though he made a great show to the contrary.

By ordering Mandodari to burn herself along with his dead body he wished to ensure that Mandodari was not subjected to humiliation and insult and torture when the conquering army of Lord Ram finds out that Sita— for whom the whole war took place in the first place— is no more. It is very possible that they would wreak the severest form of vengeance upon Mandodari. Ravana's assumptions are not out of place after what Angad and his companions did to her just a while ago to disrupt Ravana's fire sacrifices as narrated in verse nos. 24-28 of this Canto no. 10. Ravana feared for the worst. But as it eventually happened, Mandodari did not keep his last wish. This is probably because Ravana had said so in a fit of disgust and rage, and not with a cool head. It was a reckless instruction given in the background of disruption of his fire sacrifice by the troops of Lord Ram. One is left to wonder the course the story of the Ramayana would have taken had Mandodari carried out Ravana's last wish of killing Sita and burning herself!

And was not Ravana's prophesy true as regards Mandodari, that her loyalty and chastity would be severely compromised if she does not die along with him? Yes, Ravana was proved correct—because his younger brother Vibhishan had later on kept Mandodari as his second wife or even as a mistress though he already had a wife named Sarma. {This is indeed a fact, and it is clearly hinted at in Tulsidas' classical book on the story of the Ramayana called 'Kavitawali Ramayan', in its Uttar Kand, verse no. 5, line no. 2.} Ravana wanted to avoid this situation; he did not want that his beloved wife should be kept either as a wife or as a mistress by his own younger brother. This is why he asked her to burn herself in his funeral pyre.

But Mandodari failed to keep either of Ravana's wish—she neither even attempted to harm Sita nor did she herself end her life after Ravana's death. This puts all claims of Mandodari of being loyal and faithful to her husband Ravana, and of being wise and righteous and auspicious, fall flat on its face. She did not bother even to honour the last wishes of her husband!

But the question arises: Why was Ravana so determined to fight a war that he was apparently going to lose and die in? The answer is found in verse nos. 55-61 herein below which clearly state the reason why Ravana did not pay heed to Mandodari's entreaty and advice to cease hostility. It also shows that he was certain of death, even determined to embrace it, and lays down the reasons why he wished Mandodari to die with him. He wished that all those who were associated with him must be killed in the presence of Sri Ram who was the supreme Lord himself. With this thinking as a backdrop of the war, one concludes that Ravana was being very wise in all his actions and deeds. In fact, by getting the sinful demons killed at the hands of the Lord God (Sri Ram), he had ensured their spiritual well-being and eternal life. All their sins and vices were purged and they obtained deliverance from this mundane and sinful existence as a 'demon'.]

शक्यो न राघवो जेतुं त्वया चान्यैः कदाचन ।
रामो देववरः साक्षात्प्रधानपुरुषेश्वरः ॥ ४५॥
मत्स्यो भूत्वा पुरा कल्पे मनुं वैवस्वतं प्रभुः । ररक्ष सकलापद्भ्यो राघवो भक्तवत्सलः ॥ ४६॥

śakyo na rāghavo jetuṃ tvayā cānyaiḥ kadācana । rāmo devavaraḥ sāṅṣātpradhānapuruṣeśvaraḥ ॥ 45॥ matsyo bhūtvā purā kalpe manuṃ vaivasvataṃ prabhuḥ । rarakṣa sakalāpadbhyo rāghavo bhaktavatsalaḥ ॥ 46॥

45-46. [Mandodari said—] Raghav (Lord Ram) cannot be conquered by you or anybody else at any time. Lord Sri Ram is the supreme and the most exalted Lord, the chief supreme Purush (macrocosmic Soul or the Viraat Purush; the chief male aspect of creation), and the Lord of Gods (45).

Raghav (Lord Ram), who is the beloved of his devotees, and who is benevolent and munificent towards them, had assumed the form of the legendary Fish¹ (matsya) and protected Vaivastamanu from all his troubles at the beginning of this Kalpa (one cycle of creation and destruction; a epoch or an era) (46).

[Note—¹This refers to one of the earlier incarnations of Lord Vishnu. In this incarnation as a Fish or Matsya, which is the first of ten divine incarnations of Vishnu, the Lord is said to have saved Manu, the progenitor of mankind, and the Saptarishis (the seven mental sons of the creator Brahma) along with their wives during the dooms-day deluge. They were made to board a boat which was pulled by this Fish and saved from being drowned. They re-populated the world later on. It is a story identical to the Biblical story of the Noah's Arc.]

रामः कूर्मोऽभवत्पूर्वं लक्षयोजनविस्तृतः ।
समुद्रमथने पृष्ठे दधार कनकाचलम् ॥ ४७॥
हिरण्याक्षोऽतिदुर्वृतो हतोऽनेन महात्मना ।

क्रोडरूपेण वपुषा क्षोणीमुद्धरता क्वचित् ॥ ४८॥

rāmaḥ kūrmo'bhavatpūrvam lakṣayojanavistr̥taḥ । samudramathane pr̥ṣṭhe dadhāra kanakācalam ॥ 47॥ hiranyākṣo'tidurvṛtto hato'nena mahātmanā । kroḍarūpeṇa vapuṣā kṣoṇīmuddharatā kvacit ॥ 48॥

47-48. Lord Ram was the one who had become (i.e. manifested himself as) the legendary Tortoise in some ancient time (rāmaḥ kūrmo'bhavatpūrvam)¹. The Tortoise had a body extending up to 1 lakh (100 thousand) Yojans (i.e. eight hundred-thousand miles appx.). At the time of the churning of the legendary ocean, it was he (the Tortoise) who had borne (supported) the mountain called Sumeru on his back (47).

During another of the earlier times, he had assumed the form of the legendary Boar (kroḍarūpeṇa)² and this great soul had slayed the most wicked, mischievous and pervert demon named Hiranyaksha, while liberating the earth from his clutches (48).

[Note—¹The Tortoise incarnation of Vishnu—It is the second incarnation of Vishnu. The Lord had supported the legendary Mountain called Mandara, also known as Sumeru, which had started sinking during the churning of the ocean by the Gods and the Demons in search of Amrit, the elixir of eternal and life.

²The Boar incarnation of Vishnu—It is the third incarnation of Vishnu in which he killed the demon Hiranyaaksha and lifted the earth from the flood water where it had vanished. According to some versions, this demon had hidden the earth in the bowls of the ocean. This extrication and resurrection of the earth is a symbolic way of saying that the Lord saves the creation from being submerged in the vast ocean of sins and evil. An Upanishad preached by Lord Varaaha appears in the Krishna Yajur Veda tradition as its 30th Upanishad. The female aspect of Varaaha is known as Goddess Vaaraahi.]

त्रिलोककण्टकं दैत्यं हिरण्यकशिपुं पुरा । हतवान्नारसिंहेन वपुषा रघुनन्दनः ॥ ४९॥
विक्रमैस्त्रिभिरेवासौ बलिं बद्ध्वा जगत्त्रयम् ।
आक्रम्यादात्सुरेन्द्राय भृत्याय रघुसत्तमः ॥ ५०॥ trilokakaṇṭakaṁ daityaṁ hiranyakaśipuṁ purā । hatavānnārasimhena vapuṣā raghunandanah ॥ 49॥ vikramaistribhirevāsau balim baddhvā jagattrayam । ākramyādātsurendrāya bhr̥tyāya raghusattamaḥ ॥ 50॥

49-50. This Raghunandan (a son born in the family of the great king Raghu of Ayodhya; Lord Ram) had killed Hiranyakshipu, who was like a thorn for the three worlds (i.e. the celestial, the terrestrial and the subterranean worlds), by assuming the body of half-man half-lion known as Narsingha (or Nrisingh)¹ (49).

The same great Lord who is the most exalted in Raghu's family, i.e. Lord Ram, had tied king Bali, measured the entire world consisting of three divisions (as mentioned above) in three of his steps, and returned it to his devotee or servant or subordinate called Indra, the king of the gods. [This event refers to Lord Vishnu's incarnation as Lord Vaaman, the dwarf mendicant.]² (50).

[Note—¹The Nrisingh/Narsingh or half man and half lion incarnation of Vishnu was done protect Prahalad, Lord Vishnu's child devotee, who was being tormented by his demon father named Hiranyakashipu because of his devotion for the Lord whom the demon by nature loathed. Lord Vishnu slayed the demon and freed Prahalad from the constant fear of death and harassment to which he was subjected.

After having killed the demon, Nrisingh started roaming in the forests, striking terror in the hearts of all the creatures. It was then that Shiva, the universal Lord who has been honoured with the epithet of 'Mahadev' as he is the greatest and supreme God, had assumed the form of Sharav, the killer, and liberated Vishnu from the body of Nrisingh. {Refer Sharav Upanishad of Atharva Veda, verse no. 8.} Thus liberated, Vishnu had thanked him a lot (refer Sharav Upanishad of Atharva Veda, verse no. 19) and went to his divine abode called Vaikunth. So this ferocious form of Shiva known as Sharav was also called 'Rudra', the angry and ferocious form of the Lord. One can imagine the fight that might have raged between Nrisingh and Rudra, and obviously Rudra must have been more ferocious than Nrisingh in order to subdue the latter.

This 'half lion and half man' form of the Lord is a visible image that has a cosmic counterpart as the 'half man and half female' manifestation of the Lord that is known as 'Ardha-Narishwar'. This cosmic form of Brahm as Ardha-Narishwar has two components—the right half is depicted in iconography as being a male representing Shiva, the great God, the other half is female representing his divine Shakti known as Parvati or Uma. This Shakti represents the dynamic energy of Shiva. When this applies to Brahm, the male aspect refers to the Supreme Being himself while the female aspect applies to Maya which is the dynamic power that Brahm employed to initiate this magical creation. This depiction is basically envisioned to drive home the point that Brahm and Shakti are inseparable in the context of the creation of the world. This elementary method of reproduction is known as 'asexual reproduction' and is depicted by many asexual plants and animals even today. For instance, the one-celled amoeba reproduces itself by cleavage. On the other hand, if we were to regard Brahm in its purest form as the cosmic Consciousness, then Brahm would not need the other half of the Maya, and would only be one and universal entity which has no definite and describable form and shape, it has no characteristic features, attributes and qualities. This form of the sublime and most subtle Brahm is known as either the Hiranyagarbha or the Viraat Purush depending upon the level of subtlety and grossness which is assigned to it, the former being more subtle than the latter.

The 'lion' part is a metaphor for the grand qualities of unmatched authority, stupendous strength, physical prowess and complete and unchallenged sway over the entire domain of creation just like a lion has over the forest and its inhabitant wild animals. This term is symbolic of the inherent stupendous might of the supreme Brahm as the unquestioned and powerful Lord of this forest-like world inhabited by myriad varieties of living beings, called the Jivas, just like a dense forest infested by wild animals. Similarly, the 'man' part symbolizes the fact that Brahm is the most highly placed Lord much like a human being who represents the highest level in the ladder of evolution.

In other words, even as the lion is the unquestioned lord of the wilds and the man is of all the living beings, the supreme transcendental Brahm is the unquestioned Lord of all that exists with all its variations in this creation, whether in its primary form represented by the wild and primitive animals of the jungle or in its more evolved and developed form represented by the man, with all the other stages of creation included in between these two.

Lord Nrisingh is the fourth incarnation of the Supreme Being who had taken various forms to ward off and overcome evil forces in creation when they become ascendant and overcame the good and the righteous. The Lord did this to maintain order in the creation which is like his offspring.

So when one of his great devotees known as Prahalaad was being extremely tormented by his own father, the demon Hiranyakashipu, the Lord appeared as Nrisingh—or as a half lion and half man form—from the pillar to which the innocent lad was tied by the demon to prove to him the omnipresence and all-pervading form of the Supreme Being. Nrisingh is a personification of the grand virtues of dynamism, power, energy, valour and strength, and hence is worshipped by warriors and rulers in general. The Mantra of this Lord is believed to be very powerful and effective against enemies and opponents.

²The Dwarf incarnation of Vishnu, which is called ‘Vaaman’—This is the fifth incarnation of Vishnu and an ancient one, for it took place in Sata Yuga, the 1st era of the 4-era cycle of creation and destruction according to Hindu scriptures. The Sata Yuga is also called the age of the Vedas as it was during this epoch the ancient scriptures known as the Vedas came into being and their hymns were primarily used to perform sacred fire sacrifices.

Hence, being an ancient incarnation of Lord Vishnu, Vaaman finds mention in the Vedas too—e.g. in Shatpath Brahman, 1/1/5; Taittiriya Brahman, 1/6/1; and Taittiriya Sanhita, 2/1/3.

When the great King Bali, the grandson of Prahalad for whom Vishnu had incarnated as Nrisingh, conquered the entire world and deprived Indra, the king of Gods who ruled over the heavens, Vishnu had taken the dwarfish form of a Brahmin mendicant to retrieve the heaven for Indra when he was requested by Aditi, the mother of Gods, to do so. He approached Bali, who was famous for his charities, as a ‘Vaaman’ or a dwarf, and begged him for ground sufficient enough to be covered by his three small steps. When the unsuspecting Bali agreed, Vaaman measured the entire earth and the nether world with one step, the heaven with the second step, and for the third step he measured Bali’s own head symbolizing the crown of the kingdom of Bali.

To wit, when Bali found that he was cornered as he could not fulfil the word given to a Brahmin, because the land for the third step was not available, he offered himself to be tied and enslaved by Lord Vaaman as a punishment for unfulfilled vow. So Lord Vaaman gracefully put his third step on Bali’s head, which though appeared to be a punishment but was actually a blessing in disguise.

From then onwards, Lord Vishnu is also called ‘Trivikram’—one who conquered the three worlds in three steps.

However, the Lord was very pleased with Bali’s principles of keeping one’s words even at the cost of allowing himself to be a slave of the Lord. So even though Lord Vaaman put his leg on Bali’s head, thereby pushing him into the nether world, yet the Lord is so kind and gracious that he saw the injustice that was done to Bali, a magnanimous and righteous King who had stood firm in his vow of making charity, and never rescinded on his commitment inspite of losing his crown and self-respect.

So therefore, the Lord made him the king of the nether world, and himself took up the job of protecting him there as his gate-keeper. This incarnation of Lord Vishnu is his fifth and followed the Nrisingh form which was the fourth. The idea behind this Vaaman incarnation is that even the most humble looking man, represented by the diminutive Vaaman in this story, can indeed have the stupendous power of the Spirit that even the most powerful gods and kings lack.

An episode is narrated in Tulsidas' epic 'Ram Charit Manas' where Jamvant, the old bear chief, refers to this incarnation of Lord Vaaman and says that at that time he (Jamvant) was young and in his youthful days, and that he had performed seven rounds (clockwise circumambulations) of the colossus form of Lord Vaaman to pay his homage to the latter. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 29 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.]

राक्षसाः क्षत्रियाकारा जाता भूमेर्भयवहाः ।
तान् हत्वा बहुशो रामो भुवं जित्वा ह्यदान्मुनेः ॥ ५१॥
स एव साम्प्रतं जातो रघुवंशे परात्परः । भवदर्थे रघुश्रेष्ठो मानुषत्वमुपागतः ॥ ५२॥ rākṣasāḥ kṣatriyākārā jātā bhūmerbharāvahāḥ । tān hatvā bahuśo rāmo bhuvaṃ jitvā hyadānmuneḥ ॥ 51॥ sa eva sāmpratam jāto raghuvaṃśe parātparah । bhavadarthe raghuśreṣṭho mānuṣatvamupāgataḥ ॥ 52॥

51-52. When the demons assumed the form of Kshatriyas and began tormenting the earth (because of their arrogance, haughtiness and powers), then the same Lord in his manifestation as sage Parashuram¹, killed them many times in battle, and having freed the earth from their domination (or clutches) he had handed it over to sage Kashyap (a Brahmin) (51).

Presently the Supreme Lord who is eternal, infinite, almighty and unconquerable has manifested himself as a man in the clan of king Raghu of Ayodhya as an exalted prince in that family for your (Ravana's) sake.

[To wit, Lord Vishnu who had assumed the form of sage Parashuram, a human form, has once again come down in a human form as Lord Ram. In the previous occasion it was to free the earth from the tyranny of Kshatriya kings, and in the present case it is to free the earth from the tyranny of your demon race. Why don't you understand this? Why do you willingly jump in the jaws of death by fighting Lord Ram inspite of being aware of the consequences?]² (52).

[Note—¹Parashuram or Ram with a battle-axe—This is the sixth incarnation of Vishnu. Parashuram was the youngest of the five sons of sage Jamdaagni and his wife Renuka. He had subdued the haughty Kshatriya race or the warrior race led by king Kaartavirya who had become tyrannical and were oppressing others. The story goes that once Jamdagni doubted the infidelity of his wife Renuka and therefore asked his sons to behead her. The four sons refused and were cursed by him, but Parashuram did as told. The father was pleased and asked Parashuram to request for a boon, upon which the latter requested that his mother be revived, his brothers be pardoned, and Jamdagni should discard his angry temperament. The father agreed to all.

Jamdagni was killed by Shursena, the son of Kaartavirya-Arjuna, because the sage had refused to hand over the celestial cow known as Kapila to him. Extremely peeved by the Kshatriya race to which this king belonged, Parashuram vowed to eliminate the entire race from the surface of the earth as a revenge for the killing of his father. This was the reason why Parashuram had fought and killed thousands of Kshatriya to avenge the killing of his father by Kaartavirya-Arjuna.

²Mandodari had not realised what was in the mind of her husband. She was not privy to his thoughts that he had determined to attain emancipation and salvation by the only way and means he knew as a demon—to instigate Lord Ram so much that the Lord kills him; Sita was merely an excuse to help achieve this objective. There is no doubt as to this when we consider his conversation with Marich (Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 6, verse nos. 30-35), his instructions to demonesses (Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse no. 65), Ravana's thoughts (Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 15-19) when he heard of the slaying of Khar and Dushan (Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 58-61).

If still any doubt was left, Ravana removed it when he explicitly told Mandodari that he knows that Lord Ram is a manifestation of Lord Vishnu, and Sita of goddess Laxmi, the divine consort of Vishnu, and that he wishes to die at the hands of Lord Ram in order to attain deliverance, emancipation and salvation for himself. This is narrated herein below in verse nos. 55-61 by Ravana himself.]

तस्य भार्या किमर्थं वा हता सीता वनाद्धतात् । मम पुत्रविनाशार्थं स्वस्यापि निधनाय च ॥ ५३॥
इतः परं वा वैदेहीं प्रेषयस्व रघूत्तमे । विभीषणाय राज्यं तु दत्त्वा गच्छामहे वनम् ॥ ५४॥

tasya bhāryā kimartham vā hṛtā sītā vanāḍbalāt । mama putravināśārtham svasyāpi nidhanāya ca ॥ 53॥ itaḥ param vā vaidehīm preṣayasva raghūttame । vibhīṣaṇāya rājyaṁ tu dattvā gacchāmahe vanam ॥ 54॥

53-54. Why did you abduct his wife Sita from the Tapovan (Panchvati) to get my son killed¹ and to get yourself killed too? [I can't understand what sense it makes.] (53).

[My dear husband; it is still not too late if you will pay heed to me. I'll tell you what the best course of action now is that you ought to adopt.] You should send Vaidehi (Sita) to the most exalted Raghu (Sri Ram) even now; then crown Vibhishan on the throne (i.e. give him the kingdom of Lanka)², and then we (you and me) shall go to the forest (as 'Vanprastha'—forest dwelling mendicants, to spend the rest of our lives peacefully, observing austerity, doing penances, meditation and contemplation, and striving to clean whatever remnants of the taint of sin and evil that cling to our soul by living a clean and holy life till our time comes to exit this world).' (54).

[Note—¹Mandodari refers to the death of her son Akshay Kumar at the hands of Hanuman during the battle at Ashok garden—refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 3, verse nos. 86-88.

²Another question is this: Why did Mandodari ask the crown of the kingdom to be given to Vibhishan instead of her son Meghanad even though she knew that her son was extremely brave, powerful and competent as a warrior, qualities that are essential to govern a vast empire like that of the demon race, an empire that needed to be ruled by an iron hand because its inhabitants, the demons, were not accustomed to civility, politeness and decency?

The answer is that she knew the character of both Vibhishan and Meghanad. She did not want any one to repeat the mistakes her husband Ravana had committed. If Meghanad ascended the throne then it would be worse than what it is during her husband's reign, because her son was more ruthless and reckless than his father, and he was sure to create worse mischief as compared to Ravana. This would undermine Mandodari's wish that peace and tranquility should prevail upon the demon race, as Meghanad's madness would surely invite the bloodshed and mayhem that she wants to avoid now.

On the other hand, if Vibhishan ascended the throne of Lanka then in due course of time peace and prosperity would come back to Lanka because he would follow the laws of Dharma (i.e. he will rule in a righteous manner according to the laws of probity, propriety, equity and justice), and wherever there is Dharma there is peace, prosperity and happiness. Vibhishan was by nature pious and saintly, a calm person who abided by the rule of law as laid down in the scriptures, as opposed to all others in the family who were truly 'demons' not only in their bodies but also in their minds, thoughts, attitudes, actions and deeds.

So if there was a choice to pick the next king of Lanka and to ensure its survival then it was essential that someone who is good and virtuous by nature is appointed to the job, and Vibhishan fit the bill perfectly instead of Meghanad.]

मन्दोदरीवचः श्रुत्वा रावणो वाक्यमब्रवीत् ।
 कथं भद्रे रणे पुत्रान् भ्रातॄन् राक्षसमण्डलम् ॥ ५५॥
 घातयित्वा राघवेण जीवामि वनगोचरः ।
 रामेण सह योत्स्यामि रामबाणैः सुशीघ्रगैः ॥ ५६॥
 विदार्यमाणो यास्यामि तद्विष्णोः परमं पदम् ।
 जानामि राघवं विष्णुं लक्ष्मीं जानामि जानकीम् ।
 ज्ञात्वैव जानकी सीता मयानीता वनाद्धतात् ॥ ५७॥
 रामेण निधनं प्राप्य यास्यामीति परं पदम् ।
 विमुच्य त्वां तु संसाराद्गमिष्यामि सह प्रिये ॥ ५८॥ mandodarīvacah śrutvā rāvaṇo vākyamabravīt । katham bhadre raṇe putrān bhrātṛn rākṣasamaṇḍalam ॥ 55॥ ghātayitvā rāghaveṇa jīvāmi vanagocarah । rāmeṇa saha yotsyāmi rāmabāṇaiḥ suśīghragaiḥ ॥ 56॥ vidāryamāṇo yāsyāmi tadviṣṇoḥ paramam padam । jānāmi rāghavam viṣṇum lakṣmīm jānāmi jānakīm । jñātvaiva jānakī sītā mayānītā vanādbalāt ॥ 57॥ rāmeṇa nidhanam prāpya yāsyāmīti param padam । vimucya tvām tu saṁsārādgamiṣyāmi saha priye ॥ 58॥

55-58. After hearing what Mandodari had to say, Ravana replied: 'Oh my noble lady (bhadre)! Having got my sons (i.e. Akshay Kumar, Meghnad etc.), brother (Kumbhakarn) and all the brave demons killed in the battle, how can I ever dream of spending my life in the forest as a forest dwelling mendicant¹? Now I shall also fight to the end with Lord Ram, and in this battle I shall get wounded and pierced by his swift and sharp arrows, as a result of which I shall die and go to the supreme abode of Lord Vishnu (i.e. to heaven).

I know and understand that Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) is Lord Vishnu himself, and Janki (Sita) is goddess Laxmi (the divine consort of Vishnu). And now listen to me: I have purposely brought Sita from the forest because I have this knowledge, for this is the only way, the only means by which I (i.e. my soul) can find liberation and deliverance, as surely bringing Sita would compel Lord Ram to come and kill me when I refuse to give her back. By being thus killed, my soul will get an opportunity to exit from my evil body and find its eternal peace, bliss and beatitude. This death will be my salvation; it will pave the way for my emancipation.

[Saying his last farewell to Mandodari, Ravana made an observation which is worth paying attention. He said—] Now the time has come. I am leaving you alone (to do what suits you or what you decide for your own future), and I shall go to fight the Lord alongside my remaining demon warriors so that we find deliverance together.

[To wit, like a great and magnanimous king who cares for his loyal subjects, it is my moral duty to share the fruits of spiritual welfare with my loyal subjects, the demons who chose to support me and side with me even when the going was tough and the times were bad. I am not concerned with those demons who deserted me, like my brother Vibhishan and his supporters, but I will ensure that who stood by me must also find deliverance, emancipation and salvation alongside me².] (58)

[Note—¹This episode of Ravana and Mandodari talking with each other as described in Canto 10 is towards the end of the war according to the sequence of events as narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, for after this they did not meet again, and in the battle that followed Ravana was killed as narrated in Canto 11.

This is the reason why Ravana bids his last farewell to Mandodari in verse no. 58 herein above.

²This shows Ravan's firm resolve to get all the male demons of fighting age or all the adults of the kingdom die along with him. And he had a noble reason for doing it—he wanted that the souls of all his loyal subjects could find liberation and deliverance from their evil bodies of being demons.

An interesting question that comes to mind is this: What happened to the female demons? Well, the majority of them had been burnt in the fierce fire lit by Hanuman, the fire that devastated the city of Lanka—refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Sundar Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 43-44.

As a result, only the righteous amongst the race of demons survived Lord Ram's war with Ravana, and they were later on ruled by Vibhishan. Those demons, males and females both, who were sinful and evil, died in the war. The female demons attained deliverance of their souls when their sinful bodies were burnt in the fire that raged in Lanka, and the male demons found their deliverance when they died like brave warriors in the battle-field.

An important thing that should not whitewashed and overlooked is that amongst those male demons who survived the war were many who were nothing but deserters and cowards. By ‘living’ they could not find emancipation and salvation for their souls which those demons who ‘died’ could. The truth is that they missed the golden opportunity of getting rid of the body of a demon and setting their souls free from its trap, but remained tied to this gross world and all its problems. Their future, their destiny and their fate would now onwards depend upon what they did for the rest of their lives, and surely it would have been very difficult for them to get rid of the burden of ignominy arising out of their cowardice and disloyalty that they were made to carry on their shoulders for all the rest of their lives.

Surely, those who did not die facing Lord Ram in the battle-field could not have attained heaven and beatitude like their compatriots who died fighting the Lord. This is abundantly clear because at the end of the war Lord Ram had asked Indra, the king of gods, to shower a rain of Amrit, the ambrosia of eternity and bliss, from the sky upon the dead demon warriors who were lying on the ground, for the merciful Lord Ram wished that they attain emancipation and salvation, that their souls attain beatitude, and that they go straight to heaven, which they actually did—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1, and 6-10 that precede Doha no. 114.]

परानन्दमयी शुद्धा सेव्यते या मुमुक्षुभिः ।
तां गतिं तु गमिष्यामि हतो रामेण संयुगे ॥ ५९॥
प्रक्षाल्य कल्मषाणीह मुक्तिं यास्यामि दुर्लभाम् ॥ ६०॥ parānandamayī śuddhā sevyate yā mumukṣubhiḥ । tām gatiṁ tu gamiṣyāmi hato rāmeṇa saṁyuge ॥ 59॥ prakṣālya kalmaṣāṇīha muktiṁ yāsyāmi durlabhām ॥ 60॥

59-60. The supreme state of existence that is pure, eternally bliss, peaceful and tranquil that the seekers of emancipation and salvation enjoy, I shall get that exalted stature by getting killed at the hands of Lord Sri Ram (59).

In this manner, by washing all my sins, by cleaning all the negative consequences of my evil deeds done in life, I shall achieve the rarest of rare reward that a creature hopes to get, which is being liberated from the endless cycle of birth and death in this mundane world that is gross, entangling, mortal and full of delusions.

[To wit, by dying at the hands of Lord Ram, my Atma, my true self, my soul, will be able to find eternal peace and beatitude; I will obtain the reward of emancipation and salvation that is very rare to get.] (60).

वतेशादिपञ्चकतरङ्गयुतं भूमाद्वयं
दारात्मजाप्तधनबन्धुझषाभियुक्तम् ।
और्वानलाभनिजरोषमनङ्गजालं संसारसागरमतीत्य हरिं व्रजामि ॥ ६१॥

kleśādipañcakatarāṅgayutaṃ bhramāḍhyaṃ dārātmajāptadhanabandhujhaṣābhiyuktam । aurvānalābhanijaroṣamanaṅgajālaṃ saṃsārasāgaramatītya hariṃ vrajāmi ॥ 61॥

61. I shall cross this gross and mundane world which is like a vast ocean of delusions and entanglements. This symbolic ocean has waves that represent the five great tormentors¹ that give a lot of trouble to a living being.

The many types of delusions and doubts that a creature faces in this world are like the huge whirlpools of this ocean.

The many types of relationships that one develops in this world, such as treating others as his wife, son, kith and kin, friends and companions, are like the symbolic fish, both large and small, in this ocean.

The anger that burns inside a living being is like the great fire, known as ‘Badavanala’, that burns under the ocean. [To wit, ‘anger’ is something that burns a creature silently from the inside without his being aware of its damage just like the subterranean fire that keeps the water of the ocean warm, and often causes the water to boil as is found in the case of hot-water springs.]

And lastly, Kaam, which refers to the many types of worldly passions and desires that keep a creature trapped in their grip, are like a huge net spread under the surface of the ocean to catch fish and other marine creatures.

How fortunate I am that I will now be able to get across such a formidable ‘ocean’ and find my way to Lord God who is known by the name of Sri Hari. [To wit, now I shall finally find liberation from all worldly entanglements, I shall break free from all worldly fetters, and I shall free myself from all shackles to attain eternal deliverance for myself. After dying at the hands of Lord Ram, my Atma will not have to come back again in this world.]’ (61)

[Note—¹The five ‘tormentors’ are the following: ‘Avidya’ = ignorance; ‘Asmita’ = pride, ego, vanity, hypocrisy; ‘Raag’ = attachment, infatuation; ‘Dwesh’ = animosity, jealousy, envy; and ‘Abhinivesh’ = fixed ideas, worldly determinations, worldly purposes.]

इति श्रीमदध्यात्मरामायणे उमामहेश्वरसंवादे युद्धकाण्डे दशमः सर्गः ॥ १०॥ iti śrīmadadhyātmārāmāyaṇe umāmaheśvarasaṃvāde yuddhakāṇḍe daśamaḥ sargaḥ ॥ 10॥

Thus ends the conversation between Lord Shiva and Uma, his divine consort, as narrated in Canto 10 of Adhyatma Ramayan.

-----**-----

Section 12.3: Geetawali Ramayan

In Tulsidas' classic narration of the Ramayana, a Book titled "Geetawali" (also known as Geetawali Ramayan), we read about Mandodari's entreaty with Ravana in its Lanka Kand, verse no. 1 as follows:-

मन्दोदरी-प्रबोध राग मारु
(6/1)

मानु अजहू सिष परिहरि क्रोधु ।
पिय पूरो आयो अब काहि, कहु, करि रघुबीर-बिरोधु ॥ 1 ॥
जेहि ताडुका-सुबाहु मारि, मख राखि जनायो आपु ।
कौतुक ही मारीच नीच मिस प्रगट्यौ बिसिष-प्रतापु ॥ 2 ॥
सकल भूप बल गरब सहित तोर्यो कठोर सिवचापु ।
ब्याही जेहि जानकी जीति जग, हर्यौ परसुधर-दापु ॥ 3 ॥
कपट-काक साँसति-प्रसाद करि बिनु श्रम बध्यो बिराधु ।
खर-दूषन-त्रिसिरा-कबंध हति कियो सुखी सुर-साधु ॥ 4 ॥
एकहि बन बालि मार्यो जेहि, जो बल-उदधि अगाधु ।
कहु, धौं कंत कुसल बीती केहि किये राम-अपराधु ॥ 5 ॥
लाँघि न सके लोक-बिजयी तुम जासु अनुज-कृत-रेषु ।
उतरि सिंधु जार्यो प्रचारि पुर जाको दूत बिसेषु ॥ 6 ॥
कृपासिंधु, खल-बन-कृसानु सम, जस गावत श्रुति-सेषु ।
सोइ बिरुदैत बीर कोसलपति, नाथ ! समुझि जिय देषु ॥ 7 ॥
मुनि पुलस्य जस-मयंक महँ कत कलंक हटि होहि ।
और प्रकार उबार नहीं कहँ, मैं देख्यो जग जोहि ॥ 8 ॥
चलु, मिलु बेगि कुसल सादर सयि सहित अग्र करि मोहि ।
तुलसिदास प्रभु सरन-सबद सुनि अभय करैंगे तोहि ॥ 9 ॥

mandōdarī-prabōdha
rāga mārū
(6/1)

mānu ajahū siṣa parihari krōdhu.
piya pūrō āyō aba kāhi, kahu, kari raghubīra-birōdhu.. 1..
jēhi tāṛukā-subāhu māri, makha rākhi janāyō āpu.
kautuka hī mārīca nīca misa pragaṭyau bisīṣa-pratāpu.. 2.. sakala bhūpa bala garaba sahita tōryō kaṭhōra sivaṇcāpu.
byāhī jēhi jānakī jīti jaga, haryau parasudhara-dāpu.. 3.. kapaṭa-kāka sām̐sati-prasāda kari binu śrama badhyō birādhu.
khara-dūṣana-trisirā-kabandha hati kiyō sukhī sura-sādhu.. 4..
ēkahi bana bāli māryō jēhi, jō bala-udadhi agādhu.

kahu, dhaurñ kanta kusala bītī kēhi kiyē rāma-aparādhu.. 5.. lāṁghi na sakē lōka-bijayī tuma jāsu anuja-kṛta-rēṣu.
 utari sindhu jāryō pracāri pura jākō dūta bisēṣu.. 6.. kṛpāsindhu, khala-bana-kṛsānu sama, jasa gāvata śruti-sēṣu.
 sō'i birudaita bīra kōsalapati, nātha! samujhi jiya dēṣu.. 7..
 muni pulasya jasa-mayaṅka mahaṁ kata kalaṅka haṭhi hōhi.
 aura prakāra ubāra nahīm kahuṁ, mairñ dēkhyō jaga jōhi.. 8..
 calu, milu bēgi kusala sādara sayi sahita agra kari mōhi.
 tulasidāsa prabhu sarana-sabada suni abhaya karaingē tōhi.. 9..

Mandodari's Entreaty

Verse no. 6/1—[Mandodari was the chief queen of the demon king Ravana. She had always been wary of the haughty, cruel and unrighteous ways of her husband. Being very wise and prudent, she was extremely worried and full of consternation as she watched the alarming developments in Lanka since Hanuman had burnt it. She repeatedly tried to persuade her husband on different occasion to abandon his reckless and senseless behaviour and come to see reason, so that a devastating war can be avoided, albeit he wouldn't pay any heed to her, even calling her a coward, of showing typical womanish nature of being too unnecessarily concerned and affright at trifles that were virtually non-issues with him.

There are many instances in Tulsidas' books where we come across Mandodari's earnest request to Ravana to avoid the war and return Sita to her husband.

Refer: (a) Geetawali, Sundar Kand, verse no. 5/23, stanza no. 3; verse no. 5/24, stanza nos. 1-3; Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/1.

(b) Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/17—6/29.

(c) Ram Charit Manas, (i) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 36—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37; (ii) Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8; Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 18; Doha no. 35—to Doha no. 37.]

Mandodari beseeched Ravana must urgently and earnestly (at a time when Lord Ram's army had landed on the soil of Lanka, and war was imminent), 'My dear! It is yet not too late. Listen to my advice and bid farewell to anger. Dear, you tell me yourself, who has benefitted by rebelling and going against Lord Ram? (1).

He had manifested and spread his glory and fame by killing the demoness Tadka¹ and the demon Subahu² even in his pre-adolescent days³, had protected sage Vishwamitra's fire-sacrifice⁴, and showed the might of his arrow by throwing Marich 800 miles away by a headless shaft⁵ (2).

[¹Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse no. 1/52, stanza no. 6; verse no. 1/55, stanza no. 6; verse no. 1/67, stanza no. 2; verse no. 1/74, stanza no. 3; verse no. 1/83, stanza no. 2.

²Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse no. 1/60, stanza no. 3; Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 208 (where Lord Ram's father says that the two brothers, Lord Ram and Laxman, are of a tender age at the time when sage Vishwamitra had sought them for the protection of his fire sacrifice); Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 256 (where Sita's mother also reiterates the view that Lord Ram is merely an adolescent boy at the time of breaking the bow).

³Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse no. 1/60, stanza no. 3; verse no. 1/66, stanza no. 3.

⁴Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse no. 1/52, stanza no. 6; verse no. 1/67, stanza no. 2; verse no. 1/74, stanza no. 3; verse no. 1/83, stanza no. 2.

⁵Refer: Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse no. 1/67, stanza no. 2; Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 210.]

Then, he vanquished the pride of all the assembled knights, princes and kings by breaking the strong, sturdy bow of Lord Shiva, and married Sita as a symbol of conquering the world⁶, besides pacifying the haughty and angry sage Parasuram⁷ (3).

[⁶This incident refers to Lord Ram breaking the Bow of Lord Shiva at Janakpur to marry Sita, the daughter of king Janak. It is narrated in detail in (a) Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse nos. 1/89—to 1/96; and (b) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 249—to Doha no. 264.

⁷When the Bow was broken, sage Parashuram, who was a great devotee of Lord Shiva, came angrily to punish the prince who had insulted his Lord, Shiva, by doing so. He confronted Lord Ram, and after a lot of acrimonious exchange of words with Laxman, Lord Ram finally prevailed upon him and calmed the sage down. Refer: (a) Geetawali, Baal Kand, verse no. 90, stanza no. 7; and (b) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 268—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.]

He (Lord Ram) first punished Jayant⁸ (who had pricked Sita with his beak and injured her to test the might of the Lord), and then, when the latter came and surrendered himself before the Lord, seeking forgiveness and protection by taking refuge at the Lord's holy feet, he forgave him.

Then, by slaying the demons Viraadh, Khar-Dusan, Trishara and Kabandh⁹, playfully and without much effort, the Lord brought about peace and happiness for the Gods and sages and hermits (4).

[⁸Jayant's story is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, from Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Doha no. 2. Briefly, Jayant, who was the son of Indra, the king of gods, decided to test the might of Lord Ram. So with his wicked intentions he assumed the form of a crow and pricked at Sita's feet. Annoyed, Lord Ram picked up a reed and shot it at him like it were a head-less arrow. Jayant ran to all corners of the creation to hide and seek shelter, but this arrow followed him everywhere. Terrified out of his wits, he met sage Narad who advised him to seek pardon from Lord Ram if he wants to survive. Jayant came and surrendered to the Lord unconditionally, whereat the Lord granted him his life, but took out one of his eyes because the Lord's arrow could not go in vain.

⁹The killing of these four demons are narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 7 (Viraadh); (ii) from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20 (Khar, Dushan and Trishira); and (iii) from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 33—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 34 (Kabandh).]

Then, he killed Baali¹⁰ who was an ocean of strength.

Say, my dear husband! Who can ever imagine his well-being by offending one such as Lord Ram? (5).

[¹⁰Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 8.]

Even you, who prides himself to be the conqueror of the world, could not cross the line marked by Laxman at the time of abducting Sita¹¹.

How durst you imagine in your foolish mind to face him (i.e. Lord Ram) whose one single messenger leapt across the ocean and burnt the whole city of Lanka from end to end (and you couldn't stop him) (6).

[¹¹When Sita had forced Laxman to go after Lord Ram when she heard someone calling out Laxman's name at the time the Lord had gone to bring the golden-deer, who was none else but the demon Marich deployed by Ravana to lure Lord Ram away so that he can kidnap Sita, Laxman had drawn a circle on the ground and had asked Sita not to step out of it. When Laxman was gone, Ravana appeared disguised as a mendicant, seeking some alms. He stood at some distance from this circle drawn by Laxman as he dare not go near it. When Sita stepped out of this circle in order to give this imposter mendicant the alms he had sought, Ravana immediately caught hold of her and made good his escape.

This is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 36.]

The Lord's glories and praises are sung by Sheshnath (the legendary Serpent with a thousand tongues) and Sruti (the ancient scriptures, so-called because they were transmitted by the oral tradition of hearing and teaching from one to the next generation) with the words "Merciful Lord; One who is like a fire for the forest of rascals, scoundrels and wretches (kṛpāsindhu, khala-bana-kṛsānu sama)".

Oh Lord! Think in your heart (before it's too late to make amends): for in all sooth, the Lord whom Sheshnath and the Sruti praise so much is the same Lord who is famed the world over and renowned for his valour, courage and strength, and is known as the great King of Kaushal (i.e. 'Lord Ram', the king of Ayodhya, which is also known as the kingdom of Kaushal) (7).

Why are you willingly, adamantly and foolishly proving yourself a sinful scar in the moon-like fame of the race of sage Pulsastya¹²? I have searched the world for all options, but have come to the conclusion that your welfare lies in no other way than this (as suggested by me). [To wit, the only way you can escape certain annihilation is to make peace with Lord Ram.]¹³ (8).

[¹²Ravana traced his lineage to sage Pulastya. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 20.

The birth and lineage of Ravana in the family of sage Puslastya has been elaborately narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan of sage Veda Vyas. Refer: Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 1, verse nos. 23—61.

¹³Mandadori's entreaties as narrated in the present verse no. 6/1 of Geetawali find an echo in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Doha no. 7.]

Hence, I finally plead before you, with the greatest of stress, sincerity and humility that I can muster, that it will be in your own benefit and welfare if you immediately proceed to meet Lord Ram, accompanied by Sita, and putting me in the front to guard your entourage from any harm. This is the only way out for you and your welfare. The Lord shall make you fearless as soon as he hears the word “I have come to seek refuge” from your mouth¹⁴ (9).’

[¹⁴Mandadori pleads with Ravana to immediately surrender Sita to Lord Ram and bow his head before the Lord as a token of surrender if he wished for his good. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 6.]

-----**-----

Section 12.4: Kavitawali Ramayan

In one of Goswami Tulsidas’ classical narrative of the divine story of Lord Ram, known as ‘Kavitawali Ramayan’, we read that when Mandodari learnt that Lord Ram’s army has landed in Lanka, she made an earnest plea to Ravana to abandon his hostile attitude towards the Lord and make peace with him. This conversation is narrated in Kavitawali Ramayan’s Lanka Kand, verse nos. 17-29.

In the following pages we shall read them and see how Mandodari tried to convince her husband to be reasonable and come to terms with ground realities by not entering into a war that would ruin the whole of the demon race. She pointed out to him how this was being fought on a wrong premise and for a wrong cause, how he was no match for the strength and abilities of Lord Ram and his formidable army, and what options are left to him to make peace.

कनकगिरिसुंग चढ़ि देखि मर्कटकटकु, बदत मंदोदरी परम भीता ।
 सहसभुज-मत्तगजराज-रनकेसरी
 परसुधर गर्बु जेहि देखि बीता ।।
 दास तुलसी समरसूर कोसलधनी,
 ख्याल ही बालि बलसालि जीता ।
 रे कंत! तून दंत गहि ‘सरन श्रीरामु’ कहि, अजहुँ एहि भाँति लै सौँपु सीता ।। 17 ।।

17. kanakagirisuṅga caḍhi dēkhi markṭakṭaku, badata mandōdarī parama bhītā.
 sahasabhuja-mattagajarāja-ranakēsari parasudhara garbu jēhi dēkhi bītā..
 dāsa tulasī samarasūra kōsaladhanī, khyāla hīm bāli balasāli jītā.
 rē kaṇṭa! ṭṇa danta gahi ‘sarana śrīrāmu’ kahi, ajahuṁ ēhi bhāṁti lai saumpu sītā..17..

Verse no. 6/17—Mounting the top of the ‘Mountain of Gold’, Mandodari beheld the army of monkeys and became terribly afraid and upset. She said to her husband Ravana, ‘Parashuram was very proud of his invincibility and strength, and he had even subdued Shahastrabahu (a demon with one thousand arms) in the battle-field just like a lion subdues an elephant. But even he (Parashuram) was himself subdued when he faced the Lord of Kaushal (Ram) of whom Tulsidas is a humble servant.

Look, the same Lord as arrived on the battlefield with immense strength and powerful force. Look, he had conquered the brave and strong Bali playfully (i.e. without effort). Oh dear husband! I advise that you should even now put a straw between your teeth and take Sita and surrender her to Sri Ram, pleading ‘I have come to take refuge before you’.

रे नीच ! मारीचु बिचलाइ, हति ताइका, भंजि सिवचापु सुखु सबहि दीन्ह्यो ।
सहस दसचारि खल सहित खर-दूषनहि, पैटै जमधाम, तैं तउ न चीन्ह्यो ।।
मैं जो कहौं, कंत ! सुनु मंतु भगवंतसों
बिमुख ह्वै बालि फलु कौन लीन्ह्यो ।
बीस भुज, दस सीस खीस गए तबहिं जब, ईसके ईससों बैरु कीन्ह्यो ।।18।।

18. rē nīca! māricu bicalā'i, hati tāṛakā, bhañji sivaçāpu sukhu sabahi dīnhyō.
sahasa dasacāri khala sahita khara-dūśanahi, paiṭhai jamadhāma, taim ta'u na cīnhyō..
mair̥m jō kahaur̥m, kanta! sunu mantu bhagavantasōm bimukha hvai bāli phalu kauna līnhyō.
bīsa bhuja, dasa sīsa khīsa ga'ē tabahir̥m jaba, īsakē īsasōm bairu kīnhyō..18..

Verse no. 6/18—‘Oh you wicked and evil one! Have you still not recognised him who has punished Marich (by using a head-less arrow, he threw Marich beyond the ocean), killed demoness Tadka, gave pleasure to everyone by breaking the bow of Lord Shiva (at Janakpur) and then killed Khar-Dushan along with his 14 thousand strong army of demons?

Oh Lord! Listen to my advice. What fruit (benefit) did Bali get by opposing the Lord (God)? All your 10 heads and 20 arms were deemed to have been destroyed the moment you had decided to oppose and creat enmity with the Lord of Shiva (Sri Ram).’

बालि दलि, काल्हि जलजान पाषान किये, कंत ! भगवंतु तैं तउ न चीन्हें ।
बिपुल बिकराल भट भालु-कपि काल-से, संग तरु तुंग गिरिसुंग लीन्हें ।।
आइगो कोसलाधीसु तुलसीस जेंहि
छत्र मिस मौलि दस दूरि कीन्हें ।
ईस बकसीस जनि खीस करु, ईस! सुनु, अजहुँ कुलकुसल बैदेहि दीन्हें ।।19।।

19. bāli dali, kāl'hi jalajāna pāsāna kiyē, kanta! bhagavantu tairṁ ta'u na cīnhēm.
 bipula bikarāla bhaṭa bhālu-kapi kāla-sē, saṅga taru tuṁga girisṁga līnhēm..
 ā'igō kōsalādhīsu tulasīsa jēnhi chatra misa mauli dasa dūri kīnhēm.
 īsa bakasīsa jani khīsa karu, īsa! sunu, ajahuṁ kulakusala baidēhi dīnhēm..19..

Verse no. 6/19—‘It happened just yesterday (i.e. recently) that he (Lord Ram) had slayed Bali and constructed a float (a floating bridge) of stones on the surface of the ocean.

Oh Lord! Still you do not recognise that he is not an ordinary human but a divine Lord (Bhagwan; literally meaning Lord). With him are numerous death-like ferocious bears and monkeys, carrying huge trees and large mountains (as armaments), and who had symbolically pierced your 10 heads when his single arrow had toppled your crowns¹.

Be warned. The same Lord of Tulsidas, Lord Sri Ram, has arrived. Oh Lord, listen. Do not destroy this gift (the kingdom of Lanka) which you have received from Lord Shiva. Still your clan's welfare can be safe-guarded by sending back Sita to Sri Ram.’

[Note—¹This falling of the crowns refer to an incident before the start of the war. Lord Ram observed that the gem-studded golden crown of Ravana glittered and dazzled as he sat on a high pedestal in the fort of Lanka. So the Lord shot an arrow which toppled all the crowns and came back to enter his quiver. This had made Ravana convulse and squirm in frustration, anger, humiliation and dismay.]

सैनके कपिन को को गनै, अबुद्वै महाबलबीर हनुमान जानी ।
 भूलिहै दस दिसा, सीस पुनि डोलिहै, कोपि रघुनाथु जब बान तानी ॥
 बालिहूँ गर्बु जिय माहिँ ऐसो कियो, मारि दहपट दियो जमकी घानी ।
 कहति मंदोदरी, सुनहि रावन! मतो, बेगि लै देहि बैदेहि रानी ॥20॥

20. sainakē kapina kō kō ganai, arbudai mahābalabīra hanumāna jānī.
 bhūlihai dasa disā, sīsa puni ḍōlihairṁ, kōpi raghunāthu jaba bāna tānī.. bālihūṁ garbu jiya māhirṁ aisō kiyō, māri dahapaṭa diyō jamakī ghānīṁ.
 kahati mandōdarī, sunahi rāvana! matō, bēgi lai dēhi baidēhi rānī..20..

Verse no. 6/20—‘Who can count the number of monkeys in his army? Consider them equivalent to millions of brave Hanumans. When Sri Ram would mount his arrow on the bow angrily, you would forget about the 10 directions, (over which you have lordship) and your 10 heads would tremble in fear. Even Bali had boasted like you—but he was killed by him (Ram), completely ruined and crushed in the crushing machine (literally, jaws) of death.'

Mandodari continues, 'Oh Ravana! Listen to my advice. Go and give Sita back to Lord Ram soon.'

गहनु उज्जारि, पुरु जारि, सुतु मारि तव, कुसल गो कीसु बर बैरि जाको ।
दूसरो दूतु पनु रोपि कोपेउ सभाँ, खर्ब कियो सर्बको, गर्बु थाको ।।
दासु तुलसी सभय बदत मयनंदिनी,
मंदमति कंत, सुनु मंतु म्हाको । तौलौ मिलु बेगि, नहि जौलौ रन रोष भयो
दासरथि बीर बिरुदैत बाँको ।।21 ।।

21. gahanu ujjāri, puru jāri, sutu māri tava, kusala gō kīsu bara bairi jākō.
dūsarō dūtu panu rōpi kōpē'u sabhām̐, kharba kiyō sarbakō, garbu thākō..
dāsu tulasī sabhaya badata mayanandini, mandamati kanta, sunu mantu mhākō.
taulaur̐ milu bēgi, nahi jaulaur̐ rana rōśa bhayō dāsarathi bīra birudaita bām̐kō..21..

Verse no. 6/21—'A single monkey (Hanuman) who came as a messenger of your enemy (Lord Ram) had ruined your Ashok garden, burnt your whole city, killed your son and went away unscathed. And his second messenger (Angad) made an angry vow in your court, humiliated you all and crushed your combined pride.'

Tulsidas says that Mandodari fearfully but earnestly pleaded with Ravana, 'Oh you foolish Lord! Listen to my council. Before the most valorous, valiant and brave Lord Ram becomes angry in the battle-field (i.e. before it is too late), you must go and meet him (to strike a compromise deal and avoid the calamitous war).'

काननु उजारि, अच्छु मारि, धारि धूरि कीन्हीं, नगरु प्रजार्यो, सो बिलोक्यो बलु कीसको ।
तुम्हैं बिद्यमान जातुधानमंडलीमें कपि
कोपि रोप्यो पाउ, सो प्रभाउ तुलसीसको ।।
कंत ! सुनु मंतु कुल-अंतु किउँ अंत हानि,
हातो कीजै हीयतें भरोसो भुज बीसको ।
तौलौ मिलु बेगि जौलौ चापु न चढ़ायो राम, रोषि बानु काळ्यौ न दलैया दससीसको ।।22 ।।

22. kānanu ujāri, acchu māri, dhāri dhūri kīnhīm, nagaru prajāryō, sō bilōkyō balu kīsakō.
tumhaim̐ bidyamāna jātudhānamaṇḍalīmēm̐ kapi kōpi rōpyō pā'u, sō prabhā'u tulasīsakō..
kanta! sunu mantu kula-antu ki'ēm̐ anta hāni, hātō kijai hīyatēm̐ bharōsō bhuja bīsakō.
taulaur̐ milu bēgi jaulaur̐ cāpu na caṛhāyō rāma, rōśi bānu kāḍhyau na dalaiyā dasasīsakō..22..

Verse no. 6/22—‘You have already seen the strength, courage and valour of a single monkey (Hanuman)—he single handedly ruined your garden, killed Akshay Kumar and crushed his army and burnt the city. Even while you were present, the second monkey (Angad) had angrily and defiantly planted his foot firmly in the assembly of demons and no one could shake it—it was all the glorious effect of Sri Ram. Oh Lord! Listen to my advice—the destruction of the demon clan will be harmful to all (this shows that there were many inhabitants in Lanka, in the army, palace service, mistresses, concubines that were not demons by birth).

Hence, you should now stop depending (relying) upon the strength of your 10-arms, and before Sri Ram mounts his bow angrily and resolutely, and his arrows pierce your 10 heads, you should soon go and meet him (to surrender and make peace).’

‘पवनको पूतु देख्यो दूतु बीर बाँकुरो, जो
 बंक गढु लंक-सो ढकाँ ढकेलि ढहिगो ।
 बालि बलसालिको सो काल्हि दापु दलि कोपि, रोप्यो पाउ चपरि, चमूको चाउ चाहिगो ।।
 सोई रघुनाथु कपि साथ पाथनाथु बाँधि, आयो नाथ! भागे तैं खिरिरे खेह खाहिगो ।
 ‘तुलसी’ गरबु तजि मिलिबेको साजु सजि, देहि सिय, न तौ पिय! पाइमाल जाहिगो ।।23 ।।

23. ‘pavanakō pūtu dēkhyō dūtu bīra bāṁkurō, jō baṅka gaṛhu laṅka-sō ḍhakāṁ ḍhakēli ḍhāhigō.
 bāli balasālikō sō kāl’hi dāpu dali kōpi, rōpyō pā’u capari, camūkō cā’u cāhigō..
 sō’ī raghunāthu kapi sātha pāthanāthu bāṁdhi, āyō nātha! bhāgē tēm khiriri khēha khāhigō.
 ‘tulasī’ garabu taji milibēkō sāju saji, dēhi siya, na tau piya! pā’imāla jāhigō..23..

Verse no. 6/23—‘You have already seen his messenger, the matchless warrior Pawansut (sun of wind-God; Hanuman) who had demolished the invincible fort such as Lanka by a mere push, as it were. [This refers to the burning of Lanka].

Son of the brave Bali (Angad) had returned safely after he had angrily cast his foot firmly on the ground (which you couldn’t shake) and thereby crush your haughtiness and ego. Now the same Sri Ram (whose messengers did what they did as described above) has tamed and crossed the ocean along with his monkeys and landed on the soil of Lanka.

So, oh Lord, if you contemplate on running away now, you’ll have to bite dust literally. Therefore, abandon pride before it’s too late and prepare to meet him, and give Sita back. Otherwise, oh dear, you will be ruined.’

उदधि अपार उतरत नहिँ लागी बार केसरीकुमारु सो अदंड-कैसो डाँड़िगो ।
 बाटिका उजारि, अच्छु, रच्छकनि मारि भट
 भारी भारी राउरेके चाउर-से काँड़िगो ।।

‘तुलसी’ तिहारें बिद्यमान जुबराज आजु
कोपि पाउ रोपि, सब छूछे कै कै छाँड़िगो।
कहेकी न लाज, पिय! आजहूँ न आए बाज, सहित समाज गढु राँड-कैसो भाँड़िगो।।24।।

24. udadhi apāra utarata nahim̐ lāgī bāra kēsarikumāru sō adaṇḍa-kaisō ḍāmḍigō.
bāṭikā ujāri, acchu, racchakani māri bhaṭa bhārī bhārī rā'urēkē cā'ura-sē kāmḍigō..
'tulasī' tihārēm̐ bidyamāna jubarāja āju kōpi pā'u rōpi, saba chūchē kai kai chāmḍigō.
kahēkī na lāja, piya! ājahūṁ na ā'ē bāja, sahita samāja garhu rāmḍa-kaisō bhāmḍigō..24..

Verse no. 6/24—‘See! That son of Kesari (Hanuman) crossed the vast ocean in no time and punished you and went back scot-free. He had laid to waste your Ashok garden, killed Akshay Kumar and other guards, and had beaten to pulp many of your great warriors; and even today, Angad had angrily planted his foot on the ground in your presence and left you all hollow (i.e. left all your boastful claims of strength and valour sound hollow).

Oh dear! You don't have any shame! You still do not learn (or wake-up). Today Angad has thoroughly inspected all nooks and corners of the fort as if it was a prostitute's den, and you couldn't stop him!’

जाके रोष-दुसह-त्रिदोष-दाह दूरि कीन्है, पैअत न छत्री-खोज खोजत खलकमें।
माहिषमतीको नाथ साहसी सहस बाहु, समर-समर्थ नाथ! हेरिए हलकमें।।
सहित समाज महाराज सो जहाजराजु
बूढ़ि गयो जाके बल-बारिधि-छलकमें।
टूटत पिनाककें मनाक बाम रामसे, ते नाक बिनु भए भृगुनायकु पलकमें।।25।।

25. jākē rōśa-dusaha-tridōśa-dāha dūri kīnhē, pai'ata na chatrī-khōja khōjata khalakamēm̐.
māhiśamatikō nātha sāhasī sahasa bāhu, samara-samartha nātha! hēri'ē halakamēm̐.. sahita samāja mahārāja sō jahājarāju būḍi gayō jākē bala-bāridhi-chalakamēm̐.
ṭūṭata pinākakēm̐ manāka bāma rāmasē, tē nāka binu bha'ē bhṛgunāyaku palakamēm̐..25..

Verse no. 6/25—(Referring to Parashuram's defeat at the hands of Sri Ram at Janakpur, Mandodari says):- 'No Kshatriyas could be found on this earth due to the wrath of his (Parashuram's) intolerable anger; oh Lord! Just think in your heart—how courageous was Sahastrabaahu, the king of Mahishmatipur. But oh Lord, that great ship-like Sahastrabaahu had sunk, along with his kin, in the ocean of Parashuram's strength. [That is, even though Sahastrabaahu was the strongest, invincible and most formidable king and warrior of his time, he could not face the fury of Parashuram and got vanquished by the latter along with his kith and kin. No one but Parashuram was able to subdue him. I (Mandodari) wish to tell you (Ravana) this thing to emphasise that Parashuram was no ordinary warrior, and he too was as proud of his valour and strength of arms as unfortunately you are. But do you not know what happened to Parashuram? Well—] It was the same Parashuram who had lost all his fame and reputation as an invincible warrior with valour and strength of arm that knew no barriers when Lord Sri Ram became slightly stern with him at the time of breaking of the bow (at Janakpur) so that finally Parashuram buckled in like a humble straw (and whereas he had come angrily determined to punish the Lord for breaking the bow of Lord Shiva, he not only surrendered meekly and bowed before Lord Ram but also gave him his own bow with which he had conquered the entire world earlier)?'

[Note—Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 6 which also specifically refers to this episode of Sahastrabahu getting killed by Parashuram.

Mandodari alludes to the incident that occurred at the time of Lord Ram's marriage with Sita where the condition set for the marriage was the breaking of an old and worn-out bow of Shiva that was kept with her father king Janak. None of the assembled competing kings and princes could break it, individually or collectively. Then Lord Ram had very easily broken the bow as if was a sport. However, its breaking annoyed Parashuram when he got wind of it because he took it as an affront to Shiva, his patron god. Hence, Parashuram came to panting and huffing to the venue to take revenge and kill the offender. At the venue, he had jumped and yelled, but could actually do nothing more than that, conceding that no matter how hard he has tried his hand holding the battle axe refuses to oblige him (refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 280).

As it usually happens with fire and anger, over time when their fury is spent they calm down! So, finally Parashuram too calmed down like a punctured balloon and meekly surrendered before Lord Ram and asked for forgiveness. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 284—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.}

Mandodari has cited this instance in order to persuade her stubborn husband who seemed to hell-bent on confrontation with Lord Ram, thinking that no one is stronger and more powerful than him. Ravana told Mandodari that he has conquered gods and jailed them, so what do ordinary humans and monkeys count? Ravana's boast has been narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 8.]

कीन्ही छेनी छत्री बिनु छेनिप-छपनिहार, कठिन कुठार पानि बीर-बानि जानि कै।
परम कृपाल जो नृपाल लोकपालन पै, जब धनुहाई है मन अनुमानि कै।।
नाकमें पिनाक मिस बामता बिलोकि राम रोक्यो परलोक लोक भारी भ्रमु भानि कै।
नाइ दस माथ महि, जोरि बीस हाथ, पिय!
मिलिए पै नाथ! रघुनाथ पहिचानि कै।।26।।

26. kīnhī chōnī chatrī binu chōnipa-chapanihāra, kaṭhina kuṭhāra pāni bīra-bāni jāni kai.
parama kṛpāla jō nṛpāla lōkapālana pai, jaba dhanuhā'ī hvaihai mana anumāni kai.. nākamēm pināka misa bāmatā bilōki rāma rōkyō paralōka lōka bhārī bhramu bhāni kai.

 nā'i dasa mātha mahi, jōri bīsa hātha, piya!
 mili'ē pai nātha! raghunātha pahicāni kai..26..

Verse no. 6/26—(Referring to Parashuram, Mandodari continues):- 'He is the slayer of kings and had cleared the earth of all kings many a times (i.e. he had killed all the kings repeatedly). He has a hard and strong battle axe in his hands, and his temperament is like that of a warrior (though his external appearance is that of a hermit).

When Lord Sri Ram weighed the pros and cons of a confrontation with him, he realised that it would be disastrous for the world. [This is because, for one, Parashuram was in the form of a hermit and fighting with a hermit would send a very negative signal to the world, and secondly since Parashuram won't be able to face Lord Ram he would vent his anger on others, running amock and killing all those around, specially the thousands of kings and princes who had collected for the marriage ceremony at Janakpur).

So, Lord Ram showed mercy on the kings and guardians of the world (by not engaging Parashuram in a duel). Further, when Sri Ram saw that he (Parashuram) had his nose wrinkled and twitching menacingly because of the breaking of the bow, then in order to crush (remove) his (Parashuram's) ego and pride (that he was invincible), Sri Ram stopped his (Parashuram's) way to heaven. [That is, if Lord Ram would have per-chance fought and killed Parashuram in a one-to-one fight, it was sure that Parashuram's soul would have found liberation from his gross body and gone to heaven. But the Lord wanted him to live and regret and face ignominy for being unduly proud and haughty. So the Lord excused but extracted all his mystical powers in a token manner when Parashuram surrendered his own bow to the Lord, bowed his head before him and went to the mountain to do Tapa to regain his lost glory. This has been clearly affirmed in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, from Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 284—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.]

So, oh dear! Recognise that he is the same Sri Ram (as being the Lord God) and put all your 10 heads on the ground before him, fold all your 20 hands in submission and meet him (i.e., prostrate yourself before him and ask for forgiveness).'

कह्यो मतु मातुल, बिभीषनहूँ बार-बार, आँचरु पसार पिय! पायँ लै-लै हौं परी।
 बिदित बिदेहपुर नाथ! भृगुनाथगति, समय सयानी कीन्ही जैसी आइ गौं परी।।
 बायस, बिराध, खर, दूषन, कबंध, बालि, बैर रघुबीरकें न पूरी काहूकी परी।
 कंत बीस लोयन बिलोकिए कुमंतफलु, ख्याल लंका लाई कपि राँड़की-सी झोपरी।।27।।

27. kahyō matu mātula, bibhīśanahūṁ bāra-bāra, āṁcaru pasāra piya! pāyaṁ lai-lai haum parī.
 bidita bidēhapura nātha! bhṛgunāthagati, samaya sayānī kīnhī jaisī ā'i gaum parī..

bāyasa, birādha, khara, dūsana, kabandha, bāli, baira raghubīrakēm na pūrī kāhūkī parī.
kanta bīsa lōyana bilōki'ē kumantaphalu, khyāla laṅkā lāī kapi rāmṛakī-sī jhōparī..27..

Verse no. 6/27—‘Your maternal uncle (Marich) advised you; Vibhishan repeatedly asked you, and oh dear, even I had begged you again and again, falling at your feet, that you should not oppose God.

Oh Lord! What was the fate of Parashuram at Janakpur is evident to all. [Hence you should not hesitate thinking that it would be inappropriate to surrender now after first creating enmity]. He (Parashuram) was clever enough to adapt himself to changed circumstances (and wise enough to surrender before Sri Ram). Jayant (the crow), Viradh, Khar, Dushan, Bali, Kabandh—none succeeded by opposing Lord Ram.

Oh Lord! The results of your evil thoughts are there before your twenty eyes to see that the monkey (Hanuman) playfully burnt Lanka as if it was a destitute whore's hut.'

राम सों सामु किउँ नितु है हितु, कोमल काज न कीजिए टाँटे।
आपनि सूझि कहौं,पिय! बूझिए, जूझिबे जोगु न ठहरु, नाटे।।
नाथ! सुनी भृगुनाथकथा, बलि बालि गए चलि बातके साँटें।
भाइ बिभीषनु जाइ मिल्यो, प्रभु आइ परे सुनि सायर काँटें।।28।।

28. rāma sōm sāmu ki'ēṁ nitu hai hitu, kōmala kāja na kiji'ē ṭāṁṭhē.
āpani sūjhi kahaum,piya! būjhi'ē, jūjhibē jōgu na ṭhāharu, nāṭhē..
nātha! sunī bhr̥gunāthakathā, bali bāli ga'ē cali bātakē sāṁṭhēm.
bhā'i bibhīśanu jā'i milyō, prabhu ā'i parē suni sāyara kāmṭhēm..28..

Verse no. 6/28—‘It is always beneficial to make-up (i.e., to befriend) with Sri Ram. Do not unnecessarily make difficult what is so simple a task. Oh dear! I tell you what I think is proper. Understand and realise it properly that this is the opportunity to withdraw, and not a proper place and circumstance to fight (i.e., make war). Oh Lord! You have already heard the story of Brighunath (Parashuram). The strong Bali ruined himself due to his ego. Your brother Vibhishan has also joined him (Sri Ram). Oh Lord! I hear that he has crossed the ocean and pitched his camp near the sea-shore.'

पालिबेको कपि-भालु-चमू जम काल करालहुको पहरी है।
लंक-से बंक महा गढ़ दुर्गम ढाहिबे-दाहिबेको कहरी है।।
तीतर-तोम तमीचर-सेन समीरको सूनु बड़ो बहरी है।
नाथ! भलो रघुनाथ मिलें रजनीचर-सेन हिउँ हहरी है।।29।।

29. pālibēkō kapi-bhālu-camū jama kāla karālahukō paharī hai.
laṅka-sē baṅka mahā gaṛha durgama ḍhāhibē-dāhibēkō kaharī hai.. tītara-tōma tamīcara-sēna samīrakō sūnu baṛō baharī hai.
nātha! bhalō raghunātha milēm rajanīcara-sēna hi'ēṁ haharī hai..29..

Verse no. 6/29—‘Oh Lord! The son of Wind-God (Hanuman) can protect the army of monkeys and bears even against Yam and the terrible Kaal (God of death and hell, and Death itself), he is very mischievous (i.e., active, restless) in destroying the impregnable fort of Lanka. He is like a huge falcon for destroying the partridge-like army of demons.

Oh Lord! It is wise to meet and make friendship with Sri Ram now, for the demon army’s morale has been broken and it’s shuddering in its heart.’

-----**-----

Chapter 13

War Parleys in both the camps of Lord Ram and Ravana; Lord Ram sends Angad as an Emissary of Peace to avoid the Destructive War.

After the news arrived that Lord Ram and his great army of monkeys and bears have landed on the soil of Lanka, and soon after meeting Mandodari who failed in her first attempt to persuade Ravana to abandon his bellicose attitude and make peace with Lord Ram in order to avoid a calamitous war, Ravana went back to attend his court and consult his ministers about the next course of action. The majority of his courtiers spoke like what sycophants and yes-men would do, i.e. to speak what Ravana wished to hear—which was to boast of their own powers and strength, to treat the opponent with utter contempt as being totally incompetent and impotent against the might of the demon warriors, and therefore to rubbish all talks of surrender. But one of sons of Ravana boldly faced his father, and like Mandodari he tried to dissuade him from entering into a war with an adversary who was much stronger and powerful than the combined force of the demon race, and against whom Ravana has no chance of obtaining victory. But Ravana wouldn’t listen.

He angrily rebuked his son, and dismissing the court he went as usual to attend an evening programme of dance and music, as if nothing bothered him. This is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 8— to Doha no. 10.

Meanwhile, Lord Ram too was in consultation with his ministers on Mt. Subel. From this vantage point the Lord and his companions could see and hear the light and sound of Ravana’s programme being held in the distance in the city of Lanka. The Lord’s ministers were amazed at this fascinating sight which indicated that their enemy, the demon king Ravana, was not at all worried about the impending invasion, implying that he had some secret and dangerous plan which made him so incredulously confident of victory. So therefore, in order to instill confidence in his own army, as well as to warn Ravana that he should be ashamed of himself that he wants to enjoy sensual pleasures at a time when war is looming right at his doorstep, that if by a boisterous show of music and dance he wishes to convey the message that he is not afraid of Lord Ram's strength and powers and abilities, treating the Lord with utter contempt as being incompetent and no match against his might and majesty, the Lord shot an arrow in the direction from where the light and sound came.

This arrow shot down Ravana's crowns, royal umbrella and other paraphernalia which fell to the ground. This greatly embarrassed the demon king and scared his courtiers, but he soon recovered his composure and acted defiantly, saying it was a non-issue because he lost his balance due to some reason. He dismissed the court and asked them to go and sleep peacefully, and forget what had happened.

This episode is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 14.

The next morning, Lord Ram collected his advisors and sought their opinion about the best course of action to be followed. It was decided that a last attempt should be made to avoid the war, and the Lord readily conceded as he is so merciful and gracious that he wished to give all possible chances to Ravana to make peace and desist from a bloody conflict. It was decided to send Angad, the monkey prince, as Lord Ram's emissary to Ravana, with a clear mandate that all attempts should be made to convince the demon king to return Sita and end hostility. Angad's mission failed; it ended in an acrimonious note with Angad humiliating Ravana and all his chief warriors in full open court, which resulted in demoralizing the demons.

Angad thereafter triumphantly returned to Lord Ram, paving the way for the start of the war. This episode—of Angad being sent as an emissary and the heated verbal duel that took place between him and Ravana, culminating in Angad humiliating Ravana and putting him to shame by being unable to move Angad's feet from the ground as a bet of losing or winning the impending war—is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 35-a.

This Chapter is divided into two Sections to enable us to read these episodes from (i) Ram Charit Manas, and (ii) Geetawali Ramayan as follows:-

Section 13.1 Ram Charit Manas, sub-sections 13.1.1—13.1.3
Section 13.2 Geetawali Ramayan

Section 13.1: Ram Charit Manas

(a) Sub-section 13.1.1: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 8—to Doha no. 10:-

सभाँ आइ मंत्रिन्ह तेहिं बूझा । करब कवन बिधि रिपु सैं जूझा ॥ ७ ॥
कहहिं सचिव सुनु निसिचर नाहा । बार बार प्रभु पूछहु काहा ॥ ८ ॥ कहहु कवन भय करिअ बिचारा । नर कपि भालु अहार हमारा ॥ ९ ॥ sabhāṃ ā'i mantrin̄ha tēhiṃ būjhā. karaba kavana bidhi ripu saim̄ jūjhā. 7.

 kahahiṃ saciva sunu n̄isicara nāhā. bāra bāra prabhu pūchahu kāhā. 8.
 kahahu kavana bhaya kari'a bicārā. nara kapi bhālu ahāra hamārā. 9.

Ravana went to his royal court where all his advisors and courtiers had assembled. He asked them how the war is to be fought; what strategy is to be adopted and how the army is to be deployed¹. (7)

All the ministers answered unanimously, in one voice, 'Oh the king of the demons (n̄isicara nāhā)! Listen: Why are you (so worried or confused that you are) repeatedly asking the same thing again²? (8)

To speak the truth, pray think and tell us what is there to be so scared for by us—because we are accustomed to devouring both the human beings and the monkeys; they are like fodder for us. [Is anyone afraid of his own food? So what is there to worry? We are hungry, and we shall devour the enemy like one munches one's meal.] (9)

[Note—¹We are by now acquainted with Ravana's character that he was not ready to heed any advice; he would not listen to anybody. So then what was the need to consult his advisors regarding the war? Well, there are three apparent reasons:

One is that he wished to ascertain who amongst them was totally committed and devoted to his cause, and who was in two minds.

Second, when the news of Lord Ram building the bridge and landing in Lanka had arrived a little while ago, he couldn't hide his astonishment and alarm (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 5). Then, his wife Mandodari had left him more uncertain of the future by her own entreaty asking him to abandon his hostile attitude towards Lord Ram and make peace with him (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8). Both these things had left him confused and in a dilemma. Normally he would make his own decisions, but now his self-confidence was so much shaken and he was so confounded that he wasn't able to think coherently and cogently on his own. Therefore, he wished to take in the view of others so as to formulate a proper strategy for the impending war.

Third, he wished to impress upon his commanders and ministers that he has full faith in them, that he trusts them, that he gives their opinions great value and importance, that this war is to be fought jointly by all the demons, and that he is confident that they will be his faithful allies.

²Earlier you had asked us about our opinion when the news arrived that the army of Lord Ram has assembled on the other side of the ocean, and was preparing to cross it. At that time too we had told you that there is nothing to worry—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-9 that precede Doha no. 37.

To wit, why are you so worried that you do not know what our answer would be? Don't you know that we have faced such situations many times in the past, when we had launched attack on the gods or when some other enemy had attacked us? Have we ever felt afraid in the face of battle; have we ever had second thoughts about fighting our enemy boldly and bravely till he is completely vanquished? So what's new now that has made you doubt what our answer would be?]

दो०. सब के बचन श्रवन सुनि कह प्रहस्त कर जोरि ।
नीति बिरोध न करिअ प्रभु मंत्रिन्ह मति अति थोरि ॥ ८ ॥

dōhā.

saba kē bacana śravana suni kaha prahasta kara jōri.
nīti birōdha na kari'a prabhu mantrinha mati ati thōri. 8.

When Prahast heard what others had said, he stood up with his joined palms as a sign of prayerful submission before Ravana (because he did not agree with the advice given by the courtiers). He said, 'Oh Lord, you should not do anything that is not proper and against the laws of propriety. Your ministers are all ill-witted and they have a low intellect. (Doha no. 8)

[Note—Prahast was Ravana's son—refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 10.]

चौ०. कहहिं सचिव सठ ठकुरसोहाती । नाथ न पूर आव एहि भाँती ॥ १ ॥
बारिधि नाघि एक कपि आवा । तासु चरित मन महुँ सबु गावा ॥ २ ॥
छुधा न रही तुम्हहि तब काहू । जारत नगरु कस न धरि खाहू ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

kahahim saciva saṭha ṭhakurasōhātī. nātha na pūra āva ēhi bhāntī. 1.
bāridhi nāghi ēka kapi āvā. tāsu carita mana mahum̐ sabu gāvā. 2.
chudhā na rahī tumhahi taba kāhū. jārata nagaru kasa na dhari khāhū. 3.

They are unable to grasp the gravity of the situation, and are speaking things which you wish to hear, like true sycophants and flatterers usually do, not which is good for you. But my Lord beware, such hollow talk will not be of any help to you when you have to face hard ground realities. (1)

One single monkey had come here by crossing the mighty ocean. His deeds were so marvellous and astounding that everyone here remembers them secretly in his heart, and even speak of them in private (as they are terrified to talk of it openly)¹. (2)

Why, weren't anyone of you hungry then that you couldn't grab and devour him (Hanuman) when he was burning Lanka²? (3)

[Note—¹To wit, what Hanuman had done here in Lanka is talk of the town; everyone speaks of it in a hushed tone and in private discussions because they are scared you might hear them speak of a subject that they fear you will not like to hear about. But that does not mean that anyone has forgotten about what Hanuman had done to Lanka.

²You all boast of not worrying about the monkeys and humans as they are staple food of demons (as said in Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 8 herein above). Well then, if this is the case then was no one hungry to catch hold of Hanuman and eat him up to help save our city from being burnt to ashes? Why do you boast now and put yourselves to shame?]

सुनत नीक आगें दुख पावा । सचिवन अस मत प्रभुहि सुनावा ॥ ४ ॥
 जेहिं बारीस बँधायउ हेला । उतरेउ सेन समेत सुबेला ॥ ५ ॥ सो भनु मनुज खाब हम भाई । बचन कहहिं सब गाल फुलाई ॥ ६ ॥ sunata nika āgēm dukha pāvā. sacivana asa mata prabhuhi sunāvā. 4.

 jēhim bārīsa baṁdhāya'u hēlā. utarē'u sēna samēta subēlā. 5.
 sō bhanu manuja khāba hama bhā'ī. bacana kahahim saba gāla phulā'ī. 6.

These flattering ministers have given your lordship an advice that seems so reassuring and pleasant to hear at its face value, but which would give you nothing but trouble and grief later on in the long run. (4)

He (i.e. Lord Ram) has been able to tame the mighty ocean as if it was a mere sport for him, and now he has landed on Mt. Subel with his large and formidable army. (5)

It is such an irony that now your ministers boast with a loud mouth by saying that they will eat this gentleman along with his army!¹ (6)

[Note—¹Well, will you tell me what were they doing while the bridge was being constructed, what were they doing when the enemy's army was crossing it, what were they doing when Lord Ram and his army landed on the shores of Lanka, and why could none of the demons could stop the march of the army from the shore and up Mt. Subel? Even a blind man can see through this airy talk and loud bluster that is hollow from the inside.]

तात बचन मम सुनु अति आदर । जनि मन गुनहु मोहि करि कादर ॥ ७ ॥
 प्रिय बानी जे सुनहिं जे कहहीं । ऐसे नर निकाय जग अहहीं ॥ ८ ॥ बचन परम हित सुनत कठोरे । सुनहिं जे कहहिं ते नर प्रभु थोरे ॥ ९ ॥ tāta bacana mama sunu ati ādara. jani mana gunahu mōhi kari kādara. 7.

 priya bānī jē sunahim jē kahahim. aisē nara nikāya jaga ahahim. 8.
 bacana parama hita sunata kaṭhōrē. sunahim jē kahahim tē nara prabhu thōrē. 9.

My dear father (tāta)! Pay close attention to my words (advice), and don't think me to a coward or scared of anything. (7)

There are lots and lots of people who speak what is pleasant for the other person to hear, and similarly there is no dearth of people who like to hear only sweet things being told to them, things that they like to hear. (8)

But there are not many people who would like to speak or hear things that would seem unpleasant to hear or speak of, but are actually the hard truth and good for all.

[To wit, truth is often a bitter pill to ingest, but it is like a good medicine for everyone. Things that may initially seem harsh to hear may actually be good in the long run for both the speaker and the hearer. Truly, there are not many people who would gather courage to speak the truth, and similarly there are not many people who would calmly hear things that are unpleasant to hear but are meant for their own good in the long run.] (9)

प्रथम बसीठ पठउ सुनु नीती । सीता देइ करहु पुनि प्रीती ॥ १० ॥ prathama basīṭha paṭha'u sunu nīṭi. sītā dē'i karahu puni prīṭi. 10.

Now, listen to what is the proper thing for you to do: first send an emissary (to Lord Ram, conveying your desire to make peace), then send Sita back to the Lord, and finally make a treaty of peace, harmony and friendship with him. (10)

दो०. नारि पाइ फिरि जाहिं जौं तौ न बढाइअ रारि ।

नाहिं त सन्मुख समर महि तात करिअ हठि मारि ॥ ९ ॥

dōhā.

nāri pā'i phiri jāhim jaum tau na baḍhā'i'a rāri.

nāhim ta sanmukha samara mahi tāta kari'a haṭhi māri. 9.

If he (Lord Ram) returns after getting his wife back then it would be good for all and the end of the matter. If on the other hand he becomes ambitious and wants to conquer Lanka then you must face him boldly and gallantly in the battle-field, thrashing him without the slightest remorse and breaking his army to smithereens (because then you will be fully justified to do so). (Doha no. 9)

[Note—Any neutral observer would agree with Prahas't's advice; what he told Ravana is the most appropriate thing to do. The reason is discussed in a note appended to verse no. 1 herein below.]

चौ०. यह मत जौं मानहु प्रभु मोरा । उभय प्रकार सुजसु जग तोरा ॥ १ ॥

सुत सन कह दसकंठ रिसाई । असि मति सठ केहिं तोहि सिखाई ॥ २ ॥

अबहीं ते उर संसय होई । बेनुमूल सुत भयहु घमोई ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

yaha mata jaum mānahu prabhu mōrā. ubhaya prakāra sujasa jaga tōrā. 1.

suta sana kaha dasakaṇṭha risāī. asi mati saṭha kēhim tōhi sikhāī. 2.

abāhim tē ura sansaya hōī. bēnumūla suta bhayahu ghamōī. 3.

Oh my Lord; if you agree to this advice of mine then you will have glory and good fame in either of two situations¹.

[To wit, you will be appreciated in the world for your goodwill gesture of returning your enemy's wife and proposing peace to avoid a bloody war, and in case Lord Ram refuses your proposals then it will be good for you, for then the whole blame would fall squarely on the shoulders of your enemy, and you will be absolved of any misadventure that culminated in a destructive war. In the second scenario however, you will be justified to fight and crush your enemy mercilessly, beating the blue out of him, which you and your ministers boast of doing.]' (1)

The ten-necked (and therefore ten-headed) Ravana (dasakanṭha) became very angry at his son and sternly rebuked him, saying, 'Oh you stupid rascal; who has taught you to think this way?' (2)

You have started having doubts in the very beginning, when there is no action on the ground as yet. My son, you appear to be like a prickly plant that grows at the root of a bamboo tree (that destroys the entire cluster of bamboos).

[To wit, you have brought shame and a blot on the valour and glory of the entire demon race, and more specifically on my family by speaking like a scared coward who is terrified of facing an enemy in the battle-field, and therefore tries to cook up some excuse to avoid a battle to save his skin. Woe to you; shame to you. You have blackened my face with such a cowardly and reprehensible approach towards an enemy who has invaded our land, something I had never ever expected from my own son.]² (3)

[Note—¹What does Prahast mean that Ravana would gain good fame and acquire glory if he follows the advice given by him in Doha no. 9 herein above?

The answer is this: Since at present Ravana is at fault because he has abducted a chaste and loyal wife of another person who has the full right to free her from the clutches of her abductor by trying his best, which incidentally involves fighting a war since the lady's kidnapper refuses to relent and give her back to her husband, the blame for the ignominy, the bloodshed and the devastation that the war is sure to invite will lie squarely on Ravana's shoulders.

If on the other hand he returns Sita back to her husband Lord Ram, and takes the initiative of making peace by sending an emissary with a message of this intent, and then even after this his so-called enemy remains aggressive and hostile by declaring that he would invade Lanka and kill all the demons, then in this situation Ravana would be justified to defend himself and his race against an invader. In this case, the blame for fighting the war unnecessarily and its attendant horrors which could have been easily avoided would go to Lord Ram, and the world would denounce him instead of condemning Ravana. It's as plain and simple as that.

But unfortunately Ravana did not listen to his son Prahast. Instead of appreciating Prahast's wisdom and prudence, Ravana lost his temper and lambasted him for showing cowardice in the face of the enemy, and for being a shameful blot on the demon race and on the family of its king.

²Ravana's angry outburst at Prahast is in sharp contrast with the calm and docile way he reacted when Mandodari, his wife, too tried to persuade him to end confrontation with Lord Ram on four occasions, the last being just a while ago (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8).

Probably Prahast's advice was ill-timed as it came when his father was already under immense emotional stress after what Mandodari had said to him just a little while before. Prahast's words therefore provoked him, and made him feel cornered and guilty; this unleashed his suppressed anger which he had somehow managed to keep contained before Mandodari.

As we have already observed earlier in the context of Mandodari, one of the primary reasons why Ravana did not show his anger at her while displaying utter contempt at all others who had tried to advise him on the same line as she did, is that while Mandodari's talking was in private, all the others had spoken in public. Ravana took this public pointing out of his faults as an affront to his majesty and authority, and surely this would annoy any king worth his name, for no king would approve that his own courtiers and family members criticise him or chastise him in front of others, in full public view.]

सुनि पितु गिरा परुष अति घोरा । चला भवन कहि बचन कठोरा ॥ ४ ॥
हित मत तोहि न लागत कैसें । काल बिबस कहूँ भेषज जैसें ॥ ५ ॥ suni pitu girā paruṣa ati ghōrā. calā bhavana kahi bacana kaṭhōrā. 4.

hita mata tōhi na lāgata kaisēm. kāla bibasa kahuṁ bhēṣaja jaisēm. 5.

When he (Prahast) heard his father speak so harshly to him, he felt exasperated himself and decided to go home. But before that, he retorted at his father in a sharp tone --- (4)

‘An advice that is for your own good is not liked by you just as a person who is in the throes of death cannot be cured even by the best of medicines.

[To wit, just like medicines fail to cure a person who is destined to die, all good advice seems to fail to have any effect on you. It is futile to try to show you the right path because you are doomed to die. So do whatever you wish to do; I have nothing more to say.]’ (5)

संध्या समय जानि दससीसा । भवन चलेउ निरखत भुज बीसा ॥ ६ ॥
लंका सिखर उपर आगारा । अति बिचित्र तहँ होइ अखारा ॥ ७ ॥
बैठ जाइ तेहि मंदिर रावन । लागे किंनर गुन गन गावन ॥ ८ ॥
बाजहिं ताल पखाउज बीना । नृत्य करहिं अपछरा प्रबीना ॥ ९ ॥ sandhyā samaya jāni dasasīsā. bhavana calē'u nirakhata bhuja bīsā. 6.

laṅkā sikhara upara āgārā. ati bicitra tahaṁ hō'i akhārā. 7.
baiṭha jā'i tēhiṁ mandira rāvana. lāgē kinnara guna gana gāvana. 8.
bājahiṁ tāla pakha'uja bīnā. nṛtya karahiṁ apacharā prabīnā. 9.

Observing that it was almost evening, Ravana retired to his palace, and on his way back he fondly and haughtily gazed at his twenty mighty arms¹. (6)

On the top of the summit of Lanka, there was a very fascinating and charming hall where regular programmes of dancing and singing competitions were used to be held. (7)

It was in this citadel that Ravana went to sit and enjoy the musical extravaganza. Soon, the Kinnars (court dancers and singers) began singing songs in his honour. (8)

Musical instruments such as cymbals, tabors and Indian lutes were played, and beautiful nymphs known as Apsaras, who were experts in dancing, began exhibiting their skills in this art². (9)

[Note—¹After all the chiding and rebuke by Prahast and Mandodari presently, and earlier by Vibhishan, Ravana was feeling very depressed, and he needed some kind of subtle psychological support for his sagging morale, something to bolster his courage and encourage him. So he now looked up and down his mighty arms, which he flexed and twisted and shook to remind himself that these were the same arms that had enabled him to conquer the world repeatedly. This was like insurance for him—that even if no one comes to help him, he alone was competent to take his enemy head-on, thanks to the might of his twenty arms.

²We come across such Apsaras and exhibition of their dancing skills elsewhere also in Ram Charit Manas—for instance, refer to: Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 126. The context here is different however, for it was at the time when Kaam, the god of passion, was trying to disturb Lord Shiva's meditation.

The Apsaras are female dancers and singers, while the Kinnars are their male counterparts.]

दो०. सुनासीर सत सरिस सो संतत करइ बिलास ।

परम प्रबल रिपु सीस पर तद्यपि सोच न त्रास ॥ १० ॥

dōhā.

sunāsīra sata sarisa sō santata kara'i bilāsa.

parama prabala ripu sīsa para tadyapi sōca na trāsa. 10.

Ravana used to indulge in sensual pleasures and luxuries that were equivalent to those that can be enjoyed by hundreds of Indras together¹.

It is such an irony that he had a formidably powerful enemy knocking right at his doorstep, yet he was neither worried nor afraid of this development. (Doha no. 10)

[Note—¹Indra is the king of gods; he is described in ancient mythological literature as someone who was very indulgent in sensual pleasures. From a metaphysical perspective, Indra represents the sense organs of a creature. These sense organs have a natural habit of getting attracted to their respective objects in this material world, and they will always like to enjoy them, they are invariably tempted by them. For instance, the 'tongue' would always like to taste delicious food, even if that food is harmful for the body. Likewise, the 'skin' would like to touch things that seem pleasant to it and give sensual pleasure to the creature, even if such contact may lead to some grave consequences later on and land the creature in trouble.

The idea here is that Ravana was an exceptionally lustful and passionate individual who liked to wallow in luxury and remain engrossed in enjoying sensual pleasures. He was driven blind by his pervert nature so much so that he could not see the dark clouds of doom looming in the horizon. His over-confidence and a false sense of invincibility made him so haughty and arrogant that he thought that no harm can ever come to him, and that life is meant to be spent in enjoying sensual pleasures and worldly luxuries as much as is possible.

He firmly believed that as the King of Demons it was his birth-right to enjoy the privileges that come with the crown of Lanka and the fruits of kingship of the demon race. So therefore he was within his rights in enjoying these privileges and fruits; there was nothing wrong in enjoying sensual pleasures and luxuries.

Tentatively, however, he showed signs of alarm when his attention was drawn to the fact that a huge army of immense strength was next door, but this scary scene of an impending bloody war that may lead not only to the ruin of his entire kingdom but also to his own death had only a temporary effect on him, because he soon forgot all about it and reverted back to his old pervert ways.]

(b) Sub-section 13.1.2: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 11-b — to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 14:-

Meanwhile, Lord Ram and his army of monkeys and bears, who were also accompanied by Vibhishan, Ravana's brother who had surrendered before the Lord and joined his camp earlier, had arrived in Lanka and pitched camp on Mt. Subel—refer: Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 11.

Now we shall read what happened next.]

पूरब दिसा बिलोकि प्रभु देखा उदित मयंक ।

कहत सबहि देखहु ससिहि मृगपति सरिस असंक ॥ ११ (ख) ॥ pūraba disā bilōki prabhu dēkhā udita mayāṅka.

kahata sabahi dēkhahu sasihi mṛgapati sarisa asaṅka. 11 (b).

When night fell, Lord Ram looked in the eastern direction and saw the full moon rising. He addressed his companions and said, 'Look all of you at the moon. How bold it is, like a lion (is amongst other animals: mṛgapati sarisa asaṅka)! (Doha no. 11-b)

[Note—Why Lord Ram compares the full moon with a lion is explained below. Briefly he means that just like a lion is not scared of any animal, large or small, in the forest, the moon isn't bothered about other heavenly bodies, may they be small distant stars or nearby large planets such as Jupiter and Saturn. The moon dulls them and makes them lustreless with its brilliant light that spreads across the firmament as well as on the earth below.]

चौ०. पूरब दिसि गिरिगुहा निवासी । परम प्रताप तेज बल रासी ॥ १ ॥
 मत्त नाग तम कुंभ बिदारी । ससि केसरी गगन बन चारी ॥ २ ॥
 बिथुरे नभ मुकुताहल तारा । निसि सुंदरी केर सिंगारा ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

pūraba disi giriguhā nivāsī. parama pratāpa tēja bala rāsī. 1.
 matta nāga tama kumbha bidārī. sasi kēsārī gagana bana cārī. 2.
 bithurē nabha mukutāhala tārā. nisi sundarī kēra siṅgārā. 3.

This moon, which is like a lion, dwells in a mountain cave symbolised by the eastern direction just below the horizon¹. This metaphoric lion (i.e. the moon) has immense glory; it possesses grandeur and brilliance, and it is an embodiment of strength. (1)

This lion-like moon moves ahead boldly in the sky after rupturing the thick veil of darkness just like the case of a brave lion who jumps on the back of a wild elephant that may obstruct his path, and then fearlessly tears apart the top of the head of its victim to vanquish it². (2)

The stars that are scattered in the sky are like so many beautiful pearls that adorn the body of a lady represented by the night³. (3)

[Note—¹When the moon rises from below the horizon in the east as night falls it looks as if a lion is coming out from the mouth of a dark mountain cave where it had retired for the day.

²When the full moon rises in the sky it tears apart the veil of darkness by its brilliant light just like a lion that moves towards its prey and tears apart its body. The lion is so strong and powerful that it can win over the strongest animal in the forest, such as an elephant. Likewise, the light of the moon dulls even the brightest star in the dark night, showing that it too is bold and powerful.

³In these verses, the ‘night’ is a dark-skinned beauty (a lady); the ‘stars’ are the pearls that are worn by this lady to decorate herself; the ‘full moon’ is her face; and the ‘sky or the firmament’ is her body-wrapping apparel.

It is to be noted that the moon, no matter how much it shines, still has a dark hue to it as compared to the dazzling bright disc of the sun. Since the lady here is represented by the ‘night’, which is dark, her face is aptly compared to the ‘full moon’ because its disc also has a shade of dark in spite of its silvery light. This is in contrast to a fair-skinned lady whose face would be aptly compared to the ‘sun’.]

कह प्रभु ससि महुँ मेचकताई । कहहु काह निज निज मति भाई ॥ ४ ॥
 कह सुग्रीव सुनहु रघुराई । ससि महुँ प्रगट भूमि कै झाँई ॥ ५ ॥ kaha prabhu sasi mahum̐ mēcakatāī. kahahu kāha nija nija mati bhāī. 4.

 kaha sugrīva sunahu raghurāī. sasi mahum̐ pragaṭa bhūmi kai jhāī. 5.

Then the Lord turned to his companions and wished to know what they thought of the moon. So he said, ‘My brothers (bhāṭī)¹, tell me what each of you think in this matter (concerning the moon).’ (4)

[The first one to give his opinion was Sugriv, the king of the monkeys.] Sugriv said, ‘Oh Lord Ram (raghurāṭī), listen. The moon appears to be a bit dark because the shadow of the earth falls on its surface².’ (5)

[Note—¹The term ‘brother’ is endearing; it brings closeness between the speaker and the listener. By using this word of affection Lord Ram wishes to convey that he treats all his companions as his dear brothers. Such small gestures on the part of Lord Ram went a long way in forging a close bond between the Lord and the rest of his advisors and troops who developed personal rapport with the Lord which was based on affection and mutual respect that in turn ensured their loyalty, devotion and commitment towards the Lord and his cause. They became emotionally attached to Lord Ram; they became faithful to him and were ready to cheerfully lay down their lives for him.

This is in sharp contrast with Ravana’s attitude and his dealings with his ministers. He treated himself as their ‘king’, not as one of them. On the other hand Lord Ram treated all his ministers as if they were his ‘brothers’, as a close ‘friend’ (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 51).

²Sugriv was the king of Kishkindha. Therefore he must have had knowledge of basic science. His reply, that the shadow of the earth fall on the surface of the moon to make it look a bit dark instead of brilliant white, is quite in line with science. The moon has its origin in the earth, because in some ancient time a part of the earth was scooped out by a colliding heavenly body, such as a meteor or an asteroid. Though from a distance the moon appears to shine like silver, but when one gets close enough one discovers that its surface is as ordinary and rough and dark as that of the earth; it’s full of craters; and it’s surface has a coarse soil, and is littered with pebbles and stones and rocks of varying dimensions much like the surface of earth.

Besides this, Sugriv’s mind may have been preoccupied with land and expansion of his empire. So it is like: he always thought of ‘earth’; the earth came to his mind first even when talking of the moon.]

मारेउ राहु ससिहि कह कोई । उर महँ परी स्यामता सोई ॥ ६ ॥
कोउ कह जब बिधि रति मुख कीन्हा । सार भाग ससि कर हरि लीन्हा ॥ ७ ॥ छिद्र सो प्रगट इंदु उर माहीं । तेहि मग देखिअ नभ परिछाहीं ॥ ८ ॥ mārē'u rāhu sasihi kaha kō'ī. ura maham̐ parī syāmatā sō'ī. 6.

kō'u kaha jaba bidhi rati mukha kīnhā. sāra bhāga sasi kara hari līnhā. 7.
chidra sō pragaṭa indu ura māhīm̐. tēhi maga dēkhi'a nabha parichāhīm̐. 8.

Someone gave his opinion saying that the black spots seen on the surface of the moon has been caused by the wound inflicted upon it by Rahu (the severed head of a demon who is said to devour the moon during lunar eclipses) who had attached it¹. (6)

Someone else² proposed that when the creator was moulding the face of Rati, the beautiful consort of Kaamdeo (the patron god of beauty and passion), he could not find a suitable material to use for Rati's face, so he decided to scoop up some of the core matter from the charming face of the moon and use it to craft her face. The area from which this beautifying matter was scooped up by Brahma left dark spots on the surface of the moon. (7)

Since some matter was removed by Brahma from the heart or the core area of the moon, it became less dense there, and therefore one can faintly see the blue sky beyond it through this hole. This gives the visual impression that the moon's otherwise brilliantly illuminated surface is dark here and there. (8)

[Note—¹Rahu is the severed head of a demon who is believed to be responsible for causing the lunar eclipse. According to mythological accounts, a demon had surreptitiously entered the row of gods and sat between the moon god and the sun god when Amrit, the nectar of eternity that was obtained during the churning of the ocean, was being distributed between the gods and the demons. As soon as these two gods realised who he was, they raised an alarm. Lord Vishnu cut off the impostor demon's head, but it was too late as by that time some drops of the Amrit had already dropped into the mouth of this demon, making him immune to death. So the demon insisted that the creator Brahma must provide him some food that he can eat on a regular basis to survive. On being asked his choice he said that he should be allowed to eat the sun and the moon gods. It was granted. Henceforth therefore, this demon devours the moon and the sun occasionally, causing the eclipses. The moon enters through its mouth and escapes through the hole at the lower end from where the head was severed from the body of the demon.

The severed head of the demon is called 'Rahu', and the cut-off torso is called 'Ketu' which is seen as the comet in the night sky.

The beginning of the lunar or the solar eclipse starts when Rahu begins approaching its victim, causing the disc of the two celestial bodies gradually becoming darker. The actual eclipse is when these two celestial entities enter the mouth of Rahu, when they escape through the hole at the lower end of Rahu's severed head it marks the end of the eclipse. The darkness of the disc of the moon and the sun soon fades away, indicating that Rahu had gone away.

But it is believed that during this brief period Rahu manages to bite its victim and suck some of its blood. The wound thus created results in the dark spots seen on the surface of both the moon and the sun.

²Though it is not clear from these two verses who these other two persons were, but most probably there were Angad and Vibhishan respectively. The reason is that four persons were very close confidantes of Lord Ram, and remained by his side most of the time—they were Sugriv (the king of the monkeys), Angad (the crown prince of the monkeys), Vibhishan (Ravana's brother who had joined Lord Ram) and Hanuman (who had gone to Lanka and brought back Sita's news).

Sugriv had already expressed his opinion in verse no. 5 herein above. The next turn was that of Angad in order of seniority, so his idea is expressed in verse no. 6. His observations reflect his state of mind aptly because his father Baali was killed by an arrow in a battle with Sugriv. The wound on his father's heart must have been fresh in Angad's mind when he tried to find a reason for the darkness on the moon's surface, for it reminded him of that dark patch of blood on the chest of his father.

The third in order of seniority was obviously Vibhishan, so verse nos. 7-8 can be attributed to him. He was kicked out of Lanka where he was forced to leave his wife Sarma. He remembered her fondly, and the moon reminded him of her beautiful face.

The last companion was Hanuman. He was a great devotee of Lord Ram, and this will soon be reflected when he expresses his opinion in Doha no. 12-a herein below.]

प्रभु कह गरल बंधु ससि केरा । अति प्रिय निज उर दीन्ह बसेरा ॥ ९ ॥

बिष संजुत कर निकर पसारी । जारत बिरहवत नर नारी ॥ १० ॥

prabhu kaha garala bandhu sasi kērā. ati priya nija ura dīnha basērā. 9.
biṣa sañjuta kara nikara pasārī. jārata birahavanta nara nārī. 10.

Lord Ram now made his own observation (almost on the line of his friends). He said that 'poison (garala)' is a dear brother of the 'moon' (bandhu sasi kērā ati priya). 'Poison' is so dear to the 'moon' that the latter has given it a place close to its own heart¹. (9)

The moon burns and scorches (i.e. torments) men and women who are separated from their beloved ones by spreading its rays laced with this poison upon them. [To wit, the rays of the moon prove to be like a spray of poison that further aggravates the grief of a person who is already suffering the agony of separation from his or her beloved.]² (10)

[Note—¹The poison known as Halala emerged from the ocean at the time of its churning by the gods and the demons. It is also believed that the moon too owes its origin to the ocean, because when a large chunk of earth was scooped out and thrown into the sky to form the moon, the cavity thus created was filled with water, thereby forming the ocean.

Hence, the 'poison' and the 'moon' both have the ocean as their father.

²Those who are suffering from grief at separation from their beloved ones, look up to the moon for some relief, and then sigh. The rays of the moon, which are normally soothing and comforting for others, makes those who are suffering from the grief of separation feel more sorrowful and much tormented as it reminds them of their separated beloved ones whom they are not certain to meet and see again. This is equivalent to spraying hot liquid on a wound, or is like spraying poison on an injury.

Lord Ram is suffering from grief due to separation from his beloved wife Sita. So like his companions Sugriv, Angad and Vibhihsan he too makes an observation that reflects his worldly state of mind and feelings. It is very apt for the Lord to speak in a language that fits with the line of thinking of his friends; the Lord wishes to convey to them that he is no different from them.

Let us remember one thing here—Lord Ram has always took the precaution to see that his commanders would feel that the Lord is very down-to-earth and practical, making them feel at home with him, treating him as one who is like them, and not a Lord who is inaccessible and distant. In this context see Chaupai line no. 4 herein above where he addresses his companions as ‘brothers’.

So why is the moon tormenting Lord Ram by partnering with poison? Well, the Lord had threatened their father, the Ocean, when the latter had blocked his way. This annoyed the moon, and it decided to torment the Lord by lacing its rays with poison symbolizing the sorrows, the agony and the grief that torments a person who is separated from his beloved one—in this case it is Lord Ram who is suffering from separation with Sita.]

दो०. कह हनुमंत सुनहु प्रभु ससि तुम्हार प्रिय दास ।
तव मूरति बिधु उर बसति सोइ स्यामता अभास ॥ १२ (क) ॥
पवन तनय के बचन सुनि बिहँसे रामु सुजान ।
दच्छिन दिसि अवलोकि प्रभु बोले कृपानिधान ॥ १२ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

kaha hanumanta sunahu prabhu sasi tumhāra priya dāsa.
tava mūrati bidhu ura basati sō'i syāmatā abhāsa. 12 (a). pavana tanaya kē bacana suni bihaṁsē rāmu sujāna.
dacchina disi avalōki prabhu bōlē kṛpānidhāna. 12 (b).

Then came the turn of Hanuman who said, ‘Listen my Lord! The moon is one of your dear servants (a faithful servitor; a loyal follower; an ardent devotee—“sasi tumhāra priya dāsa”)¹. [So it will not be proper to say that his is tormenting you by spraying rays laced with poison upon you.]

Your image is sacredly enshrined in the moon’s heart (because he loves you and is devoted to you), and this causes the shade of darkness that is seen on its surface.

[It is also possible that the moon is sad because you are sad. A true servant feels the same way his lord feels; if the lord is happy the servant will be happy, and if the lord is unhappy the servant too would feel unhappy. That is why the moon is dark as it feels sorry for you.]’ (Doha no. 12-a)

When the gentleman Lord Ram heard these wise and enlightened (and surely witty) words of the son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) he smiled.²

The Lord, who is a treasury of grace and kindness, then looked in the south direction and said³ --- (Doha no. 12-b)

[Note—¹Why does Hanuman call the moon a servant or a devotee of Lord Ram? The answer is this: A monkey named Sushen is regarded as a manifestation of the moon god, and this Sushen is the father-in-law of Sugriv, who himself is Lord Ram’s close companion and confidante. So therefore, the moon god cannot be inimical to the Lord.

Another reason is that the crescent moon finds its abode in the lock of matted hairs on Lord Shiva’s head, and Shiva worships you. So how can the moon become your enemy; by no stretch of imagination this is ever possible.

This interpretation of Hanuman proves that he was a devotee of Lord Ram of the highest level. While others took a worldly view of why the moon has dark spots, Hanuman had an enlightened view of it.

²Lord Ram smiled at the smart and witty answer of Hanuman. It lent a completely different meaning to the whole discussion regarding the moon. The Lord marvelled at Hanuman's wisdom and level of enlightenment and presence of mind; it helped to further firm up the Lord's personal high opinion regarding Hanuman. Every little event added up to bring Hanuman more and more close to the Lord; each small thing that happened proved that amongst all the monkeys and bears and demons no one could match Hanuman in any field.

It is the reason why Lord Ram decided to retain only Hanuman in his service after returning from Lanka and being crowned as the King of Ayodhya.

³The Lord changed the subject. He now looked in the direction of the city of Lanka which was in the southern direction from Mt. Subel. There were more urgent things to discuss; the war was looming in the horizon and a strategy had to be devised soon. The talk of the moon was like an idle pastime; the mind had to be focussed on more important things now.]

चौ०. देखु बिभीषन दच्छिन आसा । घन घमंड दामिनी बिलासा ॥ १ ॥

मधुर मधुर गरजइ घन घोरा । होइ बृष्टि जनि उपल कठोरा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dēkhu bibhīṣana dacchina āsā. ghana ghamanḍa dāminī bilāsā. 1.

madhura madhura garaja'i ghana ghōrā. hō'i br̥ṣṭi jani upala kaṭhōrā. 2.

Addressing Vibhishan, Lord Ram said, 'Vibhishan, look in the south direction. It appears that huge banks of dark clouds are emerging in the yonder sky. There are streaks of lightening glistening through these clouds, lending a special charm to them. (1)

The soft sound of these clouds rumbling and thundering in the distance is clearly audible. Would it rain, or is it possible that there would be a shower of hail coming down upon us?¹ (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram's army was under the open sky; there were no modern day tents to house the soldiers. So the possibility of an approaching thunderstorm worried the Lord. He consulted Vibhishan as he had lived all his life in Lanka, and therefore he would be in a better position to tell how the weather behaves in this far away alien land to which neither Lord Ram nor any of the others were in the least familiar with. Advance precautions had to be taken and preparations made before the fury of Nature befell upon the huge army. Should it begin to rain now when the war is to be fought the next day or in the days following, a lot of advance planning is required. A rainy day is quite a different proposition than a sunny day in the battle-field.

So, the prospects of rain or a hailstorm worried Lord Ram.]

कहत बिभीषन सुनुहु कृपाला । होइ न तड़ित न बारिद माला ॥ ३ ॥

लंका सिखर उपर आगारा । तहँ दसकंधर देख अखारा ॥ ४ ॥ kahata bibhīṣana sunahu krpālā. hō'i na taḍita na bārīda mālā. 3.

lañkā sikhara upara āgārā. tahañ dasakandhara dēkha akhārā. 4.

Vibhishan replied, ‘Listen of merciful and gracious Lord (sunahu krpālā)! This sight is neither of a bank of cloud nor of lightening. (3)

On the summit of Lanka there is a huge citadel (or a hall) where Ravana (the ten-shouldered and ten-headed one—“dasakandhara”) sits to watch competitions of dancing and singing, as well as other kinds of sports¹. (4)

[Note—¹This is the first instance among many others that will come during the unfolding of the war that Vibhishan had given the secrets of Lanka and Ravana to Lord Ram.

Amongst the most prominent ones are the following:

When Ravana was performing a fire sacrifice that would have made him invincible in the battle-field if completed successfully, Vibhishan had told Lord Ram about it. On getting this vital piece of intelligence, a small detachment of monkey troops was sent in Lanka. They destroyed Ravana’s fire sacrifice, paving the ground for his final defeat. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 85 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it.}

Even the death of Ravana was due to Vibhishan as he was the one who had divulged the secret of Ravana’s life to Lord Ram, after which the Lord shot an arrow that culminated in Ravana’s death. Prior to that, all efforts to kill Ravana had failed. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 101-b—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 103.}

Vibhishan has always been regarded with contempt for his betrayal of his own race and family. His name has become a synonym for betrayal, treason, disloyalty and selfishness, for he had been instrumental in the destruction of his own race just to take revenge for his chiding by his elder brother Ravana who had been so kind and understanding towards him that he had let Vibhishan pursue his religious path of worship and devotion inspite of living right in the center of Lanka and in the middle of the demon race that was totally opposed to such practices. Ravana had even overlooked that Vibhishan has marked the name of Lord Hari on his front gate, and used to chant Lord Ram’s name the first thing in the morning—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 5—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 6.

But when Vibhishan realised that the future was not in the favour of his brother Ravana, he had no regrets in abandoning him and joining the camp of the arch enemy of his brother—i.e. Lord Ram. It is not denying the fact that Vibhishan secretly wished to save his own skin and was eying the future crown of Lanka when he joined Lord Ram—for he knew that if he stayed back in Lanka he would be forced to fight along with the rest of the demons, and sure enough he would be killed like the rest of them. So he was waiting for an opportunity, and as soon as he got one he escaped. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 41.>}

छत्र मेघडंबर सिर धारी । सोइ जनु जलद घटा अति कारी ॥ ५ ॥

मंदोदरी श्रवन ताटंका । सोइ प्रभु जनु दामिनी दमंका ॥ ६ ॥ chatra mēghaḍambara sira dhārī. sō'i janu jalada ghaṭā ati kārī. 5.

mandōdarī śravana tāṭaṅkā. sō'i prabhu janu dāminī damaṅkā. 6.

He (Ravana) has a large ceremonial umbrella spread over his head as a symbol of royalty, and this umbrella gives the impression of a huge bank of dark clouds when viewed at a distance from here. (5)

Mandodari has dazzling earrings dangling from her ears, and oh Lord, the brilliant flash of light that radiate from them as she moves her head appear to be like streaks of lightening in the clouds when they are viewed against the dark background of the ceremonial umbrella. [This is because both Ravana and Mandodari are attending the festivities, sitting close to each other, and the ceremonial umbrella is spread over their heads.] (6)

बाजहिं ताल मृदंग अनूपा । सोइ रव मधुर सुनहु सुरभूपा ॥ ७ ॥ प्रभु मुसुकान समुझि अभिमाना । चाप चढ़ाइ बान संधाना ॥ ८ ॥ bājahim tāla mṛdaṅga anūpā. sō'i rava madhura sunahu surabhūpā. 7.

prabhu musukāna samujhi abhimānā. cāpa caṛhā'i bāna sandhānā. 8.

And the soft sound that appears to be the rumbling of distant clouds from here is actually the sound of clashing cymbals and the playing of the tabors, the musical instruments that are being used there.' (7)

When Lord Ram heard this, he smiled¹ because, overtly, the Lord interpreted the sight as indicating that Ravana was very haughty and arrogant, and was effectively mocking at the Lord by indulging in open festivities to show that he has no fear of either Lord Ram or his army, and he cares not a wee bit about the danger posed by them. [But what was the other, the more subtle reason for Lord Ram's smile? See note no. 1 below]

So, to literally teach Ravana a lesson, the Lord strung his bow and mounted an arrow on it². (8)

[Note—¹Why did Lord Ram 'smile'? One reason is given in the verse itself: The Lord smiled in a sarcastic and contemptuous way at Ravana because the latter was so haughty and proud that he took the news of the Lord's arrival too lightly, and he wasn't at all worried about the bloody war that loomed on the horizon of Lanka. This is not the proper attitude and a wise way for any king to behave in the face of an enemy. So the Lord wished to send Ravana a clear message about the fate that stares at his face by shooting an arrow that would dismantle the ceremonial umbrella of authority over his head, as well as fell his ten crowns along with the earrings of his wife Mandodari.

But there was another reason for Lord Ram's smile, and it is this: By specifically asking Vibhishan the reason for the appearance of dark clouds etc. in the southern direction where Lanka was located, Lord Ram wanted to ascertain what was in his mind. The Lord wished to check Vibhishan's fidelity; he wanted to know whether Vibhishan was willing to divulge the secrets of Lanka, whether or not he would help Lord Ram and his army at crucial moments of the impending war. The Lord expressed his satisfaction at Vibhishan's reply by 'smiling' because the latter's answer proved that he was truly against Ravana and loyal to Lord Ram.

It was Vibhishan's first test of loyalty and integrity, and the Lord smiled because he had passed this test; now Vibhishan could be relied upon. If Vibhishan was not truly committed to serving the Lord he could have said so many other things to deflect Lord Ram's attention from the real cause of the sound and sight heard and seen in the southern direction. To wit, if Vibhishan had secretly wished that his brother Ravana was not put in harm's way he could have given a hundred other reasons to Lord Ram for the sight that was seen instead of pinpointing what caused it, and thereby putting his brother in the Lord's radar.

²A similar sight is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 42-44.]

दो०. छत्र मुकुट ताटंक तब हते एकहीं बान ।
 सब कें देखत महि परे मरमु न कोऊ जान ॥ १३ (क) ॥ अस कौतुक करि राम सर प्रबिसेउ आइ निषंग । रावन सभा ससंक सब देखि महा रसभंग ॥ १३ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

chatra mukuṭa tāṭaṅka taba hatē ēkahīm bāna.
 saba kēm dēkhata mahi parē maramu na kō'ū jāna. 13 (a).
 asa kautuka kari rāma sara prabisē'u ā'i niṣaṅga.
 rāvana sabhā sasaṅka saba dēkhi mahā rasabhaṅga. 13 (b).

The Lord took aim and shot this arrow. The arrow struck and fell to the ground the ceremonial umbrella and the crowns over the head of Ravana, as well as the earrings of Mandodari, one after another in quick succession, giving the impression that they fell simultaneously. It was done so suddenly, unexpectedly and in such a magical way that no one present could understand what had actually happened and for what reason¹. (Doha no. 13-a)

After accomplishing this unimaginable miraculous deed, the arrow returned to enter the quiver of Lord Ram².

Meanwhile, in Ravana's assembly there was total chaos. Everyone was shocked and taken aback at the sudden occurrence of this bad omen; they became sore affright and alarmed when the festivities were disrupted so abruptly. (Doha no. 13-b)

[Note—¹Lord Ram had two aims in mind—one of course is obvious: it was to warn Ravana that he is underestimating his enemy, that his enemy, Lord Ram, possesses certain skills of warfare that even Ravana isn't aware of, and that let him be warned that a bitter and scary fight stared him in the face and therefore it is not good for him to be careless now lest he would blame the Lord later on that he wasn't warned.

The second aim is subtle: Lord Ram wanted to warn Vibhishan not to play fools with him. The way the arrow was shot almost casually from a great distance, the way it hit and fell its target at one go, and, more importantly, the way it returned to Lord Ram's quiver, must have left Vibhishan gaping in utter amazement, with an open mouth and eyes transfixed in sheer astonishment at the miraculous spectacle.

If Vibhishan may have had any doubts about Lord Ram's abilities and supernatural powers, because of the Lord acting and behaving almost like any other human being, then all such doubts evaporated in a fleeting moment. Vibhishan would now fear Lord Ram, and in case he had some secret thought of betraying the Lord and taking the side of his own brother if the tide of war went in the favour of Ravana, then now onwards he would be so scared for his own life that he would perish this thought. This scenario was quite possible because if Vibhishan could betray his own family and blood-relations with whom he had spent his entire life to join their enemy, and then help this enemy to vanquish his own kith and kin and conquer his own city, then it is not impossible to think that he wouldn't have changed sides again if this suited his selfish interests. But now he was so scared out of his wits that he wouldn't dare to do it!

²The way the arrow was shot, the way it struck and fell its targets that were not in a straight line, and then successfully came back to enter the quiver of Lord Ram shows that the science and technology used in weapons and their use were highly evolved during that period.

Lord Ram had shown this special skill once before too—it was when Sugriv had wished to test the Lord's abilities and prowess by asking him to fell seven tall palm trees with a single arrow, which the Lord did effortlessly. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 7.}

चौ०. कंप न भूमि न मरुत बिसेषा । अज सज कछु नयन न देखा ॥ १ ॥

सोचहिं सब निज हृदय मझारी । असगुन भयउ भयंकर भारी ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kampa na bhūmi na maruta bisēṣā. astra sastra kachu nayana na dēkhā. 1.
sōcahiṁ saba nija hr̥daya majhārī. asaguna bhaya'u bhayaṅkara bhārī. 2.

The earth hadn't shook (i.e. there was no earthquake), nor was there a strong wind or storm, and neither did anyone see any kind of weapon or missile¹. (1)

Everyone present was extremely alarmed, thinking inside their hearts that some very bad omen has occurred. (2)

[Note—¹The reason is that everyone was engaged in watching the performance of the many dances and listening to the different kinds of music. The arrow shot by Lord Ram came and left in a jiffy; it was done so suddenly and unexpectedly that only when the crowns and the ceremonial umbrella on Ravana's head as well as Mandodari's earrings fell to the ground with a loud thud that anyone could notice that something had happened. But by that time the arrow was gone.]

(c) Sub-section 13.1.3: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 35-a:-

चौ०. इहाँ प्रात जागे रघुराई । पूछा मत सब सचिव बोलाई ॥ १ ॥
 कहहु बेगि का करिअ उपाई । जामवंत कह पद सिरु नाई ॥ २ ॥
 सुनु सर्बग्य सकल उर बासी । बुधि बल तेज धर्म गुन रासी ॥ ३ ॥
 मंत्र कहउँ निज मति अनुसार । दूत पठाइअ बालिकुमारा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

ihāṁ prāta jāgē raghurā'ī. pūchā mata saba saciva bōlā'ī. 1.
 kahahu bēgi kā kari'a upā'ī. jāmavanta kaha pada siru nā'ī. 2.
 sunu sarbagya sakala ura bāsī. budhi bala tēja dharma guna rāsī. 3.
 mantra kaha'uṁ nija mati anusārā. dūta paṭhā'i'a bālikumārā. 4.

Here meanwhile (i.e. on Mt. Subel), Lord Ram (raghurā'ī) woke up the next morning and called all his ministers to discuss and finalise the next course of action. (1)

He said to them, 'Tell me quickly what is to be done now.' At this, Jamvant (the aged chief of the bears and one of the wisest amongst the Lord's advisors) bowed his head before the Lord and replied, --- (2)

'Listen my Lord! You are all-knowing (sarbagya), and you know all about the thoughts of every living being as you reside in their heart (in the form of their Atma or soul, which is pure consciousness and their true self—"sakala ura bāsī"). [To wit, you are omniscient and omnipresent.]

Indeed, you are an embodiment of intelligence, strength, dynamism, and the virtues of righteousness, propriety and probity. (3)

I am advising you what I feel is the best course of action at present according to my thinking. We must send the son of Baali (i.e. Angad, the prince of the monkeys) as your emissary (to Ravana).¹ (4)

[Note—¹ Jamvant was very wise. To justify his advice that the Lord would do the right thing by first sending an emissary to Ravana to explore all avenues the make peace and avoid a destructive, and to stress that what he proposes is a genuine advice coming from his heart, he highlights the virtues of Lord Ram as said in verse no. 3.

To wit, since the Lord knows what is in the heart of a living being and all about his inner thoughts he would naturally know that the advice that Jamvant is giving is sincere and genuine as it is coming from his heart.

Secondly, since the Lord is an upholder of the laws of Dharma, he would agree that every chance must be given to one's enemy to make peace. It would be the right and the correct thing to do therefore to send a messenger to Ravana and exhaust this option first before launching any assault on Lanka.

An important question arises here: Why did Jamvant select Angad to be sent as an emissary? He wanted to ascertain whether or not Angad would remain faithful and loyal during the course of the war. Angad's father Baali was Ravana's friend, and he was killed by Sugriv, Angad's uncle, because the two brothers (elder brother Baali and his younger sibling Sugriv) were bitter enemies due to some misunderstanding of the past. Now by sending Angad directly to Ravana as an emissary an opportunity was given to him to defect and take revenge upon his uncle Sugriv by joining Ravana's camp, just like Vibhishan, Ravana's brother, had defected to Lord Ram's camp.

If this thought was secretly present in somewhere in the mind and heart of Angad, and he was waiting for an opportunity to settle old accounts with Sugriv for being instrumental in the death of his father Baali, then he was sure to grab this golden chance and desert Lord Ram's camp now. It would be much better if Angad's intentions are out in the open now as compared to some nasty back-stabbing, treason and betrayal by him later on during the heat of battle, for that would be disastrous.

Jamvant hinted to Lord Ram about this when he said that the Lord knows the inner thoughts of all living beings—which was a veiled hint to the Lord to check what was inside the heart of Angad by sending him directly to visit Ravana. If Angad wished to escape Sugriv's camp then asking him to go to Ravana as an emissary would be like offering him something that he may have secretly wished in his heart. If Angad wished to escape Sugriv then there would be no better chance for him later on; and on the contrary if he wished to serve Lord Ram inspite of his bitter feelings for his uncle then he would come back, and this would make him favourite of the Lord just like Hanuman was. In this case, Sugriv would never dare to harm Angad because he would be protected by the Lord. This scenario is not imaginary, for Angad has acknowledged it that he is alive because of Lord Ram's mercy and grace and protection, otherwise his uncle would have already done something to get rid of him by now—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 26.

There is another reason also. Jamvant was a fatherly figure for Angad who was orphaned by his father Baali's death. Previously Hanuman had gained Lord Ram's favour by going to Lanka and trouncing Ravana by burning Lanka. Perhaps this event had caused a bit of depression in the mind of Angad, that now everyone would treat Hanuman with more respect and awe not only because he had gained Lord Ram's favour but also because he had proved his might and mettle by achieving success in such a daunting task as crossing the ocean, entering the fort of the demons fearlessly alone, then fighting and winning the fracas that followed, and finally burning the well-protected city of Lanka, a deed unmatched in history.

So Jamvant gave Angad an opportunity to prove himself, to show everyone that he is in no way inferior to Hanuman—by going to Lanka alone, by killing one of Ravana's sons (apropos: Chaupi line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 18 herein below), by confronting Ravana in full court and humiliating him like Hanuman had done earlier, and then return triumphantly unharmed after having successfully accomplishing the mission.

And as the events unfolded, Angad did prove his integrity, abilities and skills.]

नीक मंत्र सब के मन माना । अंगद सन कह कृपानिधाना ॥ ५ ॥

बालितनय बुधि बल गुन धामा । लंका जाहु तात मम कामा ॥ ६ ॥

बहुत बुझाइ तुम्हहि का कहऊँ । परम चतुर मैं जानत अहऊँ ॥ ७ ॥

काजु हमार तासु हित होई । रिपु सन करेहु बतकही सोई ॥ ८ ॥ nīka mantra saba kē mana mānā. aṅgada sana kaha kṛpānidhānā. 5.

bālitanaya budhi bala guna dhāmā. laṅkā jāhu tāta mama kāmā. 6.

bahuta bujhā'i tumhahi kā kaha'ūṁ. parama catura mairṁ jānata aha'ūṁ. 7.
kāju hamāra tāsū hita hōī. ripu sana karēhu batakahī sōī. 8.

When everyone endorsed Jamvan't suggestion as being a good advice, Lord Ram, who is a treasury of mercy, kindness, grace and compassion (krpānidhānā)¹, called Angad and said, --- (5)

‘Oh the son of Baali (bālitānaya)! You are an embodiment of intelligence, wisdom, strength and virtues (budhi bala guna dhāmā). My dear (tāta), go to Lanka to do a job for me; to there on a mission on behalf of me². (6)

What much can I tell you, and there is no need for me to explain things much to you because I know that you are extremely wise, intelligent and clever (parama catura) in all matters so as to be able to tackle things on your own. (7)

My brief in simple words is this: Talk with him (Ravana) keeping in mind that my (or ‘our’—“hamāra”) objective is accomplished (which is to get Sita freed from his captivity), and at the same time my (or ‘our’) actions could be such that would be for his own good and welfare.³ (8)

[Note—¹Lord Ram has been described here as being a treasury of mercy, kindness, grace and compassion—i.e. as being “krpānidhānā”. This epithet is apt for the Lord as is clear in verse no. 8 where Lord Ram advises Angad to ensure that the Lord’s actions are for the good and welfare for his enemy. It is really a great quality and a sign of a noble heart for someone to think nice of his arch enemy, especially one who has kidnapped the person’s wife as Ravana had done with Lord Ram.

Ordinarily, if there was someone else in place of Lord Ram he would have asked his messenger to make it sure that his own interests are protected instead of worrying about the welfare of his enemy.

²This is a remarkable verse. Earlier Lord Ram had called Hanuman and chosen him, instead of Angad, to go on a mission to find Sita, and when Hanuman came back with the good news the Lord had lavished praises on him. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, (i) Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-12 that precede Doha no. 23; and (ii) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precedes Doha no. 32.}

Angad felt very sad and depressed that the Lord had neglected him and thought him to be incompetent. Angad was emotionally hurt and thought that he was being sidelined by the Lord though he was the crown prince of the kingdom of Kishkindha. The reason is that his father Baali had personally entrusted the future of Angad to Lord Ram at the time of his death, and when Sugriv was appointed the next king of Kishkindha, Angad was anointed as the crown prince. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (i) Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10; and (ii) Doha no. 11.}

Lord Ram, as has been already observed about him in verse no. 5 above, was a “treasury of mercy, compassion, grace and kindness”, and so he too felt sad when he saw that Angad was feeling dejected and forlorn. The Lord wanted to restore Angad’s pride-of-place in the hierarchy of the monkey race, and he wished to assuage Angad’s hurt feelings. So the kind Lord chose Angad over all others for this mission which was as much fraught with danger as the earlier mission of Hanuman.

But why did Lord Ram choose Hanuman and not Angad on the previous occasion when the search party was sent out to find Sita? The answer is clear: because the “all-knowing Lord” (refer: verse no. 3 herein above) knew that the qualities and skills needed for the successful completion of the mission was possessed by Hanuman alone. The first such requirement was to cross the ocean twice—once to go to Lanka, and then to come back from there. Angad lacked this ability; he himself has acknowledged it. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 30.}

Now that main hurdle—of crossing the ocean—was not there. So it was time to give Angad his due share of fame and glory. Angad’s choice as Lord Ram’s messenger and his resounding success in the mission would remove any doubts that may be present in the mind of others, including Hanuman, about his closeness with the Lord as well as his abilities. Lord Ram removed all doubts in this regard by addressing Angad with the affectionate word “tāta”—meaning ‘my dear’.

³Lord Ram told Angad, “Try to find out a way, if it is at all possible, to ensure Sita’s freedom peacefully so that a disastrous war can be avoided. I am not itching for a war at any cost to avenge Sita’s abduction; I am not a blood-thirsty conqueror. I do not have any greed for the crown of Lanka, and nor do I wish to put anyone to discomfort for me. I do not even expect Ravana to come to surrender; if he agrees to send Sita back then I shall return peacefully. I have no intention that anyone suffers due to me; I have no desire to unleash destruction and mayhem on the demon kingdom. Ravana can continue to rule his kingdom without any fear from me if he returns my wife honourably. Surely this is a noble proposition that no one can find fault with. Should Ravana agree, there will be peace and harmony; no one would blame me for causing unnecessary blood-shed and havoc on a prosperous country.

Nevertheless, this gesture of peace ought naught to be taken as weakness on my part personally, or of our army in general. So be careful in your talk with Ravana that no wrong interpretation is made by him. Warn him once again about the wrong path he is treading, and that such path would lead to his own ruin.

I leave the details of the talk, and the way it should be steered to a definite conclusion, upon you, for I know you are competent to handle it in an expert manner.”]

सो०. प्रभु अग्या धरि सीस चरन बंदि अंगद उठेउ ।

सोइ गुन सागर ईस राम कृपा जा पर करहु ॥ १७ (क) ॥

स्वयं सिद्ध सब काज नाथ मोहि आदरु दियउ ।

अस बिचारि जुबराज तन पुलकित हरषित हियउ ॥ १७ ॥ (ख) ॥

sōraṭhā.

prabhu agyā dhari sīsa carana bandi aṅgada uṭhē'u.

sō'i guna sāgara īsa rāma kṛpā jā para karahu. 17 (a).

svayaṁ sid'dha saba kāja nātha mōhi ādaru diya'u.

asa bicāri jubarāja tana pulakita haraṣita hiya'u. 17 (b).

Angad cheerfully accepted the Lord Ram’s command. Bowing reverentially at the Lord’s feet, he rose to fulfil the task assigned to him.

Angad said, ‘Oh Lord Ram (īsa rāma)! He upon whom you show your grace and favour is surely an ocean of virtues and qualities. It’s indeed a rare privilege for one to gain the Lord’s confidence¹.’ (Sortha no. 17-a) Angad was extremely happy. He thought that Lord Ram, who can do everything himself as he possesses immense mystical powers (because he is the Supreme Lord of the world), has graciously chosen him (Angad) for his job, which is indeed a rare privilege and honour that the Lord had been kind enough to bless him with.

This thought made the prince (“jubarāja”; Angad) thrilled in his body and exhilarated in his heart. (Sortha no. 17-b)

[Note—¹To wit, a person who is selected by the Lord for something is indeed very lucky and privileged because not only he gets an opportunity to serve the Lord but also because the Lord has seen some good quality in him to have chosen him for what the Lord wishes to get done. Indeed, this is a rare honour for the chosen person. Surely Lord Ram would not pick an incompetent person for a job, so therefore if the Lord chooses someone for a particular mission then that person is truly lucky; it also proves to the world that that person has certain qualities that others lack.

A person who is selected by a king becomes an envy of others; everyone would henceforth show great respect to this person because the king favours him—it is as simple as that.

Such thoughts cheered Angad and lifted his spirits.]

चौ०. बंदि चरन उर धरि प्रभुताई । अंगद चलेउ सबहि सिरु नाई ॥ १ ॥

प्रभु प्रताप उर सहज असंका । रन बाँकुरा बालिसुत बंका ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bandi carana ura dhari prabhutāī. aṅgada calē'u sabahi siru nāī. 1.
prabhu pratāpa ura sahaja asaṅkā. rana bāṁkurā bālisuta baṅkā. 2.

Angad paid his obeisance at the feet of Lord Ram to seek his blessings, enshrined the Lord’s glory and might in his heart (to give him internal strength, courage and confidence), and then he departed on his assignment after bowing his head before all the rest who were present there (to courteously seeking their blessings too). (1)

Verily indeed, in all sooth and without gainsay, the son of Baali (i.e. Angad)¹ was truly brave, courageous and valiant by nature, one who could not be matched in the battle-field, and now with Lord Ram’s glory and blessings as an additional boon for him, he had become absolutely fearless, bold, invincible and formidable by all counts². (2)

[Note—¹Addressing Angad as “the son of Baali” is significant here. It is to remind everyone about the incident when his father Baali had once humiliated Ravana extremely by grabbing him and tucking him under his armpit because Ravana had gone to disturb Baali’s meditation. Ravana remained squeezed there for many days as Baali had gone to many pilgrim places as part of his religious practice. When Baali returned home and raised his arm to greet his wife and son (Angad), Ravana fell down on the ground, hungry, cramped in muscles, and sore affright. Baali kept him tied as a plaything for Angad, but later on released him with a condition that Ravana would never disturb him any more in future. Angad remembered this incident and scornfully reminds Ravana of it too—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 24.

The details of this incident would be narrated a little later when we read the above Doha.

²Ravana's wife Mandodari knew that both Angad and Hanuman possess these excellent qualities, and she had minced no words in telling her husband about it while sternly admonishing him for his unrelenting stubbornness and impractical approach in dealing with Lord Ram, for he had turned a blind eye and a deaf ear to all evidences that clearly indicate total rout and destruction of the demon race if Ravana remains adamant to wage a war with Lord Ram inspite of all attempts to dissuade him from doing so—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 37.]

पुर पैठत रावन कर बेटा । खेलत रहा सो होइ गै भेटा ॥ ३ ॥
 बातहिं बात करष बढि आई । जुगल अतुल बल पुनि तरुनाई ॥ ४ ॥ तेहिं अंगद कहूँ लात उठाई । गहि पद पटकेउ भूमि भवाँई ॥ ५ ॥ pura paiṭhata rāvana kara bēṭā. khēlata rahā sō hō'i gai bhēṭā. 3.

 bātaḥim bāta karaṣa baḍhi ā'ī. jugala atula bala puni tarunā'ī. 4.
 tēhim aṅgada kahuṁ lāta uṭhā'ī. gahi pada paṭakē'u bhūmi bhavā'ī. 5.

When Angad entered the city of Lanka he met Ravana's son who was playing around the place. (3)

First they talked casually, but soon the conversation turned into an acrimonious verbal spat because both were extremely brave and bold and had never known to be subdued or browbeaten by their opponent. The situation was aggravated further because both were princes of young age, and so they were habituated to lose their temper quickly when someone opposed them. (4)

He (Ravana's son) raised one of his legs at Angad (as a rude gesture to insult him by way of symbolic kicking)¹. Angad grabbed that leg and swung him around viciously before dashing him on the ground, killing Ravana's son instantly². (5)

[Note—¹Ravana' son had picked up this bad habit, of raising his leg to kick anyone who displeased him, from his father. Ravana was used to kicking others at the least provocation; anyone who annoyed him got kicked. He had kicked his brother Vibhishan, and then his own messenger Suka. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 41 (Vibhishan); and (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 57 (Suka).}

²This was the death of Ravana's second son. The first son, Akshaya Kumar, was killed by Hanuman prior to the burning of Lanka when the former was sent by Ravana to capture him—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 18.]

निसिचर निकर देखि भट भारी । जहँ तहँ चले न सकहिं पुकारी ॥ ६ ॥ एक एक सन मरमु न कहहीं । समुझि तासु बध चुप करि रहहीं ॥ ७ ॥ nisicara nikara dēkhi bhaṭa bhārī. jahaṁ tahaṁ calē na sakahim pukārī. 6.

ēka ēka sana maramu na kahahim. samujhi tāsu badha cupa kari rahahim. 7.

All the demon guards who had accompanied the prince (i.e. Ravana's son) were stupefied with terror and dazed into inaction when they saw the great warrior (Angad) and what he did to their prince (who they were supposed to protect).

As soon as Ravana's son died, the demon guards ran helter-skelter, scampering away hastily from the scene without uttering a word¹. (6)

None of them dared to utter a single word to anyone about the developments; they chose to keep absolutely mum about the killing of the prince. (7)

[Note—¹The guards were terrified with fear, apprehending severe punishment. They were so petrified that they escaped from the site quietly, without uttering a word, so that no one would know they were present when Angad killed Ravana's son. They did not want to be produced as a witness of this killing. Surely they would be severely tortured and roasted alive.]

भयउ कोलाहल नगर मझारी । आवा कपि लंका जेहिं जारी ॥ ८ ॥
अब धौं कहा करिहि करतारा । अति सभित सब करहिं बिचारा ॥ ९ ॥ बिनु पूछें मगु देहिं दिखाई । जेहि बिलोक सोइ जाइ सुखाई ॥ १० ॥ bhaya'u kōlāhala nagara majhārī. āvā kapi laṅkā jēhim jārī. 8.

aba dhauri kahā karihi karatārā. ati sabhita saba karahim bicārā. 9.
binu pūchēm magu dēhim dikhāī. jēhi bilōka sō'i jā'i sukhāī. 10.

There was uproar in the city that the monkey who had burnt Lanka earlier has arrived once again¹. (8)

The citizens got into a huddle everywhere, wondering in fear what would happen next and about what the Creator's intention was. (9)

Meanwhile, Angad fearlessly moved into the city. Everyone stepped aside to give him passage. Anyone whom Angad glanced even casually became petrified with terror (fearing for his life)². (10)

[Note—¹Both Angad and Hanuman looked alike as they were of the same age. So when the news spread that one fierce monkey warrior has entered the city and has killed Ravana's son, the citizens thought he was Hanuman.

²Angad's passage through the city streets was like that of a conqueror. As soon as the demons saw him approach, they became silent and stood aside to give him right of way. No one dared either to oppose him, or question who he was and why he had come. A deathly silence fell upon Lanka as Angad wend his way to Ravana's palace.]

दो०. गयउ सभा दरबार तब सुमिरि राम पद कंज । सिंह ठवनि इत उत चितव धीर बीर बल पुंज ॥ १८ ॥
dōhā.

gaya'u sabhā darabāra taba sumiri rāma pada kañja.
sinha ṭhavani ita uta citava dhīra bīra bala puñja. 18.

Remembering the lotus-like holy feet of Lord Ram (to assure himself that he has the blessing and protection of the Lord), Angad went to the palace and stood before the gates of its royal court.

He, who was an embodiment of bravery, courage, strength and valour, glanced around the place like a bold lion would survey its surroundings fearlessly. (Doha no. 18)

चौ०. तुरत निसाचर एक पठावा । समाचार रावनहि जनावा ॥ १ ॥
सुनत बिहँसि बोला दससीसा । आनहु बोलि कहाँ कर कीसा ॥ २ ॥ आयसु पाइ दूत बहु धाए । कपिकुंजरहि बोलि लै आए ॥ ३ ॥
caupāī.

turata nisācara ēka paṭhāvā. samācāra rāvanahi janāvā. 1.
sunata bihaṁsi bōlā dasasīsā. ānahu bōli kahāñ kara kīsā. 2.
āyasu pā'i dūta bahu dhā'ē. kapikuñjarahī bōli lai ā'ē. 3.

He (Angad) immediately sent a demon guard to inform Ravana of the news of his arrival, and about his intention to meet the latter. (1)

Ravana, the ten-headed one, smiled when he heard the news¹, and ordered the guard: 'Go and bring the monkey here. Let me see who he is and from where he has come.' (2)

As soon as the instruction was given, many messengers (demon guards) rushed out² to bring the monkey chief (i.e. Angad) to the court. (3)

[Note—¹There are two reasons why Ravana “smiled”. One is to give the impression that he is not at all worried or afraid of the visitor, even if he is some brave warrior sent by his arch enemy Lord Ram. This was done to instill confidence in his army and its commanders.

The second reason is that he thought now was his chance to settle scores with the intruder who had destroyed his city of Lanka earlier by burning it.

²Only one demon guard was sent by Angad to inform Ravana of his arrival. But when Ravana ordered Angad to be brought in, many guards went out to fetch him. Why? Because the news of a “monkey arriving to meet Ravana” aroused immense anxiety and curiosity in the rank and file of royal guards present in the royal court of Ravana so that many of them rushed out to see who this monkey was. After their bitter experience with Hanuman on an earlier occasion they thought it fit to go in a group, rather than alone, to bring the new monkey visitor to the court; they feared that if only one guard went to bring the monkey in then there were fair chances that this poor fellow would be killed by that monkey, on some pretext or the other, while accompanying him to the court.]

अंगद दीख दसानन बैसैं । सहित प्रान कज्जलगिरि जैसैं ॥ ४ ॥
 भुजा बिटप सिर सृंग समाना । रोमावली लता जनु नाना ॥ ५ ॥ मुख नासिका नयन अरु काना । गिरि कंदरा खोह अनुमाना ॥ ६ ॥ aṅgada dīkha dasānana baisēm̐. sahita prāna kajjalagiri jaisēm̐. 4. bhujaṁ biṭapa sira sṛṅga samānā. rōmāvalī latā janu nānā. 5.

 mukha nāsikā nayana aru kānā. giri kandarā khōha anumānā. 6.

[These verses describe the image of Ravana that Angad had first glimpse of.]

The first impression that Angad got of the ten-headed Ravana was that of a huge dark mountain made of black soot sitting in a personified form. (4)

His arms were like gigantic trees, and his heads were like the top of these trees¹. The hairs on his body were like so many creepers hanging from these trees. (5)

His mouths, noses, eyes and ears appeared to resemble large dark caves and deep crevices on a huge mountain. (6)

[Note—¹We must remember that Ravana is said to have had ten heads and twenty arms. This is why the plural term “trees” has been used here.]

गयउ सभाँ मन नेकु न मुरा । बालितनय अतिबल बाँकुरा ॥ ७ ॥
 उठे सभासद कपि कहूँ देखी । रावन उर भा क्रोध बिसेषी ॥ ८ ॥ gaya'u sabhāṁ mana nēku na murā. bālitanaya atibala bāṁkurā. 7.

 uṭhē sabhāsada kapi kahuṁ dēkhī. rāvana ura bhā krōdha bisēṣī. 8.

The extremely bold and brave son of Baali (i.e. Angad) went to the court fearlessly. He was not the slightest bit afraid or hesitant on beholding the majesty and pomp of Ravana's court. (7)

When Angad strode in with a majestic gait fearlessly, all the courtiers present in the court stood up¹. This sight severely annoyed and angered Ravana². (8)

[Note—¹Why did the courtiers stand up when Angad stepped inside the royal court? First it was a sign that they were civilised enough to show due respect to a guest.

Angad had come directly as a guest, as a messenger, unlike Hanuman who was caught as an intruder wrecking the royal garden of Ravana (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 18).

Secondly, everyone was eager and anxious to have a glimpse of this new monkey, and to make a fair guess as to his identity. So to get a better view of Angad they all stood up at once and craned their necks to see him as he entered the royal court.

Thirdly, after their frightful experience with Hanuman they wished to play safe by standing up to greet the new monkey so that he would not find an excuse to pounce upon one of the courtiers who is caught sitting, because to keep sitting could be interpreted as showing disrespect to the visitor, thereby inviting his wrath which everyone wished to avoid at all costs.

Fourthly, the courtiers were amazed at the confidence and fearlessness with which Angad strode in the court teeming with fierce looking demons. He walked in like a lion faces a herd of wild elephants—see Doha no. 19 below. This sight filled the demon courtiers with awe and respect for Angad.

²Ravana's annoyance is understandable. He had not asked them to stand up, so they virtually defied his authority by standing without permission. Further, he hadn't expected that his courtiers would stand up to show respect to a monkey, especially when one such member of his tribe had caused so much devastation to Lanka earlier. So it was natural for him to show anger and annoyance.]

दो०. जथा मत्त गज जूथ महुँ पंचानन चलि जाइ ।

राम प्रताप सुमिरि मन बैठ सभाँ सिरु नाइ ॥ १९ ॥

dōhā.

jathā matta gaja jūtha mahum̐ pañcānana cali jā'i.

rāma pratāpa sumiri mana baiṭha sabhām̐ siru nā'i. 19.

Just like a brave lion enters a herd of wild elephants without any fear, Angad entered the demon while remembering the glory and majesty of Lord Ram in his heart and mind. Then he bowed his head before the assembly to show courtesy and good manners, and sat down. (Doha no. 19)

[Note—Angad was a prince of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha, so he was well-versed with the etiquettes of royal courts. He observed that all the courtiers had stood up when he entered to show due respect to him, and so he wished to reciprocate their honourable gesture by bowing before the assembly before taking his seat.

Where did Angad sit? Well, every royal court has a seat where guests sit, and being a prince Angad knew it. He quickly glanced around the place and discerned that seat on which royal guests are expected to be seated. It is also quite possible that one of the guards who had ushered him in guided him to his seat.]

चौ०. कह दसकंठ कवन तैं बंदर । मैं रघुबीर दूत दसकंधर ॥ १ ॥

मम जनकहि तोहि रही मिताई । तव हित कारन आयउँ भाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

kaha dasakaṇṭha kavana taim bandara. maim raghubīra dūta dasakandhara.

1.

mama janakahi tōhi rahī mitāī. tava hita kārana āya'uṃ bhāī. 2.

Ravana (“dasakaṇṭha”; literally one with ‘ten necks’, and hence has ten heads) asked, ‘Who are you monkey?’

Angad replied, ‘Oh Ravana (“dasakandhara”; literally one with ‘ten shoulders’, and hence has ten necks and ten heads)! I am a messenger of Lord Raghubir (Lord Ram, the brave prince of the race of king Raghu of Ayodhya). (1)

My father had friendship with you¹. So I have come here for the sake of your own good and welfare². (2)

[Note—¹The story of how Angad’s father Baali and Ravana became friends have been narrated in (i) Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga 34; (ii) Veda Vyas’ Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 58-59; and in (iii) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101.

The story in brief is this: Once, the monkey king of Kishkindha, Vaali (also pronounced as “Baali”), had put Ravana under his armpit for many days while the latter had gone to challenge the former when he was doing some worship. Peeved by Ravana’s arrogance and impertinence, Baali had tucked him under his arms to stop him from annoying him any further. When his worship was finished and he had returned back to his capital at Kishkindha, he realised that Ravana was still squeezed under his armpit. So he released the latter and made a pact of friendship with him.

This pact of friendship suited both the kings of Kishkindha and Lanka. For Baali, the king of Kishkindha, it meant that the demons of Lanka ruled by Ravana would not disturb his kingdom any longer, and it also ensured there would be no invasion from the south of Kishkindha. For Ravana, the king of Lanka, it was to ensure security for Lanka from the northern direction. Now there was no fear of any invasion from one of the powerful kingdoms that ruled in the north of the mainland, because Kishkindha, the kingdom of monkeys ruled by Baali, would act as a buffer between Lanka and the invading army from the north. Since the nearest landmass to the island kingdom of Lanka from which there was any fear of invasion was the mainland in its northern direction where Kishkindha was situated, a distance of merely 800 miles of ocean which could be crossed by a determined army, this pact of friendship between Baali and Ravana virtually made Lanka impregnable. On all the other sides of Lanka the ocean stretched literally interminably, for hundreds and thousands of miles. With the nearest kingdom becoming friendly, added with the additional protection provided by the ocean that circled the island of Lanka like a huge natural moat, the fort of the demon kingdom became safe and invincible.

This is the obvious reason why Ravana had become so confident that no power on earth could harm him.

²This was also Lord Ram’s instruction—that they must act in a way which is good for Ravana. {Aapropos—Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 17.}

उत्तम कुल पुलस्ति कर नाती । सिव बिरंचि पूजेहु बहु भाँती ॥ ३ ॥ बर पायहु कीन्हेहु सब काजा । जीतेहु लोकपाल सब राजा ॥ ४ ॥ uttama kula pulasti kara nātī. siva birañci pūjēhu bahu bhāmtī. 3.

bara pāyahu kīnhēhu saba kājā. jītēhu lōkapāla saba rājā. 4.

You are born in an illustrious family of sage Pulastya¹; you had worshipped and subsequently pleased Lord Shiva and the creator Brahma in a variety of ways². (3)

After obtaining boons from these exalted Gods, you had accomplished all that you had wished to do. Verily indeed, you had conquered even the greatest of gods and all the mighty kings of the world³. (4)

[Note—¹Ravan's birth in the family of sage Pulastya has been narrated in: (i) Adhyatma Ramayan by sage Veda Vyas, Uttarkand, Cantos 1, verse nos. 25-57; (ii) Valmiki's Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga (Canto) no. 9; (iii) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Sarga (Canto) 13, verse nos. 8-24.

²Ravana's worshipping of Lord Shiva and Brahma is narrated in: (i) Adhyatma Ramayan by sage Veda Vyas, Uttarkand, Cantos 2, verse nos. 10-15; (ii) Valmiki's Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga (Canto) no. 10, verse nos. 10-25½ ; (iii) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Sarga (Canto) 13, verse nos. 26-39; 47-53; and (iv) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 177.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 178—to Doha no. 182.]

नृप अभिमान मोह बस किंबा । हरि आनिहु सीता जगदंबा ॥ ५ ॥
अब सुभ कहा सुनहु तुम्ह मोरा । सब अपराध छमिहि प्रभु तोरा ॥ ६ ॥
दसन गहहु तृन कंठ कुठारी । परिजन सहित संग निज नारी ॥ ७ ॥ सादर जनकसुता करि आगें । एहि बिधि चलहु सकल भय त्यागें ॥ ८ ॥ nṛpa abhimāna mōha basa kimbā. hari ānihu sītā jagadambā. 5.

aba subha kahā sunahu tumha mōrā. saba aparādha chamihi prabhu tōrā. 6.
dasana gahahu tṛna kaṇṭha kuṭhārī. parijana sahita saṅga nija nārī. 7.
sādara janakasutā kari āgēm. ēhi bidhi calahu sakala bhaya tyāgēm. 8.

Unfortunately, whether out of arrogance that you acquired by virtue of your ascension to the powerful title of being the king of the demon race, or out of your stupidity and delusions that made you think that you had the right to do whatever you wished to do irrespective of the probity and propriety of your actions—you had abducted Sita, a manifestation of the Supreme Goddess, who is the Mother of the World (sītā jagadambā). (5)

Nevertheless, things can still be sorted out and settled in your favour if you pay heed to me. Now, listen to my good and friendly advice which is for your own good and welfare, and if you act accordingly then (be rest assured that) all your offences, all your mistakes and evil doings would be forgiven by the Lord (Sri Ram). (6)

[I'll tell you what to do.] Hold a twig in your mouth between the two rows of teeth, tie an axe around your neck so that its sharp blade is just below your throat¹, then collect all your family members, including your wives, and keeping Sita, the daughter of Janak, in the front, walk in a procession², without any kind of fear (to go and voluntarily surrender before Lord Ram). (7-8)

[Note—¹What is the significance of “holding a twig or a bunch of grass blades in the mouth”, and “an axe tied around the neck with its blade below the throat”? It is a symbolic way for Ravana of saying to Lord Ram that: (i) “I may be excused and forgiven for my offences because I am no better than an animal which grazes in the meadows, and therefore I deserve your mercy for my foolishness because like an animal I often times act rashly without thinking of the consequences of my stupid acts”; and (ii) “I am at your mercy; if you want you can cut my throat for I have an axe placed across it”.

When Lord Ram, who is reputed to be an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness, sees Ravana approaching him in the aforesaid manner, he is sure to forgive the latter and excuse him for all his follies.

²Collecting all the family members and walking in a peaceful procession with Sita in the lead would be a clear signal for Lord Ram that Ravana has come to make peace with a sincere mind and honest intentions.

Keeping Sita in the vanguard is most crucial and a must thing to do because she is the reason which had caused so much unnecessary and unexpected bitterness between Ravana and Lord Ram in the first place, and she is the reason why the war would be fought now. So therefore, if Sita is returned to Lord Ram then that ‘reason’ would no longer exist, and so there would be no reason why two great kings would be so inimical to each other that they would fight a war till death. Hence, the best thing to do is to remove the primary cause of all irritation, which is to return Sita to her husband; all other things were secondary in nature.]

दो०. प्रनतपाल रघुबंसमनि त्राहि त्राहि अब मोहि ।

आरत गिरा सुनत प्रभु अभय करैगो तोहि ॥ २० ॥

dōhā.

pranatapāla raghubansamani trāhi trāhi aba mōhi.
ārata girā sunata prabhu abhaya karaigō tōhi. 20.

[Angad told Ravana—] As soon as you reach Lord Ram, prostrate yourself before him pitifully, pleading earnestly: “Oh the ‘Jewel of the Raghus’ (i.e. the most illustrious and the best king in the race of king Raghu of Ayodhya; “raghubansamani”)! I prostrate (and surrender) myself before you. Have mercy upon me; protect me and show your grace upon me (trāhi trāhi aba mōhi).”

When the Lord (Sri Ram) hears your plea for mercy, rest assured that he would grant you freedom from all kinds of fears. [To wit, have no doubt that Lord Ram will forgive you. Not only will the Lord forgive you, but he will also grant you the boon of fearlessness as well as immunity from all punishment for your past misdeeds.]’ (Doha no. 20)

चौ०. रे कपिपोत बोलु संभारी । मूढ़ न जानेहि मोहि सुरारी ॥ १ ॥

कहु निज नाम जनक कर भाई । केहि नाते मानिए मिताई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

rē kapipōta bōlu sambhārī. mūrha na jānēhi mōhi surārī. 1.

kahu nija nāma janaka kara bhāī. kēhi nātē māni'ai mitāī. 2.

[Obviously Ravana would not agree to this way of surrendering before his enemy. Why only Ravana, no other king, big or small, who is worth his salt and has any self-esteem, would ever wish to surrender in this abject manner as Angad had proposed. So, Angad’s advice angered Ravana like putting oil to a smouldering fire. He burst out in indignation—]

‘Oh you dumb-witted son-of-a-monkey (kapipōta)! You stupid fellow; be careful in what you speak. Don’t you know my fame and about my reputation that I am an enemy of the gods¹. (1)

Well, come and tell me the name of your father, and why you think we have some kind of friendly relationship having its root in the past².’ (2)

[Note—¹How idiotic are you? Tell me, is it easy to conquer the powerful gods, and even if they are once conquered is it easy to be able to retain control over them for long? I have done all that, and here you are giving me a lecture on how to surrender! Woe to you, and shame to your father.

²Refer: Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 20 herein above—where Angad has told Ravana that his father and Ravana were friends. This amazed Ravana as till now he was not acquainted with the identity of Angad, that the latter was the son of Baali, the erstwhile ruler of Kishkindha, with whom Ravana had had a peace treaty made in some ancient time. The relevant story is narrated as a brief note appended to the above mentioned verse. In fact, Ravana did not even know that Baali was dead—this is clear in his observation made in Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 21 herein below.]

अंगद नाम बालि कर बेटा । तासों कबहुँ भई ही भेटा ॥ ३ ॥

अंगद बचन सुनत सकुचाना । रहा बालि बानर मैं जाना ॥ ४ ॥ aṅgada nāma bāli kara bēṭā. tāsōm kabahuṁ bhaī hī bhēṭā. 3.

aṅgada bacana sunata sakucānā. rahā bāli bānara maim jānā. 4.

Angad replied, ‘My name is Angad, and I am the son of Baali. Have you ever met him (my father, Baali)?’ (3)

When Ravana heard the words of Angad (i.e. when he heard Angad mention Baali), he felt uneasy (and probably shifted uncomfortably in his seat).

[After a moment of hesitation, he recovered his composure and said reluctantly—] ‘Yes, there was a monkey named Baali. I am acquainted with him¹. (4)

[Note—¹When Ravana heard the name of Baali, he recollected the bad memory of his past humiliation at the hands of the monkey king when the latter had kept Ravana tucked and squeezed under his armpit for quite a long time. This memory made Ravana squirm irritably in his throne, and perhaps he even had some beads of sweat making their appearance on his forehead.

In order to deflect the import and the gravity of this bit of information, and to give the impression that he was not bothered by any isolated instance that may have happened per chance of misfortune, as ups and downs are part of the game of life and should be taken in one’s stride without giving them undue importance, he pretended to have only a vague remembrance of some monkey by the name of Baali—to give an impression that Baali was like so many other creatures with whom he has had a chance to interact in the course of his life and conquests. So there was nothing special about Baali, and he was just a faded acquaintance.]

अंगद तहीं बालि कर बालक । उपजेहु बंस अनल कुल घालक ॥ ५ ॥

गर्भ न गयहु ब्यर्थ तुम्ह जायहु । निज मुख तापस दूत कहायहु ॥ ६ ॥ aṅgada tahīm bāli kara bālaka. upajēhu bansa anala kula ghālaka. 5.

garbha na gayahu byartha tumha jāyahu. nija mukha tāpasa dūta kahāyahu.
6.

Are you indeed the son of Baali? Woe to you for bringing shame to your family and its name. You were born to ruin your clan just like fire that is lit in a cluster of flourishing bamboos to burn it to ashes. (5)

Why did your mother not abort you while still in her womb, for it would have been better had she not given you birth. Shame to you for calling yourself a messenger of the hermit (Lord Ram)!

[To wit, you are like an ugly wart in your exalted family; you have brought immense infamy to it.]¹ (6)

[Note—¹Ravana immediately recovered himself from the shocking news that Angad was the son of Baali who had once subjected Ravana to extreme humiliation.

He decided to use this bit of information—that Angad was Baali’s son—to turn the tables on Angad and cornering him by chiding and putting him to shame, saying that being a prince of the great kingdom of Kishkindha of which his illustrious father Baali was a king, it is an extremely disgraceful, dishonourable and ignominious thing to serve someone else by becoming the latter’s messenger, for being a messenger is a lowly job and an act that undermines the greatness of his stature and that of his family.

To wit, Ravana was playing on the emotions and sentiments of Angad, and trying to make him biased against Lord Ram by reminding him of his late father Baali who was killed by his uncle Sugriv in a duel in which Lord Ram took sides with Sugriv, and by pointing out to him about his noble birth that does not fit well with the role that he chose for himself, i.e. to become a ‘messenger of a humble hermit’. It would have been alright for Angad to have come to Ravana with a message from his father Baali, the king of Kishkindha, which would be like a prince visiting another king with a goodwill message from his father who is a king himself. But for a noble prince to serve someone else like a mere servant and become his messenger is totally unworthy of him, and it is extremely demeaning and humiliating for the noble family and the kingdom to which he belongs.

Ravana thought that this reminder would kindle indignance in Angad for becoming a messenger for Lord Ram as it would arouse his sense of self-respect and the pride of his royal lineage.

But as it turned out, Angad was made of a sterner stuff. He wouldn’t betray his friends of Kishkindha, the monkeys and bears who constituted the army of Lord Ram, as well as the Lord himself who had been so kind and fatherly towards Angad since his father, Baali’s, death.

Why would Angad not betray Lord Ram? It is because of various reasons. For one, his father, Baali, had entrusted Angad in the care of the Lord at the time of his death, and the Lord had promised the dying Baali that he would take care of Angad as his own ward. This is clear in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.

Further, Angad was not to be fooled so easily. He knew very well the rude nature and selfish character of Ravana, from the treatment meted out to Vibhishan as well as the spy named Suka, and also from what Hanuman had told about Ravana after his return from Lanka, that he would show outwardly favour to Angad as long as it served his purpose, and when the time comes he would put Angad to the sword, arguing that a person who is not loyal to his own kith and kin, his own race and companions, is not to be trusted, and as he is a betrayer of his own people he can as easily betray others with whom he has no blood ties. Such persons deserve nothing but death. Angad apprehended this fate if he joined Ravana’s side, and so even if he had had a remote thought of abandoning Sugriv that thought was immediately shaken off. Angad had seen very closely how graceful, amiable and affable Lord Ram was; he was also acquainted with the way Ravana treated those around him. The question of abandoning such a gracious Lord and betraying him in favour of a cruel and vulgar Ravana was therefore obviously out of the question.

Angad had observed that Lord Ram possessed certain supernatural mystical powers, as was proved by the way the Lord had slayed huge demon armies earlier as was done in the case of Khar and Dushan¹, and also in the case of Marich and Subahu earlier still², and the way he had felled seven tall coconut trees that were not in a straight line³, and the way his arrow had demolished the ten crowns over the heads of Ravana, dismantled his parasol and felled the earrings of Mandodari⁴. Angad had also heard of the miraculous way a rock was transmuted into a divine lady named Ahilya, the wife of sage Gautam, when Lord Ram touched the said rock with his foot⁵; he had also heard how the Lord had swiftly, and without the least effort, broken the tuff bow of Lord Shiva to marry Sita⁶. Well, he concluded, none of these events could have been made possible by an ordinary human being.

Compared to these singular events that subtly point to Lord Ram’s might and prowess, there was Ravana who only boasted of his powers and strength but who could not even avenge his son Akshaya Kumar’s death at the hands of Hanuman⁷, nor prevent the latter from burning the city of Lanka to ashes⁸.

{¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 18—to Doha no. 20-a.

²Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 210.

³Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 7.

⁴Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 13 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.

⁵Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 211 along with Chaupai line nos. 11-12 and Chanda line nos. 1-16 that precede it.

⁶Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 261—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 262.

⁷Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 18.

⁸Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 25—to Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 26.}

Angad was therefore convinced that in the forthcoming war, Ravana stood no chance of victory against the almighty Lord Ram. Surely then it would be height of stupidity and foolishness on Angad's part to bite the bait that Ravana cunningly threw at him by way of reminding him that he was unfaithful to his father Baali by joining hands with those who had been instrumental in his death—as clearly said by Ravana here in verse line nos. 5-6.

So, Angad firmly decided to rebuke Ravana for his effort to make his mind biased against Lord Ram, for it would be betrayal of the trust that the Lord had put in him, and it would be forfeiting his claim for protection by the almighty Lord Ram which the latter had promised to Angad's father at the time of his death. Angad therefore determined that he and his future were safer in the hands of Lord Ram.]

अब कहु कुसल बालि कहँ अहई । बिहँसि बचन तब अंगद कहई ॥ ७ ॥
 दिन दस गाँ बालि पहि जाई । बूझेहु कुसल सखा उर लाई ॥ ८ ॥
 राम बिरोध कुसल जसि होई । सो सब तोहि सुनाइहि सोई ॥ ९ ॥ सुनु सठ भेद होइ मन ताकें । श्रीरघुबीर हृदय नहि जाकें ॥ १० ॥ aba kahu kusala bāli kahañ aha'ī. bihañsi bacana taba aṅgada kaha'ī. 7.

 dina dasa ga'eñ bāli pahim jā'ī. būjhēhu kusala sakhā ura lā'ī. 8.
 rāma birōdha kusala jasi hō'ī. sō saba tōhi sunā'ihī sō'ī. 9.
 sunu saṭha bhēda hō'ī mana tākēm. śrīraghubīra hṛdaya nahim jākēm. 10.

Now tell me about the welfare of Baali. Where is he?¹

Hearing this, Angad laughed (sarcastically) and replied (in a taunting manner),
 --- (7)

‘You will go and meet him in the course of the next ten days (i.e. very soon), and then embrace your dear friend (Baali) and ask about his welfare yourself. (8)

What kind of good comes to a person who is opposed to Lord Ram, he (Baali) will himself tell you all about it. (9)

Listen you wicked fellow! Those who do not have the presence of Lord Ragubir (Lord Ram) in their hearts (i.e. those who are not totally loyal and devoted to the Lord, and are not convinced by the divine nature of the Lord) can be swayed by doubts and influenced by attempts to make them disloyal to the Lord by creating a wedge between them and their Lord (Ram)².’ (10)

[Note—¹This statement of Ravana indicates two things: either he was not aware of Baali’s death, or he had tried to stoke hidden anger in the heart of Angad by reminding him of his late father who was killed by Sugriv, Angad’s uncle under whom he works now, and in this killing Lord Ram had sided with Sugriv by aiding him in Baali’s death.

If Ravana was really not aware of Baali’s death, then it implies that his network of spies and informers, who were assigned the task of keeping Ravana abreast of the developments in the world around him, had failed him miserably, either because of their incompetence or because they had laid down their guards due to exaggerated sense of over-confidence and invincibility of their lord Ravana. This cocoon of ignorance that made Ravana believe that there is no one to challenge him as well as his supremacy, authority and sovereignty in the world was the primary cause of his downfall as a king; it made him live in an imaginary world where he ruled one and all, where there was no one to challenge him, and where he alone called the shots. This airy castle made him arrogant and haughty, and oblivious of the gravity of the danger lurking in his own backyard in the form of the mighty army of Lord Ram coming and pitching camp right on the soil of Lanka, at Mt. Subel.

By enquiring about Baali in a causal manner he wished to convey the idea that he cherished his friendship, and that he was not uneasy by the mention of Baali’s name which may have reminded him of the past episode when he was humiliated by the latter.

On the other hand, if Ravana had recalled his friendship with Baali inspite of knowing about his death then it clearly means that he was trying to win over Angad’s loyalty by touching a sensitive nerve of his by reminding him that he was doing a shameful and ignominious thing by betraying his own father and showing immense disrespect to the departed soul by serving those who were responsible for his death, i.e. both Sugriv and Lord Ram. See also a note appended to verse nos. 5-6 herein above.

²Angad tells Ravana that he would fail to sway his loyalty, devotion and commitment to Lord Ram by trying to play on his sentiments and emotions by feigning ignorance about his father Baali’s death by asking about his old friend’s welfare, with a clear intention of reminding Angad of his late father, and why he was killed and by whom. Ravana had hoped that when Angad recalls how his father was killed in a battle with his uncle Sugriv, and how Lord Ram had sided with Sugriv to become instrumental in his father’s death, most likely he would be stirred sufficiently enough to revolt against both Lord Ram and Sugriv, and to avenge Baali he would choose to join Ravana.

That would be god-sent boon for Ravana because Angad would help him with all the secrets of the army of Lord Ram, now, as well as in the future during the course of the war. Nothing would be better from the military angle as far as Ravana was concerned.

The way Angad answered Ravana clearly hinted to the latter that his trick had failed; that it was not possible to win over Angad's loyalty and make him betray or desert Lord Ram.]

दो०. हम कुल घालक सत्य तुम्ह कुल पालक दससीस । अंधउ बधिर न अस कहहिं नयन कान तव बीस ॥ २१ ॥
dōhā.

hama kula ghālaka satya tumha kula pālaka dasasīsa.
andha'u badhira na asa kahahirṁ nayana kāna tava bīsa. 21.

[Angad continued—] 'Oh you ten-headed one (dasasīsa)! Really I am one who has been a cause of ruin and shame of my family, and you have been one who has made your family flourish and gain fame.

How absurd and incongruous a statement is this (because it is contrary to the truth and facts)! Even a person who is blind and deaf wouldn't be so stupid as to say such a rubbish, but you have twenty eyes and ears (instead of just two, and so such a ridiculous observation was never expected from you)! (Doha no. 21)

[Note—A blind person can know things to some extent by hearing of it; and a deaf person likewise can know things to some extent by seeing it. But if both these faculties are lacking in a person, if he can't see or hear, there is no way he can know what is happening around him, except to some extent by touching or tasting anything or by some rare gift of the sixth sense, but such knowledge would be extremely limited and cannot give a truthful account of anything. Hence, such persons can't be relied upon.

So, Angad scorns at Ravana, saying that Ravana calling him as one who has been an ugly wart in his family, one who has ruined the good name and reputation of his father Baali's family is nothing but rubbish and utter nonsense. Angad would elaborate upon this in the verses that follow herein below.]

चौ०. सिव बिरंचि सुर मुनि समुदाई । चाहत जासु चरन सेवकाई ॥ १ ॥
तासु दूत होइ हम कुल बोरा । अइसिहुँ मति उर बिहर न तोरा ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

siva birañci sura muni samudāī. cāhata jāsu carana sēvakāī. 1.
tāsu dūta hō'i hama kula bōrā. a'isihuṁ mati ur bihara na tōrā. 2.

Lord Shiva, the creator Brahma, as well as the community of saints, sages and ascetics—all of them are willing and eager to have an opportunity to serve his (Lord Ram's) holy feet. (1)

And here you are ridiculing me by saying that by being a messenger of such an exalted Lord I have shamed my family and drowned its good name and fame! Alas; even after having such a deadwood in lieu of intelligence, it is a matter of great wonder, truly, that your heart does not rupture and burst under your chest.

[To wit, it is such an irony that instead of realising how lucky and privileged I am that Lord Ram, whom the greatest of gods and sages wish to serve cheerfully, has chosen me to become his messenger, you deride me and call me an ugly wart in my family and a shame to the name of my great father. It shows that you have not even an iota of wisdom and intelligence left in you. If this is the case, why does your dry-as-soil heart not burst out of its cage in your chest and fall apart just like the dry soil under an old deadwood tree heaves and crumbles into dust?]' (2)

सुनि कठोर बानी कपि केरी । कहत दसानन नयन तरेरी ॥ ३ ॥
खल तव कठिन बचन सब सहँ । नीति धर्म मैं जानत अहँ ॥ ४ ॥ sunī kaṭhōra bānī kapi kērī. kahata dasānana nayana tarērī. 3.

khala tava kaṭhina bacana saba saha'ūṁ. nīti dharma mairi jānata aha'ūṁ. 4.

When the ten-headed Ravana heard the Kapi's (Angad's) sharp rejoinder, he scowled at the latter with eyes full of scorn and wrath. (3)

Ravana shot back, 'Oh you wretch of a fellow (khala)! I cope with your nasty, provocative and insulting words only because I wish to follow the principles of righteousness, propriety and probity.

[You are a messenger, and a messenger enjoys certain privileges, such as immunity from punishment, prosecution or imprisonment. That is why I am forced to tolerate your impertinent and irreverent talking. Otherwise you know, I would have immediately got you arrested and severely punished. But mind you; don't take this as my weakness. Rather, you must appreciate my noble character and high thinking that I follow established principles and adhere to norms of decency and courteous behaviour when dealing a messenger, irrespective of whose messenger he is. So don't give me a lecture on what is right and what is not. Do you hear?]' (4)

कह कपि धर्मसीलता तोरी । हमहुँ सुनी कृत पर त्रिय चोरी ॥ ५ ॥ देखी नयन दूत रखवारी । बूढ़ि न मरहु धर्म ब्रतधारी ॥ ६ ॥ kaha kapi dharmasīlatā tōrī. hamahuṁ sunī kṛta para triya cōrī. 5.

dēkhī nayana dūta rakhavārī. būṛi na marahu dharma bratadhārī. 6.

The monkey ("kapi"; i.e. Angad) retorted in a most scornful and contemptible way, 'Yes indeed, I too have heard about how great an expert you are in the laws of Dharma (probity, propriety, righteousness and ethics), and how diligently you follow them when I came to know that you had stolen another person's wife¹. (5)

As if that was not enough, I have also seen how you extend your hospitality and protection to a messenger².

Oh you pretentious upholder of Dharma; why don't you drown yourself to death for such falsehood and pretensions of righteousness and noble conduct (for your deeds squarely speak against you and demolish your claims regarding your upright nature)³. (6)

[Note—¹This refers to abduction of Sita by Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 28.

²This refers to the treatment meted out to Hanuman, who was also a messenger of Lord Ram, sent to find Sita and give the Lord's message to her. Ravana had ordered first that he be killed or severely beaten so that his body suffers grave wounds, but on second thoughts ordered that his tail be set on fire—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (a) Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede Doha no. 13 and 21; (b) Doha no. 24 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-10 that precede it.

³You speak as if you are a holy, pious and noble soul who lives by what is right and proper, but what you actually do is quite the opposite. You stole Sita like a thief; is this righteous conduct? You ordered that Hanuman be killed, beaten and burnt alive—is this the correct way to treat a messenger?]

कान नाक बिनु भगिनि निहारी । छमा कीन्हि तुम्ह धर्म बिचारी ॥ ७ ॥ धर्मसीलता तव जग जागी । पावा दरसु हमहुँ बड़भागी ॥ ८ ॥ kāna nāka binu bhagini nihārī. chamā kīnhi tumha dharma bicārī. 7.

dharmasīlatā tava jaga jāgī. pāvā darasu hamahuṁ baṛabhāgī. 8.

Truly, when you saw that your sister's nose and ears had been chopped off, surely I believe you had forgiven the person who had brought such abject humiliation to your family because of your gracious and forgiving nature, is it not?¹ (7)

Really indeed, your fame as an upholder of the excellent moral virtues coming under the umbrella of the term 'Dharma' are so famous in the world that I feel it is my honour to have an opportunity to meet you in person!' (8)

[Note—¹Angad teases Ravana by drawing his attention to the episode of Supernakha whose nose and ears were cut by Laxman on the orders of Lord Ram as she was attempting to play foul with the Lord and make him break his vows of remaining loyal to his chaste wife Sita by cajoling him to marry her. This incident is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 22.

Angad says, "Well, if you really are so courageous, brave and bold as well as an upholder of Dharma, then tell me why didn't you immediately seek revenge by attacking Lord Ram who had deformed your sister and bring him to justice; why did you went home quietly, worried and in a depressed mood? Oh yes sure, you did not decide to punish the perpetrator because you wanted to forgive him!

Well, if you are such a great upholder of the laws of Dharma that you wished to forgive the person who had committed this atrocious act of cutting off the nose and ears of your sister because you are so gracious, magnanimous, benevolent and kind-hearted, then will you please tell me why you went like a thief and abduct the wife of this person, putting him to extreme grief and forcing him to come here searching for her, even risking his life in the process, instead of challenging him to a duel to punish him for his deed of wounding your sister right on the spot? This clearly debunks your claim of being a ‘holy cow’.”]

दो०. जनि जल्पसि जड़ जंतु कपि सठ बिलोकु मम बाहु ।
 लोकपाल बल बिपुल ससि ग्रसन हेतु सब राहु ॥ २२ (क) ॥
 पुनि नभ सर मम कर निकर कमलन्हि पर करि बास । सोभत भयउ मराल इव संभु सहित कैलास ॥ २२ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

jani jalpasi jaṛa jantu kapi saṭha bilōku mama bāhu. lōkapāla bala bipula sasi grasana hētu saba rāhu. 22 (a).
 puni nabha sara mama kara nikara kamalanhi para kari bāsa.
 sōbhata bhaya'u marāla iva sambhu sahita kailāsa. 22 (b).

Extremely upset by Angad’s scorching comments that directly hit at his self-esteem and dignity, Ravana vehemently hit back in an angry tone, ‘Oh you rascal monkey, a useless creature who is no better than an insect. Don’t babble incoherently like someone who is hallucinating.

Look here at my majestic, robust and strong arms; they are strong and powerful enough to vanquish the might and pride of all the Lokpals (the gods who take care of the welfare of the world) at once just like Rahu who can devour many moons simultaneously. (Doha no. 22-a)

[Listen more about the majesty, the might and the stupendous powers of my arms.] Further, Lord Shiva looked like a swan in the heavenly lake represented by my cupped palms as he rested on Mt. Kailash which I had once held up in my hands¹. (Doha no. 22-b)

[Note—¹This episode where Ravana had held the whole of Mt. Kailash, where Lord Shiva is said to have his abode in the heaven, aloft in his hands, is narrated briefly in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse no. 40.]

चौ०. तुम्हरे कटक माझ सुनु अंगद । मो सन भिरिहि कवन जोधा बद ॥ १ ॥
 तव प्रभु नारि बिरहँ बलहीना । अनुज तासु दुख दुखी मलीना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

tumharē kaṭaka mājha sunu aṅgada. mō sana bhirihi kavana jōdhā bada. 1.
 tava prabhu nāri birahaṁ balahīnā. anuja tāsu dukha dukhī malīnā. 2.

[In the following verses, Ravana lists all the great warriors of Lord Ram’s army, including the Lord himself, one-by-one, and pointing out how each one of them stands no chance against him and his might.]

Ravana said with rebuke and contempt in his voice, 'Listen Angad! Which warrior in the rank and file of your army is capable of facing me in the battle-field? Tell me, is there anyone amongst you who is strong and brave enough to stand in front of me? (1)

Your lord (i.e. Lord Ram) has already been weakened by grieving for his wife, and his brother (i.e. Laxman) too has become weak and gloomy because of the distress that has overcome him when he sees his brother sad and grieving constantly.

[Hence, both of them have lost their original vigour and strength to withstand the rigours of warfare. They lack the energy and the stamina needed to fight a battle. Surely, protracted grief must have sapped their energy to such an extent that they won't stand a wee bit chance against my might and punch in the battle-field.] (2)

तुम्ह सुग्रीव कूलद्रुम दोऊ । अनुज हमार भीरु अति सोऊ ॥ ३ ॥
जामवंत मंत्री अति बूढ़ा । सो कि होइ अब समारूढ़ा ॥ ४ ॥ tumha sugrīva kūladruma dō'ū. anuja hamāra bhīru ati sō'ū. 3.

jāmavanta mantrī ati būrḥā. sō ki hō'i aba samarārūḥā. 4.

You and Sugriv are like plants or trees that grow on the edge of the bank of a river or the shore of the sea¹. As far as my younger brother (Vibhishan) is concerned, he is a very cowardly person who is scared out of his wits². (3)

Jamvant (the chief of the bear community) has become old and infirm. Can he ever stand his ground in the aggressive environment of the battle-field where exceptional agility, stamina and vigour are needed (which he obviously lacks due to his old age)? (4)

[Note—¹Trees and plants that grow near flowing water, such as rivers and seas, can't find firm ground for their roots because the soil near the banks of rivers and shores of seas is soft and prone to being swept away by swift currents. Such trees or plants can fall very easily; they are uprooted with a swift current that undercuts their roots. If there is a flood accompanied with a strong wind, the trees on the edge of the river bank would topple over into the water.

Ravana compares both Angad and Sugriv to such plants and trees that look big on the outside but have no strong foundation to keep them permanently rooted. To wit, when the war actually starts, Angad and Sugriv would be felled without the least effort just like the trees and plants growing on the edge of rivers and seas.

²Vibhishan is in a precarious state; he is weakened by worry. He is not sure of his own fate. On the one hand he has made his own people, the demons, his enemy, and on the other hand he is living amongst alien people who are arch enemies of his demon race, and so he can never be certain about them, about what they would do to him once their objective was fulfilled. Surely, in this uncertain situation Vibhishan must be living a worried and terrified life like someone living between the two sharp edges of a sword.]

सिलिय कर्म जानहिं नल नीला । है कपि एक महा बलसीला ॥ ५ ॥

आवा प्रथम नगर जेहिं जारा । सुनत बचन कह बालिकुमारा ॥ ६ ॥

silpi karma jānahim̐ nala nīlā. hai kapi ēka mahā balasīlā. 5.
āvā prathama nagaru jēhim̐ jārā. sunata bacana kaha bālikumārā. 6.

The two, Nala and Neela, are skilled in the art of construction; they are not expected to know anything about the martial art of warfare.

Nevertheless, I acknowledge that there is only one monkey amongst you who possesses great strength. (5)

He is the one who had come earlier to Lanka and had burnt the city¹.

When the son of Baali (“bālikumārā”; Angad) heard these words (that referred to Hanuman), he immediately seized the opportunity to turn the table on Ravana by snapping back sarcastically, --- (6)

[Note—¹Ravana is referring to Hanuman here.]

सत्य बचन कहु निसिचर नाहा । साँचेहुँ कीस कीन्ह पुर दाहा ॥ ७ ॥ रावन नगर अल्प कपि दहई । सुनि अस बचन सत्य को कहई ॥ ८ ॥ satya bacana kahu nisicara nāhā. sāṁcēhuṁ kīsa kīnha pura dāhā. 7.

rāvana nagara alpa kapi dhaī. suni asa bacana satya kō kahaī. 8.

‘Oh the king of demons (nisicara nāhā)! Tell me honestly, is it really true that a monkey had burnt (your fabulous city of) Lanka? (7)

Who will believe that it is true that a humble monkey would ever be able to burn the great city of Ravana¹? (8)

[Note—¹Angad scorned at Ravana and put him to shame by turning his own words against him when he said something to this effect: “It seems incredulous and out of imagination that a city so well protected by a mighty demon king of the name of Ravana, who claims to have vanquished all the gods and conquered all the creatures of the Creator’s creation, could be burnt down by a lonely monkey, all by himself. Why, this seems absolutely impossible. But you have acknowledged yourself that this was done by that diminutive-looking monkey. Prey, tell me, what were you doing then; why didn’t you stop him from causing such havoc to your beloved city; what were your warriors doing; where was your strength and valour, of which you boast so much, at that time?”] (8) jō ati subhaṭa sarāhēhu rāvana. sō sugrīva kēra laghu dhāvana. 9.

जो अति सुभट सराहेहु रावन । सो सुग्रीव केर लघु धावन ॥ ९ ॥ चलइ बहुत सो बीर न होई । पठवा खबरि लेन हम सोई ॥ १० ॥

cala'i bahuta sō bīra na hō'i. paṭhavā khabari lēna hama sō'i. 10.

Look Ravana; that monkey whom you have praised yourself so much for his valour and strength and courage is merely an ordinary messenger in the service of Sugriv¹. (9)

That he came here alone after covering a great distance (across the ocean) would not make him a great warrior, for actually it was us who had sent him on this mission². (10)

[Note—¹Angad calls Hanuman a messenger of Sugriv because it was Sugriv, being the king of the monkeys and the kingdom of Kishkindha, who had summoned and dispatched all the monkeys, including Hanuman, in all the directions to search for Sita—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precede Doha no. 22.

Angad's observation that "Hanuman was serving Sugriv in an ordinary way" shows that there was not much of a formal hierarchy in the kingdom of Kishkindha, and all the monkeys mingled with each others as brothers and compatriots of equal status. This informal relationship helped to bind the community closely in a bond of brotherhood and friendship.

²Hanuman was one amongst so many other monkey messengers sent by Sugriv in all the directions to search for Sita. Sugriv had not particularly directed Hanuman to go in a specific direction, such as to Lanka.

It was later on when the party, of which he was a member, reached the shore of the ocean that it became necessary for someone to go across the ocean to Lanka if they were to be successful in their mission of finding Sita. At that juncture, Angad and Jamvant, who were the leaders of this team, decided to send Hanuman on this job. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 29—to Chaupai line no. 11 that precedes Doha no. 30.}

To wit, Hanuman had no instructions to burn Lanka; his mandate was to find Sita. If he could achieve the feat of burning Lanka and destroying a large section of its army which had tried to catch him, it was his personal choice.

Angad wanted to drive home the point that if a single monkey could cause such a tremendous damage to Lanka, what would happen when the might of the whole monkey army unleashes its fury on the demon kingdom—has Ravana considered it?]

दो०. सत्य नगरु कपि जारेउ बिनु प्रभु आयसु पाइ ।

फिरि न गयउ सुग्रीव पहिं तेहिं भय रहा लुकाइ ॥ २३ (क) ॥

dōhā.

satya nagaru kapi jārē'u binu prabhu āyasu pā'i.

phiri na gaya'u sugrīva pahim̐ tēhim̐ bhaya rahā lukā'i. 23 (a).

[Angad continued—] It's true that the Kapi (the monkey; i.e. Hanuman) had burnt Lanka without an express order to do so from Lord Ram, and that is the reason why, now I understand from hindsight, he did not go back directly to report boldly to Sugriv (about the success of his mission to Lanka to find Sita), but preferred to hide himself out of fear¹. (Doha no. 23-a) [Note—¹Angad said: “Since Hanuman had burnt Lanka on the spur of the moment, without any order either from Lord Ram or from Sugriv, he was afraid of severe reprimand from his chief, Sugriv, the king of the monkeys. So he was reluctant to go to him straight upon return, and hid himself. I first went and told Sugriv about the good news, that Sita has been found, and this good news cheered up Sugriv and helped me to win his good humour and favour sufficiently enough to ensure that he would overlook or neglect Hanuman’s deed of burning Lanka without orders. Then I told Hanuman that there was nothing to fear, and I took him with me to Sugriv, who in turn took him to Lord Ram. The Lord of course was waiting for him, and he affectionately and warmly welcomed Hanuman, and appreciated his actions.

The point to note here is this: Hanuman was scared of Sugriv, and not Lord Ram. This is because Sugriv was a king, and a king would, in all likelihood, become annoyed if his orders are violated. Sugriv orders were clear: the monkeys and bears who were dispatched from Kishkindha were to search and find Sita, and come back to report within a month’s time; they were not expected to do anything more. And here Hanuman had run wild by fighting and killing a large number of demons, ruining their king’s royal garden called Ashok Van, had even killed Akshaya Kumar, the son of Ravana, and then lost his cool to become violent and burn the whole city of Lanka. This was not his mandate, and as such Hanuman was scared of facing Sugriv because he feared punishment.

But there was no such fear from Lord Ram—for everyone knew that the Lord was very kind, compassionate, loving, forgiving and accommodating. That’s why Hanuman had no reservations in disclosing his deeds to the Lord.

Presently, Angad tells Ravana all these things to drive home the point that Hanuman, whom Ravana acknowledges as being exceptionally brave, bold and courageous, was actually very humble and docile, and he didn’t have the courage and the boldness to face his king, Sugriv, and disobey his orders. This means that Sugriv was more powerful than Hanuman, for otherwise the latter would have no fear of him.

This was done to remind Ravana that he is fooling himself by thinking that only Hanuman is the ‘brave one’ in the whole of the monkey army, for he has yet not met and tested the others. It was to debunk Ravana’s general perception that the monkeys as a whole are a weak, inept and incompetent lot of clumsy and fickle minded creatures, and they stand no chance against his valour, courage, strength and power.]

सत्य कहहि दसकंठ सब मोहि न सुनि कछु कोह ।

कोउ न हमारें कटक अस तो सन लरत जो सोह ॥ २३ (ख) ॥

satya kahahi dasakaṇṭha saba mōhi na suni kachu kōha.
kō'u na hamārēm kaṭaka asa tō sana larata jō sōha. 23 (b).

Truly Ravana, what you say is right¹, and I am not offended by your comments. In all sooth, really, there is no one in our rank and file who would feel glad and honoured to be able to fight with you!² (Doha no. 23-b)

[Note—¹Angad refers to what Ravana has said about all the monkey warriors in the previous verse nos. 2-5 that precede Doha no. 23-a herein above.

²Angad here refers to Ravana's assertion in verse no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 23-a herein above that "there is no one in the monkey army who would be able to fight Ravana". Angad gives the reason for it in the next Doha no. 23-c.

Here he is taunting Ravana in a contemptuous way by saying that it is true that none of his friends and compatriots would like to fight with him, not because they can't fight him as they are weak, or are afraid to face him in the battle-field for fear of defeat, but because they would feel it is demeaning and insulting for their own honour and pride, as fighting with Ravana, who is a false warrior, a mere pretender full of loud boast and bluster without anything of substance in him, would put them to shame for having wasted their time and energy, their valour, courage, marital skills, strength and powers on a good-for-nothing, loud-mouthed crook. It would be like trying to kill a mosquito by using a gun against it, or employing a battering ram to fall a puppet, or wasting energy by repeatedly punching a rubber dummy thinking it to be a living giant.]

प्रीति बिरोध समान सन करिअ नीति असि आहि ।

जौं मृगपति बध मेडुकन्हि भल कि कहइ कोउ ताहि ॥ २३ (ग) ॥ prīti birōdha samāna sana kari'a nīti asi āhi.

jauṁ mṛgapati badha mēḍukanhi bhala ki kaha'i kō'u tāhi. 23 (c).

It is an established norm for mutual engagement that one should develop any kind of relation, either friendly or hostile, only with those who are almost of the same stature and have almost the same standing as his own.

[To wit, both the sides should be on almost the same level; they should be at par with each other; there should be a balance between them. Great disparity between the two sides is not conducive to any worthwhile relationship, whether friendly or hostile. There should be a level playing field for both the sides as it helps to sustain long-term relationships in case of friendship, and to decide who is the actual winner in the case of hostility.]

For instance, if a lion kills a frog, will anyone in his right senses call it a good thing, an act of bravery on the part of the lion¹?

[Definitely and doubtlessly, the answer is "no". Similarly, if a strong man subdues a weakling by using physical force, it is a matter of shame for the former instead of praise.] (Doha no. 23-c.)

[Note—¹Angad clarifies why he considers that none of his friends should fight Ravana by citing the example of a "lion killing a frog", which is a shameful act for the lion. Here, he compares the monkey warriors to the 'lion', and Ravana to the 'frog'.

We can observe how the debate is becoming more and more acerbic, abrasive and personal in a gradual manner, how it is descending lower and lower in the scale of decency and decorum. Both Ravana and Angad have used denigrating and deprecating language for the other, stoking mutual anger, and enhancing bitterness and repugnance further.]

जद्यपि लघुता राम कहूँ तोहि बधें बड़ दोष । तदपि कठिन दसकंठ सुनु छत्र जाति कर रोष ॥ २३ (घ) ॥ jadyapi laghutā rāma kahum̐ tōhi badhēm̐ baṛa dōṣa.

tadapi kaṭhina dasakaṇṭha sunu chatra jāti kara rōṣa. 23 (d).

So therefore, oh Ravana, it is true that it would be too lowly and demeaning for Lord Ram to slay you, for it would be a great error on the part of the Lord to do so¹, but mind you, oh the ten-necked one (dasakaṇṭha), that the anger of the Kshatriya race (the ‘warrior race’ to which Lord Ram belonged) is very dangerous, and the accompanying wrathful fury is hard to overcome². (Doha no. 23-d)

[Note—¹Angad has just cited the instance of “a lion killing a frog” to stress that it is not a good thing for a great person of abilities and wisdom to use force to kill those who are too weak, humble and lowly in front of him. So therefore it would not be worthy for Lord Ram, the great and almighty Lord of the world, to stoop to such a low level as to employ his powers and strength to vanquish and slay someone as lowly and worthless as Ravana, who is no comparison whatsoever, by any measure, to the Lord’s exalted stature, majesty and greatness.

The world would look down upon Lord Ram for waging a bloody war and causing the death of so many creatures (demons) just for retrieving his wife from Ravana’s clutches—for it was an easy task for the almighty Lord. The world would say that Lord Ram could have simply subdued Ravana, make him give Sita back, exact some tribute from him if he wished to punish the demon king, impose certain strict strictures upon him so that he does not misbehave in the future, and then release him with stern warning not to disobey the Lord’s words.

Instead of this approach, when the Lord’s objective could have been achieved by more peaceful method, the Lord chose to fight a fierce war that led to so much devastation and havoc just in order to kill Ravana to punish him for stealing Sita.

This will surely be a blot on the Lord’s good reputation for ever. But the thing is that anger is a very bad proposition. So if Ravana continues with his wild and arrogant ways, refusing to relent and make peace with the Lord, and consequently forcing the war on the Lord, then his anger would be ignited, and once this fire is kindled, there is no way it can be put out.

²Lord Ram belonged to the Kshatriya race, the noble warrior race that was famous for its valour, courage, boldness, marital skills, bravery and strength. The kings of ancient times usually belonged to this race. The main job of this race was to give protection to the rest of the society.

One characteristic of this race was that while they were usually kind and magnanimous and forgiving, but if a limit of tolerance was passed and their anger was ignited then it was quite impossible to subdue them. Once they decided to achieve an objective, they would accomplish it no matter what happened.

Angad alludes to this unique character. He tells Ravana that though it is correct to say that it would not be a proper thing for Lord Ram to kill him, but if things spin out of control then there would be no stopping the Lord either, in spite of the fact that the consequences may not be conducive for the Lord's reputation as being merciful, kind, gracious, forgiving, compassionate, magnanimous and benevolent.

So therefore Angad advised Ravana not to test Lord Ram's patience; and that he ought naught to do anything that would precipitate disaster.]

बक्र उक्ति धनु बचन सर हृदय दहेउ रिपु कीस । प्रतिउत्तर सड़सिन्ह मनहुँ काढ़त भट दससीस ॥ २३ (ड) ॥ bakra ukti dhanu bacana sara hr̥daya dahē'u ripu kīsa.

prati'uttara saṛasinha manahuṁ kāṛhata bhaṭa dasasīsa. 23 (e).

The words of the Kapi (literally the 'monkey'; here referring to Angad), which were shot like sharp arrows mounted on a bow represented by sarcastic speech, pierced deep into the heart of the ten-headed Ravana, who made desperate attempts to heal his wounds (i.e. his ego, self-respect and dignity) by taking these arrows out using a tong symbolised by his equally sharp rejoinders and rebuffs (made to Angad)¹. (Doha no. 23-e)

[Note—¹Here, the sharp answers that Ravana gave to Angad for each of his taunts have been likened to a wounded person trying to heal his wounds by plucking out the sharp projectiles, shot by his enemy, that have dug deep into his body, and then throwing them vigourously back at his opponent in a tit-for-tat reaction so that some kind of injury could be inflicted on the latter, as far as it was possible.

This will be more evident in the following verses where we shall read that the sarcasm, the taunt and the contempt for each other will reach a crescendo, with quick, biting and witty responses being shot back and forth by both the sides.]

हँसि बोलेउ दसमौलि तब कपि कर बड़ गुन एक । जो प्रतिपालइ तासु हित करइ उपाय अनेक ॥ २३ (च) ॥ haṁsi bōlē'u dasamauli taba kapi kara baṛa guna ēka.

jō pratipāla'i tāsū hita kara'i upāya anēka. 23 (f).

Then the ten-headed Ravana laughed (to indicate that he isn't offended, nor does he take Angad seriously) and said, 'One of the good characters of a monkey is that he will always try to serve his master, who takes care of him and feeds him, in the best way he can, and do doing whatever is within his means to support the master's cause'¹. (Doha no. 23-f)

[Note—¹Ravana effectively said this: "I appreciate your enthusiasm in supporting the cause of Lord Ram and for serving Sugriv. Yes, it is the nature of the monkeys in general that they would diligently serve him who feeds them. This habit is evident when one observes how a monkey obeys a monkey-charmer; the monkey would obey his master's commands, without asking questions, by doing all the tricks he is ordered to do to please the spectators who gather to watch the show, because the monkey knows that the charmer gives him food, lodging and protection, and if he does not obey him then the master would not only beat him but may even cut-off his ration. And, worse, if the master gets angry beyond a limit, he would let the monkey loose, and there are so many predators waiting to grab him and kill him, by stoning him, beating him, or in some other way.

A domesticated monkey usually becomes servile, weak and docile as he loses most of his natural vigour, aggressiveness, and the many skills that are possessed by his peers who live a free life in the forests where they have to fend for themselves because they have no patrons like the monkey-charmer who would feed them, protect them, and give them a shelter to rest.

You live a comfortable life of a prince of the monkey kingdom. You owe your life's privileges to your uncle Sugriv because he has made you a 'prince', as well as to Lord Ram, for it is the Lord who ensures your safety at the hands of your father's bitter enemy, your uncle Sugriv, and has compelled the latter to let you live in peace.

Well, I am not at all surprised that you would sing the song of praises for the two, Sugriv and Lord Ram, because they feed you and allow you to enjoy the privileges of prince-hood. Woe to you; shame to you, for being a servile servant of those who eliminated your noble father and the great monkey named Baali; you have dishonoured yourself by serving them and dancing to their tune, inspite of being the son of the great and fearless monkey warrior king named Baali!"

The following verses reiterate and endorse the above view.]

चौ०. धन्य कीस जो निज प्रभु काजा । जहँ तहँ नाचइ परिहरि लाजा ॥ १ ॥

नाचि कूदि करि लोग रिझाई । पति हित करइ धर्म निपुनाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

dhan'ya kīsa jō nija prabhu kājā. jahaṁ tahaṁ nāca'i parihari lājā. 1.
nāci kūdi kari lōga rijhā'ī. pati hita kara'i dharma nipunā'ī. 2.

[Ravana invokes the example of the monkey-charmer to support his comment made in Doha no. 23-f above.]

Ravana continued, 'Hats off to a monkey who dances, everywhere and anywhere, in the service of his master, without feeling even a wee bit shy or having the least amount of shame or regret for the acts his master orders him to do. (1)

He (the pet monkey) would play a perfect role of a joker, dancing and jumping and hopping (besides making funny faces and uttering ridiculous sounds) in order to entertain and please the spectators who gather around him to watch his antics, for the pecuniary benefit of his master. Forsooth, you monkeys are truly honest followers of the law of Dharma (right conduct).

[It is because you are being faithful to your master who feeds and lodges you. You serve your patron, your master, the monkey-charmer, very diligently and honestly, to the best of your abilities, which surely is a good character. I will readily agree that you are great as far as this virtue goes, and I would applaud it. Surely, this is excellent conduct, and so I say that you monkeys are "followers of Dharma at least in one respect".]¹ (2)

[Note—¹The reference to a ‘monkey-charmer’ is very obvious. The poor, pet monkey performs all sorts of cheap tricks that his master orders him to do to please the crowd that had collected around to watch his antics, and the better role of a joker the monkey plays the greater is the money that is flipped towards him by the appreciative spectators by way of donation or alms. This money provides for the bread and butter of the monkey-charmer, who in turn takes care of the needs of the monkey. This is the monkey-charmer’s only livelihood, and since the monkey helps his master earn his bread and support his dependants with his little pranks, he is doing a noble act by serving his lord faithfully and obediently to the best of his ability.

A monkey-charmer may have more than one monkey as pets, but he would naturally favour that monkey who is a better performer of tricks as it translates into more revenue. It is a symbiotic relationship between the monkey-charmer and the monkey, which benefits both. The charmer depends upon his monkey to earn his livelihood, and the monkey depends upon the charmer for food, lodging and safety.

Ravana cites this example to imply that Angad serves his masters, Sugriv and Lord Ram, because he derives benefit by doing so. Angad is able to enjoy the privileges of a prince because he keeps his uncle Sugriv in good humour, and he serves Lord Ram to ensure that the Lord continues to protect him against the envy of his uncle who was so jealous of his father Baali that he killed him to grab the throne of Kishkindha, and who may harbour a secret desire to get rid of Angad too.

In doing so, though he gets credit for being loyal and diligent in his service to his lords, he forgets that he is dancing, in a servile manner, to the tune of those who were instrumental in his father Baali’s death. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Doha no. 11.}

Why was Angad chosen as a messenger by Lord Ram? It is because he was a ‘better performer’ as compared to others in the camp of Lord Ram. He was loud-mouthed, he could counter his opponent with quick wit and biting humour without waiting to consider the aptness of his reply, he was an expert debater and a colloquial speaker who could speak extempore without a break for great lengths of time, he was bold and proud, he was immune to any personal emotions that his opponent may attempt to rouse to deflect his attention while arguing his case in favour of his master (as proved by Angad remaining unruffled by Ravana’s attempt to remind him of his father Baali who was killed by Sugriv with the aid of Lord Ram in order to sow the seed of revenge inside Angad’s heart), and he would never accept defeat in an argument for he could cook up some or the other story so convincing that it would stymie his adversary.

Ravana means that like the monkey-charmer who favours that pet monkey of his who is able to entertain the crowd of spectator better than the others in his brood, Lord Ram chose Angad as he would certainly achieve the objective—which was to insult Ravana and humiliate him to such an extent that even if he had a secret wish to make a compromise to avoid the war it would be washed away, because Angad would make him so angry and provoke him so much with his antics and disparaging remarks that it would be impossible for Ravana to save his honour and grace by a peaceful mean, and he would be compelled to slug it out in the battle-field. And in that, surely, Angad would succeed.]

अंगद स्वामिभक्त तव जाती । प्रभु गुन कस न कहसि एहि भाँती ॥ ३ ॥

मैं गुन गाहक परम सुजाना । तव कटु रटनि करउँ नहिं काना ॥ ४ ॥ aṅgada svāmibhakta tava jātī. prabhu guna kasa na kahasi ēhi bhāṁtī. 3.

mairṁ guna gāhaka parama sujānā. tava kaṭu raṭani kara'uṁ nahiṁ kānā. 4.

Angad, your race is reputed to be loyal to whosoever is its lord and master. So there is no wonder that you are lavishing so much praise on your own lord (i.e. Lord Ram). (3)

I am wise, prudent, sagacious and pragmatic enough to know that this sort of behaviour is expected of you (as praising the master and the lord is a habit of the monkey race), and this is why I have not paid much attention to your incoherent babblings.

[To wit, I have excused you for your impudence and the audacity that you have shown by speaking in front of me in the rash manner that you chose to follow, because, being a monkey, I can't expect you to show basic decency and civility expected from a messenger.]¹ (4)

[Note—¹Ravana is putting himself on high moral ground by playing cool and telling Angad that he appreciates his good virtue of being loyal to his Lord (Sri Ram) and praising him in front of his adversary (Ravana).

Ravana tries to put Angad on the back foot by showing that it is the latter who is at fault by not paying due respect to a sovereign to whom he has come as a messenger. It is certainly not a good thing, especially for a messenger from another king, to speak in an insulting tone to a king to whom he has brought a message from his master, for such rudeness of behaviour of the messenger shows the king who had sent him in very poor light.

Ravana had tried to hide his own uneasiness, and at the same time to manoeuvre the discussion towards civility and a more amiable environment by showing that he has not taken offence at Angad's rude answers. But Ravana failed in his intentions to calm tempers, for Angad continued with his sarcasm and acerbic tirade relentlessly, provoking Ravana to hit back vehemently. Angad's intent was to make Ravana take some step that would be against his own interest by giving the former (Angad) an excuse to completely demolish whatever pride and respect that was still left with the latter (Ravana).]

कह कपि तव गुन गाहकताई । सत्य पवनसुत मोहि सुनाई ॥ ५ ॥

बन बिधंसि सुत बधि पुर जारा । तदपि न तेहिं कछु कृत अपकारा ॥ ६ ॥

सोइ बिचारि तव प्रकृति सुहाई । दसकंधर मैं कीन्हि ढिठाई ॥ ७ ॥

देखेउँ आइ जो कछु कपि भाषा । तुम्हरेँ लाज न रोष न माखा ॥ ८ ॥ kaha kapi tava guna gāhakatā'ī. satya pavanasuta mōhi sunā'ī. 5.

bana bidhansi suta badhi pura jārā. tadapi na tēhiṁ kachu kṛta apakārā. 6.
sō'i bicāri tava prakṛti suhā'ī. dasakandhara mairṁ kīnhi ḍhiṭhā'ī. 7.
dēkhē'uṁ ā'i jō kachu kapi bhāṣā. tumharēm lāja na rōṣa na mākhā. 8.

[Referring to Ravana's affirmation that he is wise, prudent, sagacious and pragmatic, Angad retorted scornfully—]

Angad said with intense irony in his voice: ‘Yes, your sense of wisdom, prudence, sagacity and pragmatism is real. The son of the wind god (“pavanasuta”; i.e. Hanuman) was right when he told me about it (upon his return from Lanka). (5)

When he (Hanuman) had destroyed your favourite garden known as ‘Ashok Van’, had killed your son (Akshaya Kumar), and had burnt your city (of Lanka)—you did not feel he has done you any harm, so wise, prudent, pragmatic and sagacious you are indeed!¹ (6)

Oh the ten-shouldered Ravana (dasakandhara)²! I acted in such an insolent manner as I had known of your amiable nature (that you are not offended by any insinuation, no matter how insulting and abrasive your interlocutor may be). (7)

In all sooth and without gainsay, I have now witnessed myself what the Kapi (Hanuman) had said about you—that you have not a trace of shame, no anger, or a sense of resentment (at being publicly humiliated by a monkey who would destroy, with impunity, your garden as well as your city, and also kill your son, and then leave your kingdom, unchallenged and unharmed).³ (8)

[Note—¹Angad scorned at Ravana tauntingly: “Well, tell me, if you were offended by any of these things, why did you not punish him for the crime; why did you allow him to go back from Lanka, alive and unscathed? Surely, you possess such a high level of graciousness, magnanimity and benevolence as your virtues that such destructions were of no consequence to you because you wished to forgive a messenger and were averse to taking revenge or harming a creature as it would be sinful act. Is it so?

Or is it perhaps because your wisdom told you to keep quite and forgive the perpetrator as he was a messenger or too small a creature to seek revenge from, or perhaps, in your pragmatism, you decided that it would be better to keep quiet because that intruder would cause you more damage if you confronted him, and your prudence was that it was better to contain any further havoc, which you wouldn’t be able to prevent from happening, by letting that monkey leave Lanka as soon as he could.”

²Ravana had ‘ten heads’, and that implies he had ‘ten necks’ and ‘ten shoulders’.

³After first using soothing words like “you have wisdom, sagacity, prudence, pragmatism”, which may have calmed down Ravana a wee bit, Angad stoked the fire of Ravana’s anger once again by saying “you have no shame, and no anger or resentment either, at being insulted, and your property being damaged by an intruder”.]

जौं असि मति पितु खाए कीसा । कहि अस बचन हँसा दससीसा ॥ ९ ॥
 पितहि खाइ खातेउँ पुनि तोही । अबहीं समुझि परा कछु मोही ॥ १० ॥ बालि बिमल जस भाजन जानी । हतउँ न तोहि अधम अभिमानी ॥ ११ ॥

jauṁ asi mati pitu khā'ē kīsā. kahi asa bacana haṁsā dasasīsā. 9.
 pitahi khā'i khātē'uṁ puni tōhī. abahīm samujhi parā kachu mōhī. 10.

bāli bimala jasa bhājana jānī. hata'uṃ na tōhi adhama abhimānī. 11.

Ravana retorted with vehemence, 'Oh you monkey (kīsā); such lowly and corrupt is your wisdom and intelligence that there is no wonder you have devoured your father.

[To wit, you are truly shameless and dumb fellow, a blot on your family, because you are not at all concerned about the death of your father, Baali, at the hands of those whose cause you have come to espouse. Woes betide upon you, oh you ungrateful and unfaithful son!]

Saying this, Ravana laughed derisively with all his ten heads (haṃsā dasasīsā). (9)

Angad shot back, 'Yea, I would have devoured you after having devoured my father.

[To wit, since I am being accused of condoning my father's death by keeping silent about it and professing the cause of those who got him killed¹, I would have lived up to my reputation by now either killing you myself or getting you killed by them who had got my father Baali killed.]

But for the moment I would prefer to desist from doing this because a thought occurred to me. (10)

Well, I desist from slaying you lowly, sinful, haughty and arrogant fellow just because you were forgiven (for your mischief) and was promised favour by Baali (my father)².

[And therefore, by harming or killing you I would be insulting the honourable memory of my respected father. So, I prefer to overlook your impudence. Instead of thanking me for sparing your life in the honourable memory of my father, you are so foolish as to think I am sparing you because of any other reason, such as being afraid of you.] (11)

[Note—¹Angad is referring to his uncle Sugriv who had killed his father Baali in a duel in which Lord Ram took the sides of Sugriv.

The important question is this: Why did Angad prefer to keep silent about Sugriv killing his father Baali, and Lord Ram taking sides with Sugriv?

The answer is: One, Angad felt that his father was at fault for he had wrongly expelled his uncle after severely beating him for no fault of his, and even kept Sugriv's wife as a mistress^a, which in themselves were wrong things to do.

Second, Lord Ram supported Sugriv because he the Lord felt he had been wronged, and being a true friend it was his moral duty to help Sugriv^b.

Third, Angad was of a young age, and he felt that the community of the monkeys in Kishkindha was not happy with Baali with the treatment he had meted out unjustly to his innocent younger brother Sugriv. Actually Sugriv was compelled to accept the crown of Kishkindha by a joint decision of all the ministers, though he was not willing to do so, as the rightful heir was Angad, being the son of the king Baali. But Angad was of an immature age, and so he could not be made a king in the absence of his father Baali. There was obviously no choice, except to anoint Sugriv on the throne. But when Baali came back after a long time when he had finally eliminated a demon named Mayawi, he found Sugriv on the throne. Without enquiring the circumstances in which Sugriv had ascended the throne, and without giving him a chance to step down, Baali thrashed him mercilessly, chased him away from the kingdom, and kept his wife as a mistress, something that is unacceptable.

Lord Ram took the side of Sugriv for these reasons—as the Lord felt grave injustice has been done to him.

The genesis of the bitterness between Sugriv and Baali is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-13 that precede Doha no. 6.

Angad knew the whole story, and since his father was at fault he preferred to remain silent. Besides this, there was nothing else he could do. He knew that his uncle saw him as thorn by his side, someone who has the right to the throne. Lord Ram was the saviour of Angad because Baali had entrusted his son in the care of the Lord at the time of his death^c. So Angad knew very well that as long as the Lord favoured him he had nothing to fear^d.

{^aApropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 9-11 that precede Doha no. 6.

^bApropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 7.

^cApropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.

^dApropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 26.}

²The story of Baali and Ravana in brief is as follows: Once, the monkey king of Kishkindha, Vaali (also pronounced as “Baali”), had put Ravana under his armpit for many days while the latter had gone to challenge the former when he was doing some worship. Peeved by Ravana’s arrogance and impertinence, Baali had tucked him under his arms to stop him from annoying him any further. When his worship was finished and he had returned back to his capital at Kishkindha, he realised that Ravana was still squeezed under his armpit. So he released the latter and made a pact of friendship with him.

The story of Ravana suffering humiliation at the hands of Baali and his subsequent friendship with him is narrated in Valmiki Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Sarga 34; Veda Vyas’ Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 58-59; and in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101.]

कहु रावन रावन जग केते । मैं निज श्रवन सुने सुनु जेते ॥ १२ ॥

बलिहि जितन एक गयउ पताला । राखेउ बाँधि सिसुन्ह हयसाला ॥ १३ ॥

खेलहि बालक मारहि जाई । दया लागि बलि दीन्ह छोड़ाई ॥ १४ ॥

kahu rāvana rāvana jaga kētē. mair̥m nija śravana sunē sunu jētē. 12.

balihi jitana ēka gaya'u patālā. rākhē'u bāṁdhi sisunha hayasālā. 13.

khēlahim̐ bālaka mārāhim̐ jāī. dayā lagi bali dīnha chōṛāī. 14.

Well, tell me Ravana, how many Ravanaes are there in this world? I have heard of a few of them, and now let me tell you about some of them. (12)

There is one Ravana who had gone to the nether world to vanquish king Bali. On that occasion, the children had caught hold of him and (to play with him they had) tied him in a horse-stable. (13)

The boys played with him as if he was a novelty, a toy-horse, often kicking him merrily, in jest (to derive pleasure when he screeched and groaned). At that time, Bali took pity on Ravana and got him released from captivity¹. (14)

[Note—¹This story in brief is this: Once Ravana went to the nether world (or the subterranean world where he saw the brilliant city of Bali. The gates of Bali's palace was guarded by Lord Vaaman, the dwarf mendicant incarnation of Lord Vishnu. Ravana overlooked the Lord and forcibly entered the palace of Bali, where he found him playing a board game. Bali saw Ravana standing from the corners of his eyes, but neglected him. The dice with which Bali was playing slipped from his hand and fell at a distance. Treating Ravana as one of his other attendants, Bali asked him to fetch the dice. Ravana tried all his might but could not even move the dice a bit. On the contrary, his fingers got crushed under the weight of the dice and he cried in pain, bleeding profusely. Then, one of the ordinary lady attendants of Bali went and brought back the dice, releasing Ravana's fingers also. When Bali heard Ravana's cries, he chided him in most humiliating way, and ordered him to be ejected out of the palace. Outside, Bali's guards, soldiers etc. caught him and enslaved him. They used to feed him with left-over food and assigned him the job of cleaning the royal horses' stable, where Ravana had to collect dung and throw it out. The children of the royal guards found in him a toy to play with, and they enjoyed kicking and mocking at him.

Fed up with this agony and incarceration, once when he went out to dump his collection of horse dung he pleaded with Lord Vaaman, who was standing guard at the gates, to have mercy on him and help him escape. At this, Vaaman flung him with the tip of his big toe, and Ravana flew into the sky like a mosquito, landing in Lanka. He felt glad as if he has been born again.

This story is narrated in: Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 102-116.]

एक बहोरि सहस्रभुज देखा । धाड़ धरा जिमि जंतु बिसेषा ॥ १५ ॥

कौतुक लागि भवन लै आवा । सो पुलस्ति मुनि जाइ छोड़ावा ॥ १६ ॥ ēka bahōri sahasabhuja dēkhā. dhā'i dharā jimi jantu bisēṣā. 15.

kautuka lāgi bhavana lai āvā. sō pulasti muni jā'i chōṛāvā. 16.

Then I have heard of another Ravana who was once seen by the thousand-armed king named Sahastrabahu. Thinking Ravana to be a strange creature (with his ten heads and twenty arms), he (Sahastrabahu) rushed forward and caught hold of him. (15)

Out of curiosity, Sahastrabahu brought Ravana home (just like a person would bring home some new specimen he discovers somewhere, to keep him as a show-piece in his palace). At that time, sage Pulastya had come to Ravana's rescue by going to Sahastrabahu and getting him freed¹. (16)

[Note—¹Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 22 where Hanuman too cites this episode concerning Sahastrabahu and Ravana.

This story is narrated in Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto nos. 31-33; Veda Vyas' Adhyatma Ramayan, Uttar Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 55-57; and in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 90-95.

Briefly it is as follows: Sahastrabahu, meaning 'someone with a thousand arms', was the son of Kritvirya and the king of Mahishmati situated on the banks of river Narmada. By the blessings of sage Dattatreya he could get a thousand arms when he so desired. One day when he was enjoying himself with his ladies and mistresses in the river, Ravana had too gone there to offer worship to Lord Shiva. Ravana's attendants had collected flowers for offering to Lord Shiva. In the meantime, Sahastrabahu, who was showing off his majesty to impress the women, had used his thousand arms to block the flow of water in the river, which therefore flooded the banks and flowed upstream. The flowers that Ravana's attendants had collected for worship were washed away, which gravely annoyed Ravana as it disrupted his worship. On learning the cause of this flood, Ravana immediately went to challenge Sahastrabahu and started a fierce battle with his soldiers. Upon learning that Ravana has destroyed the entire army, Sahastrabahu himself came to face him. A severe battle ensued. As soon as the chief commander of the demon army, named Prahasta, fell, the rest of the demons fled; and then followed a one-to-one duel between Ravana and Sahastrabahu. These two mighty warriors used massive war-maces to hit each other. Finally, Sahastrabahu hit Ravana so hard that he tottered and swooned, and was so dazed that he sat down to recover himself. Seizing the moment, Sahastrabahu captured Ravana and held him tight in his thousand arms, using these arms like ropes to ensnare him so firmly that Ravana could not wriggle out. After this, Sahastrabahu brought Ravana to his capital city and imprisoned him like an ordinary prisoner of war. Later on, sage Pulastya went to plead with Sahastrabahu, and he not only succeeded in getting Ravana released but also in forging a friendship between the two. {This version is according to Valmiki's Ramayana, Uttar Kand, Canto nos. 31-33.}]

दो०. एक कहत मोहि सकुच अति रहा बालि कीं काँख ।

इन्ह महुँ रावन तैं कवन सत्य बदहि तजि माख ॥ २४ ॥

dōhā.

ēka kahata mōhi sakuca ati rahā bāli kīṁ kām̐kha.

inha mahum̐ rāvana taim̐ kavana satya badahi taji mākha. 24.

[Angad continued with his taunts—] I feel hesitant and reluctant to speak of one other of such Ravana who was kept tucked under the arm pit of Baali (my father)¹.

Now, I prithee, please tell me which of the above Ranas I have mentioned are you? Leave aside deceit and pretensions, and be honest in informing me about your true identity; about who you actually are amongst the Ranas I have cited herein above?' (Doha no. 24)

[Note—¹This episode is narrated in (a) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 96-101; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 58-59.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 22 where Hanuman too cites this episode concerning Baali and Ravana.]

चौ०. सुनु सठ सोइ रावन बलसीला । हरगिरि जान जासु भुज लीला ॥ १ ॥
 जान उमापति जासु सुराई । पूजेउँ जेहि सिर सुमन चढ़ाई ॥ २ ॥ सिर सरोज निज करन्हि उतारी । पूजेउँ अमित बार त्रिपुरारी ॥ ३ ॥
 caupāī.

sunu saṭha sō'i rāvana balasīlā. haragiri jāna jāsu bhuja līlā. 1.
 jāna umāpati jāsu surāī. pūjē'uṁ jēhi sira sumana caṛhāī. 2.
 sira sarōja nija karanhi utārī. pūjē'uṁ amita bāra tripurārī. 3.

[Stung by Angad publicly raking up the darker and humiliating side of his past, Ravana felt exasperated and provoked. He decided to counter Angad by highlighting his astounding achievements and exceptional valour by listing all his stupendous feats that had no parallel in history, one by one, the deeds of his which had amazed the whole world and hold it in thrall of Ravana, with awe and fear.]

Ravana lashed back at Angad with a sharp tone, 'Listen you stupid rascal (sunu saṭha). I am a Ravana with exceptional strength, courage, power and valour, the abilities of whose strong arms and the singularly brave deeds that he had done are well known to Lord Shiva as I had lifted the mountain on which the Lord has his abode (i.e. Mt. Kailash)¹. (1)

I am the Ravana whose courage and bravery are known to Lord Shiva, the husband of goddess Uma (umāpati), whom I had worshipped by offering my heads in lieu of flowers². (2)

I have worshipped Lord Tripurari (i.e. Lord Shiva)³ by offering my heads number of times. (3)

[Note—¹Ravana refers to an incident in the past when he had lifted Mt. Kailash along with Lord Shiva and his divine consort Parvati in order to bring them to his city of Lanka. This episode is narrated in (a) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 36-40, 84-89; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 55-56.

Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 179.

²This incident is narrated in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 26-39, 84-89.

³The word “tripurārī” is an honourable name of Lord Shiva for the following reasons: (i) The word indicates that Lord Shiva is the Lord of the whole world consisting of three divisions, viz. the heaven, the earth and the nether; (ii) He had slayed a demon by the name of Tripura, hence called “Tripurari”.]

भुज बिक्रम जानहिं दिगपाला । सठ अजहूँ जिन्ह कें उर साला ॥ ४ ॥
 जानहिं दिग्गज उर कठिनाई । जब जब भिरउँ जाइ बरिआई ॥ ५ ॥
 जिन्ह के दसन कराल न फूटे । उर लागत मूलक इव टूटे ॥ ६ ॥ bhuja bikrama jānahim digapālā. saṭha ajahūṁ jinha kēm ura sālā. 4.

 jānahim diggaja ura kaṭhināī. jaba jaba bhira'uṁ jā'i bari'āī. 5.
 jinha kē dasana karāla na phūṭē. ura lāgata mūlaka iva ṭūṭē. 6.

Oh you wicked fellow (saṭha)! The Dikpals (custodians of the world; the junior gods)¹ know the valour and the strength of my arms, because their hearts are still burning and feeling hurt by the terror I had struck in them². (4)

Not only that; the many Diggajs (legendary elephants who support the earth by holding it aloft from underneath it)³ know how tuff and impenetrable my chest is, for whenever I went to clash with them [5], they tried to strike me and pierce my heart with their long and strong tusks, only to discover that their sharp tusks failed to pierce my chest but themselves broke up into small fragments [6]. (5-6)

[Note—¹There are said to be 10 Dikpals (also called Digpals), the junior gods, who are assigned the task of caring for the part of the world under their care:

According to the Purans and Ram Purvatapiniyopanishad, canto 4, verse no. 38-39, there are ten Dikpals who are the Gods who act as the guardians or custodians or protectors of the ten directions of the world. These legendary figures support the world from all the directions of the compass. They have been described in Ram Purva Tapini Upanishad of the Atharva Veda tradition, Canto 4, verse nos. 38-39. Let us see what this Upanishad has to say—

“Canto 4, verse no. 38 = These ten Dikpals are the following—Indra who is the king of Gods and who has a thousand eyes on his body, and is therefore called ‘Sahastraaksha’, Agni or the Fire God, Yam or the God of Dharma (i.e. the God responsible to ensure that the great tenets of righteousness and proper conduct are observed by the creatures, and to punish those who violate these laws), Niritiya (also known as Nairitya), Varun or the Water God, Anil or the Wind God, Indu or the Moon God, Ishan or Lord Shiva, Brahma the creator, and Anant or Lord Seshnath, the legendary serpent who holds the earth on its hoods and upon whom the supreme Lord Vishnu reclines in the celestial ocean (the word also refers to Vishnu himself in his infinite form as the Viraat Purush) (38).”

According to some versions, there are eight Dikpals. In this version, only the Brahma who is the patron deity of the zenith, and Anant or Vishnu who takes care of the nadir direction are removed.

Hence, out of the ten Dikpaals, only eight are counted. These are the custodians or protectors of the eight directions as follows—Indra (the king of Gods) takes care of the east, Yama (the God of death) takes care of the south, Varun (Water God) takes care of the west, Kuber (the Gods’ treasurer) takes care of the north, Agni (the Fire God) takes care of the south-east, Surya (the Sun God) takes care of the south-west, Vayu (the Wind God) takes care of the north-west, and Ishan (Shiva) takes care of the north-east.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 182.

³The Diggajs: There are said to be 8 ‘Diggaj’ who support the earth from eight directions or corners. These Diggajs are believed to be strong and muscular ‘elephants’ stationed at eight strategic points in eight directions of the earth to support it from rolling or toppling over. The word ‘Diggaj’ itself means anyone who is very strong and muscular.

According to the Purans, these eight directions and their respective Diggajs are the following—(i) in the north, the Diggaj (elephant) is known as ‘Saarvabhoum’; (ii) in the north-east, the Diggaj is known as ‘Suprateek or Saptateek’; (iii) in the east, the Diggaj is known as ‘Airaawat’; (iv) in the south-east, the Diggaj is known as ‘Pundareek’; (v) in the south, the Diggaj is known as ‘Vaaman’; (vi) in the south-west, the Diggaj is known as ‘Kumud’; (vii) in the west, the Diggaj is known as ‘Anjan’; and (viii) in the north-west, the Diggaj is known as ‘Pushpa-danta’.

However, according to Valmiki’s Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 40, verse nos. 14, 18, 20 and 22, when king Sagar’s sons went to dig the earth in search of the horse of the sacrifice that had gone missing, they saw only four Diggajs as follows—(i) in the east they saw the Diggaj named ‘Virupaaksha’, (ii) in the south, the Diggaj named ‘Maha-padma’, (iii) in the west, the Diggaj named ‘Saumnas’ (pronounced as Saw+um+nus), and (iv) in the north, the Diggaj named ‘Bhadra’.

These Diggajs are referred to in Tulsidas’ epic Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that preceded Doha no. 254 as well as Chaupai line no. 1 that precede Doha no. 260 in the context of Lord Ram breaking the bow. In the first instance, when Laxman became angry, these Diggajs shifted from the place out of fear, and in the second instance Laxman alerted them to be careful and hold the earth properly so that it does not topple over when Lord Ram prepared to lift and break Lord Shiva’s bow in order to marry Sita.]

जासु चलत डोलति इमि धरनी । चढ़त मत्त गज जिमि लघु तरनी ॥ ७ ॥
सोइ रावन जग बिदित प्रतापी । सुनेहि न श्रवन अलीक प्रलापी ॥ ८ ॥ jāsu calata ḍōlati imi dharanī. caṛhata matta gaja jimi laghu taranī. 7.

sō'i rāvana jaga bidita pratāpī. sunēhi na śravana alīka pralāpī. 8.

I am that Ravana who makes the earth shake whenever he walks on its surface¹ just like a boat that rocks on the water at the time a wild elephant steps into it. (7)

Mind you, I am that world famous Ravana of whom I have told you just now.

Oh you loud-mouthed and vain fellow who talks in an incoherent and delirious way about irrelevant things that have no substance in them (alīka pralāpī)! Say, have you never heard of me and my glories (that you babble about nonsense things)!? (8)

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 182.]

दो०. तेहि रावन कहँ लघु कहसि नर कर करसि बखान ।

रे कपि बर्बर खर्ब खल अब जाना तव ग्यान ॥ २५ ॥

dōhā.

tēhi rāvana kahaṁ laghu kahasi nara kara karasi bakhāna.
rē kapi barbara kharba khala aba jānā tava gyāna. 25.

How durst thou call that Ravana small, inept and inconsequential, and instead choose to praise the glories of a human being?

Oh you uncivilised, lowly, wicked and ignorant monkey (kapi barbara kharba khala)! Now I have realised how much knowledge and intelligence you have!

[To wit, now I understand that you are good for nothing, a complete idiot who does not even know what he is speaking about.]’ (Doha no. 25)

चौ०. सुनि अंगद सकोप कह बानी । बोलु सँभारि अधम अभिमानी ॥ १ ॥

सहसबाहु भुज गहन अपारा । दहन अनल सम जासु कुठारा ॥ २ ॥

जासु परसु सागर खर धारा । बूड़े नृप अगनित बहु बारा ॥ ३ ॥

तासु गर्ब जेहि देखत भागा । सो नर य्यों दससीस अभागा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

sunī aṅgada sakōpa kaha bānī. bōlu saṁbhāri adhama abhimānī. 1.
sahasabāhu bhuja gahana apārā. dahana anala sama jāsū kuṭhārā. 2.
jāsū parasu sāgara khara dhārā. būrē nṛpa aganita bahu bārā. 3.
tāsū garba jēhi dēkhata bhāgā. sō nara kyōm dasasīsa abhāgā. 4.

When Angad heard what Ravana had to say, he became extremely enraged and struck back vehemently at Ravana, ‘Mind your words and what you say, oh you fallen and boastful fellow (adhama abhimānī). (1)

[Now, Angad would cite an incidence where the great sage Parashuram—known for his fiery anger and quick temper, as he used to cut-off the head of anyone with whom he was annoyed, with his famed battle-axe—had come, fretting and fuming, to take revenge upon Lord Ram for breaking the bow of Lord Shiva which culminated in his marriage with Sita, but he had to finally surrender before the Lord as he was unable to vent his wrath upon him, surely because of Lord Ram’s majesty as well as some supernatural powers and divine aura that he possessed which prevailed upon Parashuram to make him submissive and docile, and finally yield before the Lord. This episode is narrated in detail in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 268—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.]

He (a reference to sage Parashuram) whose battle-axe was like a wild fire that could burn the dense forest symbolised by the thousand arms of Sahastrabahu¹, --- (2)

--- And countless great warrior kings had drowned in the rapid current of the ocean symbolised by the sharp edges of whose battle-axe², --- (3)

--- Even his (i.e. sage Parashuram's) pride of being an invincible warrior before whom no one could stand his ground (for the sage's wrath was fiery as the fire, and his battle-axe was like the mighty ocean during a fierce storm that could capsize the largest of ships)—well even his pride was chased away (i.e. it was vanquished; subdued; neutralised) when he saw him (Lord Ram).

[To wit, when sage Parashuram tried his best to raise his battle-axe to strike at Lord Ram and his brother Laxman to punish them, his strength failed him; his arms would not rise with the axe. This surprised the sage, and he wondered what may have caused him to fail to vent his ire. Surely there must be some mysterious reason which he initially failed to comprehend, but which gradually dawned upon his mind. By-and-by he realised who Lord Ram actually was, that he was not a human prince but the Supreme Lord himself in a human form, and with this realisation he immediately surrendered before the Lord and regretted for his angry behaviour.]³

Oh you unfortunate ten-headed Ravana (dasasīsa abhāgā)! Is such a person a human being as you think and claim him to be?

[To wit, don't you have any intelligence in you to understand what is obvious? Are you so stupid? You call me stupid, but I think it is you who is one such. Well, tell me, if Lord Ram is an ordinary human being as you profess him to be, then would he have escaped the wrath of sage Parashuram who was famous for not sparing anyone whom he decided to punish? Parashuram had himself boasted of it when he said that he had eliminated countless kings who offended him by killing them in the battle-field, with his battle-axe. Say, would he have spared Lord Ram, especially when he had come with the express purpose to punish him for breaking Lord Shiva's bow⁵? Since Parashuram failed to harm the Lord—and he had himself wondered that there is surely some mystical reason why he is unable to harm the Lord, why his arms fail him in raising his axe against the Lord—surely then there must be some reason behind it. Are you so big a fool that you are unable to add two and two together to arrive at an obvious conclusion, which is so evident that even a blind man would see it, that Lord Ram is surely and definitely not a human being, but a manifested form of the Supreme Being.] (4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 272.

The story in brief is as follows: There was once a thousand-armed Kshatriya (warrior class) king known as 'Sahastraarjun' or 'Arjun with a thousand hands'. Once he approached the Ocean and asked who was stronger than him. The Ocean told him that sage Jamdagni's son Parashuram was a fit match for him and would welcome him in battle. Such was Sahastraarjun's sense of ego and pride that he could not bear that someone stronger be there on earth in his presence. So he collected his huge army and went to the hermitage of sage Jamdagni.

The sage duly welcomed the king and extended warm hospitality to him. Sahastraarjun was however astonished at the lavish way the forest-dwelling hermit had entertained him. So he wanted to know the reason. Upon finding out that the sage managed to do this miracle because he possessed a divine cow known as 'Kamdhenu' or Kapila cow which could produce anything desired in an instant, the greedy king was filled with jealousy. Driven by avarice and rapacity, he demanded that the sage give this cow to him. Obviously Jamdagni refused. So the king forcefully snatched the cow from him and in the ensuing tussle he killed Jamdagni.

At that time, Jamdagni's brave son Parashuram was not there. When he returned, home he found his mother grieving. Coming to know of the reason, he immediately took the vow that he will eliminate all the Kshatriya kings from the surface of the earth by killing all of them. His mother had beaten her chest twenty-one times as a sign of mourning, so he declared that he will continue to wipe out the Kshatriya kings for an equal number of times, i.e. for twenty-one generations.

He comforted his mother and attacked Sahastraarjun, severed all his thousand arms with his battle-axe and then killed him. {This story is narrated in Srimad Bhagwat's Aashwamedhik Parva.}

Extremely peeved by the Kshatriya race to which this king belonged, Parashuram vowed to eliminate the entire race from the surface of the earth as a revenge for the killing of his father. This was the reason why Parashuram had fought and killed thousands of Kshatriyas to avenge the killing of his father by Sahastraarjun.

A slight variation of this story appears in Mahabharat, Vanparva. According to this version, when the thousand-armed king known as 'Sahastraarjun' had taken away Jamdagni's all wish fulfilling cow known as Kamdhenu, Parashuram rushed to cut all the arms of Sahastraarjun as punishment. Sahastraarjun's kith and kin came back to the hermitage of Jamdagni when Parashuram was not there, and took revenge by killing the sage. Parashuram's mother grieved and wailed. When Parashuram came back and discovered what had happened, he promised his mother that he would take revenge, and vowed to kill all the Kshatriya kings on the surface of the earth to avenge Sahastraarjun's killing of his father. So in this way he had also fulfilled the wishes of his mother.

Sage Parashuram had avenged his father's death by killing the Kshatriya kings because one of the members of this race, king Sahastraarjun, had killed his father sage Jamdagni.

In Mahabharat, Shantiparva, Canto 49, verse nos. 45-47 it is mentioned that it was Sahastraarjun's son who had stolen the Kamdhenu cow, and not Sahastraarjun himself.

It ought to be noted that 'Sahastraarjun' is also known as 'Sahastrabaahu' because he had a thousand arms.

Now, after unnecessarily killing so many innocent Kshatriya kings, who had committed no offence, just to avenge his father's death at the hands of Sahastraarjun, sage Parashuram was severely criticized by the community of Brahmins, which made the sage contrite and full of guilt. So, with a somber and disgusted mood, he went to the forest to do penance. At that time, sage Vishwamitra's grandson named Paraivasu came to him and teased him, saying, 'A fire sacrifice was done recently in which so many countless Kshatriya kings had come. But you did not kill any of them, thereby disobeying the promise you had made to your mother and have also violated your own vows. This is a sin in itself.' Peeved and instigated, Parashuram rose immediately and went berserk, killing and hacking all the kings and their kith and kin at random. Their pregnant wives somehow escaped by hiding here and there. After this, Parashuram performed a Horse Sacrifice known as the 'Ashwamedh Yajya', and gave the entire land (earth) that he had snatched from the kings to sage Kashyap as donation or gift during this sacrifice.

Sage Kashyap was wise, and he was worried that if some way out is not found then one day Parashuram will create such a situation by repeatedly killing kings that there would be no one to take care of the creatures who inhabit the planet, because the main function of the Kshatriya kings was to look after the welfare of the subjects of their kingdoms and protect the earth from marauding savages.

So Kashyap told Parashuram, 'Now that you have given me this earth as a gift, it belongs to me, and henceforth you have no right to kill any of its inhabitants (including of course the kings). You go to the shore of the southern ocean and do Tapa there.’ After this, Parashuram lived on the shore of the southern ocean during the day, and left the earth during the night.

This version of the story is clearly mentioned in Valmiki Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 75, verse nos. 25-26, and Canto 76, verse nos. 13-14.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 272.

³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 280; and Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 284—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 285.]

राम मनुज कस रे सठ बंगा । धन्वी कामु नदी पुनि गंगा ॥ ५ ॥

पसु सुरधेनु कल्पतरु रूखा । अन्न दान अरु रस पीयूषा ॥ ६ ॥ rāma manuja kasa rē saṭha baṅgā. dhanvī kāmu nadī puni gaṅgā. 5.

pasu suradhēnu kalpataru rūkhā. anna dāna aru rasa pīyūṣā. 6.

[Chiding Ravana for calling Lord Ram an ordinary human, Angad uses some obvious analogies in the following four verses to drive home his point—that Lord Ram is not an ordinary man but a divine Being.]

Oh you obstinate and arrogant rascal (saṭha baṅgā)! How come Lord Ram is a human being? Tell me, is Kamdeo (the patron god of passion) an ordinary warrior who holds a bow¹? Is the river Ganges an ordinary river²? [The obvious answer is a firm ‘no’, that they aren’t so.] (5)

Is it not foolish to call any sundry animal as being a ‘Sura-dhenu (the holy cow of the gods)³, or to say that the evergreen tree known as ‘Kalpa-taru’ has dried up⁴?

Similarly, is giving food as alms (to the hungry) equivalent to an ordinary charity⁵, and is the ambrosia of life known as Amrit an ordinary juice (or liquid)⁶? (6)

[Note—¹Kamdeo is the mythological god of love and passion. He holds a mystical bow symbolised by hidden passions in a creature, and he shoots arrows laced with passion, love and lust to subjugate the prey, the target, represented by the beloved whom the lover, the holder of the symbolic bow and the shooter of the arrow, wishes to capture.

Kamdeo’s bow is made of a creeper bearing colourful flowers, and the flowers are the arrows themselves. Kamdeo does not hunt his prey by using hard bow or sharp arrows made of metal. So, it is wrong to equate him with an ordinary hunter or a warrior who would use conventional bow and arrow to shoot down the target.

²River Ganges is regarded as a holy river descending from the heaven; it is the river of the gods. Therefore, it is not an ordinary terrestrial river like the rest of them. Hence, to call Ganges as merely a river will be undermining its holy character, and therefore wrong.

³Sura-dhenu is also known as ‘Kamdhenu, the holy cow of the heaven which fulfils all wishes if worshipped and served with faith. So to compare it with an ordinary cow or any other four-footed animal would be nothing but stupidity.

⁴The Kalpa-taru is the tree of heaven. It is an evergreen tree that grants everything one desires from it. It never dries up. So to say that the Kalpa-taru is dry is height of nonsense.

⁵Food sustains life; it is the basis of life; it has a divine element in it. No other gift is as precious as giving food to the needy. So therefore, to equate ‘food’ with other ordinary forms of gifts or alms such as cloth, material goods etc., is foolish.

⁶Amrit is the ambrosia that grants eternity; it has mystical powers to heal. So it cannot be likened to any other kind of juice or liquid.]

बैनतेय खग अहि सहसानन । चिंतामनि पुनि उपल दसानन ॥ ७ ॥ सुनु मतिमंद लोक बैकुंठा । लाभ कि रघुपति भगति अकुंठा ॥ ८ ॥ bainatēya khaga ahi sahasānana. cintāmani puni upala dasānana. 7.

sunu matimanda lōka baikunṭhā. lābha ki raghupati bhagati akunṭhā. 8.

Is the son of Vintaa (“bainatēya”; i.e. Garud, the legendary bird who is a mount of Lord Vishnu) an ordinary bird¹?

Is the Sheshnath (the legendary celestial serpent who holds the universe on his thousand hoods) an ordinary serpent²?

And oh the ten-headed³ Ravana, is ‘Chintamani’ (a unique gem that eliminates all worries) an ordinary stone⁴? (7)

Oh you dull-witted fellow with an abysmally low intellect (matimanda)! Listen to me: Is Vaikuntha (the eternal heaven; the abode of Lord Vishnu; from where there is no coming back to this mortal world) an ordinary place or habitat⁵?

Is having devotion for Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram) an ordinary reward or benefit that one can expect to have in this world⁶? (8)

[Note—¹It is erroneous to call Garud an ordinary bird. It is derogatory to do so.

²Likewise, it is absolutely inaccurate and unacceptable to liken the Sheshnath with an ordinary serpent.

³Angad has called Ravana as a ‘ten-headed’ one to mean that a person with one head would not say such foolish things, but you have ten instead of just one head, which means you ought to be ten times more intelligent and wise than others, yet you are so dumb as to think and talk of such nonsense.

⁴The Chintamani is a rare gemstone which removes all sorts of wants and worries in a person who possesses it. So it is surely not an ordinary gemstone.

⁵Vaikuntha is the heaven where the soul finds eternity. It is a place where there is beatitude and bliss. It is the heavenly abode of Lord Vishnu, the cosmic form of the Brahm, the Supreme Being. Hence it cannot be compared to any other habitat, whether in this mortal world or even to other lower levels of heaven.

⁶No, it isn't. Having 'Bhakti' or devotion for the Supreme Being, manifested as Lord Ram, is a very special spiritual blessing that only a few fortunate persons are able to avail.]

दो०. सेन सहित तव मान मथि बन उज्जारि पुर जारि।

कस रे सठ हनुमान कपि गयउ जो तव सुत मारि ॥ २६ ॥

dōhā.

sēna sahita tava māna mathi bana ujāri pura jāri.

kasa rē saṭha hanumāna kapi gaya'u jō tava suta māri. 26.

Oh you stupid and wicked fellow (saṭha)! Is Hanuman an ordinary monkey who had trashed and crushed your (false sense of) pride and ego along with the (imagined) might of your (so-called invincible) army, besides ruining your favourite garden (called the Ashok Van), burning your city (of Lanka), and killing your son (Akshaya Kumar)¹? (Doha no. 26)

[Note—¹To wit, you claim that you had vanquished the Diggals and the Diggajs very easily, and they are terrified of you (Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 25), and the earth trembles like a rocking boat on a rough sea when you move about in anger (Chaupai line nos. 4-6 that precede Doha no. 25), well tell me then, where was all your valour and strength and courage and the might of your arms, of which you boast so much, and of which you are so proud, at that time when Hanuman had caused so extensive damage to Lanka, trounced your army, crushed your pride and self-esteem, destroyed your garden, and worse, killed even your son?

Well, why couldn't you stop him; why couldn't you punish him; why did you let him go unharmed from Lanka; where were your famed valour and strength and courage and might of arms at that time? Was it ever possible that Hanuman would have mustered courage to do what he did, and be successful in doing it all alone, inspite of the overbearing presence of your mighty self as well as your mighty army that surrounded him from all sides, if he was an ordinary 'monkey' as you think him to be? How dumb-witted and block-headed are you as to not see what is obvious and staring you in the face?]

चौ०. सुनु रावन परिहरि चतुराई । भजसि न कृपासिंधु रघुराई ॥ १ ॥

जौं खल भएसि राम कर द्रोही । ब्रह्म रुद्र सक राखि न तोही ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

sunu rāvana parihari caturāī. bhajasi na kṛpāsindhu raghurāī. 1.

jauṁ khala bha'ēsi rāma kara drōhī. brahma rudra saka rākhi na tōhī. 2.

[Angad continued—] Listen Ravana, to my (good and friendly) advice. Say, why don't you worship and adore Lord Ram ("raghurāṭī"; the Lord of the Raghu's line of kings of Ayodhya), who is like an ocean of mercy, compassion and kindness (krpāsindhu), after abandoning your stubborn nature, your obstinate hypocrisy, and your pretensions of being very clever and wise (parihari caturāṭī)¹? (1)

Oh you rascal (khala)! [I warn you that—] If you remain opposed and hostile to Lord Ram, then no one would be able to protect and save you, not even the creator Brahma nor Lord Rudra (Lord Shiva's that angry form which brings an end to creation)². (2)

[Note—¹A similar idea is expressed in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 200.

²Refer also to Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 23, where a similar warning has been given to Ravana by Hanuman.]

मूढ़ बृथा जनि मारसि गाला । राम बयर अस होइहि हाला ॥ ३ ॥
तव सिर निकर कपिन्ह के आगें । परिहहिं धरनि राम सर लागें ॥ ४ ॥ ते तव सिर कंदुक सम नाना । खेलिहहिं भालु कीस चौगाना ॥ ५ ॥ mūṛha bṛthā jani māraṣi gālā. rāma bayara asa hō'ihī hālā. 3.

tava sira nikara kapinha kē āgēm. parihahim dharani rāma sara lāgēm. 4.
tē tava sira kanduka sama nānā. khēlihahim bhālu kīsa caugānā. 5.

Oh you utter fool (mūṛha)! Don't brag and unnecessarily talk boastfully in a vain manner. If you are hostile to Lord Ram (and are determined to be so) then your fate will be that --- (3)

--- Your heads would be cut off by Lord Ram's arrows, and they will fall to the ground in front of the monkeys (and bears, that constitute the Lord's army) --- (4)

--- And the bears and the monkeys (bhālu kīsa) will use your fallen heads as balls to play a game of football. [To wit, the bears and monkeys would kick your severed heads all around the battle-field like two teams play a game of football in a sports stadium.] (5)

जबहिं समर कोपिहि रघुनायक । छुटिहहिं अति कराल बहु सायक ॥ ६ ॥
तब कि चलिहि अस गाल तुम्हारा । अस बिचारि भजु राम उदारा ॥ ७ ॥ सुनत बचन रावन परजरा । जरत महानल जनु घृत परा ॥ ८ ॥ jabahim samara kōpihi raghunāyaka. chuṭihahim ati karāla bahu sāyaka. 6.

taba ki calihi asa gālā tumhārā. asa bicāri bhaju rāma udārā. 7.
sunata bacana rāvana parajārā. jarata mahānala janu ghṛta parā. 8.

When Lord Ram (raghunāyaka) becomes angry in the battle-field and shoots volleys of many sharp arrows (at you) --- (6)

--- Tell me, will your boast and bluster work then; will you be able to save yourself by vain bravery and false valour?

Think of it. Consider this matter seriously before it is too late. Be wise and prudent to realise that it will be in your own interest to pay homage to Lord Ram, who is gracious, charitable, magnanimous and benevolent by his very nature (rāma udārā)¹. (7)

When Ravana heard these words (of Angad), he flared up vehemently in anger, as if oil was poured in an already lighted fire. (8)

[Note—¹Angad basically advises Ravana to abandon his animosity and hostility with Lord Ram, to make amends and make friendship with him. Ravana ought not to have any doubts if Lord Ram would forgive him for the evil things he had done in the past, because the Lord is large-hearted and very kind and gracious; he is benevolent and magnanimous. So he will welcome Ravana without reservations, and the Lord will not do any thing that would embarrass Ravana in the least.

But if Ravana continues with his foolishness and stubbornness to go ahead to fight Lord Ram, then he is surely and definitely doomed.

There are other places in the Text of 'Ram Charit Manas' where these glorious virtues of Lord Ram are highlighted—e.g. in Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 57, Ravana's spy named Suka also tells him exactly the same thing.]

दो०. कुंभकरन अस बंधु मम सुत प्रसिद्ध सक्रारि ।

मोर पराक्रम नहिं सुनेहि जितेउँ चराचर झारि ॥ २७ ॥

dōhā.

kumbhakarana asa bandhu mama suta prasid'dha sakrāri.
mōra parākrama nahiṁ sunēhi jitē'um carācara jhāri. 27.

[Ravana shouted back at Angad. He angrily said—] 'I have a famous brother by the name of Kumbhakaran (literally one whose ears are large like a big pitcher or jar)¹, and an equally famous son (named Meghanad) who had vanquished Indra (the king of gods)².

Have you not heard of my valour and achievements that I have conquered all the gods as well as every other creature in this creation³? (Doha no. 27)

[Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-6 that precede Doha no. 180.

²Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 182.

The story of Meghanad (so called because his voice was as loud and resounding as the clap of thunder) vanquishing Indra is narrated in (a) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 78-81; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka

Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 50-54. Since Meghanad had conquered Indra, he is also called 'Indrajeet', one who has won Indra.

This story in brief is this: Once, after conquering Varun (God of water) and Yama (God of hell), Ravana attacked Indra (the king of Gods). Indra captured Ravana and took him as a prisoner. When Meghanad heard of his father's imprisonment by Indra, he attacked heaven and not only freed his father Ravana but took Indra as a prisoner and brought him to Lanka. The creator Brahma then went to Lanka and prevailed upon Meghanad to free Indra by granting him (Meghanad) many boons to make a deal for freedom of Indra.

³Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 182 along with Chaupai line nos. 4-13 and Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precede it.]

चौ०. सठ साखामृग जोरि सहाई । बाँधा सिंधु इहइ प्रभुताई ॥ १ ॥

नाघहिं खग अनेक बारीसा । सूर न होहिं ते सुनु सब कीसा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

saṭha sākhāmṛga jōri sahā'ī. bāṁdhā sindhu iha'i prabhutā'ī. 1.
nāghahim khaga anēka bārīsā. sūra na hōhim tē sunu saba kīsā. 2.

Ravana scornfully tried to prove Angad's glorification of Lord Ram as completely contrary to facts by saying, tauntingly, 'You blockhead (saṭha)! Is collecting a motley crowd of 'monkeys' (here the term is used in a derogatory sense) and getting a ramshackle bridge built over the surface of the ocean (to cross it) called valour, bravery, and a gallantry deed¹? (1)

Why, so many ordinary birds can easily cross the same ocean by simply flying over it, and none of these humble creatures do a great deed of bravery or gallantry by doing so. So therefore, what is the great deal in it (i.e. in Lord Ram crossing the ocean on a rickety bridge put in place by monkeys throwing boulders and rocks in the water, blocking its flow)²? (2)

[Note—¹Ravana continued to use derogatory remarks for Lord Ram and undermine his greatness by arguing that certain events that recently happened certainly go to prove that the Lord was just an ordinary human being like the rest of them, and not the divine Being as he is portrayed to be by his loyal and sycophantic messengers, now Angad and previously Hanuman.

All of Angad's assertions about Lord Ram's glory, majesty and greatness are hollow, and nothing but a biased effort at exaggeration and bending of facts to suit one's view of the world, and to gloss over the dark reality by painting things with a colourful brush that lacks even the colour that is imagined to be painted.

The term "monkey" is obviously used in a derogatory sense here, to mean jokers and foolish creatures who make a lot of vain noises, and who would jump and hop to please their masters.

²To wit, Ravana asked Angad: "Tell me, what great achievement has been accomplished in getting across the ocean with the help of a bridge put in place by "monkeys"? There are so many birds who cross the ocean almost daily, and it is natural to them to do so. So will anyone call a bird brave for doing some gallantry deed for merely flying across the surface of the ocean, which is a matter of habit for them?

If your Lord, whom you praise so much in lavish terms and are in some much awe of, actually had some divine and mystical powers, as you claim him to possess, then why couldn't he just stand on the shore of the ocean, raise his two hands in the direction of Lanka, and order the ocean to part in the middle to form a pathway in this direction, by which he and his army could simply walk across? Or else, why couldn't he use his so-called fiery and invincible arrows to just dry up the ocean or kill its deity, forcing the ocean to surrender, instead of pleading for a way across it, as he had actually done?

Tell me, why could he not simply tell everyone to close their eyes for a while, wave his arms in a circle like a magician swings his wand to invoke some magical charm, and create the bridge by magic, using his mystical powers, so that when everyone opened their eyes they would see the bridge already built!?

Well, well; don't try to gloss over facts and turn them on their heads just to support things of your imagination, things that are conjured up by your hallucinating mind, things which are just that—colourful imaginations of a delirious mind—and nothing else.

To wit, you fellows have been so conditioned to believe that your master, Lord Ram, is a divine Being, some supernatural Power; so you go around the world parroting the things you have been taught to believe, that you have become habituated to believe, without using your own brains to see whether what you are saying makes any sense or not. That is why I call your crowd a collection of 'monkeys', a jostling crowd of cheap jesters and silly pranksters!"]

मम भुज सागर बल जल पूरा । जहँ बूड़े बहु सुर नर सूर ।। ३ ।।

बीस पयोधि अगाध अपारा । को अस बीर जो पाइहि पारा ।। ४ ।।

दिगपालन्ह मैं नीर भरावा । भूप सुजस खल मोहि सुनावा ।। ५ ।। mama bhuja sāgara bala jala pūrā. jahaṁ būrē bahu sura nara sūrā. 3.

bīsa payōdhi agādha apārā. kō asa bira jō pā'ihī pārā. 4.

digapālānha mairṁ nīra bharāvā. bhūpa sujasa khala mōhi sunāvā. 5.

Mind you; my strong arms are also like the mighty ocean, and they are filled with an immense reservoir of water symbolising the immensity and the greatness of my gallantry, strength, valour and powers. Countless gods and humans, who were brave, powerful, valiant and gallant in their own right, had been drowned in this ocean¹.

[To wit, I have vanquished, subdued and crushed all the powerful forces of this creation by the might of my arms. No one worth his name, who would like to call himself a brave, courageous and valiant warrior, has escaped me and whom I have not conquered.] (3)

I have twenty such arms, and you can imagine the combined strength and power that they together possess. Well, where in this world is that brave warrior, who may boast of his valour and gallantry, that he would be able to measure up to the combined strength and majesty of my all the twenty arms, who could stand his ground before me and my might? [Surely there is none.]² (4)

I have got this ‘ocean’ (symbolised by my arms) filled with water by forcing the mighty Dikpals (the many gods who are the custodians of the world) into submission³.

And here you are, a wretched fellow, making me listen to false glories of a human king (i.e. of Lord Ram)⁴! (5)

[Note—¹Here, Ravana compares his arms to the ocean, and their immense strength to the immeasurable volume of water that is present in the physical ocean.

²The meaning of the analogy of the ‘ocean’ that Ravana uses is evident. He means that if Lord Ram could not overcome the obstacle created by an ordinary ocean, if he could not cross an ordinary reservoir of water known as the ocean that so many birds cross almost on a daily basis, how could the Lord imagine that he would be able to overcome (cross) another mighty ‘ocean’, symbolised by the combined might of Ravana’s powerful arms, that is twenty times more formidable and difficult to overcome (to get across) than the ordinary water-filled reservoir that the world prefers to call an ocean? To wit, it’s impossible; it’s nothing but wild imagination.

³“I have continuously vanquished one god after another, adding one feather after another to my glory, adding up to my tally of victories and gallantry deeds. The more conquests I make, the more power I add to my arms, because more number of gods are under my orders, and they would be forced to fight with me as my allies in any conflict. This means each victory over gods adds to my strength and power as a king and ruler of the world.”

⁴“Here I am who had forced the mighty gods into submission, and you are compelling me to listen to your vain lecture lauding the imaginary glories of an ordinary human king whom you believe to be the supreme Lord. Woe to you and to your intelligence. I indeed pity you and your sick wisdom.”]

जौं पै समर सुभट तव नाथा । पुनि पुनि कहसि जासु गुन गाथा ॥ ६ ॥

तौ बसीठ पठवत केहि काजा । रिपु सन प्रीति करत नहिं लाजा ॥ ७ ॥

हरगिरि मथन निरखु मम बाहू । पुनि सठ कपि निज प्रभुहि सराहू ॥ ८ ॥ jauṁ pai samara subhaṭa tava nāthā. puni puni kahasi jāsu guna gāthā. 6.

tau basīṭha paṭhavata kēhi kājā. ripu sana prīti karata nahim lājā. 7.
haragiri mathana nirakhu mama bāhū. puni saṭha kapi nija prabhuhi sarāhū.
8.

If your Lord, whom you repeatedly praise so much in glowing terms, is really as brave, strong, powerful and courageous as you claim him to be (or make him out to be), why then, tell me, is he sending a messenger. Ain’t he ashamed of himself and his valour for trying to make peace with an arch enemy?¹ (6-7)

Oh you stupid monkey (saṭha kapi)! First look here at my robust and powerful arms that had moved even the mighty heavenly abode of Lord Shiva, known as ‘Mt. Kailash’, and then praise your (weak and imbecile) Lord (Sri Ram)². (8)

[Note—¹“Is your so-called brave, powerful and bold Lord not ashamed to send an emissary to try to make peace with someone who has abducted his wife, and who refuses to give her back? Is this not enough an evidence of his cowardice and false pretensions of valour? How great a fool you are not to understand this?

Why is your Lord, of whom you say that he is very brave and powerful, sending a peace emissary to his arch enemy; isn't he ashamed to strike a deal with someone who has stolen his wife? Why does he not straightforward come and fight with me and take away his wife by trouncing me in an honourable fight, instead of attempting a shameful truce? Surely it indicates he is afraid of facing me in the battle-field, and so is trying to find a face-saving formula.”

Angad answers this sarcastic remark later on in Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 30 which we shall be reading soon.

²“Indeed, if you look at my robust arms and understand how strong and powerful they are, had you known that I had easily lifted Mt. Kailash where Lord Shiva lives, which obviously is not a joke, surely you would not have boasted about the glory of your own Lord (Sri Ram). So, either you don't know who I actually am or about my achievements, or you are a completely good-for-nothing blockhead.”]

दो०. सूर कवन रावन सरिस स्वकर काटि जेहिं सीस । हुने अनल अति हरष बहु बार साखि गौरीस ॥ २८ ॥

dōhā.

sūra kavana rāvana sarisa svakara kāṭi jēhiṁ sīsa.
hunē anala ati haraṣa bahu bāra sākhi gaurīsa. 28.

Where is another brave and courageous person in this world who can compare himself with Ravana because he had voluntarily, and cheerfully, offered his own heads as a sacrifice in the sacred fire¹? Lord Shiva, the husband of Gauri (goddess Parvati; “gaurīsa”), is a witness of this remarkable heroic deed of his. (Doha no. 28)

[Note—¹This incident is narrated in Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 49-50.]

चौ०. जरत बिलोकेउँ जबहिं कपाला । बिधि के लिखे अंक निज भाला ॥ १ ॥
नर केँ कर आपन बध बाँची । हसेउँ जानि बिधि गिरा असाँची ॥ २ ॥
सोउ मन समुझि त्रास नहिं मोरें । लिखा बिरंचि जरठ मति भोरें ॥ ३ ॥
आन बीर बल सठ मम आगें । पुनि पुनि कहसि लाज पति त्यागें ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

jarata bilōkē'uṁ jabahiṁ kapālā. bidhi kē likhē aṅka nija bhālā. 1.
nara kēṁ kara āpana badha bāñcī. hasē'uṁ jāni bidhi girā asāñcī. 2.
sō'u mana samujhi trāsa nahiṁ mōrēm. likhā birañci jaraṭha mati bhōrēm. 3.

āna bīra bala saṭha mama āgēṁ. puni puni kahasi lāja pati tyāgēṁ. 4.

[Ravana continued—] ‘At the time when my severed heads (that I had voluntarily offered to the fire sacrifice to please the creator Brahma) were being roasted in the sacrificial fire, I saw that Brahma (the creator of the world, and the god who determines the destiny of all living beings) had subtly written on my forehead¹ that I shall die at the hands of a human being. When I read it, I laughed to myself as it would make a liar of Brahma himself, because it would prove that Brahma’s words were false and inconsequential². (1-2)

Even though I had read it yet I wasn’t alarmed, for I was sure that Brahma had written this by mistake because he is old³, and one who is advanced in age usually commits errors⁴. (3)

Oh you stupid and blockhead of a fellow (saṭha)! How durst you repeatedly sing praises of another warrior before me by abandoning all traces of shame and remnants of self-respect that you might have⁵?’ (4)

[Note—¹It is believed that the destiny of all creatures is written by the creator Brahma on an individual’s forehead at the time of birth. This ‘writing’ is like an edict etched or engraved on stone, and it cannot be either changed or erased.

²Here Ravana is twisting facts to suit him. Actually it was Ravana himself who had asked the creator Brahma to exempt the humans from the list of those from whom he wished to have protection—such as from the gods, spirits, other creatures in the world, including the demons etc.

This episode is narrated in: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 177; (b) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand, Canto 13, verse nos. 49-52; (c) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 10-15; and (d) Valmiki’s Ramayana, Lanka Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 10-26½.

The story in brief is this: When Brahma was pleased by Ravana’s sacrifice, in which he had offered his own heads as offerings to the sacred fire, and appeared before him to ask him to seek boons of his choice, he (Ravana) had demanded invincibility and immunity from death at the hands of almost all living beings of virtually all denominations who he thought could overcome and kill him. Brahma thought to himself that this is impossible, because everyone who has taken birth in this mortal world must die; even the gods of heaven, including Brahma himself, has a fixed time of lifespan. No one except the Supreme Being known as ‘Brahm’, who is a personified form of cosmic Consciousness, is eternal, imperishable and infinite.

Brahma thought over the matter quickly, and he quietly summoned Saraswati, the goddess of wisdom and speech, and as quietly instructed her to exercise her mystical powers immediately for the sake of the good of this creation by casting her spell of delusions over Ravan’s mind and intellect. So, Ravana’s wisdom got warped, and he invited his own doom by thinking that if all the great powers in this world, such as the gods, both senior and junior, and the demi-gods such as Yakshas (spirits), Naagas (the lords of the subterranean world) etc, as well as the demons who had similar strength and powers as these entities, in short all the worthwhile powers-that-be in this creation could harm him any longer, how does the human race, whose members are by nature physically weak and scared of facing even ordinary wild animals in the forest, matter?

So, in his overconfidence and arrogance, that after Brahma's boons—and once he had conquered the gods after being protected by these boons—there would be no one left in this creation who would dare face him, he exempted the humans from the list of those from whom he wished to acquire immunity from death, or from whom he had any kind of fear. He regarded the humans as inconsequential and irrelevant like a small piece of twig or blade of grass that could be easily trampled upon, crushed and squashed under his mighty foot which would squeeze the valour and strength and power out of everyone of any worth in this creation, such as the gods and the demons.

Put simply, Ravana thought that if he conquered the powerful gods of heaven, there would be no fear from the human race because these humans themselves seek the blessing and protection of gods in whatever they do. So if their benefactors and patrons and protectors are conquered, the naturally docile and inherently coward human race will feel helpless and unprotected, and would therefore its members, the humans, would durst never oppose Ravana or pose any kind of threat to him, nor create any problem for him.

This exemption of the humans from the list of those from whom Ravana sought protection and immunity from any harm was like him putting the nail to his own coffin, for this little chink in his armour, which he himself made, laid the foundation of his ultimate death. Later on Lord Vishnu would assume the human form of Lord Ram and exploit this loophole in Ravana's defences to get rid of him in the Epic War of Lanka.

This episode of Lord Vishnu assuring the gods and mother earth that he would come down to earth as a human being, in the form of Lord Ram, to eliminate the scourge of Ravana, is narrated in Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precede Doha no. 188.

³Ravana acknowledges that alarm bells are ringing inside his heart; that he fears that the exemption to the human beings that he granted at the time when Brahma was giving him boons has now come to haunt him as a ghost, a spectre of the Death God.

But he tries to hide his fear by deceiving himself, making himself believe that perhaps Brahma had made some errors in putting it in 'writing'—that he will die at the hands of a human being—while fixing his fate and penning the document of his destiny. It was an error on the part of Brahma to do so, because Ravana had merely 'exempted' the human being from the list of those from whom he demanded protection, but that does not mean he said 'let me be killed by a man'. Of course not, for it was not, and would never be, his intention to die at the hands of a humble creature like a man when he wanted immunity from death from all the mighty powers-that-be in this world. It would be ridiculous to expect, and a height of nonsense to believe, that Ravana would invite his own death by asking Brahma in specific terms that 'a man could kill me' when he had sought a blanket immunity from death from all the mighty and powerful entities of creation, such as the gods, the demons, the spirits, and the rest of the creatures, small and big.

⁴Brahma is depicted as an aged patriarch of creation, a great-grandfatherly figure. So Ravana says that probably Brahma had made a mistake in 'writing' something down as being asked by Ravana himself, when the fact was that he had merely said that he 'exempted' the humans from the list of those from whom he seeks protection. That does not mean that he sought 'death from humans'.

⁵Ravana tries to shame Angad and put him on the defensive by emphasising that the latter does not know the might of the former that he chooses to sing laurels of a human being, here meaning Lord Ram.

As we have observed earlier in this discussion, Brahma had instructed goddess Saraswati to cast her magic spell that created delusions in Ravana's mind and intellect. Hence, he continued to remain in a world of illusions, a world of his own imagination, thinking that Lord Ram is a human being inspite of being warned to the contrary on various occasions.]

कह अंगद सलज्ज जग माहीं । रावन तोहि समान कोउ नाहीं ॥ ५ ॥
 लाजवंत तव सहज सुभाऊ । निज मुख निज गुन कहसि न काऊ ॥ ६ ॥
 सिर अरु सैल कथा चित रही । ताते बार बीस तैं कही ॥ ७ ॥ सो भुजबल राखेहु उर घाली । जीतेहु सहसबाहु बलि बाली ॥ ८ ॥ kaha aṅgada salajja jaga māhīm. rāvana tōhi samāna kō'u nāhīm. 5.

 lājavanta tava sahaja subhā'ū. nija mukha nija guna kahasi na kā'ū. 6.
 sira aru saila kathā cita rahī. tātē bāra bīsa taim kahī. 7.
 sō bhujabala rākhēhu ura ghālī. jītēhu sahasabāhu bali bālī. 8.

Quoth Angad (as a sharp rejoinder as a step to the final showdown, employing the same sarcastic and contemptuous tone as used by Ravana) to lambaste Ravana, 'Oh Ravana; surely there is no one in this world who has more shame and greater self-respect than you have! (5)

Indeed, to be modest and humble is your inherent nature, and truly you never boast of your achievements with your own mouth! (6)

Surely then, it is perhaps for this reason (that you are modest and never boast of your achievements) that you have repeatedly spoken, twenty times¹, of the tale concerning your heads (that you had cut repeatedly) and the mountain (i.e. Mt. Kailash that you had lifted)² which you had remembered.

[To wit, since these were the only two achievements you had, and none else whatever which you could cite or recall, you have repeatedly spoken about them umpteen number of times. Surely this is being modest; surely also you have a lot of self-respect that you wish to keep reminding yourself, and remind others as well, about these fantastic successes that no one else in this creation had achieved.] (7)

And why have you concealed in your bosom about the failure of the same strength of your arms that had failed you when you had faced and were humiliated by Sahastrabaahu (the one with a thousand arms)³, Bali (the king of the subterranean world)⁴ and Baali (Angad's father)⁵?

[To wit, why couldn't you employ your mighty arms by which you had lifted Mt. Kailash, or the valour and the courage with which you had cut-off your heads, at the time when you were subjected to abject humiliation at the hands of the three great warriors mentioned here? You prefer to speak repeatedly about lifting Mt. Kailash and offering of heads to the fire sacrifice, then why not even once of how you fared in your face-off with these three great warriors I have named above?] (8)

[Note—¹“Speaking twenty times about anything” is a figure of speech to mean that a person repeatedly tells the same old thing over and over again, making a mockery of himself and giving the impression of a vain man who talks ridiculous things. It looks like a big joke upon himself.

This is to answer Ravana’s taunt that Angad is repeatedly praising Lord Ram before him—apropos: verse no. 4 herein above.

²Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (a) Chaupai line nos. 1-3 that precede Doha no. 25; and (b) Doha no. 28 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.

³Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 15-16 that precede Doha no. 24.

⁴Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 13-14 that precede Doha no. 24.

⁵Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 24.]

सुनु मतिमंद देहि अब पूरा । काटें सीस कि होइअ सूर ॥ ९ ॥ इंद्रजालि कहूँ कहिअ न बीरा । काटइ निज कर सकल सरीरा ॥ १० ॥

sunu matimanda dēhi aba pūrā. kātēm sīsa ki hō'i'a sūrā. 9.
indrajāli kahuṁ kahi'a na bīrā. kāṭa'i nija kara sakala sarīrā. 10.

Listen oh you blockhead and one with an abysmally low intellect (matimanda)! Answer me: Does anyone become a great warrior, and acquire fame and honour, by getting his head cut off?

[To wit, it is something to be highly ashamed of and extremely derogatory for a gallant and courageous warrior to speak of his own head being cut off. It is the most dishonourable and ignoble of things to ever happen to any man of dignity and respect. But the irony is that you, Ravana, boast of it; you speak as if it is something very great to have happened to you, instead of being ashamed of it.] (9)

Look, a magician performing tricks too cuts off his head with his own hands as part of his act, but does anyone call him a great warrior¹? (9)

[Note—¹Angad has used this logic of a magician cutting off the head of an actor, say his assistant, on stage while performing his usual tricks to entertain the audience, to prove that Ravana’s boast of cutting his heads is no great deal. Everyone knows that the head cutting by the magician is illusionary, but during the course of the act it appears to be real-life.

Similarly, Ravana seems to living in a fool’s paradise if he feels that the world is very impressed by this act of cutting off his own head. Probably he had cut them in an act of illusion to cheat Brahma to grant him boons. Yes, it is possible that he may have done so because demons are known to have magical powers by which they could do things others couldn’t.]

दो०. जरहिं पतंग मोह बस भार बहहिं खर बृंद । ते नहिं सूर कहावहिं समुझि देखु मतिमंद ॥ २९ ॥

dōhā.

jarahim̐ patar̐ga mōha basa bhāra bahahim̐ khara br̐nda.
tē nahim̐ sūra kahāvahim̐ samujhi dēkhu matimanda. 29.

Oh you coxcomb, blockheaded fellow (matimanda), think for yourself. So many moths get attracted towards a flame (of a candle or lamp), because of their love for its brilliant light, and get burnt as a consequence; and donkeys carry burden on their backs (thinking that their master loves them and has preferred them over others to serve him, and it's a sort of tribute to their strength and stamina)¹.

Ponder over the matter and tell me: are they (the moths and the donkeys) doing some valiant deed, are they heroes to be acclaimed and sung for their marvellous achievement?¹ (Doha no. 29)

[Note—¹To wit, would anyone not like to call the moths fools to get themselves thus burnt, and the donkeys laughable for breaking their backs and wearing themselves out for nothing that would actually benefit them? Neither of them, the moth or the donkey, are doing something great that would invite honour and applause. Rather, both of them, the moth and the donkey, are making a fool out of themselves, the moth by going to the flame and dancing around it to die by getting roasted alive, and the donkey by trudging along the path, tiring out its legs and breaking its back, bearing heavy load on its back. Say, if the moth chirps and the donkey brays proudly that they have been valiant, and had done a gallant and glorious deed, wouldn't one laugh at their stupidity and call them utterly dumb?

Similarly, no case is made out in Ravana's favour, quoth Angad, to showcase his valour and glory that deserve any kind of applause and honour by the two proofs he has given, one of cutting his heads, and the second of lifting Mt. Kailash. It is just like moths voluntarily jumping in the fire to burn themselves because the creator had destined their death in this ignominious manner, and the donkeys lifting burdens because they are meant to do so by the creator who made them beasts of burden.

Angad uses this analogy of the moth and the donkey to deflate Ravana's inflated ego and ridicule him for his false self-praise.]

चौ०. अब जनि बतबढ़ाव खल करही । सुनु मम बचन मान परिहरही ॥ १ ॥
दसमुख मैं न बसीठीं आयउँ । अस बिचारि रघुबीर पठायउँ ॥ २ ॥
बार बार अस कहइ कृपाला । नहिं गजारि जसु बधें सूकाला ॥ ३ ॥
मन महुँ समुझि बचन प्रभु केरे । सहेउँ कठोर बचन सठ तेरे ॥ ४ ॥
नाहिं त करि मुख भंजन तोरा । लै जातेउँ सीतहि बरजोरा ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

aba jani batar̐bhāva khala karahī. sunu mama bacana māna pariharahī. 1.
dasamukha mair̐m na basīṭhīm̐ āya'uṁ. asa bicāri raghubīra paṭhāya'uṁ. 2.
bāra bāra asa kaha'i kṛpālā. nahim̐ gajāri jasu badhēm̐ sṛkālā. 3.
mana mahum̐ samujhi bacana prabhu kērē. sahē'uṁ kaṭhōra bacana saṭha tērē. 4.

nāhim ta kari mukha bhañjana tōrā. lai jātē'um sītahi barajōrā. 5.

[After countering Ravana's boastful assertions of his gallantry and glory, Angad told him bluntly why he had come to his court.]

Angad said, 'Oh you wicked fellow (khala)! Don't prolong the vain arguments any further; stop futile wrangling, and listen to me. Abandon your haughtiness and arrogance. [Stop useless loud talking and wasting your time and energy; cool down and be practical.] (1)

Oh ten-mouthed Ravana (dasamukha)!¹ Mind you, I have not come as a humble messenger to pitifully plead with you. [Don't think that I have come to request you for some concession because we are scared of you, or we are in awe of your might, that we don't want to fight with you. Perish the thought if, per chance, you have it. Don't be deluded into thinking that we are cowards, and when we discovered how mighty and powerful you are after landing in Lanka, by the sight of your mighty army, we are trying to wriggle out of a sticky situation in which we have landed by putting up a brave face, but internally are sore afraid of you. So we are making feverish attempts to settle the dispute and avoid the war, and it is for this reason our Lord Ram has sent me². No, no, not at all. The reason for my coming here is quite different. It is this—]

I have been sent by the brave Lord of Raghus ("raghubīra"; i.e. Lord Ram) because he thought [2]; why yes indeed, the gracious and compassionate Lord (krpālā) has repeatedly said that "A lion does not get any glory by killing a jackal"³! [3]. (2-3)

Keeping in mind the words of my Lord (Ram), I am constrained, you wicked fellow (saṭha), to tolerate your sharp, nasty and impertinent words (sahē'um kaṭhōra bacana). (4)

Had it not been for that reason⁴, I would have smashed your face (and all your ten mouths with it), and then I would have forcibly taken Sita back with me (to restore her to Lord Ram). (5)

[Note—¹The use of the word "dasamukha", meaning ten mouths, is significant. It means Ravana was speaking very loudly and rambling on in a confusing manner, speaking with all his ten mouths at the same time, making it difficult to comprehend as to what he was saying. Angad ridiculed him for speaking thus, for it made a joker out of him.

Speaking with ten mouths simultaneously also means Ravana was ten times more boastful and haughty as compared to anyone else.

²Angad refers to the earlier taunt of Ravana when the latter asked him: "Why is your Lord, of whom you say that he is very brave and powerful, sending a peace emissary to his arch enemy; isn't he ashamed to strike a deal with someone who has stolen his wife? Why does he not straightforward come and fight with me and take away his wife by trouncing me in an honourable fight, instead of attempting a shameful truce? Surely it indicates he is afraid of facing me in the battle-field, and so is trying to find a face-saving formula." {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Doha no. 28.}

³Here, Ravana is likened to a ‘jackal’, and Lord Ram to the ‘lion’. Angad means that Lord Ram wishes to avoid slaying Ravana because it would be a shameful thing for him to do so. So Angad was sent to find out a way if this killing of Ravana could be avoided in an honourable way, because the Lord thought that Ravana’s killing would be too mean a deed for him to do, for Ravana had no stature and standing, by any measure, when compared to Lord Ram. It is an established principle that one gets glory and acclaim only when one defeats his enemy who is of the same strength, has the same stature as a nobleman and warrior, and occupies the same social status and moral standing as himself. To fight and defeat someone lowly in any measure of way will bring nothing except infamy and ridicule upon the conqueror or the victor; his victory would be worse than his defeat at the hands of a contender of equal stature.

⁴Angad poured boiling oil on injured Ravana’s self-respect when he mocked at him, saying sarcastically: “Oh you haughty rascal! Had it not been improper for a great warrior to kill a lowly fellow as you are, just like it is improper for a lion to kill a jackal as my Lord Ram had said, or if it would not have violated my dear Lord Ram’s injunction against doing it, I would have crushed you and viciously smacked your faces, and then I would have taken Sita back to Lord Ram even while you would have been wiggling in pain and making feeble sounds of agony while licking your wounds like a wounded jackal.”]

जानेऊँ तव बल अधम सुरारी । सूनें हरि आनिहि परनारी ॥ ६ ॥
 तैं निसिचर पति गर्ब बहूता । मैं रघुपति सेवक कर दूता ॥ ७ ॥
 जौं न राम अपमानहि डरऊँ । तोहि देखत अस कौतुक करऊँ ॥ ८ ॥ jānē'um̐ tava bala adhama surārī. sūnēm hari ānihi paranārī. 6.

 taim̐ nisicara pati garba bahūtā. maim̐ raghupati sēvaka kara dūtā. 7.
 jaur̐ na rāma apamānahi ḍara'ūṁ. tōhi dēkhata asa kautuka kara'ūṁ. 8.

[Berating Ravana and ridiculing him further, Angad continued—]

Oh you sinful and fallen enemy of the gods (adhama surārī)! Verily, I have come to realise how strong, courageous, powerful and valiant you are indeed: for you had stolen another person’s wife when you found her alone¹! (6)

[There is no comparison between you and me. Do you know why? Well, I shall tell you—] Oh the king of demons (nisicara)! You are very haughty, egoist and arrogant. I, on the other hand, am a (humble) messenger of him (Sugriv) who himself is a humble servant of Lord Raghupati (Lord Ram²). (7)

If I had not been afraid of doing anything that would amount to causing an insult to Lord Ram for violating his injunctions, for it is outrageous for me to even think of anything of the sort, then mind you, I would have done something so exceptional and fantastic that it would have amazed you a lot. (8)

[Note—¹Angad's observation is obviously laced with heavy sarcasm. Only a jackal would steal meat from a lion's prey when the lord of the jungle is not paying attention. If Ravana was as brave and powerful as he claims himself to be, why didn't he fight with Lord Ram face-to-face and defeat him to claim the Lord's wife as a trophy if he was indeed bent in bringing her to Lanka, instead of hiding and stealthily abducting her while her husband was away hunting. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Aranya Kand, Doha no. 28 along with Chaupai line nos. 7-16 that precede it.}]

²To wit, all of us who serve Lord Ram are modest, humble, unpretentious and gracious. My lord is Sugriv, and he is the king of the monkey race like you are the king of the demon race. But unlike you, fortunately Sugriv is not haughty and arrogant, nor is he a pretentious and boastful person who speaks in vain. We are all humble servants of our supreme Lord, Sri Ram. We have learnt to practice the virtues of modesty and humility by being with Lord Ram and serving him, for the Lord does not like these negative traits in his followers and companions.]

दो०. तोहि पटकि महि सेन हति चौपट करि तव गाउँ । तव जुबतिन्ह समेत सठ जनकसुतहि लै जाउँ ॥ ३० ॥

dōhā.

tōhi paṭaki mahi sēna hati caupaṭa kari tava gā'uṁ.
tava jubatinha samēta saṭha janakasutahi lai jā'uṁ. 30.

[Do you wish to know what I would have done? Listen then—]

I would have, oh you wicked rascal (saṭha), dashed you to the ground (tōhi paṭaki mahi), killed your entire army (sēna hati), and after destroying your village (place; Lanka; “caupaṭa kari tava gā'uṁ”), I would have taken all your women (in a procession) to Lord Ram, with the daughter of Janak (i.e. Sita) leading them from the front (tava jubatinha samēta saṭha janakasutahi lai jā'uṁ). (Doha no. 30)

चौ०. जौं अस करौं तदपि न बड़ाई । मुएहि बधें नहिं कछु मनुसाई ॥ १ ॥
कौल कामबस कृपिन बिमूढ़ा । अति दरिद्र अजसी अति बूढ़ा ॥ २ ॥
सदा रोगबस संतत क्रोधी । बिजु बिमुख श्रुति संत बिरोधी ॥ ३ ॥
तनु पोषक निंदक अघ खानी । जीवत सब सम चौदह प्राणी ॥ ४ ॥ अस बिचारि खल बधउँ न तोही । अब जनि रिस उपजावसि मोही ॥ ५ ॥

caupāī.

jauṁ asa karaūṁ tadapi na baṛāī. mu'ēhi badhēm nahim kachu manusāī. 1.
kaula kāmabasa kṛpina bimūṛhā. ati daridra ajasī ati būṛhā. 2.
sadā rōgabasa santata krōdhī. biṣṇu bimukha śruti santa birōdhī. 3.
tanu pōṣaka nindaka agha khānī. jīvata sava sama caudaha prānī. 4.
asa bicāri khala badha'uṁ na tōhī. aba jani risa upajāvasi mōhī. 5.

In all sooth, I desist from doing all this (as I said I would have done in Doha no. 30 herein above) because I shall gain no fame by doing it; I am reluctant to do what I would have liked to do for it is no great deal to do things that aren't up to the standard. Say, what gallantry is there, what glory is to be gained by killing someone who is already on the verge of death; what bravery is shown by slaying a dying person, for he will die nevertheless? (1)

[I shall now list certain categories of persons killing whom is a highly shameful act.] Those who follow decadent forms of worship (kaula)¹, those who are pervert and lustful (kāmabasa), those who are great misers and greedy (kr̥pina), those who are extremely foolish and ignorant (bimūr̥hā), those who are excessively poor and poverty-stricken (ati daridra), those who are tainted with ill-fame and scarred by ignominy because of some infamous misdeed (ajasī), those who are very old (ati būr̥hā) [2], ---

--- Those who are always sick (sadā rōgabasa), those who remain always angry (santata krōdhī), those who are opposed to Lord Vishnu (“biṣnu bimukha”; i.e. those who don't believe in Lord God; atheists), those who defy and are hostile to the Vedas (scriptures) as well as saintly persons (śruti santa birōdhī) [3], ---

--- Those who are so selfish, foolish or ignorant that they are only interested in taking care of their own gross mortal body (i.e. who are so stupid that they are not bothered about the welfare of their soul, which is their ‘true self’ instead of the body; and are so selfish that they do they think about the welfare of others in the society) (tanu pōṣaka), those who habituated to find faults with others (and never see anything good in them) (nindaka), and those who a veritable mine of sins and evilness (agha khānī).

These above fourteen categories of people are as good as dead bodies even though they are still alive, and therefore it is not worth the while to kill any of them². [Angad likens Ravana with these fallen people, and says he is reluctant to kill him for this reason.] [4] (2-4)

Oh you wicked fellow (khala)! That is why I am not killing you. Don't provoke me any further and don't stoke my anger any longer (because I may lose my patience).’ (5)

[Note—¹The word “kaula” refers to those who indulge in morally bad practices in the name of worshipping their deity, such as drinking liquor, killing other creatures on the excuse of making animal sacrifice, eating meat of the sacrificed poor animal pretending that it is sanctified food, and indulging in sexual orgies in the guise of saying they are on a high because they are possessed by some spirit. Killing such people is in itself a sinful deed, for they are so full of evil that spilling their blood would spoil one's own hands.

²It is because such people are so deep a mine of evil and sinfulness, or a fountainhead from where negativity emanates and spreads forth in the surrounding world, that they are like stinking dead bodies. A dead body starts decaying soon and becomes so harmful that if one remains for a long time near it, one would show signs of some serious illness, such as nausea and vomiting, because of the foul stink emanating from the decaying body, and the whole atmosphere gets so polluted that infectious diseases are caused if the corpse is not disposed off soon.

The idea is that the people belonging to the categories listed here are no better than maggots in the society; they are like a corpse which only creates problems instead of being of any good to others. How mad and ugly would it look for a man if goes to dismember a dead body, to kill his enemy who has already turned into a corpse!

Angad says that even if he thought of finding some way of killing Ravana—and later on explaining his deed by finding some excuse to convince his Lord Ram that the killing of Ravana had become imperative in a particular situation—still he would not commit this evil deed as it would be a very lowly thing for him to do. He likens Ravana with all the fallen creatures listed here.]

सुनि सकोप कह निसिचर नाथा । अधर दसन दसि मीजत हाथा ॥ ६ ॥

रे कपि अधम मरन अब चहसी । छोटे बदन बात बड़ि कहसी ॥ ७ ॥

कटु जल्पसि जड़ कपि बल जाकें । बल प्रताप बुधि तेज न ताकें ॥ ८ ॥ sunī sakōpa kaha nisicara nāthā. adhara dasana dasi mījata hāthā. 6.

rē kapi adhama marana aba cahasī. chōṭē badana bāta baḍi kahāsī. 7.
kaṭu jalpasi jaṛa kapi bala jākēṁ. bala pratāpa budhi tēja na tākēṁ. 8.

[Hearing the contemptuous and scornful way Angad rebuked Ravana (in full demon court), the latter became furious (for Angad's words seemed like molten lead being poured into the ears of Ravana).]

Ravana, the lord of the demons (nisicara nāthā), was filled with excessive wrath and bitterness, bit his lips with his teeth and wringed his hands in utter indignation, and thundered with a fiery tone, --- (6)

‘Oh you lowly and vile monkey (rē kapi adhama), woe betide you, for it seems certain that you wish to die (marana aba cahasī). You are small and inconsequential, but you have crossed all limits of decency and decorum by speaking with a big mouth. (7)

Oh you dumb-witted and vulgar monkey (jaṛa kapi)! He (Lord Ram), on whose strength you have so boastfully uttered such sharp and nasty words (kaṭu), has no real strength, glory, intelligence and majesty at all.’ (8)

दो०. अगुन अमान जानि तेहि दीन्ह पिता बनबास ।

सो दुख अरु जुबती बिरह पुनि निसि दिन मम त्रास ॥ ३१ (क) ॥

जिन्ह के बल कर गर्ब तोहि अइसे मनुज अनेक ।

खाहिं निसाचर दिवस निसि मूढ़ समुझु तजि टेक ॥ ३१ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

aguna amāna jāni tēhi dīnha pitā banabāsa.
 sō dukha aru jubatī biraha puni nisi dina mama trāsa. 31 (a).
 jinha kē bala kara garba tōhi a'isē manuja anēka.
 khāhim nisācara divasa nisi mūrha samujhu taji tēka. 31 (b).

[Now, Ravana justifies his assertion made in the last verse herein above, implying that Lord Ram is of no consequence for him.]

[Ravana continued—] ‘His (Lord Ram’s) father (king Dasrath of Ayodhya) had sent him to forest exile because he felt that his son was worthless and had no good qualities in him, that he was unfit to ascend the throne and rule the kingdom, and that he would bring only infamy to the family (if he is anointed as a king).

On the one hand he (Lord Ram) is smarting from the grave insult and disrepute that this disinheritance by his own father as brought to him, added to it is the misery from intense grief caused by losing his wife, and his misfortunes are further compounded by the knowledge of the immensity of my valour, majesty, strength and powers which have instilled a mortal fear of me in his bosom¹. (Doha no. 31-a)

The demons are accustomed to devouring, on a routine basis, every day and night, so many human beings like the one whom you praise so much. [This is a reference to Lord Ram.]

Oh you complete fool (mūrha)! Understand it², and leave aside your stubbornness (which is misleading you by clouding your reasoning and intellect).’ (Doha no. 31-b)

[Note—¹Ravana told Angad: “Listen you fool. All the misfortunes that have befallen your Lord must have sapped his energy and killed his desire to live an honourable life. Is it not a matter of shame that one’s father throws him out of the house; is it not a further matter of shame that his wife is stolen by someone and he is unable to protect her? This most unfortunate person, who is already suffering from excessive grief and pain caused by an injury to his self-respect, would first try his best to recover his wife, so he makes desperate attempts to trace her. He goes here and there frantically, and even gets a lead about her whereabouts. Then he reaches the place where he is informed his beloved wife is kept. But then he faces an insurmountable obstacle, for to get her back he has to overcome her captive who is so powerful and strong that the poor fellow dares not confront him out of fear of his own life.

This in a nut-shell is the story of your famed Lord! All the misfortunes and miseries and grief that has overwhelmed him must have by now sapped all his energy and weakened his resolve; he must have lost all courage and strength to bear any more of it. Surely and certainly, he must have lost his will to fight me to reclaim his wife.

Initially he may have gathered courage to wander in the forest to search for her in the hope of finding her somewhere, and I acknowledge that he persevered enough to collect a ramshackle army of untrained monkeys and bears to build a bridge across the ocean and land in Lanka. But though he had managed to keep a brave face externally, internally he is full of doubt and uncertain of himself when he came to know of me and my reputation, that it was I who had taken away his wife, and that he has to fight with me to get her back. At this very thought he must have balked; the idea must have seemed an impossible objective for him to achieve.

Thus, having so lost his courage and confidence internally, he wishes now to find a face-saving formula, and that is why he sends a messenger to explore the possibility of getting his wife back without having to face me in the battle-field. He is so obsessed with the fear of me that he won't have the courage to stand his ground in the battle-field.

And you (Angad) are so big a blockhead that you can't piece two and two together to make four. Oh you fool; why don't you see through the things, and why are wasting your energy trying to advocate for a lost cause."

²"Don't you know anything about the demon race? Humans are our staple food, and tell me yourself is anyone afraid of what he eats? But still you go on and on in a rambling manner heaping praises on a human being, without realizing that the human race is a staple food for the demons. We chomp them like carrots and radish; we munch at them for snacks and meals. Are you so great a fool not to understand that the demon army, which is ferocious by its nature, would become more fierce when it is hungry, and when I unleash my starved demon warriors on you fellows, what will happen then? If we, the demons, don't give two hoots for the human race, which is the most advanced and powerful in the hierarchy of all living beings, what would we care for monkeys and bears? Why don't you consider these things?

Listen; your father Baali and I were friends, and that is why I don't wish to push you into the jaws of death. But it looks to me that you are being drawn to it by your own reckoning, by being unreasonable and obstinate, and unwilling to understand anything. Wake up to the reality and stop espousing a lost cause."]

चौ०. जब तेहिं कीन्हि राम कै निंदा । क्रोधवंत अति भयउ कपिंदा ॥ १ ॥

हरि हर निंदा सुनइ जो काना । होइ पाप गोघात समाना ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

jaba tēhim kīnhi rāma kai nindā. krōdhavanta ati bhaya'u kapindā. 1.

hari hara nindā suna'i jō kānā. hō'i pāpa gōghāta samānā. 2.

When he (Ravana) used disparaging word critical of Lord Ram and his glory, when he used crass language for Lord Ram, when he showed his grossness, the monkey chief ("kapindā"; Angad) lost his patience; he became furious and shook with anger. (1)

This is because to listen criticism of, and hear derogatory words used for Lord Hari and Lord Har (Vishnu and Shiva respectively; the two Gods of the Trinity) invites the blot of committing a grave sin that is equivalent to killing of a cow¹. (2)

[Note—¹Lord Vishnu is the second God of the Trinity and is the protector and caretaker of this creation, while Lord Shiva is the third God who is responsible for the conclusion of this creation. Lord Ram is believed to be an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. So when Ravana used insulting words for the Lord, compelling Angad to hear them, the latter felt he was forced to commit a grave sin against his wish, and he had never ever imagined in his life that one day he would be forced by circumstances to be made a party to such a sacrilegious deed. This infuriated him immeasurably.]

कटकटान कपिकुंजर भारी । दुहु भुजदंड तमकि महि मारी ॥ ३ ॥

डोलत धरनि सभासद खसे । चले भाजि भय मारुत ग्रसे ॥ ४ ॥ kaṭakaṭāna kapikuñjara bhārī. duhu bhujaḍaṇḍa tamaki mahi mārī. 3.

ḍōlata dharani sabhāsada khasē. calē bhāji bhaya māruta grasē. 4.

The great monkey chief ground his teeth so viciously that a sound of crushing stones was heard (kaṭakaṭāna) even as he waved his arms angrily in the air, and clinching his fists he struck the ground violently with them. (3)

This caused a tremor that shook the earth, and as a result of this sudden jolt the courtiers present there fell to the ground. They were so overcome with great terror that they ran away madly from the court as if driven by a strong gust of wind symbolising fear¹. (4)

[Note—¹The scene is reminiscent of a sudden storm with high wind speed that fells things and sweeps them away along its path. As soon as Angad hit the ground angrily with his clenched fists, there was a tremor, and the demon courtiers were caught off guard. They slipped from their seats if they were sitting, and lost foothold on the ground if they were standing. They lost balance and fell down; then fearing an earthquake that would crush them under the debris of the demolished court building, they shrieked in fear and ran helter-skelter. The air in Ravana's court was already grave and heavy, but this sudden development lead to total chaos.]

गिरत सँभारि उठा दसकंधर । भूतल परे मुकुट अति सुंदर ॥ ५ ॥

कछु तेहिं लै निज सिरन्हि सँवारे । कछु अंगद प्रभु पास पबारे ॥ ६ ॥ girata saṁbhāri uṭhā dasakandhara. bhūtala parē mukuṭa ati sundara. 5.

kachu tēhiṁ lai nija siranhi saṁvārē. kachu aṅgada prabhu pāsa pabārē. 6.

The ten-shouldered Ravana (dasakandhara) almost fell down to the ground, but he managed to quickly recover himself just in time. Nonetheless, his crowns tumbled over from his head and fell to the ground¹.

[To wit, though Ravana managed to get up himself, yet his crowns slipped from his heads and fell to the ground.] (5)

Ravana could pick up some of these crowns, while the rest were kicked by Angad like balls in the direction of where Lord Ram was.

[To wit, Ravana failed to replace all his ten crowns on his head, so Angad got an opportunity and kicked the remaining crowns² like one kicks at a ball. He kicked these crowns so violently that they flew in the air like balls flying in the direction of Lord Ram's camp.] (6)

[Note—¹This was the second instance of Ravana's crowns falling to the ground. The first was when Lord Ram had shot an arrow in the direction of the citadel of Lanka where Ravana and his entourage were watching some musical performance; at that time too all his crowns had tumbled to the ground. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 13 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.}

Angad got a cue from this incidence, and he decided to serve his dear Lord Ram by doing something better, which was to place Ravana's crowns directly at the Lord's feet as a token of the demon's king abject surrender. And Angad thought his action would be alright also, and the Lord would not mind it because he himself had fell Ravana's crowns earlier. This will bring Angad closer to Lord Ram and become his favourite just as Hanuman's gallant deeds had done for him.

There was another strategic military reason for Angad's actions. He wished to break whatever confidence and remnants of morale the demon army still possessed after the events when Lanka was burnt by Hanuman, by making their seemingly invincible and powerful king Ravana swoon and lose his balance and fall down in front of their very eyes. When an army's confidence and morale is low, the battle is three-fourths won by the enemy; if the demon army led by Ravana loses its courage and will to fight with vigour and confidence of attaining victory, then the fate of the war was deemed to be decided in favour of the monkey army led by Lord Ram.]

²And how many crowns did Angad kick? The answer is 'four'. See verse no. 8 herein below.]

आवत मुकुट देखि कपि भागे । दिनहीं लूक परन बिधि लागे ॥ ७ ॥ की रावन करि कोप चलाए । कुलिस चारि आवत अति धाए ॥ ८ ॥ āvata mukuṭa dēkhi kapi bhāgē. dinahīm lūka parana bidhi lāgē. 7.

kī rāvana kari kōpa calā'ē. kulisa cāri āvata ati dhā'ē. 8.

When the monkeys and bears in the camp of Lord Ram saw these crowns flying towards their camp and landing on the ground with a loud thud, they were all alarmed and ran here and there to escape being hit by these missiles. They wondered, 'Oh God, is this a shower of comets or meteors or asteroids raining down from the sky in the middle of the day! (7)

Or, are these four shining missiles¹ shot by Ravana at us, for they seem to come with great speed from the direction of his court.' (8)

[Note—¹The crowns were shining as they were made of polished gold and studded with gems.

That they were four in number shows that Ravana had managed to pick up and replace only six of his fallen crowns back on his head, and the remaining four out of the total ten were kicked by Angad.]

कह प्रभु हँसि जनि हृदयँ डेराहू । लूक न असनि केतु नहिं राहू ॥ ९ ॥ ए किरिट दसकंधर केरे । आवत बालितनय के प्रेरे ॥ १० ॥

kaha prabhu haṁsi jani hṛdayaṁ dērāhū. lūka na asani kētu nahīm rāhū. 9.
ē kirīṭa dasakandhara kērē. āvata bālitanaya kē prērē. 10.

The Lord (Sri Ram) smiled in amusement, and reassured his troops, ‘Don’t be at all afraid of these things. They are neither a comet nor a meteor, nor a asteroid or a missile; they aren’t either Rahu or Ketu. [There is nothing to be afraid of; so don’t panic. They are not some bad omen symbolised by comets or falling stars, and they are neither some kind of weapon shot by Ravana to harm us.] (9)

These are Ravana’s crowns, and they have come here because Angad has kicked them in our direction.’ (10)

दो०. तरकि पवनसुत कर गहे आनि धरे प्रभु पास ।

कौतुक देखहिं भालु कपि दिनकर सरिस प्रकास ॥ ३२ (क) ॥

dōhā.

taraki pavanasuta kara gahē āni dharē prabhu pāsa.

kautuka dēkhahim bhālu kapi dinakara sarisa prakāsa.32 (a).

The son of the wind god (i.e. Hanuman) immediately jumped up and grabbed these crowns; then he brought them and kept them near Lord Ram (i.e. at his feet).

The crowns were shining with a brilliance that was reminiscent of the splendour of the sun. All the monkeys and bears gathered around and watched them with amazement¹. (Doha no. 32-a) [Note—¹It was a rare spectacle for them to behold. All the warriors of the Lord’s army had one objective, which was to defeat the Lord’s enemy Ravana, and when they saw their enemy’s crowns come rolling all by themselves and placed at the feet of their own Lord Ram, it was surely a very astonishing and welcome sign—for it marked the defeat and surrender of their enemy, because when a king is defeated in battle, and the victor wishes not to slay him, then the crown of the vanquished is placed at the feet of the vanquisher as a token of surrender and acceptance of defeat by the former.

So, the monkeys and bears rejoiced that their enemy has already surrendered in a symbolic way. This was very a very encouraging sign and a definite morale-booster for the Lord’s army prior to the actual action in the battle-field, as much as it was discouraging, a crusher of morale and the breaker of the spirit of the demon army.

The monkeys and bears were fascinated at the sight of not one, not two, not three—but ‘four shining crowns’ lying at the feet of their revered Lord Ram. It was a way of prophesising to them that their victory in the forthcoming war is four times as assured and certain as any other circumstances under which they may have fought and won any other war earlier on in their lives. The omens were in their favour; the gods were in their favour.]

उहाँ सकोपि दसानन सब सन कहत रिसाइ ।

धरहु कपिहि धरि मारहु सुनि अंगद मुसुकाइ ॥ ३२ (ख) ॥ uhāṃ sakōpi dasānana saba sana kahata risā'i.

dharahu kapihi dhari mārahu suni aṅgada musukā'i. 32 (b).

Meanwhile, back in the court of the demons, Ravana became exasperated and yelled angrily at everybody present, 'Catch hold of this monkey and kill him.'

Angad smiled wryly and sneered when he heard this frustrated outburst of Ravana (because he realised that the endgame was very near). (Doha no. 32-b)

चौ०. एहि बधि बेगि सुभट सब धावहु । खाहु भालु कपि जहँ जहँ पावहु ॥ १ ॥ मर्कटहीन करहु महि जाई । जित्त धरहु तापस द्वौ भाई ॥ २ ॥

caupā'i.

ēhi badhi bēgi subhaṭa saba dhāvahu. khāhu bhālu kapi jahaṃ jahaṃ pāvahu.

1.

markaṭahīna karahu mahi jā'i. ji'ata dharahu tāpasa dvau bhā'i. 2.

[Besides ordering his demon warriors to immediately slay Angad, he also instructed them to rush forward aggressively and devour all the rest of the monkeys and bears wherever they found them, to vent their anger at the invaders and start decimating them that very instant.]

Ravana ordered his demon warriors, 'Oh my brave and competent warriors (subhaṭa)! Rush forth immediately in all the directions, and grab and devour any and all monkeys and bears that you may find anywhere. (1)

Go forthwith and proceed to make the earth free of the monkey race (by killing one and all of them; don't spare any single fellow)! Go and catch hold of the two hermit brothers (Lord Ram and his brother Laxman) (as soon as you can, and bring them all tied up in shackles)¹. (2)

[Note—¹Ravana let loose his ferocious demons like a pack of wild wolves let loose among pigeons, or at least he thought so, for he wanted them to go berserk and ferociously tear apart the enemy without mercy, sparing none. Yes indeed, he thought that his demon warriors would go amok and smash the monkey army as they had been doing during his many campaigns around the world, especially when he had conquered the gods in heaven and chased away their mighty army.

But he had misjudged the might and strength of his enemy this last time. He had thought that they would be like easy fodder before the ferocious demons lunging at them with their drawn mouths from which sharp teeth protruded like those of a hungry lion ready to pounce upon its prey. The demons were accustomed to this sort of hunting their prey, but till now they had faced only those creatures who were humble and docile, who became terrified at the very sight of demons approaching them, creatures whose blood chilled at the very thought of a demon, who trembled when they heard the name of a demon, so there was no question of them mustering courage to fight back: such was the great and enviable fame of the demons, that they found no opposition whatsoever and no challenge worth the name to their authority and sway anywhere in the world, for no living being dared to do it.

This had made Ravana mad with an extreme sense of false pride that had filled him with extravagant haughtiness, excessive arrogance and unwarranted over-confidence in his abilities, thinking that there was no one to challenge him in this world. This had also made his demons think that they can have their way till the end of creation. And this false sense of security and majesty paved the way for their downfall.]

पुनि सकोप बोलेउ जुबराजा । गाल बजावत तोहि न लाजा ॥ ३ ॥

मरु गर काटि निलज कुलघाती । बल बिलोकि बिहरति नहिं छाती ॥ ४ ॥ puni sakōpa bōlē'u jubarājā. gāla bajāvata tōhi na lājā. 3.

maru gara kāṭi nilaja kulaghātī. bala bilōki biharati nahim chātī. 4.

The prince (“jubarājā”; i.e. Angad) retorted sharply, ‘Aren’t you ashamed to speak vainly with a big mouth (that has large jaws). (3)

Oh you vile and shameless fellow who does not have even rudimentary modesty in him, and who will go down in history as the destroyer of his own race and family (nilaja, kulaghātī)! Cut your own neck and die. [Well, you have been boasting that you had severed your head ten times to offer them to the fire sacrifice. Why don’t you repeat your fantastic deed once again? Let me see it and be convinced of its veracity. Go ahead and cut off your ugly heads here and now!]

Even after witnessing my strength and courage, why has your bosom not cracked (i.e. why hadn’t you had a heart attack out of awe and fear of me)? (4)

[Note—¹Angad lashed out vehemently at Ravana, severely chiding and ridiculing him scornfully: “Why, you are a totally dumb fellow; it’s certain you have no trace of dignity and honour worth the name in you. Can’t you see that I don’t have any fear of you in spite of being alone in your assembly, and why don’t you realise that surely there must be some cause for my bravery. And haven’t you just a while ago witnessed how your crowns were kicked by me and sent flying into the sky. Can’t you understand the sort of courage I have when I have so bluntly and boldly answered you on your face, back and forth, even while your so-called brave demons, renowned for their fierceness, watched helplessly. And despite of all this, you continue howling, madly and vainfully.”

रे त्रिय चोर कुमारग गामी । खल मल रासि मंदमति कामी ॥ ५ ॥

सन्यपात जल्पसि दुर्बादा । भएसि कालबस खल मनुजादा ॥ ६ ॥ rē triya cōra kumāraga gāmī. khala mala rāsi mandamati kāmī. 5.

san'yapāta jalpasi durbādā. bha'ēsi kālabasa khala manujādā. 6.

Oh you stealer of women (triya cōra)! Oh you fallen one treading on a sinful path (kumāraga gāmī)! You are indeed a blockhead to the hilt (mandamati). You are verily an embodiment and a treasury (rāsi) of vices such as wickedness, perversion, lust, lasciviousness, and other moral depravities (khala mala --- kāmī). (5)

You are under the influence of a severe fever that causes delirium (san'yapāta) because it makes you talk incoherently and babble senselessly (jalpasi durbādā).

Oh you rascal demon (khala manujādā)! It is very clear that you are under the spell of the god of death (bha'ēsi kālabasa) by the way you speak.

[To wit, it seems your death is near because your delirious talk clearly indicates it. When a person is suffering from high fever and is about to die, he starts talking nonsense as you are doing now.] (6)

याको फलु पावहिगो आगें । बानर भालु चपेटन्हि लागें ॥ ७ ॥
 रामु मनुज बोलत असि बानी । गिरहिं न तव रसना अभिमानी ॥ ८ ॥ गिरिहिं रसना संसय नाही । सिरन्हि समेत समर महि माहीं ॥ ९ ॥ yākō phalu pāvahigō āgēm. bānara bhālu capētanhi lāgēm. 7.

 rāmu manuja bōlata asi bānī. girahim na tava rasanā abhimānī. 8.
 girihahim rasanā sansaya nāhīm. siranhi samēta samara mahi māhīm. 9.

Nevertheless, it doesn't matter for the time being, for you will get the punishment you deserve a little later on when you will be bashed and pilloried by hordes of monkeys and bears (who would take turns in kicking and slapping you). (7)

Oh you haughty and arrogant fellow (abhimānī)! “Lord Ram is a human being¹”—why does your tongue not fall down from your mouth when you pronounce such insinuating words, I wonder? (8)

But oh yes, there is no doubt that your tongues will fall down together with your heads (at the appropriate time) when they are chopped off in the battle-field (by Lord Ram's arrows). (9)

[Note—¹Angad refers to what Ravana had said in Doha no. 31 herein above.]

सो०. सो नर १०यों दसकंध बालि बध्यो जेहिं एक सर । बीसहुँ लोचन अंध धिग तव जन्म कुजाति जड़ ॥ ३३ (क) ॥
 sōraṭhā.

sō nara kyōm dasakandha bāli badhyō jēhim ēka sara.
 bīsahuṁ lōcana andha dhiga tava janma kujāti jaṛa. 33 (a).

Tell me, oh you one with ten shoulders (bearing ten necks and ten heads; dasakandha), why, and how come, he (Lord Ram), who has slayed Baali with a single arrow, a human being¹?

Oh you stupid blockhead who is born in a vile race (tava janma kujāti jaṛa)! Fie to you and your evil birth (dhiga tava janma)! Can't you see this obvious thing with your twenty eyes²? (Sortha no. 33-a) [Note—¹Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Doha no. 8 along with Chaupai line nos. 2-8 that precede it.

Why is this thing, killing of Baali with a single arrow, so significant that Angad cites it to justify his assertion that someone, a reference to Lord Ram, who could kill Baali with a single shot is surely not an ordinary human being like the rest? The answer is this: Baali had a boon that when he is attacked by anyone, half of his opponent's strength would come to him, leaving his adversary weakened by half. That is why his brother Sugriv failed to subdue him in the duel they fought.

Lord Ram watched the proceedings quietly from behind a tree and observed that Sugriv was being beaten mercilessly by Baali, and the latter lost half of his strength to Baali due to the boon, leaving him severely wounded and on the verge of collapse. Earlier, the Lord had promised Sugriv that he would extend his support to him if he decides to reclaim his lost rights, rights that were snatched by his elder brother Baali from him. When the Lord realised his friend Sugriv was losing, he was compelled to intervene to keep his promise. But the problem was Baali's boon; if the Lord faced him directly then half of the Lord's strength would have gone automatically to Baali. So therefore he had to shoot the arrow incognito from behind the tree.

That was not all. Since Baali was protected from being killed by any human being who attacked him directly, and humans usually attacked with a weapon that could be shot, e.g. an arrow, so it also meant that a man's arrow would not kill him if he was shot by any weapon used by his attacker from a distance.

Angad uses this rationale to assert that Baali's death with one arrow shows that the shooter of that arrow was not an ordinary human warrior, for under ordinary circumstances Baali would have automatically attracted half of his attacker's strength by the virtue of the boon he had.

But why did Baali fail to attract Lord Ram's half strength into himself whereas he could do it with all other opponents? It's probably based on the principle of a stronger energy field attracting a weaker one towards its self, or being neutralised when faced with a field stronger energy than its own. It could be like magnetic field, or electric field or any other kind of field of energy. Baali possessed an exceptionally strong and powerful field of spiritual energy and dynamism that attracted and pulled towards itself the field of his opponent which was weaker than his.

To wit, Baali's strong spiritual field and the dynamic waves of energy generated by his 'consciousness', known as the Atma, were vibrant and powerful enough to neutralise those of his adversary. In the case of Lord Ram, however, the reverse was true, because the Lord was a personified form of the cosmic energy that is inherent in super Consciousness that Lord Ram embodied. Hence, instead of Angad attracting Lord Ram's strength, it happened the other way round.

Baali had himself acknowledged the divinity of Lord Ram, first to his wife Tara when she tried to dissuade him to fight with Sugriv as he had the Lord's protection, and later on during the last moments of his life when he surrendered his soul to the Lord and sought his refuge and blessings so that he can attain deliverance and beatitude. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, (a) Doha no. 7; (b) Doha no. 9—to Doha no. 10.}

²Ravana had 'ten heads', and therefore obviously he had 'twenty eyes', for each head had two eyes.

Angad meant that even a person with two eyes would be able to see what is obvious, but Ravana was so extremely stupid and dumb-witted that he could not see it with ‘twenty eyes’, which means using ten heads, which carried these twenty eyes, applying their wisdom and intelligence simultaneously. To wit, Ravana was so big a fool that he could not deduce the right things even though he possessed ten heads working together to help him do so. In effect, he was dumber than others with just one head and two eyes. It was a scathing attack on Ravana’s personality and majesty; it showed that he had an abysmally poor wisdom; it was an assessment of Ravana’s level of intelligence that downgraded it to the lowest possible standard for this faculty that one can imagine.]

तव सोनित कीं प्यास तृषित राम सायक निकर ।

तजउँ तोहि तेहि त्रास कटु जल्पक निसिचर अधम ॥ ३३ (ख) ॥ tava sōnita kīm pyāsa tṛṣita rāma sāyaka nikara.

taja'uṁ tōhi tēhi trāsa kaṭu jalpaka nisicara adhama. 33 (b).

Oh you fallen demon with a bitter tongue that bites when it speaks (kaṭu jalpaka nisicara adhama)! [To wit, your tongue is poisonous like a snake’s, and it is equally stinging.]

Nevertheless, I leave you alone (i.e. I spare you from death at my hands) because Lord Ram’s arrows are thirsty for your blood, and I don’t want to deprive them of their favourite drink which they wish to have to their hearts’ content. (Sortha no. 33-b)

चौ०. मैं तव दसन तोरिबे लायक । आयसु मोहि न दीन्ह रघुनायक ॥ १ ॥

असि रिस होति दसउ मुख तोरौं । लंका गहि समुद्र महुँ बोरौं ॥ २ ॥

गूलरि फल समान तव लंका । बसहु मध्य तुम्ह जंतु असंका ॥ ३ ॥

मैं बानर फल खात न बारा । आयसु दीन्ह न राम उदारा ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

mairṁ tava dasana tōribē lāyaka. āyasu mōhi na dīnha raghunāyaka. 1.

asi risa hōti dasa'u mukha tōraurṁ. laṅkā gahi samudra mahauṁ bōraurṁ. 2.

gūlari phala samāna tava laṅkā. basahu madhya tumha jantu asaṅkā. 3.

mairṁ bānara phala khāta na bārā. āyasu dīnha na rāma udārā. 4.

I have the ability to clobber you and break all your teeth, but I am constrained from doing it because Lord Raghunayak (Lord Ram) has not given me such orders. (1)

I am so annoyed by you and seething with anger that otherwise I would have willingly yanked off all your ten (hideous) heads, and uproot your city of Lanka from its very foundation, and then dump it into the ocean. (2)

In all soothfastness, Lanka is like a fruit of the wild fig tree (gūlari phala) in which you demons move about like tiny worms. (3)

I (as you repeatedly like to address me) am a ‘monkey’, and being a ‘monkey’ it is very easy for me to bite through this fruit and eat (destroy) it (as is the wont of monkeys)¹. But unfortunately, the magnanimous Lord Ram hasn't given me permission to do so (so I have to restrain myself).²' (4)

[Note—¹Angad told Ravana bitterly: "Look you vile fellow. You stupid ones are like so many worms that infect the fruit of the wild fig tree. And you enjoy calling me a 'monkey'. Well and good; I would have proved you right that I was indeed a 'monkey', for monkeys are in the habit of jumping from tree to tree and destroying their fruits by nibbling some, biting others, chewing this fruit, and munching and spitting out the next, eating a few and breaking the rest from their branches, and then throwing them to the ground to destroy the whole garden, orchard, grove or forest. I would have thoroughly enjoyed in this pastime, but you are lucky because I don't have permission from Lord Ram to indulge in this pleasure. I have come here on serious business, and not to play games with you. Mind you, don't provoke me any further, don't compel me to lose my patience, because who knows that I may begin to show my true colour as a 'monkey'. Then, god forbid, whatever is left of Lanka would be obliterated for good, as I would sweep it and dump it into the ocean to clean the ruin left behind by my good friend Hanuman."

²Angad said: "You know Ravana; I would have clobbered you and pinned you to the ground. But my Lord Ram is very benevolent and has a kind heart for he does not want me to hurt you, but give you ample time and space to think things over and make timely amends. The magnanimous Lord does not wish to precipitate things and give you a chance to say that you weren't given an opportunity to rectify your mistakes and take corrective actions. So the Lord prohibited me from taking any physical action that may hurt you, though I am on the edge of tolerance now, and a little more provocation from you will compel me to go over this edge."

By-and-by it so happened that no matter how much Angad tried to convince Ravana to abandon his bellicose attitude and hostility towards Lord Ram by making peace with the Lord and returning Sita to him, Ravana bluntly refused, and the atmosphere progressively became extremely bitter and acrimonious. Finally, when Angad determined that it was absolutely futile to make further arguments as Ravana was stubborn and obstinate, he decided to do something singularly memorable and remarkable before returning to Lord Ram.

So Angad decided that though he could not thrash Ravana and crush his pride in physical terms yet he must do it in a symbolic way. He planted his foot on the ground and challenged Ravana to move it with the condition that if the latter succeeded in doing so he would be deemed to be the winner, and if he failed to move Angad's foot then he loses the war in a symbolic way. As it was destined by destiny and was the fiat of fate, Ravana failed to move Angad's foot even by a fraction of a measurement. Angad thus managed to crush Ravana's self-respect and esteem completely.

To wit, though Angad did not physically clobber Ravana and thrash him viciously in public as he would have very much liked to do, but couldn't because of Lord Ram's restraining orders, yet he did satisfy his boiling anger by doing something far worse by making Ravana kneel down before him and touch his feet in order to move them, for it was a token-gesture of submission, because for a great warrior loss of his honour, dignity and self-respect in full public gaze is far worse than physical death. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Doha no. 35.}}

जुगुति सुनत रावन मुसुकाई । मूढ़ सिखिहि कहँ बहुत झुठाई ॥ ५ ॥
बालि न कबहुँ गाल अस मारा । मिलि तपसिन्ह तैं भएसि लबारा ॥ ६ ॥ juguti sunata rāvana musukā'ī. mūrha sikhihi kahañ bahuta jhuṭhā'ī. 5.

bāli na kabahuñ gāla asa mārā. mili tapasinha tair̥ bha'ēsi labārā. 6.

Hearing this horny but witty retort of Angad, Ravana sneered sarcastically, saying, 'Oh you dumb fellow (mūrha)! Tell me, from where have you learnt to speak such bundle of lies. [Say, how have you learnt to speak such big lies?]' (5)

Baali (your noble father) had never boasted so much, and he had never chattered in vain with a loud mouth (as you do). Surely, you have acquired this nasty habit of boastful bluster, speaking lies and vain talking due to your company with those hermits (Lord Ram and Laxman)¹. (6)

[Note—¹Ravana in effect told Angad that he should mind the reputation of his noble father Baali by reminding him of the latter. Ravana hinted to Angad that since he holds Baali in high esteem and treats him as one of his friends, he is willing to treat Angad also favourably, as the son of a close friend. If Angad says he refrains from hitting Ravana and destroying Lanka because he has no such express mandate from his Lord, Ram, then Ravana says that he too refrains from hitting and punishing Angad severely for all the insults and insinuations he had cast upon him (Ravana) just because he remembers his old friend Baali and restrains from hitting his friend's only son (Angad), but it should not be taken as his weakness. Rather, Angad must realise that his father was Ravana's friend, and in deference to his father's memory he must at least be polite enough to say 'sorry' to Ravana.

Ravana wished to provoke Angad's anger and stoke his emotions by making him remember his dead father Baali repeatedly, on one pretext or the other, so that he is incited to revolt against Sugriv, his uncle and the king of the monkey kingdom, and Lord Ram, who had befriended Sugriv and sought his help to launch a campaign on Lanka to retrieve his stolen wife Sita from the clutches of the demon king Ravana.

Ravana wished to tell Angad thus: "Why don't you understand that on the one hand here I am your father's dear friend who will be more committed to care for your future since you are orphaned, and on the other hand there is your selfish uncle Sugriv, and his protector Lord Ram, who had caused his death. Why can't you (Angad) judge for himself and weigh the two options to see that his good lies in joining me (Ravana), instead of living in perpetual fear under the reign of your jealous uncle? You call me a fool; but it is you who is a fool. Wake up from delusions and join hands with me against the enemy of your father."

Ravana's comments also throw light on the state of society at that time. It shows that people usually held hermits in low esteem, as ones who spoke of impossible things and falsely boasted of their spiritual achievements.]

साँचेहुँ मैं लबार भुज बीहा । जौं न उपारिउँ तव दस जीहा ॥ ७ ॥
समुझि राम प्रताप कपि कोपा । सभा माझ पन करि पद रोपा ॥ ८ ॥
जौं मम चरन सकसि सठ टारी । फिरहिं रामु सीता मैं हारी ॥ ९ ॥ sāmcēhuṃ mairiṃ labāra bhuja bīhā. jaum na upāri'uṃ tava dasa jīhā. 7.

samujhi rāma pratāpa kapi kōpā. sabhā mājha pana kari pada rōpā. 8.
jaum mama carana sakasi saṭha ṭārī. phirahirṃ rāmu sītā mairiṃ hārī. 9.

Angad yelled back at Ravana, saying, ‘Yes truly, oh you one with twenty arms (bhuja bīhā), I would have been a boaster who talks in vain if I couldn’t tear out all your ten tongues.

[But mind you, you vile fellow; I have already told you why I refrain from doing it to prove that you are wrong in your assessment of me and my abilities. Haven’t I told you that I desist from it only because my revered Lord Ram hasn’t instructed me to harm you physically; I can’t disobey him.¹]’ (7)

Remembering Lord Ram’s greatness, majesty and glory, Angad decided that enough was enough. [To prove to Ravana that he was not boasting till now—] He planted his foot firmly on the ground, and threw a challenge. (8)

[What was the challenge?] Angad proclaimed: ‘Oh you wicked and vile fellow (saṭha)! If you can move my foot, then Lord Ram shall return (back from Lanka) and I would be deemed to have lost Sita!’² (8)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 30 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-5, 8 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 34.

²Angad was sent by Lord Ram as his emissary to negotiate Sita’s release. As an ambassador of the Lord, Angad was vested with the authority to decide the matter and adopt a course of action according to the situation, subject to the condition that the main objective was not defeated, which was to ensure that the path was cleared for Sita’s release from Ravana’s captivity.

Angad concluded that Ravana was not open to negotiations; he was not ready to listen, he was not ready to yield his ground because of his obstinate nature and a false sense of invincibility, and therefore he was not ready to make any compromises. What added fuel to the fire was Ravana’s persistent insinuations and use of derogatory language for Angad as well as Lord Ram. Angad decided that, if after hearing all the nasty things that Ravana blurted out like lava pouring out of a crater of a volcano, if he went away without doing some outstanding deed of bravery and exemplary courage, something that would completely demoralise the demons as a race and humiliate Ravana excessively, then it would not be his dignified departure from the meeting. He wanted to do some spectacular thing, but though he would have preferred pulling down Ravana physically from his throne and giving him a sound thrashing, yet he couldn’t do it because, as he himself asserts, it would violate Lord Ram’s injunction not to harm Ravana physically.

So Angad decided on a stratagem that would bring Ravana to his knees without even touching him, and without him being aware of what he was about to do. Hence, Angad planted his foot on the ground and asked Ravana to move it if he can. In order to move Angad’s feet, obviously Ravana would have to kneel down before him and touch his foot, which would be a visual treat for the whole demon court—that their mighty king who had made the greatest of gods kneel before him has today knelt before a ‘monkey’. Verily indeed and without gainsay, what a ridiculous situation would it be; what a sight to behold it would be—the mighty and invincible Ravana, whom the gods feared, bending over on his knees and holding the foot of Angad in a symbolic gesture of abject surrender and humiliating submission!

Angad betted that if Ravana refused to accept this challenge, then it would be equivalent to his accepting defeat in the war even before it actually began, and the consequent acknowledgment that Sita had to be given to Lord Ram because it was for her release that the war was to be fought. If however Ravana accepted the challenge thrown by Angad, then the latter's objective would be fulfilled—which was to make the mighty king of the demons bow before him!

And as to taking such a serious risk as betting the whole outcome of the war and the fate of Sita on one single premise of success or failure at moving Angad's foot by Ravana, Angad was so confident of Lord Ram's mystical powers and his divinity, as well as his own loyalty and devotion for the Lord, that he was absolutely sure that when he throws a challenge by invoking the grace and blessings of Lord Ram then there is no power in this creation which would make him regret that he made a wrong decision, no power that would defeat him in his own challenge, to make him seem ridiculous and a vain person.

Lord Shiva, the principal narrator of this magnificent Story, has himself asserted that there was no wonder that Angad was confident that Ravana would be unable to move his legs in this challenge for he knew the mystical powers that Lord Ram possessed, as he was the almighty Supreme Lord of creation who can, if he so wishes, transform a humble twig into a powerful and strong weapon known as Vajra, and vice versa. Hence, any action taken in the name of the Lord can't fail, no matter what happens, especially when the objective is noble and righteous. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 35.}]

सुनुहु सुभट सब कह दससीसा । पद गहि धरनि पछारहु कीसा ॥ १० ॥

इंद्रजीत आदिक बलवाना । हरषि उठे जहँ तहँ भट नाना ॥ ११ ॥

झपटहिं करि बल बिपुल उपाई । पद न टरइ बैठहिं सिरु नाई ॥ १२ ॥ sunahu subhaṭa saba kaha dasasīsā. pada gahi dharani pachārahu kīsā. 10.

indrajīta ādika balavānā. haraṣi uṭhē jahaṁ tahaṁ bhaṭa nānā. 11.

jhaṭaḥiṁ kari bala bipula upā'ī. pada na ṭara'i baiṭhaḥiṁ siru nā'ī. 12.

Exasperated and peeved beyond measure, Ravana ordered his demon warriors angrily, 'Listen all of you excellent warriors (sunahu subhaṭa saba)! Hold this monkey by his legs and dash him to the ground.' (10)

Indrajeet (i.e. Meghanad, Ravana's son) along with other great demon warriors gladly rose from their seats to accept the challenge and carry out Ravana's orders. [They relished the thought of getting an opportunity of beating Angad black and blue to vent their anger which they had suppressed till now.] (11)

All of them, singly and together, lunged at Angad with all their muscle and might, making many deft attempts to try to move his foot, but they failed miserably and completely. Defeated, dejected and crestfallen, they returned to their respective seats and sat down with lowered heads (full of shame). (12)

पुनि उठि झपटहिं सुर आराती । टरइ न कीस चरन एहि भाँती ॥ १३ ॥
पुरुष कुजोगी जिमि उरगारी । मोह बिटप नहिं सकहिं उपारी ॥ १४ ॥ puni uṭhi jhapaṭahim sura ārātī. ṭara'i na kīsa carana ēhi bhāntī. 13.

puruṣa kujōgī jimi uragārī. mōha biṭapa nahim sakahim upārī. 14.

[These two verses quote Kaagbhusund, the saintly crow, who too had narrated this Story to Garud, the mount of Lord Vishnu. Their discourse is included in Ram Charit Manas in its Uttar Kand (i.e. the last Canto no. 7), from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 63—to Doha no. 125.]

Sage Kaagbhusund said to Garud, the enemy of serpents (uragārī), ‘The tormentors of the gods (“sura ārātī”; i.e. the demons), after some pause to gather courage, once again dashed towards Angad to try and move his foot, and it was repeated a number of times, but each time they failed miserably.

Verily oh Garud, the enemy of the serpents, Angad’s (literally the ‘monkey’s’; “kīsa”) foot did not budge from its position even a fraction just like an incompetent person (who is indulgent in affairs of the gross world and overcome with delusions) is unable to uproot the tree of attachment and infatuation¹.’ (13-14)

[Note—¹A person who remains engrossed in the world and finds enjoyment in its sensual pleasures cannot get over his worldly desires and his attachment with the things of the world. He is incompetent to do so. Only a person who is spiritually realised and enlightened will see the futility of this pursuit, leading him to develop renunciation.

Similarly, though the demon warriors made several attempts to fell Angad and fling him by his legs, they failed; these sinful demons were unable to defeat Lord Ram’s devotee and break his resolve.

A similar scene prevailed long back in Janakpur during the Bow-breaking ceremony organised for Sita’s marriage. At that time too none of the assembled kings and princes succeeded in moving Lord Shiva’s bow. They too had rushed to try and lift the bow, singly as well as in a group, they too had tried repeatedly and failed, and they too returned to their seats with lowered head and sat down crestfallen. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 250—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 251.}]

दो०. कोटिन्ह मेघनाद सम सुभट उठे हरषाइ ।
झपटहिं टरै न कपि चरन पुनि बैठहिं सिर नाइ ॥ ३४ (क) ॥
भूमि न छाँड़त कपि चरन देखत रिपु मद भाग ।
कोटि बिघ्न ते संत कर मन जिमि नीति न त्याग ॥ ३४ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

kōṭinha mēghanāda sama subhaṭa uṭhē haraṣā'i.
jhapaṭahim ṭarai na kapi carana puni baiṭhahim sira nā'i. 34 (a).
bhūmi na chāṁṛata kapi carana dēkhata ripu mada bhāga.

kōṭi bighna tē santa kara mana jimi nīti na tyāga. 34 (b).

Countless numbers of excellent demon warriors, who were like Meghanad (Ravan's son) in their valour, strength, courage, marital skills and gallantry, cheerfully got up from their seats and lunged forward excitedly towards Angad, but no matter how hard they tried and what tactic they employed yet none of them were able to move his feet. At last, they returned to their seats and sat down (with a sullen face, a lowered head and a broken spirit that comes with abject defeat that was not at all expected, leaving all the demon warriors despondent, gloomy, dejected, crestfallen and ashamed of themselves). (Doha no. 34-a)

It was a profound mystery and a cause of great wonder for the demons that the monkey's legs did not move a bit from the earth on which they were planted. When the enemy ("ripu"; i.e. Ravana and his demons) observed all this development, its pride, ego and haughtiness ran away (i.e. was crushed and vanquished)¹.

Angad's feet did not move, but remained firmly planted on the ground, just like the case of a saint who remains steady in following his principles, and whose mind and heart (Mana) do not abandon the path of righteousness and auspiciousness, a path that is right and correct, inspite of all the provocations, adversities and hurdles he faces in life². (Doha no. 34-b)

[Note—¹To wit, when Ravana and all others saw that they could not move Angad's feet even for a fraction of measurement from the ground inspite of employing all their might, force and skill, their ego and pride were crushed; they felt utterly humiliated at their inability to move a leg of as humble a creature as a 'monkey'. To add salt to their wounds, this humiliation and defeat was made starker because they had pooled their strength and force to move a single challenger's legs, and surely the pushing, pulling and hauling must have been done with great energy and zeal, but yet they failed miserably. However the demons tried and tried, Angad's legs did not budge from their position on the ground.

The demons who prided themselves with possession of stupendous strength and powers against which not even the might of the gods survived, were, for the first time in their lives, faced with a situation that proved to them that there were forces stronger and mightier than them in this creation, and that for the first time they were up against a formidable adversary who presented a grave danger to their very existence, an adversary who was far more superior and powerful than them.

Hence their ego was crushed; their pride bit dust; their haughtiness was blown away like dried leaven in a storm; their strength and valour crumbled like nine-pins; and their morale sank in a deep dark pit of hopelessness, gloom and dejection.

²An exactly similar idea is expressed elsewhere in Ram Charit Manas, e.g. in (i) Aranya Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 46; and in (ii) Uttar Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 38.]

चौ०. कपि बल देखि सकल हियँ हारे । उठा आपु कपि कें परचारे ॥ १ ॥

गहत चरन कह बालिकुमारा । मम पद गहें न तोर उबारा ॥ २ ॥

गहसि न राम चरन सठ जाई । सुनत फिरा मन अति सकुचाई ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

kapi bala dēkhi sakala hiyaṁ hārē. uṭhā āpu kapi kēṁ paracārē. 1.
 gahata carana kaha bālikumārā. mama pada gahēṁ na tōra ubārā. 2.
 gahasi na rāma carana saṭha jāī. sunata phirā mana ati sakucāī. 3.

Seeing the Kapi's (Angad's; literally "monkey's") stupendous strength (which defied the combined strength of all the mighty demon warriors who had tried to move his leg), everyone felt defeated and gloomy in their hearts.

Meanwhile, Ravana now himself got up from his seat in a flurry (unable to contain his anger and frustration at his warriors who had put his honour to shame) to hold Angad by his legs and dash him to the ground¹. (1)

At the moment when Ravana caught Angad's foot (in an attempt to lift it), the latter sharply scorned at him and taunted: 'Look, you will not save yourself (and gain nothing) by holding my feet. (2)

Oh you big fool (saṭha)! Why don't you go and hold Lord Ram's feet instead!?'

Hearing these scornful words of Angad that were said with a grave tone, Ravana felt extremely peeved and ashamed of himself; he then somehow recovered himself from the shock and returned to his seat, ashen-faced and despondent². (3)

[Note—¹Surely enough, when Ravana saw what had happened, he must have burnt with anger inside himself. He must have cursed his warriors vehemently, and called them vile names. It was the greatest humiliation of his life, and he was unable to restrain himself. He was so overpowered by wrath and felt so much provoked and frustrated by the developments that his natural wisdom and prudence abandoned him, for he could not properly analyse the situation and what it meant. He ought to have pondered why none of the demon warriors could move Angad's feet; definitely there must be a mystery behind it, and the situation was very serious, and therefore it had to be handled very diplomatically and skilfully so that whatever was left of his honour could be salvaged.

When Death stares in one's face, when Providence frowns upon an unfortunate creature, when his Time seems to be up, then all his intelligence and wisdom and sense of judgement go for a toss. So, instead of exercising restraint and showing prudence by avoiding to put himself directly in harm's way and getting embroiled in a situation that would eliminate a last chance at face-saving, Ravana unfortunately decided, in a fitful frenzy of anger that eclipsed his wisdom, to jump into the same horrifying pit which had just a moment ago trounced all his predecessors, leaving them all scarred, defeated and humiliated like never before, without considering about the consequences of his rash decision.

²Angad had achieved his objective; Ravana hadn't foreseen it coming. At last, Angad succeeded in making Ravana—who had never ever bowed before anyone, but who had instead made the whole world bow before him—kneel down and touch his feet in order to move it from the ground.

This situation was akin to a defeated person kneeling down and praying for mercy by touching the feet of another person who had vanquished him; it is a token gesture that symbolises surrender and submission by someone who has been defeated by his opponent.

Ravana fell into this trap himself. Whatever little grace and honour and self-respect and dignity and majesty that were still available to him were now gone for good. Anger and delusions had clouded his mind so much that he couldn't think rationally. When Angad reminded him that he had fallen into the trap, with his taunting words, "you will not benefit by touching my feet, rather you should have gone to touch Lord Ram's feet", Ravana suddenly realised what grave mistake he had made. He regretted intensely and immensely at his own reckless actions, but by now it was too late to make any amends. The colourful balloon of honour, majesty, valour and pride had been punctured irreparably, and it cannot be inflated again to regain its earlier glory.

Ravana returned to his throne with a lowered head and a sulking countenance. His frame appeared like an old demon past his prime. He dragged his legs to take him to his seat. All the others in the assembly had their heads low, and even if some of these demons had raised their heads and eyes slyly to watch Ravana's daring, when they saw what happened they immediately fixed their eyes on the ground before them once again to pretend they had not witnessed Ravana's humiliation. Why? Because these demons knew Ravana's nature, that he would vent his anger and frustration at them, and in all probability if his eyes caught any one of them looking up at him then he would get that demon's eyes gouged out.

To wit, a deathly silence descended on the court of the demons. The developments so terrified and horrified all the demons that they were out of their wits; not one of them moved from his seat, as they remained sitting stone-still like so many statues that don't breathe.]

भयउ तेजहत श्री सब गई । मध्य दिवस जिमि ससि सोहई ॥ ४ ॥

सिंघासन बैठेउ सिर नाई । मानहुँ संपति सकल गँवाई ॥ ५ ॥ bhaya'u tējahata śrī saba gaī. madhya divasa jimi sasi sōhaī. 4.

siṅghāsana baiṭhē'u sira nāī. mānahuṁ sampati sakala gaṁvāī. 5.

Ravana's faces¹ that normally glowed with radiance that comes naturally to a person with exceptional power, majesty and self-confidence attained by great achievements and countless successes that he had obtained in life, which in their wake bring great glories and honours to him, had now turned dark and gloomy with a thick shadow of despondency, despair and hopelessness hanging over them. His faces lacked their original shine and glory just like the case of the moon which loses its radiance and charm when viewed during the day time². (4)

He (Ravana) sat down on his throne with drooping heads (and lost spirits) as if he had lost all his wealth and possessions³. (5)

[Note—¹Remember: Ravana had 'ten faces'.

²The moon looks so attractive and splendid during the night, but the same moon seems a faded image of its self when seen during the day time. Why so? It is because during the day the splendour, radiance and brilliance of the sun suppresses the shine of the moon, making it appear faded and overcast.

The analogy is remarkable here: Angad's trouncing of Ravana and his success in the mission for which he was sent by Lord Ram was reflected by the radiance and glow effusing from his proud face like the brilliant shine of the sun, while the gloomy thoughts clouding the mind of Ravana and the dejection of his spirits are indicated by the dark shadows of loss, despair and hopelessness showing on his faces as if they were veiled by dark clouds that reminded an observer of the moon which loses its shine in the presence of the brilliant midday sun.

³The countenance of Ravana was like that of a warrior who has lost the battle, or of a tradesman who has lost all his tools and assets. He had never tasted such humiliation in his life; for a great warrior of his stature there could have been nothing worse and more humiliating than being unable to meet such a simple challenge as the requirement of moving an adversary's legs. It was a ridiculous and a hilarious way of accepting defeat for as great a warrior as the king of the demon race whose mere name struck terror in the hearts of the entire world. It was the greatest ignominy and infamy that could have ever come to Ravana because he personally failed to meet Angad's simple challenge of moving his feet, something that required no great skill, power, gallantry and valour like it is required to face a challenge in the battle-field. So it was shame compounded many times over.

Even the burning of Lanka and the killing of his son Akshaya Kumar by Hanuman earlier had not caused such extreme distress in Ravana as this symbolic defeat for not being able to move Angad's foot, because this defeat was his personal defeat, it undermined his personal prestige, dignity and honour unlike on the previous occasion when he was spared this ignominy on the ground that his personal abilities and powers were not challenged and tested.

Verily, there is nothing worse for a warrior in his life, there is no greater loss that he can ever fear from in his life than to abjectly lose a challenge thrown by his opponent in the way Ravana miserably lost Angad's singularly simple-looking challenge of moving his foot from the ground, which by means was required any show of great marital art and valour.

For a warrior king, his self-respect, honour, dignity, majesty, strength and powers, as well as a grand reputation that he always wins a challenge and no one can defeat him, are his greatest assets and a matter of pride for him; if they are gone he has lost everything.

Ravana's shame was further compounded in the background of his boasting about his stupendous strength and astounding powers and great attainments and exalted position in this world just a few moments ago, for this inability to move Angad's foot blew away all his boast and bluster about his might and majesty like dry leaves in a storm. He felt crestfallen and humiliated like a defeated warrior, or a tradesman who has lost everything in a deal he was confident he would win hands down, but which, unfortunately for him, went sour.

Had he been more modest and restrained in his approach then perhaps his loss of face wouldn't have been so marked, but now it was in sharp contrast with his own tall claims. So therefore, Ravana's gloom and dejection are understandable.]

जगदातमा प्रानपति रामा । तासु बिमुख किमि लह बिश्रामा ॥ ६ ॥

उमा राम की भृकुटि बिलासा । होइ बिस्व पुनि पावइ नासा ॥ ७ ॥

तून ते कुलिस कुलिस तून करई । तासु दूत पन कहु किमि टरई ॥ ८ ॥ jagadātamā prānapati rāmā. tāsu bimukha kimi laha biśrāmā. 6.

umā rāma kī bhṛkuṭi bilāsā. hō'i bisva puni pāva'i nāsā. 7.

ṭṛṇa tē kulisa kulisa ṭṛṇa kara'ī. tāsu dūta pana kahu kimi ṭara'ī. 8.

[Lord Shiva, the principal narrator of this magnificent Story, observed—] ‘Verily indeed, Lord Ram is a personified form of the Supreme Soul of this creation (jagadātamā) and the Lord of Life (prānapati). How can anyone who is opposed to such an exalted and divine Lord ever expect to have peace for himself¹? (6)

Oh Uma (Shiva’s consort and the listener of this Story)! The whole world can be created or destroyed by the mere movement of Lord Ram’s eyebrows. Verily, it can be created anew and ended repeatedly by the Lord’s mere wish indicated by the movement of his brows implying that he wants change.² (7)

He (Lord Ram) who can transform a humble twig (or a soft blade of grass) into Vajra (something exceptionally hard and strong, such as rock, stone or diamond), and vice versa, say how is it possible to sway the vow and determination made by his chosen messenger?³ (8)

[Note—¹These few verses are sort of a pause in the flow of the current narrative as they refer to the observations made occasionally by Lord Shiva, who was the primary narrator of this glorious Story of the Ramayan, to his consort Uma who was listening to this narration.

Hence, it was Lord Shiva who said: “Well, Lord Ram is a personified form of the Supreme Being and the merciful Lord of the world; so say how anyone can hope to find happiness and peace if he opposes his own Lord?”

²To wit, since Lord Ram is the Supreme Being he is also the creator and lord of this universe. Therefore it is he alone who decides how long he wishes to keep this creation in its present shape. Should he decide to bring an end to his playful and creative activity, which in the first place had brought this creation into existence, he can do so as he is the only Lord and Master of this universe, one who had envisioned this creation, and to give effect to his ideas he then put the different elements together to give shape to this world, and when he so decides, by-and-by, to create a new world of a new kind, he would simply first end his earlier creation and start afresh.

The phrase “he can create and end the world by merely moving his eyebrows” is a symbolic way of saying that everything depends upon his wishes. If he frowns upon something he would end it; if he raises his brows it means some change is inevitable.

³A messenger, an ambassador, or an emissary represents his Lord and Master who has sent him. He has the same authority and discretionary powers as his Principal whom he represents. Anything the emissary does and any decision that he takes is deemed to be done by his Lord and Master, and the latter must honour all that his emissary does on his behalf. This is the accepted principle of state diplomacy. It can’t be a one-sided game—that the Master would honour his emissary’s actions if they are pleasing to him, and dishonour the actions if they displease him.

Therefore, whatever Angad did, whether right or wrong, were deemed to have been done by Lord Ram, because Angad represented the Lord and was acting on his behalf. Hence, Angad’s challenge—that if Ravana could move his foot then the latter would deem to have won the war, and as a consequence he would lose Sita and go back—had the same weight as a challenge thrown by Lord Ram himself by default.

The word used by Angad when he threw the aforementioned challenge was actually “I”. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-9 that precede Doha no. 34.}

This is very significant in the context of what is said currently. It proves that when Angad challenged Ravana and staked the outcome of the war on it, he was well aware of the fact that he is doing it not in his personal capacity but as the one who physically represents Lord Ram by default. Angad embodied the authority and the powers to make decision that Lord Ram possessed because the Lord had himself vested Angad with them. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 5-8 that precede Doha no. 17.}

This is why Ravana failed to move Angad’s foot, for otherwise it would have been equivalent to defying Lord Ram’s sacrosanct supremacy and authority in this world as its Supreme Lord. Ravana was not pitted against ‘a member of the monkey race whose name happened to be one Angad’, but he faced the authority and the might and the power of the ‘Supreme Being whom Angad represented in physical form’. Therefore, the prospect of Ravana ever being able to move Angad’s legs was simply unimaginable, simply unthinkable and simply impossible; the very idea that Ravana could move Angad’s foot is simply incongruous, simply incredulous, and simply outrageous.]

पुनि कपि कही नीति बिधि नाना । मान न ताहि कालु निअराना ॥ ९ ॥

रिपु मद मथि प्रभु सुजसु सुनायो । यह कहि चल्यो बालि नृप जायो ॥ १० ॥

puni kapi kahī nīti bidhi nānā. māna na tāhi kālu ni'arānā. 9.

ripu mada mathi prabhu sujasu sunāyō. yaha kahī calyō bālī nrpa jāyō. 10.

Even at this late stage, the Kapi (i.e. Angad) tried to advise Ravana in various ways to be reasonable and stop his belligerence. But as his (Ravana’s) death was nearing, he refused to listen to anything¹. (9)

[Finally Angad gave up his attempts.] After crushing the pride, arrogance, honour, dignity and self-respect of the enemy and making him hear the glories of Lord Ram, Angad prepared to leave the demon court and go back to the Lord. But before his departure, he said, --- (10)

[Note—¹This verse shows that after what had just happened, i.e. after the failure of all the demons to move Angad’s foot, he remained in the demon court for some more time, making a last effort to somehow make Ravana mend his ways. Angad hoped that after such a great humiliation as he had just faced, Ravana would come to his senses and realise that things are going against him, that the tide of time is not in his favour. But unfortunately, like a man destined to die refuses to take medicines, Ravana obstinately refused to listen anything Angad had to say.

From Ravana’s perspective it was expected that he would not listen anymore to Angad. After the humiliation and insult that Ravana suffered at the instance of Angad, it was impractical to expect the former that he would now heed to what the latter proposed, no matter how earnest Angad might have been, as it would be like Ravana putting salt with his own hands on his raw wounds. No one of any rudimentary self-respect and trace of dignity in him would accept a proposal from his adversary in an ugly, dishonourable and undignified situation in which Ravana found himself vis-à-vis Angad.]

हतौं न खेत खेलाइ खेलाई । तोहि अबहिं का करौं बड़ाई ॥ ११ ॥
 प्रथमहिं तासु तनय कपि मारा । सो सुनि रावन भयउ दुखारा ॥ १२ ॥
 जातुधान अंगद पन देखी । भय व्याकुल सब भए बिसेषी ॥ १३ ॥ hataum na khēta khēlā'i khēlā'ī. tōhi abahim kā karaum baṛā'ī. 11.

 prathamahim tāsū tanaya kapi mārā. sō suni rāvana bhaya'u dukhārā. 12.
 jātudhāna aṅgada pana dēkhī. bhaya byākula saba bha'e bisēṣī. 13.

I will not boast of anything (like you have been doing) until the time when I play around with you (kicking and punching you repeatedly) in the battle-field, before finally ending the game by killing you¹. (11)

When Ravana heard for the first time that his son had been killed by the Kapi (Angad)², he was overwhelmed with grief and felt extremely sad. (12)

Meanwhile, all the demons present on the occasion were greatly alarmed and felt immensely distressed due to fear when they heard Angad's vow (that he will kick Ravana around the battle-field till he dies)³. (13)

[Note—¹Angad said to Ravana: “My friend, I am not in the habit of talking much bluster and make tall claims like you. So it would not look good for me to say what I shall be doing to you in the battle-field to compensate for what I couldn't do now. Didn't I say a while ago that I would have liked to clobber you and bash all your ten heads and then dash you to the ground, and then throw your city of Lanka into the ocean had it not been for the restraint imposed upon me by Lord Ram, for he hasn't given his permission to do any such thing? {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 34.}

You seem to take me lightly; you think I am boasting; you think I am a pretentious and vain fellow who lies and talks too much as you are accustomed to doing. Ain't it? {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 31; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-7 that precedes Doha no. 34.}

Well, wait for some time till the war actually starts, and then you will see for yourself in the battle-field how boastful and pretentious I am. I promise you an exciting game when we two will face each other. At that time, play well and hard, for we have to prove ourselves; do you know what I shall be doing? I shall be chasing you around the battle-field just like a footballer chases the ball towards the goal, all the while kicking the poor ball with the tip and side of his boots. And do you know what or where the goal is where I will drive you? Well, it's to your death. But remember, it's going to be a painful death, and a humiliating one to boot. Do you know why? Would it not be a shameful thing for the 'mighty Ravana', whose mere name chilled the blood of the gods in their veins, to run around terrified in the battle-field, screaming and yelping in pain, breathless and panting, as he is chased by a humble 'monkey' by the name of Angad who would be breathing down his neck, kicking and punching him left and right, backward and forward, till the 'goal' is reached, when one final vicious kick by Angad will end the game for all times to come for Ravana?

My dear Ravana. What you've witnessed till now was just a glimpse of what is yet to come. You see, both of us are great warriors, and a good warrior worth his name and honour of his family is one who would like a level playing field with his opponent to decide who among the two is the winner in a duel. Your demon court is not surely a level playing field, for here you are a king sitting on a kingdom's throne, and I a mere messenger who stands before you to convey a message from my Lord Ram. The battle-field, on the other hand, is a completely different proposition, for it is an arena where there are the two challengers on the ground at the center, and they are surrounded by cheering spectators standing around them in a circle. Well, when we meet next in the battle-field, the demon army will be cheering for you, and I will be cheered by my friends in the Lord's army. It will be the time for us to showcase our respective skills and valour.

So now come on, brace yourself for the real game; girdle yourself for the real challenge. Moving my foot was an impossible task for thee here in the middle of your power center in your own palace, so I wonder what would thou doest when this power center would be an open field.

Mind you comrade; don't collapse out of exhaustion in the battle-field; keep your wits together and don't baulk when you see me in front of you then. Remember: all those whom you had kicked around and trounced all your life will be watching this game, and so be careful not to give them a chance to purse their lips in merriment and whistle at you, and hoot you at the top of their voices at the cost of your discomfort. So get ready to play hard-ball with me.

Your life has truly come full circle; first it was my father Baali who had trounced you, then in the interim period that followed that incident you had managed to reach for the sky in fame and glory, and now it's the time for Baal's on, that's me, to repeat what my father had done to you to show you your place under the sun by trouncing you once again and ending this game for good.

Goodbye for now; go and have a good night's sleep and relax. Get up refreshed tomorrow morning, for I shall be meeting you again in the arena of the battle-field."

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 2-7 that precede Doha no. 18. We note that all those demons who had witnessed the death of Ravana's son at the hands of Angad preferred to keep quiet because they feared a backlash from Ravana if he heard this bad news. They feared that Ravana was sure to punish all those demons who did not oppose Angad as he was kicking and dashing his son to death. So no one wanted to become a witness to this event.

Nevertheless, sooner or later the news had to reach Ravana through his spies. But by this time Angad had already crushed the dignity and pride and self-respect of all the mightiest of demons in Ravana's court, along with Ravana himself.

It may have been possible that the spy who took the news of death of Ravana's son to the court reached at a time when the high-pitched drama involving Angad was unfolding; so he preferred to keep quiet as the moment was not good for breaking this bad news. When he saw that Angad has left the court and a pall of gloomy silence has descended upon the assembly, he quietly went to Ravana and disclosed that his son had been killed by Angad before he came in his presence.

Ravana was already reeling from the thunderbolt that had struck him a moment ago, and this bad news of his son's death was like hitting a body that is already lying unconscious after being struck hard by the thunderbolt. He squirmed uncomfortably a bit, took a deep breath, and it was some time before the gravity of the bad news sank in his heart and affected his conscious mind. But he was, by this time, so shocked and smarting by the latest developments that his senses were dulled and rendered so unresponsive that he merely sulked and grieved instead of showing external signs of vicious anger or making an emotional outburst or expressing any outrage at the news that his son was killed by an intruder while none of the demons present at the time ventured to protect him. This was unpardonable.

Ordinarily, Ravana would have lost his temper and ordered immediate slaying of all the demons who were assigned the task of escorting his son as he went around the city. But this was no ordinary time. The wounds inflicted by Angad on Ravana's honour, majesty, pride and self-respect were so deep and grave that the news of his son's death was like another wound by the side of the others. Ravana was already suffering so intensely from grief and distress and despondency arising out of abject humiliation and insult and defeat that one more bad news didn't much aggravate anything for him.

He didn't yell and scream at the demon who broke the news of his son's death. He merely sulked further and sank deeper in grief.

Meanwhile, this verse clearly indicates that after warning Ravana of his fate in the battle-field, Angad had left the demon court to go back to Lord Ram. The spy, who brought the news of death of Ravana's son and was quietly waiting till the current proceedings of the court ended, then approached Ravana, and after excusing himself politely, he whispered the bad news in his ears.

Ravana sighed in distress and grieved at his son's death. What could he do? Misfortunes were lashing at him in endless waves, one after another, each graver than the previous one.

³In this testing time, each demon was concerned about his personal fate; everyone was submerged in his own gloomy thoughts so much that the bad news of the death of Ravana's son passed unnoticed, without arousing a tumult. At the most it was another sign of what was in store for all of them in the context of Angad's prophesy—that portended complete rout of the demon army and death to their chief commanders, including their king Ravana.

But this news—of death of another of Ravana's sons at the hands of Angad—was nothing new as previously another son of Ravana, named Akshaya Kumar, had also died in a similar way when he was killed by Hanuman. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 18.}

Therefore, this bad news did not cause much of a commotion in the court, as by this time Ravana as well as his courtiers had become accustomed to hearing worse news.]

दो०. रिपु बल धरषि हरषि कपि बालितनय बल पुंज ।

पुलक सरीर नयन जल गहे राम पद कंज ॥ ३५ (क) ॥

dōhā.

ripu bala dharaṣi haraṣi kapi bālitanaya bala puñja.
pulaka sarīra nayana jala gahē rāma pada kañja. 35 (a).

After having completely crushed the strength, power and valour (as well as the majesty, the dignity and the honour) of the enemy (Ravana), the Kapi—who was an embodiment of strength, courage and gallantry (bala puñja) and a son of Baali (“kapi bālitanaya”; i.e. Angad)—went back and submitted himself humbly at the feet of Lord Ram.

Buoyed by success, his (Angad’s) body was thrilled; his eyes were filled with tears (of joy); and he felt exceedingly exhilarated (at being able to fulfil the mandate given to him by the Lord)¹. (Doha no. 35-a)

[Note—¹When Hanuman had returned from Lanka after successful completion of the mission assigned to him—which was to find the whereabouts of Sita—a similar sight was witnessed; for Hanuman too had submitted himself humbly before the feet of Lord Ram, and his body was thrilled and exhilarated. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Doha no. 32 along with Chaupai line no. 1 that follows it.}]

-----**-----

Section 13.2: Geetawali Ramayan

Now we shall take a pause to rewind a little bit by way of seeing how one of other Tulsidas’ great works known as ‘Geetwali Ramayan’ describes this conference between Angad and Ravana in its Lanka Kand, verse nos. 2-4 as follows:-

अंगदका दूतकर्म
राग कान्हरा

(6/2)

तू दसकंठ भले कुल जायो ।
ता महेँ सिव—सेवा, बिरंचि—बर, भुजबल बिपुल जगत जस पायो ॥ 1 ॥
खर—दूषन—त्रिसिरा, कबंध रिपु जेहि बाली जमलोक पढायो ।
ताको दूत पुनीत चरित हरि सुभ संदेस कहन हौं आयो ॥ 2 ॥
श्रीमद नृप—अभिमान मोहबस, जानत अनजानत हरि लायो ।
तजि ब्यलीक भजु कारुनीक प्रभु, दे जानकिहि सुनहि समुझायो ॥ 3 ॥
जातें तव हित होइ, कुसल कुल, अचल राज चलिहै न चलायो ।
नाहित रामप्रताप—अनलमहेँ है पतंग परिहै सठ धायो ॥ 4 ॥
जद्यपि अंगद नीति परम हित कह्यो, तथापि न कछु मन भायो ।
तुलसिदास सुनि बचन क्रोध अति, पावक जरत मनहु घृत नायो ॥ 5 ॥

aṅgadakā dūtakarma
rāga kānharā

(6/2)

tū dasakaṇṭha bhalē kula jāyō.
tā maham̐ siva-sēvā, birañci-bara, bhujabala bipula jagata jasa pāyō.. 1..
khara-dūṣana-trisirā, kabandha ripu jēhi bālī jamalōka paṭhāyō.
tākō dūta punīta carita hari subha sandēsa kahana haur̐ āyō.. 2..
śrīmada nṛpa-abhimāna mōhabasa, jānata anajānata hari lāyō.
taji byalīka bhaju kārunīka prabhu, dē jānakihi sunahi samujhāyō.. 3..
jātēṁ tava hita hō'i, kusala kula, acala rāja calihai na calāyō.
nāhita rāmapratāpa-analamaham̐ hvai pataṅga parihai saṭha dhāyō.. 4.. jadyapi aṅgada nīti parama hita kahyō, tathāpi na kachu mana bhāyō.
tulasidāsa suni bacana krōdha ati, pāvaka jarata manahu ghṛta nāyō.. 5..

Angad as an Emissary of Lord Ram in the court of Ravana-I

Verse no. 6/2—[Lord Ram himself wished to avoid the bloody war at all costs. So he sent Angad, Sugriv's nephew and one of the chief commanders of the Lord's army and his faithful follower, as a diplomatic emissary in a last-ditch attempt to see if the war can be avoided and Sita can be retrieved without bloodshed.

The conversation between Angad and Ravana was very acrimonious and full of vitriol. It is narrated here in (i) Geetawali, Lanka Kand, in verse nos. 6/2—6/4, as well as in (ii) Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 17—to Doha no. 35 ka; and (iii) Kavitawali, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 6/9—6/16.

When Angad entered Lanka, its citizens were terrified to their bones, as everyone thought that the fellow who had burnt the city earlier (i.e. Hanuman) has come again. He was given a clear way to the court of Ravana, as no one dared to resist him for fear of his life. Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-10 that precede Doha no. 18.

Once there, what transpired is being narrated herein below.]

Addressing Ravana, Angad said—‘Oh Ravana! You are born in a good race and clan (because Ravana was born in the Brahmin race in the clan of sage Pulastya). Besides this, you have received a boon from Lord Brahma by worshipping him, and you have also acquired great fame in this world by worshipping Lord Shiva, and also through the various victories achieved by the means of your arm's strength¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 3-4 that precede Doha no. 20.]

I am a messenger of Lord Hari who has an excellent character and noblest of virtues (punīta carita hari). The Lord is the one who has slayed the demon such as Khar, Dushan, Trishara and Kabandha etc., and enemies such as Baali², and has sent them to the abode of the God of death known as Yam.

I have come to convey the Lord's auspicious message to you. [It is for your good, and its content is in accordance with the principles of probity and propriety.] (2).

[²Refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/1, stanza nos. 4-5.]

Either due to ignorance, or misled due to false pride of your fame and your crown (kinghood of Lanka), you have kidnapped Sita³.

Now you should heed my advice and return her to Lord Ram, and setting aside all deceit and mischief, chant the holy name of Sri Hari (Lord Ram) who is all merciful⁴ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 20.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 20 along with its preceding Chaupai line nos. 6-8.]

By doing this you will benefit, your clan will have welfare and be alright, and your kingdom would become invincible and stable. Otherwise, oh you fool, you demons will burn yourselves in the fire of Lord Ram's valour and glory (and his wrath)⁵ (4).'

[⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-7 that precede Doha no. 27.]

Though Angad gave sane and wise council to Ravana, but he did not like it. Tulsidas says that he grew furious as if clarified butter (or ghee) had been added to a raging fire, making it burn more viciously and ferociously. [To wit, Ravana took umbrage at what Angad said.]⁶ (5).

[⁶Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 27.]

(6 / 3)

तैं मेरो मरम कछू नहिं पायो ।
 रे कपि कुटिल ढीठ पसु पाँवर! मोहि दास-ज्यों डाटन आयो ॥ 1 ॥
 भ्राता कुंभकरन रिपुघातक, सुत सुरपतिहि बंदि करि ल्यायो ।
 निज भुजबल अति अतुल कहौं क्यों, कंदुक ज्यों कैलास उढायो ॥ 2 ॥
 सुर, नर, असुर, नाग, खग, किंनर सकल करत मेरो मन भयो ।
 निसिचर रुचिर अहार मनुज-तनु, ताको जस खल! मोहि सुनायो ॥ 3 ॥
 कहा भयो, बानर सहाय मिलि, करि उपाय जो सिंधु बँधायो ।
 जो तरिहै भुज बीस घोर निधि, ऐसो को त्रिभुवनमें जायो ? ॥ 4 ॥
 सुनि दससीस-बचन कपि-कुंजर बिहँसि ईस-मायहि सिर नायो ।
 तुलसिदास लंकेस कालबस गनत न कोटि जतन समझायो ॥ 5 ॥

(6/3)

taiṁ mērō marama kachū nahim pāyō.
 rē kapi kuṭila ḍhīṭha pasu pāmvara! mōhi dāsa-jyōm ḍāṭana āyō.. 1.. bhrātā kumbhakarana ripughāṭaka, suta surapatihi bandi kari lyāyō.

nija bhujabala ati atula kahaurṁ kyōm, kanduka jyōm kailāsa uṭhāyō.. 2..
 sura, nara, asura, nāga, khaga, kinnara sakala karata mērō mana bhayō.
 niscara rucira ahāra manuḥa-tanu, tākō jasa khala! mōhi sunāyō.. 3.. kahā bhayō, bānara sahāya mili, kari upāya jō sindhu baṁdhāyō.
 jō tarihai bhuja bīsa ghōra nidhi, aisō kō tribhuvanamēm jāyō?.. 4.. suni dasasīsa-bacana kapi-kumjara bihaṁsi īsa-māyahi sira nāyō.
 tulasidāsa laṅkāsa kālabasa ganata na kōṭi jatana samajhāyō.. 5..

Angad as an Emissary of Lord Ram in the court of Ravana-II

Verse no. 6/3—[When Angad had praised the glories of Lord Ram and pleaded with Ravana not to be so reckless and boisterous, and plunge into a destructive war for no reason or rhyme, and to give Sita back to the Lord and make peace with him, Ravana retorted haughtily and talked about his own strengths, valour, powers and glories, as if to answer Angad and warn him that this time his Lord, of whom he has glorified so much, has met his match, and that he, Ravana, is not a meek straw as to be carried away or bend with the slightest draft of wind. Refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 21; (ii) Doha no. 25 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it; and (iii) Doha no. 27—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 28.]

[Ravana replied to Angad—] ‘Oh you wicked, stubborn and lowly monkey (rē kapi kuṭila ḍhīṭha). You have not at all realised my influence and powers. Oh you lowly and sinful animal (pasu pāṁvara)! This is why you have come to admonish and discourse me with a lecture as if I were your slave (or servant, subservient to you)¹ (1).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 21.]

Don't you know? My brother is Kumbhakarn, who is a renowned destroyer of enemies, and my son (called Indrajeet) had captured and brought the king of Gods (Indra) himself bound in shackles. What much can I say about my matchless strength of arms which had lifted Mt. Kailash (the abode of Lord Shiva) like it were a mere ball² (2).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, line no. 1 of Doha no. 27.]

Gods, humans, demons, serpents (and all the creatures of the subterranean and nether worlds), and the Kinnars (a special type of demi-gods who are said to be celestial singers and dancers)—all of them follow my wishes³.

Oh you wicked rascal (khala)! The human body is a staple and delicious food for the demons. And you are trying to make me hear his (Sri Ram's) glories and fames (whose body is naught aught but of a human being)⁴ (3).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 2-4 that precede Doha no. 8; (ii) Doha no. 25 along with Chaupai line nos. 1-8 that precede it; (iii) line no. 2 of Doha no. 27.

⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 8.]

Even if he has taken the help of monkeys, made efforts and has crossed the ocean, so what; how and what does it matter? But (the ocean your Lord has crossed is merely a body of water, but tell me) who has been born in any of the three worlds (tribhuvana) who could cross the ocean represented by (the valour and strength of) my 20 arms⁵? (4).’

[⁵Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-6 that precede Doha no. 28.

The “three worlds” known as “tribhuvana” consists of the three levels of this creation—viz. the heavens, the earth, and the nether world.]

Hearing these arrogant, haughty and irreverent words of Ravana, Angad, who was the lion amongst monkeys (kapi-kumjara), smiled and bowed his head to (i.e. marveled at) the delusory powers of the Supreme Being (bihaṁsi īsa-māyahi sira nāyō)⁶.

Tulsidas says that Angad tried millions of ways (i.e. all possible methods and arguments were employed by him) to make Ravana see reason (and return Sita, make peace with Sri Ram, and avoid a calamitous war), but under the influence of death (Kaal) as he was, Ravana did not pay any attention (5).

[⁶Angad sighed and felt amused at the delusions that the Lord creates. The power of the Lord makes a creature hallucinate and have a false notion of his own grandeur and majesty as well as of his invincibility and strength inspite of clear evidence to the contrary. Ravana, being a king of the demon race, was supposed to be intelligent, wise and practical enough, as all kings are expected to be, to have realised the consequences of fighting a war of which the result was a foregone conclusion. He should have been alarmed especially after having experienced what havoc Hanuman had earlier caused to Lanka by burning it to ashes. He had also known how the other demons who had tried to act smart with Lord Ram earlier had met their death: there were a number of them, viz. Tadaka, Subahu, Marich, Khar, Dushan, Kabandh, Viradh etc. (refer: Geetawali, Lanka Kand, verse no. 6/1).

But even in the face of such obvious and incontrovertible signs of impending devastation, Ravans remains stubborn under delusions of his own strength and invincibility. Instead of being prudent and making peace with Ram, he adopted a stubborn and a confrontational attitude.]

(6 / 4)

सुनु खल ! मैं तोहि बहुत बुझायो ।
 एतो मान सठ ! भयो मोहबस, जानतहू चाहत बिष खायौ ॥ १ ॥
 जगत-बिदित अति बीर बालि-बल जानत हौ, किधौ अब बिसरायो ।
 बिनु प्रयास सोउ हत्यो एक सर, सरनागतपर प्रेम देखायो ॥ २ ॥
 पावहुगे निज करम-जनित फल, भले ठौर हठि बैर बढ़ायो ।
 बानर-भालु चपेट लपेटिन मारत, तब हैहै पछितायो ॥ ३ ॥
 हौं ही दसन तोरिबे लायक, कहा करौं, जो न आयसु पायो ।
 अब रघुबीर-बान-बिदलित उर सोवहिगो रनभूमि सुहायो ॥ ४ ॥
 अबिचल राज बिभीषनको सब, जेहि रघुनाथ-चरन चित लायो ।
 तुलसिदास यहि भाँति बचन कहि गरजत चल्थो बालि-नृप जायो ॥ ५ ॥

(6/4)

sunu khala! mair̥m tōhi bahuta bujhāyō.
 ētō māna saṭha! bhayō mōhabasa, jānatahū cāhata biṣa khāyau.. 1.. jagata-bidita ati bīra bāli-bala jānata hau, kidhaur̥m aba bisarāyō.
 binu prayāsa sō'u hatyō ēka sara, saranāgatapara prēma dēkhāyō.. 2.. pāvahugē nija karama-janita phala, bhalē ṭhaura haṭhi baira baṛhāyō.
 bānara-bhālu capēṭa lapēṭina mārata, taba hvaihai pachitāyō.. 3..
 haur̥m hī dasana tōribē lāyaka, kahā karaur̥m, jō na āyasu pāyō.
 aba raghubīra-bāna-bidalita ura sōvahigō ranabhūmi suhāyō.. 4.. abicala rāja bibhīṣanakō saba, jēhi raghunātha-carana cita lāyō.
 tulasidāsa yahi bhāṁti bacana kahi garajata calyō bāli-nṛpa jāyō.. 5..

Angad as an Emissary of Lord Ram in the court of Ravana-III

Verse no. 6/4—[In stanza no. 5 of verse no. 6/3 herein above, we have read how Angad smiled and bowed his head at the delusions that the Lord creates in the minds of those who are in the final throes of death. In this verse we read Angad's angry reply to Ravana. In this context, refer also to: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 24 along with Chaupai line nos. 12-16 that precede it; (ii) Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 24—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 31; (iii) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 33—to Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 34; (iv) Chaupai line nos. 6-13 that precede Doha no. 35.]

Angad said once again (as a rebuke and retort to Ravana's haughty talk), 'You wicked rascal, listen (sunu khala)! I tried to make you see reason (which would have saved you from destruction), but out of delusion you have become so haughty and arrogant that you willfully wish to eat poison (1).

Don't you remember the world famous warrior Baali, or have you forgotten him? Look, Lord Ram killed him by a single arrow¹, and showed affection towards Sugriv who had sought his (Lord Ram's) refuge (2).

[¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Sortha/Doha no. 33 ka.]

You would also follow suit: for in all sooth you have dug your own grave by making Lord Ram an enemy! Now, during the battle, when you'll be thrashed and pounded and pulverized by monkeys and bears, then you'll repent (but it would be too late by then)² (3).

[²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-7 that precede Sortha/Doha no. 33.]

I am capable of knocking off your teeth; but I have not got this command from Lord Ram, and I am so sorry I couldn't do it (knock your teeth off)³! Now soon you'll lie down in the battlefield on being perforated by Lord Ram's arrows⁴ (4).

[³Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 34.

[⁴Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 8-9 that precede Sortha/Doha no. 33.]

Your kingdom would be given to Vibhishan who has diverted his mind to Lord Ram's holy feet and has developed devotion for them (i.e. for Lord Ram himself).'

Tulsidas says, after saying such harsh words of warning and reproach, Angad departed from there, roaring loudly (5).

-----**-----

Part 5

The War Begins: The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces and the Horrors of War; The Sack of Lanka; Death of Kumbhakaran and Meghanad;
The Battle with Ravana and His Death.

Introduction:

Now we shall begin with the narration of the Epic War of Lanka that ravaged the once beautiful city of gold called Lanka which was ruled by Ravana, the king of the proud demon race, and a magnificent city that was not only a pride of the demon race on earth but rivalled even the city of gods in heaven, called Alka Puri where their king Indra ruled, in its splendour and glory.

This blood-curdling war led to the death of all the cruel and sinful demons, including Ravana, the famed and brave king of the demon race, along with his close associates as well as family members such as his son Meghnad, who had once vanquished Indra, the king of gods, during his heydays of power and fame, and Kumbhakaran who was Ravana's brother, and equally powerful and strong as him.

Only Vibhishan survived the war, and it was because he had been wise and prudent to leave his sinful family and take refuge with Lord Ram.

The primary reason why this war was made necessary in the first place was to free the earth from the horrors created by the demons, to free the creatures of this world from the constant torments caused to them by the demons, and to restore the balance in favour of the virtues of goodness and righteousness that had been severely disturbed by the onslaught of the demons who threw their weight against these virtues and favoured negative causes of evilness, vices and sinfulness by the sheer force of their might. The victory of Lord Ram in this epic war symbolised the end of tyranny and neutralisation of the negative forces of sinfulness, evilness and vices. It marked the restoration of peace and order in the world, of the victory of good over bad, so that the Lord's creation and its creatures could live an orderly life with peace.

After all, this was the primary reason why Lord Vishnu had to come down to earth in a human form as Lord Ram. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Doha no. 187.}

But to achieve this noble objective the Lord had to plan carefully because of the many boons Ravana had been granted by the creator Brahma as well as Lord Shiva to him which made him virtually invincible. One such strategy was to get the Lord's wife Sita kidnapped by Ravana so that the Lord would get an excuse to get rid of her abductor and tormentor in order to free her from his captivity. That is in fact the reason why Ravana failed to listen to all advice to give Sita back to Lord Ram so as to avoid the destructive war—because the Lord himself did not want it, for if Ravana had returned Sita it would have pre-empted the Lord's effort to eliminate the scourge of the demons. In order to give effect to his planning, Lord Ram, who was a personified form of Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, employed his cosmic powers to create delusions, the power that is known as 'Maya', which cast its spell upon Ravana's wisdom and clouded his thinking so much that he failed to see things distinctly like a man who is hallucinating.

Therefore, the other objective of the war, which was to free Sita from the clutches of her tormentor Ravana, too was fulfilled when Lord Ram attained victory and Ravana was killed.

In order to comprehensively describe this Epic War in vivid details and at the same time help the reader to clearly mark its landmark events, we shall structure our narrative in the form of following five Chapters:

Chapter 14: The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces—The Horrifying and Blood-Curdling War between the Demons and the Army of Monkeys and Bears; The Sack of Lanka begins; The Ravages of War.

Chapter 15: The first round of Battle with Meghnad leading to Laxman's fainting.

Chapter 16: Battle with Kumbhakaran and His Death.

Chapter 17: The second round of Battle with Meghnad and His Death.

And, Chapter 18: The Final Battle with Ravana and His Death.

That said, now let us begin with the narrative.

Chapter 14

The Attack by Lord Ram's Forces—The Horrifying and Blood-Curdling War between the Demons and the Army of Monkeys and Bears; The Sack of Lanka begins; The Ravages of War.

When Angad returned and briefed Lord Ram about what transpired in the court of Ravana, saying in essence that his mission to find a peaceful way to end the logjam had failed because Ravana was not ready to relent, the Lord gave instructions to his commanders to prepare to launch the war.

The Lord's army was divided into four main segments, each headed by a senior commander. This was done because the fort of Lanka had four gates, and therefore each division of the Lord's army was to attack a gate assigned to it, and breach its defenses to enter through it. The monkeys and bears were already so excited and rearing for action that restraining them was in itself a difficult task till now, so as soon as the green signal to attack was given, there was nothing stopping them; all hell appeared to break loose. This formidable, ferocious and powerful army of Lord Ram thundered and roared and yelled and chuckled with a deafening sound as they fiercely lunged forward for the attack on the fort of Lanka; they resembled a huge bank of dark doomsday clouds ascending rapidly from the horizon to descend on the capital city of the demons to cover the whole place in a dark shroud of death and destruction.

This army so overwhelmed the demons that when it arrived they panicked. There was a huge tumult in Lanka; demon females and children wailed and screamed; demon warriors grabbed their weapons and dashed forward to meet the invading army head-on.

Ravana ordered his demon warriors to go after the monkeys and bears like a pack of hungry and famished wolves; to tear them apart and leave no one alive. Hence, the first wave of clashes betwixt Lord Ram's army and Ravana's army were like two cymbals being clanged energetically, or like two muscular and angry lions having a fierce face-off. Each side was cheering its Lord; the demons hailed Ravana while the monkeys and bears hailed Lord Ram.

In the midst of this uproarious scene, a demon named Malyawant, who was the maternal grandfather of Ravana, tried to persuade him for one last time to come to his senses and not become the destroyer of his own race. But as was expected, he wouldn't listen.

The War of Lanka has been vividly described by Goswami Tulsidas in his two classical works, viz. Ram Charit Mana and Kavitawali Ramayan. However, the mayhem and devastation unleashed by the army of monkeys and bears which went berserk in Lanka, plundering and ransacking the city of the demons once thought to be impregnable and immune to any misfortune, because 'misfortune' itself felt terrified of Ravana to ever cast its evil eye on his city, is not described more better, in greater graphis detail, and in a better poetic way, as is done by Tuslidas in 'Kavitawali Ramayan'. Besides reading them we shall also be reading from Veda Vyas' classical narration of this epic Story in Adhyatma Ramayan.

As we move along with the narration, we shall also include 'Geetawali Ramayan' in subsequent chapters as we have been doing earlier in our Book. This approach with the narration of the Epic War of Lanka from all these four classics mentioned here will make our own narrative very fascinating and interesting to read.

Meanwhile, for the purpose of describing the opening scenes of the war front and the first wave of the attack on Lanka which is the subject matter in this Chapter no. 14, we shall divide it into the following three Sections:

(i) Section 14.1—Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 49.

(ii) Section 14.2 Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 25-64.

(iii) Section 14.3 Kavitawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 30-51.

-----**-----

Section 14.1: Ram Charit Manas

Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Chanda line nos. 1-4 that precedes Doha no. 49:-

इहाँ राम अंगदहि बोलावा । आइ चरन पंकज सिरु नावा ॥ ३ ॥ अति आदर समीप बैठारी । बोले बिहँसि कृपाल खरारी ॥ ४ ॥ ihāṁ rāma aṅgadahi bōlāvā. ā'i carana paṅkaja siru nāvā. 3.

ati ādara samīpa baiṭhārī. bōlē bihaṁsi kṛpāla kharārī. 4.

[We now resume the Story by picking up the thread from where we had left it earlier, i.e. from the point where Angad left Ravana's court to return to his own camp—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 35-a.

After leaving Ravan's court, Angad returned to his own camp. When Lord Ram was informed of his arrival, he called Angad and affectionately made him sit very close to him and report about the developments so that the next course of action can be decided upon.]

Here (i.e. on Mt. Subel, where the army of monkeys and bears had made their camp), Lord Ram called Angad¹. The latter went and reverentially bowed his head at the feet of the Lord. (3)

To show great affection and honour to Angad, Lord Ram, who was the slayer of the demon named Khar (kṛpāla kharārī), asked him most respectfully² to sit down near him, and then the Lord said to him, --- (4)

[Note—¹Upon his return from Lanka, Angad did not go straight to Lord Ram, but sent someone to inform the Lord of his arrival. Why did Angad refrain from going straight to the Lord? One, he wished to observe protocol, and it required him to first send a message that he has come back to report to the Lord, and now he seeks an appointment. Two, Angad was not sure if his mission would be considered as successful or failure by the Lord, so he wished to first send a feeler through a messenger to inform the Lord of his arrival from Lanka so that this messenger could come back and inform Angad how the Lord reacted at this news.

Why was Angad doubtful about the success of his mission? It is because Angad had failed to persuade Ravana to return Sita to Lord Ram and avoid the devastating war inspite of his best efforts. He compared the result of his own mission with that of Hanuman: in the case of Hanuman the mission was successful because Sita had been found by him, but in his own case it could be regarded as not being completely successful because Ravana could not be persuaded to give Sita back and avoid the war.

Besides this, he was not sure if Lord Ram had liked his action of kicking Ravana's crowns without permission. But in this regard Angad felt that it would be alright with the Lord, for he had not been annoyed with Hanuman when told that the latter had burnt the city of Lanka without the Lord's express permission. When a messenger, an envoy or an emissary is sent on a mission by his master, a lot of discretion and authority is given to him to deal with the situation on the ground as he deems fit and necessary, as everything can't be foretold and planned in advance. A good master or lord is one who gladly accepts what his ambassador has done and said. The only thing that the master would like to consider to judge his emissary's performance is the latter's integrity and loyalty to him, and see that the emissary has done nothing that undermines the master's honour or sacrificed his interests.

Both Hanuman and Angad had scored perfectly on these counts. So Lord Ram had been pleased with both of them when they came to report to him.

To wit, when Angad was called by Lord Ram and shown special respect and honour, he felt very reassured that the Lord has not deemed his mission a failure or was annoyed with him in the least. On the other hand, the Lord's warm welcome of Angad clearly hinted that the Lord was fully pleased with him. At the time of sending Angad as his emissary, the Lord had given him a lot of discretion and the authority to use his own wisdom according to the situation[#], so he was within his right in doing what he did as long as he had proved himself loyal to the Lord, and protected his honour and cause. {#Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 17.}

The main aim of Lord Ram in sending Angad as an emissary to Ravana was to prevent anyone saying at a later date that the Lord did not attempt to solve the vexed issue in a peaceful way, though if this matter had been sorted out peacefully, and without the war that led to the slaying of Ravana and his cruel demon hordes, then the very purpose of Lord Vishnu coming down as Lord Ram would have been defeated. For, after avoiding death, Ravana would have laid low for some time, and then would have resumed his old sinful and cruel ways once again, who knows not with a vengeance. The torments and horrors of the demon race that had made Mother Earth and the Gods pray to Lord Vishnu to save them would have continued unabated.

The question is: If this is the case, if Lord Ram actually wanted to use this excuse of Ravana abducting Sita to get rid of the menace of the demons, then why did choose to send an emissary to Ravana to find a peaceful way to end the confrontation, instead of going headlong into the war and slaying Ravana?

The answer is this: Lord Ram is an ocean of mercy, compassion, kindness and grace, he is benevolent and magnanimous, he is forgiving and tolerant, he treats everyone alike. So he wished to give every possible chance to Ravana to improve himself and mend his vile ways. One sure indication of it would be his willingness to see his own fault and be ready to repent and apologize, not letting his ego and pride come in the way of repentance for wrong done, and promising to improve himself and not commit evil deeds in the future. By offering to make truce with Lord Ram, surely Ravana would have had to accept the Lord's terms for peace, which obviously would have included, inter alia, a vow to stop his sinful and cruel ways forthwith, and to desist from terrorizing and tormenting the world henceforth.

Ravana's refusal to make peace with Lord Ram was therefore in line with the Lord's wish and real objective—which was to eliminate Ravana along with his ferocious demons once and for all. Hence, there was no reason why Angad's failure to persuade Ravana to make peace would at all annoy Lord Ram; rather, the Lord was glad that no such truce was made.

This is the reason why Lord Ram “smiled” when he asked Angad to give details of his adventure (bōlē bihaṁsi).

²Lord Ram had many things in mind when he showed affection, respect and honour to Angad by receiving him warmly and making him sit very close. The Lord wanted to clearly tell everyone that he loves Angad as much as he loves Hanuman, and especially because his father Baali, at the time of his death, had entrusted Angad's future in the hands of the Lord by making him his son's guardian—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 10.

The Lord had shown great affection to Hanuman when he came back from Lanka with the news that Sita has been found—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 30; and (ii) once again in Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 33. Now, at that time Angad was watching how the Lord showered great honour, respect and affection on Hanuman. He (Angad) felt sad in his heart; he thought to himself that if it had been him, instead of his friend Hanuman, who had been successful in doing Lord Ram's work, then it would have given him a chance of receiving the same honours and love that the Lord now gives Hanuman. Angad's heart was very happy; he felt he did not live up to the Lord's expectation; he felt that now onwards, Hanuman would be treated with favour by the Lord.

Lord Ram is all-knowing and omniscient; he knows the very thought and the emotions of a creature as soon as they arise in his mind and heart. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 17.}

This being so, the Lord immediately realised that Angad was feeling sad and heart-broken. 'Well', the Lord decided in his own heart, 'I will compensate Angad for this. Next time I shall send him as my emissary, and when he comes back I'll show him affection and honour no less than what I have shown to Hanuman. Nay, I'll show him a bit more of it, because I owe this to him as his father has made me his guardian.' This is why Lord Ram showed Angad 'great respect and honour, while making him sit close to him' (ati ādara samīpa baithārī).

Lord Ram also wished to tell Angad not to be afraid that he failed in his mission of persuading Ravana to give Sita back to the Lord and avoid the war, and that his action of kicking Ravana's four crowns and sending them flying over to land at the feet of the Lord was uncalled for and an indecent behaviour for a messenger. Perhaps this is the reason why Angad did not go directly to Lord Ram after returning from Lanka, but had to be called by the Lord to give his report (ihāñ rāma aṅgadahi bōlāvā).

The third reason for this especial show of 'great respect and honour' by the Lord to Angad is that the latter was a "prince" of the kingdom of Kishkindha, and not an ordinary member of the army. Even Hanuman, who was the Lord's favourite warrior, was not a prince; whereas Angad was. Hence he deserved some special treatment, some more respect and honour as compared to others. The other exception for this special treatment was Sugriv because he was the 'king' of the monkey kingdom of Kishkindha.

It ought to be noted that though Lord Ram showed affection to both Hanuman and Angad, there was a bit of a difference between the two. For one, Angad had Lord Ram's special sympathy and empathy because he was orphaned due to the death of his father Baali. Secondly, Lord Ram was made Angad's guardian by Baali at the time of his death, a responsibility which the Lord had to fulfil under all circumstances; so therefore Lord Ram treated Angad as his foster son. Hanuman too had been elevated to this exalted position because Sita had also addressed him as her son. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 16.} But that was after Hanuman had repeatedly addressed Sita as "mother". {For instance, refer to:

Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Doha no. 14 along with Chaupai line nos. 9-10 that precede it; (ii) Doha no. 15; (iii) Chaupai line no. 3 that precedes Doha no. 16.} Yet, Hanuman was not 'orphaned' like Angad.

The fourth reason why Lord Ram showed such preferential treatment to Angad is that inspite of Ravana's repeated provocation by way of reminding Angad of his father Baali* so that deep in his heart his suppressed resentment against those who caused his father's death, i.e. Lord Ram and Sugriv, would burst out into the open, leading to Angad deserting Lord Ram's cause, had failed, and Angad remained steadfast in his devotion and loyalty to the Lord. {*Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 21; (ii) Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 24; (iii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 34.}

So Lord Ram had a softer corner for Angad in his heart that no one else could replace. The Lord wished to tell Angad that he must never feel isolated, and never hesitate to approach the Lord, for he (Lord Ram) has great respect and affection for him. And in order to hint it, the Lord overtly showed 'great respect and honour to Angad and made him sit close to him as he would have sat his own son'.]

बालितनय कौतुक अति मोही । तात सत्य कहु पूछउँ तोही ॥ ५ ॥
 रावनु जातुधान कुल टीका । भुज बल अतुल जासु जग लीका ॥ ६ ॥ तासु मुकुट तुम्ह चारि चलाए । कहहु तात कवनी बिधि पाए ॥ ७ ॥ bālitanaya kautuka ati mōhī. tāta satya kahu pūcha'um̐ tōhī. 5. rāvanu jātudhāna kula ṭikā. bhuja bala atula jāsu jaga līkā. 6.

 tāsu mukuṭa tumha cāri calā'ē. kahahu tāta kavanī bidhi pā'ē. 7.

[Lord Ram said to Angad—] 'Oh son of Baali (bālitanaya)! I am very amazed¹ about one thing and am curious to learn more about it. So, oh my dear (tāta), I request you to tell me the truth. (5)

Ravana is the most acclaimed and the bravest member of the demon race, and he is famous in the world for the strength of his arms which has no match or parallel anywhere. (6)

You had sent four of his crowns rolling here²; this is an amazing and astounding feat. So my dear (tāta), I do really (appreciate your wondrous feat and I) wish to know how you managed to do it; how you managed to first get hold of them, and then send them rolling here.' (7)

[Note—¹Many unprecedented and amazing things have occurred in this Lanka Kand besides the one Lord Ram refers to presently: Angad kicking the four crowns of Ravana, and sending them rolling over to Lord Ram.

To begin with, the first was the construction of the floating bridge measuring a distance of 100 Yojans (800 miles approx.) across the choppy surface of the water of the ocean. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 1—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 2.}

The next astonishing feat was how a single arrow shot by Lord Ram, almost casually from his camp on Mt. Subel, had gone and precisely struck the ten crowns on Ravana's head, as well as his wife Mandodari's earrings, making them all fall to the ground, and then, wonder of wonders, this arrow came back to enter Lord Ram's quiver. The greatest wonder in this incident is that it was night time, and to shoot an arrow so precisely in the dark is absolutely stunning and truly amazing. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 13 along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes it.}

The third miraculous and unbelievable thing is that none of the mighty demons, who had prided themselves for their stupendous muscular strength and astounding physical powers, who had conquered the whole world and ran through the heaven like an unstoppable juggernaut, hadn't been able to move the foot of Angad when he planted them on the ground, no matter how hard they had tried, individually and jointly. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 34—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 35.}

Likewise, many amazing deeds were done and many stunning feats were accomplished during the course of the war which we shall be reading by-and-by.

²Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 32-a along with Chaupai line nos. 3-10 that precede it.]

सुनु सर्बग्य प्रनत सुखकारी । मुकुट न होहिं भूप गुन चारी ॥ ८ ॥
 साम दान अरु दंड बिभेदा । नृप उर बसहिं नाथ कह बेदा ॥ ९ ॥ नीति धर्म के चरन सुहाए । अस जियँ जानि नाथ पहिं आए ॥ १० ॥

sunu sarbagya pranata sukhakārī. mukuṭa na hōhiṁ bhūpa guna cārī. 8.
 sāma dāna aru daṇḍa bibhēdā. nṛpa ura basahiṁ nātha kaha bēdā. 9.
 nīti dharma kē carana suhā'ē. asa jiyāṁ jāni nātha pahīṁ ā'ē. 10.

Angad replied, 'Listen oh Lord. You are all-knowing and omniscient (sarbagya), and you bestow happiness to those who come to bow before you and seek shelter with you (pranata sukhakārī). These are not ordinary crowns; but they symbolise the four great qualities and outstanding virtues that make a king great, that a great king must possess. (8)

Oh Lord; the Vedas (which ancient scriptures that are repositories of knowledge and wisdom covering all spheres of human activity, including religious and secular) assert that a good king is one who always keeps in mind the four chief tools of statecraft (which he employs according to the situation at hand). These are the following: (i) the ability to arrive at a consensus and have a reconciliatory approach to the issue at hand that may seem vexing (sāma); (ii) the willingness to give liberally and make charity so that he acquires a good reputation as well as a following of loyal subjects who have benefited from his largesse (dāna); (iii) the wisdom to decide when and how to use force or coercive methods in order to make things turn in his favour, and to punish an offender (daṇḍa); and (iv) the tact to create dissension in his opponents so that they fail to remain united (because then it would make them weak and easily manoeuvrable) (bibhēdā). (9)

The four crowns of Ravana (that had come flying to you when I kicked them) represented these aforementioned stellar qualities of diplomacy and good governance that a great king must possess as envisioned and espoused by the scriptures. When they found Ravana not fit for them, they came on their own to you to present themselves at your feet².’ (10)

[Note—¹ “Oh Lord,” said Angad, “you know the mystery behind the four crowns; you know what they actually signify. Yet, since you have asked me, well then, I shall tell you what I think about them, and why they came rolling over to you after abandoning Ravana. Oh Lord, you have told me to “tell the truth”, so I shall tell you the true mystery or secret behind these four crowns as I understand it.”

²What an excellent interpretation has been done by Angad. The crowns on the head of Ravana symbolised the virtues of a great king. The four crowns representing the four excellent qualities of a great king as enumerated herein above decided to leave Ravana because he had lately lost his eligibility to wear them. So they first left Ravana’s head by falling to the ground, which means they abandoned him, and when he tried to put them back on his head they virtually refused and pleaded with Angad to move them out of Ravana’s physical reach. Nay, they not only refused to go back to Ravana but also asked Angad to get them out of Lanka as fast as he could. The only way to do so was to kick them and send them flying away out reach of Ravana and his demons. These four crowns landed before Lord Ram and sought acceptance by him.

Angad summed up his experience of Ravana’s character by using this metaphor of the four crowns. This in brief explained why he was unable to persuade Ravana to make truce; it was because Ravana lacked any of the four qualities needed by a king to resolve a vexed issue.

How was Angad justified in making this conclusion? Let us analyse:

The first virtue is ‘reconciliation’ (sāma): Ravana obviously was not in its favour.

The second virtue is ‘being liberal in gifting or giving’ (dāna): Ravana obstinately refused to give Sita back for no rhyme or reason.

The third is ‘punishment or use of force’ (daṇḍa): Ravana failed to either punish or use force against all those who offended him, viz. Hanuman, Angad, Vibhishan (his brother who deserted him to join Lord Ram), Suka (his messenger who pleaded with him to end hostility with Lord Ram, as well as lavishly praised the Lord), and Mandodari (his wife who too did what Suka had done).

And lastly, the fourth is ‘create dissension in the rank of the enemy’ (bibhēdā): Ravana failed in this skill too because instead of creating dissension in the enemy quarter he created an enemy in his own brother Vibhishan who deserted him and joined his adversary’s camp. Another instance of his failure in this sphere of statecraft is his attempt to incite Angad to revolt against Sugriv and Lord by reminding him repeatedly they were the cause of death of his father Baali, but Angad did not bite his bait.]

दो०. धर्महीन प्रभु पद बिमुख काल बिबस दससीस ।

तेहि परिहरि गुन आए सुनहु कोसलाधीस ॥ ३८ (क) ॥

dōhā.

dharmahīna prabhu pada bimukha kāla bibasa dasasīsa.
tēhi parihari guna ā'ē sunahu kōsalādhīsa. 38 (a).

[Angad continued—] ‘Listen oh Lord of Kaushal (“kōsalādhīsa”; i.e. Lord Ram, the Lord of the kingdom of Ayodhya, of which ‘Kaushal’ was another name)! The ten-headed Ravana (dasasīsa) has no Dharma¹ left in him; he has abandoned this noble way of life (dharmahīna). Not only this, he is opposed to you, and has no affection and devotion for your holy feet (prabhu pada bimukha)², and to compound the problems and make matters worse for him he is also under the influence of Kaal (death) which has gripped him in its vice-like grip, completely obstructing his wisdom and eclipsing his common sense, thereby preventing him from being rationale and acting wisely (kāla bibasa)³.

Under these unfortunate and negative circumstances (which are unbecoming of a king and cause his downfall), the four noble and positive virtues that make a creature great, righteous, respected and honourable (and which a king must possess) decided to leave him and come to you in a symbolic manner, to take refuge with you (in the guise of the four crowns that came rolling over to you, because these excellent virtues I have mentioned herein above⁴ thought that Ravana was not a proper candidate to lend the glories associated with them to him).’ (Doha no. 38-a)

[Note—¹The term “Dharma” covers a wide spectrum of excellent qualities that makes a person renowned and worthy of great respect and honour. The term would therefore include such good virtues as righteousness, auspiciousness, probity, propriety, noble thought and conduct, ethics, morality, and everything else that is laudable and worthy of emulation.

²Lord Ram is deemed to be an embodiment of all the excellent qualities that come under the umbrella of the term ‘Dharma’; the Lord is an upholder of ‘Dharma’. And one of the many facets or aspects of Dharma is to be respectable to the Supreme Being.

Lord Ram is a personified form of the Supreme Being too, and since he is an upholder of Dharma, so therefore anyone who is disrespectful to the Lord is showing disrespect to the Supreme Lord of this creation as well as Dharma.

Refer also to: (a) what Angad has said to Ravana in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Chaupai line nos. 6-8 that precede Doha no. 35; (ii) Chaupai line nos. 1-2 that precede Doha no. 27; and (b) what Mandodari tells Ravana in Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 14—to Doha no. 15.

To wit, since Ravana was opposed and hostile to Lord Ram, the virtues of Dharma decided that their place was not with Ravana but with Lord Ram. So they abandoned the demon king Ravana, and instead sought refuge with the king of Kaushal, Lord Ram.

³Even Ravana’s wife Mandodari has concluded that her husband is acting recklessly and refuses to heed any kind of good advice because he is under the grip of death, and it is the fiat of fate and the writ of destiny that he is now destined to die, so it’s useless to talk with him and make him see reason—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 37; (b) Lanka Kand, (ii) Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8; (iii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 16; (iv) Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 37; (v) Chaupai line no. 13 that precedes Doha no. 104.

⁴The 'four grand virtues' that abandoned Ravana are mentioned by Angad in Chaupai line no. 9 that precedes Doha no. 38 herein above.]

परम चतुरता श्रवन सुनि बिहँसे रामु उदार। समाचार पुनि सब कहे गढ़ के बालिकुमार ॥ ३८ (ख) ॥ parama caturatā śravana suni bihañsē rāmu udāra.

samācāra puni saba kahē gaṛha kē bālikumāra. 38 (b).

Hearing this witty answer of Angad, the son of Baali (bālikumāra), the magnanimous and benevolent Lord Ram (rāmu udāra) smiled politely (as the Lord was amused by Angad's cleverness and presence of mind)¹.

Then, Angad proceeded to give a report to the Lord and brief him about Lanka and its fort². (Doha no. 38-b)

[Note—¹Observing that the Lord was pleased with his answer as was evident when the Lord 'smiled', Angad felt glad. He then gave a detailed account of Lanka and its fort to the Lord so that strategic planning for the military offensive can be finalised.

There was one occasion earlier when Lord Ram has smiled in a similar way. It was when, after pitching his camp on Mt. Subel, the Lord had observed the moon rising in the eastern sky and had asked his companions what they made of it, Hanuman had offered a witty answer, saying that the slight darkness in the brilliance of the moon's disc is due to the fact that an image of the Lord, who has a dark complexion, resides in the heart of the Moon God as the latter is the Lord's ardent devotee, and the dark shade in the moon's otherwise silvery disc is a reflection of the Lord's image permanently residing in the heart of the deity of the moon. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 12.}

With this clever answer, Angad endeared himself to Lord Ram and placed himself on the same pedestal as Hanuman; he showed that he is no less devoted to the Lord than his friend Hanuman was. And that is why Lord Ram 'smiled'.

The Lord's 'smile' meant that he was very amused by the reply of Angad as much as he was by the reply of Hanuman earlier.

²We have read earlier that Angad had walked through the streets of Lanka on his way to the palace of Ravana; he had also met and killed one of Ravana's sons on the way. As he walked like a conqueror through the avenues of the city of Lanka, the demon citizens thought that he was the same monkey (Hanuman) who had burnt their city earlier; so they were so terrified of him and out of their wits that they swiftly moved away from his path wherever he went, and some even volunteered to show him the way to Ravana's court just in order to avoid his sterns glance questioning them, fearing to invite his wrath if they demurred and failed to give him the correct direction. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 18 along with Chaupai line nos. 3-10 that precede it.}

Angad had taken careful mental notes of his surroundings and a layout of the city, as well as its level of security and preparedness in case of an assault, as he headed to Ravana's court. The city was expected to be on the highest level of alert as the news of an invading army already camping on the shore of the island of Lanka had already reached it, and it was the talk of the town. So Angad's report was quite accurate and updated. A lot must have changed since Hanuman's visit; so the final strategy for the offensive was devised on Angad's field report that was current.

What was the outline of Angad's brief? We shall get a clear hint of it in Chaupai line no. 2 herein below—in which Lord Ram has summoned his advisors to say that the fort of Lanka has four giant and strong gates, and therefore the strategy for breaching the defenses of Lanka should be devised accordingly.]

चौ०. रिपु के समाचार जब पाए । राम सचिव सब निकट बोलाए ॥ १ ॥

लंका बाँके चारि दुआरा । केहि बिधि लागिअ करहु बिचारा ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

ripu kē samācāra jaba pā'ē. rāma saciva saba nikaṭa bōlā'ē. 1.

laṅkā bāṁkē cāri du'ārā. kēhi bidhi lāgi'a karahu bicārā. 2.

[From now onwards, the author of this Book will narrate the thrilling and awe-inspiring proceedings of the 'Great Epic War of Lanka' as if he were a war correspondent writing his memoirs based not only on his own recollections of the events as they unfolded at that time but also by collating vivid descriptions presented by other contemporary correspondents who had themselves witnessed this Epic Saga. This approach will present to the esteemed reader of this magnificent Book a vivid, a four-dimensional, and a comprehensive picture of the events that unfolded during the Epic War of Lanka. In fact, as must have been noted by now by my respected readers, this has been a constant feature of our Book—that we have read four classical Texts all throughout our reading, as it helps one to be acquainted with the Story from four different angles, aspects or perspectives.

To wit, the 'four war correspondents' whose detailed description of the War of Lanka that have been cited and collated here stand for the four classical Texts which we shall be quoting, and, as said above, which we have actually been doing throughout our Book, viz. Ram Charit Manas, Kavitawali Ramayan, Geetawali Ramayan, and Adhyatma Ramayan.

That said, now let us proceed.]

When Lord Ram received all the vital bits of information regarding the enemy forces and their formidable fort of Lanka, he summoned all his ministers and said, --- (1)

--- 'Lanka has four strong, massive gates which are virtually impenetrable. How shall we lay siege to them and effectively breach them—think over this matter urgently and devise a strategy accordingly.' (2)

तब कपीस रिच्छेस बिभीषन । सुमिरि हृदयँ दिनकर कुल भूषन ॥ ३ ॥

करि बिचार तिन्ह मंत्र दृढ़ावा । चारि अनी कपि कटकु बनावा ॥ ४ ॥

जथाजोग सेनापति कीन्हे । जूथप सकल बोलि तब लीन्हे ॥ ५ ॥

taba kapīsa ricchēsa bibhīṣana. sumiri hr̥dayaṁ dinakara kula bhūṣana. 3.

kari bicāra tinha mantra dṛṛhāvā. cāri anī kapi kaṭaku banāvā. 4.

jathājōga sēnāpati kīnhē. jūthapa sakala bōli taba līnhē. 5.

Then the three chief commanders of the Lord's army, viz. Sugriv, the king of the monkeys, Jamvant who was the king of the bears, and Vibhishan who was a prince of the demon race and a brother of Ravana, and who had come to surrender and take refuge with Lord Ram earlier, remembered or invoked the glory of the Lord, who was like a jewel of the Solar race to which the family of the illustrious king Raghu belonged, in their hearts while pondering over the matter and consulting each other to finalise a strategy.

[To wit, the chief commanders of the army prayed to the Supreme Being and invoked his grace before discussing the matter and arriving at a consensus.] (3)

After thoroughly discussing the affair they arrived at a firm decision. They divided the mammoth army into four divisions, --- (4)

--- And appointed an appropriate field commander for each division. After that, they called all the commanders and their subordinates as well as the rest of the warriors (to brief them of the strategy and the outline of the offensive)¹. (5)

[Note—¹Since Lanka's fort had four gates, it was felt necessary to divide the army into four divisions, with each division assigned the task to tackle one gate.]

प्रभु प्रताप कहि सब समुझाए । सुनि कपि सिंघनाद करि धाए ॥ ६ ॥
हरषित राम चरन सिर नावहिं । गहि गिरि सिखर बीर सब धावहिं ॥ ७ ॥ गर्जहिं तर्जहिं भालु कपीसा । जय रघुबीर कोसलाधीसा ॥ ८ ॥ prabhu pratāpa kahi saba samujhā'ē. suni kapi siṅghanāda kari dhā'ē. 6.

haraṣita rāma carana sira nāvahiṁ. gahi giri sikhara bīra saba dhāvahiṁ. 7.
garjahiṁ tarjahiṁ bhālu kapīsā. jaya raghubīra kōsalādhīsā. 8.

When the mammoth army had assembled for a parade prior to the actual launch of the assault on Lanka, the chief commanders addressed it¹ to explain the rationale behind the war as well as to raise the morale of the warriors and infuse confidence in their rank and file by lauding the glory, the divinity, the mystical powers and the majesty of Lord Ram, their supreme commander.

When the briefing ended and orders to proceed were given, the warriors of the Lord's army surged forward to launch the assault with a thunderous roar like that made by an attacking lion. [Their roar reverberated in the sky like repeated claps of thunder emanating from a rapidly moving bank of dark clouds, and it made the earth tremble by its shock waves.]² (6)

Before departure, the warriors bowed their heads before the holy feet of Lord Ram (to seek his blessings), and then grabbing large ragged boulders and rocks that resembled summits of huge mountains (because of their sheer size), the army dashed forward for the attack on the fort of Lanka. (7)

The mighty monkey and bear warriors jumped enthusiastically and yelled ferociously as they roared with a thunderous war cry citing the name of Lord Ram: 'Glory to the Lord of Kaushal; Glory to the brave King of the Raghu dynasty' (jaya raghubīra kōsalādhīsā)!'

[Note—¹The army assembled for a briefing. The chief commanders of the army extolled the exemplary valour, courage, gallantry and strength of the warriors; the commanders further motivated the warriors by telling them about the glories, the mystical powers and the majesty of their supreme Lord and Commander-in-chief, i.e. Lord Ram, alongside explaining to them the righteous and noble cause for which this war was being fought.

This briefing infused dynamism and energy into the rank and file of the Lord's army that was already restless for action and raring to go; it filled the army with confidence of victory, and it injected vigour and enthusiasm into each soldier. The fuse was lit and the spark of fire spread rapidly through the army, which bubbled with enthusiasm so much that it was daring to face the enemy and determined to reduce it to smithereens.

An army with high morale, an army that is sure it is fighting a just war, and an army that is confident to win a war, is more likely to actually win it than an army that is not certain of its own ground on principles of morality and righteousness of the cause for which it is expected to lay down its life.

²A sky-shattering and ear-splitting uproar was raised as the formidable army of Lord Ram, of mammoth proportions, made its departure for launching the first wave of a massive and no-holds barred assault on the fort of Lanka, that would be followed by many more such waves of assaults as the war progressed from day to day. It was a war which would go down in the realms of history of warfare as one that was rivaled by none else in its ferocity, dare devilry, gallantry, valour, courage and resilience shown by all those involved; it was an epic war which, though devastating and singularly calamitous, finally settled the matter in favour of a right cause by eliminating the elements that had undermined this cause; it was a war that marked the triumph of good over evil; it was a war that helped restore Dharma in this creation, Dharma that had earlier been overturned by the savagery of the demon race.]

जानत परम दुर्ग अति लंका । प्रभु प्रताप कपि चले असंका ॥ ९ ॥

घटाटोप करि चहुँ दिसि घेरी । मुखहिं निसान बजावहिं भेरी ॥ १० ॥

jānata parama durga ati laṅkā. prabhu pratāpa kapi calē asaṅkā. 9.
ghaṭāṭōpa kari cahuṁ disi ghērī. mukhahim nisāna bajāvahim bhērī. 10.

They (the monkeys and bears) knew that the fort of Lanka was exceptional strong and singularly formidable, making it virtually impregnable. Yet they were so much motivated and highly inspired by the remembrance of the glory and majestic powers of Lord Ram that they did not fear anything at all; they confidently and fearlessly proceeded ahead, with great zeal and dynamism. (9)

The army approached the fort of Lanka from all the four directions as if dark clouds of doomsday rise from all the directions of the horizon to descend upon the earth and engulf it in a dark veil of death and destruction. While doing so, the warriors made chilling and ear-splitting war cries as if so many battle-drums and kettle-drums and war-trumpets were being played at the same time¹. (10)

[Note—¹The clouds of the doomsday do not come silently; they come roaring and thundering. Their sound is so violent and blood-curdling that the creature dies out of sheer fear even before the actual land fall of havoc and destruction that these clouds unleash by way of ferocious storms, rapid lightening strikes and deluge that drowns everything.

The scene of the huge aggressive army of monkeys and bears descending on the fort of Lanka from all corners of the island, roaring and thundering viciously, stomping the ground violently, yelling ferociously, baring their sharp teeth and showing their extended claws menacingly, was no less chilling than that of the rapidly moving clouds that cover the sky over the earth at the time of doomsday.]

दो०. जयति राम जय लछिमन जय कपीस सुग्रीव । गर्जहिं सिंघनाद कपि भालु महा बल सीव ॥ ३९ ॥

dōhā.

jayati rāma jaya lachimana jaya kapīsa sugrīva.
garjahim siṅghanāda kapi bhālu mahā bala sīva. 39.

Verily indeed, the monkey and bear warriors, who exemplified the best of the combined virtues of valour, courage, strength and gallantry, roared enthusiastically like a fearless lion (the king of the forest and the lord of the animal kingdom), cheering their Lord Ram, his brother Laxman, as well as their own king Sugriv, the lord of the monkey kingdom.

They yelled passionately in one voice: ‘Glory to Lord Ram; Glory to Laxman; Glory to Sugriv!’¹ (Doha no. 39)

[Note—¹In ancient times when wars were fought face-to-face in the battle-field between two great armies, unlike how wars are fought today, both the sides raised their own war cries that marked their independent identities.

So while the army of monkeys and bears cheered their own commanders such as Lord Ram, Laxman and Sugriv, and at the same time made a lot of loud noise to announce that they have arrived and are ready for battle, the army of demons would respond by cheering their king Ravana and beating their own war-drums and sounding other instruments that are routinely played during battles to announce that they were ready too—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 2-3 that precede Doha no. 41 herein below.]

चौ०. लंकाँ भयउ कोलाहल भारी । सुना दसानन अति अहँकारी ॥ १ ॥
देखहु बनरन्ह केरि ढिठाई । बिहँसि निसाचर सेन बोलाई ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

laṅkāṁ bhaya'u kōlāhala bhārī. sunā dasānana ati ahaṁkāri. 1.
dēkhahu banaranha kēri ḍhiṭhāī. bihaṁsi nisācara sēna bōlāī. 2.

Meanwhile, there was a great tumult in Lanka. When the ten-headed Ravana, who was extremely arrogant and haughty, heard of the developments, --- (1)

--- He said to himself with a sarcastic attitude, ‘Look how foolish and stubborn the monkeys are (that they have had the temerity to attack my city, thereby voluntarily pushing themselves into the jaws of death)!’

Thinking thus, he sneered scornfully¹ and summoned (the commanders of) his demon army. (2)

[Note—¹Why did Ravana scoff with contempt at the news of the arrival of the monkey army? The answer is to be found shortly in what he said to his demon warriors. {Refer: Chaupai line nos. 3-5 that follow herein below.}]

आए कीस काल के प्रेरे । छुधावंत सब निसिचर मेरे ॥ ३ ॥

अस कहि अट्टहास सठ कीन्हा । गृह बैठें अहार बिधि दीन्हा ॥ ४ ॥

सुभट सकल चारिहुँ दिसि जाहू । धरि धरि भालु कीस सब खाहू ॥ ५ ॥ ā'e kīsa kāla kē prērē. chudhāvanta saba nīsicara mērē. 3.

asa kahi aṭṭahāsa saṭha kīnhā. gr̥ha baiṭhēm ahāra bidhi dīnhā. 4.

subhaṭa sakala cārihuṁ disi jāhū. dhari dhari bhālu kīsa saba khāhū. 5.

When Ravana stood to address his army of demon warriors that had assembled to hear his command, he haughtily observed: ‘These monkeys have been driven here by the wind of their own death, and behold my demon warriors who are all hungry to devour them!’ (3)

After making this contemptuous remark, he laughed derisively in a thunderous way to mock the monkeys. Then he turned to his demon army and ordered: ‘The Creator is so kind to us that he has served us food right at our doorstep, while we sit at home. [We are all hungry, and the Creator is so gracious that he has provided us food even without our going out to hunt for it.] (4)

Oh you excellent demon warriors who are champions in their own right (subhaṭa)! All of you go forthwith and proceed furiously in all the four directions; catch hold of the monkeys and the bears wherever you can find them, and then eat all of them up.¹ (5)

[Note—¹For quite some time now, none of the demons had dared to go out of the fort of Lanka to hunt and acquire food for the city because of fear of the monkeys and bears who had laid siege of Lanka. Food, which for the demons meant meat-based supplies, was quickly running out, and what still remained was being rationed. The demons, who had large appetites, were therefore virtually famished with limited supply of food at their disposal.

This is what Ravana hints at. Now with the monkeys and bears right at the gates of Lanka, the hungry demon warriors would theoretically have a field day, feasting and replenishing their depleted supplies of meat.

The demons were already smarting from aggravated battery of insult and humiliation to which they were subjected by Hanuman and Angad; they were furious with un-requitted anger because of the shame that both Hanuman and Angad had inflicted upon them and their whole race, including their king Ravana, and the way their golden city of Lanka had been devastated.

It is true that a lot many of the demon citizens were extremely terrified of the monkeys and bears, first because of the devastation caused by Hanuman in Lanka with no one daring to check him, and second in the way Angad had fearlessly rebuked Ravana and trounced his pride in full court, even going to the extent of disdainfully kicking Ravana's crowns, which were symbols of his majesty and authority, thereby inflicting an insult and humiliation on the pride and honour of the entire demon race in a manner that could never ever be revenged or requited by them, with no one to check him either, but it is also true that a lot many of the demons, especially the warrior class, must have been furious at these developments and were violently itching to get an opportunity to settle scores with their enemy, the monkeys and the bears.

Hence, when Ravana gave them the green signal to go and devour the invading army, it was a signal to wreak their suppressed anger upon the enemy with a vengeance, and do it vigorously, because now was the opportunity to seek severe retribution for the wrong done to them by Hanuman and Angad, and for which they had been waiting eagerly till now. So there was no stopping the demon warriors now as they dashed forward furiously, in large and multiple groups, to spit their venomous wrath mercilessly on the monkeys and bears.

So Ravana was right when he thought that by ordering his demon warriors to have a free hand at killing and eating the invading army of monkeys and bears he is virtually unleashing a wild and ferocious pack of hungry wolves in order to get rid of a helpless flock of pigeons that has come un-invited to disturb him and dirty his city of Lanka with their droppings!]

उमा रावनहि अस अभिमाना । जिमि टिट्ठिभ खग सूत उताना ॥ ६ ॥
चले निसाचर आयसु मागी । गहि कर भिंडिपाल बर साँगी ॥ ७ ॥
तोमर मुद्गर परसु प्रचंडा । सूल कृपान परिघ गिरिखंडा ॥ ८ ॥ umā rāvanahi asa abhimānā. jimi ṭiṭṭibha khaga sūta utānā. 6.

calē nisācara āyasu māgī. gahi kara bhiṇḍipāla bara sāṅgī. 7.
tōmara mudgara parasu pracandā. sūla kṛpāna parigha girikhaṇḍā. 8.

[Lord Shiva, the primary narrator of this divine story of Ram Charit Manas, said to his consort Uma to whom he was narrating it.]

Shiva said, 'Listen Uma! Ravana was so deluded by his haughtiness that he resembled the bird known as sandpiper that goes to sleep with its legs pointing to the sky¹.' (6)

The demon warriors sought Ravana's final permission and embarked to carry out the orders given to them. They armed themselves with different kinds of weapons, such as, inter alia, slings, javelins, spears, lancets, iron clubs, batons, maces, battle-axes, forks, sickles, battle-knives, wheels with razor-sharp edges, et al, as well as huge boulders and rocks (that were to be used as missiles). (7-8)

[Note—¹The sandpiper sleeps with its legs pointing to the sky in the belief that it will prevent the heaven from falling and crushing it while it is asleep. The bird is so stupid and ignorant and haughty at the same time that it harbours this ridiculous idea. The sky would neither fall to crush it, nor is it able to support the sky in case it does fall on it.]

Similarly, Ravana, in his ignorance and haughtiness, had become so deluded that he thought it was a joke to kill the monkeys and bears to feed his hungry demon hordes in the same way as the demons used to hunt and kill other creatures for food.]

जिमि अरुनोपल निकर निहारी । धावहिं सठ खग मांस अहारी ॥ ९ ॥

चोंच भंग दुख तिन्हहि न सूझा । तिमि धाए मनुजाद अबूझा ॥ १० ॥

jimi arunōpala nikara nihārī. dhāvahiṃ saṭha khaga mānsa ahārī. 9.
cōñca bhaṅga dukha tinhaḥi na sūjhā. timi dhā'ē manujāda abūjhā. 10.

Even as carnivorous birds-of-prey swoop down on pieces of red stones thinking them to be pieces of red meat [9], unaware of the intensity of agony and severity of pain that their foolishness would cause them (because by striking at the stone they bloody themselves and break their own beaks), the foolish and ignorant man-eating demons (manujāda) lunged forward towards their own peril¹ [10]. (9-10)

[Note—¹To wit, the demon army did not realise that it is going to jump down a well of self-destruction when it dashed forward furiously and recklessly to clash headon with the army of monkeys and bears.]

दो०. नानायुध सर चाप धर जातुधान बल बीर ।

कोट कँगूरन्हि चढ़ि गए कोटि कोटि रनधीर ॥ ४० ॥

dōhā.

nānāyudha sara cāpa dhara jātudhāna bala bīra.
kōṭa kaṅgūranhi caḍhi ga'ē kōṭi kōṭi ranadhīra. 40.

Countless numbers of mighty demon warriors, who were all extremely ferocious and vicious by nature, as well as were very valiant, brave, gallant and courageous, picked up whatever weapons they could lay their hands on, such as bows and arrows and many other types of arms and armaments, as they scampered forward excitedly and mounted the ramparts and battlements of the fort of Lanka¹. (Doha no. 40)

[Note—¹One section of the demon army rushed to the top of the wall of the fort of Lanka as it would be easy for them to pound the invading army from there even as their compatriots would face the enemy at the gates of the fort and on the ground around it. This is why those who rushed to the ramparts and battlements held bows and arrows so they can shoot at the enemy from the top, and those demon warriors who rushed to guard the gates and the ground around these gates had other weapons that are needed for face-to-face battle, such as slings, spears, batons, clubs, battle-axes et al as enumerated in verse nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 40 herein above.]

चौ०. कोट कँगूरन्हि सोहहिं कैसे । मेरु के सृंगनि जनु घन बैसे ॥ १ ॥
 बाजहिं ढोल निसान जुझाऊ । सुनि धुनि होइ भटन्हि मन चाऊ ॥ २ ॥
 बाजहिं भेरि नफीरि अपारा । सुनि कादर उर जाहिं दरारा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

kōṭa kaṅgūranhi sōhahiṁ kaisē. mēru kē sṛngani janu ghana baisē. 1.
 bājahiṁ ḍhōla nisāna jujhā'ū. suni dhuni hō'i bhaṭanhi mana cā'ū. 2.
 bājahiṁ bhēri naphīri apārā. suni kādara ura jāhiṁ darārā. 3.

The demon warriors adorning the ramparts and battlements of the fort appeared to resemble huge banks of dark clouds assembled over the summit of Mt. Sumeru, the golden mountain¹. (1)

Battle-drums and war-trumpets, as well as other musical instruments that are usually sounded during battles, were being played furiously. The provocative sound emanating from these musical instruments of war were meant to inject vigour, energy, courage and dynamism in the warriors; these sounds lifted their spirits and stoked their passions for battle, provoking them to fight ferociously and without pause. Hence, the sound of these instruments excited the demon warriors no end, and made them eager for battle. (2)

The sound of kettle-drums and the clarionets was so shrill, sharp and thunderous that they made the hearts of the cowards crack in fear². (3)

[Note—¹The walls of the fort of Lanka, all its ramparts and battlements, were plastered with foils of gold, or may be they were made of bricks of gold like the rest of this famed city. Though it is true that when Hanuman had burnt Lanka, a major part of it was destroyed and the city was more or less turned into a black hulk, yet it is also true that no matter how fiercely the fire may have raged some part of the city failed to be affected by the flames and managed to escape major damage. To wit, while the greater part of Lanka was turned black, there were some outer areas that still retained their golden shine. And the 'fort' must have been one such place that was little or not at all affected by the raging fire simply because it was far away from the city centre; the walls of the fort surrounded the city like a ring and they were away from the densely populated areas which were set ablaze by Hanuman. Hence, the ramparts and battlements retained their 'golden hue' when the war began. This is why they are compared to Mt. Sumeru, the 'golden mountain'.

The demons had huge bodies and dark complexion, and sitting and moving around on the top of the walls of the fort of Lanka they resembled the dark clouds that hover on the top of the golden mountain by the name of Mt. Sumeru.

²Verse nos. 2 and 3 bring into sharp focus the difference between a brave warrior and a coward. The sound of musical instruments of war excites a warrior, keeping him energised and inspiring him to fight spiritedly, but the same sound chills the blood of a coward who would have a heart attack if subjected to it for long.]

देखिन्ह जाइ कपिन्ह के ठट्टा । अति बिसाल तनु भालु सुभट्टा ॥ ४ ॥
 धावहिं गनहिं न अवघट घाटा । पर्वत फोरि करहिं गहि बाटा ॥ ५ ॥ कटकटाहिं कोटिन्ह भट गर्जहिं । दसन ओठ काटहिं अति तर्जहिं ॥ ६ ॥ dēkhinha jā'i kapinha kē ṭhaṭṭā. ati bisāla tanu bhālu subhaṭṭā. 4.

 dhāvahiṃ ganahiṃ na avaghaṭa ghāṭā. parbata phōri karahiṃ gahi bāṭā. 5.
 kaṭakaṭāhiṃ kōṭinha bhaṭa garjahiṃ. dasana ōṭha kāṭahiṃ ati tarjahiṃ. 6.

The demon warriors saw their enemy for the first time. They saw a mammoth assemblage of monkey and bear warriors with huge bodies and formidable reputation. (4)

These brave and irrepressible warriors (the monkeys and bears) were rushing in (towards the fort) from all directions. They paid no heed to any obstacle in their way; they grabbed huge boulders and rocks that blocked their progress, some of which were as large as hillocks (literally 'as large as small mountains or hills'; "parbata"), only to dash them to the ground to crush them to pieces. (5)

Hundreds and thousands of valiant warriors of the monkey and bear army were gnashing their teeth, yelling ferociously, biting their lips with their teeth, and jumped and hopped menacingly (as they rapidly neared the fort)¹. (6)

[Note—¹The invading army of monkeys and bears was raring and eager for battle; the warriors were fast closing in menacingly on the fort of Lanka. It was a chilling sight the demon soldiers, who had first arrived on the walls of the fort, saw.]

उत रावन इत राम दोहाई । जयति जयति जय परी लराई ॥ ७ ॥ निसिचर सिखर समूह ढहावहिं । कूदि धरहिं कपि फेरि चलावहिं ॥ ८ ॥ uta rāvana ita rāma dōhā'ī. jayati jayati jaya parī larā'ī. 7.

 nisicara sikhara samūha ḍhahāvahiṃ. kūdi dharahiṃ kapi phēri calāvahiṃ. 8.

There were shrill cries and raising of slogans from both the opposing forces, each praising and cheering its respective Lord, the demons raising slogans in honour of Ravana on the other side, yelling 'Glory to Ravana', and the monkeys and bears raising slogans in honour of Lord Ram on this side, yelling 'Glory to Lord Ram'.

With these shrill and chilling war cries respectively from both the sides, the two forces clashed head-on. (7)

The demons who had mounted the ramparts and battlements threw down huge mountain-like boulders upon their enemy (in order to crush the invading soldiers crowding at the bottom of the wall), but the monkeys and bears immediately grabbed the falling boulders, broke them into pieces, and then viciously hurled these pieces back at the demons stationed on the top of the wall of the fort. (8)

छं०. धरि कुधर खंड प्रचंड मर्कट भालु गढ़ पर डारहीं । १ ।
 झपटहिं चरन गहि पटकि महि भजि चलत बहुरि पचारहीं ॥ २ ॥
 अति तरल तरुन प्रताप तरपहिं तमकि गढ़ चढ़ि चढ़ि गए । ३ । कपि भालु चढ़ि मंदिरन्ह जहँ तहँ राम जसु गावत भए ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

dhari kudhara khaṇḍa pracāṇḍa markṭa bhālu gaṛha para ḍārahīm.
 jhapṭahīm carana gahi paṭaki mahi bhaji calata bahuri pacārahīm.
 ati tarala taruna pratāpa tarapahīm tamaki gaṛha caḍhi caḍhi ga'e.
 kapi bhālu caḍhi mandiranha jahaṁ tahaṁ rāma jasu gāvata bha'e.

The ferocious monkey and bear warriors picked up broken pieces of mountains (hills and such like) and hurl them viciously on the wall of the fort. (Chanda line no. 1)

They (the monkeys and bears) lunged at the demons, caught hold of anyone they could lay their hands on by grabbing him by his legs, and then dashed the unfortunate victim hard on the ground. When the terrified demons tried to escape, these warriors mocked them (for their cowardice and un-warrior like meekness) and challenged them (not to run away, but to come close for a duel). (Chanda line no. 2)

The youthful and valiant monkeys and bears showed exceptional versatility and manoeuvrability as they easily climbed on the walls of the fort and mounted its top very quickly. (Chanda line no. 3)

Once on the top of the fort, the monkeys and bears rapidly descended into the city of Lanka and swept through it; they climbed on the terraces of its buildings (caḍhi mandiranha), all the while loudly cheering the glory of Lord Ram and proclaiming the Lord's majesty¹. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—¹It must have been a spectacular sight to behold. The Lord's army made rapid progress and forced the demon soldiers to beat a hasty retreat back into the city. To wit, the high wall of the fort of Lanka proved inadequate to stop the invasion.

The gates of the fort were no bother for the monkeys and bears, and the first wave of attackers did not pay attention to it either, as they chose to assault Lanka directly by jumping over the walls of the fort and invading the city itself.

They were in their hundreds and thousands, and once inside the city they roared and yelled triumphantly, cheering Lord Ram and raising slogans in his honour. The terrified demon citizens ran for cover and gave a right of way to the invading warriors. The monkeys and bears rushed atop buildings, small and big, shouting the glory of Lord Ram from there. The whole demon city reverberated with their loud cheers and yells even as the demons scampered for cover, and to plan to regroup and launch counter-offensive. There surely must have been complete chaos and a huge turmoil in Lanka.]

दो०. एकु एकु निसिचर गहि पुनि कपि चले पराइ ।

ऊपर आपु हेठ भट गिरहिं धरनि पर आइ ॥ ४१ ॥

dōhā.

ēku ēku nisicara gahi puni kapi calē parā'i.
ūpara āpu hēṭha bhaṭa girahiṁ dharani para ā'i. 41.

Each monkey took hold of a demon as a hostage, and then they ran back from the city clutching the demon hostages. At the time of jumping over the wall of the fort they sat on top of their hostages, as a result of which when they landed on the ground below, it was the demon who was dashed against the hard surface of the earth, cushioning the effect of the fall for the benefit of the monkey warrior and preventing any injury to be caused to him (because the brunt of the violent fall was borne by the demon)¹. (Doha no. 41)

[Note—¹The poor demon faced a double whammy. First it was the long fall from the top of the wall of the fort that ended in a fierce dashing on the hard ground below, and then the horror of pain was magnified by the sheer weight of a heavy monkey sitting on the back of this demon, crushing the pitiful fellow between the weight of the monkey riding on the top and the hard surface of the ground below.]

चौ०. राम प्रताप प्रबल कपिजूथा । मर्दहिं निसिचर सुभट बरूथा ॥ १ ॥

चढ़े दुर्ग पुनि जहँ तहँ बानर । जय रघुबीर प्रताप दिवाकर ॥ २ ॥

caupā'i.

rāma pratāpa prabala kapijūthā. mardahiṁ nisicara subhaṭa barūthā. 1.
caṛhē durga puni jahaṁ tahaṁ bānara. jaya raghubīra pratāpa divākara. 2.

With the grace of Lord Ram, the indomitable monkeys and bears had acquired formidable strength and immensity of punch. They crushed and smothered the demons ruthlessly and violently, without letting them to have a pause. (1)

Once again, a fresh wave of monkeys leapt over the fort (of Lanka) here and there, wherever they found a chance². They chanted slogans and cheered Lord Ram whose glories and majesty were akin to the splendour of the brilliant sun. (2)

[Note—¹In Doha no. 40 and its preceding verses we have read about the first wave of the assault. Waves after waves of assaults were launched in quick succession, one after another. After the first batch of monkey warriors returned triumphantly from the city of Lanka, bringing back news of how they leapt across the wall and ran amok in the city, cheering loudly and establishing the flag of victory of Lord Ram symbolically in the city by shouting his name from atop buildings, the next group of monkey warriors, which was waiting below the fort, became excited as the monkeys in this group also wanted some vigorous action and a chance to prove their mettle.

This was the second wave of assault launched on Lanka. By this time the monkey warriors had determined that it was easier for them to enter Lanka by simply leaping over the walls of the fort instead of wasting time and energy in trying to fight their way in through the gates of the fort.]

चले निसाचर निकर पराई । प्रबल पवन जिमि घन समुदाई ॥ ३ ॥
 हाहाकार भयउ पुर भारी । रोवहिं बालक आतुर नारी ॥ ४ ॥ सब मिलि देहिं रावनहिं गारी । राज करत एहिं मृत्यु हँकारी ॥ ५ ॥ calē nisācara nikara parā'ī. prabala pavana jimi ghana samudā'ī. 3. hāhākāra bhaya'u pura bhārī. rōvahiṁ bālaka ātura nārī. 4.

 saba mili dēhiṁ rāvanahiṁ gārī. rāja karata ēhiṁ mṛtyu haṁkāri. 5.

The demon warriors fled before the monkeys like dark clouds that are easily and swiftly swept away when pushed away by the powerful force of a strong gust of wind. (3)

There was total chaos and an unprecedented upheaval in the city of Lanka as terrified children and anxious demon females wailed, howled and lamented all over the place¹. (4)

Everyone got together to hurl abuses and curses at Ravana, accusing him of misusing his powers as a king to invite death and destruction for all². (5)

[Note—¹The distressed cries and howls of grief of the horrified citizens reverberated in the city, in all its nooks and corners. The children wailed and shrieked; the demonesses lamented their fate and grieved for their dead husbands, brothers, sons etc. who perished in the first few hours of the massive invasion. The first day of the war gave them a hint of what was yet to come. The demons were habituated in tormenting others and inflicting pain and grief on them, but they had never themselves witnessed the pain and grief of defeat, loss, death and destruction from so close a quarter in their personal lives as they had been witnessing lately, and it climaxed with the actual invasion by Lord Ram's army. Everything seemed lost and gone for the demon citizenry.

²The demons citizens were right in blaming Ravana for the calamity that had befallen them. The king, after all, is responsible for ensuring peace and happiness of his subjects; he must not take a rash decision that would cause havoc on his own kingdom. Whatever was happening now in Lanka was the doing of Ravana, because he had stubbornly refused to listen to anybody. He was so obstinate by nature, and so firmly gripped by arrogance and overcome with delusions, that even the evil omen of the burning of Lanka did not ring any alarm bell in his mind, nor did the falling off of his crowns on two occasions, once when they were shot down by the arrow of Lord Ram, and the second time when Angad had planted his legs on the ground. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 13-a along with Chaupai line no. 8 that precede it; and (ii) Chaupai line nos. 5-6 that precede Doha no. 32 respectively.}

What could the poor and helpless citizens of Lanka do against the haughty will of their own king, except to accept their doomed fate and submit themselves meekly to it?

The female demons whose male relations had already died or were maimed, wept and wailed in grief; and the rest of the female demons wailed and wept at the prospect of their own male relations meeting the same end.

The children could not understand the gravity of the situation; but they wailed and cried and shrieked nevertheless out of fear as well as in resonance with the surrounding environment of loud lamentation and pitiful grieving that overwhelmed their little minds.]

निज दल बिचल सुनी तेहिं काना । फेरि सुभट लंकेस रिसाना ॥ ६ ॥
जो रन बिमुख सुना मैं काना । सो मैं हतब कराल कृपाना ॥ ७ ॥
सर्वसु खाइ भोग करि नाना । समर भूमि भए बल्लभ प्राना ॥ ८ ॥ nija dala bicala sunī tēhiṁ kānā. phēri subhaṭa laṅkēsa risānā. 6.

jō rana bimukha sunā maiṁ kānā. sō maiṁ hataba karāla kṛpānā. 7.
sarbasu khā'i bhōga kari nānā. samara bhūmi bha'ē ballabha prānā. 8.

When the king of Lanka, Ravana, heard that his army was in distress and retreating, he became furious with anger. (6)

He stopped them and yelled at the demon warriors, chiding them for their cowardice and bringing shame to the valiant demon race. He shouted at them: 'Oh you all; listen to me. If I hear anyone of you turning your back from the battle-field, then be warned ye all that I shall draw my sword and slay that coward with my own hands. (7)

You have been feeding yourselves well and eating everything you wished from my ration stores, and you have been enjoying all sorts of pleasures because of my patronage. Now when it comes to the battle-field, you prefer to save your life at the cost of my honour and prestige!

[Woe to you accursed fellows; shame to you! And remember my words: if anyone turns back then I will kill him myself. Go and show your mettle by pushing the enemy back. I told you to go and feed yourselves on the monkeys and bears, but here I see you are running away like a hunted animal. Curse be unto you, coward and spineless fellows; who have brought utter disgrace to our race of demons who are famed for their valour, gallantry and dare devilry. Return forthwith and face the enemy. Don't dare to show your face to me by showing your back to the enemy; the mighty sword of Ravana will welcome you!]¹ (8)

[Note—¹A similar threat was given by the demon commanders Khar and Dushan when their army, which attacked Lord Ram in the wake of Supernakha's episode, started fleeing in terror when the Lord began slaying them relentlessly with volleys of his fierce arrows—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Kishkindha Kand, Chanda line nos. 3-5 that precede Doha no. 20.]

उग्र बचन सुनि सकल डेराने । चले क्रोध करि सुभट लजाने ॥ ९ ॥ सन्मुख मरन बीर कै सोभा । तब तिन्ह तजा प्रान कर लोभा ॥ १० ॥ ugra bacana suni sakala ḍērānē. calē krōdha kari subhaṭa lajānē. 9.

sanmukha marana bīra kai sōbhā. taba tinha tajā prāna kara lōbhā. 10.

When the demon warriors heard the sternly-worded warning of Ravana, all of them were terrified (because they knew Ravana's unforgiving nature and were sure that he will kill them if they did not obey him).

They were also utterly ashamed of themselves for being so timid and cowardly. So they angrily returned to the battle-field to avenge for the humiliation that they have suffered (at the hands of the monkeys and bears on the one hand, and Ravana on the other hand). (9)

It has been held that a warrior gets his fame, honour and glory by dying while fighting in the battle-field (and not by running away from it). Keeping this maxim in mind, the demon warriors set aside attachment to their lives and discarded the fear of losing it, as they decided to die while fighting the enemy up front in the battle-field¹. (10)

[Note—¹The demon warriors realised that their king was speaking the truth when he admonished them for turning their backs and running away from the battle-field. Surely this would invite scorn and infamy on their present families and cast a dark pall of dishonour that would dog their future generations. So they decided that if death was sure to come to them, then it is better for them to die like a hero fighting the enemy than to die an ignominious death of a coward by getting disarmed and slayed by Ravana.]

दो०. बहु आयुध धर सुभट सब भिरहिं पचारि पचारि ।

ब्याकुल किए भालु कपि परिघ त्रिसूलन्हि मारि ॥ ४२ ॥

dōhā.

bahu āyudha dhara subhaṭa saba bhirahiṃ pacāri pacāri.
byākula ki'ē bhālu kapi parigha trisūlanhi māri. 42.

[Deciding to die an honourable death of a warrior, the demon hordes were filled with renewed energy and dare-devilry as they lost all fear of death and longing for life.]

The brave demon warriors grasped many types of weapons and returned to face the enemy with renewed vigour. They fiercely challenged the monkeys and bears for hand-to-hand duel, and striking their enemy hard and viciously with iron clubs and tridents, the demon warriors began bludgeoning the monkeys and bears ruthlessly¹. (Doha no. 42)

[Note—¹Ravana's threat and chiding worked well, for this is the first time since the assault on Lanka began that the demons have shown some guts and resilience to fight. Earlier they simply fled from the ground, but now they showed their true mettle by striking hard at their enemy.

The result was spectacular. We shall read in the forthcoming verses herein below that now it was the time for the monkeys and bears to flee.]

चौ०. भय आतुर कपि भागन लागे । जद्यपि उमा जीतिहिं आगे ॥ १ ॥

कोउ कह कहँ अंगद हनुमंता । कहँ नल नील दुबिद बलवंता ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

bhaya ātura kapi bhāgana lāgē. jadyapi umā jītihaḥim āgē. 1.
kō'u kaha kahaṁ aṅgada hanumantā. kahaṁ nala nīla dubida balavantā. 2.

Lord Shiva continued with his narration, ‘Oh Uma! The monkeys, who were terrified by the determined counter-offensive launched by the ferocious demon warriors who struck them hard and viciously, began to flee and scatter in a chaotic way, though by-and-by the glory of victory would be theirs. (1)

Some asked where Angad was, some called out to Hanuman, and some others questioned the whereabouts of the brave Nala and Dubid¹. (2)

[Note—¹During this alarming moment when the forward formations of the attacking monkey army that had invaded the city of Lanka faced sudden rout, and their phalanxes were breached by the vicious counter-attack by the demon forces, forcing the monkeys to flee in complete disarray, the terrified monkeys looked around for their commanders in order to seek orders. This verse shows that Angad, Hanuman, Nala and Divid were the commanders who had led the wave of attacking monkeys that had been divided into two divisions—one that leapt across the walls of the fort to directly enter Lanka, and the other that was making effort to break the massive gates of the fort.

An interesting observation can be made here. Where did this clash took place when the monkeys were pushed back by the charging demon warriors? We have just read that the second wave of monkey troops had entered the city of Lanka by leaping over the walls of the fort—apropos: Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 42 herein above. So obviously the place of this action was within the fort of Lanka. The invading monkeys were swarming all over the city at the time Ravana had summoned his warriors and scolded them for showing cowardice in the face of the enemy, ordering them to fight like a true warrior or face death at his hands if they bring dishonour to the demon race by showing their back to the enemy—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 6-10 that precede Doha no. 42 herein above. The demon warriors then struck hard at the monkeys who had been running amok in the city itself, and chased them back in complete disarray.

It is to be particularly noted at this point of time that the mighty gates of the fort hadn't been breached till now. Intense fighting was underway at the western gate where Meghanad, the son of Ravana, was leading the demon troops to guard it, while Hanuman was leading the monkey troops there making desperate attempts to break it. It will be clear shortly in verse nos. 3-4 herein below.

Angad too was on the field below—this will be clear in Doha no. 43 herein below.

In short, the commanders of the advance formations of the monkey and bear army, such as Angad, Hanuman, Nala and Divid, were on the ground below the walls of the fort, monitoring the troops and making effort to breach the gates. That is why those monkey warriors who had been inside the fort could not see their commanders around as is evident from this verse no. 2.]

निज दल बिकल सुना हनुमाना । पच्छिम द्वार रहा बलवाना ॥ ३ ॥

मेघनाद तहँ करइ लराई । टूट न द्वार परम कठिनाई ॥ ४ ॥

nija dala bikala sunā hanumānā. pacchima dvāra rahā balavānā. 3.
mēghanāda tahaṁ kara'i larā'ī. ṭūṭa na dvāra parama kaṭhinā'ī. 4.

The brave Hanuman, who was near the western gate of the fort, heard that his group is in distress and needs help. (3)

He was fighting with Meghanad (the valiant son of Ravana) at this gate, but despite all efforts breaking this strong gate was found to be very difficult. (4)

पवनतनय मन भा अति क्रोधा । गर्जेउ प्रबल काल सम जोधा ॥ ५ ॥
कूदि लंक गढ़ ऊपर आवा । गहि गिरि मेघनाद कहूँ धावा ॥ ६ ॥
भंजेउ रथ सारथी निपाता । ताहि हृदय महुँ मारेसि लाता ॥ ७ ॥ दुसरें सूत बिकल तेहि जाना । स्यंदन घालि तुरत गृह आना ॥ ८ ॥ pavanatanaya mana bhā ati krōdhā. garjē'u prabala kāla sama jōdhā. 5.

kūdi laṅka gaṛha ūpara āvā. gahi giri mēghanāda kahuṁ dhāvā. 6.
bhañjē'u ratha sārathī nipātā. tāhi hṛdaya mahuṁ mārēsi lātā. 7.
dusarēṁ sūta bikala tēhi jānā. syandana ghāli turata gr̥ha ānā. 8.

When the son of the wind god (Hanuman) heard this alarming news he became extremely angry; the mighty warrior roared like the god of death himself would when he is filled with wrath. (5)

Hanuman instantly leapt across the walls of the fort and entered it. Once inside, he grabbed a large hill-like rock and lunged furiously at Meghanad (who was leading his demon troops from within the western gate of the fort). (6)

He (Hanuman) broke the chariot into splinters, killed its charioteer, and then kicked violently on the chest of Meghanad. (7)

Another charioteer (who was kept as a reserve with a second chariot-in-waiting for contingencies) saw that his master (Meghanad) was seriously hurt and very agitated; so he immediately lifted him into his reserve chariot and took him home¹. (8)

[Note—¹Meghanad was taken aback as he hadn't expected this sudden attack from his rear; he couldn't imagine that someone would suddenly come from behind him, destroy his chariot and kick him violently in the chest. This sudden and unexpected assault from inside the fort therefore left Meghanad vulnerable and made him an easy target for attack by Hanuman. Meghanad couldn't even retaliate.]

दो०. अंगद सुना पवनसुत गढ़ पर गयउ अकेल । रन बाँकुरा बालिसुत तरकि चढ़ेउ कपि खेल ॥ ४३ ॥

dōhā.

aṅgada sunā pavanasuta gaṛha para gaya'u akēla.
rana bāṁkurā bālisuta taraki caṛhē'u kapi khēla. 43.

Meanwhile, Angad learnt that the son of the wind god (Hanuman) had gone on the fort all alone. So the son of Baali (Angad), who was gallant in battle, reached the top of the fort in one single bound as if it was a sporting activity for him¹. (Doha no. 43)

[Note—¹As we have noted earlier, since both Hanuman and Angad were on the battle-field below the fort, monitoring and leading their troops from there and making attempts to break the gates of Lanka, there was no one to lead the group of monkeys who had jumped over the fort and entered Lanka to create havoc inside the city as narrated previously—apropos: Doha no. 40—to Doha no. 42.

That is why when the monkeys rampaging inside Lanka were scattered in a complete disorderly manner by a fierce counter-attack by the demons within the walls of the fort, the retreating monkey warriors couldn't find any commander to guide them and wondered where Hanuman, Angad, Nala and Divid were—apropos: Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 43.]

चौ०. जुद्ध बिरुद्ध क्रुद्ध द्वौ बंदर । राम प्रताप सुमिरि उर अंतर ॥ १ ॥
रावन भवन चढ़े द्वौ धाई । करहिं कोसलाधीस दोहाई ॥ २ ॥ कलस सहित गहि भवनु ढहावा । देखि निसाचरपति भय पावा ॥ ३ ॥

caupāī.

jud'dha birud'dha krud'dha dvau bandara. rāma pratāpa sumiri ura antara. 1.
rāvana bhavana caṛhē dvau dhā'ī. karahim kōsalādhīsa dōhā'ī. 2.
kalasa sahita gahi bhavanu ḍhahāvā. dēkhi nisācarapati bhaya pāvā. 3.

The two monkey warriors (Hanuman and Angad), who had become furious and vicious with the heat of battle, let loose their anger on the enemy. They had a lot of confidence and bravery in them by the virtue of invoking the grace and blessing of Lord Ram in their hearts. (1)

Both of them climbed atop the palace of Ravana, all the while cheering and proclaiming the glory of Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal (karahim kōsalādhīsa dōhā'ī). (2)

Once there, they shook the 'Kalash'¹ atop the palace so violently that not only was it uprooted and tumbled down to the ground but it also brought the whole structure of the palace crashing down with it as the violent shaking had made it crack.

When the helpless king of the demons (Ravana) watched this happen, he was horrified with anger and terrified with fear². (3)

[Note—¹The Kalash is a ceremonial structure shaped like an urn or a pitcher that adorns the top of important buildings. It was a cupola on the palace's top. When Angad and Hanuman shook it violently, the building developed cracks because the Kalash was firmly grouted into the terrace and formed a part of the main structure that supported the building. When the Kalash shook it was similar to the effect of an earthquake that results in wide cracks in a building and makes it fall down.

²Ravana was in a state of shock. The shaking and the demolishing of the palace occurred so quickly and without warning that he had little time to gather his wits and think what to do. As the gigantic structure came crashing down with a mighty thud and a storm of dust, Ravana stood dazed, not knowing how to react. He had become immobile for some moments, so dismayed and shocked he was.

Up until now his own palace was spared any particular damage; it was not burnt while the rest of Lanka was razed to the ground in the fire lit by Hanuman, and it was not climbed by the invading monkeys who had leapt across the walls of the fort and rode atop the terraces of the major buildings of Lanka a little while ago.

One may wonder where Ravana would have stayed after his palace was demolished. The answer is that, being a king, it is certain that he had many other such palaces at his disposal. So he immediately shifted to some other palace.]

नारि बृंद कर पीटहिं छाती । अब दुइ कपि आए उतपाती ॥ ४ ॥

कपिलीला करि तिन्हहि डेरावहिं । रामचंद्र कर सुजसु सुनावहिं ॥ ५ ॥ nāri bṛnda kara pīṭahim chātī. aba du'i kapi ā'ē utapātī. 4.

kapilīlā kari tinhahi ḍērāvahim. rāmacandra kara sujasu sunāvahim. 5.

The women folk residing in the palace (Ravana's ladies, maids, queens and mistresses) beat their chests with their hands and wailed, 'Behold there; now there are two rioting monkeys here (instead of one)¹.' (4)

The two monkeys (thoroughly enjoyed this scene, and they) teased the horrified demonesses and terrified them further by their menacing acts², all the while proclaiming the glories of Lord Ram and making these dazed ladies listen to them³. (5)

[Note—¹The demon ladies raised an alarm when they saw Angad and Hanuman menacingly rampaging around together. Earlier they had witnessed how much havoc one single monkey can cause when Hanuman had single-handedly destroyed the city of Lanka during his first visit when he had burnt it. Now with two such violent monkeys determined to unleash their ire on the city in their midst, there was no surety of what worse was to come. So the terrified demonesses wailed and yelled and shrieked in horror.

²Angad and Hanuman scared the poor women of Ravana's palace by making menacing faces at them with wide open mouths that showed their sharp teeth; they threatened the ladies by rushing at them with claws extended as if they would grab and kill them; they hopped and jumped and stomped their feet violently on the ground around these shrieking and terrified demonesses; they made ferocious gestures at them.

The net effect was that the petrified women folk of Ravana's inner palace were shrieking, yelling and wailing alarmingly in the same way as the female demon citizens had done earlier when the invading monkey troops had first entered the city and run through it spreading terror everywhere. {Apropos: Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 42 herein before.}

³The ladies living in the inner courtyards of Ravana's palace lived a secluded life as they were isolated from the outside world. So they probably had yet not heard the war cries of the invading monkeys who had entered the city a little ago by jumping over the walls of the fort, and had then run through the city and climbed its buildings, all the while loudly cheering and boldly proclaiming the glories of Lord Ram at the top of their voices. This was now done by Angad and Hanuman—i.e. they made the ladies of the inner-chambers of Ravana's palace become aware of who Lord Ram was and why he was so famed and revered in the world.]

पुनि कर गहि कंचन के खंभा । कहेन्हि करिअ उत्पात अरंभा ॥ ६ ॥
 गर्जि परे रिपु कटक मझारी । लागे मर्दै भुज बल भारी ॥ ७ ॥ काहुहि लात चपेटन्हि केहू । भजहु न रामहि सो फल लेहू ॥ ८ ॥

puni kara gahi kañcana kē khambhā. kahēnhi kari'a utapāta arambhā. 6.
 garji parē ripu kaṭaka majhārī. lāgē mardai bhuja bala bhārī. 7.
 kāhuhi lāta capēṭanhi kēhū. bhajahu na rāmahi sō phala lēhū. 8.

Then they (i.e. Hanuman and Angad) grabbed two thick golden pillars (of the demolished palace) each, and said to each other that they should now begin their job of ravaging through the demon forces and trouncing them. (6)

With this mutual understanding, the two valiant warriors roared ferociously as they plunged head-on in the middle of the enemy forces, pounding their adversaries mercilessly, right, left and center, with their mighty arms. (7)

They kicked some and slapped others, stomping on one demon, punching someone else and cuffing another, telling all of them menacingly that it is their punishment for not being devoted to Lord Ram, for not honouring and adoring him¹. (8)

[Note—¹Angad and Hanuman joined hands to start pounding and crushing the demon army. It is to be noted that their emphasise is on these demons not being devoted to Lord Ram and honouring him. The two friends did not tell their opponents that they are being punished for fighting for Ravana, the king of the demon race, for they were aware that it was their duty to fight for their king. The mistake the demons were actually making was that they chose the wrong cause to fight, for this war was sparked because Ravana had kidnapped Sita, the wife of Lord Ram, which is an evil deed and must be punished.]

दो०. एक एक सों मर्दहिं तोरि चलावहिं मुंड । रावन आगें परहिं ते जनु फूटहिं दधि कुंड ॥ ४४ ॥

dōhā.

ēka ēka sōm mardahim tōri calāvahim muṇḍa.
rāvana āgēm parahim tē janu phūṭahim dadhi kuṇḍa. 44.

They randomly caught hold of one demon and violently pressed him against another, thereby squashing them and making a pulp of both. After the demons died in this manner, the two warriors twisted their heads and yanked them off their corpses, and then flung them.

These heads landed heavily in front of Ravana and broke down into many pieces like so many earthen pots filled with curd that would break apart instantly when they fall from a height on the hard ground below, spilling out their contents. (Doha no. 44)

[Note—¹The severed heads of killed demon warriors started falling before a stunned Ravana like so many earthen pitchers filled with curd or any other liquid being pelted at him. They rained all around Ravana, falling with heavy thuds and immediately splitting wide open to spill out their contents—blood, brain and other tissue. The ground around the demon king resembled a garbage dumping area as it got rapidly filled with cracked and splintered skulls, blood, flesh and soft tissue of the damaged brains.

It appeared to a beholder that Ravana was being pelted heavily by rounded balls of baked earth stuffed with stinking garbage that littered the area around him, as these earthen balls split open immediately after crashing to the ground, spilling their dirty contents all around.]

चौ०. महा महा मुखिआ जे पावहिं । ते पद गहि प्रभु पास चलावहिं ॥ १ ॥
कहइ बिभीषनु तिन्ह के नामा । देहिं राम तिन्हू निज धामा ॥ २ ॥
caupāī.

mahā mahā mukhi'ā jē pāvahim. tē pada gahi prabhu pāsa calāvahim. 1.
kaha'i bibhīṣanu tinha kē nāmā. dēhim rāma tinhahū nija dhāmā. 2.

Whenever they (Hanuman and Angad) found a high general or chief commander of the demon army, they would seize him by the leg, swirl him round and round rapidly in the air (like a ball tied to a string), and then flung the dazed captive so violently that he flew straight (literally like a javelin or a ball released by a swinging sling) and landed right before Lord Ram. (1)

Vibhishan (who was standing close to Lord Ram) introduced the Lord to these great demon warriors by telling him their names (and designations). The Lord (who is by his inherent nature compassionate, merciful and forgiving) sent these dying demon warriors to his own abode in the heaven¹. (2)

[Note—¹To wit, Lord Ram granted these demon commanders and generals the boon of deliverance of their souls; they were granted emancipation and salvation of their souls. Though normally they ought to have gone to hell due the evil life they had led, but since they died in front of the Lord and at his feet, the Lord lived up to his reputation of showing mercy and grace to all those who come to him and die before him by blessing these demons and giving them a place in heaven instead of leaving them to face their fate, which was surely hell.

One may ask: If Lord Ram is so merciful that he granted this privilege of going to the heaven to generals and commanders of the demon army, what about the poor ordinary demon soldiers who laid down their lives almost at the same time and in the same war as these generals?

The answer is to be found later on when we read that at the time the war ended and the Lord saw the battle-field littered with dead bodies of dead demons warriors, he cast his benevolent glance around and blessed the soul of all those dead demons with liberation, deliverance, emancipation and salvation. In fact, all the demons who had died remembering Lord Ram and his divine name, albeit it was done not with devotion but out of either fear or animosity, found a destiny that is the envy of great hermits, seers, sages and saints, so magnanimous and kind Lord Ram is.

The Lord decided that no one who laid down his life to help him fulfil his mandate—one of which was to physically come down to earth as a human being and then bless his devotees with the story of his life that they would sing for generations to come to derive spiritual joy and happiness and feel blessed—must be punished; rather each individual is to be duly rewarded. The Lord was not vengeful; the Lord was an ocean of love and compassion. So he deemed it his moral obligation to send the demons to his own abode in the heaven, and not condemn them to hell.

The next relevant question is: Well then, what about the monkeys and bears who had died? The answer is this: Lord Ram asked Indra, the king of gods, to rain Amrit (the nectar of eternity; the ambrosia that can revive the dead) on the battle-ground. All the monkeys and bears were revived by this rain. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-10 that precede Doha no. 114.}

But then, another question arises: Why was one group, the demons, allowed to die and go to heaven, while the other, the monkeys and bears, allowed to live? The answer is this: One of the Lord's mandates was to 'eliminate the cruel and sinful demons from the earth because they were tormenting all other creatures', so he was bound to uphold this promise that he had made to the gods and mother earth. On the other hand, the monkeys and bears who fought on the side of Lord Ram were actually the gods themselves as they had assumed these forms to help the Lord in his mission. Hence, the demons had to die, and the monkeys and bears would live. To wit, at the end of the day, evil and sinful forces represented by the demons had to be got rid of, and good virtues represented by the monkeys and bears were allowed to survive. {Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 4 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 188.}

The following verse nos. 3-5 reiterate these above observations.]

खल मनुजाद द्विजामिष भोगी । पावहिं गति जो जाचत जोगी ॥ ३ ॥

उमा राम मृदुचित करुणाकर । बयर भाव सुमिरत मोहि निसिचर ॥ ४ ॥

देहिं परम गति सो जियँ जानी । अस कृपाल को कहहु भवानी ॥ ५ ॥

अस प्रभु सुनि न भजहिं भ्रम त्यागी । नर मतिमंद ते परम अभागी ॥ ६ ॥ khala manujāda dvijāmiṣa bhōgī. pāvahim gati jō jācata jōgī. 3.

umā rāma mṛducita karunākara. bayara bhāva sumirata mōhi niscara. 4.

dēhim parama gati sō jiyam jānī. asa kṛpāla kō kahahu bhavānī. 5.

asa prabhu suni na bhajahim bhrama tyāgī. nara matimanda tē parama abhāgī. 6.

[It's indeed a wonder of wonders that—] The demons who were wicked, enemies of the entire human race, who killed and ate flesh of Brahmins (i.e. of those who were elders of the society and learned ones), and who remained engrossed in enjoyment of sensual pleasures—even such vile ones attained a destiny which great ascetics aspire for.

[To wit, these demons were so lucky that they got liberation and deliverance for their souls; they attained emancipation and salvation; they found beatitude and felicity for their tormented souls.] (3)

[Why was it so? Lord Shiva answers this when he said to his consort Uma:] ‘Oh Uma! Lord Ram is so immensely kind by his nature, and so full of mercy, compassion and grace that he thought to himself: “These demons had been remembering me (and repeating my divine name), albeit it was done in an inimical way.

[So I must keep my hallowed reputation in mind, that anyone who remembers me and utters my divine name even once becomes eligible to receive my grace and blessing. Hence, I must ensure that these demons get their due share; I must ensure that their souls find peace and beatitude. After all, it was their gross body that was sinful, and with its death this blot on their soul is wiped out. Their soul, which is inherently pure as it is consciousness personified, was unfortunately trapped inside their demon body, and now that body is history. So I must grant them emancipation and salvation in spite of them fighting with me and opposing me.]” (4)

Oh Bhavani (another name of Uma)! Thinking thus, Lord Ram granted these dead demon warriors a destiny that is regarded as supreme for all living beings¹. Say, who else in this world is so nice, graceful, merciful, compassionate and understanding (asa kṛpāla kō) as Lord Ram is? (5)

Verily indeed, in all sooth and without gainsay, those who do not adore and have devotion for such a merciful and gracious Lord Ram even after knowing his excellent character and benevolent nature, then truly and without doubt such people are most unfortunate, dumb and ill-fated.² (6)

[Note—¹The best destiny of a creature is when his soul, known as his Atma or his ‘true self’, which in turn is a personified form of pure consciousness, leaves the creature’s gross body and finds eternal freedom. This eternal freedom means that the Atma will not have to take a birth again; it finds permanent deliverance from the cycle of transmigration wherein the soul keeps returning to this gross mortal world by entering one or the other forms that the creatures take. This grants the soul liberation from the sufferings associated with life in this mortal world. The effect is that the soul of the creature finds eternal rest and peace; it attains a state of beatitude and felicity that grants it eternal bliss.

To wit, Lord Ram granted eternal freedom to the souls of the demons and ensured that they would not take a rebirth again. From spiritual and metaphysical perspective it means a great reward for these demons, a reward that even great ascetics, sages and hermits yearn for. On the other hand, from more worldly perspective it means that Lord Ram ensured that the earth is freed from the prospect of it being re-inhabited once again by these demons, for if that happened, if the earth was once again filled by cruel demons after all the efforts to get rid of them, then the time and the energy invested to eliminate them would have been wasted in the first place.

²Truly it would be an irony if a person does not honour and adore such a great Lord as Lord Sri Ram is who goes out of his way to accept even the fallen and lowly, and welcome them with a smile. The Lord does not demur or think twice to grant them a high place inspite of their past wrongdoings—with only one caveat, and it is that they turn themselves over to his care without reservations or deceit in their hearts.]

अंगद अरु हनुमंत प्रबेसा । कीन्ह दुर्ग अस कह अवधेसा ॥ ७ ॥
लंकाँ द्वौ कपि सोहहिं कैसें । मथहिं सिंधु दुइ मंदर जैसें ॥ ८ ॥ aṅgada aru hanumanta prabēsā. kīnha durga asa kaha avadhēsā. 7.

laṅkāṁ dvau kapi sōhahim kaisēm. mathahim sindhu du'i mandara jaisēm. 8.

Lord Ram, the Lord of Ayodhya (avadhēsā), said to his senior advisors or ministers who were near him (such as Sugriv, Vibhishan etc.), ‘Angad and Hanuman have entered the fort. (7)

These two great warriors must be looking awesome in Lanka as they rampage wildly through it, and while on their spree of causing havoc in the city and battering the demon forces, resulting them to be scattered in complete chaos, helter-skelter in panic, they surely must resemble two mighty mountains known as Mandrachal that are churning the ocean simultaneously¹.’ (8)

[Note—¹In some ancient time, the gods and the demons had used Mt. Mandrachal to churn the celestial ocean. In this war which has resulted in a great churn in Lanka, the gods are represented by the monkey warriors in general, and Ravana’s soldiers are obviously the demons. Just like Mt. Mandrachal which was at the focal point of the ancient churning of the ocean, Angad and Hanuman are presently the focus of the great upheaval and chaos prevailing in Lanka. The turmoil in Lanka is like the immense tumult produced in the water of the celestial ocean as it wildly roared, heaved, swirled, splashed and foamed when it was churned in ancient time.

How did Lord Ram come to the conclusion that Angad and Hanuman had entered the fort of Lanka? Well, one reason obviously is that he was being updated by a network of spies on the ground who reported every development back to the command center monitored by the Lord and his close aides. The other reason is the sudden falling on the ground of demon commanders, some wounded and in a state of daze, and some others already dead, as they came in flying like balls when they were hurled out of Lanka by Angad and Hanuman. The gates of the fort were still not breached, and the higher ranking demon commanders were still within the fort. So when they started arriving and falling on the ground in a confused hail of bodies, it surely meant that the two valiant warriors, Angad and Hanuman, had reached within the fort and kicking these commanders out after seizing them from the inside it.

The Lord already had witnessed this skill of Angad when the latter had kicked Ravana’s crowns so precisely that they landed right in his front—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Doha no. 32 along with Chaupai line nos. 5-10 that precede it; and Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 38.

Lord Ram also was aware that Angad and Hanuman kept close company; they were virtually inseparable from one another like two fast friends. So the Lord deduced that if Angad had gone inside the fort, then surely Hanuman too must be there.

A very vivid picture of the chaos in Lanka created by Hanuman's assault is presented in Tulsidas' book "Kavitawali Ramayan", in its Lanka Kand, verse nos. 40-41.]

दो०. भुज बल रिपु दल दलमलि देखि दिवस कर अंत ।

कूदे जुगल बिगत श्रम आए जहँ भगवंत ॥ ४५ ॥

dōhā.

bhuja bala ripu dala dalamali dēkhi divasa kara anta.

kūdē jugala bigata śrama ā'ē jahañ bhagavanta. 45.

After having crushed the forces of the enemy by the might and punch of their arms, and seeing that the day was coming to an end, the two brave warriors (Angad and Hanuman) jumped back over the walls of the fort effortlessly, as if they weren't tired at all due to the strenuous activities of the day, and came back to their camp where the Lord (Ram) was. (Doha no. 45)

चौ०. प्रभु पद कमल सीस तिन्ह नाए । देखि सुभट रघुपति मन भाए ॥ १ ॥

राम कृपा करि जुगल निहारे । भए बिगतश्रम परम सुखारे ॥ २ ॥

caupāī.

prabhu pada kamala sīsa tinha nā'ē. dēkhi subhaṭa raghupati mana bhā'ē. 1.

rāma kṛpā kari jugala nihārē. bha'ē bigataśrama parama sukhārē. 2.

When they reached Lord Ram they reverentially bowed their heads before the lotus-like feet of the Lord. The Lord felt glad in his heart when he saw the two skilled and valiant warriors¹. (1)

Lord Ram looked at the pair (Angad and Hanuman) with grace, compassion and kindness in his eyes, and this made the two feel very happy and rejuvenated². (2)

[Note—¹Lord Ram looked over Angad and Hanuman anxiously to see if they had any serious marks of wounds on their bodies, and to make out from their appearances how they generally fared: were they showing signs of fatigue and weariness; were they hurt and wounded; were they afraid of what was to happen the next day; did they have any unfortunate experience during the course of the battle of the day; was there any sign that they would like some rest; and so on. When the Lord observed that aside from some minor scars or scratches on their bodies here and there that are natural to occur when one is involved in a close and furious hand-to-hand duel with a vicious enemy, and had a little bit desire for rest, they were otherwise hale and hearty overall and were raring to go to the battle front to face and crush the enemy once again any instant, he felt very happy, and blessed them.

²To wit, all weariness and fatigue that Angad and Hanuman may have had vanished immediately when they found that the Lord was pleased with them and their actions. The Lord's pleased look said it all to them; it encouraged them to fight with renewed vigour and with a harder punch the next day.]

गए जानि अंगद हनुमाना । फिरे भालु मर्कट भट नाना ॥ ३ ॥
जातुधान प्रदोष बल पाई । धाए करि दससीस दोहाई ॥ ४ ॥
निसिचर अनी देखि कपि फिरे । जहँ तहँ कटकटाइ भट भिरे ॥ ५ ॥ द्वौ दल प्रबल पचारि पचारी । लरत सुभट नहिं मानहिं हारी ॥ ६ ॥ ga'e jāni aṅgada hanumānā. phirē bhālu markṭa bhaṭa nānā. 3.

jātudhāna pradōṣa bala pā'ī. dhā'ē kari dasasīsa dōhā'ī. 4.
niscara anī dēkhi kapi phirē. jahaṁ tahaṁ kaṭakaṭā'i bhaṭa bhirē. 5.
dvau dala prabala pacāri pacārī. larata subhaṭa nahim mānahim hārī. 6.

When the rest of the monkey and bear troops heard that their commanders Angad and Hanuman have gone back to their camp, they also decided to return. (3)

When the demon army saw that their adversaries (the monkeys and bears) were turning back because it was twilight hours after which battles are usually not fought, they seized this occasion and lunged forward to chase the monkeys and bears from behind, making war fierce cries proclaiming the glory of their king, the ten-headed Ravana. (4)

When the monkeys and bears saw that they were being chased by the demon warriors with an intention to fight, they immediately turned back and clashed with their pursuers. The rival troops collided with each other ferociously, and groups of brave warriors could be seen gnashing their teeth wrathfully and engaging themselves in a no-holds barred vicious duel everywhere on the battle-field. (5)

The two sides fought fiercely, each thrashing and pounding the other mercilessly and with all the might they could muster. None of the clashing warriors would yield his ground; not a single brave soldier would accept defeat and turn his back. (6)

[Note—¹In ancient times, battles were fought only during the day time and stopped after sunset. That is why Angad and Hanuman decided to come back to their camp as soon as they saw that the sun was setting. The demons took advantage of this rule of warfare and decided to attack the monkeys and bears when they would least expect an attack. So for a few initial moments the monkeys and bears may have become confused by this untimely attack, but being alert soldiers they were quick to respond. The demons thought that they would have a good kill by attacking the retiring troops from their behind, but they underestimated the vigour and alertness of the Lord's troops. The demons rush forward was soon checked when the monkeys and bears turned back and met them head-on in the middle of their path. With a chilling battle-cry raised from both the sides, the demons cheering in the name of Ravana and the monkeys and bears cheering Lord Ram, the two forces clashed with each other with full force.

The twilight hours are the time when dark and evil forces become more active, vigorous and energised. Since the demons symbolised such forces, they found renewed vigour during this time. After the debacle they faced during the day time, they wished to make up for it during the evening hours; so they attacked the monkeys and bears with a severity of ferocity that they lacked during the day time.]

महाबीर निसिचर सब कारे । नाना बरन बलीमुख भारे ॥ ७ ॥

सबल जुगल दल समबल जोधा । कौतुक करत लरत करि क्रोधा ॥ ८ ॥

प्राबिट सरद पयोद घनेरे । लरत मनहुँ मारुत के प्रेरे ॥ ९ ॥ mahābīra nisicara saba kārē. nānā barana balīmukha bhārē. 7.

sabala jugala dala samabala jōdhā. kautuka karata larata kari krōdhā. 8.

prābiṭa sarada payōda ghanērē. larata manahuṁ māruta kē prērē. 9.

All the demons were great and valiant warriors; they had huge dark-complexioned bodies of myriad sizes and shapes, with wide ferocious mouths and fearful disposition. (7)

The warriors on both the sides were equally brave, strong, gallant and powerful. They fought fiercely, adopting countless tactics and maneuvering skilfully to outwit their opponent. (8)

When the two troops wrangled with each other they resembled a sight when countless banks of dark clouds of the rainy season as well as white clouds of the winter season dash forward to collide with each other when they are propelled ahead by powerful gusts of winds¹. (9)

[Note—¹To wit, there was complete chaos on the battle-field. The warriors from one group fought the warriors from the other group in a free-for-all battle, forming small and large groups scattered at random, in a chaotic way here and there on the ground, without any particular order and distinction of rank. When one of the fighting warriors of a particular group belonging to one faction saw that some other group of his faction needed help, he would immediately leave the first group to go and join the second group to help. So there was mingling of warriors; it was a free melee of warring warriors where no one knew who the other was, except that he was either one of his own faction and therefore a friend, or that of the other faction and therefore his enemy.]

अनिप अकंपन अरु अतिकाया । बिचलत सेन कीन्हि इन्ह माया ॥ १० ॥

भयउ निमिष महुँ अति अँधिआरा । बृष्टि होइ रुधिरोपल छारा ॥ ११ ॥ anipa akampana aru atikāyā. bicalata sēna kīnhi inha māyā. 10.

bhaya'u nimīṣa maham̐ ati am̐dhi'ārā. br̥ṣṭi hō'i rudhirōpala chārā. 11.

The demon commanders named Anip, Akampan and Atikaye¹ observed that their demon troops were losing ground and have become scared, so they immediately employed their magical powers to create an illusion of a natural calamity about to happen in the battle-field. (10)

As a result, everything suddenly became dark, and blood, stones, splinters and ash began raining down on the ground below. (11)

[Note—¹The battle in which these three demon warriors were directly involved and exhibited their skills is elaborated narrated in Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 55.]

दो०. देखि निबिड़ तम दसहुँ दिसि कपिदल भयउ खभार । एकहि एक न देखई जहँ तहँ करहिं पुकार ॥ ४६ ॥

dōhā.

dēkhi nibiṛa tama dasahuṁ disi kapidala bhaya'u khabhāra.
ēkahi ēka na dēkha'ī jahaṁ tahaṁ karahiṁ pukāra. 46.

When the monkeys and bears saw that there was sudden darkness surrounding them on all sides (and stones, blood and ash were raining down upon them), they became alarmed and shocked. It was so pitch dark that no one could see anyone else. As a result, the monkeys and bears found themselves all alone, left to fend for themselves. This left all of them dismayed and petrified with fear, and so they cried out in distress. (Doha no. 46)

चौ०. सकल मरमु रघुनायक जाना । लिए बोलि अंगद हनुमाना ॥ १ ॥
समाचार सब कहि समुझाए । सुनत कोपि कपिकुंजर धाए ॥ २ ॥

caupā'ī.

sakala maramu raghunāyaka jānā. li'ē bōli aṅgada hanumānā. 1.
samācāra saba kahi samujhā'ē. sunata kōpi kapikuñjara dhā'ē. 2.

When Lord Ram came to know of this development, he called Angad and Hanuman. (1)

After telling them of the news, the Lord explained to them its mystery¹. Hearing everything, the two were very angry, and they departed immediately to settle the matter in the battle-field. (2)

[Note—¹The Lord explained to Angad and Hanuman that there was no actual rain of stones, blood and ash, and neither was there any extraordinary darkness in the battlefield as it was made out to be. It was merely the result of black-magic done by the demon commanders Anip, Akampan and Atikaye.

This enraged Angad and Hanuman no end. They rushed to the aid of their compatriots trapped in the battle-ground.]

पुनि कृपाल हंसि चाप चढ़ावा । पावक सायक सपदि चलावा ॥ ३ ॥ भयउ प्रकास कतहुँ तम नाही । ग्यान उदयँ जिमि संसय जाहीं ॥ ४ ॥ puni krpāla haṁsi cāpa caṛhāvā. pāvaka sāyaka sapadi calāvā. 3.

bhaya'u prakāsa katahuṁ tama nāhīm. gyāna udayaṁ jimi sansaya jāhīm. 4.

Then the merciful Lord Ram smiled, stringed his bow, and shot a fiery arrow in the direction of the battle-field. (3)

Instantly the concerned area was lit up; there was no darkness anywhere around. It was like the case when darkness caused by ignorance and delusions is removed when there is light of knowledge, enlightenment and gnosis (collectively called 'Gyan')¹. (4)

[Note—¹A similar idea extolling the importance of Gyan is found in Ram Charit Manas, Ayodhya Kand, Chaupai line no. 5 that precedes Doha no. 93.]

भालु बलीमुख पाइ प्रकासा । धाए हरष बिगत श्रम त्रासा ॥ ५ ॥
हनूमान अंगद रन गाजे । हाँक सुनत रजनीचर भाजे ॥ ६ ॥
भागत भट पटकहिँ धरि धरनी । करहिँ भालु कपि अब्हुत करनी ॥ ७ ॥ गहि पद डारहिँ सागर माहीं । मकर उरग झष धरि धरि खाहीं ॥ ८ ॥ bhālu balīmukha pā'i prakāsā. dhā'ē haraṣa bigata śrama trāsā. 5.

hanūmāna aṅgada rana gājē. hāṁka sunata rajanīcara bhājē. 6.
bhāgata bhaṭa paṭakahīm dhari dharanī. karahīm bhālu kapi adbhuta karanī. 7.
gahi pada ḍārahīm sāgara māhīm. makara uraga jhaṣa dhari dhari khāhīm. 8.

When there was light on the battle-field, the bears and monkeys felt exhilarated and encouraged. They dashed towards their enemies, the demons, with renewed zeal and vigour; all their weariness and distress were dispelled. (5)

Meanwhile, Hanuman and Angad, who had arrived at the battle-field, roared fiercely. When the demon warriors heard their thunderous war-cry, they ran away in terror.

[To wit, the demons were so terrified of Hanuman and Angad that their mere presence in the battle-ground was enough to make them flee for their lives.] (6)

When the monkeys and bears saw that the demons were fleeing hastily in terror, they chased them in hot pursuit and overtook them. They caught the fleeing demons and dashed them violently on the ground.

Verily, the bears and monkeys were performing wonderfully well and doing astonishing deeds in the battle-field! (7)

Some of the demons who were fleeing were caught by their legs and dumped into the ocean, where alligators, crocodiles, sea-serpents and large fish such as sharks devoured them¹. (8)

[Note—¹Some of the fleeing demons were killed by getting dashed to the ground, while others were caught by their legs, swung around like on a sling and then flung off to the ocean where they drowned or were caught by carnivorous marine creatures who had gathered near the shore to feed on warriors who came within their reach.]

दो०. कछु मारे कछु घायल कछु गढ़ चढ़े पराइ । गर्जहिं भालु बलीमुख रिपु दल बल बिचलाइ ॥ ४७ ॥

dōhā.

kachu mārē kachu ghāyala kachu garḥa caṛhē parā'i.
garjahim bhālu balīmukha ripu dala bala bicalā'i. 47.

Out of the great numbers of demon troops, some got slayed, some fell wounded on the ground, and some managed to escape and enter the fort.

Having scattered the demon forces, the bears and monkeys (bhālu balīmukha) roared and thundered triumphantly. (Doha no. 47)

चौ०. निसा जानि कपि चारिउ अनी । आए जहाँ कोसला धनी ॥ १ ॥ राम कृपा करि चितवा सबही । भए बिगतश्रम बानर तबही ॥ २ ॥

caupā'i.

nisā jāni kapi cārī'u anī. ā'ē jahāṁ kōsalā dhanī. 1.
rāma kṛpā kari citavā sabahī. bha'ē bigataśrama bānara tabahī. 2.

When night fell (and calm descended on the battle-field after the demons fled completely), all the four wings or divisions of the monkey and bear troops retired for the day and came back to their camp where Lord Ram, the Lord of Kaushal (kōsalā dhanī), was¹. (1)

Lord Ram spread his grace and blessing over the whole assembly by casting his benevolent glance over his troops. The Lord's reassuring and benign look removed whatever traces of weariness the warriors might have had; they felt rejuvenated and excited once again. [The monkeys and bears were ready for the next day's battle.] (2)

[Note—¹This marks the end of the first day of the war.]

उहाँ दसानन सचिव हँकारे । सब सन कहेसि सुभट जे मारे ॥ ३ ॥

आधा कटकु कपिन्ह संघारा । कहहु बेगि का करिअ बिचारा ॥ ४ ॥ uhāṁ dasānana saciva haṁkāre. saba sana kahēsi subhaṭa jē mārē. 3.

ādhā kaṭaku kapinha saṅghārā. kahahu bēgi kā kari'a bicārā. 4.

Meanwhile, there in Lanka, the ten-headed Ravana summoned an urgent meeting of his ministers for a war council. He told them the names of all those demon warriors who had died in the battle that day. (3)

He said woefully, ‘The monkeys have virtually eliminated half of our army. Tell me quickly now what your advice is in this matter.

[To wit, don’t waste time in futile consultations and debates, and be quick in arriving at a decision regarding the strategy for the forthcoming days. Our forces are getting depleted rapidly, so there is no time for playing jokes. We have very little time, and whatever is to be done has to be done during this night itself.]’ (4)

माल्यवंत अति जरठ निसाचर । रावन मातु पिता मंत्री बर ॥ ५ ॥

बोला बचन नीति अति पावन । सुनहु तात कछु मोर सिखावन ॥ ६ ॥

जब ते तुम्ह सीता हरि आनी । असगुन होहिं न जाहिं बखानी ॥ ७ ॥

बेद पुरान जासु जसु गायो । राम बिमुख काहुं न सुख पायो ॥ ८ ॥ mālyavanta ati jarāṭha nisācara. rāvana mātu pitā mantrī bara. 5.

bōlā bacana nīti ati pāvana. sunahu tāta kachu mōra sikhāvana. 6.
jaba tē tumha sītā hari ānī. asaguna hōhim na jāhim bakhānī. 7.
bēda purāna jāsu jasu gāyō. rāma bimukha kāhuṁ na sukha pāyō. 8.

There was an old demon named Malyawanta amongst his ministers. He was a very senior demon and was like a parent for Ravana as he was his maternal grandfather. (5)

He spoke words of great wisdom when he addressed Ravana, saying to him ‘Listen my dear (sunahu tāta) to some of my advice that I speak for your own good. (6)

Ever since you have abducted Sita and brought her here, so many evil omens¹ are occurring on a regular basis that they can’t be listed and explained. (7)

Mind you, anyone who has opposed Lord Ram, whose glory and divinity have been proclaimed and affirmed by the ancient scriptures such as Vedas and Purans, has never found peace and happiness.

[So tell me honestly, how do you expect to find peace and happiness by being hostile to the Lord? My dear son, you are on the wrong path, and it would be good for all of us if you heed my advice and make a truce with the Lord by returning Sita to him and ending this war forthwith.]’ (8)

[Note—¹Some of the many bad signs portending bad days for a king and his kingdom are the following: (1) donkeys bray in a brutal voice; (2) clouds rain bloody water and thunder deafeningly; (3) the horizon and all the directions seem to be covered in a dark haze of smoke or dust; (4) vultures, jackals and serpents enter and hide inside gardens and make fearful noises; (5) the idol of goddess Kali, the patron goddess of the battle-field presiding over death and destruction, seems to smile; (6) women begin talking incoherently and walk while asleep; (7) the food meant as morsels for the crow are eaten by stray dogs; (8) donkeys are produced as calves of cows, and rats are produced from mongoose; (9) conjugal relationships are established between tigers and cats, dogs and pigs, demons and kinnars, and human beings and demons; they begin copulating; (10) blue pigeons with red claws enter homes; (11) a dark-skinned man with tonsured head roams around homes during dawn and dusk hours {apropos: Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 35, verse nos. 25-34}; (12) the sacred fire of the sacrifice does not light up properly with a brilliant flame, but instead gives a lot of smoke and flying sparks, and leaves embers prematurely; (13) black ant contaminate the sweet pudding meant to be offered to the sacred fire during religious sacrifices; (14) the udder of cows dry up, the juicy exudation from the skin on the heads of elephants dry up, indicating that they have lost their stamina, and inspite of feeding well the horses remain hungry; (15) donkeys, camels, mules wail while their skin develops goose bumps; (16) well selected medicines fail to cure or give relief; (17) flocks of crows sit on houses and crow wildly while vultures fly overhead; (18) female jackals and hyenas and other carnivorous animals assemble near inhabited places and wail woefully {apropos: Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 10, verse nos. 15-21}; (19) when the wind blows it is filled with dust; (20) there are earthquakes; (21) trees fall down without any apparent cause; (22) the evening sky looks dark red; (23) the rays of the moon appear to be red or dark; (24) blue dots appear either on the surface of the sun or move across it's disc; (25) the stars become invisible because the night sky is covered in a haze of dust; (26) crows, kites, vultures and other birds of prey drop dead suddenly from the sky {apropos: Valmiki Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 23, verse nos. 4-11}; (27) clouds rain hot bloody water; (28) statues begin to cry; (29) consecrated idols sweat and begin moving from their pedestals; (30) mouse begins fighting with cats {apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 28-32}.]

दो०. हिरन्याच्छ भ्राता सहित मधु कैटभ बलवान् ।

जेहिं मारे सोइ अवतरेउ कृपासिंधु भगवान् ॥ ४८ (क) ॥

कालरूप खल बन दहन गुनागार घनबोध ।

सिव बिरंचि जेहि सेवहिं तासों कवन बिरोध ॥ ४८ (ख) ॥

dōhā.

hiran'yāccha bhrātā sahita madhu kaitābha balavāna.

jēhiṁ mārē sō'i avatarē'u kṛpāsindhu bhagavāna. 48 (a).

kālarūpa khala bana dahana gunāgāra ghanabōdha.

siva birañci jēhi sēvahiṁ tāsōṁ kavana birōdha. 48 (b).

[Malyawanta continued—] 'The Supreme Lord who had slayed the demons Madhu and Kaitav, as well as the two brothers Hiranyakshyapu and Hiranyaksha, has himself manifested once again (in the form of Lord Ram)¹. (Chanda line nos. 1-2)

The Lord who personifies Kaal (the god of death), the Lord who is like a wild fire to burn a forest represented by wickedness and evil forces, the Lord who is embodiment of all goodness and excellent virtues, the Lord who is all-knowing, omniscient and an image of enlightenment, the Lord who is worshipped and adored by Lord Shiva and the creator Brahma—say, what sense is there in being opposed to him?² (Chanda line nos. 3-4)

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 6.

²Earlier, Mandodari, the wife of Ravana and the grand-daughter of Malyawanta, had also entreated Ravana to realise his follies and end hostility with Lord Ram, but like Malyawanta here she too had failed—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 6—to Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes Doha no. 8.]

चौ०. परिहरि बयरु देहु बैदेही । भजहु कृपानिधि परम सनेही ॥ १ ॥
ताके बचन बान सम लागे । करिआ मुह करि जाहि अभागे ॥ २ ॥
बूढ़ भएसि न त मरतेउँ तोही । अब जनि नयन देखावसि मोही ॥ ३ ॥
तेहिं अपने मन अस अनुमाना । बध्यो चहत एहि कृपानिधाना ॥ ४ ॥

caupāī.

parihari bayaru dēhu baidēhī. bhajahu kṛpānidhi parama sanēhī. 1.
tākē bacana bāna sama lāgē. kari'ā muha kari jāhi abhāgē. 2.
būrha bha'ēsi na ta maratē'uṁ tōhī. aba jani nayana dēkhāvasi mōhī. 3.
tēhim apanē mana asa anumānā. badhyō cahata ēhi kṛpānidhānā. 4.

[I sincerely advice you to—] Give Sita (baidēhī) back to the Lord and discard your hostile attitude towards him¹. You should, rather, develop devotion and adoration for Lord Ram who is, by his very nature, exceptionally merciful, kind and compassionate, as well as very affable, affectionate and endearing.' (1)

His (Malyawanta's) words appeared like sharp arrows piercing Ravana. He became furious and contemptuously rebuffed Malyawanta: 'Oh you wretched old fellow! Blacken your godforsaken face and go away from here. (2)

You have become old (so I am constrained to spare your life); otherwise I would have slayed you instantly. Scoot immediately from here; get out of my sight, and don't show me your ugly face again.' (3)

He (Malyawanta) concluded in his heart that surely the Lord (Sri Ram, the manifested form of the Supreme Being), who is an embodiment of mercy, compassion and kindness (kṛpānidhānā), wishes to get rid of him (Ravana)² (and that is why Ravana has become so stubborn and deaf to good advice). (4)

[Note—¹Mandodari had made the same plea repeatedly to Ravana—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, (a) Lanka Kand, (i) Doha no. 6; (ii) Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes

Doha no. 14; (iii) Doha no. 15-b; (iv) Doha no. 37 and Chaupai line no. 6 that precedes it; (b) Sundar Kand, Chaupai line no. 10 that precedes Doha no. 36.

Ravana's brother Vibhishan too had offered the same advice to Ravana which so much infuriated the latter that he kicked Vibhishan out of the kingdom—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, (i) Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 38—to Doha no. 39; (ii) Doha no. 40—to Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 42.

At that time, when Vibhishan was making efforts to persuade Ravana to return Sita to Lord Ram and make peace with him, Malyawanta had endorsed his views, but like now, Ravana had sternly rebuked him and turned him away—apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Sundar Kand, Chaupai line nos. 1-4 that precede Doha no. 40.

²The flustered Malyawanta thought to himself: “Ravana is not listening because the Lord has cast his spell of delusions known as ‘Maya’ over him; it has eclipsed Ravana’s wisdom and the ability to think rationally. Forsooth, Ravana is in the throes of death; he is gripped by the fever of doom and destruction. He would therefore not listen, and it is absolutely futile even to try it. It’s the Lord’s wish which no one can change or challenge. It’s the fiat of fate and the writ of destiny that has made Ravana so obstinate and deaf to advice. What can I do; for that matter, what can anybody else do in this situation, for it has become absolutely hopeless.

The use of the word “krpānidhānā” for Lord Ram, meaning that the Lord is a treasury of the grand virtues of mercy, kindness, compassion and grace, is significant here in the context of saying that “Ravana’s death is the wish of Lord Ram”. It implies that Lord Ram wants to slay Ravana not because the Lord lacks these virtues in the slightest, or because he is a war-mongering warrior, merciless, cruel and vengeful who is out to kill Ravana just because the latter has taken away his wife Sita, unmindful of the consequences that would follow, such as the heavy loss of life in the ensuing war and the total destruction of the demon race and ruin of the famed golden city of Lanka—but because it is so destined that Ravana would die at the hands of Lord Ram.

The Lord was merely keeping his mandate and the promise he had made, as the Supreme Caretaker of this world, to the gods and mother earth on some earlier occasion. This death of Ravana was pleaded for by the latter, for they were so much horrified by Ravana’s unending torments and reckless misadventures that they had no option left for them but to pray to Lord Vishnu, the Supreme Being, to help them get rid of this evil menace, at which the Lord had promised them that he would personally come down as Lord Ram and do whatever is needed to honour their request. {Apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Chaupai line no. 41 that precedes Doha no. 184—to Chaupai line no. 7 that precedes Doha no. 187.}]

सो उठि गयउ कहत दुर्बादा । तब सकोप बोलेउ घननादा ॥ ५ ॥

कौतुक प्रात देखिअहु मोरा । करिहउँ बहुत कहौं का थोरा ॥ ६ ॥

सुनि सुत बचन भरोसा आवा । प्रीति समेत अंक बैठावा ॥ ७ ॥ sō uṭhi gaya'u kahata durbādā. taba sakōpa bōlē'u ghananādā. 5.

kautuka prāta dēkhi'ahu mōrā. kariha'uṁ bahuta kahaurṁ kā thōrā. 6.

suni suta bacana bharōsā āvā. prīti samēta anka baiṭhāvā. 7.

Muttering curses (on Ravana), he (Malyawanta) got up agitatedly and went away (from the court)*.

[*This part of the verse can be interpreted in another way as: “When Ravana used uncouth words for Malyawanta, the latter got up and left the court.”]

Then, Meghanad (“ghananādā”; the son of Ravana)¹ spoke boastfully --- (5)

‘Watch what strange and fantastic deeds I would do tomorrow morning. I will do wonderful and awe-inspiring things; it is better for me not to speak much about them now before I actually exhibit my skills (in the battle-field)². (6)

Hearing the confident words of his son, Ravana felt reassured. He was very pleased with Meghanad and affectionately made him sit on his lap³. (6)

[Note—¹Meghanad was called “ghananādā” because whenever he spoke angrily it was like a clap of thunder emanating from dark stormy clouds.

²When Meghanad observed that his father Ravana was feeling cornered, helpless and distressed, he immediately came to the latter’s rescue. He confidently told Ravana: “Look my father; don’t feel so disheartened. I am still around. Watch what havoc I’ll unleash tomorrow morning in the battle-field. I would like to be modest by not speaking too much of what I intend to do, but have patience and see how I will avenge today’s debacle by wreaking the enemy’s forces ferociously.”

Whenever in the past Ravana suffered defeat in the battle-field, it was Meghanad who come to his rescue. The most famous feat was when Meghanad had freed his father from the captivity of Indra, the king of gods, who had captured him when Ravana attacked heaven. Meghanad immediately launched an offensive to free his father, and after accomplishing this he had tied Indra and brought him to Lanka as a trophy of war. At that time Brahma had gone to free Indra by granting many boons to Meghanad in return. This story is narrated in (a) Anand Ramayan, Sarkand (Chapter 1), Sarga (Canto) 13, verse nos. 78-81; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 50-54.

As a result, Ravana not only loved Meghanad but put immense faith in him as is evident from verse no. 6 here.

As the war progressed and Meghanad was killed, Ravana was unhinged and he became sure that he is going to lose. So thereafter, overcome with abject grief when he found that everything was lost and there was nothing more to lose than his own life, Ravana had fought the final phase of the war most fervently, most viciously and most ferociously like a true warrior does before he finally collapses and dies in the heat of battle.

Meghanad lived up to his words, for in the next day’s battle he led the charge from the front and poured out his anger on the enemy forces vehemently. He performed many magical feats that would be described shortly in Chaupai line nos. 1-5 that precede Doha no. 52. It was during this battle that Meghanad had shot and wounded Laxman, making him fall unconscious in the battle-field—apropos: Chaupai line nos. 7-8 that precede Doha no. 54.

³To wit, Ravana made Meghanad sit very close to him on the royal throne; Meghanad sat so close to his father that for all practical purposes he appeared to be sitting on Ravana’s lap. Perhaps Meghanad had one of his hands resting on Ravana’s lap, with his father spreading his hand over his shoulder to hold his dear son tightly close, giving the impression that the son was virually sitting on his father's lap. This gesture was meant to express Ravana's thanks and gratitude for his beloved son Meghanad.]

करत बिचार भयउ भिनुसारा । लागे कपि पुनि चहूँ दुआरा ॥ ८ ॥
कोपि कपिन्ह दुर्घट गढु घेरा । नगर कोलाहलु भयउ घनेरा ॥ ९ ॥ बिबिधायुध धर निसिचर धाए । गढ ते पर्वत सिखर ढहाए ॥ १० ॥ karata bicāra bhaya'u bhinusārā. lāgē kapi puni cahūṁ du'ārā. 8.

kōpi kapinha durghaṭa gaṛhu ghērā. nagara kōlāhalu bhaya'u ghanērā. 9.
bibidhāyudha dhara niscara dhā'ē. gaṛha tē parbata sikhara ḍhahā'ē. 10.

The whole night was spent in consultations. When the day broke the next day, the monkeys and bears once again surrounded the four gates of the fort¹. (8)

When the powerful monkeys and bears laid siege of the gates and the news spread wildly in Lanka, there was an immense turmoil inside the city. (9)

The demon warriors grabbed myriad kinds of weapons and rushed to face them. They threw (or rolled down) huge boulders resembling pointed peaks of mountains (parbata sikhara) from the top of the fort (in order to crush the monkeys and bears who were massed at the four gates, and surrounded the walls of the fort). (10)

[Note—¹This is the beginning of the second day of the war.]

छं०. ढाहे महीधर सिखर कोटिन्ह बिबिध बिधि गोला चले । १ ।
घहरात जिमि पबिपात गर्जत जनु प्रलय के बादले ॥ २ ॥
मर्कट बिकट भट जुटत कटत न लटत तन जर्जर भए । ३ ।
गहि सैल तेहि गढ पर चलावहिं जहँ सो तहँ निसिचर हए ॥ ४ ॥

chanda.

ḍhāhē mahīdhara sikhara kōṭinha bibidha bidhi gōlā calē. 1.
ghaharāta jimi pabipāta garjata janu pralaya kē bādālē. 2.
markaṭa bikaṭa bhaṭa juṭata kaṭata na laṭata tana jarjara bha'ē. 3.
gahi saila tēhi gaṛha para calāvahiṁ jahaṁ sō tahaṁ niscara ha'ē. 4.

Huge boulders, large as hills and mountains, were rolled down the sides of the fort, and countless balls were shot (from canons and catapults). (Chanda line no. 1)

They (the canons and catapults) produced deafening sounds as if countless thunderbolts were striking simultaneously. They (the demons and monkey warriors) roared and made war-cries fiercely like so many clouds of doomsday rumble and thunder in unison. (Chanda line no. 2)

The ferocious monkey and bear warriors (markaṭa bikaṭa bhaṭa) clashed with their enemies; inspite of their bodies suffering wounds they do not demur or relent or hesitate from engaging their adversaries in violent, no holds-barred duels. (Chanda line no. 3)

They (the monkeys and bears) grab the falling boulders and fling them back on the fort like so many missiles that are shot back with such high velocity that when they hit the demons atop the walls of the fort, they fall down dead instantly¹. (Chanda line no. 4)

[Note—Thus the battle of the second day progressed with violence and mayhem, causing serious injuries and casualties on both the sides.

It is to be noted that till this point of time, the mighty gates of the fort of Lanka could not be breached; they still held their ground. However, they soon will be opened when Meghanad marched to the battle-front to take on the Lord's army head-on as promised to Ravana a little while ago in Chaupai line no. 6 that follows Doha no. 48 and precedes these Chandas above.

It ought to be noted that no worthwhile gain was made by either side during the whole of the first day of the war, and the first half of the second day too. The two giant armies clashed and dashed but gained nothing except bloodshed and mayhem.

Meghanad decided to break this logjam by intervening himself. He would march to the battle-field with his large and well-equipped demon army to face the enemy, and this would necessitate the unlocking of the gigantic gates of the fort. Though this "opening of the gates" is not specifically mentioned in the Text, but it is an obvious conclusion—because without their opening, the massive demon army, their huge war chariots and their countless warriors and great commanders, one of them being Meghanad himself, could not step on the battle-field and fight the war directly with Lord Ram, his brother Laxman, Vibhishan who too lent his hand, Sugriv, the king of the monkey forces, and Jamvant, the chief of the bears.

The main actions of the war unfolded on the battle-ground outside the walls of the fort. We shall be reading all about it as the war progresses.]

-----**-----

Section 14.2: Adhyatma Ramayan

Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yuddha Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 25-64:-

Now let us take a pause at this point and see how the developments in Lanka and the War have been described in Adhyatma Ramayan by quoting from its Lanka Kand, Canto 5, verse nos. 25-64 as follows.

This narrative starts with the arrival of Malyawanta to give his advice to Ravana in order to persuade the latter to end hostility. When Ravana refused, the battle commenced with all its ferocity.

ततः समागमद्भृदो माल्यवान् राक्षसो महान् ।
बुद्धिमान्नीतिनिपुणो राज्ञो मातुः प्रियः पिता ॥ २५॥

प्राह तं राक्षसं वीरं प्रशान्तेनान्तरात्मना ।
शृणु राजन् वचो मेऽद्य श्रुत्वा कुरु यथेप्सितम् ॥ २६॥ tataḥ samāgamadvṛddho mālyavān rākṣaso mahān । buddhimānnītinipuṇo rājñō mātuh priyaḥ pitā ॥ 25॥ prāha taṁ rākṣasaṁ viraṁ praśāntenāntarātmanā । śṛṇu rājan vaco me'dya śrutvā kuru yathepsitam ॥ 26॥

[Lord Shiva said to his consort Uma—] ‘When Suka¹ had gone from there (i.e. from Ravana’s court), Malyavan (also known as “Malyawant”), an old demon who was wise, intelligent and prudent, as well as learned in the rules, regulations and codes of conduct of the day, and who was Ravana’s maternal grandfather, came there (25).

He calmly said to Ravana, the brave demon king, ‘Oh King! Listen to my words carefully. Then do as you think fit (26).

[Note—¹Suka (also pronounced as Shuka, Shuk, Suk) was a messenger of Ravana sent behind Vibhishan, when he went to seek refuge with Lord Ram, to spy on him and report back about whatever he could find out of the Lord’s army and its preparedness. Suka was emotionally won over by the gracious nature of Lord Ram and the way the Lord warmly welcomed Vibhishan inspite of his being his enemy’s (i.e. Ravana’s) brother. He concluded that his own lord, i.e. Ravana, was no match vis-à-vis Lord Ram from any angle, and that he was wrong in his doings and creating unnecessary hostility with the merciful Lord. Suka was also impressed by the Lord’s gallant army and concluded that Ravana stood no chance against the might of it. Thus Suka decided that he would do well now if he followed the example of Vibhishan in seeking peace for his soul by abandoning Ravana and seeking Lord Ram’s refuge. When Suka gave his honest views to Ravana, the latter lost his cool and severely reprimanded Suka, at which the latter left his court and went to surrender himself before Lord Ram. Blessed by the Lord, Suka led a life of a hermit thereafter, spending his time in meditation and spiritual pursuit in the forest alongside other hermits and ascetics.

This story is narrated in Adhyatma Ramayan, Lanka/Yudha Kand, Canto 4, verse nos. 15-56, and Canto 5, verse nos. 1-24.

In Ram Charit Manas of Tulsidas, Suka’s episode is narrated in its Sundar Kand (Canto 5), Chaupai line no. 8 that precedes Doha no. 51—to Chaupai line no. 12 that precedes Doha no. 57.]

यदा प्रविष्टा नगरीं जानकी रामवल्लभा ।
तदादि पुर्या दृश्यन्ते निमित्तानि दशानन ॥ २७॥ घोराणि नाशहेतूनि तानि मे वदतः शृणु । खरस्तनितनिर्घोषा मेघा अतिभयङ्कराः ॥ २८॥
शोणितेनाभिवर्षन्ति तङ्कामुष्णेन सर्वदा ।
रुदन्ति देवलिङ्गानि स्विद्यन्ति पृथलन्ति च ॥ २९॥ yadā praviṣṭā nagarīm jānakī rā mavallabhā । tadādi puryaṁ drśyante nimittāni daśānana ॥ 27॥

ghorāṇi nāśahetūni tāni me vadataḥ śṛṇu । kharastanitanirghoṣā meghā atibhayaṅkarāḥ ॥ 28॥ śoṇitenābhivarṣanti laṅkāmuṣṇena sarvadā । rudanti devaliṅgāni svidyanti pracalanti ca ॥ 29॥

27-29. 'Oh the ten headed one (Ravana)! Ever since the beloved of Sri Ram, i.e. his wife Janki (also known as Sita), has entered this city of Lanka, horrifying and awfully bad omens portending destruction and havoc are evident everywhere. I shall briefly tell you about them, listen. Very dark clouds thunder frighteningly with sharp bolts of lightening (27-28), and they incessantly pour hot blood over Lanka. The idols of gods¹ weep, their images perspire, and they move (shift) from their places (pedestals) themselves (29).

[Note—¹It means that though the demons were in general anti-gods, yet they used to worship some unconventional deity or deities whom they venerated as the god or gods of their race.]

कालिका पाण्डुरैर्दन्तैः प्रहसत्यग्रतः स्थिता ।
 खरा गोषु प्रजायन्ते मूषका नकुलैः सह ॥ ३०॥
 माजरिण तु युद्ध्यन्ति पन्नगा गरुडेन तु ।
 करालो विकटो मुण्डः पुरुषः कृष्णपिङ्गलः ॥ ३१॥
 कालो गृहाणि सर्वेषां काले काले त्ववेक्षते । एतान्यन्यानि दृश्यन्ते निमित्तान्युद्भवन्ति च ॥ ३२॥ kālikā pāṇḍurairdantaiḥ prahasatyagrataḥ sthitā । kharā goṣu prajāyante mūṣakā nakulaiḥ saha ॥ 30॥ mārjāreṇa tu yuddhyanti pannagā garuḍena tu । karālo vikaṭo muṇḍaḥ puruṣaḥ kṛṣṇapiṅgalaḥ ॥ 31॥ kālo grhāṇi sarveṣāṃ kāle kāle tvavekṣate । etānyanyāni dr̥śyante nimittānyudbhavanti ca ॥ 32॥

30-32. Kalika (a female evil spirit representing death) bares her yellow teeth and laughs in front of demons; the cows give birth to donkeys, while rats fight with cats and mongoose (30), and serpents with herons and eagles. Off and on, a very horrifying, colossus, bare-headed death-like figure, which is black or yellow in countenance, keeps on staring menacingly at the households of the city. In a similar manner, many black (or dark) and inauspicious signs are seen being produced everywhere. [Pay attention to me: these evil signs portend nothing but disaster.] (31-32).

अतः कुलस्य रक्षार्थं शान्तिं कुरु दशानन ।
 सीतां सत्कृत्य सधनां रामायाशु प्रयच्छ भोः ॥ ३३॥
 रामं नारायणं विद्धि विद्वेषं त्यज राघवे ।
 यत्पादपोतमाश्रित्य ज्ञानिनो भवसागरम् ॥ ३४॥

तरन्ति भक्तिपूतान्तास्ततो रामो न मानुषः । भजस्व भक्तिभावेन रामं सर्वहृदालयम् ॥ ३७॥ ataḥ kulasya rakṣārthaṁ śāntiṁ kuru daśānana । sītāṁ satkr̥tya sadhanāṁ rāmāyāśu prayaccha bhoḥ ॥ 33॥ rāmaṁ nārāyaṇaṁ viddhi vidveṣaṁ tyaja rāghave । yatpādapotamāśritya jñānino bhavasāgaram ॥ 34॥ taranti bhaktipūtāntāstato rāmo na mānuṣaḥ । bhajasva bhaktibhāvena rāmaṁ sarvahr̥dālayam ॥ 35॥

33-35. Therefore, oh the ten-headed one! You must take effective steps to neutralise and calm them down in order to safeguard and protect the interest of your clan. [To wit, you must take positive, remedial steps immediately to avoid a calamitous war while still there is time for you by abandoning your belligerent attitude.]

[And what ought must you do towards this goal of neutralising the evil effect of bad omens?] You must immediately give Sita back to Sri Ram with full honours and a lot of precious gifts. [To wit, you should send Sita back to her husband Lord Ram, and send a lot of gifts with her as a token of sincerity in making peace with the Lord. A peaceful settlement with the invading army is the best option left for you in view of the dark omens appearing in Lanka.] (33).

You must treat Lord Sri Ram as Narayan (Lord Vishnu) himself. So forget about having any sort of opposition, animosity, malice, ill-will and hostility with him. Remember: By taking the help of a boat in the form of Raghav's (Lord Sri Ram's) lotus-like feet, ascetics and hermits, i.e. all the enlightened souls—whose internal being has been purified by devotion, dedication, adoration and worship of the Lord—cross this ocean-like gross mundane world of delusions. Verily indeed and in all sooth, Lord Sri Ram is not an ordinary human. Therefore, you too must worship, honour, respect, adore and have devotion for the supreme Lord who resides in the heart of all living beings who have devotion, faith and belief in him (34-35).

यद्यपि त्वं दुश्चारे भक्त्या पूतो भविष्यसि ।
मद्वाक्यं कुरु राजेन्द्र कुलकौशलहेतवे ॥ ३६॥
तत्तु माल्यवतो वाक्यं हितमुक्तं दशाननः । न मर्षयति दुष्टात्मा कालस्य वशमागतः ॥ ३७॥ yadyapi tvam durācāro bhaktyā pūto bhaviṣyasi । madvākyaṁ kuru rājendra kulakauśalahetave ॥ 36॥ tattu mālyavato vākyaṁ hitamuktaṁ daśānanaḥ । na marṣayati duṣṭātmā kālasya vaśamāgataḥ ॥ 37॥

36-37. Though your demeanours, actions, characters and deeds are not good (i.e. although you are full of vices, sinful, evil and pervert), you still can become pure and purged of these vices by having his Bhakti. [To wit, by developing the virtues of devotion for Lord Ram, who is a personified form of the Supreme Being known as Lord Vishnu, by worshipping him and following him as a devotee, by forsaking your evil ways and manners, you can cleanse your inner self and become as pure and holy as any other devotee of the Lord. This will give your soul eternal peace and beatitude.]

Oh King of Kings! Accept my words of good advice which are meant for the welfare of your whole family and the demon race.' (36).

But these well intentioned words of Malyavan, which were spoken for the good of Ravana, were not acceptable to the latter; the wicked and evil fellow became enraged and felt insulted because he was under the spell of death and in the grip of fate that destined his destruction. So he took umbrage at the suggestions of Malyavan, and treated the latter's advice as an affront to his majesty, valour, abilities and strength (37).

मानवं कृपणं राममेकं शाखामृगाश्रयम् ।
 समर्थं मन्यसे केन हीनं पित्रा मुनिप्रियम् ॥ ३८॥
 रामेण प्रेषितो नूनं भाषसे त्वमनर्गलम् ।
 गच्छ वृद्धोऽसि बन्धुस्त्वं सोढं सर्वं त्वयोदितम् ॥ ३९॥
 इतो मत्कर्णपदवीं दहत्येतद्वचस्तव ।
 इत्युक्त्वा सर्वसचिवैः सहितः प्रस्थितस्तदा ॥ ४०॥
 प्रासादाग्रे समासीनः पश्यन् वानरसैनिकान् । युद्धायायोजयत्सर्वराक्षसान् समुपस्थितान् ॥ ४१॥ mānavam kṛpaṇam rāmamekaṁ śākhāmrgāśrayam । samarthaṁ manyase kena hīnaṁ pitrā munipriyam ॥ 38॥ rāmeṇa preṣito nūnaṁ bhāṣase tvamanargalam । gaccha vṛddho'si bandhustvaṁ soḍhaṁ sarvaṁ tvayoditam ॥ 39॥

 ito matkarṇapadaviṁ dahatyetadvacastava । ityuktvā sarvasacivaiḥ sahitaḥ prasthitastadā ॥ 40॥ prāsādāgre samāsīnaḥ paśyan vānarasainikān । yuddhāyāyojayatsarvarākṣasān samupasthitān ॥ 41॥

38-41. He said contemptuously, 'In what respect do you consider Sri Ram—who is but a poor, lowly and humble human—able and competent and as majestic as you make him out to be, especially when he has taken the help of those who reside on the branches of trees (i.e. monkeys), and who has been exiled even by his own father thinking that he was no good? He is only loved by sages, hermits, seers, ascetics etc. (but surely not by those who are brave and gallant warriors like me) (38).

It looks that Sri Ram has sent you as his advocate to mislead me by creating a smoke screen of fear in my mind, and that is why you talk such nuisance. Go, you are old and my relative (maternal grandfather; see verse no. 25). So I have tolerated whatever you have said (otherwise, I would have killed you) (39).

But enough is enough; your words scorch my ears and I don't want to hear another single utterance of yours. [Scoot from here forthwith; I don't want to see you an instant more.]'

Scolding Malyavan most disdainfully and sternly rebuking him, Ravana left his court in a huff; he was accompanied by all his other ministers who were in attendance there (40).

Then he climbed to the highest terrace in his palace and sat down there. From there, he watched the monkey army and took note of its formations. Then he started appointing his commanders and assigning specific duties to the demon warriors who were sitting around him, in preparation for the war (41).

रामोऽपि धनुरादाय लक्ष्मणेन समाहृतम् ।
दृष्ट्वा रावणमासीनं कोपेन कलुषीकृतः ॥ ४२॥ किरीटिनं समासीनं मन्त्रिभिः परिवेष्टितम् ।
शशाङ्कार्धनिभेनैव बाणेनैकेन राघवः ॥ ४३॥
श्वेतच्छत्रसहस्राणि किरीटदशकं तथा । विच्छेद निमिषार्धेन तदद्भुतमिवाभवत् ॥ ४४॥ rāmo'pi dhanurādāya lakṣmaṇena samāhṛtam । dr̥ṣṭvā rāvaṇamāsīnaṃ kopena kaluṣīkṛtaḥ ॥ 42॥ kirīṭinaṃ samāsīnaṃ mantribhiḥ pariveṣṭitam । śaśāṅkārdhanibhenaiva bāṇenaikena rāghavaḥ ॥ 43॥ śvetacchatrasahasrāṇi kirīṭadaśakam tathā । ciccheda nimiṣārdhena tadadbhutamivābhavat ॥ 44॥

42-44. Meanwhile, here Lord Sri Ram saw Ravana (sitting on the terrace of his palace) and angrily lifted the bow brought to him by Laxman (42).

He (Ravana) had crowns on his head and was sitting surrounded by his council of ministers. Then, using an arrow with a semi-circular head (i.e. an arrow with a scythe or sickle-like head), Raghav (Lord Sri Ram) (43) cut-off thousands of white ceremonial umbrellas which were over Ravana's head along with all the 10 crowns that adorned his head. It was a miraculous feat that was most astonishingly done in literally 'half of a moment' ("nimiṣārdhena"; very quickly before anyone could understand what happened)¹ (44).

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 13—to Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 14.]

लज्जितो रावणस्तूर्णं विवेश भवनं स्वकम् ।
आहूय राक्षसान् सर्वान् प्रहस्तप्रमुखान् खलः ॥ ४५॥
वानरैः सह युद्धाय नोदयामास सत्वरः ।
ततो भेरीमृदङ्गाद्यैः पणवानकगोमुखैः ॥ ४६॥
महिषोष्ट्रैः खरैः सिंहैर्द्वीपिभिः कृतवाहनाः ।
खड्गशूलधनुःपाशयष्टितोमरशक्तिभिः ॥ ४७॥
लक्षिताः सर्वतो लङ्कां प्रतिद्वारमुपाययुः । तत्पूर्वमेव रामेण नोदिता वानरर्षभाः ॥ ४८॥ lajjito rāvaṇastūrṇaṃ viveśa bhavanaṃ svakam । āhūya rākṣasān sarvān prahastapramukhān khalaḥ ॥ 45॥

vānaraiḥ saha yuddhāya nodayāmāsa satvarah । tato bherīmṛdaṅgādyaiḥ paṇavānakagomukhaiḥ ॥ 46॥ mahiṣoṣṭraiḥ kharaiḥ siṃhairdvīpibhiḥ kṛtavāhanāḥ । khaḍgaśūladhanuḥpāśayaṣṭitomaraśaktibhiḥ ॥47॥ lakṣitāḥ sarvato laṅkāṃ pratidvāramupāyayuh । tatpūrvameva rāmeṇa noditā vānararṣabhāḥ ॥ 48॥

45-48. Being extremely ashamed and humiliated by this unexpected development, Ravana got up and immediately went inside his palace. He summoned Prahast and all other chief demons (45), and ordered them to start the war with the monkeys forthwith.

[The felling of Ravana's crowns and ceremonial umbrellas were too much for him to bear. It was a sort of provocative assault on his self-respect, dignity and honour that literally broke the camel's back. If he still had some secret desire to make some sort of compromise then that was knifed. The battle actually begins from here.]

Then the demons sounded various musical instruments that are played to announce the commencement of war; it was a war cry and a clarion call for the final out-break of hostilities.

These instruments were kettle-drums, battle-drums, cymbals, bugles etc. The demon army rode to the battle front on various sorts of animals such as buffaloes, camels and donkeys, lions and tigers; they armed themselves to the teeth with swords, tridents, bows, slings, rods, batons, spears and arrows and all other kinds of missiles.

The formidable demon army then appeared at each of the entrance gates of Lanka. [There were four massive gates of the fort¹.]

Here in the camp of Lord Sri Ram, he had already given necessary orders to his monkey commanders with respect to the launching of the assault on Lanka (45-48).

[Note—¹Refer: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line no. 2 that precedes Doha no. 39.]

उद्यम्य गिरिशृङ्गाणि शिखराणि महान्ति च ।
 तरुंश्चोत्पाद्य विविधान् युद्धाय हरियूथपाः ॥ ४९॥
 प्रेक्षमाणा रावणस्य तान्यनीकानि भागशः । राघवप्रियकामार्थं लङ्कामारुरुहस्तदा ॥ ५०॥ udyamya giriśṛṅgāṇi śikharāṇi mahānti ca । taruṃścotpāṭya vividhān yuddhāya hariyūthapāḥ ॥ 49॥ prekṣamāṇā rāvaṇasya tānyanīkāni bhāgaśaḥ । rāghavapriyakāmārthaṃ laṅkāmaruruhustadā ॥ 50॥

49-50. With Lord's green signal to attack, the monkey and bear warriors picked up large rocks and boulders from mountain tops and uprooted different types of large trees to arm themselves as they proceeded for battle. They saw the different sections of Ravana's troops stationed at different gates of the fort of Lanka. Then the Lord's army climbed upon the ramparts and battlements of the fort of Lanka to successfully accomplish the Lord's work which was most important and very dear to him¹ (49-50).

[Note—¹What was this work? From the larger perspective of the welfare of this creation and the Supreme Being's duties towards it, it was to eliminate the scourge of the evil demons who had been tormenting all the creatures in the world.

To wit, from a wider and a spiritual perspective it was to free the souls of the demons from their evil gross bodies in which their souls were trapped, so that they can find deliverance and emancipation for themselves, so that salvation could be attained by these unfortunate souls. However, from a more earthly and limited perspective, it was to free Sita from the clutches of Ravana by defeating him in the war.]

ते दुर्मैः पर्वताग्रैश्च मुष्टिभिश्च प्लवङ्गमाः ।
ततः सहस्रयूथाश्च कोटियूथाश्च यूथपाः ॥ ५१॥ कोटीशतयुताश्चान्ये रुरुधुर्नगरं भृशम् ।
आप्लवन्तः प्लवन्तश्च गर्जन्तश्च प्लवङ्गमाः ॥ ५२॥

te drumaiḥ parvatāgraiśca muṣṭibhiśca plavaṅgamāḥ । tataḥ sahasrayūthāśca koṭiyūthāśca yūthapāḥ ॥ 51॥ koṭīśatayutāścānye rurudhurnagaram bhṛśam । āplavantāḥ plavantaśca garjantaśca plavaṅgamāḥ ॥ 52॥

51-52. Out of them (i.e. the monkey and bear commanders), some were the commanders of a thousand troops, some of ten thousand troops, and still others of hundreds of thousands of troops. This formidable and ferocious army besieged the city of Lanka (and its fort) from all the sides. The warriors were very excited as they jumped, hopped and skipped energetically, shouting and roaring in a fearsome way at the top of their voices. They were armed with trees and mountains (i.e. with large rocks and boulders etc.), and were ready to strike the enemy with clenched fists. [The monkeys and bears thrust their clenched fists angrily in the air, taunting the demons and aiming their fists at those looking down at them from the top of the fort.] (51-52).

रामो जयत्यतिबलौ लक्ष्मणश्च महाबलः ।
राजा जयति सुग्रीवो राघवेणानुपालितः ॥ ५३॥
इत्येवं घोषयन्तश्च समं युयुधिरेऽरिभिः ।
हनूमानङ्गदश्चैव कुमुदो नील एव च ॥ ५४॥
नलश्च शरभश्चैव मैन्दो द्विविद एव च ।
जाम्बवान् दधिवक्त्रश्च केसरी तार एव च ॥ ५५॥
अन्ये च बलिनः सर्वे यूथपाश्च प्लवङ्गमाः ।
द्वाराण्युत्प्लुत्य लङ्कायाः सर्वतो रुरुधुर्भृशम् ।
तदा वृक्षैर्महाकायाः पर्वताग्रैश्च वानराः ॥ ५६॥
निजघ्नुस्तानि रक्षांसि नखैर्दन्तैश्च वेगिताः ।
राक्षसाश्च तदा भीमा द्वारेभ्यः सर्वतो रुषा ॥ ५७॥

निर्गत्य भिन्दिपालैश्च खड्गैः शूलैः परश्वधैः । निजघ्नुर्वानरानीकं महाकाया महाबलाः ॥ ५८॥ rāmo jayatyatibalo lakṣmaṇaśca mahābalaḥ । rājā jayati sugrīvo rāghaveṇānupālitaḥ ॥ 53॥ ityevaṃ ghoṣayantaśca samaṃ yuyudhire'ribhiḥ । hanūmānaṅgadaścaiva kumudo nīla eva ca ॥ 54॥ nalaśca śarabhaścaiva maindo dvivida eva ca । jāmbavān dadhivaktraśca kesarī tāra eva ca ॥ 55॥ anye ca balinaḥ sarve yūthapāśca plavaṅgamāḥ । dvārāṇyutplutya laṅkāyāḥ sarvato rurudhurbhṛśam । tadā vṛkṣairmahākāyāḥ parvatāgraiśca vānarāḥ ॥ 56॥ nijaghnustāni rakṣāṃsi nakhairdantaiśca vegitāḥ । rākṣasāśca tadā bhīmā dvārebhyaḥ sarvato ruṣā ॥ 57॥ nirgatya bhindipālaiśca khadgaiḥ śūlaiḥ paraśvadhaiḥ । nijaghnurvānarānīkaṃ mahākāyā mahābalāḥ ॥ 58॥

53-58. 'Glory to the most valiant and mighty Lord Sri Ram and Laxman! Glory to Sugriv who is protected by Raghav (Lord Ram)!' (53).

Raising such slogans in a thunderous and resounding voice, they (the Lord's troops) clashed with the enemy (Ravana's troops).

Hanuman, Angad, Kumud, Neel, Nal, Sharabh, Mainda, Dwivid, Jamvant, Dadhimukh, Keshari, Taar (54-55) — —And other powerful and gallant monkey warriors and their commanders, jumped and bounced enthusiastically as they surrounded all the gates of Lanka from all the sides.

Then holding large trees as well as rocks and boulders picked up from mountain sides, those monkeys swiftly began to attack the demons. They also used their teeth and nails in the assault on the demons.

Then the most strong and powerful demons, who were very fearful and appeared formidable with their colossus shapes and sizes, emerged from all the gates of the city, armed with lances, spears and spikes, as well as swords, tridents, battle-axes etc. to launch a vicious counter attack on the army of monkeys and bears (56-58).

रक्षसांश्च तथा जघ्नुर्वानरा जितकाशिनः ।
तदा बभूव समये मांसशोणितकर्दमः ॥ ५९॥
रक्षसां वानराणां च सम्बभूवाद्भुतोपमः ।
ते हयैश्च गर्जैश्चैव रथैः काम्बुनसन्निभैः ॥ ६०॥
रक्षोन्याघ्रा युयुधिरे नादयन्तो दिशो दश । रक्षसाश्च कपीन्द्राश्च परस्परजयैषिणः ॥ ६१॥ rākṣasāṃśca tathā jaghnurvānarā jitakāśinaḥ ।

tadā babhūva samaro māṃsaśoṇitakardamaḥ ॥ 59॥ rakṣasāṃ vānarāṇāṃ ca sambabhūvādbhutopamaḥ । te hayaiśca gajaiścaiva rathaiḥ kāñcanasannibhaiḥ ॥ 60॥ rakṣovyāghrā yuyudhire nādayanto diśo daśa । rākṣasāśca kapīndrāśca parasparajayaīṣiṇaḥ ॥ 61॥

59-61. The victorious monkey warriors too began to hit back at the demons ferociously. At that time, a very fierce and spectacular battle erupted between the demons and the monkeys as a result of which blood and flesh formed slush on the battle-field. The brave lion-like demons rode horses, elephants and golden chariots. All the directions of the compass reverberated and echoed with their thunderous roars and shrieks (i.e. war cries). The demons and monkeys were eager to attain victory over each other (59-61).

रक्षसान् वानरा जघ्नुर्वानरांश्चैव रक्षसाः ।
 रामेण विष्णुना दृष्टा हरयो दिविजांशजाः ॥ ६२॥
 बभूवुर्बलिनो हृष्टास्तदा पीतामृता इव ।
 सीताभिर्मर्षपापेन रावणेनाभिपालितान् ॥ ६३॥
 हतश्रीकान् हतबलान् रक्षसान् जघ्नुर्योजसा । चतुर्थांशावशेषेण निहतं रक्षसं बलम् ॥ ६४॥ rākṣasān vānarā jaghnurvānarāṃścaiva rākṣasāḥ । rāmeṇa viṣṇunā dr̥ṣṭā harayo divijāṃśajāḥ ॥ 62॥ babhūvurbalino hr̥ṣṭāstadā pītāmṛtā iva । sītābhimarśapāpena rāvaṇenābhipālītān ॥ 63॥ hataśrīkān hatabalān rākṣasān jaghnurojasā । caturthāṃśāvaśeṣeṇa nihataṃ rākṣasaṃ balam ॥ 64॥

62-64. The monkeys (and bears) on the one side, and the demons on the other side, started hitting and killing each other viciously; both the warring armies fought with a firmness of purpose, strength of resolution, and vigour of action; they dueled feverishly and fiercely, with ferocity, viciousness and violence the like of which was not witnessed anywhere anytime in a battle hereto before in this world.

The monkeys, who were born out of the genes of the various gods¹, who were therefore inherently indefeatable and possessed unmatched potentials, but who gained more might, valour, fierceness and powers when Lord Sri Ram, who was Lord Vishnu himself, glanced at them with his benevolent look, thereby gracing them with his blessings, and this, coupled with the earnestness of purpose and conviction in the noble cause for which they had engaged themselves in this war, had made them supremely invincible in the battle-field.

Thus empowered and emboldened, the monkeys and bears acquired special abilities and vigour and vitality and punch as if they had drunk 'Amrit', the elixir that grants renewed vigour and dynamism to even the dying; so they began pounding and slaying the demons vigorously. The demons, on the other hand, had lost their enthusiasm, zeal, strength and courage, as well as their confidence and faith in themselves and the cause they were espousing, because they were nourished and sustained by Ravana who had become very sinful, especially for his very evil deed of having dared to touch Sita, making them uncertain, doubtful and dithering on the ground of the battle-field².

The result was that as the day and the battle progressed, the demon army was gradually depleted to such an extent that by the end of the first day of the battle it was reduced to a quarter of its original strength (62-64).

[Note—¹Refer: (a) Ram Charit Manas, Baal Kand, Doha no. 187—to Chaupai line no. 5 that precede Doha no. 188; and (b) Adhyatma Ramayan, Baal Kand, Canto 2, verse nos. 29-32.

²The idea is that the monkeys gained an upper hand in the battle because they were fighting for a good cause and a righteous lord (Sri Ram), while the demons lost ground because they were fighting for the wrong cause and for an evil lord (Ravana).

Another important point is to be noted here. It is this: Earlier it has been clearly stated earlier that Ravana did not touch Sita even while kidnapping her—apropos: Adhyatma Ramayan, Aranya Kand, Canto 7, verse nos. 51-52. So by saying that Ravana had “touched Sita” and had therefore become most sinful is just a symbolic way of saying that he had dared to cast his evil and wicked eyes on her. ‘Touch’ here does not mean physical contact by the hand; it is a figure of speech indicating how he had even dared to think of her or keep her in his captivity or cast his evil eyes on her with malefic intentions—implying that if one thinks of someone in an evil way then it is as good as ‘touching that person’.]

-----**-----

Section 14.3: Kavitawali Ramayan

Kavitawali Ramayan, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 30-51.

We have read about the first phase of the war, with attacks and counter-attacks by the army of Lord Ram and that of Ravana, from Ram Charit Manas and Adhyatma Ramayan, in Sub-sections 14.1 and 14.2 respectively. It will however be evident that while the narrative in the Ram Charit Manas gives a vivid description of the attack on the fort of Lanka and its successful breaching by the Lord’s army, which is immediately followed by a vigorous battle between the two armies in which Hanuman and Angad played a hero’s role, the narrative in the Adhyatma Ramayan is crisper and a little bit more brief.

But they are silent with respect to what happened inside the city of Lanka; what was the situation in the famed city when the army of monkeys and bears invaded it after leaping on the walls of the fort? Except saying in Ram Charit Manas, albeit in a passing way, that there was a great turmoil in the city of Lanka when the monkeys invaded, with a lot of wailing and shrieking of terrified women and children, and the cursing of Ravana by the horrified citizens in general for being the cause of their sufferings (apropos: Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, Chaupai line nos. 4-5 that precede Doha no. 42), nothing much is said about the massive havoc and destruction, of the mayhem and upheaval that was caused inside the city by this invasion.

This shortfall however is recompensed in “Kavitawali Ramayan”, Lanka Kand, verse nos. 30-51 which vividly describes the scene of death and destruction in the city of Lanka as the war raged with all its fierceness around it. These verses give to the reader a virtual ring-side view of the developments on the streets of Lanka, and how its helpless population reacted to, and was affected by, this blood-curdling legendary war of a mammoth proportion.

Now, let us commence reading from Kavitawali Ramayan as mentioned herein above.

The Demon-Monkey War

रोष्यो रन रावनु, बोलाय बीर बानइत, जानत जे रीति सब संजुग समाजकी ।
चली चतुरंग चमू, चपरि हने निसान,
सेना सराहन जोग रातिचरराजकी ।।
तुलसी बिलोकि कपि-भालु किलकत
ललकत लखि ज्यो कँगाल पातरी सुनाजकी ।
रामरुख निरखि हरष्यो हियँ हनूमानु, मानो खेलवार खोली सीसताज बाजकी ।।30 ।।

30. rōśyō rana rāvanu, bōlāya bīra bāna'ita, jānata jē rīti saba sañjuga samājakī.
calī caturaṅga camū, capari hanē nisāna, sēnā sarāhana jōga rāticararājakī..
tulasī bilōki kapi-bhālu kilakata lalakata lakhi jyōm kaṁgāla pātārī sunājakī.
rāmarukha nirakhi haraśyō hiyaṁ hanūmānu, mānō khēlavāra khōlī sīsataja bājakī..30..

Verse no. 6/30—Then Ravana angrily summoned his very famous and able warriors, who were experts in the art of warfare. All the four arms of the demon army (infantry, armour, cavalry and elephants) started for the battle-front as the war-drums suddenly sounded the battle-cry, chillingly and loudly. The demon army of Ravana looked most magnificent and awe-inspiring at that moment.

Tulsidas says that seeing them, the monkeys and bears laughed derisively and merrily as if beggars greedily look at platters full of delicious food. On a signal from Lord Ram, Hanuman became excited as if a hunter had opened the cage of the falcon (and given it freedom to hunt its prey).

[Note—The war between the monkey army and the demon army has been described in detail also in Ram Charit Manas, Lanka Kand, from Chaupai line no. 1 that precedes Doha no. 39—to Doha no. 103.]

साजि कै सनाह-गजगाह सउछाह दल, महाबली धाए बीर जातुधान धीरके ।
इहाँ भालु-बंदर बिसाल मेरु-मंदर-से

लिए सैल-साल तोरि नीरनिधितीरके ।।
 तुलसी तमकि-ताकि भिरे भारी जुद्ध क्रुद्ध, सेनप सराहे निज निज भट भीरके ।
 रुंडनके झुंड झूमि-झूमि झुकरे-से नाचै, समर सुमार सूर मारै रघुबीरके ।।31।।

31. sāji kai sanāha-gajagāha sa'uchāha dala, mahābalī dhā'ē bīra jātudhāna dhīrakē.
 ihāṁ bhālu-bandara bisāla mēru-mandara-sē li'ē saila-sāla tōri nīranidhitīrakē.. tulasī tamaki-tāki bhirē bhārī jud'dha krud'dha, sēnapa sarāhē nija nija bhaṭa bhīrakē.
 ruṇḍanakē jhuṇḍa jhūmi-jhūmi jhukarē-sē nācaim, samara sumāra sūra mārāim raghubīrakē..31..

Verse no. 6/31—The courageous Ravana's great warriors advanced armed with shields and supported by war-elephants (1).

Here, large monkeys, who were as huge as Mt. Sumeru and Mt. Mandar, uprooted mountains and Shal Trees from near the sea shore (2).

Tulsidas says that then both the groups, full of anger, faced each other, and roaring loudly clashed with each other furiously. The commanders encouraged the warriors under their respective commands (3).

The bodies, whose heads were cut (headless trunks) begin to totter and swoon but refused to fall, so excited was their blood; and Lord Ram's champion warriors began to hit hard at the enemy in the battle (4).

तीखे तुरंग कुरंग सुरंगनि साजि चढ़े छँटे छैल छबीले ।
 भारी गुमान जिन्हें मनमें, कबहुँ न भए रनमें तन ढीले ।।
 तुलसी लखि कै गज केहरि ज्यो झपटे, पटके सब सूर सलीले ।
 भूमि परे भट भूमि कराहत, हाँकि हने हनुमान हठीले ।।32।।

32. tīkhē turaṅga kuraṅga suraṅgani sāji caṛhē chaṁṭi chaila chabīlē.
 bhārī gumāna jinhēm manamēm, kabahūṁ na bha'ē ranamēm tana ḍhīlē..
 tulasī lakhi kai gaja kēhari jyōṁ jhapṭē, paṭakē saba sūra salīlē.
 bhūmi parē bhaṭa bhūmi karāhata, hāṁki hanē hanumāna haṭhīlē..32..

Verse no. 6/32—Those who were very proud of their bravery and courage, whose bodies never relaxed (i.e. were ever eager to fight and engage themselves in robust activity)—such warriors mounted horses as swift as deer. Fully prepared to go into battle, the cavalry brigade charged. (1)

Tulsidas says even as a lion leaps at an elephant at the sight of it, so did Hanuman leapt forward and playfully began to knock the cavalry down, and they swooned, fell to the ground and wailed. This way the adamant Hanuman started slaying the demons by repeatedly challenging them. (2)

सूर सँजोइल साजि सुबाजि, सुसेल धरै बगमेल चले हैं ।
 भारी भुजा भरी, भारी सरीर, बली बिजयी सब भाँति भले हैं ।।

‘तुलसी’ जिन्ह धाएँ धुकै धरनी, धरनीधर धौर धकान हले हैं।
ते रन-तीक्खन लक्खन लाखन दानि ज्यों दारिद दाबि दले हैं।।33।।

33. sūra saṃjō'ila sāji subāji, susēla dharairṃ bagamēla calē hairṃ.
bhārī bhujā bhārī, bhārī sarīra, balī bijayī saba bhāṃti bhalē hairṃ..
'tulasi' jinha dhā'ēṃ dhukai dharanī, dharanīdhara dhaura dhakāna halē hairṃ.
tē rana-tikkhana lakkhana lākhana dāni jyōm dārida dābi dalē hairṃ..33..

Verse no. 6/33—Famous and valiant warriors mounted decorated horses, were armed with sharp spears, and rode to the battle in close formation. They had big muscular arms and well-built bodies, and they appeared attractive, brave and victorious by all means. (1)

Tulsidas says that lakhs of artful and witty warriors, who shook the earth when they ran and the mountains swayed when pushed by them, were defeated and destroyed by Laxman in the battle-field as if a great donor eliminates poverty by immense charity. (2)

गहि मंदर बंदर-भालु चले, सो मनो उनये घन सावनके।
'तुलसी' उत झुंड प्रचंड झुके, झपटै भट जे सुरदावनके।।
बिरुझे बिरुदैत जे खेत अरे, न टरे हठि बैरु बढावनके।
रन मारि मची उपरी-उपरा भलें बीर रघुपति रावनके।।34।।

34. gahi mandara bandara-bhālu calē, sō manō unayē ghana sāvanakē.
'tulasi' uta jhuṇḍa pracaṇḍa jhukē, jhapaṭairṃ bhaṭa jē suradāvanakē.. birujhē birudaita jē khēta arē, na ṭarē haṭhi bairu baṛhāvanakē..
rana māri macī uparī-uparā bhalēm bīra raghuppati rāvanakē..34..

Verse no. 6/34—The monkeys and bears charged forward, armed with mountains in their hands. The two armies looked like two huge banks of thick black clouds appearing on the horizon simultaneously.

Tulsidas says that at the same time, the multitudes of demons who could instill fear in the hearts of Gods, also charged and yelled.

Numerous famed warriors of Ravana, who had stood staunchly in the battle-field, clashed with each other because they were literally itching for a fight with anyone who came their way. They were stubborn and resolute, and refused to move or yield their ground. The warriors of Ram and Ravana crowded and swirled around each other as furious and no-holds-barred battle ensued.

सर-तोमर सेलसमूह पँवारत, मारत बीर निसाचरके।
इत तें तरु-ताल-तमाल चले, खर खंड प्रचंड महीधरके।।
'तुलसी' करि केहरिनादु भिरे भट, खग्ग खगे, खपुआ खरके।
नख-दंतन सों भुजदंड बिहंडत, मुंडसों मुंड परे झरके।।35।।

35. sara-tōmara sēlasamūha paṃvārata, mārata bīra nisācarakē.
ita tēm taru-tāla-tamāla calē, khara khaṇḍa pracaṇḍa mahīdharakē..
'tulasi' kari kēharinādu bhirē bhaṭa, khagga khagē, khapu'ā kharakē.. nakha-dantana sōm bhujadaṇḍa bihaṇḍata, muṇḍasōm muṇḍa parē jharakē..35..

Verse no. 6/35—Ravana's warriors are using arrows, spikes and mountains for the attack, and on this side (Ram's side) they are being repulsed with uprooted Tal and Tamaal Trees (both having stout and long stems), and large boulders which are sharp and pointed. (1)

Tulsidas says all the warriors roared like a lion and clashed. The brave plunged in the sea of swords while the cowards stealthily slithered away. The monkeys are piercing the arrows of the demons with their teeth and claws, while the severed heads of the brave lie on the ground and insult each other. (2)

रजनीचर-मत्तगयंद-घटा बिघटै मृगराजके साज लरै ।
झपटै भट कोटि महीं पटकै, गरजै, रघुबीरकी सौह करै ।।
'तुलसी' उत हाँक दसाननु देत, अचेत भे बीर, को धीर धरै ।
बिरुझो रन मारुतको बिरुदैत, जो कालहु कालुसो बूझि परै ।।36 ।।

36. rajanīcara-mattagayanda-ghaṭā bighaṭai mṛgarājakē sāja larai.
jhapaṭai bhaṭa kōṭi mahīm paṭakai, garajai, raghubīrakī saunha karai..
'tulasi' uta hāmka dasānanu dēta, acēta bhē bīra, kō dhīra dharai.
birujhō rana mārutakō birudaita, jō kālahu kālusō būjhi parai..36..

Verse no. 6/36—Hanuman destroys the demon army like a lion amongst mad and wild elephants. [A single lion can create havoc in a group of wild elephants. Hanuman is compared to this lion.] He leaps and dashes numerous warriors to the ground and raises the cry of Lord Ram's name (1).

Tulsidas says Ravana raises war cries from the opposite side, hearing which the monkeys become unconscious out of fear- who can have courage to withstand that ferocious challenge of Ravana? The champion-of-all Hanuman, seeing the monkeys unconscious and losing ground against the enemy, rushed and crashed in the enemy so furiously that even the God of death trembled out of fear (2).

जे रजनीचर बीर बिसाल, कराल बिलोकत काल न खाए ।
ते रन-रोर कपीसकिसोर बड़े बरजोर परे फग पाये ।।
लूम लपेटि, अकास निहारि कै, हाँकि हठी हनुमान चलाए ।
सूखि गे गात, चले नभ जात, परे भ्रमबात, न भूतल आए ।।37 ।।

37. jē rajanīcara bīra bisāla, karāla bilōkata kāla na khā'ē.
tē rana-rōra kapīsakisōra barē barajōra parē phaga pāyē..
lūma lapēṭi, akāsa nihāri kai, hāmki haṭhī hanumāna calā'ē.
sūkhi gē gāta, calē nabha jāta, parē bhramabāta, na bhūtala ā'ē..37..

Verse no. 6/37—Those huge, war-hardened and brave demon warriors whom even death could not eat (i.e. kill) out of fear of their ferocity (death was afraid to go near them), were caught by the son of Kesari (Hanuman) in his trap, who challenged them contemptibly, and then coiling them in his tail, he flung them skywards. The demons' bodies shriveled (shrank) in fear and they kept on flying upwards (as if caught in a tornado and sucked upwards or moved upwards in a spiral of air), and they never returned to earth (it is said that the comets and other cosmic debris originated from this incident).

जो दससीसु महीधर ईसको बीस भुजा खुलि खेलनिहारो ।
लोकप, दिग्गज, दानव, देव सबै सहमे सुनि साहसु भारो ॥
बीर बड़ो बिरुदैत बली, अजहूँ जग जागत जासु पँवारो ।
सो हनुमान हन्यो मुठिकाँ गिरि गो गिरिराजु ज्योँ गाजको मारो ॥३८॥

38. jō dasasīsu mahīdhara īsakō bīsa bhuajā khuli khēlanihārō.
lōkapa, diggaja, dānava, dēva sabai sahamē suni sāhasu bhārō..
bīra barō birudaita balī, ajahūṁ jaga jāgata jāsū paṁvārō.
sō hanumāna han'yō muṭhikāṁ giri gō girirāju jyōṁ gājakō mārō..38..

Verse no. 6/38—Ravana, who could uproot the abode of Lord Shiva, Mt. Kailash, with his 20 arms and play with it unhindered and without qualms; even the Gods, demons and guardians of all the directions of the Universe (Dikpals) were afraid of whose strength and courage (1); who was very brave and immensely courageous and whose fame is still being sung in the world, the same Ravana fell to the ground on being punched by the clenched fists of Hanuman as if a huge mountain crashes on being hit by thunderbolt (2).

दुर्गम दुर्ग, पहारतैं भारे, प्रचंड महा भुजदंड बने हैं ।
लक्खमें पक्खर, तिक्खन तेज, जे सूरसमाजमें गाज गने हैं ॥
ते बिरुदैत बली रनबाँकुरे हाँकि हठी हनुमान हने हैं ।
नामु लै रामु देखावत बंधुको घूमत घायल घायँ घने हैं ॥३९॥

39. durgama durga, pahāratēm bhārē, pracaṇḍa mahā bhujadaṇḍa banē haim.
lakkhamēm pakkhara, tikkhana tēja, jē sūrasamājamēm gāja ganē haim..
tē birudaita balī ranabāṁkurē hāṁki haṭhī hanumāna hanē haim.
nāmu lai rāmu dēkhāvata bandhukō ghūmata ghāyala ghāyaṁ ghanē haim..39..

Verse no. 6/39—Those demon warriors, whose arms are more invincible than an impregnable fortress and are larger than mountains, those who are ace among countless warriors and whose valour and energy are very famous and matchless, and those who are considered as 'lightening' among the society of warriors—all those famous veterans, war-hardened, valorous, valiant and brave demon warriors were slain by a stubborn Hanuman. Some of them who did not die, but were seriously wounded and roamed in the battle-field, were shown to Laxman by Lord Ram and identified by their individual names. [This shows that Lord Ram was well acquainted with the individual commanders, senior warriors and braves of the demon army.]

हाथिन सों हाथी मारे, घोरेसों सँघारे घोरे, रथनि सों रथ बिदरनि बलवानकी ।
चंचल चपेट, चोट चरन चकोट चाहें, हहरानी फौजें भरानी जातुधानकी ।।

 बार-बार सेवक-सराहना करत रामु,
 'तुलसी' सराहैं रीति साहेब सुजानकी ।
 लाँबी लूम लसत, लपेटि पटकत भट, देखौ देखौ, लखन! लरनि हनुमानकी ।।40 ।।

40. hāthina sōm hāthī mārē, ghōrēsōm saṁghārē ghōrē, rathani sōm ratha bidarani balavānakī.
 cañcala capēṭa, cōṭa carana cakōṭa cāhēm, haharānī phaujēm bhaharānī jātudhānakī..
 bāra-bāra sēvaka-sarāhanā karata rāmu,
 'tulasī' sarāhai rīti sāhēba sujānakī.
 lāmbī lūma lasata, lapēṭi paṭakata bhaṭa, dēkhau dēkhau, lakhana! larani hanumānakī..40..

Verse no. 6/40—Hanuman dashed elephants against elephants, killed horses by swinging other horses against them, crashed chariots against chariots and broke them into splinters (1). The demon army staggered and swooned when it was punched, bitten, kicked and thrashed by Hanuman (2).

Lord Ram again and again (repeatedly) praised the astounding valour and the magnificent feats of Hanuman, and said, 'Look, Laxman! Just have a look at the expertise in war of dear Hanuman. How marvelous his tail looks, by which he entraps the demons and dashes them against the ground.'

Tulsidas also praises the affection of his Lord towards his devoted servants (Hanuman) (3-4).

दबकि दबोरे एक, बारिधिमें बोरे एक, मगन महीमें, एक गगन उड़ात हैं ।
 पकरि पछारे कर, चरन उखारे एक, चीरि-फारि डारे, एक मीजि मारे लात हैं ।।
 'तुलसी' लखत, रामु, रावनु, बिबुध, बिधि, चक्रपानि, चंडीपति, चंडिका सिहात हैं ।
 बड़े-बड़े बानइत बीर बलवान बड़े, जातुधान, जूथप निपाते बातजात हैं ।।41 ।।

41. dabaki dabōrē ēka, bāridhimēm bōrē ēka, magana mahīmēm, ēka gagana uṛāta haiṁ.
 pakari pachārē kara, carana ukhārē ēka, cīri-phāri ḍārē, ēka mīji mārē lāta haiṁ..
 'tulasī' lakhata, rāmu, rāvanu, bibudha, bidhi, cakrapāni, caṇḍīpati, caṇḍikā sihāta haiṁ.
 baṛē-baṛē bāna'ita bīra balavāna baṛē, jātudhāna, jūthapa nipātē bātajāta haiṁ..41..

Verse no. 6/41—He (Hanuman) squeezed someone stealthily, drowned some in the ocean, buried others in the earth, flung some in the air (1), dashed someone by the hands, tore the legs from the trunk of still others, lacerated and tore-apart the flesh here and ground some one with his legs there (2).

Tulsidas says that, watching him in action, Lord Ram, Ravana, Gods, Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva and Chandi began to praise him and his skills in their hearts (3).

Hanuman killed the great commanders and the famed warriors of the demon army (4).

प्रबल प्रचंड बरिबंड बाहुदंड बीर धाए जातुधान, हनुमानु लियो घेरि कै ।
 महाबलपुंज कुंजरारि ज्यो गरजि, भट
 जहाँ-तहाँ पटके लँगूर फेरि-फेरि कै ।
 मारे लात, तोरे गात, भागे जात हाहा खात, कहैं, 'तुलसीस ! राखि' रामकी सौं टेरि कै ।
 ठहर-ठहर परे, कहरि-कहरि उठैं, हहरि-हहरि हरु सिद्ध हँसे हेरि कै ।।42।।

42. prabala pracaṇḍa baribaṇḍa bāhudaṇḍa bīra dhā'ē jātudhāna, hanumānu liyō ghēri kai.
 mahābalapum̐ja kuñjarāri jyōm̐ garaji, bhaṭa jahām̐-tahām̐ paṭakē laṁgūra phēri-phēri kai.
 mārē lāta, tōrē gāta, bhāgē jāta hāhā khāta, kahaim̐, 'tulasīsa! rākhi' rāmakī saum̐ ṭēri kai.
 ṭhahara-ṭhahara parē, kahari-kahari uṭhaim̐, hahari-hahari haru sid'dha haṁsē hēri kai..42..

Verse no. 6/42—Then, those demons whose arm's strength were very potent and violent and others who were very brave, strong and ferocious, rushed forward and surrounded Hanuman on all sides. But Hanuman, who was a fountain of immense valour and bravery, roared like a lion and dashed those demon warriors to the ground everywhere by swinging his stern tail repeatedly. He broke and crushed the bones of the demons by his kicks and blows. They ran away pleading and crying in plight, and invoking the name of Lord Ram, they beseeched Hanuman to spare them and protect them. Lying scattered here and there, they moaned in agony and tried to raise themselves; Lord Shiva and mystics laughed heartily on seeing their condition.

जाकी बाँकी बीरता सुनत सहमत सूर, जाकी आँच अबहूँ लसत लंक लाह-सी ।
 सोई हनुमान बलवान बाँको बानइत, जोहि जातुधान-सेना चल्यो लेत थाह-सी ।।
 कंपत अकंपन, सुखाय अतिकाय काय, कुंभऊकरन आइ रह्यो पाइ आह-सी ।
 देखें गजराज मृगराजु ज्यो गरजि धायो, बीर रघुबीरको समीरसूनु साहसी ।।43।।

43. jākī bām̐kī bīratā sunata sahamata sūra, jākī āṁca abahūṁ lasata laṅka lāha-sī.
 sō'i hanumāna balavāna bām̐kō bāna'ita, jōhi jātudhāna-sēnā calyō lēta thāha-sī..
 kampata akampāna, sukhāya atikāya kāya, kumbha'ūkarana ā'i rāhyō pā'i āha-sī.
 dēkhēm̐ gajarāja m̐garāju jyōm̐ garaji dhāyō, bīra raghubīrakō samīrasūnu sāhasī..43..

Verse no. 6/43—He, hearing whose peerless bravery even brave warriors feel afraid (to face him) and Lanka appears like red hot ambers from the fire which he had ignited—the same brave and strong Hanuman moved about, as if trying to measure the strength of the demons' army. At that moment, Ravana's son 'Akampan' (literally meaning one who never shakes) began to tremble and shake (out of fear), the body of 'Atikaya' (literally one who has an extra large body) shriveled and shrunk, and even Kumbhakaran came and exclaimed in surprise, and felt dejected. Like a lion rushes towards a herd of elephants, Lord Ram's brave and courageous son of Pawan (Hanuman) roared and rushed at them immediately on sighting them.

Jhulna

मत्त-भट-मुकुट, दसकंठ-साहस-सइल-सुंग-बिदरनि जनु बज्र-टाँकी ।
 दसन धरि धरनि चिक्करत दिग्गज, कमटु, सेषु संकुचित, संकित पिनाकी ।।
 चलत महि-मेरु, उच्छलत सायर सकल,
 बिकल बिधि बधिर दिसि-बिदिसि झाँकी ।
 रजनिचर-घरनि घर गर्भ-अर्भक स्रवत, सुनत हनुमानकी हाँक बाँकी ।। 44 ।।

44. matta-bhaṭa-mukūṭa, dasakaṇṭha-sāhasa-sa'ilasṛṅga-biddarani janu bajra-ṭāṁkī.
 dasana dhari dharani cikkarata diggaja, kamaṭhu, sēśu saṅkucita, saṅkita pinākī..
 calata mahi-mēru, ucchalata sāyara sakala, bikala bidhi badhira disi-bidisi jhāṁkī.
 rajanicara-gharani ghara garbha-arbhaka òvata, sunata hanumānakī hāṁka bāṁkī..44..

Verse no. 6/44—Hearing the terrible war-cry of Hanuman—who is like the strike of Bajra (thunderbolt) for crushing the pinnacle of the mountain representing the strength of Ravana, who is the most exalted among the furious and wild demon warriors—the Diggals (custodians of the directions) clasped the earth in their teeth and shrieked; the legendary tortoise and serpent wriggled, squirmed and shriveled out of fear; Lord Shiva became doubtful; the earth and Mt. Sumeru became uneasy and shook; all the seven seas heaved, bounced, buffeted and splashed; Brahma became agitated, worried and nervous and started peering in all the directions (to ascertain the fate of his creation); and the pregnant demonesses aborted in all the house-holds of Lanka.

कौनकी हाँकपर चौक चंडीसु, बिधि, चंडकर थकित फिरि तुरग हाँके । कौनके तेज बलसीम भट भीम-से
 भीमता निरखि कर नयन ढाँके ।।
 दास-तुलसीसके बिरुद बरनत बिदुष, बीर बिरुदैत बर बैरि धाँके ।

नाक नरलोक पाताल कोउ कहत किन
कहाँ हनुमानु-से बीर बाँके ।।45।।

45. kaunakī hāṁkapara cauṅka caṇḍīsu, bidhi, caṇḍakara thakita phiri turaga hāṁkē.
kaunakē tēja balasīma bhaṭa bhīma-sē bhīmatā nirakhi kara nayana dhāṁkē..
dāsa-tulasīsakē biruda baranata biduśa, bīra birudaita bara bairi dhāṁkē.
nāka naralōka pātāla kō'u kahata kina kahāṁ hanumānu-sē bīra bāṁkē..45..

Verse no. 6/45—On whose war-cry do Brahma and Shiva become alarmed and stunned, while the sun has to spur the horses of his chariot once again (because they had stopped in their track out of fear)?

Who is he whose blinding splendour and dazzling shine forced warriors like Bhimsen to close their eyes with their hands? [This refers to the Mahabharat war when Hanuman sat atop the war chariot of Arjun, and it is believed that it was Hanuman who led Arjun to his victory in the war. Bhimsen was a very strong warrior of the opposite camp. Here it means that Bhimsen was dazed when he saw Hanuman sitting on the chariot, and he lost all hopes of ever defeating Arjun who was protected by Hanuman. The splendour and shine are metaphors for Hanuman's great fame and majestic glory as an invincible warrior that made his enemies wince and close their eyes out of his fear.]

Wise people sing the valour and glory of Tulsidas' Lord (Hanuman) and say that he has established his majestic fame and stupendous glory over his well-known enemies who were famed for their strength and valour. Can anyone say that there is anyone who can be compared to Hanuman in bravery and strength in the heaven, on the earth and in the subterranean worlds?

जातुधानावली-मत्तकुंजरघटा
निरखि मृगराजु ज्यो गिरितें दूख्यो ।
बिकट चटकन चोट,चरन गहि, पटकि महि, निघटि गए सुभट, सतु सबको छूख्यो ।।
'दास तुलसी' परत धरनि धरकत, झुकत
हाट-सी उठति जंबुकनि लूख्यो ।
धीर रघुबीरको बीर रनबाँकुरो हाँकि हनुमान कुलि कटकु कूख्यो ।।46।।

46. jātudhānāvalī-mattakumjaraghaṭā nirakhi mṛgarāju jyōṁ giritēm ṭūṭyō.
bikaṭa caṭakana cōṭa,carana gahi, paṭaki mahi, nighaṭi ga'e subhaṭa, satu sabakō chūṭyō..
'dāsa tulasī' parata dharani dharakata, jhukata hāṭa-sī uṭhati jambukani lūṭyō.
dhīra raghubīrakō bīra ranabāṁkurō hāṁki hanumāna kuli kaṭaku kūṭyō..46..

Verse no. 6/46—Hanuman pounced on demons like a lion jumps upon a herd of wild elephants from the top of a mountain. All the warriors became hopeless and lost their courage and strength on being smitten by Hanuman's slaps and were dashed to ground by their legs. Tulsidas says that the earth shivered (shook) when the warriors fell on it, and jackals snatched at and ran away dragging falling warriors like robbers loot bulging purses in a market place. Lord Ram's brave and courageous warrior Hanuman repeatedly challenged the army of demons and crushed/beat them to pulp with great agility and ferocity.

Chappai

कतहुँ बिटप-भूधर उपारि परसेन बरषत ।
 कतहुँ बाजिसों बाजि मर्दि, गजराज करषत ॥
 चरनचोट चटकन चकोट अरि-उर-सिर बज्जत ।
 बिकट कटकु बिदरत बीरु बारिदु जिमि गज्जत ॥
 लंगूर लपेटत पटकि भट, 'जयति राम, जय!' उच्चरत ।
 तुलसीस पवननंदनु अटल जुद्ध क्रुद्ध कौतुक करत ॥४७॥

47. katahuṁ biṭapa-bhūdhara upāri parasēna baraśśata.
 katahuṁ bājisōm bāji mardī, gajarāja karaśśata.. caranacōṭa caṭakana cakōṭa ari-ura-sira bajjata.
 bikaṭa kaṭaku biddarata bīru bāridu jimi gajjata..
 laṅgūra lapēṭata paṭaki bhaṭa, 'jayati rāma, jaya!' uccarata.
 tulasīsa pavananandanu aṭala jud'dha krud'dha kautuka karata..47..

Verse no. 6/47—Somewhere he (Hanuman) uproots trees and mountains, and showers them on the enemies' army; elsewhere, he crushes horses against horses and kills elephants by dragging them on the ground and then dashing them on it. The thud of his slaps and kicks on the chest and heads of the enemy resound and reverberate in the battle-field. That brave warrior (Hanuman) thunders like a cloud while slaying the formidable army of demons. He shouts 'Jai Ram, Jai Ram!' while dashing the demon warriors to the ground by wrapping his tail around their legs. In this way, the Lord of Tulsidas, son of wind God (Hanuman) performs wondrous and marvelous war-deeds in the battle-field.

अंग-अंग दलित ललित फूले किंसुक-से
 हने भट लाखन लखन जातुधानके ।
 मारि कै, पछारि कै, उपारि भुजदंड चंड, खंडि-खंडि डारे ते बिदारे हनुमानके ॥
 कूदत कबंधके कदम्ब बंब-सी करत, धावत दिखावत हैं लाघौ राघौबानके ।
 तुलसी महेसु, बिधि, लोकपाल, देवगन, देखत बेवान चढ़े कौतुक मसानके ॥४८॥

48. aṅga-aṅga dalita lalita phūlē kinsuka-sē hanē bhaṭa lākhana lakhana jātudhānakē.
 māri kai, pachāri kai, upāri bhujadaṇḍa caṇḍa, khaṇḍi-khaṇḍi ḍārē tē bidārē hanumānakē..

 kūdata kabandhakē kadamba bamba-sī karata, dhāvata dikhāvata haiṁ lāghau rāghaubānakē.
 tulasī mahēsu, bidhi, lōkapāla, dēvagana, dēkhata bēvāna caṛhē kautuka masānakē..48..

Verse no. 6/48—Multitudes of Ravana's warriors were wounded by Laxman's attack, and they appeared red like a blossoming Kapas flower (the flower is red, so the demons resembled it because of blood oozing and smearing their bodies, making it appear red) (1); some of the warriors were killed, dashed to the ground, their arms torn away from the trunk, punctured and lacerated and thrown away (2).

Groups of Kabandhs¹ jumped and skipped about shouting "Bung-Bung" in the battle-field, as if showing the rapidity of Lord Ram's arrows (3).

Tulsidas says that Shiva, Brahma, the eight Lokpals (8 guardians of the world) and other Gods rode their chariots and watched the proceeding of the battle field from the sky (4).

[Note—¹The Kabandh is a special category of hobgoblin who has only trunk but no head or legs. Legend has it that Indra had punched the head and legs of a demon called Danu with his thunderbolt inside its trunk, as a result its body was reduced to only a trunk with a large mouth and protruding long arms.]

लोथिन सों लोहूके प्रबाह चले जहाँ-तहाँ
 मानहुँ गिरिन्ह गेरु झरना झरत हैं ।
 श्रोणितसरित घोर कुंजर-करारे भारे, कूलतें समूल बाजि-बिटप परत हैं ।।
 सुभट-सरीर नीर-चारी भारी-भारी तहाँ, सूरनि उछाहु, कूर कादर डरत हैं ।
 फेकरि-फेकरि फेरु फारि-फारि पेट खात काक-कंक बालक कोलाहलु करत हैं ।।49।।

49. lōthina sōm lōhūkē prabāha calē jahāṁ-tahāṁ mānahuṁ girinha gēru jharanā jharata haiṁ.
 śrōnitasarita ghōra kuṇjara-karārē bhārē, kūlatēm samūla bāji-biṭapa parata haiṁ..
 subhaṭa-sarīra nīra-cārī bhārī-bhārī tahāṁ, sūrani uchāhu, kūra kādara ḍarata haiṁ.
 phēkari-phēkari phēru phārī-phārī pēṭa khāta kāka-kaṅka bālaka kōlāhalu karata haiṁ..49..

Verse no. 6/49—Streams of blood flowed from the lacerated flesh of the warriors every where in the battle-field as if red water oozes from the crevices in the mountains. A huge river of blood started flowing; the elephants formed the embankments of that river, and dead horses falling in the stream of blood resembled the trees on the banks of a river which are uprooted and tumble in it. The dead bodies of the warriors are like the different aquatic creatures of that river of blood. That scene greatly excites and thrills brave warriors, but cowards and impotent people become scared, turn pale and swivel in horror. Jackals howl and tear apart the entrails to eat, while crows, vultures etc. cheer in mirth like happy children enjoying themselves at play.

ओझरीकी झोरी काँधें, आँतिनिकी सेल्ही बाँधें, मूँड़के कमंडल खपर किऐँ कोरि कै।
 जोगिनी झुटुंग झुंड-झुंड बनीं तापसी-सी
 तीर-तीर बैठीं सो समर-सरि खोरि कै॥ श्रोनित सौं सानि-सानि गूदा खात सतुआ-से प्रेत एक पिअत बहोरि घोरि-घोरि कै।
 'तुलसी' बैताल-भूत साथ लिए भूतनाथु, हेरि-हेरि हँसत हैं हाथ-हाथ जोरि कै। 50॥

50. ōjharīkī jhōrī kām̐dhēm, āṁtinikī sēl'hī bām̐dhēm, mūṁṛakē kamaṇḍala khapara ki'ēṁ kōri kai.
 jōginī jhuṭuṅga jhuṇḍa-jhuṇḍa banīm tāpasīm-sī tīra-tīra baiṭhīm sō samara-sari khōri kai.. śrōnita sōm sāni-sāni gūdā khāta satu'ā-sē prēta ēka pi'ata bahōri ghōri-ghōri kai.
 'tulasī' baitāla-bhūta sātha li'ē bhūtanāthu, hēri-hēri haṁsata haim hātha-hātha jōri kai..50..

